Well M. Ridley, thus you wrest places to your owne pleasure: for where as saynct Austen saythe that the whole Christian worlde,* is subiecte to the sea of Rome without any limittation, and vseth these wordes: In transmarinis, & longè remotis terris, onely to expresse the latytude of the dominion of the Sea of Rome, willyng therby to declare that all the world, yea cuntryes farre distaunt from Rome, yet neuertheles are subiecte to that Sea, yet you woulde wrast it, and leaue it onely to Europe. I am sure ye will▪ not deny, but that totus mundus is more then Europe.

Ridley.

In deede my Lorde, if saynct Austen had sayde simpliciter totus mundus, & not added in transmarinis it had bene without limitation:* but in that he sayd totus mundus in transmarinis partibus, all the Cuntryes beyond the seas he himselfe doth limite the vniuersall proposition, declaring how farre he ment by totus mundus.

The Byshop not staying for this aunswere, dyd proceede, saying.

Lincolne.

Well, if I woulde staye vppon this place, I coulde brynge many moe places of the Fathers, for the confirmation thereof, but we haue certayne instructions, accordinge to the whiche we muste proceede, and came not hyther to dispute the mater with you, but onely to take youre aunsweres to certayne Artycles, and vsed this in the waye of exhortation: in the whiche you interrupted mee, wherefore I wyll retourne thither againe.

Ye must consider that the Church of Chryste lyeth not hidden, but is a Citty in the mountayn,* and a candle on the Candlesticke. Ponder with your selfe, that the Church of Christ is catholica, catholicke whiche is deducted of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that is, per omnia: so that Christes Church is vniuersallye spreadde throughout the world not contayned in the * allegation of places, not comprehended in the circuite of Englande, not contayned in the compasse of Germany and Saxonie, as youre Church is.

Wherefore maister Ridley, for Gods loue be ye not singular: acknowledge with all the realme the truth, it shall not bee (as you alledge preiudiciall to the crowne, for the king and Queene their maiesties haue renounced that vsurped power taken of their predecessours, and iustly haue renounced it.* For I am sure you know that there are two powers, the one declared by the sword, the other by the Keyes. The sword is geuen to kings, and rulers of coutries: the Keyes were deliuered by Christe to Peter, and of him lefte to all the successours. As touchynge oure goodes, possessions, and lyues, wee wyth you acknowledge vs Subiectes, to the king and Queene, who hath the temporall sworde:* but as concerning matters of Religion, as touching Gods quarrell and his word, we acknowledge an other head: and as the king and y^e Queene their highnes do in all worldly affayres, iustly challenge the prerogatiue and primacie, so in spirituall and Ecclesiasticall matters they acknowledge themselues not to bee heades and rulers, but members of Christes bodye. Why therefore shoulde ye sticke at that matter, the whiche theyr maiesties haue forsaken and yelded?

Wherefore mayster Ridley,* you shall not onely not doe iniurye to the Crowne, and bee preiudiciall to theyr maiesties honour, in acknowledgyng with all Christendome the Popes holynesse to be supreme head of Chrystes Church here militaunt in earthe, but doe a thyng most delectable in theyr sight, and most desired of theyr highnesse. Thus if you will doe, reuoking together all youre erroures, acknowledging with the residue of the realme, the common and the publicke faulte, you shal doe that all men most hartily desire: you shall bryng quyettesse to your conscience, and health to your soule: then shall we with great ioy, by the authoritie committed to vs from the Cardinales grace, receyue you into y^e church agayne, acknowledgyng you to be no longer a rotten, but a liuely member of the same, but if you shall still bee singular, if you shall stil and obstinately perseuer in your erroures, stubbornely mayntayning your former heresies, then we must agaynst our will, according to our commission, separate you from vs, and cut you of from the church least the rottennesse of one part in processe of tyme, putrify and corrupte the whole bodye,* then must wee confesse and publish you to be none of ours: thē must we yeald you vp to the temporall iudges, of whome excepte it otherwise please the kinge and Queenes highnesse, you muste receaue punishment by the lawes of this Realme, due for heretickes.

Wherefore mayster Ridley, consider your state, remember your former degrees, spare your body, especially consider your soule, which Christ so dearely bought with hys precious blood, doe not you rashly cast away that which was precious in Gods sight, enforce not vs to doe al that we may doe, which is onely to publish you to be none of vs, to cut you of from the Church for we doe not, nor can not condemne you to dye (as most vntruely hath bene reported of vs) but that is the temporall Iudges * office, we onely declare you to be none of the Church, and then must you, according to the tenour of them, and pleasure Page 1760 of the Rulers, abide theyr determination, so that wee, after that we haue geuen you vpp to the temporall Rulers, haue no further to do with you. But I trust Mayster Ridley, wee shall not haue occasion to doe that wee may.* I trust you will suffer vs to reste in that poynte of our commission, whiche we most hartilye desire, that is, vppon recantation and repentaunce to receaue you, to reconcile you, and agayne to adioyne you to the vnitie of the Church.

Then M. Ridley with often interruption, at lengthe spake.

Ridley.

My Lord I acknowledge an vnspotted church of christ, in the which * no man can erre, without the whiche no man can be sau'd, the whiche is spread throughout all the worlde, that is the congregation of the faythfull: neyther doe I alligate or binde the same to any one place, as you sayd, but confesse the same to be spreadde throughout all the worlde: and whereas Christes Sacramentes are duely ministred, his Gospell truely preached and followed, there doth Christes Church shyne as a Cittye vppon an hill, and as a Candle in the Candlesticke: but rather it is such as you, that woulde haue the Church of Christ bound to a place, which appoint the same to Rome that there and no where els is the foundation of Christes church. But I am fully perswaded that Christes church is euery where founded, in euery place where his Gospell is truly receaued, effectually followed. And in that y^e church of God is in doubt, I vse here in the wise counsaile of Vyncentinus Lyranensis, whō I am sure you will allow, who geuing preceptes howe the catholicke church maye be in all schismes and heresies knowne, writeth in thys maner? When (sayth he) one parte is corrupted with heresy, then preferre the whole worlde before that one part: but if the greatest parte bee infected, then preferre antyquitie.

In like sort now, when I perceauē the greatest parte of Christianitie to be infected with the poyson of the sea of Rome, I repayre to y^e vsage of the primitiue church, which I finde cleane contrary to the Popes decrees, as in that the Priest receaueth alone, that it is made vnlawfull to to the Laitye to receaue in both kindes, and such lyke: Wherefore it requireth, that I preferre the antiquitie of the primatiue church, before the nouelty of the Romysh church.

Lincol.

Mayster Ridley these faults which you charge the Sea of Rome withall, are in deede no faultes. For first it was neuer forbid the Laitie, but that they myghte if * they demaunded, receaue vnder bothe kyndes. You know also, that Chryst after hys resurrection, at what tyme he went wyth hys Apostles to Galile opened hym selfe by breaking of bread. You know that saynct Paule after hys longe sayling towardes Rome brake breade, and that the Apostles came together in breakyng of bread whiche declareth that it is not vnlawfull to minister the Sacrament vnder the forme of breade onely: and yet the church hadde iust occasion to decree, that the laytye shoulde receaue in one kinde onely, thereby to take away an opinion of the vnlearned, that Chryst was not wholly both flesh and bloud vnder the forme of bread. Therefore to take away theyr opinion, and to establishe better the peoples faythe, the holy Ghost in the church thoughte good to decree, that the Laitie woulde receaue onelye in one kynde: and it is no newes for the Church vppon iust consideration, to alter rites and ceremonies. For you read in the Actes of the Apostles, that saynct Paule wrytyng to certayne of the Gentiles, whiche had receaued the Gospel biddeth them to abstayne a suffogato & sanguine, from thynges stifled, and from bloud, so that this seemeth to bee an expresse commaundement: yet who will saye but that it is lawfull to eate bloudings? how is it lawfull but by theyr permission of the Church?

Ridly.

My Lord, such thinges as saynct Paule enioyned to the Gentiles for a sufferance, by a little and little to win the Iewes to Christ, were onely commandementes of tyme, and respected not the successours: but Chrystes commaundement: do this (that is, that which he dyd in remembraunce, which was not to minister in one kind onely) was not a commaundement for a tyme, but to perseuer to the worldes end.

But the Bishop of Lincolne not attending to this answere, without any stay proceeded in his Oration.

So that the Church seemeth to haue authoritie by the holy Ghost, whome Christ sayd he woulde send after hys ascension, whiche should teache the Apostles all truthe, to haue power and iurisdiction to alter suche poyntes of the Scripture, euer reseruing the foundation: but wee came not, as I sayd before, in this sort to reason the matter wyth you, but haue certayne instructions ministred vnto vs, according to the tenour of the whiche wee must proceede, proposing certayne articles, vnto the which we require your aunswere directly, eyther affirmatiuely, eyther negatiuely to euery of them, eyther denying them, either graunting them without farther disputations or rea|soning,: for we haue already stretched our instructions, in that wee suffered you to debate and reason the matter, in such sort as wee haue done: the whiche articles you shall heare now, and to morrow at eyght of the clocke in saynct Maryes Church we will require and take youre aunsweres: and then according to the same proceede: & if you require a copy of them, you shall haue it, pen, inke and paper, also all such bookes as you shall demaunde, if they be to be gotten in the Uniuersitie.

The Articles.

IN dei nomine, Amen. Nos Iohannes Lincolne, Jacobus Glocest. & Iohannes Bristol. Episcopi per reuerendis. dominum Reginaldum miseratione diuina S. Mariae in Cosmedin. &c.

1 We doe obiecte to the Nic. Ridley, and to thee Hughe Latimer, ioyntly and seuerally, first that thou Nicholas Ridley in this high Uniuersitie of Oxford. Anno. 1554. in the monthes of Aprill, May, Iune, Iulye, or in some one or moe of thē, hast affirmed, and openly defended & maintayned, and in many other tymes and places besides, that the true and naturall body of Christe, after the consecration of the priest, is not really present in the sacrament of the altar.

2. Item, that in the yeare and monthes aforesayde, thou hast publickely affirmed and defended, that in the Sacrament of the altar, remayneth still the substaunce of breade and wine.

3. Item, that in the sayde yeare and monthes, thou hast openly affirmed, and obstinately mayntayned, that in the Masse is no propiciatory Sacrifice for the quicke and the dead.

4. Item, that in the yeare, place, and monthes aforesayd, these thy foresayd assertions solemnly haue bene condemned, by the scholasticall censure of this schoole, as hereticall, and contrarye to the Catholicke fayth, by y^e worshipful M. Doctor Weston Prolocutour then of the conuocation house, as also by other learned men, of bothe the Uniuersities.

5. Item, that all and singular the premisses be true, notorious, famous, and openly knowne by publicke fame, as well to them neare hand, as also to them in distaunt places farre of.

Examination vppon the sayd Articles.

ALL these articles I thought good here to place together, that as often as hereafter rehearsall shall be of any of them, y^e reader may haue recourse hether, and peruse the same, and not to trouble the storye with seuerall repetitions thereof.

Lincolne.

After these Articles were read, the Bishoppes tooke counsaile together. At the last the Bishop of Lincolne sayde: * these are the very same Articles whiche you in open disputation here in the Uniuersitie did mayntayn and defend. What say you vnto the first? I praye you aunswere affirmatiuely, or negatiuely.

Ridly.

Why my Lorde, I supposed your gentlenes, had bene such, that you would haue geuen me space vntyll to morow, that vpon good aduisement, I might bring a determinate aunswere.

Lincoln.

Yea M. Ridley, I meane not that youre aunsweres nowe shall be preiudiciall to your aunsweres to morow. I will take your aunsweres at this tyme, and yet notwithstanding it shalbe lawfull to you to adde, diminish, alter, and chaunge of these answers to morow what you will.

Ridly.

In deede, in like maner at our laste disputations I hadde many thinges promised, and fewe performed. * It was sayde that after disputations, I shoulde haue a copye thereof, and licence to chaunge myne aunsweres, as I should thinke good, It was meete also that I should haue seene what was writtē by the Notaries at that time. * So your Lordship pretended great gentlenes in geuyng me a tyme, but this gentlenes is the same, that Christ had of the high priestes: for you, as youre Lordshippe saythe, haue no power to condemne me, neyther at anye tyme to put a man to death, so in like sorte the high Priestes sayd, that it was not lawfull for them to put any man to death. but committed Christ to Pilate, neyther would suffer him Page 1761 to absolue Christ, although he sought all the meanes therfore that he might. Then spake Doctour Weston, one of the audience.

West.

What? do you make the king Pilate?

Rid.

*No mayster Doctor, I doe but compare youre deedes with Cayphas his deedes and the high Priestes, whiche woulde condemne no manne to deathe, as ye will not, and yet would not suffer Pilate to absolue and deliuer Christ.

Lincol.

M. Ridley, we minde not but that you shal enioy the benefite of aunswering to morow, and will take your aunsweres now as now, to morow you shal change take out, adde, and alter what you will. In the meane season we require you to aunswere directly to euery Article, either affirmatiuely, or negatiuely.

Ridly.

Seyng you appoynt me a time to aunswere to morow,* and yet will take mine aunsweres out of hande, first I require the Notaryes, to take and write my protestation, that in no poynt I acknowledge your authority, or admit you to be my Iudges, in that poynt you are authorised from the Pope. Therefore what soeuer I shall say or doe, I protest, I neither say it, neither do it willingly, thereby to admit the authoritie of the Pope: & if your Lordship will geue me leaue, I wil shew the causes, whiche moueth me thereunto.

Lincol.

No M. Ridley, wee haue instructions to the contrary. We may not suffer you.

Ridley.

*I will be short: I pray youre Lordships suffer me to speake in fewe wordes.

Linc.

No M. Ridley, wee may not abuse the hearers eares.

Rid.

Why my Lord, suffer me to speake three words.

Linc.

Well M. Ridley, to morow you shall speake 40. The time is farre paste: therefore wee require your aunswere determinately. What say you to the first article? and thereupon rehearsed the same.

Rid.

*My protestation alwaies saued, that by this mine aunswere I do not condescend, to your authoritie, in that you are Legate to the Pope, I aunswere thus: In a sense the first article is true, and in a sense it is false: for if you take really for verè, for spiritually by grace and efficacy, then is it true that the naturall body and bloud of Christe is in the sacrament verè & realiter, in deede and really: but if you take these termes so grossely, that you woulde conclude thereby a naturall body hauing motion, to be containyd vnder the formes of bread and wine verè & realiter, then really is not the body and bloud of Christ in the Sacrament, no more then the holy Ghost is in the element of water in our Baptisme. Because this aunswere was not vnderstoode, the Notaries wist not how to note it: wherfore the Bishop of Lincolne willed him to aunswere either affirmatiuely, or negatiuely, either to graunt the Article, or to deny it.

Rid.

My Lorde, you know that where anye aequiuocation (whiche is a woorde hauyng two significations) is, excepte distinction bee geuen, no direct aunswere can bee made: for it is one of Aristotles fallacies, containing two questions vnder one, the whiche cannot bee satisfied with one aunswere. For both you and I agree herein, that in the sacrament is the verye true and naturall bodye and bloud of Christ, euen that whiche was borne of the Uirgine Marye,* whiche ascended into heauen, whiche sitteth on the right hand of God the Father, which shall come frō thence to iudge the quicke and the dead, onely we differ in modo:* in the way and maner of being: we confesse all one thing to be in the sacrament, and dissent in the maner of being there. I being fully by Gods word thereunto perswaded, confesse Christes naturall body to be in the sacrament in deede by spirite and grace, because that whosoeuer receiueth worthely that bread and wine, receiueth effectuously Christes body and drinketh his bloud, that is, he is, made effectually partaker of hys Passion: and you make a grosser kynde of being, enclosing a natuall, a lyuely and mouing body vnder the shape or forme of breade and wyne.

Now, this difference considered, to the question thus I aunswere:* that in the sacrament of the altar is the naturall body and bloud of Christ verè & realiter, in deede and really, if you take these termes in deed and really for spiritually by grace and efficacy: for so euery worthy receyuer receiueth the very true body of Christe: but if you meane really and in deede, so that therby you woulde include a liuely and a mouable body vnder the formes of bread and wyne, then in that sense is not Christes body in the sacrament really and in deede.

This aunswere taken and penned of the Notaryes, y^e Boshop of Lincolne proposed the second question or Article. To whome he aunswered.

Rid.

Alwayes my protestation reserued, I aunswere thus: that in the sacrament is a certayne chaunge in the•r y^e Bread whiche was before was common bread, is now made a liuely representation of Christes Bodye,* and not onely a figure, but effectuously representeth his body, that euen as the mortall bodye was nourished by that visible bread, so is the internall soule fed with the heauenly foode of Christes body, whiche the eyes of faythe seethe, as the bodily eyes seeth onely breade. Such a sacramental mutation I graunt to be in the bread and wyne, whiche truely is no small chaunge, but suche a chaunge as no mo tall man can make but onely that omnipotencie of Chrystes worde.

¶Then the Byshoppe of Lincolne willed hym to answere directly, eyther affirmatiuely or negatiuely, without further declaration of the matter. Then hee answered:

Rid.

That notwithstanding this sacramentall mutation of the whiche he spake,* and all the Doctours confessed the true substaunce and nature of bread and wine remaineth, with the whiche the bodye is in like sorte nourished as the soule by grace and spirite with the body of Chryste. Euen so in Baptisme the body is washed with the visible water, and the soule is clesned from all filth by the inuisible holy Ghost, and yet the water ceaseth not to be water but keepeth the nature of water still: In like sort in the sacrament of the Lordes supper the bread ceaseth not to bee bread,

Then the Notaryes penned, that he aunswere affirmatiuely to the second article. The Byshop of Lincolne declared a difference betweene the sacramente of the altar and Baptisme,* because that Chryste sayde not by the water this is the holy Ghost, as he did by the bread: thys is my body.

Then mayster Ridley recited saynct Austen, whiche conferred both the sacramentes the one with the other: but the Byshoppe of Lincolne notwithstanding therevpon recited the third article, and required a directe aunswere. To whom Ridley sayd.

Rid.

Chryst as saynct Paule wryteth, made one perfecte sacrifice for the sinnes of the whole worlde, neyther can anye man reiterate that sacrifice of his,* and yet is the Communion an acceptable sacrifice to God of prayse and thanksgeuing: but to say that thereby sinnes are taken away (whiche wholly and perfectly was done by Christes passion, of the whiche the Communion is onely a memory) that is a great derogation of the merites of Chrystes passion:* for the sacrament was instituted that wee receyuing it, and thereby recognising and remembryng hys Passion, shoulde be partakers of the merites of the same. For otherwise doth this sacrament take vpon it the office of Christes Passion, whereby it might follow that Christe dyed in vayne.

¶The Notaryes penned this hys aunswere to be affirmatiuely. Then sayd the Byshop of Lincolne:

Lin.

In deede as you alledge out of Sayncte Paule, Christ made one perfecte oblation for all the whole world, that is, that bloudy sacrifice vpon the crosse: * yet neuerthesse he hath lefte this sacrifice, but not bloudy, in the remembraunce of that, by the whiche sinnes are forgeuen: the whiche is no derogation of Christes Passion.

¶Then recited the Byshop of Lincolne the fourth article. To the which M. Ridley aunswered:

Rid.

That in some part the fourth was true, & in some parte false, true in y^t those hys assertions were condemned as heresies, although vniustly: * false in that it was sayde they were condemned scientia scholastica, in that the disputations were in suche sorte ordered, that it was farre from any schole acte.

¶This aunswere penned of the Notaryes, the Byshop of Lincolne rehearsed the fift Article. To the whiche he aunswered:

Rid.

That the premisses were in suche sorte true, as in these his aunsweres he had declared. Whether that al men spake euill of them he knew not, in that hee came not so much abroad to heare what euery man reported.

¶This aunswere also written of the Notaryes, the bishop of Lincolne sayde:

Lin.

To morow at eyght of the clocke you shall appeare before vs in S. Maryes Church, * and then because wee cannot well agree vpon your aunswere to the first article (for it was long before hee was vnderstoode) if it wyll please you to wryte youre aunswere, you shall haue penne, inke, and paper, & bookes suche as you shall require: but if you wryte any thing sauing your aunswers to these Articles, wee will not receaue it: so hee charging Page 1762 the Maior with him, declaryng also to the Maior that he shoulde suffer hym to haue penne and inke dimissed M. Ridley, and sent for Master Latimer, who being brought to the Diuinitie Schole, there taryed tyll they called for hym.

¶Maister Latimer appeareth before the Commissioners.

NOW after M. Ridley was committed to the Maior, then the Bishop of Lincolne commaunded the Baillyffes to bring in the other prisoner, * who eftsoones as he was placed, sayd to the Lordes.

Lati.

My Lordes, if I appeare agayne, I pray you not to sende for mee vntyll you bee ready. For I am an olde man, and it is great hurt to myne olde age to tary so long gazyng vpon the colde walles. Then the Byshop of Lincolne sayd:

Linc.

M. Latimer, I am sory you are brought so soone, although it is the Bailyffes fault, and not myne: but it shall be amended.

Then Master Latimer bowed his knee downe to the ground,* holdyng his Hat in his hand, hauing a kercheffe on his hed, and vpon it a night cap or two, and a great cap (such as Townes men vse, with two broad flaps to batten vnder the chin) wearyng an olde thred bare Bristowe fryse gowne gyrded to his body with a peny leather gyrdell, at the which hanged by a long string of leather his Testament, and his spectacles without case, depending about his necke vpon his brest. After this the Byshop of Lincolne began on this maner:

Linc.

M. Latimer, you shall vnderstande that I and my Lordes here haue a Commission from my Lord Cardinall Poles Grace Legate a latere,* to this Realme of England, from our moste reuerent father in God the Popes holynesse, to examyne you vpon certayne opinions and assertions of yours, whiche you as well here openly in disputations in the yeare of our Lorde. 1554. as at sundry and diuers other tymes dyd affyrme, mayntayne, and obstinately defende. In the whiche Commission be especially two poyntes: the one whiche we muste desire you is, that if you shall nowe recant, reuoke, and disanull these your errorrs, and togeather with all this Realme, yea all the worlde confesse the trueth, we vpon due repentance of your part should receiue you, reconcile you, acknowledge you no longer a strayed sheepe, but adioyne you agayne to the vnitie of Christes Church, from the which you in the time of schisme fell: So that it is no new place to the which I exhort you: I desire you but to returne thyther from whence you went.

Consider M. Latimer, that without the vnitie of the Church is no saluation,* and in the Church can be no errores. Therefore what shoulde stay you to confesse that whiche all the Realme confesseth to forsake that whiche the Kyng and Queene their Maiesties haue renounced and all the Realme recanted: it was a common errour, and it is nowe of all confessed: it shall be no more shame to you, then it was to vs all. Consider M. Latimer, that within these .xx. yeares this Realme also with all the worlde confesseth one Church, acknowledged in Christes Church an head, and by what meanes and for what occasion it cut of it self from the rest of Christianitie, it renounced that whiche in all tymes and ages was confessed, it is well knowen,* and might be now declared vpon what good foundation the sea of Rome was forsaken, saue that wee must spare them that are dead, to whom the rehearsall woulde be opprobrious: it is no vsurped power as it hath bene termed, but founded vpon Peter by Christe, a lure foundation, a perfect builder, as by diuers places as well of the auncient fathers as the expresse worde of God,* may be proued.

With that M. Latimer, which before leaned his head to his hand, began somewhat to remoue his cap and kerchef from his eares.

The Byshoppe proceeded saying: for Christe spake expresly to Peter saying,* pasce oues meas, & rege oues meas, the whiche worde doth not onely declare a certayne rulyng of Christes flocke, but includeth also a certayne preeminence and gouernment, and therefore is the king called Rex à regendo: so that in saying rege, Christe declared a power whiche he gaue to Peter, whiche iurisdiction and power Peter by hand deliuered to Clement, and so in all ages hath it remayned in the sea of Rome. This if you shall confesse with vs, & acknowledge with all the realme your errorrs and false assertions, then shall you doe that whiche we most desire, then shall we rest vppon the first part of our Commission, then shall we receiue you, acknowledge you one of the Church, and according to the authoritie geuen vnto vs, * minister vnto you vpon due repentaunce, the benefite of absolution, to the whiche the Kyng and Queene their Maiesties were not ashamed to submit them selues, although they of them selues were vnspotted, and therefore needed no reconciliation, yet lest the putrifaction and rottennesse of all the body myght be noysome, and do damage to the head also, they (as I sayd) most humbly submitted them selues to my Lorde Cardinall his grace, by hym, as Legate to the Popes holynes, to bee partakers of the reconciliation: but if you shall stubburnely perseuer in your blindnes, if you wyll not acknowledge your errorrs, if you as you stande nowe alone, wyll be singular in your opinions, if by schisme and heresie you wyll styll diuide your selfe from our Church, then must wee proceede to the seconde part of the Commission, which we would be loth to do, that is, not to condemne you, for that wee can not doe (that the temporall sworde of the Realme, and * not wee will do) but to separate you from vs, acknowledge you to be none of vs, to renounce you as no member of the Church, to declare that you are filius perditionis, a lost chylde, and as you are a rotten member of the Church, so to cut you of from the Church, and so to commit you to the temporall Iudges, permittynge them to proceede agaynst you, accordyng to the tenor of their lawes.

Therefore M. Latimer, * for Gods loue consider your estate, remember you are a learned man, you haue taken degrees in the Schole, borne the office of a Byshop, remember you are an olde man, spare your body, accelerate not your death, & especially remember your soules health, quiet of your conscience, consyder that if you shoulde dye in this state, you shall be a stinkyng sacrifice to God: for it is the cause that maketh the Martyr, and not the death: consyder that if you dye in this state, you dye without grace, for without the Church can be no saluation. * Let not vayne glory haue the vpper hande, humiliate your selfe, captiuate your vnderstandyng, subdue your reason, submit your selfe to the determination of the Church, doe not force vs to doe all that we may doe, let vs rest in that parte whiche wee most hartely desyre, and I, for my part, (then the Byshop put of his cap) agayne with all my hart exhort you.

After the Byshop had somewhat paused, then M. Latimer lift vp his head (for before he leaned on his elbowe) and asked whether his Lordshyp had sayd: and the Byshop answered yea.

Lati.

Then will your Lordship geue me leaue to speake a worde o• two?

Linc

Yea M. Latimer, so that you vse a modest kynd of talke, without raysing or tauntes.

Lati.

I beseech your Lordshyp, licence me to sit downe. *

Linc.

At your pleasure M. Latimer, take as much ease as you wyll.

Lati.

Your Lordshyppe gentlye exhorted mee in manye woordes, to come to the vnitie of the Church. I confesse (my Lorde) a Catholicke Church, spread throughout all the worlde, in the whiche no man may erre, without the whiche vnitie of the Church no man can be saued: * but I knowe perfectly by Gods woorde that this Church is in all the worlde, and hath not his foundation in Rome only, as you say, and me thought your Lordshyp brought a place out of the Scriptures to confirme the same, that there was a iurisdiction geuen to Peter, in that Christe bad hym regere, gouerne his people. In deede my Lord, saint Peter did well and truely his office, in that he was byd regere: but since the Byshoppes of Rome haue taken a new kynd of regere. In deede they ought to regere, but how my Lord? not as they will them selues: but this regere must be hedged in, and digged in. They must regere, but secundum verbum dei: they must rule, but accordyng to the worde of God.

But the Byshops of Rome haue turned regere secundum verbum dei, into regere secundum voluntatem suam:  they haue turned the rule accordyng to the woorde of GOD into the rule accordyng to their owne pleasures, and as it pleaseth them best: as there is a booke set foorth whiche hath diuers poyntes in it, and amongst other, this poynt is one, whiche your Lordshyppe went about to proue by this woorde regere, and the argument whiche he bryngeth foorth for the prooffe of that matter, is taken out of Deuteronomie, where it is sayde: if there ryseth anye controuersie amonge the people, the Priestes Leuitici generis, of the order of Leuiticus shall decide the matter secundum legem dei, accordyng to the lawe of GOD: so it muste be taken. This booke perceyuing this authoritie to be geuen to the Priestes of the olde lawe, taketh occasion to proue the same to be geuen to the Byshops and other the Cleargy of the new law: but in prouyng Page 1763 this matter, where as it was sayde there, as the Priestes of the order of Leuiticus shoulde determine the matter accordyng to Gods law (that accordyng to Gods law) is left out, and onely is recited: as the Priestes of the order of Leuiticus shall decide the matter,  so it ought to be taken of the people: a large authoritie I ensure you. What gelding of Scripture is this? what clippyng of Gods coyne? With the which termes the audience smiled. This is muche like the regere whiche your Lordshyp talked of. Nay, nay my Lordes, we may not geue such authoritie to the Clergie, to rule all thynges as they wyll. Let them keepe them selues within their commission. Now I trust my Lord▪ I do not rayle yet?

Linc.

No M. Latimer, your talke is more like tauntes then rayling: but in that I haue not red the booke which you blame so much, nor knowe not of any suche, I can say nothyng therein.

Lati.

Yes my Lorde, the booke is open to be red, and is intituled to one whiche is Bishop of Glocester,* whom I neuer knew, neither did at any tyme see him to my knowledge. With that the people laughed, because the Byshop of Glocester sat there in commission.

Then the Byshop of Glocester stoode vp, and sayd it was his booke.

Lati.

Was it yours my Lorde? In deede I knewe not your Lordshyp, neither euer did see you before, neither yet see you now, through the brightnes of the Sunne shining betwixt you and me. Then the audience laughed agayne: and Maister Latimer spake vnto them saying: Why my maisters, this is no laughyng matter, I aunsweare vppon lyfe and death. Vae vobis qui redetis nunc, quoniam flebitis.

The Byshoppe of Lincolne commaunded silence, and then sayde:

Linc.

M. Latimer, if you had kept your selfe within your boundes, if you had not vsed such scoffes and tauntes, this had not bene done.

*After this the Byshop of Glocester sayde in excusing of his booke.

Gloc.

M. Latimer, hereby euery man may see what learnyng you haue.

Then M. Latimer interrupted hym saying:

Lati.

Lo, you looke for learnyng at my handes, whiche haue gone so longe to the schole of obliuion, makynge the bare walles my Librarie, keepyng me so long in prison without booke or penne and inke: and now you let me lose to come and aunsweare to Articles. You deale with me as though two were appoynted to fyght for lyfe and death, and ouer nyght the one through friendes and fauour is cheryshed, & hath good counsayle geuen hym howe to encounter with his enemye. The other for enuye or lacke of friendes,* all the whole nyght is set in the stockes. In the mornyng when they shall meete, the one is in strength and lusty: the other is starke of his limmes, and almoste dead for feeblenes. Thynke you that to runne through this man with a speare is not a goodly victory?

But the Byshoppe of Glocester interruptyng his aunswere proceeded, saying:

Glo.

I went not about to recite any places of Scripture in that place of my booke: * for then if I had not recited it faythfully, you myght haue had iust occasion of reprehention: but I only in that place formed an argument á maior•, in this sense: that if in the olde lawe the Priestes had power to decide matters of controuersies, muche more then ought the authoritie to be geuen to the clergy in the new law: and I pray you in this poynt what auayleth the rehersall, secundum legem dei.

Lati.

Yes my Lorde, very muche. For I acknowledge authoritie to be geuen to the spiritualtie to decide matter of Religion, and, as my Lord sayd euen nowe, to regere: but they must do it secundum verbum dei, and not secundum voluntatem suam, according to the worde and lawe of God, and not after their owne will, after their owne imaginations and fantasies.

The Byshop of Glocester woulde haue spoken more, sauynge that the Byshop of Lincolne sayde, that they came not to dispute with M. Latimer, but to take his determinate aunsweres to their Articles, and so began to propose the same Articles whiche were proposed to M. Ridley. But M. Latimer interrupted him, speaking to the bishop of Glocester: well my Lord, I could wish more faythfull dealyng with Gods woorde, and not to leaue out a part, and snatche a part here and an other there, but to rehearse the whole faythfully.

But the Byshoppe of Lincolne not attendyng to this saying of Maister Latimer, * proceeded in rehearsing the Articles in forme and sense as I declared before in the examination of the Articles proposed to Maister Ridley, and requyred Maister Latimers aunswere the fyrst. Then Maister Latimer makynge his protestation, that notwithstanding these his aunsweres it shoulde not bee taken that thereby he would acknowledge any authoritie of the Byshoppe of Rome, saying that he was the Kyng and Queene their Maiesties subiecte and not the Popes, neyther coulde serue two maisters at one tyme, except he should first renounce one of them: required the Notaries so to take his protestation, that what soeuer hee shoulde saye or do, it shoulde not be taken as though he did thereby agree to any authoritie that came from the Byshop of Rome.

Linc.

The Byshop of Lincolne sayd, that his protestation shoulde be so taken: * but he required him to aunswere briefly affirmatiuely, or negatiuely to the first Article, and so recited the same agayne: and Maister Latimer aunswere as foloweth.

Lati.

I doe not deny (my Lorde) that in the Sacrament by spirite and grace is the very body and bloud of Christ, * because that euery man by receiuyng bodylye that bread and wine, spiritually receyueth the body and bloud of Christe, and is made partaker thereby of the merites of Christes Passion: but I denye that the body and bloud of Christe is in such sort in the Sacrament as you woulde haue it.

Linc.

Then Maister Latimer, you aunswere affirmatiuely.

Lati.

Yea, if you meane of that grosse and carnall beyng,* which you do take.

The Notaries tooke his aunswares to bee affirmatiuely.

Linc.

What say you Maister Latimer to the seconde Article? and recited the same.

Lati.

There is, my Lorde, a chaunge in the bread and wine, and suche a chaunge as no power, but the omnipotencie of GOD can make, in that that whiche before was bread, shoulde now haue that dignitie to exhibite Christes body, & yet the bread is still bread, and the wine still wine: for the chaunge is not in the nature, but in the dignitie, because now that whiche was common bread hath the dignitie to exhibite Christes body, for where as it was common bread, it is now no more common bread, neither ought it to be so taken, but as holy bread sanctified by Gods worde.

With that the Byshop of Lincolne smyled, saying:

Linc.

Lo Maister Latimer, see what stedfastnesse is in your doctrine: That whiche you abhorred and despised moste, you now most establyshe: for where as you moste rayled at holy bread, you now make your communion holy bread.

Lati.

Tush, a rushe for holy bread. I say the bread in the communion is an holy bread in deede.

But the Byshoppe of Lincolne interrupted hym and sayde.

Linc.

O, you make a difference betwene holy bread,* and holy bread (with that the audience laughed.) Well maister Latimer, is not this your aunswere, that the sustaunce of bread and wine remayneth after the wordes of consecration?

Lati.

Yes verely, it must nedes bee so, for Christ him selfe calleth it bread, Saint Paul calleth it bread, the Doctours confesseth the same, the nature of a Sacrament confirmeth the same, and I call it holy bread,* not in that I make no difference betwixt your holy bread & this, but for the holy office whiche it beareth, that is, to be a figure of Christes body, and not onely a bare figure, but effectually to represent the same.

So the Notaries penned his aunswere to be affirmatiuely.

Linc.

What say you to the third question?* and recited the same.

Lati.

No, no my Lorde, Christe made one perfect Sacrifice for all the whole world, neither can any man offer him agayne, neither can the Priest offer vp Christe agayne for the sinnes of man, which he tooke away by offeryng hym selfe once for all (as Saint Paul sayth) vppon the crosse, neither is there any propitiation for our sinnes, sauynge his crosse onely.

So the Notaries penned his aunswere to this Article also to be affirmatiuely.

Linc.

What say you to the fourth Maister Latimer? and recited it. After the recitall whereof,* when Maister Latimer aunswared not, the Byshop asked hym whether he heard him or no?

Lati.

Yes, but I doe not vnderstande what you meane thereby.

Linc.

Mary onely this, that these your assertions were Page 1764 condemned by M. Doctor Weston as heresies: is it not so M. Latimer?

Lati.

Yes, I thinke they were condemned. But how vniustly, he that shall be iudge of all knoweth.

So the Notaries tooke his aunswere, to this Article also to be affirmatiuely.

Linc.

What say you M. Latimer to the v. Article? and recited it.*

Lati.

I knowe not what you meane by these termes. I am no Lawyer: I would you would propose the matter plainely.

Linc.

In that we proceede accordyng to the lawe, we muste vse their termes also. The meanyng onely is this, that these your assertions are notorious, euill spoken of, and yet common and recent in the mouthes of the people.

Lati.

I can not tell howe muche nor what men talke of them. I come not so muche among them, in that I haue bene secluded a long tyme. What men report of them I knowe not, nor care not.

This aunswere taken, the Bishop of Lincolne sayd:

Linc.

M. Latimer, we meane not that these your aunsweres shalbe preiudiciall to you.* To morowe you shall appeare before vs againe, and then it shalbe lawfull for you to alter and chaunge what you wyll. We geue you respite till to morowe, trustyng that after you haue pondered well all thynges against to morowe, you wyll not be ashamed to confesse the truth.

Lati.

Now my Lord I pray you geue me licence in three wordes to declare the causes why I haue refused the authoritie of the Pope.

Linc.

Nay M. Latimer, to morowe you shall haue lycence to speake xl. wordes.

Lati.

Nay my Lords, I beseech you to do with me now as it shall please your Lordships: I pray you let not me be troubled to morow agayne.

Linc.

Yes M. Latimer, you must needes appeare againe to morowe.

Lati.

Truely my Lorde, as for my part I require no respite, for I am at a poynt: you shall geue me respite in vayne: Therefore I pray you let not me trouble you to morowe.

Linc

Yes, for wee trust God wyll woorke with you agaynst to morowe. There is no remedy, you must needes appeare agayne to morowe at eight of the clocke in saint Maries Church. And forthwith the Bishop charged the Maior with M. Latimer, & dismissed him, and then brake vp their Session for that day, about one of the clocke at after noone.

¶Here foloweth the second Session.

THE next day followyng (which was the fyrst daye of October) somewhat after eyght of the clocke, the sayde Lordes repayred to S. Maries Church, and after they were set in a high throne well trimmed with clothe of tissewe and silke, then appeared M. Ridley, who was set at a framed table a good space from the Bishops feete, which table had a silke clothe cast ouer it, the which place was compassed about with framed seates in quadrate forme, partly for Gentlemen which repaired thither (for this was the Session day also of Gaile deliury) & heades of the Uniuersitie to sit, and partly to keepe of the preasse of the audience: for the whole body as well of the Uniuersitie as of the towne,* came thither to see the end of these two persons. After M. Ridleyes appearaunce, and the silence of the audience, the Bishoppe of Lincolne spake in maner folowyng.

Linc.

M. Ridley, yesterday when that we challenged you for not vncouryng your head, you excused your selfe of that whereof no man accused you, in saying you dyd not put on your cap for any obstinacie towarde vs, whiche as touchyng our owne persons desired no suche obedience of you, but onely in respect of them whose persons we beare: neyther (you sayde) for any contempt that you beare to this worshipfull audience, whiche although iustly may, yet in this case require no such humilitie of you: neither for any derogation of honour to my Lorde Cardinalles grace, in that he descended from the regall bloud, in that he is a man most noble, both for his excellent qualities & singular learnyng: for as touching those pointes, you sayde you with all humilitie woulde honour, reuerence, and worshyp his grace: but in that he is Legate to the most reuerent father in God the Popes holynes (with that the Bishop with all then present put of their cappes, but M. Ridley moued not his) you sayd you ne coulde ne would by any meanes be induced to geue him honor: but for as muche as this is the poynt as we tolde you yesterday, why we require honour and reuerence of you, we tel you nowe as wee did then, except you take the paynes to moue your bonet, we will take the paynes to cause your bonet to be taken from you, except you pretend sicknesse, as yesterday you did not.

Rid.

I pretende now none other cause,* then I did yesterday, that is, onely that hereby it may appeare that not onely in worde and confession, but also by all my gesture and behauiour, in no poynt I agree or admit any authoritie or power that shall come from the Pope, and nor for any pryde of mynde (as GOD is my iudge) neyther for contempt of your Lordshyps, or of this worshipfull audience, neither for derogation of honour due to my Lorde Cardinalles grace as concernyng those poyntes whiche your Lordshyp spake of, that is, his noble Parentage and singular graces in Learnynge. And as for takynge my cap away, your Lordshyp may doe as it shall please you: it shall not offende me, but I shall be content with your ordinance in that behalfe.

Linc.

For as much as you do aunswere now as you did yesterday, we must doe also as we did then, and forthwith one of the Bedles very hastily snatched his cap from his head.

¶After this the Bishop of Lincolne began the examination in sense folowyng.

Linc.

Maister Ridley, yesterday wee tooke your aunswere to certayne Articles,* which we then proposed vnto you: but because wee coulde not be thoroughly satisfied with your aunswere then to the fyrste Article, neyther coulde the Notaries take any determinate aunswere of you,* we (you requiryng the same) graunted you lycence to bryng your aunswere in wryting, and thereupon commaunded the Maior that you shoulde haue penne, paper, and inke, yea any bookes also that you woulde require, if they were to bee gotten: we licenced you then also to alter your former aunsweres this day at your pleasure: Therefore we are come nowe hether to see whether you are in the same mynde nowe that you were in yesterdaye, (whiche we woulde not wyshe) or contrary, contented to reuoke all your former assertions, and in all poyntes content to submitte your selfe to the determination of the vniuersall Church, and I for my part moste earnestly exhort you (and therewith he put of his cappe) not because my conscience pricketh me as you sayde yesterday, but because I see you a rotten member and in the way of perdition.

Yesterday I brought forth amongst other S. Austen, to proue that authorite hath alwayes bene geuen to the sea of Rome, and you wrested the woordes farre contrary to S. Austens meanynge, in that you woulde haue totus mundus to be applyed onely to Europe, whiche is but the thirde part of all the worlde, where as in deede the processe of S. Augustines woordes wyll not admitte that your interpretation. For he sayth not totus mundus Christianus in transmarinis. &c. but first,*totus mundus Christianus Romanae Ecclesiae subiectus est: All the Christian world is subiect to the Church of Rome, and afterwarde addeth in transmarinis partibus, beyond the Sea, but onely to augement the dominion of the sea of Rome.

Rid.

But M. Ridley still perseuered in his former aunswere, saying:* I am sure my Lorde you haue some skill in Cosmography, in the whiche you shall vnderstande that there is a sea called Mare mediterraneum, cast betweene Europe and Africa, in the which he ment Europe beyond the Sea, euen as I shoulde say the whole worlde beyond the Sea, exceptyng England in the which I stand: and here many woordes were spent vpon the interpretation of the same place of S. Austen.

Lin.

After long disceptation, the Byshoppe of Lincolne sayde, that the meanynge of S. Augustine myght be knowen by the consent of other the Doctors, and rehearsed diuers.

Rid.

But M. Ridley required the rehearsall of the places, and to reade the very wordes of the Doctors, saying, that perhaps those which the Bishop rehearsed,* beyng proponed in other termes in the Doctors, would admitte a contrary meanyng and interpretation: but in that booke out of the which the Bishop rehearsed them, was none of the Doctors, but only the sentences drawn out of y^e Doctors of some studious man: he could not recite the very wordes of the Doctours.

Linc.

Then after he came to Cyrillus, which (as he said) made agaynst M. Ridley in the Sacrament,* euen by Philippe Melancthon his owne alledging in his common places, and forthwith called for Melancthon, but in vaine, because all such bookes were burned a litle before, wherefore he passed it ouer.

Cyrillus also in an other place pro•ing to the Iewes Page 1765 that Christe was come, vseth this reason, * Altars are erected in Christes name in Britaine and in farre countreyes: Ergo, Christ is come. But we may vse the contrarye, of that reason: Altars are plucked downe in Britaine: Ergo, Christe is not come. A good Argument á contrarijs: I wyll stande to it in the Scholes by and by with any man. Ye see what a good argument this your doctrine maketh for the Iewes, to proue that Christ is not come.*

D. Ridley smilyng, aunswared: your Lordshyp is not ignoraunt that this worde Altare in the Scripture signifieth aswell the Altar whereupon the Iewes were wont to make their burt Sacrifices, as the table of the Lordes Supper. Cyrillus meaneth there by this worde Altare, not that the Iewysh Altar, but the Table of the Lorde, and by that saying (Altars are erected in Christes name, Ergo Christ is come) he meaneth that the Communion is ministred in his remembraunce, Ergo Christe is come: for the strength of his argument is, because the remembraunce of a thyng can not be, except the thing it selfe be past: then coulde not all Countreys celebrate the Communion in the remembraunce of Christes passion, except Christe had bene come and suffered. As for the taking downe of the Alters, it was done vpon iust considerations, for that they seemed to come to nigh to y^e Iewes vsage. Neither was the supper of the Lorde at any tyme more better ministred, more duely receiued, then in these latter dayes when all thynges were brought to the rites and vsage of the primatiue Church.

Linc.

A godly receiuing I promise you, to set an Oyster table in steede of an Altar, and to come from Puddynge at Westminster, to receiue: and yet when your table was constituted, you coulde neuer be content, in placing the same now East, nowe North, nowe one way, nowe another, vntill it pleased GOD of his goodnesse to place it cleane out of the Church.

Rid.

Your Lordshyppes vnreuerent termes doo not eleuate the thyng.* Perhappes some men came more deuoutely from Puddynge then other men nowe do from other thynges.

Lin.

As for that, M. Ridley, you ought to be iudge of no man: but by this your reasonyng you cause vs to stretch and enlarge our instructions. We came not to reason, but to take your determinate aunsweres to our Articles: and eftsoones he red the first Article in maner aboue specified.*

Now M. Ridley, What say you to the first Article? if you haue brought your aunswere in writing, we wyll receiue it: but if you haue written any other matter, we will not receiue it.

Rid.

Then M. Ridley tooke a sheete of paper out of his bosome, and beganne to read that whiche he had written: but the B. of Lincolne commaunded the Bedle to take it from hym.* But he desired licence to read it, saying that it was nothyng but his answers, but the Bishop would in no wise suffer him.

Rid.

Why my Lord, will you require my aunswere, and not suffer me to publysh it? I beseeche you my Lorde, let the audience beare witnes in this matter. Your Lordships may handle it at your pleasures: therfore let the audience be witnes to your doynge.*

Linc.

Well M. Ridley, we wyll first see what you haue written, & then if we shall thinke it good to be red, you shal haue it published: but except you wyll deliuer it first, we wyll take none at all of you.

With that M. Ridley seeing no remedy, deliuered it to an Officer, which immediatly deliuered it to the Bishop of Lincolne, who after he had secretly communicated it to the other two Bishops, declared the sense, but would not read it as it was written,* saying, that it contained wordes of blasphemie: therefore he would not fill the eares of the audience therewithall and so abuse their pacience: notwithstanding M. Ridley desired very instantly to haue it published, saying, that except a line or two, there was nothing conteyned but the auncient Doctors sayinges for the confirmation of his assertions.

After the sayd Bishops had secretly vewed the whole, then the Bishop of Lincolne sayd: In the first part master Ridley, is nothyng conteyned but your protestation, that you would not haue these your aunsweres so to be taken, as though you seemed thereby to consent to the aucthority or iurisdiction of the Popes holines.

Rid.

No my Lord, I pray you reade it out that the audience may heare it: but the Byshoppe of Lincolne woulde in no wise, because (he sayd) there were conteyned wordes of blasphemie.

Then the Byshop of Lincolne recited the firste Article,* and required maister Riddleis aunswere to it. Then M. Ridley sayd, that his answere was there in wrytyng, and desired that it might be published: but the Byshoppe woulde not reade the whole, but here and there a peece of it. So the Notaries tooke his aunswere, that he referred him to his aunswere in writing exhibited now, and also before at the tyme of disputation, M. Doctor Weston beyng prolocutor.

In likewise the Byshop of Lincolne recited the second Article, and required an aunswere,* and M. Ridley referred him to his aunswere in wrytyng, exhybited now, and also before at the time of disputation: and like aunsweres were taken to all the residue of the Articles.

These aunsweres in maner rehearsed, taken, and penned of the Notaries, the Byshop of Glocester began an exhortation to moue M. Ridley to turne.*

Glo.

If you would once empty your stomacke, captiuate your senses, subdue your reason, and to gether with vs consider what a feeble ground of your religion you haue, I doe not doubt but you might easely be perduced to acknowledge one Church with vs, to confesse one fayth with vs, and to beleue one religion with vs. For what a weake and feeble stay in religion is this I pray you? Latimer leaneth to Cranmer, Cranmer to Ridley, & Ridley to the singularitie of his owne witte: so that if you ouerthrowe the singularitie of Ridleys wit, then must needes the Religion of Cranmer and Latimer fall also. You remember well M. Ridley, that the Prophet speaketh most truely, saying: vae, vae, wo, wo be to them which are singular and wise in their owne conceytes.

But you wyll saye, here it is true that the Prophete sayth: but how know you that I am wyse in myne owne conceyte? Yes Maister Ridley, you refuse the determination of the Catholike Church: you muste needes bee singular and wyse in your owne conceyte, for you bryng Scripture for the probation of your assertions, and wee also bryng Scriptures: you vnderstande them in one sense, and wee in an other. Howe wyll ye knowe the trueth herein? If you stande to your owne interpretation, then you are singular in your owne conceyte: but if you say you wyll followe the myndes of the Doctors and auncient Fathers, semblably you vnderstande them in one meanyng, and wee take them in another: howe wyll ye knowe the trueth herein? If you stande to your owne iudgement, then are you singular in your owne conceyte, then can you not auoyde the vae and woe which the Prophete speaketh of.

Wherefore, if you haue no stay but the Catholike church in matters of controuersie, except you wyll rest vpon the singularitie and wysedome of your owne brayne, if the Prophet most truely sayth, vae, vae, wo, wo be to them that are wyse in their owne conceite: then for Gods loue M. Ridley stand not singular, be not you wyse in your owne conceite, please not your selfe ouermuch. Howe were the Arrians, the Manicheis, the Futichiās, with other diuers Heretickes which haue bene in the Church, how I pray you were they suppressed and conuincd? by reasonyng in disputations? No truly, the Arrians had mo places of Scriptures for the confirmation of their heresie,* then the Catholickes for the defence of the trueth. Howe then were they conuincd? onely by the termination of the Church. And in deede except we do constitute the Church our foundation, stay, and iudge, we can haue no ende of controuersies, no ende of disputations. For in that we all bryng Scriptures and Doctors for the probation of our assertions, who shoulde be Iudge of this our controuersie? If we our selues, then be we singular and wise in our owne conceites, then can not we auoyde the woe that the Prophet speaketh of.

It remayneth therefore that we submitte our selues to the determination and arbitrement of the Church, with whom God promised to remayne to the worldes ende, to whom he promised to sende the holy Ghost which shoulde teache it the trueth. Wherefore M. Ridley, if you will auoyd the wo that the prophet speaketh of, be not you wyse in your iudgement: if you wyll not be wyse and singular in your owne iudgement, captiuate your owne vnderstanding, subdue your reason, and submit your selfe to the determination of the Church.

This is briefly the summe of the Oration of the Byshop of Glocester, by the which he endeouored in many mo woordes, amplyfiyng and enlargyng the matter eloquently with sundry poyntes of Rethoricke, to moue affections, to perswade Maister Ridley to recant and forsake his Religion.

To whom M. Ridley aunswered in few wordes,* that he sayd most truly with the Prophet, wo be to him which is wyse in his owe conceite, but that he acknowledged no suche singularitie in hym, ne knewe any cause why he shoulde attribute so muche to him selfe. And where as he Page 1766 sayde Maister Cranmer leaned to hym, that was moste vntrue, in that he was but a young Scholer in comparison of Maister Cranmer: for at what tyme he was a young Scholer, then Maister Cranmer a Doctor, so that he con•essed that M. Cranmer might haue ben his Scholemaister these many yeares. It seemed that he woulde haue spoken more, but the Bishop of Glocester interrupted hym, saying.

Glo.

Why M. Ridley, it is your owne confession, for M. Latimer at the time of his disputations confessed his learyng to lye in M. Cranmers bookes, and M. Cranmer also sayd, that it was your doying.

Linc.

Likewyse the Byshoppe of Lincolne with many woordes and gentle holding his Cappe in hand, desyred him to turne.* But M. Ridley made an absolute aunswere, that he was fully perswaded, the Religion whiche he defended to be grounded vpon Gods worde, and therefore without great offence towardes God, great peryll and damage of his soule, he coulde not forsake his Maister and Lorde God, but desired the Byshop to performe his graunt in that his Lordshyp sayde the day before, that he shoulde haue licence to shewe his cause why he coulde not with a salfe conscience admitte the authoritye of the Pope: but the Byshop of Lincolne sayde, that where as then he had demaunded licence to speake three woordes, he was contented then that he shoulde speake .xl. and that graunt he would performe.

*Then stepped forth D. Weston, which sate by and sayd, why my Lord, he hath spoken foure hundred already.

M. Ridley confessed he had, but they were not of his prescribed number, neither of that matter. The Bishop of Lincolne bad him take his licence: but he shoulde speake but .xl. and he would tell them vpon his fingers, and eftsoones M. Ridley began to speake:^{*} but before he had ended halfe a sentence, the Doctours sittynge by cryed and sayd, that his number was out, and with that he was put to silence.

After this the Bishop of Lincolne which sat in the middes, began to speake as foloweth.

Linc.

Now I perceiue M. Ridley, you will not permit ne suffer vs to stay in that point of our Commission which we most desired: for I ensure you, there is neuer a worde in our Commission more true then, dolentes & gementes. For in deede I for my part, I take God to witnesse, am sory for you. Whereunto M. Ridley aunswered:

Rid.

I beleue it well my Lord, for as much as one day it will be burdenous to your soule.

Linc.

Nay not so M. Ridley, but because I am sory to see suche stubbornesse in you, that by no meanes you may be perswaded to acknowledge your errorrs, and receiue the truth: but seeyng it is so, because you will not suffer vs to persist in the first, we must of necessitie proceede to the other part of our Commission. Therefore I pray you harken what I shall say,^{} and forthwith did read the sentence of condemnation, which was written in a long processe: the tenour of which because it is sufficiently already expressed before, we thought meete in this place to omitte, forasmuche as they are rather wordes of course, then thinges deuised vpon deliberation.^{} Howbeit in deede the effecte was, that for as much as the sayd Nic. Ridley dyd affirme▪ maintaine, and stubbornely defende certaine opions, assertions, and heresies, contrary to the worde of God, and the receiued fayth of the Church, as in denying the true and naturall body of Christe, and his naturall bloud to be the Sacrament of the Altar: Secundarily in affermyng the substaunce of bread and wine to remayne after the wordes of the Consecration: Thirdly in denying the Masse to be a liuely Sacrifice of the Church for the quicke and the dead, and by no meanes woulde be perduced and brought from these his heresies, they therefore the sayde Iohn of Lincolne, Iames of Glocester, Iohn of Bristowe, did iudge and condemne the sayd Nic. Ridley, as an Hereticke, and so adiudged hym presently both by woorde and also in deede to be degraduated from the degree of a Byshoppe, from Pristhoode and all Ecclesiasticall order: declaryng moreouer the sayde Nic. Ridley to be no member of the Church, and therefore committed hym to the secular powers, of them to receyue due punishment accordyng to the tenour of the temporalll lawes: and further excommunicatyng hym by the great excommunication.

¶The last appearaunce and examination of M Latimer before the Commissioners.

^{*}This sentence beyng published by the Bishop of Lincolne, M. Ridley was committed as a prisoner to the Maior, and immediatly M. Latimer was sent for: but in the meane season the Carpet or cloth whiche lay vpon the table whereat M. Ridley stode, was remoued, because (as men reported) M. Latimer had neuer the degree o^r a Doctor as M. Ridley had. But eftsones as M.

Latimer appeared as he did the day before, perceiuyng no cloth vpon the table, layde his hat, which was an olde felte vnder his elbowes, and immediatly spake to the Commissioners, saying:

Lati

My Lordes, I beseech your Lordships to set a better order here at your entraunce: for I am an olde man and haue a very euill backe, so that the presse of the multitude doth me much harme.

Linc.

I am sory M. Latimer for your hurt. At your departure we will see to better order.

With that M. Latimer thanked his Lordshyp, making a very low curtesie. After this the Bishop of Lincolne began on this manner.

Linc.

M. Latimer, although yesterday after we had taken your aunsweres to those Articles whiche we proposed, might haue iustly proceeded to iudgement against you,* especially in that you required the same, yet we hauyng a good hope of your returning, desiring not your destruction, but rather that you woulde recant, reuoke your errorrs, and turne to the Catholicke Church, differred farther processe tyll this day, and now accordyng to the appoyntment, we haue called you here before vs, to heare whether you are content to reuoke your hereticall assertions, and submitte your selfe to the determination of the Church, as we most hartely desire, and I for my part, as I did yesterday, most earnestly doe exhort you, eyther to know whether you perseuer still the man that you were, for the which we would be sory.

It seemed that the Bishop woulde haue farther proceeded, sauynge that M. Latimer interrupted hym, saying:

Lati.

Your Lordship often doth repeate the Catholike Church, as though I should deny the same. No my Lord,* I confesse there is a Cotholicke Church, to the determination of the which I will stande, but not the Churche which you call Catholicke, which soner might be termed diabolike. And where as you ioyn together the Romish and Catholicke Church, stay there I pray you. For it is an other thing to say Romish Church, and an other thing to say Catholicke Church:* I must vse here in this myne aunswere the counsell of Cyprianus, who at what tyme he was ascited before certayne Bishoppes that gaue him leaue to take deliberation and counsell to try and examine his opinion, he answered them thus: in stickyng and perseueryng in the truth, there must no counsel, nor delibera, tion be taken. And agayne beyng demaunded of them sitting in iudgement, which was most like to be of y^e Church of Christe, either he whiche was persecuted, eyther they which did persecute: Christ, sayd he, hath foreshewed, that he that doth follow hym, must take vp his crosse and follow him. Christ gaue knowledge that the disciples should haue persecution and trouble. Howe thinke you then my Lords, is it like y^e the sea of Rome,* which hath bene a continual persecutor, is rather the Church, or that swal flocke which hath continually ben persecuted of it euen to death? Also the flock of Christ hath ben but few in comparison to the residue, and euer in subiection: which he proued, beginning at No•s tyme euen to the Apostles.

Linc.

Your cause and S. Cyprians is not one, but cleane contrary, for he suffered persecution for Christes sake and the Gospell: but you are in trouble for your errours and false assertions, contrary to the worde of God, and the receiued trueth of the Church.

Lati.

M. Latimer interruptyng hym, sayd: yes verely,* my cause is as good as S. Cyprians: for his was for the worde of God and so is myne.

But Lincolne goeth forth in his talke.

Also at the beginnyng and foundation of the Church, it coulde not be but that the Apostles shoulde suffer great persecution. Further, before Christes commyng, continually there were very fewe whiche truely serued God: but after his commyng beganne the tyme of grace, then beganne the Church to encrease, and was continually augmented vntyll that it came vnto this perfection,* and now hath iustly that iurisdiction whiche the vnchristian Princes before by tyranny dyd resist: there is a diuerse consideration of the estate of the Church nowe in the tyme of grace, and before Christes commyng. But Maister Latimer, although we had instructions geuen vs determinately to take your aunswere to suche Articles as we shoulde propose, without any reasonyng or disputations, yet wee hoppyng by talke somewhat to preuayle with you, appoynted you to appeare before vs yesterday in the Diuinitie Schole, a place for disputations. And whereas then notwithstanding you had licence to saye Page 1767 your mynde, and were aunswared to euery matter, yet you coulde not be brought from your errours. We thynkyng that from that tyme ye would with good aduisement consider your state, gaue you respite from that tyme yesterday when we dismissed you,* vntill this tyme, and now haue called you agayne here in this place, by your aunsweres to learne whether you are the same man you were then or no? Therefore we wyll propose vnto you the same articles which we did then, and require of you a determinate aunswere, without farther reasoning, and eftsones recited the first article.

Lati.

Alwayes my protestation saued, that by these mine answeres it should not be thought that I did condescend and agree to your Lordshippes authority in that you are legased by authoritie of the Pope, so that thereby I might seeme to consent to his iurisdiction, to the fyrst article I aunswere now as I did yesterday, that in the Sacrament the worthy receyuer receiueth the very body of Christ, and drinketh his bloud by spirite and grace. But after that corporall being which the Romish Church prescribeth, Christes body & bloud is not in the Sacrament vnder the formes of bread and wine.

The Notaries toke his aunswere to be affirmatiuely. For the seconde article,* he referred hymselfe to his aunsweres made before.

Linc.

After this the Bishop of Lincolne recited the third article, and required a determinate aunswere.

Lat.

Christ made one oblation and sacrifice for the sinnes of the whole worlde, and that a perfecte sacrifice, neyther needeth there to be any other, neyther can there be any other propitiatory sacrifice.

The Notaries tooke his aunswere to bee affirmatiuely.

In like maner did he aunswere to the other articles, not varying from his aunsweres made the day before.

After his aunsweres were penned of the Notaries, and the Bishop of Lincolne had exhorted him in like sort to recant as he dyd M. Ridley, and reuoke his errours and false assertions, and M. Latimer had answered that he ne could,* ne would deny his maister Christ and his veritie, the Bishop of Lincolne desired M. Latimer to harken to him, and then maister Latimer harkening for some new matter and other talke, the Byshop of Lincolne red his condemnation, after the publication of the which, the sayd three Bishops brake vp their Sessions, and dimissed the audience.

But M. Latimer required the Bishop to performe his promyse,* in saying the daye before, that he shoulde haue licence briefly to declare the causes why he refused the Popes authoritie.

Lincol.

But the Byshop sayde, that now he coulde not heare hym, neither ought to talke with hym.

Then M. Latimer asked hym whether it were not lawfull for him to appeale from this his iudgement. And the Byshop asked hym againe, to whom he would appeale. To the next generall Counsell, quoth M. Latimer, whiche shalbe truely called is Gods name.* With that appellation the Byshop was content: but he sayd it would be a long season before suche a conuocation as he ment would be called.

Then the Byshop committed M. Latimer to the Maior, saying: now he is your prisoner maister Maior. Because the presse of people was not yet diminished, ech man lookyng for farther processe, the Byshop of Lincolne commaunded auoydance, and willed M. Latimer to tary tyl the presse were diminished lest he shoulde take hurt at his egression, as he did at his entraunce. And so continued Byshop Ridley, and M. Latimer in durance till the .16. day of the sayd moneth of October.

¶A communication betweene D. Brokes, and D. Ridley, in M. Irysh his house, the xv. day of October, at which tyme he was degraded.

IN the meane season vpon the 15. day in the mornyng, and the same yeare aboue sayd,^{} the Byshop of Glocester Doct. Brokes, and the Uicechauncelour of Oxford Doct. Marshall,^{} with diuerse other of the chiefe and heades of the same Uniuersitie, and many other moe accompanying with them, came vnto M. Irish his house then Maior of Oxforde, where D. Ridley, late Byshop of London was close prisoner. And when the Byshop of Glocester came into the chamber where the sayde D. Ridley did lye, he told him for what purpose their comming was vnto him, saying:^{*} that yet once agayne the Queenes Maiestie did offer vnto hym by them, her gracious mercy, if that he woulde receiue the same, and come home agayne to the fayth which he was Baptised in, & reuoke his erroneous doctrine that he of late had taught abroad to the destructiō of many. And further said, that if he would not recant, and become one of the Catholicke Church with them, then they must needes (against their willes) proceede according to the lawe, which they would be very loth to do, if they might otherwise. But (sayth he) we haue bene often tim^s with you, and haue requested that you would recant this your fantastickall & deuilish opinion, where hytherto you haue not, although you might in so doing winne many, and do much good. Therefore good M. Ridley, consyder with your selfe the daunger that shall ensue both of body and soule, if that you shall so wilfully cast your selfe away in refusing mercy offered vnto you at this time.

My Lord, quoth D. Ridley, you know my mynd fully herein: and as for the doctrine which I haue taught,^{} my conscience assureth me that it was sounde, & accordyng to Gods word (to his glory be it spoken) the which doctrine the Lord God beyng my helper, I wyll mayntaine so long as my tongue shall wagge,^{} and breath is within my body, and in confirmation thereof, seale the same with my bloud.

Brok.

Well, you were best, M. Ridley, not to do so, but to become one of the Church with vs. For you know this well enough, that whosoeuer is out of the Catholike church, can not be saued: therefore I say once agayne, that whiles you haue time and mercy offered you, receiue it, and confesse with vs the Popes holynes to be the chiefe head of the same Church.^{*}

Rid.

I marueyle that you wyll trouble me with any suche vayne and foolysh talke. You know my mynd concerning the vsurped authoritie of the Romishe Antichrist. As I confessed openly in the Scholes, so do I now, that both by my behauiour and talke I do no obedience at all vnto the Byshop of Rome, nor to his vsurped authoritie, and that for diuers good and godly considerations. And here Doct. Ridley would haue reasoned with the sayde Brokes Byshop of Glocester,^{*} of the Byshop of Romes authorities, but could not be suffered, and yet he spake so earnestly agaynst the Pope therein, that the Byshop told hym, if he would not hold his peace, he should be compelled agaynst his wyll. And seeyng sayth he, that you wyll not receiue the Queenes mercy now offered vnto you, but stubburnly refuse the same, we must, against our wils, proceede according to our Commission to disgradyng, takyng from you the dignitie of Priesthode. For we take you for no Byshop, and therefore we will the sooner haue done with you: so, committing you to the secular power, you know what doth follow.

Rid.

Do with me as it shall please God to suffer you, I am well content to abide the same with all my hart.

Brok.

Put of your cap M. Ridley, and put vpon you this surples.

Rid.

Not I truly.*

Brok.

But you must.

Rid.

I wyll not.

Brok.

You must: therefore make no more a do, but put this surples vpon you.

Rid.

Truly if it come vpon me, it shalbe against my wil.

Brok.

Will you not do it vpon you?

Rid.

No, that I will not.

Brok.

It shalbe put vpon you by one or other.

Rid.

Do therein as it shall please you. I am well contented with that, and more then that: the seruaunt is not aboute his Maister. If they delt so cruelly with our Sauour Christe, as the Scripture maketh mention, and he suffered the same patiently, howe much more doth it become vs his seruants? and in saying of these wordes they put vpon the sayde Doctor Ridley the surples, with all the trinkettes appertaynyng to the Masse, and as they were puttyng on the same,* Doctor Ridley did vehemently inuey against the Romysh Byshyp and all that foolysh apparell, callyng hym Antichrist, and the apparell foolysh and abominable, yea to fond for a Uice in a play, in so much that Brokes was exceeding angry with him, and bad hym holde his peace. For he dyd but rayle. Doct. Ridley aunswere agayne, and sayde: so long as his tounge and breath would suffer hym, he would speake agaynst their abominable doynges, what so euer happened vnto hym for so doyng.

Brok.

Well, you were best to holde your peace, lest your mouth be stopped. At which wordes one Edridge, the reader then of the Greeke Lecture standing by, sayd to Doct. Brokes: Syr, the lawe is he should be gagged, therefore let hym be gagged. At which wordes Doct. Ridley lookyng earnestly vpon him that so sayd, wagged his head at hym, and made no aunswere agayne, but with a sigh sayd: Oh well, well, well.

So they proceeded in their doinges: yet neuerthelesse Page 1768 D. Ridley was euer talkyng things not pleasant to their eares,* although one or other bad hym hold his peace, least he should be caused against his wyll.

When as they came to that place where as D. Ridley should hold the chalice and the wafer cake (called •he singyng bread) they bade hym holde the same in hys hande. And Doct. Ridley sayd: they shal not come in my hands, for if they do, they shall fall to the ground for all me. Then there was one appoynted to hold them in his hand, while Bishop Brookes red a certayne thyng in Latine, touching the degradation of spirituall persones, accordyng to the Popes law.

Afterward they put a booke in hys hand, and withall red (as is before sayd) a certayne thing in Latin, the effect therof was: We do take from you the office of preachyng the Gospel,* &c. At which wordes, D. Ridley gaue a great s•gh, lookyng vp toward heauen, saying: Oh Lorde God forgeue them this their wickednes.

And as they put vpon hym the Masse geare, so they began with the vppermost garment, in taking it away agayne, reading a thyng in Latine, accordyng to the order containyd in the sayd booke of the Popes law. Now whē all was taken from him sauynge onely the surples left on his backe, as they were readyng and takyng it away, D. Ridley sayd vnto them: Lord God, what power be you of, that you can take from a man that which he neuer had? I was neuer singer in all my lyfe, and yet you will take from me that which I neuer had.

So when all this their abhominable and ridiculous degradation was ended very solemnely,* D. Ridley sayde vnto D. Brookes, haue you done? If you haue done, then geue me leaue to talke with you a little, concernyng these matters. Brookes answered and said: M. Ridley, we may not talke with you, you be out of the Church, and our law is that we may not talke with any that be out of y^e church. Then M. Ridley sayd: seeyng that you will not suffer me to talke, neyther will vouchsafe to heare me, what remedy but patience? I referre my cause to my heauenly Father, who will reforme thynges that be amisse, when it shall please hym.

At which words they would haue bene gone, but that M. Ridley sayd: My L. I would wish that your Lordship would vouchsafe to read ouer and peruse a litle booke of Bertrams doyngs concernyng the Sacrament, I promise you, you shall finde much good learnyng therein, if you will read the same with an indifferent iudgement.* D. Brookes made no aunswer to this, but would haue bene gone away. Then M. Ridley sayd: Oh, I perceyue that you cannot away with this maner of talke. Well, it bootes not, I will say no more, I wil speake of worldly affaires. I pray you therfore (my Lord) heare me, and be a meane to the Queenes maiestie, in the behalfe of a great many of poore men, and especially for my poore sister and her husband, which standeth there. They had a poore liuing grāted vnto them by me,* whiles I was in the Sea of London, and the same is taken away from them, by hym that now occupieth the same rounge, without all law or conscience.

Here I haue a Supplication to the Queenes maiestie in their behalves. You shal heare the same red: so shal you perceyue the matter the better. Then he red the same, and when he came to the place in the Supplication, that touched hys Sister by name, then he wept, so that for a little space he could not speake for weepyng. After that hee had left of weepyng, he sayde: This is nature that mooueth mee. But I haue now done, and with that read out the rest, and deliuered the same to hys Brother, commaundyng hym to put it vp to the Queenes Maiestie,* and to sue, not onely for hymselfe, but also for suche as had any Leases or Grauntes by hym, and were put from the same by Doctour Boner then Byshop of London, whereunto Brookes sayd: In deede Maister Ridley your request in this Supplication is very lawfull and honest: therfore I must needes in conscience speake to the Queenes Maiestie for them.

Ridley.

I pray you for Gods sake do so.

Brookes.

I thinke your request will be granted, except one thyng let it, and that is (I feare) because you do not allow the Queenes proceedyngs, but obstinately withstand the same, that it will hardly be graunted.

Ridley.

What remedy, I can doe no more but speake and write, I trust I haue discharged my conscience therein, and Gods will be done.

Brokes.

I will doe what lyeth in me.

The copy of this supplication written to the Queene, here followeth.

¶M. Ridley to the Queenes Maiestie.

IT may please your Maiestie for Christ our Sauours sake,* in a matter of conscience (and now not for my selfe but for other poore men) to vouchsafe to heare and vnderstande this mine humble supplication. It is so (honourable princesse) that in the tyme whyles I was in the Ministerie of the Sea of London diuers poore men Tenants thereof, haue taken new Leases of their Tenantries and holdyngs, and some haue renewed and chaunged their old, and therefore haue payed fines and summes of money, both to me, and also to the Chapter of Paules, for the confirmation of the same.

Now I heare say that the Bishop which occupieth the same rouse now, will not allow the foresayd Leases, which must redound to many poore mens vtter ruine and decay.* Wherefore this is myne humble supplication vnto your honourable grace, that it may please the same for Christes sake to be vnto the foresayd poore men their gracious patronesse and defender, eyther that they may enioy their foresayd Leases and yeares renewed, as (I suppose) when their matter shall be heard with consciēce, both iustice, conscience, and equitie shall require, for that their Leases shall be found (I trust) made without fraude or couen, eyther of theyr part, or of myne, and alwayes also the olde •ents reserued to the Sea without any kynd of damage thereof: or if this will not be graunted, then that it may please your gracious highnesse to commaund that the poore men may be restored to their former Leases and yeares and to haue rendered to them agayne such sūmes of mony as they payd to me, & to that chapterhouse for their Leases & yeares, so now taken from them. Which thing concerning the fines payed to me, may bee easily done, if it shall please your Maiestie to commaund some portion of those goods which I left in my house when I fledde in hope of pardon for my trespasses towards your grace, which goodes (as I haue heard) be yet reserued in the same house. I suppose that halfe of the value of my plate which I left in myne offices, and specially in an iron chest in my bed chamber,* will goe nigh to restore all suche fines receyued, the true summes and parcels whereof, are not set in their Leases: and therefore if that way shall please your highnesse, they must be knownen by such wayes and meanes, as your Maiestie by the aduise of men of wisdom and conscience shall appoynt: but yet for Christes sake I craue and most humbly beseech your Maiestie of your most gracious pity and mercy, that the former way may take place.

I haue also a poore Sister that came to me out of the North, with three fatherlesse children, for her reliefe, whome I married after to a seruauent of myne owne house: she is put out of that I did prouide for them. I beseech your honourable grace that her case may be mercifully considered, and that the rather, in contemplation that I neuer had of hym, which suffered indurance at my entrance to the Sea of London, not one peny of his moueable goodes, for it was almost halfe a yeare after hys deposition, afore I did enter into that place: yea, and also if any were left, knownen to be hys, hee had lycence to cary it away, or there for his vse it did lye safe, as hys officers do know. I payd for the lead which I found there,* when I occupied any of it to the behoofe of the Church or of the house. And moreouer, I had not onelye no part of hys moueable goods, but also (as hys olde receyuer and then myne, called M. Stanton, can testifie) I paid for him towards hys seruauents common lieries and wages, after hys deposition, 53 or 55. poundes, I cannot tell whether. In all these matters I beseech your honourable Maiestie to heare the aduise of men of conscience, and in especially the Archbishop of Yorke, which for that hee was continually in my house a yeare and more, before myne imprisonment, I suppose he is not altogether ignorant of some part of these thyngs, and also hys grace doth knowe my Sister, for whose succour and some reliefe, now vnto your highnes I make most humble sute.

The 16. day of Octob. An. 1555.

N. R.

This degradation beyng past, and all thynges finished, D. Brookes called the Bailiffes, deliueying to them M. Ridley with this charge, to keepe him safely from any man speaking with hym,* and that he should be brought to the place of execution when they were commanded. Then M. Ridley in praying God, brast out with these words & sayd: God I thanke thee, and to thy prayse be it spoken, there is none of you all able to lay to my charge any open or notorious crime: for if you could, it should surely bee layd in my lappe, I see very well. Whereunto Brookes sayd, he played the part of a proud Pharisey, exalting and praying hymselfe.

But M. Ridley sayd: No, no, no, as I haue sayd before, to Gods glory be it spoken. I confesse my selfe to bee a miserable wretched sinner, and haue great need of Gods helpe and mercy, and doe daily call and cry for the same: therefore I pray you haue no such opinion in me. Then they departed, and in goyng away, a certaine Warden of a Colledge, of whose name I am not very sure, bad Doct. Page 1769 Ridley repent hym, and forsake that erroneous opinion. Whereunto M. R•dley sayd: Sir, repent you, for you are out of the truth: and I pray God (if it be his blessed will) haue mercy vpon you, and graunt you the vnderstanding of his worde.* Then the Warden beyng in a chafe thereat, sayd: I trust that I shall neuer be of your erroneous and diuelish opinion, neyther yet to bee in that place whether you shal go. He is (saith he) the most obstinatest and wilfullest man that euer I heard talke since I was borne.

The night before he suffred, his beard was washed, and his legs, and as he sate at supper the same night at M. Irishes (who was his keeper) he had his hostesse, and the rest at the boord, to his mariage: for (saith he) to morrowe I must be married, and so shewed hymselfe to bee as mery as euer he was at any time before. And wishing his sister at his mariage, he asked hys brother sitting at the Table, whether she could find in her heart to be there or no, and he answered, yea, I dare say, with all her heart: at which word he sayd, he was glad to heare of her so much therein. So at this talke maistres Irish wept.

But M. Ridley comforted her, and sayd: Oh maistres Irishe, you loue me not now, I see well enough. For in that you weepe, it doth appeare you will not be at my mariage, neither are content therewith. In deede you be not so much my friend, as I thought you had bene. But quiet your selfe: though my breakefast shall be somewhat sharpe and paynfull, yet I am sure, my supper shalbe more pleasant and sweete, &c.

When they arose from the Table, hys brother offered hym to watch all night with hym.* But he said, no, no, that you shall not. For I mynd (God willyng) to goe to bed, and to sleepe as quietly to night, as euer I did in my lyfe. So hys brother departed, exhortyng hym to bee of good cheere, and to take hys Crosse quietly, for the reward was great, &c.

The behauour of D. Ridley and M. Latymer, at the tyme of their death, which was the 16. of October. An. 1555.

*VPon the Northside of the towne, in the ditch ouer against Baily Colledge, the place of execution was appoynted: and for feare of any tumult that might aryse, to let the burnyng of them, the L. Williams was commaunded by the Queenes letters, and the householders of the Citie to be there assistant, sufficiently appoynted, & when euery thyng was in a readines, the prisoners were brought forth by the Maior and Bailiffes.

M. Ridley had a faire blacke gounne furred, and faced with foines, such as he was woont to weare beyng Bish. and a tippet of veluet furred likewise about his necke, a veluet night cap vpon his hed, & a corner cappe vpon the same, goyng in a paire of slippers to the stake, & going betweene the Maior and an Alderman, &c.

After hym came M. Latimer in a poore Bristow freeze frocke all worne, with hys buttoned cap, and a kerchiefe on his hed, all redy to the fire, a new long shroud hanging ouer his hose downe to the feete, which at the first sight, stirred mens hearts to rue vpon them, beholdyng on the one side, the honour they sometyme had, on the other, the calamitie whereunto they were fallen.

M. Doctor Ridley, as hee passed towards Bocardo, lookyng vp where M. Cranmer did lye, hoppyng belike to haue seene hym at the glasse window, and to haue spoken vnto hym. But then M. Cranmer was busie with Frier Soto & his fellowes disputyng together, so that he could not see hym through that occasion.* Then M. Ridley lookyng backe, espied M. Latymer commyng after. Unto whome he sayd: Oh be ye there. Yea sayd M. Latymer, haue after as fast as I can follow. So he following a prety way of, at lenth they came both to the stake, one after the other, where first D. Ridley entring the place, maruelous earnestly holding vp both his hands, loked towards heauen: then shortly after espying M. Latimer, with a wonderous cheerefull looke, ranne to hym, embraced, and kissed hym, and as they that stoode neare reported, comforted hym,* saying: be of good heart brother, for GOD will either asswage the fury of the flame, or els strengthen vs to abyde it.

With that went he to the stake, kneeled downe by it, kissed it, most effectuously prayed, and behynd him M. Latymer kneled, as earnestly callyng vpon God as he. After they arose, the one talked with the other a little whyle, tyll they which were appoynted to see the execution remooued themselues out of the sunne. What they sayd, I can learne of no man.

Then Doctor Smith,* of whose recantation in K. Edwards tyme, ye heard before, began his Sermon to them, vpon this text of Saint Paule, in the xiiij. chapter of the first Epistle to the Corrinthians: Si corpus meum trad•m igni, charitatem autem non habeo, nihil inde vtilitatis capio: That is, If I yeld my body to the fire to be burnt, & haue not Charitie, I shall gayne nothyng thereby. Where in he alledged, that the goodnesse of the cause, and not the order of death: maketh the holynes of the person: Which he confirmed by the examples of Iudas, and of a woman in Oxford that of late hanged her selfe, for that they and suche lyke as he recited, might thē be adiudged righteous, which desperately sundered their lyues from their bodies,* as he feared that those men that stood before hym would do. But he cryed stil to the people to beware of them, for they were heretikes, and dyed out of the Church. And on the other side, he declared their diuersities in opinions, as Lutherians, Oecolampadians, Zuinglians,* of which secte they were, (he sayd) and that was the worst: but the old church of Christ, and the Catholike fayth beleueed far otherwyse, At which place they lifted vp both their handes and eyes to heauen, as it were calling God to witnes of the truth. The which countenaunce they made in many other places of his Sermon, where as they thought hee spake amisse. He ended with a very short exhortation to them, to recant and come home agayne to the church, and saue their lyues and soules, which els were condemned. His sermō was scant in all a quarter of an houre.

Doctor Ridley sayd to Maister Latymer, will you beginne to aunswer the Sermon, or shall I? Maister Latimer sayd, begin you first I pray you. I will sayd Maister Ridley.

Then the wicked Sermon beyng ended,* Doctor Ridley and Maister Latymer kneled down vpon their knees towards my Lord Williams of Tame, the Uicechancellor of Oxford, and dyuers other Commissioners appointed for that purpose, which sate vpon a forme therby. Unto whome Maister Ridley sayd: I beseech you my Lord euen for Christes sake, that I may speake but two or three wordes: and whylest my Lord bent hys head to the Maior and Uicechauncellour, to know (as it appeared) whether he myght geue hym leaue to speake, the Bailiffes and Doctour Marshall Uicechancellour ranne hastily vnto hym,* and with theyr handes stopped hys mouthe and sayd: Maister Ridley, if you will reuoke your erroneous opinions, and recant the same, you shall not onely haue libertie so to doe, but also the benefite of a subiect, that is, haue your lyfe. Not otherwyse sayd Maister Ridley? No quoth Doctor Marshall: therefore if you will not doe so, then there is no remedy but you must suffer for your desertes. Well (quoth M. Ridley) so long as the breath is in my body, I will neuer deny my Lord Christ, and hys knowen truth: Gods will be done in me.* And with that he rose vp, and sayd with a lowde voyce: Well, then I commit our cause to almighty God, which shall indifferently iudge all.

To whose saying, Maister Latymer added hys olde Posie. Well,* there is nothyng hidde but it shall bee opened: and he sayd he could aunswere Smith well enough if he myght bee suffered. Incontinently they were commaunded to make them ready, which they with all mekenesse obeyed. Maister Ridley tooke his gown and his tippet, and gaue it to his brother in law M. Shepside, who all his tyme of imprisonment,* although he might not bee suffred to come to hym, laye there at his owne charges to prouide him necessities, which from tyme to tyme, he sent him by the Sergeant that kept hym. Some other of hys apparell that was little woorth, he gaue away, other the Bailifs tooke.

He gaue away besides, diuers other small thynges to Gentlemen standyng by,* and diuers of them pitifully wepyng, as to sir Henry Lea, he gaue a new grote, and to diuers of my L. Williams gentlemen, some napkins, some nutmegs, and races of ginger, his Diall, and such other thyngs as he had about hym, to euery one that stooode next hym. Some plucked the pointes of his hose. Happy was he that might get any rag of hym.

M. Latymer gaue nothyng, but very quietly suffered his keper to pull of his hose, and his other aray,* which to looke vnto was very simple: and beyng stripped into hys shroud, he seemed as comely a person to them that were there present, as one should lightly see: and where as in his clothes, he appeared a withered and crooked silke olde man, he now stood bolt vpright, as comely a fater as one might lightly behold.

Then M. Ridley standyng as yet in hys trusse, sayde Page 1770 to his brother: it were best for me to goe in my trusse still. No (quoth hys brother) it will put you to more payne: and the trusse will do a poore man good. Whereunto Maister Ridley sayd: be it, in the name of God, and so vnclaced hymselfe.* Then beyng in his shirt, he stoode vpon the foresayd stone, and held vp hys handes and sayd: Oh heauenly Father, I geue vnto thee most hartly thanks, for that thou hast called me to bee a professour of thee, euen vnto death. I beseech thee Lord GOD take mercy vpon this Realme of England, and deliuer the same from all her enemies.

Then the Smith tooke a chaine of iron, and brought the same about both D. Ridleys, and M. Latimers middles: and as he was knockyng in a staple, D. Ridley took the chayne in his hand, and shaked the same, for it did gird in his belly, and lookyng aside to the Smith, sayd: good fellow knocke it in hard, for the flesh will haue hys course. Then his brother did bring hym gunpowder in a bag,* and would haue tied the same about hys necke. M. Ridley asked what it was. His brother said gunpowder. Then sayd he, I take it to be sent of God, therefore I will receyue it as sent of hym. And haue you any sayd he, for my brother, meanyng M. Latymer? Yea sir, that I haue (quoth hys brother.) Then geue it vnto hym sayd he, betyme, least ye come to late. So hys brother went, and caried of the same gunpowder vnto M. Latymer.

In the meane tyme D. Ridley spake vnto my L. Williams, and sayd: My L. I must be a suter vnto your lordship, in the behalfe of diuers poore men, and especially in the cause of my poore Sister: I haue made a supplication to the Queenes Maiestie in their behalves. I beseech your Lordship for Christes sake, to bee a meane to her grace for them. My brother here hath the Supplication, and wyll resort to your lordship to certifie you hereof. There is nothing in all the world y^t troubleth my conscience (I praise God) this onely excepted. Whiles I was in the Sea of London, diuers poore men tooke Leases of me, and agreed with me for the same. Now I heare say, the B. that now occupieth the same rouse, wil not allow my graunts vnto them made, but contrary vnto all law and conscience, hath taken from them their liuynges, and will not suffer them to enioy the same. I beseech you my Lord, be a mean for them: you shall doe a good deed, and God wil reward you.

*Then brought they a fagot kindled with fire, and layd the same downe at D. Ridleys feete. To whome Maister Latymer spake in this maner: Be of good comfort maister Ridley, and play the man: wee shall this day light such a candle by Gods grace in England, as (I trust) shall neuer be put out.

And so the fire beyng geuen vnto them, when D. Ridley saw the fire flamyng vp toward hym, he cryed wyth a wonderfull lowd voyce: *In manus tuas Domine, commendo spiritum meum, Domine recipe spiritum meum, and after repeated this latter part often in English: Lord, Lord, receyue my spirit: M. Latymer crying as vehemently on the other side: Oh Father of Heauen, receyue my soule: who receyued the flame as it were embrasing of it. After, as he had stroked hys face with hys hands, & (as it were) bathed them a little in the fire, he soone died (as it appered) with very litle payne or none. And thus much concerning the end of this old and blessed seruaunt of God, M. Latymer, for whose laborious trauails, fruitfull lyfe, & constāt death, the whole Realme hath cause to geue great thanks to almighty God.

But M. Ridley by reason of the euill making of the fire vnto hym,* because the wooden fagots were laid about the gosse, and ouer high built, the fire burned first beneath, beyng kept downe by the woode. Which when he felt, hee desired them for Christs sake to let the fire come vnto him. Which when hys brother in law heard, but not well vnderstood, entending to ridde hym out of his payne (for the which cause he gaue attendance) as one in such sorow, not well aduised what he did, heaped fagots vpon hym, so that he cleane couered hym, which made the fire more vehement beneath, that it burned cleane all hys neather parts before it once touched the vpper, and that made him leape vp and downe vnder the fagots, and often desire them to let the fire come vnto him, saying: I cannot burne. Which in deed appeared well: for after hys legs were consumed by reason of his struglyng through the payne (whereof he had no release,* but only his contentation in God) he shew'ed that side toward vs clean, shirt and all vntouched with flame. Yet in all this torment he forgate not to call vnto God still, hauyng in his mouth: Lord haue mercy vppon me, intermedling this cry, let the fire come vnto me, I can not burne. In which paynes he laboured, till one of the standers by with his bill, pulled of the fagots aboue, and where he saw the fire flame vp,* hee wrested himselfe vnto that side. And when the flame touched the gunpouder, hee was seene stirre no more, but burned on the other side, fallyng downe at M. Latymers feete. Which some said hapned, by reason that the chaine loosed: other sayd that he fell ouer the chaine by reason of the poise of his body, and the weakenes of the neather limmes.

Some say that before he was like to fall from the stake he desired them to holde him to it with their billes. Howsoever it was, surely it moued hundredes to teares, in beholding the horrible sight. For I thinke there was none that had not cleane exiled all humanitie and mercy,* which would not haue lamented to behold the fury of the fire so to rage vpon their bodies. Signes there were of sorrowe on euery side. Some tooke it greuously to see their deaths, whose lyues they held full deare. Some pitied their persons that thought theyr soules had no neede thereof. His brother mooued many men, seying his miserable case: seeyng (I say) hym compelled to such infelicitie, y^t he thought then to doe hym best seruice, when he hastened hys ende. Some cryed out of the lucke, to see his endeour, who most dearely loued hym, and sought his release, turne to hys greater vexation, and encrease of payne. But who so considered their preferments in tyme past, the places of honor that they sometime occupied in this common wealth, the fauour they were in with their princes, and the opinion of learnyng they had, could not chuse but sorow with teares, to see so great dignitie, honour, and estimation, so necessary members sometime accounted, so many godly vertues, the study of so many yeares, such excellent learnyng, to be put into the fire, and consumed in one moment. Wel, dead they are, and the reward of this world they haue already. What reward remayneth for them in heauen, the day of the Lordes glory when he commeth with his saints, shall shortly I trust declare.

Albeit I haue differred and put ouer many treatises, letters, & exhortations belongyng to the story of the Martyrs, vnto the latter appendix in the ende of this volume: thinkyng also to haue done the lyke with these farewels, & exhortations followyng of D. Ridley, yet for certain purposes moouing me thereunto, and especially consideryng the fruitfull admonitions, wholesome doctrine, and necessary exhortations conteyned in the same, I thought best here to bestow, and consequently to adioyne the sayd tractations of that learned pastour, with the lyfe and story of the authour. Whereof the two first be in a manner of hys farewels, the one to his kinsfolks, and generally to all the faithfull of the number of Christes congregation: the other more speciall to the prisoners, and banished Christiāns in the gospels cause: the third containeth a fruitfull and a generall admonition to the cite of London, and to all other, with necessary precepts of christian office, as by the tenour of them here followeth in order to be seene.

¶A treatise or a letter written by D. Ridley, in steade of his last farewell, to all hys true and faythfull friendes in God, with a sharpe admonition withall vnto the Papistes.

AT the name of Iesus let euery knee bow, both of thynges in heauen, and thynges in earth,* and things vnder the earth, and let euery tongue confesse, that Iesus Christ is the lord vnto y^e glory of God the Father, Amen.

As a man mynding to take a farre iourney, and to depart from his familiar friendes, commonly and naturally hath a desire, to bidde his friendes farewell, before his departure: so lykewise now I looking daylye, when I should be cauled to depart hence from you, (O all ye my dearely beloued brethren, & sisters in our Sauour Christ that dwell here in this worlde) hauing a lyke mynde towards you all (and blessed be God for such tyme and leasure, whereof I right hartely thanke his heauenly goodnesse:) to byd you all my deare brethren & sisters (I saye in Christ) that dwell vpon the earth, after such maner as I can, Farewell.

Farewell my deare brother George Shippside, whom I haue euer found faythfull, trusty, and louyng in all s^tate and conditions, and now in the tyme of my crosse, ouer al other to me most frendly and stedfast, and that which lyked me best, ouer all other thynges, in Gods cause euer hartye.

Farewell my deare sister Alice his wyfe. I am glad to heare of thee,* that thou doest take Christes crosse which is layd now (blessed be God) both on thy backe and myne, in good part. Thanke thou God that hath geuen thee a godly and louyng husband: see thou honour hym, and obey hym, accordyng to Gods law, Honour thy mother in law Page 1771 hys mother, and loue all those that pertaine vnto him, beyng redy to do them good, as it shall lye in thy power. As for thy children, I doubt not of thy husband, but that hee which hath geuen him an hart to loue and feare God, and in God them that pertaine vnto him, shall also make hym friendly and beneficiall vnto thy children, euen as if they had bene gotten of his owne body.

*Farewell my welbeloued brother Iohn Ridley of the Waltoun, and you my gentle and louing sister Elizabeth: whom besides the naturall league of amitie, your tender loue, which you were sayde euer to beare towards mee aboue the rest of your brethren, doth bynde mee to loue. My mynde was to haue acknowledged this your louyng affection, and to haue acquitted it with deedes and not with wordes alone. Your daughter Elizabeth I bid farewell, whome I loue for the meeke and gentle spirite that God hath geuen her, which is a precious thyng in y^e sight of God.

*Farewell my beloued sister of Unthanke, with al your children nephewes and neeces. Since the departing of my brother Hugh, my mynd was to haue bene vnto them in stead of their father, but the Lord God must and wyll bee their father, if they will loue hym and feare hym, and lye in the trade of hys law.

*Farewel my welbeloued and worshipful Cosins, M. Nich. Ridley of Willimountswike, and your wyfe, and I thanke you for all your kindnes shewed both to me, and also to all your owne kinsfolke and myne. Good Cosine, as God hath set you in our stocke and kindered (not for any respect of your person, but of hys aboundaunt grace and goodnesse, to be as it were the belweather to order, & conduct the rest, and hath also endued you with hys manifold gyfts of grace, both heauenly and worldly aboue others: so I pray you good Cosin (as my trust and hope is in you) continue and encrease in the maintenaunce of the truth, honesty, righteousnesse, and all true godlinesse, and to the vttermost of your power, to withstand falshood, vntruth, vnrighteousnesse, and all vngodlinesses, whiche is forbidden and condemned by the worde and Lawes of God.

*Farewell my young Cosin Rafe Whitfield. Oh your tyme was very short with mee. My mynde was to haue done you good, and yet you caught in that litle time a losse, but I trust it shall bee recompensed, as it shall please almighty God.

Farewel all my whole kinred and countreyemen, farewell in Christ altogether. The Lord which is the searcher of secrets, knoweth that according to my harts desire, my hope was of late that I should haue come among you, & to haue brought with me abundance of Christes blessed Gospell, according to the duetie of that office and ministerie, whereunto among you I was chosen, named, and appointed by the mouth of that our late peerelesse Prince K. Edward, and so also denounced openly in his Court, by his priuy Counsaile.

I warne you all my welbeloued kinsfolke & countrymen, that ye be not amased or astonied at the kynde of my departure, or dissolution: for I ensure you, I thinke it the most honour that euer I was called vnto in all my lyfe, and therefore I thanke my Lord God hartily for it,* that it hath pleased him to call me of his great mercy vnto this high honour, to suffer death willingly for his sake, and in hys cause: vnto the which honour he hath called the holy Prophetes and dearly beloued Apostles, and his blessed chosen Martyrs. For know ye that I doubt no more but that the causes wherefore I am put to death, are Gods causes, and the causes of the truth, then I doubt that the Gospell which Iohn wrote, is the Gospell of Christ, or that Paules Epistles are the very word of God. And to haue a hart willyng to abide, and stand in Gods cause and in Christes quarell euen vnto death, I ensure thee (O mā) it is an inestimable and an honourable gift of God, geuen onely to the true elects and derely beloued childrē of God, and inheritours of the kingdome of heauen. For the holy Apostle and also Martyr in Christes cause S. Peter, saith: If ye suffer rebuke in the name of Christ,* that is, in Christes cause, and for hys truths sake, then are ye happy and blessed, for the glory of the spirit of God resteth vpon you. If for rebukes sake suffred in Christes name, a mā is pronounced by the mouth of that holy Apostle, blessed & happy: How much more happy & blessed is hee that hath the grace to suffer death also? Wherefore, all ye that bee my true louers and friends, reioyce, and reioyce with mee againe, & render with me hartie thanks to God our heauēly father, that for his sonnes sake my sauour & redeemer Christ,* he hath vouchsafed to call me, beyng els without his gracious goodnes, in my selfe but a sinnefull & a vyle wretch, to call me (I say) vnto this high dignitie of hys true Prophets, of his faithfull Apostles, & of his holy elect & chosen Martyrs, that is, to dye and to spend this temporall lyfe in the defence & maintenance of his eternal and euerlasting truth.

Ye know that be my Countreyemen dwelling vppon the borders,* where (alas) the true man suffereth oftentimes muche wrong at the thieues hande, i• it chaunce a man to be slayne of a thiefe (as it oft chanceth there) which went out with his neighbour to helpe him to rescue hys goods agayne, that the more cruelly he bee slayne, and the more stedfastly he stucke by his neighbour in the fight agaynst the face of the thiefe, the more fauour and frendship shall all his posteritie haue for the slayne mans sake, of all them that be true, as long as the memory of his fact, and his posteritie doth endure: Euen so, ye that be my kinsefolke and countreyemen, know ye (how so euer the blynd, ignorant, & wicked world hereafter shall rayse vppon my death, which thyng they cānot do worse then their fathers did, of the death of Christ our Sauour, of his holye Prophets, Apostles & Martyrs:) know ye (I say) y^t both before God & all them that be godly, and that truly kn^ow, & follow the lawes of God, ye haue, and shall haue by gods grace euer cause to reioyce, & to thanke God highly, and to thinke good of it, and in God to reioyce of me your fleshe & bloud, whom God of his gracious goodnes, hath vouchsafed to associate vnto the blessed cōpany of his holy Martyrs in heauen, and I doubt not in the infinite goodnes of my Lord God, nor in the faithful fellowship of his elect & chosen people, but at both their hands in my cause, ye shall rather finde the more fauour and grace: For the Lord saieth, that he will be both to them and theyrs that loue him, the more louyng agayne in a thousand generations: the Lord is so full of mercy to them (I say) and theirs which doe loue hym in deed. And Christ saith againe,* that no mā can shew more loue, then to geue his lyfe for his friend.

Now also knowe ye, all my true louers in God, my kinsfolke and Countreyemen, that the cause wherefore I am put to death, is euen after the same sort and condition, but touching more neere Gods cause, & in more waightie matters, but in the general kynd all one. For both is gods cause, both is in the maintenance of right, and both for the common wealth, & both for the weale also of the Christiā brother: although yet there is in these two no small difference both concernyng the enimies, the goods stolne, & the maner of the fight. For know ye all,* that lyke as there whē the poore true mā is robbed by the thiefe of his own goods truly gotten, (whereupon he and his househould should lyue) he is greatly wronged, & the thiefe in stealing & robbing with violence the poore mā's goods, doth offend god, doth transgres his law, and is iniurious both to the poore man, and to the common welth: so I say, know ye all that euen here in the cause of my death it is with the Church of England, I meane the congregation of the true chosen children of GOD in this Realme of England, whiche I knowledge not only to be my neighbours, but rather the congregation of my spirituall brethren, & sisters in Christ, yea, members of one body, wherein by Gods grace I am and haue bene grafted in Christ.* This Church of England had of late of the infinite goodnesse and aboundaunt grace of almighty God, great substaunce, great riches of heauenly treasure, great plenty of Gods true and sincere worde, the true and wholesome administration of Christes holy Sacramentes, the whole profession of Christes Religion, truely and plainly set foorth in Baptisme, the playne declaration & vnderstandyng of the same, taught in the holye Catechisme, to haue bene learned of all true Christians.

This Church had also a true and sincere forme & maner of the Lordes Supper, wherein,* accordyng to Iesus Christes owne ordinaunce, and holy institution, Christes commaundementes were executed and done. For vpon the bread and wyne set vppon the Lordes Table, thanks were geuen, the commemoration of the Lords death was had, the bread in the remembrance of Christes body torne vpon the crosse, was broken,* and the cuppe in the remembraunce of Christes bloud shed, was distributed and both communicated vnto all that were present, and would receyue them, and also they were exhorted of the Minister so to doe.

All was done openly in the vulgar tong, so that euery thyng might be both easily heard, & plainly vnderstand of all the people, to Gods high glorye, and the edification of the whole Church. This Church had of late the whole diuine seruice, all common and publike prayers ordeined to be said and heard in the common congregation, not onely framed and fashioned to the true vayne of holy scripture, but also set foorth accordyng to the commaundement of the Lord, and S. Paules doctrine for the peoples edification,*Page 1772 in their vulgare tong.

It had also holy and wholesome Homelies, in commendation of the principall vertues: which are commended in Scripture, and likewyse other Homelies agaynst the most pernicious and capitall vices that vseth (alas) to raigne in this Realme of England.* This Church had in matters of controuersie, Articles so penned and framed alter the holy Scripture, and grounded vpon the true vnderstandyng of Gods word,* that in short tyme if they had bene vniuersally receiued, they should haue bene able to haue set in Christes Church much concorde and vnitie in Christes true religion, and to haue expelled many false errors and heresies, wherewith this Church (alas) was almost ouergone.

But (alas) of late into this spirituall possession of the heauēly treasure of these godly riches,* are entred in theues that haue robbed and spoyled all this heauenly treasure away. I may well complayne on these thyngs, and cry out vpon them with the Prophet, saying: Deus venerunt gentes in haereditatem tuam, &c. Psal. 72. O Lord God, the Gentiles, Heathen nations are come into thy heritage: They haue defiled thy holy Temple, and made Ierusalem an heape of stones, that is, They haue broken & beaten down to the ground thy holy Citie. This Heathenish generatiō, these thieues of Samaria,* these Sabei and Chaldei, these robbers haue rushed out of their dennes, and haue robbed the Church of England, of all the foresayd holy treasure of God: they haue caried it away, and ouerthrown it, and in stead of Gods holy worde, the true and right administration of Christes holy Sacramentes, as of Baptisme and others,* they mixte theyr ministerie with mens foolish fantasies, and many wicked and vngodly traditions withall.

In stead of the Lordes holy Table, they geue the people with much solemne disguising, a thyng which they cal their Masse, but in deed and in truth, it is a very masking and mockerie of the true Supper of the Lord, or rather I may call it a crafty iuglyng,* whereby these false theeues & iuglers haue bewitched the myndes of the simple people, that they haue broght them from the true worship of god, vnto pernicious idolatry, and make them to beleue that to be Christ our Lord and Sauour, which in deed is neither God nor man, nor hath any lyfe in it selfe, but in substance is the creature of bread and wyne, and in vse of the Lordes Table, is the Sacrament of Christes bodye and bloud: and for this holy vse, for the whiche the Lord hath ordained them in hys table, to represent vnto vs his blessed body torne vpon the crosse for vs, and his bloude there shed, it pleased him to call them his body & bloud, whiche vnderstanding, Christ declareth to be his true meanyng, when he sayth: Do this in the remembraunce of me. And agayne,* Saint Paule likewyse doth set out the same more plainly, speaking of the same Sacrament, after the words of the consecration, saieng: As often as ye shall eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup, ye shall set forth (he meaneth with the same) the Lordes death vntill his commyng agayne.* And here agayne these thieues haue robbed also the people of the Lordes cup, contrary to the plaine words of Christ, written in his Gospell.

Nowe, for the common publike prayers whiche were in the vulgare tongue, these theeues haue brought in agayne a strange tongue,* whereof the people vnderstande not one worde. Wherein what doe they els, but robbe the people of their Diuine seruice, wherein they ought to pray together with the minister, and to pray in a strange tong, what is it, but (as Saint Paule calleth it) barbarousnesse, childishnes, vnprofitable folly, yea, and plaine madnesse?

For the godly Articles of vnitie in religion, & for the wholesome Homelies, what doe these Thieues place in the stead of them, but the Popes Lawes and Decrees, lying Legends, fayned fables and miracles to delude and abuse the simplicitie of the rude people. Thus this robbery and theft is not onely committed, nay, sacriledge and wicked spoyle of heauenly thyngs, but also in the stead of the same, is brought in and placed, the abhominable desolation of the tyrant Antiochus, of proud Senacherib, of the shamelesse faced kyng, and of the Babilonicall beast. Unto this robbery, this theft and sacrilege, for that I cannot cōsent, nor (God willyng) neuer shall so long as the breath is in my body, because it is blasphemy agaynst God, hygh treason vnto Christ our heauenly kyng, Lord, Maister, & our onely Sauour and redeemer, it is playne contrary to Gods word, and to Christes Gospell, it is the subuersion of all true godlinesse, and agaynst the euerlastyng saluation of myne owne soule, and of all my brethren and sisters, whom Christ my Sauour hath so dearely bought, wyth no lesse price, then with the effusion and shedyng forth of hys most precious bloud. Therefore, all ye my true louers in God, my kinsfolke and countreyemen, for this cause (I say) knowe ye that I am put to death, which by Gods grace I shall willingly take, with hearty thanks to God therefore, in certayne hope without any doubtyng, to receyue at Gods hande agayne of his free mercy and grace, euerlastyng lyfe.

Although the cause of the true man slayne of the thiefe, helpyng hys neighbour to recouer hys goods agayne, and the cause wherfore I am to be put to death, in a generality is both one (as I sayd before) yet know ye that there is no small difference. These thieues agaynst whom I do stand,* are much worse then the robbers and thieues of the borders. The goodes which they steale are much more precious, and their kynds of fight are far diuers. These thieues are worse (I say) for they are more cruell, more wycked, more false, more deceitfull and crafty: for those wyl kill the body, but these will not sticke to kill both body and soule. Those for the generall theft and robbery, be called & are in deed theeues and robbers: but these for their spirituall kynd of robbery, are called Sacrilegi, as ye would say Church robbers. They are more wicked: for those goe about to spoyle men of worldly thynges, worldly riches, gold and siluer, & worldly substance: these go about in the wayes of the deuill their ghostly father, to steale from the vniuersall Church, and perticularly from euery man, all heauenly treasure, true faith, true charity, & hope of saluation in the bloud of our Sauour Iesus Christ, yea to spoil vs of our sauior Iesus Christ, of his gospel, of his heauēly spirit, & of the heauenly heritage of the kingdom of heauē, so derely purchased vnto vs, with the death of our maister and Sauour Christ. These be the goodes and godly substance whereupon the christian before God must liue, and without the which he cannot lyue: These goods (I saye) these theeues, these Church robbers, go about to spoile vs of. The which goods, as to the man of God they excell and farre passe all worldly treasure: so to withstand euen vnto the death, such theeues as go about to spoyle both vs & the whole Church of such goods, is most high and honourable seruice done vnto God.

These church robbers be also much more false, crafty, and deceitfull then the theeues vpon the borders, for these haue not the craft so to commend their theft, that they dare auouch it, and therefore as acknowledging themselves to be euill, they steale commonly vpon the nyght,* they dare not appeare at iudgements and Sessions, where Iustice is executed, and when they are taken and brought thether, they neuer hang any man, but they bee oft tymes hanged for theyr faults. But these Church robbers can so cloke & colour their spiritual robbery, that they can make the people to beleue falshood to be truth, and truth falshood, good to be euill, and euill good, lyght to be darknesse, and darknesse lyght, superstition to be true religion, and Idolatry to be the true worship of God, and that which is in substance the creature of bread and wyne, to bee none other substaunce but onelye the substaunce of Christ the liuyng Lord both God and man. And with this their falshood & craft, they can so iuggle and bewitch the vnderstanding of the simple, that they dare auouch it openly in Courte and in Towne, and feare neyther hangyng nor headyng, as the poore theewes of the borders doe, but stout and strong lyke Nembroth, dare condemne to bee burned in flamyng fire, quicke and alyue, whosoeuer wil go about to bewray their falshood.

The kynd of fight against these Churchrobbers, is also of another sort and kynd,* then is that which is agaynst the theewes of the borders. For there the true men go forth agaynst them with speare and launce, with bow and hyll, and all such kynd of bodily weapons as the true mē haue: but here as the enemies be of another nature, so the watch men of Christes flocke, the warrioures that fight in the Lordes warre, must be armed & fight with another kynd of weapons and armour. For here the enemies of GOD, the souldiours of Antichrist, although the battaile is set forth agaynst the Church by mortall men beyng flesh and bloud, and neuerthelesse members of their father the deuill, yet for that their graund maister is the power of darknesse, their members are spirituall wickednes, wicked spirites, spirits of errors, of heresies, of all deceit and vngodlinesse, spirits of Idolatry, superstition & hypocrisy, which are called of S. Paule, Principates and powers,* Lordes of the world, rulers of the darkenes of this world, & spirituall subtleties concernyng heauenly thyngs, and therefore our weapons must be fitte and meete to fight agaynst such, not carnall nor bodily weapons, as speare & launce, but spirituall and heauenly: we must fight agaynst suche with the armour of God, not entendyng to kill their bodies, but their erroures, their false craft and heresies, their Page 1773 idolatry, superstition and hypocrisie, and to saue (as much as lyeth in vs) both their bodies and soules.

And therefore as s. Paul teacheth vs, we fight not against flesh and bloud, that is, we fight not with bodily weapon to kil the man,* but with the weapons of God to put to flight his wicked errors & vice, & to saue both body and soule. Our weapons therefore,* are faith, hope, charitie, righteousnes, truth, patience, prayer vnto God, & our sword wherewith we smite our enemies, we beat and batter, and beare downe all falshood, is the worde of God. With these weapons vnder the banner of the crosse of Christ we do fight, euer hauing our eye vpon our graund maister, Duke and captaine Christ, & then we reckon our selues to triumphe & to win the crowne of euerlasting blisse, when enduryng in this battail without any shrinking or yeldyng to the enemies, after the example of our graund capitaine Christ our maister, after the example of his holy prophets, Apostles & Martyrs, when (I say) we are slaine in our mortal bodies of our enemies, & are most cruelly & without all mercy murdered down like a many of sheepe. And y^e more cruell, the more painful, the more vile & spiteful is the kind of the death whereunto we bee put: the more glorious in God, the more blessed and happy we reckon, (without all doubts) our martyrdome to be.

And thus much dere louers & friends in God, my coūtreymen & kinsfolke. I haue spoken for your comfort, lest of my death (of whose life you looked peraduenture sometymes to haue had honestie, pleasures & commodities) ye might be abashed or thinke any euill: wheras ye haue rather cause to reioyce (if ye loue me in deed) for that it hath pleased God to cal me to a greater honor and dignitie, thē euer I did enioy before, eyther in Rochester, or in the sea of London,* or euer should haue had in the Sea of Durham, whereunto I was last of all elected & named: yea I count it greater honour before God in deede to dye in hys cause (whereof I nothing doubt) then is any earthly or temporal promotion or honor that can be geuen to a man in this world. And who is he that knoweth the cause to be Gods to be Christes quarel, & of his Gospell, to be the common weale of all the elect and chosen children of God, of all the inheritours of the kyngdome of heauen, who is he (I say) that knoweth this assuredly by Gods worde, and the testimony of hys owne conscience (as I thorough the infinite goodnesse of GOD, not of my selfe, but by his grace acknowledge my selfe to doe) who is hee (I saye) that knoweth this and both loueth and feareth GOD in deed and in truth,* loueth and beleueeth his maister Christ and his blessed Gospel, loueth his brotherhoode the chosen children of God, and also lusteth and longeth for euerlasting lyfe, who is he (I say agayne) that would not or can not finde in his hart in this cause to be content to die? The Lord forbidde that any such should bee that should forsake this grace of God.* I trust in my Lord God, the GOD of mercies & the Father of all comfort through Iesus Christ our Lord, that he which hath put this mynd, will, & affection by his holy spirit in my hart to stand against the face of the enemy in his cause, and to chuse rather the losse of al my worldly substance, yea, and of my lyfe too, then to deny his known truth, that he will comfort me, ayde mee, and strengthen me euermore euen vnto the end, and to the yeldyng vp of my spirit & soule into hys holy hands, whereof I most hartily beseech his most holy sacred Maiestie of his infinite goodnes and mercy, through Iesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Now that I haue taken my leaue of my cuntrymen and kinsfolke,* and the Lord doth lend me lyfe, and geueth me laisure, I will bid my other good friends in God of other places also, farewell. And whom first or before other, then the Uniuersitie of Cambridge, wheras I haue dwelt longer, found more faithfull and hartie friendes, receyued more benefits (the benefits of my naturall parents onely excepted) then euer I did euen in myne own natiue cuntry wherein I was borne.

Farewel therfore Cambridge my louyng mother and tender nurse.* If I should not acknowld thy manifold benefites, yea if I should not for thy benefites at the least loue thee agayne, truly I were to be counted to vngrate & vnkynde. What benefites hadst thou euer, that thou vsest to geue & bestow vppon thy best beloued children, that thou thoughtest too good for me? Thou didst bestowe on mee all thy schoole degrees, of thy common offices, the Chaplaynship of the vniuersitie, the office of the Proctorship, & of a common Reader, & of thy priuate commodities & emoluments in colledges? what was it that thou madest me not partner of? First to be scholer, then to be fellow, & after my departure from thee, thou calledst me againe to a maistership of a right worshipful colledge. I thanke thee my louyng mother for al this thy kindnes, and I pray God that his lawes and the sincere gospell of Christ, may euer bee truly taught and faithfully learned in thee.

Farewell Pembroke Hall,* of late myne owne Colledge, my cure and my charge: what case thou art in now God knoweth, I know not wel. Thou wast euer named sithens I knew thee which is now 30. yeares agoe, to bee studious, well learned, and a great setter forth of Christes gospell, and of Gods true word: so I found thee, & blessed be God so I left thee in deed.* Wo is me for thee myne own deare Colledge, if euer thou suffer thy selfe by any meanes to be brought from that trade. In thy Orchard (the wals, butts and trees, if they could speake, would beare me witnes) I learned without booke almost all Paules epistles, yea, and I weene all the Canonicall epistles, saue only the Apocalyps. Of which study, although in time a great part did depart from me, yet the sweete smell thereof I trust I shall cary with me into heauen: for the profite thereof I thinke I haue felt in all my lyfe tyme euer after, & I ween of late (whether they abide now or no, I cannot tell) there was that did the lyke. The Lord graunt that this zeale & loue toward that part of gods word, which is a key & true commentary to all holy scripture, may euer abyde in that Colledge so long as the world shall endure.

From Cambridge I was called into Kente by the Archbishoppe of Caunterbury Thomas Cranmer, that most Reuerend Father and man of God, and of hym by and by sent to be Uicare of Herne in East Kent. Wherefore farewell Herne, thou worshipfull and wealthy Parishe, the first Cure whereunto I was called to minister Gods word. Thou hast heard of my mouth oft tymes the worde of GOD preached, not after the popish trade, but after Christes Gospell: Oh that the fruite had aunswered to the seede.* And yet I must knowledge me to bee thy debter for the doctrine of the Lordes Supper, whiche at that tyme I acknowledge God had not reueled vnto me: but I blesse God in all that godly vertue & zeale of Gods worde, which the Lord by preachyng of his word did kindle manifestly both in the heart and in the lyfe and works of that Godly woman there, my Lady Phines: the Lord graunt that hys worde tooke lyke effect there in many other moe.

Farewell thou cathedrall church of Caunterbury, the Metropolitike sea, whereof once I was a member. To speake things pleasant vnto thee, I dare not for daunger of conscience, and displeasure of my Lord God, and to say what lyeth in my hart, were now to much, & I feare were able to do thee now but little good. Neuerthelesse, for the friendship I haue found in some there, and for charity sake I wish thee to be washed clean of all worldlines and vngodlines, that thou mayst be found of God after thy name Christes church in deed and in truth.

Farewell Rochester, sometyme my Cathedrall sea, in whom (to say the truth) I did find much gentlenesse and obedience, and I trust thou wilt not say the contrary,* but I did vse it to Gods glory and thyne owne profit in God. Oh that thou hadst and mightst haue continued and gone forward in the trade of Gods lawe wherein I dyd leaue thee: then thy charge and burden should not haue bene so terrible and dangerous, as I suppose verily it is lyke to be (alas) on the latter day.

To Westminster other aduertisement in God I haue not now to say,* then I haue sayd before to the Cathedrall church of Cant. & so God geue thee of his grace, that thou mayest learne in deed and in truth to please hym after his owne lawes, and thus fare you well.

Oh London, London, to whome now may I speake in thee, or whom shall I bid farewell?* Shall I speake to the Prebendaries of Paules? Alas, all that loued Gods word, & were the true setters forth therof, are now (as I heare say) some burnt and slaine, some exiled and banished and some holden in hard prison, and appointed daily to be put to most cruel death for Christes gospel sake.

As for the rest of them, I know they could neuer brooke me well, nor I could neuer delight in them.

Shall I speake to the Sea thereof,* wherein of late I was placed almost, and not fully by the space of iij. yeres? But what may I say to it, being (as I heare say I am) deposed and expelled by iudgement as an vniust vsurper of that rounge. O iudgement, iudgement. Can this bee iust iudgement to condemne the chiefe minister of gods word, the pastour and bishop of the dioces, and neuer bring him into iudgement, that hee might haue heard what crymes were layd to his charge, nor neuer suffer him to haue any place or tyme to aunswer for himselfe? Thinkest thou that hereafter when true Iustice shall haue place, thys iudgement can euer be allowed either of God or of man? Well, as for the cause and whole matter of my deposition, & the spoil of my goods which thou possessest yet, I referre it vnto Page 1774 God which is a iust iudge: and I besech God, if it be his pleasure, that that which is but my personall wrong, bee not layd to thy charge in the latter daye, this onely can I pray for.

*O thou now wicked and bloody Sea, why doest thou set vp agayne many aultars of Idolatry, which by y^e word of God were iustly taken away? Why hast thou ouerthrowen the Lordes Table? Why doest thou dayly delude thy people, making in thy Masses in stead of the Lordes holy Supper, which ought to be commō aswell (sayth Chrysostom, yea the Lord himselfe) to the people as to the priest? How darest thou denye to the people of Christ, contrarye to his expresse commaundement in the Gospell, his holye Cuppe? Why bablest thou to the people the commō prayer in a straunge tongue, wherein S. Paule commaundeth in the Lordes name, that no man should speake before the Congregation, except it shoulde bee by and by declared in theyr common tongue, that all might bee edified? Naye, harken thou Whoorishe Bande of Babylon, thou wicked lya••e of Antichrist, thou bloody Woolfe, why slayest thou downe, and makest hauocke of the Prophetes of GOD? Why marthe rest thou so cruelly Christes poore seely sheep which will not heare thy voyce because thou art a straunger, and will folowe none other but theyr owne Pastoure Christ his voyce? Thinkest thou to escape, or that the Lord will not require the bloud of his sayntes at thy handes? * Thy GOD which is the worke of thy handes, and whom thou sayest thou hast power to make, that thy deafe and dumbe God (I say) will not in deede, nor cannot (although thou art not ashamed to call him thy maker) make thee to escape the reuenging hand of the high and almighty God. But be thou assured that the liuing Lord our Sauour and redem••, which sitteth on the right hand of his father in glorye, he seeth all thy wicked wayes and crueltye done to his deare members, and he will not forget his holy ones, and his handes (O thou Whorish Drabbe) shalte thou neuer escape.* In stead of my farewell to thee now I say, lye vpon thee, lye vpon thee filthy Drabbe, and all thy false Prophets.

Yet then O London, I may not leaue thee thus. Although thy Episcopall Sea, now being ioyned in League with the seate of Sathan, thus hath now both handled me and the Sayntes of God: yet I doe not doubte but in that great City there be many priuy mourners which do daily mourne for that mischie•e, the which neuer did nor shal cōsent to that wickednes, but do detest and abhorre it as the wayes of Sathan. But these priuy mourners here I wyll passe by, and bid them farewell with theyr felowes hereafter, when the place and occasion shall more conuenientlye require. Among the worshipfull of the citty, and speacially which were in office the Maioralty, yea & in other Cittyes also (whome to name nowe it shall not be necessary) in the time of my ministry, which was from the latter part of sir Rowland Dules yere vnto sir George Barnes yeare and a great part thereof, I doe acknowledge that I founde no small humanity and gentlenes, as me thought: but (to saye the truth) that I do esteeme aboue al other for true christian kindnes which is shewed in Gods cause and done for hys sake.* Wherefore O Dobbes, Dobbes, Alderman & knight, thou in thy yeare diddest winne my hart for euermore, for that honorable acre, that most blessed worke of God of the erection and setting vp of Christes holy Hospitalles, and truely religious houses whiche by thee, and through thee were begonne. For thou like a man of God, when the mat'ter was mooued for the relief of Christes poore seely members to be holpen frō extreme misery, hunger and famine, thy hart (I say) was moued with pity,* & as Christes high honourable officer in that cause, thou calledst together thy brethren the Aldermen of the City, before whom thou brakest the matter for the poore: thou diddest plead theyr cause, yea, and not onely in thine owne person thou diddest sette forth Christes cause, but to further y^e matter y^u broughtest me into the Councell Chamber of the Citty before the Aldermen alone, whome thou haddest assembled there together to heare me speake what I coulde say as an aduocate by office and duety in the poore mennes cause. The Lorde wrought with thee, and gaue thee the consent of thy Brethren: whereby the matter was broughte to the common Counsell▪ and so to the whole body of the City, by whome with an vniforme consent, it was committed to be drawn, ordered, and deuised by a certayne nūber of the most witty Citizēs and politique, endued also with godlynes, & with ready hartes to set forward such a noble acte, as coulde bee chosen in all the whole City, and they like true and faythfull Ministers▪ both to theyr City & theyr Mayster Christ, so ordered, deuised, and brought forth the matter, that thousands of sely poore mēbers of Christ, which els for extreme hunger and miserye shoulde haue famished and perished, shalbe relieued, holpē and brought vp, and shal haue cause to blesse the Aldermen of that time, the cōmon Councell & the whole body of the City, but specially thee O Dobbes, and those chosen men, by whome this honorable worke of God was begon and wroughte, and that so long throughout all ages, as y^e godly worke shall endure: which I pray almighty God may or euer vnto the worldes end. Amen.

And thou O Syr George Barnes (the trueth is to be confessed to Gods glory, and to the good example of other) thou wast in thy yeare not onely a furtherer and con•i•ner of that which before thee by thy predecessour was well begunne: but also diddest labor so to haue perfited the work,* that it shoulde haue bene an absolute thing and a perfecte spectacle of true charity and Godlinesse vnto all Christendome. Thyne endeuoure was to haue set vppe an house of occupations, both that all kinde of pouerty being able to worke, shoulde not haue lacked, whereupon profitably they might haue bene occupied to their owne reliefe & to the profite and commoditie of the common wealthe of the City, and also to haue retired thither, the poore Babes brought vp in the Hospitals, when they had come to a certayne age and strength, and also all those which in the hospitalles aforesayd had bene cured of theyr diseases. And to haue brought this to passe, thou obteynedst (not withoute great diligence and labor, both of thee & of thy brethren) of that Godly King Edward, that Christian and pierlesse Princes hand, his Princely place of Bridewell,* and what other thinges to the performaunce of the same, and vnder what condition it is not vnknowne. That this thine endeuor hath not had like successe, the fault is not in thee, but in the condition and state of the time, which the Lorde of hys infinite mercy vouchsafe to amēd when it shall be his gracious will and pleasure.

Farewell now all ye Citizens that be of God, of what state and condition so euer ye be.* Undoubtedly in London ye haue heard Gods word truely preached. My hartes desire and dayly prayer shalbe for you (as for whome, for my time, I know to my Lord God, I am countable) that yee neuer swarue, neyther for losse of life nor worldly goodes, from Gods holy word, and yelde vnto Antichrist: wherevpon must needes folow the extreame displeasure of God, and the losse both of your bodies and soules into perpetuall damnation for euermore.

Nowe that I haue gone through the places where I haue dwelt anye space in the time of my pilgrimage here vpon earth, remēbring that for the space of king Edwardes raygne, whiche was for the time of mine office in the Seas of London and Rochester, I was a member of the higher house of the Parliament:  therefore (seing my God hath geuen me leisure and the remembrance therof) I will bid my Lords of the temporalty farewell. They shall haue no iust cause (by Gods grace, to take it that I entende to say, in ill part. As for the spirituall Prelacy that now is, I haue nothing to say to them, excepte I shoulde repeate agayne a great part of that I haue sayd before now already to the Sea of London. To you therefore my Lordes of the temporalty wil I speake, and this would I haue you first to vnderstande, that when I wrote this, I looked daylye when I shoulde bee called to the chaunge of this life, and thoughte that this my writinge shoulde not come to your knowledge, before the time of the dissolution of my Body and soule should be expired, and therefore know ye, that I had before mine eies onely the feare of God, and christian charity toward you, which moued me to write: for of you hereafter I looke not in this worlde, either for pleasure or displeasure. If my talke shall doe you neuer so much pleasure or profit, you cānot promote me, nor if I displease you ye cannot hurte me or harme me, for I shall be out of your reach. Now therefore if you feare God, & can be content to heare the talke of him that seeketh nothing at your hands, but to serue God and to do you good: harken what I say. I say vnto you, as S. Paule sayth to the Galathians:  I wonder my Lordes what hath bewitched you, that yee so sodenly are fallen from Christ vnto Antichrist, from Christes Gospell vnto mans traditions, from the Lorde that bought you, vnto the bishop now of Rome.  I warne you of your perill: be not deceiued, except you wil be fōūd willingly cōsēters vnto your own death. For if ye think thus: We are lay men, this is a matter of religion, we folowe as we are taught and led, if our teachers and gouernors teach vs & lead vs amisse, the fault is in thē, they shall beare the blame: My Lordes this is true (I graunt you) that both the false teacher, and the corrupt gouernour, shall be punished for the death of theyr Subiecte, whom they haue false'ly taught and corruptly ledde, yea and his bloud shall be required at theyr handes: but yet neuerthelesse shall that Subiecte dye the deathe hymselfe also, that is, he shall also be damned for his owne sinne: for if the blinde leade Page 1775 the blinde, Christ sayth not the leader onely, but he sayth: both shall fall into the Ditch. Shall the Sinagogue, and the Senate of the Iewes (trowe ye) which forsooke Christ and consēted to his death, therefore be excused, because Annas and Cayphas,  with the Scribes and Phariesies and theyr Cleargy did teache them amisse? yea and also Pilate theyr Gouernour and the Emperours Lieuetenaunt by his tyranny, did without cause put him to death? Forsooth no my Lordes, no. For notwithstanding that corrupt doctrine, or Pilates washing of his handes, neither of both shall excuse either that Sinagogue and Seigniorie, or Pilate: but at the Lordes hand, for the effusion of that innocent bloud, on the latter day all shall drinke of the deadly whippe. Ye are wittye and vnderstande what I meane: therefore I will passe ouer this, and return to tell you how ye are fallen from Christ to his aduersarye the Bishop of Rome.

And least, my Lords, ye may peraduenture think, thus barely to call the Bishop of Rome Christes aduersary,  or (to speake it in playne termes) to call him Antichrist, that it is done in mine anguish, and that I doe but rage, and as a desperate man doe not care what I say, or vpon whō I doe rayle: therefore, that your Lordshippes may perceiue my minde, and thereby vnderstand that I speake the wordes of the trueth and sobriety (as Saynt Paule sayde vnto Festus) bee it knowne vnto your Lordshippes all, that as concerning the Bishoppe of Rome, I neither hate the person nor the place.* For I ensure your Lordshippes (the liuing Lorde beareth me witnesse, before whome I speake) I do thinke many a good holye man, many Martyrs and Sayntes of God haue sitte and taughte in that place Christes Gospell truely,* which therefore iustly may be called Apostolici, that is, true Disciples of the Apostles, and also that Church and Congregation of Christians to be a right Apostolicke church, yea and that certayne hundreth yeares after the same was firste erected and builded vpon Christ, by the true Apostolicall doctrine taught by the monthes of the Apostles themselues. If ye will know how long that was and how many hundreth yeares to be curious in poynting the precise number of the yeares I will not be too bolde, but thus I say: so long and so manye hundreth yeares as that Sea did truely teache and preach that Gospell,* that Religion, exercised that power, and ordered euery thing by those Lawes and rules whiche that Sea receiued of the Apostles, and (as Tertullian saith) the Apostles of Christ, and Christ of God: so long (I say) that Sea might wel haue bene called Peter and Paules chaire and Sea, or rather Christes chaire, & the bishop thereof Apostolicus, or true disciple and Successor of the apostles, & a Minister of Christ.

But since the time that that Sea hath degenerated frō the trade of trueth and true Religion the which it receiued of the Apostles at the beginning,* and hath preached an other Gospell, hath set vppe an other Religion, hath exercised an other power, and hath taken vpon it to order and rule the Church of Christ by other straunge Lawes, Canons and Rulers then euer it receiued of the Apostles, or the Apostles of Christ, whiche thinges it doth at this daye, and hath continued so doing (alas,* alas) of too too long a time: since the time (I say) that the state and condition of that Sea hath thus bene chaunged, in truth it ought of dutye and of righte to haue the names chaunged both of the Sea and of the sitter therein.* For vnderstand my Lords, it was neither for the priuiledge of the place or person thereof, that that Sea and Byshop thereof were called Apostolicke: but for the true trade of Christs religion which was taught and mainteined in that Sea at the first, and of those godly men.* And therefore as truely and iustlye as that Sea then, for that true trade of religion, and consanguinity of doctrine with the Religion and doctrine of Christes Apostles, was called Apostolicke: so as truely and as iustly for the contrariety of religion, and diuersity of doctryne from Christ and his Apostles, that Sea and the Bishoppe thereof, at this day both ought to be called, and are in deed Antichristian.

The Sea is the seate of Sathan, and the Bishop of the same,* that mainteineth the abominations therof, is Antichrist himselfe in deede. And for the same causes this Sea at this day is the same whiche S. Iohn calleth in his reuelation, Babilon or the Whore of Babilon, and spirituall Sodoma and Egyptus, the Mother of Fornication and of the abominations vpon the earth. And with this Whore doth spiritually medle and lieth with her, and committeth most stincking and abominable adultery before God, all those kinges and Princes, yea and all nations of the earth which doe consent to her abominations, and vse or practise the same: that is (of the innumerable multitude of them to rehearse some for example sake) her dispensations, her pardons and pilgrimages, her inuocation of Saynts,* her worshipping of Images, her false counterfayt religion in her Monckery and Fryerage, and her traditions, whereby Gods lawes are defiled: as her Massing and false Ministring of Gods word and the Sacramentes of Christ clean cōtrary to Christes word, and the Apostles doctrine, wherof in particularity I haue touched something before in my talke had with the Sea of London, and in other treatises more at large: wherein (if it shall please God to bring the same to light) it shal appeare I trust by Gods grace, plain^{ly} to the man of God, and to him whose rule in iudgement of Religion is Gods word, that that Religion,* that rule & order, that doctrine and fayth which this whore of Babylon, and the Beast whereupon she doth sit, mainteineth at this day with all violence of fire and sword, with spoyle & banishment (according to Daniels Prophecy) and finally with all falshood, deceit, hypocrisy, and all kinde of vngodlines: are as cleane contrary to Gods word, as darkenesse is vnto light, or light vnto darckenes, white to blacke, or blacke to white, or as Beliall vnto Christ,* or Christ vnto Antichrist himselfe.

I know my Lordes, and foresaw when I wrote this, that so many of you as should see this my writing, not beyng before endued with the spirite of grace and the light of gods word, so many (I say) would at these my words lordlike stampe and spurne, and spitte thereat. But sober your selues with pacience and be still, and knowe ye that in my writing of this, my minde was none other, but in God (as the liuing God doth beare me witnes) both to do you profite and pleasure. And otherwise, as for your displeasure, by that time this shal come to your knowledge. I trust by gods grace to be in the hands and protection of y^e almighty, my heauenly father, and the liuing Lord, which is, (as S. Iohn sayeth) the greatest of all, and then I shall not need (I trow) to feare what any Lord, no nor what kyng or prince can do vnto me.

My Lordes, if in times past ye haue bene contented to heare me sometimes in matters of religion before y^e prince in the Pulpit, and in the Parliament house, and haue not seemed to haue despised what I haue sayd (when as els if ye had perceiued iust occasion, yee might then haue suspected me in my talk, though it had bene reasonable, eyther de^{sire} of worldly gayne, or feare of displeasure) how hath thē your Lordshyppes more cause to harken to my word and to heare me patiently, seing now ye can not iustly think of me being in this case appoynted to dye, and lookyng dayly when I shall be called to come before the eternall iudge, otherwise but that I onely study to serue my Lord God, and to say that thyng which I am perswaded assuredly by Gods woorde shall and doth please him, and profite all them to whome God shall geue grace to heare and beleue what I do say? And I do say euen that I haue sayd heretofore both of the Sea of Rome and of the Byshop thereof, I meane after this theyr present state at this day, Wherⁱⁿ if ye will not beleue the Ministers of GOD,* and true preachers of his word, verely I denounce vnto you in verbo domini, except ye do repent betime, it shall turne to your confusion, and to your smart on the latter day. Forget not what I say my Lordes, for Gods sake forget not, but remember it vpon your bed. For I tell you moreouer, as I knowe I muste bee countable of this my talke and of my speaking thus, to the eternall Iudge (who will iudge nothing amisse) so shall you be countable of your duety in hearyng, and you shall bee charged, if ye will harken to Gods word, for not obeying to the truth. Alas my Lords, how chaunceth this, that this matter is now a new again to be perswaded vnto you? Who would haue thought of late, but your Lordships had bene perswaded in deed sufficiently,* or that ye could euer haue agreed so vniformelye with one consent to the abolishment of the vsurpation of the bishop of Rome? If that matter were then but a matter of policy wherin the prince must be obeyed, howe is it now made a matter wherin (as your Clergy sayth now, & so sayth the Popes lawes in deed) standeth the vnity of the Catholicke church, and a matter of necessity of our saluation? Hath the time, being so short since y^e death of y^e two last kinges, Henry the 8. & Edward his sonne, altered the nature of the matter? If it haue not, but was of the same nature and daunger before God then as it is now, & be now (as it is sayd by the Popes lawes, and the instructions set forth in Englishe to the curates of the dioces of Yorke) in deed a matter of necessity to saluation: how then chaunced it that ye were all (O my Lordes) so light, and so litle passed vpon the catholicke faith and the vnity therof (without the which no man can be sauēd) as for your Princes pleasures, which were but mortall men, to forsake the vnity of your catholick fayth, that is, to forsake Christ and his gospell? And furthermore, if it were both then and nowe is so Page 1776 necessary to saluation, how chaunced it also that ye, all the whole body of the Parliament agreeing with you, did not onely abolish and expell the Bishop of Rome, but also did abiure him in your owne persons, and did decree in your actes great othes to bee taken of both the spiritualtye and temporalty, whosoever shoulde enter into any weighty & chargeable office in the common wealth? But on the other side, if the law & decree which maketh the supremacy of the sea & bishop of Rome ouer the vniuersall church of Christ, be a thing of necessity required vnto saluation by an Antichristian law (as it is in deed) & such instructiōs as are geuen to the Dioces of Yorke, be in deed a setting forth of the power of that beast of babilon by the craft & falshood of his false Prophetes (as of truth, compared vnto Gods word, and truely iudged by the same, it shall playnely appere that they be) then my Lordes neuer thinke other, but the daye shall come when ye shalbe charged with this your vndoing of that, that once ye had well done, and with this your periury and breache of your othe, which othe was done in iudgement,* iustice, and truth agreeable to Gods lawe. The whore of Babilon may wel for a time dally with you, and make you so dronken with the wine of her filthy stewes & whooredome (as with her dispensations and promises of pardon à poena & culpa) that for dronkenesse and blindenesse ye may think your selues safe. But be ye assured, whē the liuing Lord shall trye the matter by the fire, and iudge it according to his word, when al her abominations shal appeare what they bee: then ye my Lordes, (I geue your Lordships warning in time) repent if ye be happy, & loue your owne soules health, repent I say, or els wythout all doubt, ye shall neuer escape the handes of the liuing Lord, for the guilt of your periury and breach of your oth. As ye haue banquetted and layne by the whore in the fornication of her whorish dispensations, pardons, Idolatrye, & suche like abominations: so shall ye drinke with her (except ye repent betime) of the cuppe of the Lordes indignation and euerlasting wrath, which is prepared for the beast, his false prophetes, and all theyr partakers. For he that is partner with them in theyr whoredome and abominations, must also be partner with them of theyr plagues, and on the latter day shall be throwne with them into the lake burning with Brimstone and vnquencheable fire. Thus fare ye wel my Lords all. I pray God geue you vnderstanding of his blessed will and pleasure, and make you to beleue and embrace the truth. Amen.

An other farewell to the Prisoners in Christes Gospelles cause, and to all them whiche for the same cause are exiled and banished out from theyr owne countrey, choosing rather to leaue all worldly commodity, then theyr mayster Christ.

Farewell my dearely beloued brethren in Christ, bothe ye my fellow prisoners,* and ye also that be exiled and banished out of your countreyes, because ye will rather forsake all worldly cōmodity, then the Gospell of Christ.

Farewell all ye together in Christ: farewell and be mery, for ye know that the triall of your fayth bringeth forth patience, and pacience shall make vs perfecte, whole and sound on euery side, and such after triall (ye knowe) shall receiue the crowne of lyfe, according to the promise of the Lorde made to his dearely beloued, let vs therefore be pacient vnto the comming of the Lord. As the husbandmanne abideth pacientlye the former and latter rayne for the encrease of his crophe,* so let vs bee paciente and plucke vp our hartes, for the comming of the Lord approacheth apace. Let vs (my deare brethren) take example of pacience in tribulation of the Prophetes, which spake likewise Gods word truely in his name. Let Iob be to vs an example of pacience, & the end which the Lord suffered, which is full of mercy and pitty. We know my brethren by Gods worde, that our fayth is much more precious then any corruptible golde, and yet that is tryed by the fire: euen so our fayth is therefore tried likewise in tribulations, that it may be found when the Lord shal appeare, laudable, glorious and honorable. For if we for Christs cause do suffer, that is gratefull before God,* for thereunto are we called, that is our state and vocation, wherewith let vs be content. Christ we know suffered for vs afflictions, leauing vs an example that we shoulde folow his footsteps, for he committed no sinne, not was there any guile found in his mouth: when he was rayled vpon, and all to reuiled, he rayled not agayne: when he was euill entreated, he dyd not threaten, but committed the punishment therof to hym that iudgeth a right.

Let vs euer haue in freshe remembraunce those wonderfull comfortable sentences spokē by the mouth of our Sauior Christ: Blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteousnes sake, for theirs is the kingdome of heauen.* Blessed are ye when men reuile you, persecute you, & speake all euill against you for my sake: reioyce and be glad, for great is your reward in heauen: for so did they persecute the Prophetes which were before you. Therefore let vs alway beare this in our mindes, that if any incommodity doe chaunce vnto vs for righteousnes sake,* happy are we whatsoever the world doth thinke of vs. Christ our mayster hath tolde vs before hand, that the brother should put the brother to death, & the father the sonne, and the children should rise agaynst their parēts and kill them, and that Christes true Apostles should be hated of all men for his names sake: but he that shall abide patiently vnto the end, shalbe saued.

Let vs then endure in all troubles patiently after the example of our Mayster Christ, and be contented therewith, for he suffered being our mayster and Lord: how doth it not then become vs to suffer? For the disciple is not aboue his mayster,* nor the seruaunt aboue his Lord. It may suffice the disciple to be as his maister, and the seruaunt to be as his Lord. If they haue called the Father of the family, the Mayster of the householde Belzebub, howe much more shall they call so them of his householde? Feare them not then (sayth our Sauour) for all p•iuityes shall be made playne: there is now nothing secret, but it shall bee shewed in light. Of Christes wordes let vs neither be ashamed nor afrayd to speake them, for so Christ our mayster commaundeth vs, saying:* that I tell you priuily, speake openly abroade, and that I tell you in your eare, preach it vpon the house toppe. And feare not them which kill the body, for the soule they cannot kill, but feare hym which can cast both body and soule into hell fire.

Know ye that the heauenly Father hath euer a gracious eye and respect towarde you, and a Fatherly prouidence for you, so that without his knowledge and permission, nothing canne doe you harme. Let vs therefore cast all our care vpon him, and hee shall prouide that whiche shall be best for vs. For if of two small sparowes whiche both are sold for a mite, one of them lighteth not on the ground without your father, and all the heares of our head are numbred, feare not them (sayth our Mayster Christ) for yee are more worth then many small sparowes.* And let vs not sticke to confesse our Mayster Christe for feare of daunger whatsoever it shalbe, remēbring the promise that Christ maketh, saying: whosoever shall confesse me before men, him shall I confesse before my father whiche is in heauen: but whosoever shall denye me, him shall I likewise denye before my father which is in heauen. Christ came not to geue vnto vs here a carnall amity, and a worldly peace, or to knitte his vnto the world in ease and peace, but rather to separate and deuide them from the world, and to ioine them vnto himselfe: in whose cause we must, if wee will bee his, forsake father and mother, and sticke vnto him. If wee forsake him or shrinke from him for trouble or deathes sake, which hee calleth his crosse: he will none of vs, we cannot bee hys. If for his cause we shall lose our temporall liues here, wee shall finde them agayne and enioy them for euermore: but if in his cause we will not be contented to leaue nor loose them here: then shall we loose them so, that we shall neuer finde them again, but in euerlasting death. What thoughe our troubles here bee paynefull for the time,* and the sting of death bitter and vnpleasaunt: yet we know that they shall not last in comparison of eternity, no not to the twinckling of an eye, & that they paciētly taken in Christes cause, shall procure and gette vs vnmeasurable heapes of heauenly glory, vnto the which these temporall paines of death and troubles compared, are not to be esteemed, but to be reioyced vpon. Wonder not (sayth S. Peter) as though it were any straunge matter that ye are tryed by the fire (he meaneth of tribulation) which thing (sayth he) is done to proue you:* nay rather in that ye are partners of Christes afflictions, reioyce, that in his glorious reuelation, ye may reioyce with mery hartes. If ye suffer rebukes in Christes name, happy are ye, for the glory and spirit of God resteth vpon you. Of them God is reuiled and dishonored, but of you he is glorified.

Let no manne be ashamed of that he suffereth as a Christian, and in Christes cause: for nowe is the time that iudgement and correction must beginne at the house of GOD, and if it begin first at vs: what shall be the end of those, thinke ye, which beleue not the Gospell? And if the righteous shall bee hardlye saued, the wicked and the sinner where shall he appeare? Wherefore they which are afflicted according to the wil of God, let thē lay downe and commit theyr soules to him by well doing, as to a trustye and faythfull maker. This (as I sayde) maye not seeme straunge to vs, for we know that al the whole fraternity of Christes Congregation in this worlde, is serued with the like, and by the same is made perfect. For the seruent loue that the Apostles had vnto their maister Christ,* and for the great commodities and increase of all godlines which they felt by theyr fayth to insue of afflictions in Christes cause, & thirdly for the heapes of heauenly ioyes which the same doe get vnto the godly; which shall endure in heauen for euermore: for these causes (I saye) the Apostles of their afflictions did ioy, and reioyced in that they were had and accounted worthy to suffer contumelies & rebukes for Christes name. And Paul, as he gloried in the grace & fauor of God, whervnto he was brought & stooode in by fayth:* so he reioyced in hys afflictions the heauenlye and spirituall profites which he numbred to rise vpon them: yea, he was so farre in loue wyth that Page 1777 that the carnall man lothed so much, that is, with Christes crosse, that he iudged himselfe to know nothing els but christ crucified: he will glory (he sayth) in nothing els but in Christes crosse, yea and he blesseth all those, as the onely true Israelites & elect people of God with peace and mercy, whiche walketh after that rule and after none other.

O Lord, what a wonderfull spirit was that that made Paule, in setting forth of himselfe agaynst the vanity of Satans Pseudopostles,* and in his clayme there, that he in Christes cause did excell and passe them all, what wonderfull spirite was that (I saye) that made him to reckon vppe all his troubles, his laboures, hys beatings, his whippinges and scourginges, his shippewrackes, his daungers and perilles by water and by land, his famine, hunger, nakednesse, and colde, with many moe, and the dayly care of all the congregations of Christ,* among whom euery mans payne did pearce his heart, and euery mannes griese was grievous vnto him? O Lord, is this Paules primacye, whereof hee thought so much good that he did excell other? Is not this Paules sayinge vnto Timothy his owne scholer? and doth it not perteyn to who so euer will be Christes true souldiours: beare thou (sayth he) affliction like a good souldiour of Iesu Christ This is true: if we dye with him (he meaneth Christ) we shall liue with him: * if we suffer with him, we shall raigne with him: if we deny him, he shall denye vs: if we be faythlesse, he remayneth faythfull, he cannot denye himselfe. This Paule would haue knowne to euery bodye: for there is none other way to heauen but Christ and his way: & all that will liue godly in Christ, shall (sayth S. Paule) suffer persecution. By this way went to heauen the Patriarches, the Prophets, Christ our Mayster, his Apostles, his Martyrs, and all the godly since the beginning. * And as it hath bene of olde, that hee which was borne after the flesh, persecuted him which was born after the spirite, * for so it was in Isaacks time: so sayde S. Paule, it was in his time also: And whether it be so or no now, let the spirituall man, the selfe same man I meane that is indued with the spirit of almighty God, let him be iudge. Of the crosse of the Patriarches, * as ye may read in theyr storyes if ye reade the booke of Genesis, ye shall perceiue. Of other S. Paule in few wordes comprehendeth much matter, speaking in a generality of the wonderfull afflictions, death, and tormentes which the men of GOD in Gods cause and for the truth sake willingly and gladly did suffer. * After much particuler rehearsall of many, he sayeth: other were racked and despised and would not be deliuered, that they might obteyne a better resurrection. Other agayne were tried wyth mockinges and scourginges, and moreouer with bondes & imprisonment: they were stoned, beweeene asunder, tempted, fell & were slayne vpon the edge of the sword, some wandred to & fro in sheepes pilches, in goates pilches, forsaken, oppressed, afflicted, such godly men as the world was vnworthy of, wandring in wilderness, in mountaynes, in caues, and in dennes, and all these were commended for theyr fayth. And yet they abide for vs the seruauntes of God, and for those theyr brethren which are to bee slayne as they were for the word of Gods sake, that none be shut out, but that we may all go together to meete our Mayster Christ in the ayre at his comming, and so to be in blisse with him in body and soule for euermore.

Therefore, seing we haue so much occasion to suffer and to take afflictions for Christes names sake paciently, so many commodities thereby, so waighty causes, so many good examples, so great necessity, * so pure promises of eternall life and heauenlye ioyes, of him that cānot lye: Let vs throw away whatsoeuer might let vs, * all burden of sinne, and all kinde of carnality, and paciently and constantly let vs runne for the best game in this race that is set before vs, euer hauing our eyes vpon Iesus Christ the ringleader, Capitayne, and Perfiter of our fayth, which for the ioye that was set before him, endured the crosse, not passing vpon the ignominy and shame thereof, and is set now at the right hande of the throne of GOD. Consider this, that he suffered such strife of sinners agaynst himselfe, that yee shoulde not geue ouer, nor faynt in your mindes. As yet brethren we haue not withstand vnto death, fighting agaynst sinne. Let vs neuer forget deare Brethren for Christes sake, that Fatherly exhortation of the wise that speaketh vnto vs as vnto his children the Godlye wysedome of God, * saying thus: My sonne, despise not the correction of the Lord, nor fall not from him when thou art rebuked of hym, for whom the Lord loueth, him doth he correct, and scourgeth euery childe whom he receiueth. What childe is he whom the father doth not chasten: * If ye bee free from chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastardes and no children. Seing then, when as we haue had carnall parents which chastened vs, we reuerenced them, shall not we much more be subiect vnto our spirituall father that we might liue? And they for a litle time taughte vs after theyr owne mind: but this father teacheth vs to our commodity, to geue vnto vs his holinesse. Al chastisement for the present tyme, appeareth not pleasaunt but paynefull: but afterward it rendereth the fruite of righteousnesse on them, which are exercised in it. Wherefore let vs bee of good cheere (good Brethren) and let vs plucke vppe our feeble members that were fallen or beganne to faynt, hart, handes, knees, and all the rest, and let vs walke vpriight and straight, that no limping no• 〈...〉 bring vs out of the way. Let vs looke, not vpon the thinges that be present, but with the eyes of our fayth let vs stedfastly, behold the thinges that be euerlasting in heauen, and so choose rather in respecte of that whiche is to come, with the chosen members of Christ to beare Christes Crosse, then for this short life time, to inioy all the riches, honours, and pleasures of the broade worlde. Why should we Christians feare death? Can death depriue vs of Christ, which is all our cō•ort, our ioy, and our life▪ Nay forsooth. But contrary, death shall deliuer vs from this mortall body,* whiche lodeth and beareth downe the spirite that it cannot so well perceiue heauenly thinges: in the which so long as we dwell, wee are absent from God.

Wherefore, vnderstanding our state in that we be Christians, that if our mortall body, which is our earthly house,* were destroyed, we haue a building, a house not made with handes, but euerlasting in heauen &c. therefore wee are of good cheere, and know that when we are in the body, we are absent from GOD, for we walke by fayth, and not by cleare sight. Neuerthelesse we are bolde, and had rather be absent from the bodye and present with GOD. Wherefore, we strue, whether we be present at home, or absent abroad, that we may alwayes please him. And who that hath true fayth in our Sauior Christ, whereby he knoweth somewhat truely what Christ our Sauour is, that he is the eternall sonne of God, life, light, the wisdom of the father, all goodnesse, all righteousnesse and whatsoeuer is good that heart canne desire, yea infinite plentye of all these, aboue that that mans hart canne either conceiue or thinke, (for in him dwelleth the fulnesse of the Godheade corporally) and also that he is geuen vs of the Father, and made of GOD to be our wisdom, our righteousnesse, our hol•nesse, and our redemption: who (I say) is he that beleueth this in deede, that woulde not gladly bee with his mayster christ? Paul for this knowledge coueted to haue bene loosed from the body, and to haue bene with Christ,* for that he counted it muche better for himselfe, and had rather to be loosed then to liue. Therefore these wordes of Christe to the thiefe on the Crosse, that asked of him mercy, were full of comfort and solace: This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise. To dye in the defence of Christes Gospell,* it is our bounden duety to Christ, and also to our neighbour. To Christ, for he dyed for vs, and rose agayne that he might be Lord ouer all. And seing he dyed for vs, we also (sayth S. Iohn) shoulde ieopard, yea geue our life for our Brethren, And this kinde of geuing and loosing, is getting and winning in deede: for hee that geueth or looseth his life thus, getteth & winneth it for euermore.* Blessed are they therefore that die in the Lord, and if they dye in the Lordes cause, they are most happy of all. Let vs not then feare death, which can do vs no harme, otherwise then for a momēt to make the flesh to smart: but that our fayth whiche is surely fastened and fixed vnto the worde of GOD, telleth vs that we shall be anon after death, in peace, in the handes of GOD, in ioye, in solace, and that from death we shall go straight vnto life. For Saynt Iohn sayeth: he that liueth and beleueth in me, shall neuer dye.* And in an other place: he shall depart from death vnto life. And therefore this death of the Christian, is not to be called death, but rather a gate or entraunce into euerlasting life: Therefore Paule calleth it but a dissolution and resolution, and both Peter and Paul, a putting of this Tabernacle or dwelling house.* Meaning thereby the mortall body, as wherein the soule or spirite doth dwell here in this worlde for a small time. Yea this death may be called to the Christian, an end of all miseries. For so long as we liue here, we must passe through many tribulations before we canne enter into the kingdome of heauen. And nowe,* after that death hath shot his bolt, all the christian mans enemies haue done what they canne, after that they haue no more to doe. What coulde hurte or harme poore Lazarus that lay at the rich mannes Gate? His former penury and pouerty? his misery, beggery,* and horrible sores and sicknesse? For so soone as death had stricken him with his dart, so soone came the aungels, and caryed him straight vp into Abrahams bosome. What lost he by death, who from misery and payne, is set by the ministry of Aungels in a place both of ioy and solace.

Farewell deare brethren, farewell, and let vs comforte our hartes in all troubles, and in death with the worde of God: for heauen and earth shall perish, but the word of the Lord endureth for euer.

Farewell Christes dearely beloued spouse here wandering in this world as in a straunge land, farre from thine owne coūtry, & cōpassed about on euery hand with deadly enemies, which cease not to assault thee, euer seeking thy destruction.

Farewell, farewell, O ye the whole and vniuersall congregation of the chosen of God here liuing vpon earth, the true church militant of Christ, the true mysticall body of Christ, the very house holde and family of God, and the sacred temple of the holy ghost. Farewell.

Farewell,* O thou litle flocke of the highe heauenlye pastour Christ, for to thee it hath pleased the heauenlye father to geue an euerlasting and eternall kingdome. Farewell.

Page 1778Farewell thou spirituall house of God, thou holy and royall priesthood, thou chosē generatiō, thou holy nation, thou wonne spouse. Farewell. Farewell.

¶An other treatise of B. Ridley, wherein is conteyned first a lamentation for the chaunge of Religion in England: then a comparison betwene the doctrine of the Gospell, and the Romish religion, with wholesome instructions in the end to all christians, how to behaue themselues in time of tryall.

ALas, what misery is thy church brought vnto (O lord) at this day?* Where of late the worde of the Lord was truly preached, was read and heard in euery towne, in euery Church, in euery village, yea and almost in euery honest mans house: alas now it is exiled, and banished out of the whole realme. Of late who was not taken for a louer of Gods word, for a reader, for a ready hearer, & for a learner of the same? And now (alas) who dare beare any open countenance toward it, but such as are content in Christes cause, and for his wordes sake to stand to the daunger and losse of all that they haue?

Of late there was to be found, of euery age of euery de|gree and kinde of people, that gaue theyr diligēce to learne (as they could) out of Gods word, the articles of the christian fayth, the commaundementes of God, and the Lordes prayer. The babes and young children were taughte these thinges of theyr parentes, of theyr maisters, & weekly of theyr Curates in euery church: & the aged folke, whiche had bene brought vp in blindnes, and in ignoraunce of those things, which euery christian is boūd to know, whē otherwise they could not, yet they learned the same by oftē hearing theyr children, and seruantes repeating the same: but now (alas, and alas agayne) the false Prophets of Antichrist, which are past all shame, do openly preach in pulpittes vnto the people of God, that the Catechisme is to be counted heresy: wherby theyr olde blindnes is brought home agayn: for the aged are afraid of the higher powers, and the youth is abashed and ashamed, euen of that which they haue learned, though it be Gods woord, and dare no more meddle.

Of late in euery congregation throughout all Englād was made prayer and petition vnto God, to be deliuered from the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and all his detestable enormities: from al false doctrine and heresy: & now alas, Sathan hath perswaded England by his falshooode & craft, to reuoke her olde godly prayer, to recant the same & prouoke the fearefull wrath, and indignation of God vpon her owne pate.

Of late by strait lawes and ordinances, with the consent of the nobles and commonalty,* and full agreement, & counsel of the prelates and clergy, was banished hence the beast of Babilon, with lawes (I say) and with othes & all meanes that then could be deuised for so godly a purpose: but now (alas) all these lawes are troden vnder foote: the Nobles, the Commonalty, the Prelates and Cleargy are quite chaūged, and all those othes, though they were made in iudgement, iustice & truth, and the matter neuer so good, doth no more hold then a bond of Rushes, or of a Barley straw, nor publicke periurye no more feareth them, then a shadow vpon the wall.

Of late it was agreed in Englande of all handes, according to Paules doctrine,* and Christes commaūdemēt (as Paule sayth playnly) that nothing ought to be done in the Church, in the publicke congregation, but in that toūg which the Congregation could vnderstand, that all might be edefied thereby, whether it were Common Prayer, Administration of the Sacramentes, or any other thing belonging to publicke Ministerye of Gods holy and wholesome word: but (alas) all is turned vpside downe, Paules doctrine is put apart: Christs commaundement is not regarded: For nothing is heard commonly in the Church, but in a straunge tongue, that the people doth nothing vnderstand.

Of late al men and women were taught after Christes doctrine,* to pray in that toūg which they could vnderstād, that they might pray with hart, that whiche they shoulde speake with theyr tounge: now (alas) the vnlearned people is brought in that blindnes again, to think that they pray, when they speak with theyr tounge, they can not tell what, nor wherof: theyr hart is nothing mindefull at all, for that it can vnderstand neuer a whit therof.

Of late the Lordes Supper was duely ministred and taught to be made common,* to all that were true Christians, with thanksgeuing, and setting foorth of the Lordes death & passion, vntill his returning agayne, to iudge both quicke and dead: but now (alas) the Lordes table is quite ouerthrowne, and that whiche ought to be common to all godly, is made priuate to a fewe vngodlye, without any kind of thanksgeuing, or any setting foorth of the Lordes death at all, that the people is able to vnderstand.

Of late all that were endued with the light,* and grace of vnderstanding of Gods holy misteries, did blesse God, which had brought them out of that horrible blindnes and ignorance, wherby in times past being seduced by sathans subtleties, they beleued that the Sacrament was not the Sacrament, but the thing it self wherof it is a Sacramēt: that the creature was the Creator, and that the thing whiche hath neither life nor sense (alas suche was the horryble blindenesse) was the Lord himselfe, which made the eye to see,* and hath geuen all senses and vnderstandinge vnto man: but now (alas) Englande is returned agayne lyke a Dogge to her owne vomitte and spuing, and is in worsse case thē euer she was: For it had bene better neuer to haue knowne the trueth, then to forsake the truth once receiued and knowne: and now, not onely that light is turned into darknesse, and Gods grace is receiued in vayne, but also lawes of death are made by high Courte of Parliament, maysterfully to mainteine by sword, fire, and al kind of violence, that haynous Idolatry wherein that adoration is geuen vnto the liuelesse and dumbe creature, which is only due vnto the euerliuing God: yea, they say they can, and do make of bread both manne and GOD, by theyr transubstantiation, O wicked mention, and Sathans owne broode.

Of late was the Lordes cuppe at his Table distributed, according to his owne cōmaundement,* by his expresse wordes in his Gospell, as well to the Laity as to the clergy, which order Christes Church obserued so many hundreth yeares after (as all the auncient Ecclesiasticall writers doe testify) without contradiction of any one of them, that can be shewed vnto this day: but now (alas) not only the Lords commaundement is broken, his cup is denied to his seruantes, to whom he commaunded it shoulde be distributed, but also with the same is set vp a new blasphemous kinde of sacrifice to satisfye and paye the price of sinnes, both of the dead and of the quicke, to the great & intollerable contumely of Christ our sauior his death & passion, which was and is the one only sufficient, and euerlasting auayleable sacrifice satisfactorye, for all the Electes of God, from Adam the first, to the last that shall be borne in the end of the world.

Of late the commaundement of God:Thou shalte not make to thy selfe any grauen Image, nor any similitude, or likenes of any thing in heauen aboue, or in earth beneath, or in the water vnder the earth, thou shalte not bowe downe to them nor worship them: This commaundement of God (I say) was grauen almost euery where in Churches, was learned of euery body both young & olde: whereupon Images that prouoked the simple, and ignorant people vnto Idolatrie (as the wise man sayth) were taken out of the Churches, & straightly forbidden that none shoulde any where, eyther bow downe to them, or worshippe them: but now (alas) Gods holy word is blotted, and rased out of Churches, & stockes and stones are set vp in the place thereof, God cōmaundeth his word so to be ordered, that it might be had in continual remēbraunce at all times, and in euery place: and on the other side he forbade Images and Idols, so to be either made, or set in any place, where any should bowe or worship them: but now (alas) that which God cōmaūded, is not passed vpon, and that which he forbiddeth, is maysterfully mayntained by falshood and craft, and wickedly vpholden.

Of late all ministers that were admitted to the publick office, and ministry of Gods holy woorde, in theyr admission made a solemne profession before the Congregation, that they should teach the people nothing, as doctrine necessarye to attayne eternall saluation, but that whiche is Gods owne holy woorde, or maye be thereof grounded without any doubt: whereby vanished and melted away of themselues many vaine, yea wicked traditions of man, as waxe before the fire: but now at one brunt they are reuiued, and are in full hope also to returne agayne, in as great strength as euer they haue bene. And howe can any man looke for any other thing, but when you haue receyued the head, you must also receiue the whole body withal, or els how can the head abide? The head, vnder Sathā, of al mischiefe is Antichrist, & his brood, & the same is he whiche is the Babilonicall Beast. The beast is he, whereupon the Whore sitteth. The whore is that City, sayeth Iohn in playne woordes, whiche hath Empyre ouer the kinges of the earth. This Whore hath a golden cuppe of abominations in her hande, whereof shee maketh to drinke the kinges of the earth, & of the wine of this harlot hath all nations Page 1779 dronke, yea, and kinges of the earth haue line by this Whore & Marchauntes of the earth, by vertue of her pleasaunt marchaundise haue bene made rich.

Now what Citie is there in all the whole worlde, that when Iohn wrote,  ruled ouer the kinges of the earth: or what Citty can be read of in any time, that of the Citty it selfe, chalenged the Empyre ouer the kinges of the earth, but onely the City of Rome, and that since the vsurpation of that Sea hath growne to her full strength? And is it not read, that the olde and auncient writers vnderstand, Peters former Epistle to be writtē at Rome, and it to be called of him in the same Epistle in playne termes, Babilon? by the abominations therof, I vnderstand all the whole trade of the Romish religion, vnder the name and title of Christ which is contrary to the onely rule of all true religion, that is Gods worde. What worde of God hath that Deuillish drabbe, for the maintenaunce of her manifolde abominations, and to set to sell such marchaundise, wher with (alas the madnesse of man) the wicked Harlot hath bewitched almost the whole wold? Did not Peter the very true Apostle of Christ, of whom this stincking Strumpet beareth her selfe so highe, but falselye and without all iust cause) did not he, I say, geue all the world warning of her pelfe and trash, of her false Doctours and Apostles (for this Whore and Beast will be called Dominus Apostolicus, who so euer say nay) after this maner in his latter Epistle? There was among the people in times past false Prophetes, as shall bee there amonge you in time to come false Teachers, which shall priuily bring in pestilent sectes, euen denying the Lord which hath bought them, and redemed them, procuring to themselues swift damnation, and many shall folow their damnable wayes, by whom the way of truth shall be rayled vpon, & through couetousnesse by counterfait tales or sermons, they shal (sayth Peter) make marcdaundise vpon you &c. And doeth not Iohn likewise in his Reuelation, after he hath reckoned vp a great rablement of this whores mysticall marchaundise,  at the last (as though he would knitte vp all in plaine wordes, without any miste at all, setting out the whoores marchaundise) reckon vp among the rest, and concludeth saying, Et animas hominū: that is to say, and the soules of mē to? Wherupō I pray you els rose this true prouerb in Latine: omnia Romae venalia: All thinges for money are sette to sale at Rome?  was not that a worthy commendation of Christes Uicare in earth that was written of our holy father, one of the Alexanders a Bishoppe of Rome, thus I weene in Latin.

Veneit Alexander cruces, altaria, Christum,

Vendere iure potest, emerat ille prius.

☞ These two verses in latin, I haue read thus of one translated into English rime.

Alexander our holy father the Pope of Rome,

* selleth for money both right and dome:

And all kind of holines the holy father doth not sticke, to set to sell, ready money for to get.

And eke Christ himselfe he dare be bolde,

to chop and chaunge for siluer and gold:

And why should any thinke this to be sore,

For what doth he sell, but that he bought before?

I graunt these verses to be light gere, and the verse is but rude, but (alas) suche conditions were more wicked & leud then any wit could expresse. If these had bene but the faultes of one or a few in number, they had bene lesse pernicious, and might haue bene taken for personall crimes, not to be imputed vnto that Sea: but now (alas) the matter is more then euident to all that haue godly vnderstanding, that these crimes be grounded vpon lawes, be established by custome, and set forth by all kinde of wicked doctrine, falshood and craft, and therefore now are not to be esteemed for any one mans or a few mens personall crimes, but are now by lawes, custome and doctrine incorporated into that wicked Sea, and maketh in deede the body of the Beast whereupon the abhominable whore doth sit.

But you would knowe which be those Marchaundise which I sayd this whore setteth forth to sell, for the whiche all her false Prophets with all theyr iuggelinges and crafty gloses cannot bring one iote of Gods worde. Surely, surely,* they be not onely all these abhominatiōs which are come into the Church of Englande alreadye (whereof I haue spoken somewhat before) but also an innumerable rabblement of abominations and wicked abuses whyche now must nedes folow: as popish pardons, pilgrimages, romishe purgatory, romish masses, Placebo & Derige, with trentals and Scala coeli, dispensations and immunities frō all godly discipline lawes and good order, pluralities, vnions, and tot quottes, with a thousande moe. Nowe shall come in the flattering friers, and the false pardoners and play theyr olde pranckes and knauery as they were wont to do. Now you shall haue (but of the Sea of Rome onely, and that for mony) canonizing of such Sayntes as haue stand stout in the popes cause, shrining of reliques, & from any kinde of wickednes (if you will pay well for it) cleare absolution a poena & culpa, with thousandes of yeares, yea at euery poore Bishops hand and suffragan, ye shall haue halowing of Churches, Chappels, aulters, superaulters, chalices, and of all the whole housholde stuffe and adornamēt which shalbe vsed in y^e church after the Romish guise, for all these thinges must be esteemed of such high price, that they may not be done but by a consecrate bishop onely. O Lorde, all these thinges are suche, as thy Apostles neuer knew. As for coniuring (they call it halowing, but it is cōiuring in deede) of water and salt, of christening of belles and such like thinges, what neede I to speake? for euerye priest that can but read, hath power (they say) not onely to do that, but also hath suche power ouer Christes body, as to make both God and man once at the least euery daye, of a wafer cake.

After the rehearsall of the said abhominations, and remembraunce of a number of many moe, which (the Lorde knoweth) irketh me to thinke vpon, and were to longe to describe: when I consider on the other side y^e eternall word of God that abideth for euer, and the vndefiled law of the Lord which turneth the soule from all wickednes and geueth wisdomē vnto y^e innocent babes, I meane that milk that is without all guile, as Peter doth call it,* that good word of God, that word of trueth whiche must be grauen within the hart and then is able to saue mens soules, that wholesome seede, not mortall but immortall of the eternal and euerliuing God, wherby the man is borne a new, and made the childe of God, that seed of God, wherby the man of God so being borne can not sinne, as Iohn sayeth (hee meaneth so long as that seede doth abide in him) that holy scripture which hath not bene deuised by the wit of man, but taught from heauen by the inspiratiō of the holy ghost which is profitable to teache, to reprocue, to correct, to instruct and geue order in all righteousnesse that the man of God may be whole & sound, ready to performe euery good worke: when (I say) I consider this holy and wholesome true word that teacheth vs truely our bounden duety towards our Lorde God in euerye poynt, what his blessed will and pleasure is, what his infinite great goodnes and mercy is, what he hath done for vs, how he hath geuē hys owne onely dearely beloued sonne to death for our saluation and by him hath sent vs the Reuelation of his blessed will and pleasure, what his eternall word willeth vs both to beleue and also to doe, and hath for the same purpose inspired the holy Apostles with the holy ghost & sent them abroad into all the world, and also made them & other disciples of Christ inspired by the same spirite, to write & leaue behinde them the same thinges that they taught (which as they did proceed of the spirit of trueth, so by the confession of all them that euer were endued with the spirite of God, were sufficient to the obtaining of eternall saluation:) and likewise when I consider that al that man doth professe in his regeneration when he is receiued into the holy catholicke church of Christ, and is now to be accoūted for one of the liuely mēbers of Christes owne body, all that is groūded vpon Gods holy word, and standeth in the profession of that fayth, & obedience of those commaundements whiche are all contained and comprised in Gods holy word: & furthermore when I consider whom our Sauour Christ pronouceth in his gospell to be blessed, and to whom Moses geueth his benedictiōs in the law, what wayes y^e law, the Prophets, the Psalmes, and all holy Scriptures both newe and olde doth declare to be the wayes of the Lorde, what is good for man to obtaine and abide in Gods fauor, which is that fayth that iustifieth before God, and what is that charity that doth passe and excell all, whiche be y^e properties of heauenly wisdom, and whiche is that vndefiled religion, that is allowed of GOD, which thinges Christ himself called the weighty matters of the law, what thing is that which is onely auayleable in Christ, & what knowledge is that, that Paule esteemed so much, that he counted himself onely to know, what shall be y^e maner of y^e extreme iudgement of the latter day, who shall iudge & by what he shall iudge, & what shall be required at our handes at that fearefull day, howe all thinges must be tried by the fire, and that that onely shal stand for euer which Christes wordes shall allow, which shalbe the iudge of all flesh to geue sentēce vpon all flesh and euery liuing soule either of eternall damnation or of euerlasting saluation, from which sentence there shall be no place to appeale, no witte shal serue to delude, nor no power to withstand or reuoke: Page 1780 when (I say) I consider all these thinges, and conferre to the same agayne and agayne, all those wayes wherein standeth the substaunce of the romishe religion (wherof I spake before) it may be euident and easy to perceauē, that these two wayes, these two religions, the one of Christ, y^e other of the Romishe sea, in these latter dayes, be as farre distaunt the one from the other, as light and darckenes, good and euill,  righteousnes and vnrighteousnes, Christ and Beliall. He that is hard of beliefe, let him note and weigh well with himselfe the places of holy Scriptures, which be appoynted in the margent, wherupon this talk is grounded, & by Gods grace he may receyue some light. And vnto the contemner I haue nothing now to say, but to rehearse the saying of the Prophet Esay, which Paule spake to the Iewes in the end of the Actes of the Apostles. After he hadde expounded vnto them the trueth of Gods word, and declared vnto them Chryst, out of the Lawe of Moses and the Prophetes, from morning to night all the day long, he sayd vnto them that would not beleue: Well (sayd he) spake the holy Ghost vnto our fathers, saying: go vnto this people and tell them: ye shall heare with your eares, and not vnderstande,  and seeing, you shall behold, and not see the thing, for the hart of this people is waxed grosse and dulle, and wyth their eares they are hard of hearing, and they haue shut together their eyes, that they shoulde not see, nor heare with theyr eares, nor vnderstand with their hartes, that they might returne, and I should heale them, sayth the Lord God.

All as Englande, alas y^t this heauy plague of GOD shoulde fall vpon thee. Alas my dearely beloued country, what thing is it now that may doe thee good: Undoubtedly thy plague is so great, that it is vtterly vncurable, but by the bottomlesse mercy, and infinite power of almighty God. Alas my deare country, what hast thou done, that thus hast prouoked the wrath of God, and caused him to poure out his vengeaunce vppon thee, for thine owne desertes? Canst thou be content to heare thy faults told thee? Alas thou hast heard ofte, and wouldest neuer amende. England, thy faultes of all degrees and sortes of men, of Magistrates, of the ministers, and of the common people, were neuer more playnely tolde, since thou barest that name, then thou diddest heare them of late, euen before the Magistrates in king Edwardes dayes, but thou heardest them onely, and diddest amend neuer a whitte. For euen of thy greatest Magistrates, some (the kinges highnesse then, that innocent, that godly harted & pereles young Christian Prince excepted) euermore vnkindely and vngently, agaynst those that went about most busely, and most wholesomely to cure their sore backes, spurned pryuely, and woulde not spare to speake euill of them, euen vnto the Prince himselfe, and yet woulde they towards the same preachers, outwardly beare a ioly countenance, and a fayre face.

I haue heard that Cranmer and an other, whome I will not name,* were both in high displeasure, the one for shewing his conscience secretly, but playnly and fullye in the Duke of Somersettes cause, and bothe of late, but specially Cranmer for repugning, as they might against the late spoyle of the Churche goodes, taken away onely by commaundement of the higher powers, wythout any lawe, or order of iustice, and without anye request of consent of them, to whome they did belong. As for Latimer, Leuer, Bradforde, and Knoxe, their tongues were so sharpe, they ripped in so deepe in theyr galled backes, to haue purged them (no doubte) of that filthy matter, that was festred in theyr hartes, of insaciable couetousnesse, of filthy carnalitie, and voluptuousnesse, of intollerable ambition and pride,* of vngodly lothsomnes, to heare poore mens causes, and to heare Gods word, that these men of all other, these Magistrates then could neuer abide. Other there were, very godly men, and well learned, that went aboute by the wholesome plasters of Gods worde, how be it after a more softe maner of handling the matter, but (alas) all sped in like. For all that could be done of all handes, theyr disease did not minishe, but dayly dyd encrease, which (no doubte) is no small occasion in that state, of the heauy plague of God, that is poured vppon Englande at thys daye. As for the common sorte of other inferiour Magistrates, as Iudges of the lawes, Iustices of peace, Sergeantes, common lawyers, it may be truely said of them, as of the most part of the Clergy, of Curates, Uicars, Parsones, Prebendaries, Doctours of the law, Archdeacons, Deanes, yea, and I may say, of Byshoppes also,* I feare me, for the moste parte, although I doubte not but GOD had and hath euer, whome hee in euery state knew, and knoweth to be hys, but for the most part (I say) they were neuer perswaded in theyr hartes, but from the teethe forward, and for the kinges sake, in the trueth of Gods word, and yet all these did dissemble, and bare a copy of a countenance, as if they hath bene sound within.

And this dissimulation Sathan knew well inoughe, and therefore desired, and hath euer gone about, that the highe Magistrates by anye manner of meanes, myght bee deceaued in matters of religion, for then hee beyng of counsell with the dissimulation in the worldye, knewe well enough that he should bring to passe, and rule al euen after his owne will.

Hipocrisie and dissimulation saint Hierome doth call well a double wickednesse,* for neyther it loueth the trueth (whiche is one great euill) and also falsely it pretendeth to deceiue the simple for an other thing. This hipocrisie and dissimulation w^t God in matters of Religion (no doubt) hath wholly also prouoked the anger of God. And as for the common people, although there were manye good, where they were well and dilligently taught, yet (God knoweth) a great number receaued Gods true word, and high benefites with vnthankfull harts. For it was great pity, and a lamentable thing to haue seene in many places the people so lothsomly, and so vnreligiouslye to come to the holy Communion, and to receaue it accordingly, and to the common prayers, and other Diuine seruice, which were according to the true vayne of Gods holye word, in all poyntes so godly, and wholesomely set foorth, in comparison of that blynde zeale, and vndiscreete deuotion, whiche they had afore tymes to those things, wherof they vnderstoode neuer one whi•, nor could be edified by them any thing at all.

And agayne, as for almes deedes, which are taughte in Gods word (whereby we are certain that God is pleased with them,* and dothe and will require suche at oure handes, whiche are a part of true religion, as Sayncte Iames sayth, and suche as he sayth himselfe, hee setteth more by, then by sacrifice, as to prouide for the fatherlesse infantes and orphanes, for the lame, aged, and impotent poore needye folke, and to make publicke prouision that the pouerty that might labour, shoulde haue wherwith to labour vppon, and so be kept from shameful beggery & stealing in these works: I say how wayward wer many, in comparison (I meane) of that great prodigality whereby in times past they spared not to spend vpon flattering Fryers, false Pardoners, painting and gilting of stockes and stones, to be set vp and honored in Churches, playnely agaynst Gods worde. And yet because no place is to be defrauded of theyr iust commendation, London, I must confesse, for such godly workes in sir Rich. Dobs knight, then Lorde Maior hys yeare, began maruelous well: the Lord graunt the same may so likewise perseuer continue, yea, and encrease to the comforte and reliefe of the needy and helpelesse, that was so godly begunne, Amen.

All these thinges doe minister matter of more mournyng, and bewayling the miserable state that now is:* for by this it may be perceaued, how England hath deserued this iust plague of God. And also it is greatly to be feared that those good thinges, what soeuer they were that had theyr beginning in the tyme when Gods woorde was so freely preached, now with the exile and banishement of the same, will depart agayne.

But to returne agayne to the consideration of thys miserable state of Christes Church in Englande, and to leaue farther and more exquisite searchyng of the causes thereof, vnto Gods secrete and vnsearchable iudgements let vs see what is best now to be done for Chrystes little flocke. This is one maxime and principle in Chrystes law. He that denyeth Christ before men, hym shall Chryst deny afore hys father, and all hys Aungels of heauen. And therefore euery one that looketh to haue by Chryst our sauour euerlasting lyfe, let him prepare hymselfe so, that he deny not hys mayster Chryst or els he is but a cast away, and a wretche, how soeuer he be counted, or taken here in the world.

Now then seing the doctrine of Antichrist is returned agayne into this Realme,* and the higher powers (alas) are so deceaued, and bewitched, that they are perswaded it to be truthe, and Christes true doctrine to be error and heresie, and the olde lawes of Antichriste are allowed to returne with the power of theyr father agayne: what can be hereafter looked for by reason, to the man of God, and true christian abiding in this realme, but extreame vyolence of death, or els to denye his mayster. I graunt the hartes of Princes are in Gods handes, and whether soeuer he will, he can make them to bowe: and also that christian princes in olde tyme, vsed a more gentle kinde of punishment, euen to them whiche were heretickes in deede as degradation, and deposition out of theyr rouses and offices, exile and vanishment out of theyr domynions and Page 1781 countryes, and also (as it is read) the true Bishoppes of Christes Church, were sometime intercessors for the heretickes vnto Princes, that they would not kill them, as is read of S. Augustine. But as yet Antichristes kingdome was not so erected at that time, nor is nowe accustomed so to order them, that will not fall downe and worship y^e beast and his Image, but (euen as al the world knoweth) after the same maner that both Iohn & Daniell hath prophesied before, that is by violence of death: and Daniell declareth farther, that the kinde of death accustomed should be by sword, fire, and imprisonment. Therefore if thou, O man of God, doest purpose to abide in this realm prepare and arme thy selfe to dye: for both by Antichristes accustomed lawes, and these prophecies, there is no appearaunce, or likelihood of any other thing, except y^u wilt deny thy mayster Christ, which is the losse at the last, both of body and soule vnto euerlasting death. Therefore my good brother or sister in Christ, whatsoever thou bee, to thee that canst,* and mayst so doe, that counsaile that I thinke is the best safegard for thee, both for thy body, and most suretie for thy soules healthe, is that whiche I shall shew thee hereafter. But first I warne thee to vnderstand me, to speake to hym or her, which be not in captiuitie, or called already for to confesse Christ, but are at libertye abroade.

My councell (I say) therefore is this, to flye from the plague, and to get the hence. I consider not onely the subtleties of Sathan, and how hee is able to deceiue by hys false perswasions (if it were possible) euen the chosen of GOD, and also the great frayltie, whiche is oftentimes more in a man, then he doth know in himselfe, whiche in the tyme of temptation, then will vtter it selfe, I doe not onely consider these thinges (I saye) but that our mayster Christ, whose life was, and is a perfecte rule of the Chrystian mans life, that hee himselfe auoyded oftentimes the furie, and madnes of the Iewes, by departing from the country or place.

Paule likewise, when hee was sought in Damasco, and the gates of the citty were layd in wayt for him, was conueighed by night, being let downe in a basket, out at a window ouer the wall: and Helias the Prophet fledde the persecution of wicked Iesabell: and Chryste our sauour sayth in the Gospell:When they persecute you in one citie, flie vnto an other: and so did many good, great learned, & vertuous men of God, which were great and stout chāpions neuerthelesse, and stoute confessors, and mayntayners of Christ and his truth, in due time and place. Of suche was the great Clarke Athanasius. But this is so playn• to be lawfull by Gods worde, and examples of holy men, y^t I neede not to stand in it. Hauing this for my ground, I say to thee O man of God, this seemeth to me to be the most sure way for thy sauegard, to depart and flye farre from the plague, and that swiftly also: for truely: before God, I thinke that the abomination that Daniel Prophesied of so long before, is nowe set vpp in the holye place. For all Antichristes doctrine, lawes, rites and relygion, contrary to Christ, and to the true seruing and worshipping of God, I vnderstand to be that abomination: Therefore now is the time in England, for those wordes of Christ, Tunc, inquit, qui in Iudea sunt fugiant ad montes. Thē (sayth he) marke this Christes [then] for truely I am perswa'ded, and I trust by the spirite of God, that this [then] is commaunded: Then (sayth Christ) they that be in Iewry, let them flye into the mountaynes, and he that is on the house top, let hym not come downe to take away any thing out of his house and he that is abroad in the fielde, let hym not retourne to take hys clothes. Woe be to the great bellied women, and to them that geue sucke, but pray (sayth Christ) that youre flight be not in Winter nor on the Sabbath day.

These wordes of Christe are misticall, and therefore haue neede of interpretation. I vnderstand all those to be in Iewry spiritually,* which truely confesse one true liuing God, and the whole truth of his word, after the doctryne of the Gospell of Christ. Such are they whom Christ here biddeth, in the time of the raigne of Antichristes abhominations, to flye vnto the mountaynes: whiche signifieth places of safegard, & all such thinges which are able to defēd from the plague. That he biddeth hym that is in the house top, not to come downe, and hym that is in the field, not to retourne to take with hym his clothes, hee meaneth that they shoulde speede them to get them away betyme, leaste in theyr tarying, and trifling about worldly prouision, they be trapped in the snare ere euer they be aware, and caught by the backe, and for gain of small worldly things, endanger and cast themseues into great perilles of more waighty matters. And where he sayth: woe be to the great bellied woman, and to them that geue suck: women great with child and nigh to their lying downe, and to be brought to bed, are not able to trauell: nor also those women, whiche are brought to bed, and now geueth their babes suck. By these therefore Christ spiritually vnderstandeth all suche to be in extreame daunger, whiche this worde [woe] signifieth: all suche (I say) as are so letted by any maner of meanes, that they no wayes be able to •lye from the plague. And where Christ sayth, pray you that your flight be not in the winter, nor on the sabbath day, in winter the common course of the yeare teacheth vs, that the wayes be foule, & therfore it is a hard thing, then to take a farre iourney for many incommodities, and daungers of the wayes in y^e tyme of the yeare: and on the Sabbath day it was not lawful to iourney, but a little way. Now Christ therefore meaning that wee should haue neede, both to speede oure iourney quickly, which cannot be done in Winter, for the incommodities of the wayes, and also to go farre, which cannot be done on the Sabbath day: he biddeth vs therefore pray that our flight be not in winter, nor on the Sabbath day: that is, to pray that wee may flye in tyme, and also farre enough from the daunger of the plague. Now, the causes why we shoulde flye, followeth in the same place of saynct Mathewes Gospell, whiche I now passe ouer: thou maist read them there.

And in the xviii. chapter of the Reuelation, the angell is sayd to haue cryed mightely with a loud voyce:*Flye my people out of Babilon, least you be infected with her faultes, & so be made partners of her plagues for her offences and sinnes are •rowne so great, that they swel and are come vnto the heauens:•••aynely the tyme doth approche, and the Lordes day is at hand. Heare (I beseeche you) also holy Paule, that blessed Apostle: He playnely forbiddeth vs, ducere iugum cum incredulis, that is, to ioine or couple our selues with the vnfaythfull,*for what fellowship can there be (sayth hee) of righteousnes with vnrighteousnes, what companie hath lighte with darcknesse, or what agreement hath Christ with Beliall, or what part can the faythfull haue with the vnfaythfull, or how doth the temple of God agree with Images or Idols, for you are the temple of the liuing God: as God hath sayd, I will walke and dwell in them, I will be their God, and they shall be my people, wherefore depart from amongst them and get you from them (sayth y^e Lord) and touche no vncleane thing: and I will receaue you, & bee to you in the stead of youre father, and you shalbe vnto me as my sonnes and daughters, sayth the almighty Lord.

This counsell to depart the realme, I doe not maruel if it do seeme to diuers (euen of them I meane that beare fauour to Godward) diuersly.* Many (I trust) y^t bee learned shall thinke the counsell good. Other there be peradventure, that will thinke it rather a thinge to be more tollerable, and that it may be in deede by Gods worde lawfully done, rather then to bee counsayled to bee done, for they will peradventure say, we shoulde counsell a man alwayes to doe that, whiche is best of all, and of moste perfection: but boldly in Christes cause to spend a mans lyfe, is best of all, and of moste perfection, and to flye it maye seeme to smell of cowardnes. In many thinges, that whiche is best for one at some tymes, is not best for all at all tymes, and it is not most perfection,* nor meete for a childe to couet to run, before he can goe. I will not make here a discourse in this matter, what might here be objected, and what might bee aunswered agayne: I leaue that to the wittie, and eloquent men of the world.

This is my minde, whiche I woulde thou shouldest know, O man of God, as I woulde wishe, and I do pray to almighty God it may be, that euery true Christian, either brother or sister (after they be called, and brought into the wrestling place, to striue in Christes cause for the best game, that is, to confesse the truth of the Gospell, and of the Christian fayth, in hope of euerlasting life) shoulde not shrink, nor relent one inch, or giue back, what soeuer shal befall, but stande to theyr tackle and sticke by it euen vnto death, as they wil Christ shall sticke by them at the latter day: so likewise I dare not wishe nor counsell any, either brother or sister of theyr owne swinge, to starte vp into the stage, or to cast themselues eyther before, or farther in daunger then tyme and neede shall require: for vndoubtedly when God seeth hys tyme, and his pleasure is, that his glory shall be set forth, and his Church edified by thy death and confession,* meanes shall be found by hys fatherly vniuersall prouidence, that thou without thyne owne presumptuous prouocation, shalt be lawfully called, to do thy feate, and to playe thy part. The miserable ende that one Quintus came vnto, may be a warning, and a feareful example for all men, to beware of presumption, and rashnesse in suche thinges (as Eusebius writeth in Eccle. historia) for euermore.

But a thyrde sorte of men there be, whiche also wyll be counted fauourers of Gods worde, and are (I feare) in number farre moe, and worse to be perswaded to y^t which Page 1782 is y^r godly meane. I meane of such as wil peradventure say or thinke, that my former counsell, which was to slye the infection of the Antichristian doctrine, by departing out of the Realme, is more then needeth, and other waies and meanes may be found, both to abide, and also to be cleare out of daunger of the foresayde plague. If that coulde be found, both to abide, and also to be cleare out of daunger of the foresaid plague. If that coulde be found in deed truely agreeable to Gods word, I woulde be as glad to heare it (God is my witnesse) as who is the other. Yes peradventure will some say. Thus it may be. Thou mayst keep thy selfe,* thy fayth, and thy religion close to thy selfe, and inwardly and priuately worship God in spirite & trueth, and outwardly see thou be no open medler, nor talker, nor transgressour of common order: so mayst thou be suffered in the common wealth and yet vse thy religiō without offence of thy conscience. In other countryes somewhere this peradventure might be vsed, but in Englande what shall be, God wot, but it was neuer yet, so farre as euer I haue knowne or heard. And also how can it be, but eyther thou must transgresse the common order, and the Romishe lawes and customes, whiche haue bene vsed in England, in the times past of Popery, and now (it is certayne) they retourne agayne: I say, thou mayst eyther be a breaker of these rites, lawes, and customes, and so bewraye thy selfe, or els if thou be in deede a man of GOD, thou shalt offend thy conscience, for in obseruing of them, thou shalt be compelled to breake Gods law, which is the rule of conscience to the man of God. For how canst thou resort euery holy day to the Church, and beare a face to worship the creature for the creatour, as thou must doe, & peraduenture confesse it too w^t thy mouth, and to sprinkle thy selfe with thy coniured water?

Thou must bee contributour also to the charges of all their popery, as of books of Antichristes seruice, of lights of the roode lofte, of the sepulchre, for setting vp & paynting of Images (nay in deede of Idolles) and thou muste beare a face to worship them also, or els thou must be had by the backe. Thou must serue the turne, to geue the holye loues (as they call it) whiche is nothinge els but a verye mockery of the Lordes holy table. Thou must be a contributor to the charges of all the disguised apparell, that y^e popishe sacrificing Priest, like vnto Aaron, must playe hys part in. Yea when the pardoner goeth about, or the flattering Fryer to begge for the mayntenaunce of superstition except thou doe as thy neighbours doe, looke not long to liue in rest. If anye of thy housholde dye, if thou wilt not pay money for ringing, and singing, for Requiem Masses, Dirige, and commendations, and such like trumpery of y^e Antichristian religion, thinkest thou that thou shalt bee reckened for a catholicke man, or for amicus Caesaris? A hūdred thinges moe may be reckened, and many of more weight, and of more euident superstition and Idolatrye, then some of these which I haue nowe rehearsed,* whyche God knoweth be ill enough: but these are enoughe to declare, and to set before thyne eyes, the thing that I intend that is, if thou abyde and wilt dwell in Englande, thou must eyther doe these, and many other moe contrarye to Gods worde, whiche forbiddeth not onely the thing whiche is euill, but also sayth: Ab omni specie mali abstinete vos, abstayne from all thinges that haue anye appearaunce of euill: or els if thou wilt not doe them, howe thou canst liue in England in rest safe from the stake, truly I cannot tell.

But peraduenture (as a man is readye to finde, and inuent some coloure to cloke hys conscience, to doe that thing that hys harte desireth) thou wilt say, though at any time I shalbe forced, to doe any of these thinges and suche like, yet will I haue no confidence in them, but outwardly with my body, I will keepe myne hart vnto God, and will not doe that of mine owne minde willingly neyther but to auoyd an other inconuenience: I trust therefore god will holde me excused, for he shall haue my hart, what can I doe more?

O my frend, beware for Gods sake and know that the subtleties of Sathan are deepe. Hee that is not able by Gods word to perceiue them, is heauily laden. Pray therefore with Daud: Lord let me not haue a mynde to inuente excuses for to cloke my sinne,* examine my deare frend, these thy wyly wayes with the worde of God, and if they do agree, thou maist vse them: if not, know, though they may seeme neuer so fine and goodly, yet in deede they be of Sathans broode. Gods worde is certayne, that forbiddeth to worship the creature for the creatour, for that is haynous Idolatry, and agaynst the first commaundemēt of God,* and it is also agaynst the seconde commandement of the first table to bow downe, or to doe worship vnto any Images of God, or of anye other thinge: And Gods word, requireth not onely the beliefe of the hart, but also y^e confession of the mouthe: and to beare part of the charges, to the mayntenance of thinges vngodly, what is that,* but in thy so doing, a consent to the thing done? Now consensenters and the doers, Gods worde accounteth to be giltly bothe. And it is not lawfull by S. Paules doctrine whiche was inspired hym by the spirite of God, to do ill that thereof the thing, which is good may come.

Thy hart (thou sayst) GOD shall haue, and yet wilt suffer thy body to doe the thinge that God dothe abhorre. Beware O man, take heede what thou sayest. Man may be deceaued, but no man may deceiue God, for he is called and is truely 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that is to saye, the searcher of the hart. Now, to geue God thy heart, is to geue hym thy whole heart, to loue him, to dread him, and to trust in him aboue all other thinges. He that hath my commaundementes (sayth Christ) and obserueth and keepeth them, it is he that loueth me: and to dread God aboue all other, is rather willingly to incurre the daunger and perill of all fearful thinges, then wittingly to doe that thing which is contrarye to his blessed will and commaundement: and to truste in hym aboue all thinges, is assuredly to trust to his promise of his reward, and of his tuition, and of hys goodnes and mercy,* and to preferre that aboue all thinges in the world seeme they neuer so strong, so wise, or so good. Now, how canst thou say truely, that God hathe thy heart after thys maner of sorte (which is to haue thy heart in deede) when thy deedes do declare farre an other thing? Thy bodye, O man is Gods, and all the partes therof, euen as thy soule is: hee made them both, and Christe with hys bloude redeemed them both, and is Lord of both, for he hath bought them both dearely, and darest thou suffer any parte of eyther of them to do seruice to Sathan? Surely in so doyng, thou committest sacriledge and doest robbe God, thou defilest the liuely temple of the liuing God if thou suffer thy body to doe Sathan seruice. Do you not know (sayth saynct Paule) that your body is a liuely temple of God? * And may a man then take and vse any part thereof but in the seruice of God? No surely, it is not lawfull so to do for the man of God, neyther with hand, tongue, nor foote, nor any parte of the whole body.

Doth not Paule commaund to the Romaynes,* which pertayneth to euery christian soule: As you haue in times past (sayth he) geuen your members to doe seruice vnto vncleannes and wickednes, from one wickednes to an other: so nowe geue youre members to doe seruice vnto righteousness, that you may be sanctified. And I pray thee good brother, what doest thou thinke is to beare the marke of the beast in the forehead, and in the hand that saynct Iohn speaketh of? I knowe wee ought warely to speake of Gods misteryes whiche he shewed by the spirite of prophesying to his seruaunt Iohn, yet to red them with reuerence, and to praye for the same so muche as God knoweth is necessarye for oure tyme to knowe, I thynke it necessarye and good.* Wherefore, what I suppose is to beare the Beasts marke, I will tell thee, and committe the iudgement of mine interpretation, as in all other thinges, to the spirituall man. I suppose he beareth the Beast of Babilons marke in hys forehead, whiche is not ashamed of the Beastes wayes, but will professe them openly to set foorth his mayster the beast Abaddon. And likewise he beareth his marke in hys hand, that wil, and doth practise the workes of the beast w^t hys power & hand. And likewise I wil not let to tel thee, what I thinke to be signed in the forehead for the seruaunt of God, whereof Iohn also speaketh, reckoning vp many thousands so to haue bene signed of euery tribe, I suppose he is signed in the forehead, for the seruaunte of God whome GOD hath appoynted of his infinite goodnes, and hath geuen him grace and strength, stoughtly to confesse hym, & his truth before the worlde. And to haue grace and strength to confesse Christe, and the doctrine of the crosse, and to lament and mourne for the abominations of Antichrist, I suppose is to be signed w^t Tau, whereof Ezechiell the Prophet doth speake. Thus I suppose these Prophetes are spirituallly to be vnderstanded: and to looke for other corporall markes, to be seene in mennes foreheads, or in their handes, is nothing els but to looke that there shoulde come some brute beast out of Babilon, or some Elephant, Leopard, Lyon, or Camell, or some other such monstrous Beast with x. hornes, that should do all the wonderfull thinges spoken in Iohn: and yet of a Beast speaketh Iohn, but I vnderstand hym so to be called, not for that he shall be anye suche brute Beast, but for that he is, and shall bee the chylde of perdition,* whiche for hys crueltie and beastlye manners, is well called a Beast.

The carnall Iewes knew there was a promise made, that Helias should come before Christe the Messias, the Page 1783 annoynted of God, to prepare hys wayes: they knew also there was a promise of Messias, that he shoulde come, and be a king, and raygne in the house of Dauid for euermore, but they vnderstoode al so grossely, and so carnally, that they neyther knewe Helias, nor Messias when they came, for they looked for Helias to come down from heauen in his own person, and for Messias to come & raigne in worldly pompe, power, riches and glorie, when as the prophesies of both wer spirituallly to haue bene vnderstāded: of Helias that he shoulde come not in persone, but in spirite, that is, one whiche shoulde be indued with the spirite, and giftes of grace of Helias, whiche was in deede Iohn Baptist, as Christ hymselfe did declare to his Apostles. And of Messias raygne, all the Prophetes were to be vnderstanded of the raygne of hys spirituall kingdome ouer the house of Iacob, and the true Israelites for euermore. And so by that their grosse, and carnall vnderstandyng, they mistooke both Helias, and the true Messias, and when they came, knew neither of them both. So likewise I feare me (nay it is certayne) the world that wanteth the light of the spirite of God (for the worlde is not able to receaue hym,* sayth Iohn) neither dothe, nor shall know the beast, nor his markes, though he rage cruellye and liue neuer so beastly, and though his marked men be in number like y^e sand of the sea. The Lord therfore vouchsafe to open the eyes of the blinde, with the light of grace, that they may see and perceaue, and vnderstād the words of God, after the minde of his spirite, Amen.

Here remayneth two obiections, whiche may seeme wayghty, and the whiche may peraduenture moue many not to follow the former counsell. The former reason is, A man will say, O sir it is no small matter ye speake of, to depart from a mans owne natiue countrey, into a strange realme.* Many men haue so great lettes, as how it is possible that they can, or may do so? Some haue landes & possessions, whiche they cannot carry with them: some haue father, mother, wife, children, and kinsfolke, from whome to depart is as hard a thing (and all one almost) as to suffer death, and to go to a straunge country, that thou knowest not, neyther the maner of the people, nor how thou mayst away either with the people, or with y^e country. Or what a hard thing it is to liue amonge a straunge people, whose tongue thou doest not vnderstand. &c.

I graunt here thou mayst heape a number of worldly incommodities, which are surely very like to ensue the departure out of a mans owne natiue country, I meane out of the whole realme, into a straunge land: but what of all these, and a thousand moe of the lyke sorte? I will sette vnto them one saying of our sauour Christ, whiche vnto the faythfull childe of God, and to the true christian, is able to counteruayle all these, yea and to way them downe. Christe oure sauoure sayth in Luke: If any come to me, and do not hate hys father and mother (hee meaneth, and wyll not in his cause forsake his father and mother) hys wyfe, children and brethren, yea and hys lyfe too, hee cannot bee my discipule: and whosoeuer doth not beare hys crosse and come after me, he cannot be my discipule. And in the same place he declareth by the two parables, one of a builder, and the other of a king that is a warriour, that euery man that wil not in Christes cause, forsake all that euer he hath, hee can not be his Discipule. Look the places who will: the matter is so playnely set forth, that no gloses, nor cloking of conscience to the manne of God, can serue to the contrarye. Many places there be for the same purpose, for the imbrasing of Christes crosse, when Christ and his cause layeth it vpon our backe: but this is so playne that I neede here to rehearse no more.

This latter reason and obiection whereof I spake before, is of more force, and includeth a necessitie, which after the common saying,* hath no lawe, and therefore it is more hard to shape for it a good aunswere. This may bee objected of some: alas sir I graunt al these thinges do greue me and because I vnderstand they doe not agree with Gods worde, whiche is the rule of my conscience, I loth eyther to looke on them, or to heare them. But sir (alas) I am an impotent man, an aged man, a sicke man, a lame man, or I haue so many small infantiles and a lame wife, which all liueth by my labour, and by my prouision: if I leaue them they shall sterue, and I am not able to cary them with me, suche is my state. Alas sir, what shal I do? And these causes may chaunce to some men of God, whereby eyther it shalbe for them vtterly impossible to departe the country or els in departing, they shalbe inforced to forsake suche in extreme necessities, of whom both God and nature hathe committed vnto them the care.

Alas what counsel is here to be geuen? O lamentable state. O sorrowfull hart that neyther can depart, and with out extreame daunger and perill, is not able to tarye still. And these are they whom our Sauour Christe sawe be'fore should be, and called them in his prophesie of the lat'ter time, great bellyed or traueilling women, and women that geue after they bee brought to bed, their small babes suck. The state of such are not able to flye the infection of y^e pestiferous plague of Antichristes abominations, Christ lamenting, and not cursing, sayth: Wo be to the great bellyed and traueilling woman, and women that geue sucke in those dayes. For these alas my hart mourneth the more, the lesse I am able to geue any comfortable counsell: but this: that alwayes, as they looke for euerlasting lyfe, they abide still in the confession of his truth, what soeuer shall befall, and for the rest to put theyr trust now wholly in God, whiche is able to saue them agaynst al apparance, and commonly in extremities, when all worldly comfort fayleth,* and the danger is at highest, thē vnto his he is wont, after his accustomed mercy, to be most ready for to put his helping hand. Daniel, God suffered to be caste into the Denne of Lyons, and the three children into the hote burning furnace, and yet he saued them all. Paule was plucked out of the mouthe of the Lyon (as he sayth of hymselfe) and in Asia he was brought in suche trouble, that he looked for no other thing, but for present death, and yet hee that rayseth the dead to lyfe agayne, did bring him out of all hys troubles, & taught him & all other that be in troubles for christes cause, not to trust to thēselues, but in almighty God.

Of Gods gracious ayde in extreeme perilles toward them that put theyr truste in hym, all Scripture is full bothe olde and new. What daungers were y^e Patriarcks ofte• brought vnto, as Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, but of all other Ioseph, and how mercifully were they deliuered agayne?• In what perilles was Moises when he was fayne to flye for the sauegard of hys life? And when was he sent agayne to deliuer the Israelites from the seruyle bondage? Not before they were brought into extreme misery. And when did the Lorde mightely deliuer his people from Pharaos sword? Not before they were broughte into such straightes, that they were so compassed on euery side (the mayne sea on the one side, and the maine hoste on y^e other) that they could looke for none other (yea what did they els in deede looke for?) but eyther to haue bene drowned in the sea or els to haue fallen on y^e edge of Pharaos sword. These iudges whiche wrought most wonderfull thinges in the deliuerie of the people, were euer geuen when the people was brought to most misery before as Othoniel, Aioth, Saugar, Gedeon, Iephthe, Samson. And so was Saull indued with strength and boldnes frō aboue, agaynst the Ammonites, Philistines, and Amalechites for the defence of y^e people of God. Dauid lykewise felt Gods helpe most sensibly euer in his extreme persecutions. What shall I speake of the Prophetes of GOD, whome God suffered so oft to be broughte into extreame perilles, and so mightely deliuered them agayne: as Hel•as, Jeremy, Daniell, Micheas, and Ionas, and many other, whome it were but to long to rehearse and set out at large? And did the Lord vse his seruauntes otherwise in y^e new lawe after Christes incarnation? Read the Actes of the Apostles, and you shall see no. Were not the Apostles cast into Prison, and brought out by the mightye hande of God? Dyd not the Aungell deliuer Peter out of the strōg prison, and bryng hym out by the yron gates of the Cittie and set hym free? And when, I pray you? Euen the same night before Herod appoynted to haue broughte him to iudgement for to haue slayne hym, as he had a little before killed Iames the brother of Iohn. Paule and Silas, whē after they had bene sore scourged, and wer put into the inner prison, and there were layde fast in the stockes, I pray you what appearaunce was there that the Magistrates should be glad to come the next daye themselues to them, to desire them to be content and to depart in peace. Who prouided for Paule, that hee shoulde bee safely conducted out of all daunger, and brought to Felix the Emperoures Deputie, when as both the hygh Priestes, the Phariseis, and rulers of the Iewes had conspired to require iudgement of death agaynst hym, he being fast in prison, and also more then xl. men had sworne eche one to an other,* that they would neuer eate nor drynke vntill they hadde slayne Paule? A thing wonderfull, that no reason could haue inuēted, or man could haue looked for: God prouided Paule hys owne sisters sonne a younge man, that disapoynted that conspiracie, and all theyr former coniuration. The maner how the thing came to passe, thou mayst read in the xxiii. of the Actes. I will not be tedious vnto thee here with the rehearsall thereof.

Nowe, to descend from the Apostles to the Martyrs that followed next in Christes Church, and in them likewise to declare how gracious oure good God euer hathe bene to worke wonderfully with them which in his cause Page 1784 haue bene in extreme perilles, it were matter enoughe to write a longe booke. I will here name but one manne and one woman, that is, Athanasius the greate clarke and godly man stoutely standing in Christes cause against the Arrians, and that holy woman Blandina, standinge so constantly in all extreme paynes, in the simple confession of Christe. If thou wilt haue examples of moe, looke and thou shalt haue both these and a C. moe in Ecclesiastica historia of Eusebius, and in Tripartita historia.

But for al these examples both of holy scripture, and of other historyes, I feare me the weake man of God incombred with the fraylty and infirmitie of the fleshe, wil haue now and then such thoughtes and quawmes (as they call them) to run ouer hys hart, and to thinke thus: All these thinges which are rehearsed out of the scripture, I beleue to be true, and of the rest truely I do thinke well, & can be'leue thē also to be true: but all these we must needes graūt were speciall miracles of God, which nowe in our dayes are ceased we see, and to require them at Gods handes, were it not to tempt God.

Welbeloued brother, I graunt such were great wonderfull workes of God,* and wee haue not seene many of such myracles in our tyme, eyther for that our sight is not cleare (for truely God worketh with hys, his parte in all tymes) or els because we haue not the lyke faythe of them for whose cause God wrought suche thinges, or because, after y^t he had set forth the truth of his doctrine by such miracles then sufficiently, the time of so many myracles to bee done was expired withall. Which of these is the most speciall cause of all other, or whether there be any other, God knoweth: I leaue that to God. But knowe thou this my welbeloued in God, that Gods hand is as strong as euer it was, he may do what his gracious pleasure is, & hee is as good and gracious as euer he was. Man changeth as the garment doth, but God our heauenly father is euen the same now that he was, and shalbe for euermore.

The world without doubt (this I do beleue, and therefore I say) draweth towardes an end, and in al ages God hath had hys owne maner, after hys secrete and vnsearchable wisdom, to vse hys electe, sometimes to delyuer them and to keepe them safe, and sometymes to suffer thē to drinke of Christes cuppe, that is, to feele the smart, and to feele of the whip. And though the fleshe smarteth at the one, and feeleth ease in the other, is gladde of the one, and sore vexed in the other: yet the Lorde is all one, towardes them in both, and loueth them no lesse when hee suffereth thē to be beaten, yea & to be put to bodily deathe, then when he worketh wonders for theyr marueilous deliuary. Nay rather he doth more for them, whē in anguish of y^e torments he standeth by them & strengthneth them in theyr fayth, to suffer in y^e confession of the truth & his fayth, the bitter panges of death, then when he openeth y^e prison dore and letteth them go lose: * for here hee doth but respite thē to an other time, & leaueth thē in daunger to fall in like perill again: & there he maketh them perfite, to be without danger, paine, or perill after y^t for euermore. But this hys loue towards thē, howsoeuer the worlde doth iudge of it, is al one, both when he deliuereth & when he suffereth thē to be put to death. He loued as well Peter and Paul, whē after they had (according to hys blessed will, pleasure and prouidence, finished their courses, and done theyr seruices appoynted them by hym here in preaching of his Gospel) the one was beheaded, and the other was hanged or crucified of the cruell tyraunt Nero (as the Ecclesiasticall hystory sayth) as when hee sent the Aungell to bringe Peter out of prison, and for Pauls deliuary he made all y^e dores of the prison to flye wide open, and the foundation of the same like an earthquake to tremble and shake.

Thinkest thou (O thou man of God) that Chryst our sauour had lesse affection to the first martyr Stephen, because he suffered his enemies euen at the first conflicte to stone him to death? No surely, nor Iames Iohns brother which was one of the three that Paule calleth Primates or Principals amongst the Apostles of Christ. Hee loued him neuer a whit the worse thē he did the other, although he suffered Herode the tyrauntes sword to cut of his head. Nay, doth not Danyell say speaking of the cruelty of Antichristes time: *Et docti in populo docebunt plurimos, & ruent in gladio & in flamma, & in captiuitate, & rapina dierum. &c. Et de eruditis ruent vt conflentur & eligantur, & dealbentur. &c. That is, and the learned (hee meaneth truely learned in Gods lawe) shall teache many, and shall fall vppon the sworde, and in the flame, (that is, shall bee burned in the flaming fire) and in captiuitie (that is, shall bee in prison, and be spoyled and robbed of theyr goodes for a longe season. *) And after a little in the same place of Daniell it followeth: and of the learned there be, whiche shall fall or be ouerthrowne, that they may be knowne, tryed, chosen, & made white: he meaneth, be burnished & scoured a new, picked and chosen, and made fresh and lustye. If that then was foreseene for to be done to the godly learned, and for so gracious causes, let euery one to whom any such thing by the will of God doth chaunce, be mery in God, and reioyce, for it is to Gods glory, and to his owne euerlasting wealth. Wherefore well is he that euer he was borne, for whom thus graciously God hath prouided, hauing grace of God, and strength of the holy Ghost so stand steadfastly in the height of the storme. Happy is he that euer hee was borne, whome God his heauenly Father hath vouchsafed to appoynt to glorifie him, and to edifie hys Church by the effusion of hys blood.

To dye in Christes cause is an high honour, to y^t whiche no man certaynly shall or can aspire, but to whō God vouchsafeth that dignitie: * For no man is allowed to presume for to take vnto hym selfe any office of honour, but he which is thereunto called of God. Therefore Ioh. saith well speaking of them, which haue obtayned the victorie by the blood of the Lambe, and by the worde of hys testimony, that they loued not theyr liues, euen vnto death. And our sauour Christ sayth: He that shall lose his life for my cause shall finde it. * And this manner of speach pertayneth not to one kinde of Christians, (as the worldly dothe wickedly dreame) but all that doe truelye pertayne vnto Christ. For when Christe had called vnto hym the multytude together with hys Disciples, he said vnto thē (mark that he sayde not this to the Disciples and Apostles onely, but he sayd it to al) who soeuer wil follow me, let him forsake or deny hymselfe, and take vp his crosse and followe me: for who soeuer will saue his lyfe, shall lose it (he meaneth who soeuer will, to saue hys life, both forsake or leaue hym and his truth) and whosoever shall lose his lyfe for my cause, and the Gospels sake, shall saue it: For what shall it profite man if he shall winne the whole world and lose his owne soule? hys owne lyfe? or what shall a manne geue to recompence that losse of his owne lyfe, and of hys own soule: * Who soeuer shalbe ashamed of me & my words (that is to confesse me and my Gospell) before this adulterous and sinful generation, of him shall the sonne of man be ashamed when he commeth in the glory of hys Father, * with the holy Aungels. Know thou O man of God, that all thinges are ordayned for thy behoufe, and to the furthe'raunce of thee, towards thy saluation. All thinges (saith Paule) worketh with the good to goodnes, euen the enemies of God, & such kind of punishmentes whereby they goe about to destroy them, shall be forced by Gods power might, & fatherly prouidence, for to do them seruice.

It is not as the wicked thinketh, that pouerty, aduersitie, sickenes, tribulation, yea paynfull death of the godly be tokens that God doth not loue them: but euen cleane the contrary, as all the whole course of scripture doth euidently declare, for then he would neuer haue suffered hys most dearly beloued the Patriarkes to haue had such trou'bles, his Prophetes, his Apostles, his martyrs and chiefe Champions and mayntayners of hys truth and Gospell, so cruelly of the wicked to haue bene murdered and slayn. Of the which some were racked (as the Apostle sayth) and woulde not be deliuered, * that they might receaue a better resurrection. Some were tryed by mockinges & scourginges, yea moreouer by bondes and imprisonment: they were stoned, they were hewen and cut a sunder, they were tempted, they were slayne with the sword, they wandered vp and down in sheepes skinnes and Gotes skinnes, beyng forsaken, afflicted and tormented: such men as y^e world was not worthy to haue, wādring in wildernes, in moūtaynes, in Dennes and Caues of the earth. All these were approued by the testimony of fayth, and receaued not the promise, because God did prouide better for vs, that without vs they should not be consummated. They tary now for vs vndoubtedly, longing for the day: but they are commaunded to haue pacience yet (saith the Lord a litle while, vntill the number of theyr fellow seruauntes bee fulfilled, and of theyr brethren whiche are yet to be slayne, as they were.

Now (thou O man of God) for our Lordes sake, let vs not for the loue of thys lyfe, tary then to long, and bee occasion of delay of that glorious consummation, in hope and expectation wherof the departed in the Lord, and the whiche also the liuing endued with Gods spirite, ought so earnestly to desire and to grone for with al the creatures of God. Let vs all with Iohn the seruaunt of God, cry in our harts vnto our sauour Christ: Veni Domine Iesu, come Lorde Iesu come. For then when Christ which is our life,* shall be made manifest and appeare in glorye, then shall the Children of God appeare what they be, euen like vnto Christ: for this oure weake body shall bee transfigured Page 1785 and made like vnto Christes glorious body, and that by y^e power wherby he is able to subdue vnto himselfe al thinges. Then, that which is now corruptible, shall be made incorruptible: that nowe is vile, shall then bee made glorious, that is now weake, shal rise then mighty and strong that is grosse and carnall shall be made fine and spirituall for then we shal see and haue the vnspeakable ioy and fru[•]tion of the glorious maiestie of our Lord euen as he is.

Who or what then shall let vs to ieoparde, to ieopard? yea, to spende this lyfe whiche wee haue here, in Christes cause? in our Lorde God his cause? O thou therefore man of God, thou y^r art loden, & so letted like vnto a great bellied woman, that thou canst not flie the plague, yet if thou lust after suche things as I haue spoken of, stand fast what soeuer shall befall, in thy maysters cause: and take this thy letting to flye,* for a calling of God to fight in thy mayster Christ his cause. Of this be thou certaine, they can do nothing vnto thee, whiche thy father is not aware of, or hath not foreseene before: they can do no more thē it shal please hym to suffer them to do for the furtheraunce of his glory edifying of his Church, and thine owne saluation. Let thē then do what they shall, seeing to thee (O man of God) all thinges shall be forced to serue, and to worke with thee vnto the best before God. O be not afrayd and remember the end.

All this whiche I haue spoken for the comforte of the lamentable case of the man whome Christ calleth the greate bellied woman, I meane to bee spoken of likewyse to the captiue and prisoner in Gods cause: for suche I counte to be as it were already summonned and pressed to fight vnder the banner of the crosse of Chryste, and as it were souldiours allowed and taken vp for the Lordes warres, to do their Lorde and mayster good and honourable seruice, and to sticke to him, as men of trusty seruice in hys cause, euen vnto death, and to thinke their lyfe lost in his cause, is to win it in eternal glory for euermore.

Therefore, now to conclude and to make an end of thys treatise, I say vnto all that loue God our heauenly father that loue Christ Iesus our redeemer and sauour: y^t loue to follow the wayes of the holy Ghost whiche is our comforter and sanctifier of all: vnto al that loue Christs spouse and bodye, the true catholicke Churche of Christe, yea that loue lyfe and theyr owne soules health: I say vnto al these hearken my deare breathren and sisters, all you that be of God, of all sortes, ages, dignities, or degrees: hearken to the word of our sauour Iesus Christ spoken to his Apostles, and meant to all his in S. Mathewes Gospel: Feare not them whiche kill the body, for they cannot kil y^e soule: but feare hym more which may destroy and cast both body and soule into hell fire, Are not two small sparrowes sold for a mite, and one of them shall not fall or light vpon the ground without your father? All the heares of your head be numbed.* Feare them not, you are muche more worthe then are the litle sparrowes▪ Euery one that confesseth me before men, him shal I likewise confesse before my Father which is in heauen. But who soeuer shall deny me before men, I shall deny him likewise before my father which is in heauen.

The Lord graunt vs therfore of his heauenlye grace and strengthe, that here wee maye so confesse him in thys world amongst this adulterous and sinneful generation, that he may confesse vs agayne at the latter day before hys father whiche is in heauē, to his glory and our euerlasting comfort, ioy and saluation.

To our heauenly Father, to our sauour and redemer Iesus Christ, and to the holy Ghost, be all glory and honour now and for euer. Amen.

Thus with the deathe and martyrdome of these two learned Pastors and constant souldiours of Christ, mayster Latimer, and B. Ridley, you haue dyuers of theyr letters and other writings of theirs expressed, with y^e Farewels also of B. Ridley, wherein he tooke hys leaue of the world, taking hys iourney to the kingdome of heauen. Diuers and sondry other treatises of his remayne also in my hand both in Latine and English, to be remembred, by y^e leaue of the Lorde in time and place conuenient.

The death and end of Stephen Gardiner Byshop of Winchester.

THE next moneth, after the burning of Doctor Ridley and mayster Latimer,* which was the moneth of Nouember, Stephen Gardiner Byshop and Chauncelloure, a man hated of God and all good men, ended hys wretched lyfe. Concerning the quallities, nature, and disposition of which man, for somuch as somewhat hath bene declared before in the storye of kinge Edwardes raygne,* I shall neede therefore the lesse now to stand greatly vpon the same. First this Uipers byrd crept out of the towne of Bery in Suffolke, brought vp most parte of his youth in Cambridge, his wit, capacitie, memorye, and other indumentes of nature not to bee complayned of, if he hadde wel vsed and rightly applyed the same: wherein ther was no great want of Gods part in hym, if hee had not rather hymselfe wanted to y^e goodnes of his gifts. Through this promptnes, actiuitie, & towardnes of hys, he profited not a little in such studyes as he gaue hys head vnto, as first in the law ciuil, then in languages and such other like, especially in those artes and faculties, which had any prospect to dignitie and preferment to be hoped for. Besides other ornaments or helpes of nature, memory chiefly seemed in hym very beneficiall, rather then dilligence of study.

To these giftes and quallities were ioyned agayne is great or greater vices,* which not so much followed hym as ouertooke him, not so muche burdened hym, as made hym burdenous to the whole realme. Hee was of a proude stomacke and high minded, in hys owne opinion and conceit flattering himselfe to much, in wit, crafty and subtile, towarde his superiour flattering and faire spoken to hys inferiours fierce, agaynst hys equall stoute and enuious, namely if in iudgement and sentence he any thyng withstoode hym, as appeared betweene the good Lorde Crōwell and hym in the raygne of kyng Henry, being of like hau•inesse of stomacke, as the Poets wryte of Pelides, Cedere nescius. Who although would geue no place to men yet notw^tstanding I wish he woulde haue geuen place to truth, according as he semed not altogether ignorant of y^e truth. What his knowledge was therin,* it is euident part^ly to vnderstand as wel by his book De vera obedientia, as also by his sermon before king Edward: also by his aunsweres to y^e Councell the same time, and moreouer by hys own wordes may be gathered in sundrye places, as more playnly may appeare by that whiche hereafter followeth, so stiffe in mayntayning that hee had once begon to take vpon hym. I will not heare speake of y^t which hath bene constantly reported to me, touching the monstrous making & mishaped fashion of hys feete and toes, the nayles wherof were sayd not to bee like to other mens, but to crooke downeward, and to be sharpe lyke y^e clawes of rauening beastes. What hys learning was in y^e Ciuil and Canon law, I haue not to say. What it was in other liberal sciences and artes thys I suppose, y^t neyther hys continuance in study, nor diligence of readynge was such (by reason of hys to muche intermedling in Prynces matters) as could truely wel merite vnto hym y^e title of a deepe learned man. But what learning or cunning soeuer it was he had, so it fared in him, as it dothe in Butchers, whiche vse to blow vp theyr flesh: euen so he with boldnes and stoutnes, and speciallye with authoritie made those giftes that he had to appeare much greater then they were in very deede. Wherunto vse peraduētūre also & experiēce abroad brought no little helpes, rather then eyther quicknes of wit, or happines of education.

And as touching Diuinitie, he was so variable wauering with time, that no constant censure can be geuē what to make of hym. If hys doynge and wringings were accordinge to hys conscience, no man can rightly saye whether he was a right protestant or Papist. If hee wrote otherwise then he thought, for feare, or to beare with tyme then was he a double deep dissēbler before God and man, to say & vnsay, to write and vnwrite, to sweare and forswear so as hee did.* For first in the beginning of queene Annes tyme, who was so forward or so busy in the matter of the kings diuorce as Ste. Gard. who was first sent to Rome and then to the Emperour with Edward Foxe, as chiefe agent in the behalfe of Lady Anne. By whome also he was preferred to the Bishopricke of Winchester, & Ed. Boner was preferred to y^e Bishoprick of Londō. Agayn, at the abolishing of the Pope, who so ready to sweare, or so vehement to write agaynst the Pope as he, as not onely by hys sermons, but also by hys booke De obedientia may appeare. In whiche booke De obedientia, least any shuld thinke him drawne thereunto otherwise then by his own consent, he playnly declareth how not rashly nor vppon a sodeine, but vppon a long deliberation and aduisement in hymselfe about the matter,* he at length vttered hys iudgement: Whereof read before. And moreouer so hee vttered his iudgement in wryting agaynst the vsurped supremacie of the Pope, that comming to Louane, afterwarde hee was there accompted for a person excommunicate, and a schismaticke, in so much that he was not permitted in their Church to say Masse, and moreouer in their publicke sermons they openly cryed out agaynst hym. Whereof read hereafter following.

Page 1786 And thus long continued he firme and forward so that who but Winchester during all the tyme and raigne of Queene Anne. After her decease that time by litle and litle caried him away, til at length the emulation of Cromwels estate,* and especially (as it seemeth) for his so muche fauouring of Boner (whom Winchester at that time in no case coulde abide) made him an vtter enemie both agaynst him, and also his Religion: till agayne in kyng Edwardes daies, he began a litle to rebate from certaine poyntes of Popery, and somewhat to smell of the Gospell, as both by his Sermon before king Edward,* and also by his subscribyng to certane Articles may appeare: and this was an hal• turne of Stephen Gardener from Popery againe to the Gospell, and (no doubt) he would haue further turned, had not the vnlucky decay of the Duke of Somerset cleane turned him away from true Diuinitie to playne Popery:* wherein he continued a cruell persecutour to his dying day.

And thus much concerning the trade and profession of Ste. Gardiners Popish diuinity.* In which his popishe trade, whether he folowed more true iudgement, or els time, or rather the spirite of ambition & vaine glory, it is doubtful to say, & so much y^e more doubtfull, because in his doings & writings a man may see him not only contrary to him selfe, but also in some points contrary to other Papistes. And furthermore, where he agreeth with them, he seemeth therein not so much to folow his owne sense, as y^e mind & meaning of Perseus: out of whose booke the greatest part of Winchesters Diuinity seemeth to be borrowed.

And therefore, as in the true knowledge of Gods holy word & scripture he appeareth no body: so in his pen and stile of writings no lesse farre he is from commendation,* then he is frō al plainenes and perspicuitie. In whose obscure & perplexe kind of writing, although peradventure some sense may be found with some searching, yet shall no reader finde any sweetenes in his reading.

What moued him to be so sturdy against M. Cheke, and sir T. Smith for y^e Greke pronunciatiō, other may thinke what they please: I speake but what I thinke, that he so did, for that he sawe it a thing rather newly begun, then truly impugned. Such was the disposition of that mā (as it semeth) y^t of purpose he euer affected to seme to be a patron of al old customes, though they were neuer so rotten with age. Amongest other matters, this one thing I can not but meruaile at in my minde, when I see how proudly he braggeth and vaynely vaunteth him selfe (aswell in his letters to the L. Protector, & others of K. Edwardes counsell, as also in his long matter articulated and exhibited by hym vnto the Archbishop of Canterburie, and other the kyngs Commissioners, of the high fauour he had of the noble K. of famous memory K. Henry the 8. when in deede nothing was lesse true: neither did the king lesse fauour any of his Counsell, then him, affirming very often that he greatly suspected the sayde B. to be a secrete maynteiner of the B. of Romes vsurped authoritie, and a stout disturber and hinderer of his proceedinges in reformation of Religion. And therefore dyd so muche dislyke with him, that he did not onely mynd (if the Lord had lent his highnes longer life) to haue vsed the extremity of law agaynst him, vpon very sore & iust matter of old committed by him (and yet not taken away by any pardon) commaunding thereupon often the L. Paget then his Secretarie, to kepe safe certaine writings which he had against him: But also commaunded that he should be put cleane out of his last will & Testament, not sufferiing him either to be any of his Executors, or els in any case of his sonnes counsayle, no although he were earnestly entreated to the contrary by sundry of the Lordes & others of his highnes Counsayle, saying, he was a wylfull, troublesome, and hed strong man, and not meete to be about his sonne, or to haue any thing to do by his wil. Now amōgst other causes that moued the K. thus to suspect his fidelity towards his godly proceedinges in religion, I find this to be one. It pleased his Maiestie after his abolishing of the B. of Romes vsurped authoritie (amongest other Embassages to forraine Princes) to send the sayd B. of Winchester, and Sir Henry Knyuet Knight, as ioynt Embassadors to the Emperour, being then at a dyet or counsayle at Ratisbone, appoynting also S. Iohn Barkeley, S. W. Blunt Knightes, and M. Andrew Baynton Esquier, (his highnes seruantes) to geue their attendaunce vpon the sayde S. Henry Knyuet for y^e more honoring of his ambassage. It happened also at that time, that S. Henry Knyuet enterteyned into his seruice (as Steward of his household) one Wil. Wolfe, who had in the same place & rome, before serued S. Thomas Wyat Knight the K. former Ambassadors there, and by that meanes had good acquaintaunce in those partes, aswell in the Emeperours Court, as els where. This Wolfe, towards the latter end of that dyet or counsell, happened to walke (as often he did) towards themperours Pallace to heare some newes, where he met with one Ludouico, an Italian Merchaunt or banker, one of his old acquaintaunce: who, supposing the sayd Wolfe to haue attended vpon the B. of Winchester (not knowing of any other ioynt Ambassadour) required Wolfe for olde acquaintaunce, to do him a pleasure: whereunto he wyllingly graunted. Whereupon Ludouico shewed him, that the Popes legate, or Ambassadour to themperour (which was Cardinal Contarene) departing (the day) before towards Rome, and hauing no leasure to end his busines him selfe, had put the sayd Ludouico in trust for the accomplishyng of them: and amonges all other thinges he had especially charged hym that he should repayre to the Ambassadour of England, and require of him an aunswere of the Popes letters, which the Legat did of late sende vnto him, addressed to him from Rome, & that vpon the receipt thereof he should send thē after with all speede: and therfore if his L. Ambassadour woulde write by that currouer, he prayed Wolfe to tell him that it was tyme to write, for the currouer went away within a day or two. At this tale Wolfe being abashed, & yet partly gessing which Ambassadour he ment, thought it not mete to tell him whose seruaunt he was, but by other soothing talke, perceiued that he ment the B. of Winchester: and to thend that Ludouico shoulde suspect nothing, he aunswered him, that he beyng not the Ambassadors Secretary, coulde say litle therein, howbeit he woulde not misse to put his Secretarie in remembraunce of it: which thing Ludouicke also desired him to do, for that he had no other acquaintaunce with the Ambassadors, and so for that time they departed. This matter seming to Wolfe of some importaunce, dyd straight waies reueale it to sir H. Knyuet his M. Who, weighing also the greatnes of the case, and the disaduauntage it were, vpon one mans so bare a report to attempt ought, in a place and time, whereby suche a person was to be touched, charged Wolfe, wel to aduise him self, that no affect of hate, displeasure, or other passion, did moue him to disclose this, but truth only. Wolfe replied, that he weighed wel the weightines of the case, meete, as to his owne respect, to be passed ouer in silence, for auoyding of his priuate displeasure, if duty of alleageaunce bound him not otherwyse. But Sir, (quoth he) if ye thinke not my hearing hereof one to one to be sufficient, I warrent you to deuise meanes, that some others of your seruauntes shall heare the like wordes at Ludouickes owne mouth as wel as I. Upon which talke, sir H. Knyuet deuised, which of his seruauntes he might vse to that purpose, and at last rested vppon M. Thomas Chalenor his Secretary, because he had the Italian tonge. Not yet makyng him pryue of any matter, but wylled Wolfe to take him abroad with him as of his owne priua motion, for they were very familiar friendes. Whereupon the next morning being sonday, Wolfe came to Chalenors chamber, and prayed him familiarly to go walke with him abroad to y^e Piazza or marketstead: which he gladly graunting so did, not knowing of any speciall cause why. When they came to the Piazza, ouer against themperours pallace, (nere wherunto also the Popes legate had lodged) & had there walked a while together, there came thither the said Ludouicke, and espying Wolfe, saluted him very friendly, & entred into talke about the exchaunge, & sundry other matters, Chalenor being still with them. At last vpon occasion, they entred into like talk about the former letters that the Ambassadors of Englande had receiued from Rome by the Popes legate, of which Ludouico had in charge to receiue an aunswere, affirming, that the Post did depart the next day, & therfore prayed Wolfe to put the Ambassadors secretarie in remembrance of them. Wherunto Wolfe aunswered, that he would willingly do it: but he did not well know which Ambassadour he meant, for that there were two: one, the B. of Winchester, & the other, a Gentleman of the K. priuy chamber. To whom Ludouicke replied, that he ment not the Gentleman of the priuy chamber, but the Bishop. By which talke and more such like (as vpon the former day,) M. Chalenor being moued (and not knowing yet of his Maisters & Wolfes purpose) after the departure of Ludouico from them, sayd vnto Wolfe that Ludouico had had but homely talke with him to be passed ouer lightly, & therefore he would tel his M. of it. To whom Wolfe aunswered, do as you wyll, if you thinke any matter therein. And therefore at his returne home he told sir H. Knyuet what spech he had hard at Ludouickes mouth. Sir H. Knyuet, being thus farther accertayned of the matter, opened the whole to sir I. Barkeley, sir W. Blunt, and to M. Baynton: who all agreed, yet to make a farther triall thereof. And therefore deuised that Wolfe should procure Ludouicke to bring certaine Ueluet and other Silkes Page 1787 vnto sir H. Knyuets lodging, aswell for himselfe as for thother Gentlemen, which that after noone he did accomplysh, and brought Ludouicke vnto sir Henry, where also were thother gentlemen. After they had a while viewed the silkes, and had had some talke about the prices, Wolfe toke occasion againe to aske Ludouicke, if sir Henry were thembassadoure of whō he was to demaunde an answere of the letters sent by the Popes legate? to whom the Marchaunt aunswered no, it was not his seignorie, but it was a bishops, tearing him Reuerendissimo, whereby they easely perceiued whom he ment. Sir H. Knyuet hereupon somewhat dissembling y^e matter, entred into farther talke thereabouts, whereby Ludouicke opened asmuch in effect to them, as he had don before to Wolfe: but yet at last perceauing that asmel sir Henry, as also the other gentlemen did beholde him somewhat fixedly, he brake of his talke. Wherewith sir H. Knyuet, making as though he had noted nothing, did louingly dismisse him, praying him that when he had receiued the B. letters, he would also repaire to him for a packet to an Englyshe Gentleman of his acquaintance at Myllan: which he promised to do, and so departed againe. When sir Henry had thus made sufficiēt tryall of this matter, he forthwith (wrote his letters vnto the K. Maiestie, signifiyng vnto him the whole at large as he had learned. In the meane while, Ludouicke the next morning repaired vnto the B. of Winchesters lodging to demaunde an answere of those letters the Legate had sent vnto hym: but how he vsed him selfe, or whether he vttered the talke he had with sir H. Knyuet, and with Wolfe whom he supposed at the first to be the B. man, it is not certainly knowen. But the B. perceiuing that by mistaking one for an other (and in supposing Wolfe to be the B. seruauant) Ludouicke had vttered all his message from the Legate vnto Wolfe, and that thereby his practises would come to light, in great hasty rage caused Ludouicke to be stayed in his owne house, while in the meane time him self went to Grauuela one of themperors counsell, & so practised with him that Ludouick was secretly committed vnto prison in the custody of one of themperours Marshals, so as he could be no more talked withall, all the tyme of their aboad there. And then sending in great hast to sir H. Knyuet to come and speake with him (which he did) he fell into very hot speach with him, saying that he had poyson in his dysh, and that a knaue was suborned to be his destructiō: w^t many such like words. Sir Henry told him again, how he vnderstode it, and prayed him, that Ludouicke might be brought face to face to be examined in both their presentes. Which the B. would in no case agree vnto, affirming that he had so declared the case to Grauuela being indifferent (as he thought) to them both, that he woulde not meddell with Ludouicke nor speake with him: but that themperours counsell should examyne hym, & try what he was, for hym. To whom sir H. Knyuet againe very earnestly obiected, that he maruayled that the B. in matter, touching the K. Maiestie, their Maister, would vse the ayde or means of Grauuela, a forraine Princes minister, to make him priuie of their question. But stay & do what he would, he would neuer come to the speach of Ludouicke any more euer after. Whereupon there rose great and long controuersies betweene them (both wryting letters vnto the K. about that matter) vntill at last the K. Maiestie perceiuing his affayres otherwaies to slacke therby, wrote vnto them both, that they should lay all those things vnder foote and ioyned together in his seruice as before: which they did accordingly. But how soeuer this matter was afterwarde salued here with the K.

Maiestie, as eyther by the death of sir H. Knyuet (which I thinke was not very long after) or by other friendes the B. had here at home I know not: yet Wolfe, who within two monethes after died of a long cough of the Longues, vpon his death bed did agayne affyrme the premisses to be most true: and therefore in the presence of sir H. Knyuet, & diuerse other of his seruauits, he protested, that he had not inuented, sought, or procured this at Ludouickes handes, for any malice or displeasure borne to the B. but only for discharge of his fayth & duetie vnto the K. Maiesty, desiring that y^e same his protestation might be inserted in the end of his last will and testament: which was then presently done, & thereunto set his hand.

Now whether this was the matter that the K. moued so often M. Secretary Paget (being after L. Keeper) to keepe safe as sore matter agaynst the B. I know not: but yet it appears by some depositions of the Nobilitie and others, in the processe agaynst hym had in K. Edwardes dayes, that the K. Maiestie Henry .8. had this matter euer in his mynd: for in euery generall pardon that he graunted by Parliament after this practise, he did styll except all treasons committed beyond the seas, meaning thereby as it was supposed that the B. should not take any benefite by any general pardon, if at any time his Maiestie would call him to accompt: and therefore all thinges wel wayed, he had smal cause to vaunt of his great fauour he had of K. Henry his M. Howbeit, it seemeth he was brought into this fooles paradize, by the L. Paget: who (as he himsel^e reporteth in his depositions) in his messages from the K. to the sayd B. deluded hym, telling him muche otherwyse then the K. had spoken, & counsaling alwayes the K. hard speches agaynst him: which thing puffed vp this vaine-glorious Thraso not a litle. All whiche premises appeare more at large by the depositions of the Nobles & others, examined in y^e long processe against him in K. Edwardes raigne, as appeares in our first edition of actes and monumentes, from the .804. Page, vnto the ende of that processe, in that booke at large mentioned.

But whatsoever he was, seeing he is nowe gone, I referre him to his Iudge, to whom he shall stand or fall. As concerning his death and maner thereof, I woulde they which were present thereat, would testifie to vs what they saw. This we haue all to thinke, that his heath happened so opportunely, that England hath a mighty cause to geue thanks to y^e Lord therfore: not so much for the great hurt he had done in times past in peruerting his Princes, in bringing in the vi. Articles, in murderying Gods saintes,* in defacing Christes sincere Religion. &c. as also especially for that he had thought to haue brought to passe in murdring also our noble Queene that now is. For what soeuer daunger it was of death y^t she was in, it did (no doubt) proceede frō that bloody bishop, who was the cause therof. And if it be certain which we haue heard,* y^t her highnes being in the Tower, a writte came downe from certaine of the Counsell for her execution, it is out of controuersie, that wily Winchester was the onely Dedalus & framer of that ingine. Who (no doubt) in that one day had brought this whole Realme into wofull ruine, had not the Lordes moste gracious counsell,* through M. Bridges then the Lieutenaunt, comming in hast to the Queene, certified her of the matter, and preuented Architophels bloody deuises. For the which, thanks be to the same our Lord and sauour, in y^e congregacion of al English churches, Amen.

Of thinges vncertaine, I must speake vncertainely, for lacke of fuller information, or els peraduenture they be in the Realme that can say more then here I haue expressed. For as Boner, Story, Thornton, Harpsfielde, Dunning, with other, were occupied in puttyng the poore braunches of Gods Saintes to death: so this Bishoppe for his part bent all his deuises and had spent all his powder in assayling the roote, and in casting such a platforme (as he himselfe in wordes at his death is said to confesse) to buyld his popery vpō, as he thought should haue stand for euer and a day. But (as I sayd before) of vncertayne thinges I can speake but vncertainely. Wherefore as touching the maner and order of his death, how rich he died, what wordes he spake, what litle repentaunce he shewed, whether he died with his tongue swolne and out of his mouth, as did Thomas Arundell Archbishop of Caunterbury, or whether he stonke before he dyed, as Cardinall Wolsey did,* or whether he dyed in dispayre as Latomus and others did. &c. All this I referre either to their reportes of whom I hearde it, or leaue it to the knowledge of them whiche know it better.

Notwithstanding, here by the way touching the death of this foresayde B. I thought not to ouerpasse a certaine hearesay, which not long since came to me by information of a certaine worthy & credible Gentlewoman, & an other Gentleman of the same name and kinred: which Mistres Monday, beyng the wyfe of one M. Monday Secretary sometime to the old L. Thomas D. of Northfolke, a present witnes of this that is testified, thus openly reported in the house of a worshypfull Citisen, bearyng yet office in this Citie, in wordes & effect as foloweth. The same day, when as B. Ridley, and M. Latimer suffered at Oxford, being about the .19. day of October, there came to the house of Ste. Gardiner, the old D. of Norfolke with the foresaid M. Monday his secretary aboue named, reporter hereof. The old aged Duke, there wayting & tariyng for his dinner, the B. being not yet disposed to dine, deferred the time to .3. or .4. of the clocke at after noone. At length, about .4. of the clocke commeth his seruauant posting in all possible speede from Oxford, bringing intelligence to the B. what he had heard & seene: of whom the sayd B. diligently enquiring the truth of the matter, and hearing by his man, that fyre, most certainly was set vnto them, commeth out reioysing to y^e Duke: Now sayeth he, let vs go to dinner. Whereupon, they beyng set downe, meate immediately was brought, and the Bishop began merely to eat: But what folowed? The bloody Tyraunt had not eaten a few bitte•, but the soden stroke of God, his terrible hande fell Page 1788 vpon him in such sort, as immediatly he was taken from the table, and so brought to his bedde, where he continued the space of 15. dayes in such intollerable anguish and tormentes, that all that meane while, during those .15. dayes, he could not auoyde by order of vrine, or otherwyse, any thing that he receiued: whereby, his body being miserably inflamed within (who had inflamed so many good Martyrs before) was brought to a wretched end. And thereof no dout, as most like it is, came the thrustyng out of his tongue from his mouth so swolne and blacke, with the inflammation of his body. A spectacle worthy to be noted and beholden of all such bloody burnyng persecutors.

But to proceede farther in the sequell of our storie: I coulde name the man (but I abstayne from names) who being then present, and a great doer about the sayd Winchester, reported to vs concerning the sayde Byshop, that when Doctor Day B. of Chichester came to him, and began to comfort him with woordes of Gods promise, and with the free iustification in the bloud of Christe our Sauour, repeating the Scriptures to him. Winchester hearyng that, what my Lorde (quoth he) will you open that gappe now? then farewell altogether. To me and such other in my case you may speake it: but open this window vnto the people, then farewell altogether.

Moreouer, what D. Boner then saw in him, or what he heard of him, & what wordes passed betweene them about the tyme of his extremitie, betwixt him, and him be it. If Boner did there beholde any thing which might turne to his good example, I exhort him to take it, and to beware in time, as I pray God he may. Here I could bring in the friuolous Epitaph which was made of his deth, deuised of a Papist for a Popish Bysh. but I pretermit it, & in steede thereof I haue here •ferred certayne gatheringes out of his Sermons, wordes and writings, wherein may appeare first what an earnest and vehement enemie he was to the Pope if he woulde haue bene constant in him selfe: then how inconstantly he varied frō himselfe: and thirdly how he standing vpon a singularity of his owne wit, wauering also from other Papistes in certaine poyntes. In the gathering whereof albeit there be some paines, & tediousnes also in readyng: yet I thought not to pretermit the same vppon certayne considerations, namely for that so many yet to this day there be, whiche sticke so muche to Gardiners wit, learnyng, & religion, taking him for such a doughty pillar of the Popes church. To the intent therefore, that such as hetherto haue bene deceiued by him may no longer be abused therein if they will either credit his owne wordes, workes, Sermons, writings, disputations: or els will be iudged by his owne witnesses of his owne party producted, we haue here collected such manifest probations, which may notoriously declare how effectuously first he withstode the Popes supremacie: and likewyse afterward may declare manifest contrariety and repugnaunce of the said Gardiner, first with other writers, and lastly with him selfe: first beginning with his Sermon preached before Kyng Edward. The summe and effect of which Sermon briefly collected by M. Udal, here vnder foloweth to be seene.

MOst honorable audience, I purpose by the grace of God to declare some part of the Gospell that is accustomedly vsed to be read in the Church as this day.* And for because that without the speciall grace of God, neither I can speake any thyng to your edifying, nor ye receiue the same accordingly, I shal desire you all, that we may ioyntly pray altogether for the assistance of his grace. In which praier I commend to almighty God, your most excellent Maiestie our soueraigne Lord, King of Englande, France & Ireland, and of the Church of England & Ireland next and immediately vnder God here on earth the supreme heade, Queene Katherine Dowager,* my Lady Maries grace, my Lady Elizabethes grace, your Maiesties most deare sisters, my Lorde Protectours grace, with all others of your most honorable Coūsaile, the spiritualtie and temporaltie, and I shall desire you to commend vnto God with your praier, the soules departed vnto God in Christes faith, and among these most specially our late soueraigne Lorde King Henry the eighte, your maiesties most noble father. For these and for grace necessary I shall desire you to say a Pater noster, and so foorth.

The Gospell beginneth: Cum venisset Iesus in partes Caesareae Philippi &c. When Iesus was come into the parties of Cesaria, a citie that Phillippus builded, he asked his disciples and sayde: whome doe men say that the sonne of man is?* They sayde, some say that thou art Iohn the Baptist, some that thou art Elye, some that thou art Ieremie or some of the Prophets. He sayd to them: but whome say ye that I am? Then aunsweared Simon Peter and sayd, thou art Christe the sonne of the liuing God. &c. I cannot haue time I thinke to speake of the Gospell throughly, for other matters that I haue here nowe to say, but I shall note vnto you such things as I may, and first of the diuersitie of opinions concerning Christ, which were among the people variable: but among his, that is the disciples of Christes schoole, there was no varietie, they agreed altogether in one truth, and amonge th•m was no varietie. For when Peter had for all the rest, and in the name of all the rest made his answere that Christ was the sonne of God,* they all with one consent confessed that he had spoken the truthe. Yet these opinions of Christ that the people had of him, though they were sundry, yet were they honorable and not sclauderous: for to say that Christ was Elie and Iohn the Baptist, was honourable. For some thought him so to be, because he did frankely, sharply & openly rebuke vice. They that called him Ieremie, had also an honourable opinion of him, & thought him so to be because of his great learning which they perceyued in him, and marueiled where he had it. And they that sayde he was some of the Prophetes, had an honourable opinion of hym, and faouered him, and thought well of him.

But there was an other sort of people that spake euil of him, and sclaudered him, and railed on him, saying that hee was a glutton, and a drinker of wine, that he had a deuil in him, that he was a deceiuer of the people, that he was a Carpenters sonne as though he were the worse for his fathers crafte. But of these hee asked no question: for among these none agreed with the other. Wherin ye shall note that man of his owne power and strength can nothing do, nor nothing that good is, he can do of his owne inuention or deuise, but erreth and faileth when he is left to hys owne inuention, he erreth in his imagination. So proud is man, and so stoute of his owne courage,* that he deuiseeth nothing well when soeuer he is left to him selfe, without God, and then neuer do any such agree in any truth, but wander and erre in all that they doe. As men of lawe if they be asked their opinion in any poynt touching the Law,* ye shall not haue two of them agree in opinion: in any poynt touching the law, ye shal not haue two of them agree in opinion one with the other. If there be two or three of them asked their opinion in any matter, if they shoulde aunswere all one thing, they feare lest they should be supposed and thought to haue no learning. Therefore be they neuer so many of them, they will not agree in their aunsweres, but deuise ech man a sundry aunswere in any thing that they are asked.

The Philosophers that were not of Christes schole, erred euery one in their vayne opinions,* and no one of them agreeth with the other.

Yee men of simplicitie, though they meane well, yet being out of Christes schole, they agree not, but vary in their opinions:* As these simple people here spokē of, because they were not perfect disciples of Christes schole, they varied and agreed not in their opinion of Christ, though they thought well of him. Some sayde he was Iohn, some Elie, some Ieremie, but none made the right aunswere. He that answered here, was Symon the sonne of Ionas, and he sayde: Thou art Christe the sonne of the liuing God.

Where ye shall note the properties that were in Peter. He was called Symon▪ which is Obedience, and Ionas is a Doue,* so that in him that is of Christes schoole, must be these two properties, Obedience and Simplicitie. He must be humble and innocent as a Doue that will be of Christes schoole.* Pride is a let of Christes schoole, for as the wise man sayth: GOD resysteth the proude, and geueth grace vnto the humble and meeke. And according to the same,* dooth Christe in the Gospell say: O Father, I confesse vnto thee, that is: I laude and magnifie thee,* for that thou hast hidden these thinges from the wise, and hast opened them vnto the litle ones. Whereupon sayth S. Augustine, that the giftes of learnyng and knowledge of sciences, are no let to Christes schole, but a furtheraunce therevnto if they be well applied and vsed as they ought to be: but he that is proude, and feedeth him selfe with his owne conceite and opinion of him selfe and abuseth the giftes of God,* applying his learning and knowledge, to the satisfying and folowyng of his owne fantasie, is no right Disciple of Christ, but falleth into errour. Dicentes se sapientes esse, stulti facti sunt: When they sayd and affirmed them selues to be wise, they were made fooles.

The Philosophers had euery one a secte of his owne, and had many gay sentences for the commendation of their opinons, and euery man thought his owne opinion to be best: but because they applyed all to their owne pride and glory, and not to the honour of God, nor humbled them selues as they ought to haue done, but folowed their owne fansie, they erred and fell out of the way, and were not of Christes schoole: and all that haue gone out of Christes schoole,* pride hath brought them out of it, and such as haue not entred, haue kept them selues out of it with pride likewyse: therefore all suche as wylbe scholers of Christes schoole and discipline, must be humble and meeke: otherwyse, Dicentes se sapientes esse stulti facti sunt.

He that can not learne this lesson of Peter, and humbly Page 1789 confesse with Peter that Christe is the sonne of the lyuing God, is no scholer of Christes schole, be he otherwyse neuer so well learned, neuer so well seene in other sciences. But now concernyng the aunswere of Peter, Mattheue here in this place sayth: he aunswared: Tu es Christus filius Dei viui. S. Luke sayth, he aunswared: Tu es Christus Dei. And S. Marke sayth, he aunswared: Tu es Christus. But in all that is no varietie: for to say Christus filius Dei viui, and to say Christus Dei, and to say Christus, is in effect all one, and no diuersitie in it, for Christus alone is the whole, and he that confesseth throughly Christe, is throughly a Christian man, and doth therein confesse him to be the Lorde and Sauour of the worlde. But nowe we must consyder what Christ is. Christ was sent to be our Messias, our Sauour: he was sent to be our Byshop and also our Sacrifice, he was sent from the Trinitie to be our Mediatour betwene God and vs, and to reconcile ve to the fauour of God the Father: he was the Byshop that offered for our sinnes, and the Sacrifice that was offred, and as he is our Byshop, so is he our meane to pacifie God for vs,* for that was the office of a Byshop to sacrifice for the sinnes of the people, and to make intercession for the people, and as he was our Sacrifice, so was he our reconciliation to God agayne.

But we must confesse and beleeeue hym throughly I say: for as he was our Byshoppe then,* so is it hee that still keepeth vs in fauoure with GOD, and lyke as his Sacrifice then made was sufficient for vs to delyuer vs from our sinnes and to bryng vs in fauour with GOD, so to continue vs in the same fauoure of GOD,* he ordeyned a perpetuall remembraunce of hym selfe, he ordeyned hym selfe for a memory of hym selfe at his last Supper when he instituted the Sacrament of the Aulter, not for an other Redemption, as though the worlde needed a new Redemption from sinne, but that we myght throughly remember his most holy Passion he instituted this Sacrament by his most holy worde, saying: This is my body, which worde, is sufficient to proue the Sacrament, and maketh sufficiently for the substaunce thereof.* And this dayly Sacrifice he instituted to be continued amongst Christian men, not for neede of an other Redemption or Satisfaction for the sinnes of the worlde, for that was sufficiently perfourmed by his Sacrifice of his body and bloud done vppon the Crosse: neyther that he is nowe our Byshoppe for neede of any further Sacrifice to be made for sinne, but to * continue vs in the remembraunce of his Passion suffered for vs, to make vs strong in beleeuynge the fruite of his Passion, to make vs diligent in thanksgeuyng for the benefite of his Passion, to establyshe our fayth, and to make it strong in acknowledgyng the efficacie of his death and Passion suffered for vs. And this is the true vnderstandyng of the Masse, not for an other Redemption, but that we may be strong in beleeuynge the benefite of Christes death and bloud shedding for vs vppon the Crosse. And this it is that wee must beleue of Christ and beleue it throughly, and therefore by your pacience, as Peter made his confession, so wyl I make confession, wherein by your Maiesties leaue and sufferance. I will playnly declare what I thinke of the state of the Church of Englande at this day,* how I like it, and what I thinke of it.

Where I sayd of the Masse, that it was a Sacrifice ordeyned to make vs the more strong in the fayth and remembraunce of Christes Passion, and for commendying vnto GOD the soules of such as be dead in Christe (for these two thynges are the speciall causes why the Masse was instituted) the Parliament very well ordeyned Masse to be kept,* and because we shoulde be the more strong in the fayth and deuotion towards GOD, it was well done of the Parliament, for mouyng the people more and more to deuotion, to ordeyne that the Sacrament shoulde bee receiued in both kindes.* Therefore I say that the Acte of Parliament for receiuing of the Sacrament of the Alter in both kindes, was well made.

I say also that the Proclamation whiche was made that no man should vnreuerently speak of the Sacrament, or otherwise speake of it then Scripture teacheth them, was well made. For this proclamation stoppeth the mouthes of all suche as will vnreuerently speake of the Sacrament: for in Scripture is there nothing to be found that maketh any thing agayng the Sacrament, but all maketh with it. Wherefore if they were the children of obedience, they would not vse any vnreuerent talke agaynst the Sacrament, nor blaspheme the holy Sacrament. For no worde of the Scripture maketh any thing agaynst it.

*But here it may be sayde vnto mee: Why Syr, is this your opinion? It is good you speake playnelye in this matter, and halt nothyng, but declare your mynde playnelye without any coulouryng or couert speakyng. The Acte for the dissoluyng and suppressing of the Chauntries seemeth to make agaynst the Masse, howe lyke you that Acte? What say you of it? or what woulde you say of it, if you were alone? I will speake what I thynke of it, I wyll vse no coulourable or couert woordes, I wyll not vse a deuised speeche for a tyme, and afterwarde * goe from it agayne. If Chauntries were abused by applying the Masse for the satisfaction of sinne, or to bryng men to heauen, or to take away sinne, or to make men of wicked iust, I lyke the Acte well, and they myght well be desolued, for the Masse was not instituted for any suche purpose: yet neuerthesse for them that were in them (I spake now, as in the cause of the poore) it were well done that they were prouided of lyuinges.* The Acte doth graciously prouide for them duryng thier lyues, and I doubte not but that your Maiestie and the Lordes of your most honorable Counsell haue willed and taken order, that they should be well looked vnto, but yet howe they shall be vsed at the handes of vnder officers, God knoweth, full hardly, I feare. But as for the Chauntries them selues, if there were any suche * abuse in them concerning the Masse, it is no matter if they be taken away.

Kyng Henry the eyght, a noble and wyse Prince, not without a great payne mayntained the Masse, and yet in his doctrine it was confessed that Masses of Scala Coeli were not to be vsed ne allowed, because they dyd peruert the right vse of and institution of the Masse. For when men adde vnto the Masse an opinion of satisfaction, or of a newe redemption, then doe they put it to an other vse then it was ordeyned for. I that allow Masse so well, and I that allowe praying for the dead (as in deede the dead are of Christian charitie to bee prayed for) yet can agree with the Realme in that matter of putting downe Chauntries.

But yet ye woulde say vnto me: there be fewer Masses by puttyng away the Chauntries. So were there when Abbeyes were dissolved: so be there when ye vnite many Churches in one. But this is no iniury nor preiudice to the Masse, it consisteth not in the number nor in the multitude, but in the thing it selfe, so that the decay of the Masse by takyng away of the Chauntries, is aunswereed by the Abbeyes. But yet I woulde haue it considered for the persons that are in thē, I speake of the poore mens liuinges.

I haue nowe declared what I thinke of the Acte of Parliament made for the receyuing of the Sacrament of the body and bloud of our Sauour Iesus Christe in both kyndes.* Ye haue my mynde and opinion concernyng Proclamation that came foorth for the same Acte, and I haue shewed my mynde therein euen playnely as I thinke, and I haue euer beene agreeable to this poynt, I haue often tymes reasoned in it, I haue spoken and also written in it, both beyond the Seas and on this side the Seas: my bookes be abroade, which I cannot vnwrite agayne. I was euer of this opinion, that it myght be receiued in both kyndes, and it was a constitution prouinciall scarce two hundred yere agoe, made by Peckam then Archbyshoppe of Canterburie,* that it shoulde be receiued in both kyndes, at least wyse in ecclesijs maioribus, that is, in the greater Churches, for in the smaller Churches it was not thought to be so expedient. Thus haue I euer thought of this matter: I haue neuer bene of other mynde, nor I haue not changed my conscience, but I haue obeyed & followed the order of the Realme, and I pray you to obey orders as I haue obeyed, that we may all be the chyl dren of obedience.

Nowe I wyll returne to the Text. When Symon had aunswereed: Tu es Christus filius Dei viui. Thou art Christ the sonne of the Lyuing GOD. Then Christe sayde vnto hym: Blessed art thou Symon Boriona, for fleshe and bloud haue not opened that vnto thee, but my Father whiche is Heauen, and I say vnto thee that thou art Peter, and vppon this rocke will I buylde my Church, and the gates of Hell shall not preuayle agaynst it. Blessed art thou (sayde hee) for fleshe and bloud haue not opened that vnto thee. For otherwyse in Iohn, Andrewe tolde of Christe and sayd: I haue founde the Messias which is Christe.* But that is not enough. He that shall confesse Christe, must haue an inwarde teachyng, and must bee spiritually taught by the Father of Heauen, for Andrewes confession was nothyng but a carnall confession, and suche a one as any other might haue made by naturall reason: but the confession of Peter was aboue reason of man, for Christ was there a very man, and Peters eyes told him that he was a man and nothing els, but he was inwardly taught by the Father of heauen, and had a secrete knowledge geuen him from heauen, not by flesh and bloud, that is to say, by mans reason, but inwardly by the Father of heauen: and seeyng this was aboue reason, it is a merueylous thing that reason shoulde be vsed to impugne fayth,* whiche is not within the precinct of carnall men, and such as vse grosse reason.

But Peter had an other lesson inwardly taught him, and because he could his lesson, Christ gaue him a new name: for Petra is a stone, a new name of a Christian man,* for vppon this confession of thy fayth, here I will buyld my Church, that is, I wyll stablysh all those which I entend to gather vnto thee: Et Daemones non preualebunt aduersus eam, that is: and the Deuils shall not preuayle agaynst it: for he that with a good hart, and sure fayth confesseth this, he is sure from all euill: this world nor Sathan can do him no harme.

But now for a further declaration, it is a meruelous thing, that vppon these woordes the Byshoppe of Rome should founde his supremacie, for whether it be super Petram, or Petrum, all is one matter, it maketh nothyng at all for the purpose to make a foundation of any such supremacie. For otherwyse when Page 1790 Peter spake carnallye to Christe (as in the same Chapter a lytle folowyng) Sathan was his name, where Christe sayde: Go after me Sathan, so that the name of Peter is no foundation for the supremacie,* but as it is sayde in Scripture: Fundati e•tes super fundamentum Apostolorum & Prophetarum: that is, by participation (for godly participation geueth names of things) he myght be called the head of the Church, as the head of the Riuer is called the head, because he was the fyrst that made this confession of Christe, whiche is not an Argument for dignitie, but for the qualitie that was in the man. For the fyrst man is not euermore the best,. The Headman of a Queste is not alwayes the best man in the Queste, but is chosen to bee the Headman for some other qualitie that is in hym. Vertue may allure men, so that the inferiour person in dignitie may be the better in place, as the Kyng sometime chuseth a meane man to be of his Counsayle of whom he hath a good opinion, yet is the Kyng the Kyng styll. And in some case the Kyng of Englande might sende to Rome, and if the Bishoppe of Rome were a man of suche wisdom, vertue, and learnyng, that he were able in matters of controuersie concerning Religion, to set a vnitie in the Church of Englande, the Kyng myght well enough sende vnto him for his Counsayle and helpe, and yet shoulde not in so doying, geue the Byshoppe of Rome any superioritie ouer the Kyng. For if a Kyng be sicke, he will haue the best Phisition, if he haue warre, he will haue the best Captaine, and yet are not those the superiours but the inferiours.

A Scholemaster is a subiect, a Phisition is a subiect, a Captaine is a subiect, Counsellours are subiectes, yet do these order and direct the Kyng.* Wherefore leauing the Bishop of Rome, this I say to declare of what opinion I am of. I do not now speake what I could say. I haue spokē beyond the Seas, I haue writtē, my bookes be abroad. But this is not the place here: I say that this place maketh nothing for the Bishop of Rome, but for Christe only, for none can put Aliud fundamentum nisi id quod positum est, qui est Christus Iesus.

But now to go forth declaring my mynde, in my tyme hath come many alterations. Fyrst a great alteration it was to renounce the Byshop of Romes authoritie,* and I was one that stode in it. A great alteration it was that Abbayes were dissolved. A great alteration it was that Images were pulled downe: and to all these did I condescende, and yet I haue beene counted a mayntainer of superstition, and haue beene called a Maister of Ceremonies and of outwarde thynges, and I haue beene noted to take that Religion which consisteth in outwarde thinges, as though he were a right Christian that fulfylled the outwarde Ceremonies,* whereof I promised to declare my conscience, and so will I, and howe I haue esteemed ceremonies, and that I haue neuer bene of other opinion then I am concerning ceremonies, and mine opinion I haue gathered of Augustine, and Ierome, ancient fathers and Doctours of the Church.

Ceremonies serue to mooue menne to serue GOD, and as longe as they bee vsed for that purpose,* they maye bee well vsed in the Church: but when manne maketh himselfe seruante to them, and not them to serue hym, then bee oure Ceremonies broughte to an abuse. If by ouer muche familiaritie of them, menne abuse them, they doe euill. For we must not serue creatures, but Deo. Wee hadde Monkerie, Nunnerie, Frierie of a wonderous nnumber, muche varietie of garmentes, varietie of deuises in dwelling,* manye sondrye orders and fashions in moouing of the body. These things were first ordained to admonishe them to their duetie to GOD, to labour for the necessitie of the poore, and to spare from their owne bellies to the poore, and therefore was their fare ordained and prepared. And because they abused these thynges,* and sette them in an hygher place then they ought to doe, not taking monition thereby, the better to serue God, but esteeming perfection to consist in them, they were dissolued, theyr houses and garmentes were taken away.

But one thing king Henrie woulde not take away, that was the vowe of chastitie.* The vowe of obedience hee conuerted to hym selfe: the vowe of chastitie he willeth still to remaine with them.

We had many Images whereto Pilgrimages were done, and many tombes that menne vsed to visite, by reason whereof they fell in a fansie of Idolatry and superstition,* aboue the things that they might haue bene taken for, and because they hadde not the vse that they were ordained for, they were left. When men put the Images in a higher place then they serued for: thē were they taken cleane away: as geue a childe a gaye booke to learne vppon, and then if he gase vppon the gorgeousnesse of hys booke, and learne not his lesson, according to the intent that that boke was geuen for, the booke is taken away from him agayne. So the Images, when menne deuised and fell to haue them in hygher place and estimation then they were first sette vp in the Church for, then they mighte be taken away: and I was neuer of other minde, nor neuer had other opinion of them. Diuers things there be in the Church which be in the libertie of the ruler to order as he seeth cause, and he that is ruler, may either let them stande, or els may cause them to be taken away.

There be two manner of reformations. We haue had of both sortes. There be things in the Church,* the which if they be abused, may not be taken away. As for baptisme, if it be abused, there may not an other thyng be putte in the place of it, but the thing must be reformed and broughte to the righte vse againe. Also preaching, if it be abused, may not be taken awaye, but must be reformed and broughte to the righte vse: but there be other thynges vsed in the Church, in which the rulers haue libertie, either to reforme them or to take them awaye. And because it was an easier way to take them away, then to bryng them to the right vse that they were ordained for, they were all cleane taken awaye, and so they might be. Yea Sir will yee saye, but yee haue maintained and defended them, and haue preached against such persones as despised them. It is truthe, I haue preached againste the despisers of them, and haue sayd, that Images might be suffered and vsed in the Church as laye mennes bookes, yet I neuer otherwise defended them, but to be vsed for suche purpose as they were first sette vppe in the Church for, but now that menne be waxed wanton, they are cleane taken away, wherein our religion is no more touched, then when bookes were taken awaye for abusing of them.

There was an order taken for bookes not to be vsed, wherein some might haue sayde, the bookes are good, and I know how to vse them, I maye therefore vse them well ynough. I will therefore vse them thoughe they be forbidden: but if thou haue anye charitie, thou oughtest to be contented, rather to haue them cleane taken away, then to declare thy selfe to haue an other opinion then thou oughtest to haue.

As touching ceremonies, I esteeme them all as Paule esteemeth them, things indifferent, where he sayth: Regnum Dei non esca & potus. So of Ceremonies. Neuerthelesse wee haue time, place, and number, as a certaine number of Psalmes to be sayde at times, whiche maye be vsed without superstition, but these thinges must serue vs, and not wee serue them. Yet if an order be sette in them by suche as haue power, we must follow it, and we must obey the Rulers that appoynt such time, place, and number to be kept. Yee maye not saye, if the time will serue mee, then I will come an houre after. No Syr, yee must keepe thys time and thys houre, because it is so appoynted by the rulers, not for the thinges, but for the order that is sette. I haue bene euer of thys opinion.

Wee had palmes and candels taken awaye, which things may indifferentlye haue either of the two reformations aboue sayde.* When they were in place, they shoulde haue putte menne in remembraunce of their duetie and deuotion towards God, but because they were abused, they were and might be taken away. But the religion of Christe is not in these exercises, and therfore in takyng away of them, the Religion of Christe is nothyng touched nor hindered.* But men must in suche thynges be conformable, not for the ceremonie, but for obedience sake. Saint Paule sayth, that we shoulde rebuke euerye brother that walketh inordinately. I haue tolde you myne opinion, and my conscience telleth mee that I haue spoken playnely, that ye may knowe what I am, and that ye maye not bee deceyued in mee, nor be sclaudered in me, nor make no further search to knowe my hart.

I like well the communion because it prouoketh men more and more to deuotion. I like well the proclamation,* because it stoppeth the mouthes of all such as vnreuerently speake or raile agaynst the Sacrament. I lyke well the rest of the Kynges Maiesties proceedinges concerning the Sacrament I haue now told you what I lyke But shall I speake nothing of that I mislyke?* ye will then say I speake not playnely. I will therefore shew my conscience playnely.

I mislyke that Preachers whiche preache by the Kynges lycence, and those Readers whiche by the Kynges permission and suffraunce doe reade open lectures, doe openlye and blasphemously talke agaynst the Masse, and agaynst the Sacrament. And to whom may I lyken suche Readers and Preachers? I may lyken them vnto Postes, for the Prouerbe sayth, that Postes do beare trueth in their letters and lyes in their mouthes: and so doe they, and to speake so agaynst the Sacramente, it is the most marueylous matter that euer I sawe or heard of. I woulde wysht therfore that there were a stay and an order in this behalfe, & that there myght be but one order or rule, for as the Poet sayth (I may vse the verse of a Poet well ynough, for so doth Paul of the great Poet, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉). And let no man of his owne head begin mattars, nor goe before the king. They call it going before the Kyng, and such make them selues Kynges. Well, what mislyketh me els?

It mislyketh mee that Priestes and men that vowed chastity,* shoulde openly marry and auow it openly: whiche is a thyng that since the beginnyng of the Church hath not beene seene in any tyme, that men that haue beene admitted to any ecclesiasticall administration shoulde marry. We reade of married Priestes, that is to say: of married men chosen to bee Priestes and Ministers in the Church. And in Epiphanius, we reade, Page 1791 that some suche for necessitie were wincked at. But that menne being Priestes all ready shoulde marrye, was neuer yet seene in Christes Church from the beginning of the Apostles tyme. I haue wrytten in it, and studied for it, and the verye same places that are therein alleadged to maintaine the marriage of Priestes, being diligently read,* shall plainly confound them that maintaine to marrye youre Priestes, or at the farthest, wythin two lines after.

Thus haue I shewed my opinion in order, proceedynge from the inferiours, and in order proceedinge from the higher powers. And thus I haue (as I trust) plainly declared my selfe, without anye coueringe or counterfaitinge. And I beseeche youre moste excellent Maiestie to esteeme and take me as I am, and not to be sclaundered in mee, for I haue tolde you the plaine truthe as it is, and I haue opened my conscience vnto you. I haue not played the Poste with you, to carie truthe in my letters, and lyes in my mouthe: for I woulde not for all the worlde make a lye in this place: but I haue disclosed the plaine truth as it lyeth in my minde. And thus I commit your most excellent Maiestie and all your moste honourable Councillours, with the rest of the deuout audience here present, vnto God. To whom be al honour, lande, and glory, world without ende.

*Thus hauing comprised the summe and chief purpose of his Sermon, with other suche matter aboue Storyed, wherein may appeare the double faced doings of this bishop in matters of Religion: nowe for the more fortification of that which hath bene sayde, if any shall deny this foresayd Sermon, or any parte thereof to be true, to confirme therefore the same, wee will heere adioyne certaine brieue notes and specialties in maner of a summarie table, collected as well oute of the testimonies and depositions of his owne frendes and seruauntes, and other whyche were sworne truely to declare their knowledge in thys behalfe, as also out of his owne wrytings and woorkes agreeing with the same. In all which foresayd allegations it may remaine notorious and famous to all men, howe, in what poyntes, and how farre the sayd Bishop of Winchester agreed with the reformation of religion receiued, not onely in King Henries, but also in King Edwardes dayes.

And because it will be long, and a double labor to repeate all the woordes and testimoniall sayings of euerye witnes particularly, the same being expressed sufficientlye in oure firste impression before, it shall therefore suffice by quotations briefly to assigne the place to the reader, where he may finde all those poyntes of reformation, wherunto the sayd Bishop Gardiner fully agreed with the doctrine now receiued, and first in withstanding the Popes supremacie, as is heere vnder noted.

¶The Popes supremacie impugned by Byshop Gardiner.

First, as touching the confession & iudgement of Steuen Gardiner againste the supremacie of the B. of Rome,* reade in hys booke De vera obedientia. fol. 6.

Item, concerning the disputations and desensions of Bishop Gardiner at Louane against the Popes supremacie, reade in our first impression, pag. 802. also in this present Volume.

Item, howe the sayde Byshop Gardiner in his Sermones and preachinges, as where hee expoundeth the place [Tu es Petrus] nothing at all to make for the authoritie of the Romish Byshop, maruelling howe the Pope coulde vsurpe so much to take vppe that place to builde vppon,* when Christe had taken it vp before to builde his Church, reade in the olde booke, pag. 845. col. 1. pag. 647. col. 1. pag. 846. col. 1. and the depositions of Doct. Redman, pag. 853. col. 1.

Item, howe the confession of Peter was the confession of all the Apostles, like as the blessing geuē to Peter pertained as wel to all the Apostles as to Peter, read ibidem, pag 847. col. 1.

Item, that the place: Pasce oues meas, was not special to Peter alone, but generall to all the Apostles. Also that the Greeke Church did neuer receaue the sayde Bishop of Rome for their vniuersall heade, reade in the same booke, pag. 847. col. 1. pag. 836. col. 2.

Item, that the authoritie of the Bishop of Rome, was not receiued of the most part of Christen Princes, read the depositions of sir Thomas Smith, pag. 827. col. 2.

Item, howe the sayde Bishop Gardiner would not graunt, that the sayde authoritie was receiued generally. Ibidem, pag. 827. col. 2.

Item, that the Church was builded vpon Christes faithe, and not vpon Peter, reade the depositions of Robert Willanton, pag. 836. col. 2.

And thoughe Peter was called Princeps Apostolorum, that was no thing els,* but like as it is in an inquest, where the foreman or headman is not so called because he is best or chiefest of that companie, but because he speaketh first. Read in the depositions of M. Basset, pag. 850. col. 2. pag. 836. col. 2.

Item, when the keyes were giuen, they were giuen generally to all the Apostles. Reade the depositions of Robert Wilianon, pag. 836. col. 2.

Item, how the sayd Bishop taketh away all suche Scriptures which are thought to serue for the Popes supremacie, as Super hanc Petram: Pasce oues meas: Princeps Apostolorum. &c. prouing that they serue nothing for his authoritie, reade likewise in the same booke in the depositions of M. Basset his owne seruant, pag. 850. col. 2.

Item, howe the sayde Bishop in his booke De vera obedientia, did not onely wryte againste the Popes supremacie, but also did defende the same at Louane, pag. 802. And moreouer, in hys Sermons did alledge and preach the same. Pag. 774. col. 2 and that also Uehemently, page. 850. col. 2. Lin. 50. Pithely. pag. 846. col. 1. Lin 31.

Earnestly, pag. 143. col. 1. Lin. 75.*

Uery earnestly, pag. 843. col. 1. Lin. 44.

Uery forwardly, pag. 827. col. 2. Lin. 82.

And not only did so vehemently, pythely, earnestly, and forwardly preach him selfe agaynst the Popes supremacie, but also did cause M. White then Scholemaster, after Byshop of Wint. to make certayne verses extolling the kinges supremacie agaynst the vsurped power of the Pope, encouraging also his scholers to do the like. Read the depositions of Iohn White Scholemaister of Winchester, pag. 845. col. 2.

Item, how he, for the space of .14. yeares together, preached agaynst the Popes supremacie in diuers Sermons, and especially in one Sermon before king Henry, read the depositions of Iohn Potinger, pag. 844. col. 1. Lin. 1.

¶Places noted wherein B. Gardiner impugned Ceremonies, Monkerie, Images, Chauntries. &c.

Item, for ceremonies and Images which were abused,* to be taken away by publicke authoritie, he did well allow it, as a child to haue his booke taken from him when he abused it, or deliteth onely in the golden couer. Read in the foresayd old booke the depositions of Christopher Malton, pag. 846. col. 2. pag. 849. col. 2. pag. 841. col. 1.

Item, the dissoluing of Monasteries and religious houses he alloweth, and graunteth that they were iustly suppressed. Read the depositions of D. Weston, pag. 845. col. 1. pag. 837. col. 1. pag. 851. col. 1.

Concernyng Images being by King Edwardes Iniunctions abolished,* how the sayd Byshop exhorted the people in his Sermons to be contented therewith, read the depositions of W. Lorkyng, pag. 840. col. 1.

Monkes and Friers he calleth flatteryng knaues.* Read the depositions of Syr Thomas Smith, pag. 827. col. 2.

Friers he neuer liked in all his lyfe. pag. 827. col. 2. Monkes he counted but belly Gods. Ibid. pag. 827. col. 2.

The going about of S. Nicholas, S. Katherine, and S. Clement, he affirmeth to be childrens toyes. Ibid. pag. 827. col. 2.

The takyng away or transposing of Chauntrey Obites hee referreth to the arbitrement of the politicke rules, grauntyng that if they dyd dissolue them it myght well bee so doone. Read the depositions of M. Basset his owne seruaunt, pag. 850. col. 2.

Item, he wisheth them to be committed to a better vse, & that Monasteries were iustly taken away. Read the depositions of George Bullocke, pag. 847. col. 1.

The obseruyng of dayes, houres, nomber, tyme, and place,* if they be orderly and publikely commaunded by the rulers, it is but to set the Church in an outward and publicke order: but if a man inwardly and priuately be addicted to the same thinkyng his prayer otherwyse not auayleable but by obseruing thereof, it is an errour. Read the depositions of Doct. Redman, pag. 853. col. 2. pag. 854.

The Communion set out by K. Edwarde he lyketh well. Ibid. pag. 853. col. 2. pag. 854.

The booke of common Seruice he was content both to keepe him selfe, and cause it to be kept of others. Read the depositions of the Duke of Somerset, pag. 818. col. 2.

For the Homilies, he exhorted the people in his preaching to come to the Church to heare them. Read the depositions of M. Pottinger his one seruaunt, pag. 143. col. 1.

In summe, to all Iniunctions, Statutes, and Proclamations set foorth by the Kyng and superiour powers, hee yeelded and graunted. Read in the depositions of George Bullocke, pag. 847. col. 2.

Item, Cardinall Poole commyng to the Frenche Kyng to styrre hym vp agaynst Englande, Wint. caused hym to be expelled out of Fraunce. Witnes Cuth. Byshop of Duresme, pag 823. col. 2.

Item, the sayde Winchester sworne agaynst the Pope by expresse clauses in his proxie. Read in the deposition of Iohn Coke Regist. pag. 860. col. 1. Lin. 13.

Nowe (gentle Reader) lay these wrytynges, preachynges, Page 1792 and doyns of this Bishop, in the dayes of K. Henry and King Edward, with his doyns in Queene Maries tyme, and thou shalt see how variable he was, how inconstant and contrary to hymselfe, howe periured and false,* and farre differyng from that whiche hee was reported to bee in a certayne Englishe booke set out in Queene Maries tyme, which sayeth that there were iij. onely in England, whose conscience had bene neuer destained in Religion, of whom he falsly sayth, the foresayd Bishoppe of Winchester was one.

Although B. Gardiner in grauntyng to these poynts of religion (as ye haue heard) and other some agayne denying, coulde not therfore deserue the name and fame of a perfect christian, yet notwithstanding if he had continued in this iudgement still, & bene constant in hymselfe, he myght haue won more commendation both with God and man. But as soone as the tyme began to alter, he likewyse altering with the tyme, was so far changed from that he seemed, that neither he agreed with other Papists,* nor yet with hymselfe, as Doct. Ridley in certayne treatises hath noted well of hym: wherein as in a glasse may be seene the manifest contrarietie and repugnance in hym, not only from the truth of Gods blessed worde, but also how the sayd Bishop standyng so much in a singularitie by hymselfe, neither agreeth wyth other hys fellow writers of his own faction, nor yet fully accordeth with hymselfe in certain cases of the sacrament, as the foresayd D. Ridley in examinyng his wo•ds and works, hath well set out in this Table here vnder ensuyng.

¶Certaine matters wherein St. Gardiner B. of Wint. varieth from other of the Papists, touching the Sacrament of the Lordes Supper.

[1] OTher Catholikes say, that the body of Christ is made of bread.*Thomas vult ex pane, non de pane, parte tertia, q. 75. art. 4 Winch. sayth, that the body of Christ is not made of y• matter of bread, nor neuer was so taught, but is made present of bread, pag. 89. lin. 8. p. 228. l. 44.

*Confutation of Winch. agaynst Cranmer.

Winchester sayeth, that Christ called bread his body, when he sayd: This is my body, p. 292. lin. 19. And in the deuils Sophistry, fol. 27. Other say contrary. And Smith fol. 53. Marc. Anton. obiect. 13.14.20.

Winch. saith, that bread is my body, is as much to say, as bread is made my body. And so he taketh (est) for (fit) p. 333. l. 25. p. 120. l. 23.28.30. Confutation. Other say that (est) is taken there substantiue, that is to say, only for is, and not for is made. Marc. Anton. fol. 171. fac. 2.

Wint. sayth that Christ is present in the sacrament carnally and corporally, after the same signification that he is in heauen, p. 161. l. 6. Confutation.

*Wint. sayth also, that when we speake of Christes bodye, wee must vnderstand a true body, which hath both forme and quantitie, p. 81. l. 5. Marc. Ant. object. 77. Smith saith that Christs body in the sacrament hath not his properforme & quantitie, fol. 106. And the contrary he sayth, [2] fol. 105. Chedsey in disputatione cum Petro Mart. fol. 41. fac. 2.

[3] Wint. sayth: we beleue simply that Christes body is [4] naturally and corporally in the sacrament without drawing away his accidēces, or adding, pag. 367. lin. 41. Smith sayth: we say that Christes body is in the Sacrament, agaynst nature, with all his qualities and accidences, fol. 105.

Wint. sayeth: that Gods workes be all seemelinsse [5] without confusion, although hee cannot locally distinct Christes hed from his feete, nor his legs from his armes, p. 70. l. 5.13.14. p. 69. l. 34. Confutation. Other say y^t Christes hed and feete, and other partes, be not in deede locally distinct in the sacrament, but be so confounded, that where so euer one is, there be all the rest, tert. parte sum q 76. art. 3. Innoc. ter. lib. 48.

[6] Wint. sayth: that Christes body is in the Sacrament sensibly, naturally, carnally, and corporally, p. 181. l. 13.22. &c. Confutation. Other say contrary, Smith, fol. 39.

[7] Other say that Christs feete in the Sacrament be there where hys hed is. Wint. sayth, that whosoeuer sayeth so, may be called mad, p. 70. l. 13.14. Confutation.

[8] Other say, that corporall Christ goeth into the mouth or stomacke, and no farther, Bonauentura, Hugo, Inno. 13. lib. 4. cap. 15. Glos. de consecrat dist. 2. cap. tribus, & in glos. non iste. Thom. parte. 3. quest. 80. art. 3. Tamdiu manet dum est in digestionē. Smith, fol. 64. He saith contrary, p. 59. l. 30. and p. 60. l. 3.8.12. Confutation.

[9] Wint. saith, that Christ dwelleth corporally in him that receiueth the sacrament worthily, so long as he remaineth a member of Christ, pag. 64. l. 22. Confutation. Other say contrary, Smith, fol. 64. &c. as before in the 7. lin. aboue.

Wint. sayth, that no creature can eat the body of Christ [10] but only man, p. 75. l. 24. Confutation. Other say cleane contrary, Thomas part. 3. q. 8. art. 3. hoc derogat [inquit] veritati corporis Christi. Perin. in hys Sermon of the Sacrament. What inconuenience is it though the im•assible body lye in the mouth or mawe of the beast? &c. M. Sententiarū Qui dicit corpus Christi non posse a mure manducari aut a bruto, is condemned.

Wint. sayth, that an vnrepentant sinner receiuyng the [11] Sacrament,* hath not Christes body nor spirit within him p. 256. l. 18.25.26. Smith sayth that he hath Christes body and spirit within hym, fol. 136.

Wint. sayeth: that of the figure it may not be sayd: Adore it, worship it: and that is not to be adored which the [12] bodily eye seeth,* p. 202. l. 38. p. 272. l. 6. Marc. Ant. fol. 175. fac. 2. Docetur populus non adorare quod vident oculis corporis. Smith sayth contrary, fol. 145. fa. 2.

Wint. sayth, that reason will agree with the doctrine [13] of Transubstantiation well enough,* p. 30. l. 12. Confutation. Smith sayth that Transubstantiation is against reason, and naturall operation, fol. 60.

Other say that wormes in the sacrament be gendred of accidentes. Ex speciebus Sacramentalibus generanturvermes. [14] Tho. par. q 76. art. 5. Wint. sayth: that they bee wrong borne in hand to say so, p. 400. l. 1. Confutation.

Wint. sayth: that the accidentes of bread and wine, do [15] mould, sower, and waxe vineger, p. 300. l. 24. and p. 400. l. 6. Confutation. & Marc. Ant object. 73. But he answereth so confusely, that the Reader can not vnderstand hym, be he neuer so attentue. Smith sayeth: thus I say, that the consecrated wyne turneth not into vineger, not the consecrated bread mouldeth, nor engendreth wormes, nor is burned, nor receyueth into it any poison, as long as Christes body and bloud are vnder the formes of them: which do abide there so long as the naturall qualities & properties of bread & wine tary there, in their naturall disposition & condition, and the bread & wyne myght be naturally there, if they had not bene changed into Christes body and bloud, and also as long as the hoste and consecrated wyne are apt to be receiued of man, & no longer, but go & depart thence by Gods power as it pleaseth hym. & then a new substance is made of god, which turneth into vineger, engendreth wormes, mouldeth, is burned, feedeth Rats and Mice, receyueth poyson, &c. fol. 64. and fol. 105.

Wint. sayth: euery yea, containeth a nay in it naturally: [16] So as whosoeuer sayeth, this is bread, sayth it is no wyne. For in the rule of common reason, the grant of one substaunce is the deniall of another. And therefore reason hath these conclusions throughly: whatsoever is bread, is no wyne: whatsoever is wyne, is no milke, and so forth. So Christ saying: This is my body, sayth it is no bread, p. 291. l. 22. and p. 300. l. 17. Smith sayth, that a boy which hath onely learned the sophistry, wil not dispute so sondly, fol. 77.

Other say that the Masse is a sacrifice satisfactory, by [17] the deuotion of the priest, & of them for whom it is offred,* and not by the thyng that is offred. Tho. part. 3.9.79. artic 5. Wint. sayth otherwyse, p. 92. l. 5. Confutation.

Wint. sayth, that the only immolation of Christ in him selfe vpon the aultar of the crosse, is the verye satisfactory sacrifice for the reconciliation of mankynd, vnto the fauor of God, p. 437. l. 31. Smith sayth: what is it to offer Christes body and bloud at Masse, to purchase thereby euerlasting life, if the masse be not a sacrifice to pacify gods wrath for sinne, & to obtaine his mercy, fol. 24.148.164. where he sayth further: Priests do offer for our saluation, to get heuen, and to auoyd hell.

¶Matters wherein the B. of Winchester varieth from hymselfe.

The body of Christ in the sacramēt is not made of bread [18] but is made present of bread,* p. 89, l. 9. &c. and p, 228. li. 44. Confutation agaynst Cranmer.

Of bread is made the body of Christ,* p. 388. l. 42.

The catholike fayth hath from the beginnyng confessed truly Christes intent, to make bread hys body, p. 29. l. 2. Confutation.

And of many breads is made one body of Christ, p. 167 l. 2. Confutation.

Euill men eat verily the flesh of Christ, p. 256. l. 24.25 &c. Confutation.

*Christ geueth vs to be eaten the same flesh that he took of the virgin Mary, p. 274. l. 25.

*We receyue not in the Sacrament Christes flesh that was crucified, p. 276. l. 1. Confutation.

*S. Augustines rule in his booke De doctrina Christiana, pertaineth not to Christes supper, p. 132. l. 40.

*S. Augustine meaneth of the Sacrament, ibidem, and p. 10. l. 44. Confutation.

*Reason in place of seruice (as beyng inferior to fayth) wyll agree with the fayth of Transubstantiation well enough, p. 300. l. 12. Confutation.

And as reason receyued into faithes seruice, doth not strue with transubstantiation, but agreeth well with it: so mans senses be no such direct aduersaries to transubstantiation, as a matter wherof they cannot skill: for the senses cannot skill of substances, p. 307. l. 11. &c.

Thine eyes say there is but bread and wyne, thy taste sayeth the same,* thy feelyng and smellyng agreefully with them. Hereunto is added the carnal mans vnderstanding which because it taketh the beginning of the senses, procedeth in reasonyng sensually. In the deuils sophistry, fo. 6.

To these notes & places of D. Ridley, let vs also adioyne other 12. places or Articles of the lyke affinitie, taken out of his booke called y^e examination of the proud hunter, noted in y^e later end of D. Turners secōd course. By these Articles it may appeare how this Bishop swarueth no lesse from the sound truth of Christes Gospell, then he dyd in the other, both from hymselfe, and also from other hys fellow brethren of hys owne Catholike mother church of Rome. The Articles in summe are these.

¶Twelue new found Articles of Steuen Gardiners Creede, taught in hys booke called the examination of the hunter.

1. The ceremonies and traditions which the Bish. of Rome hath ordeyned, * and are now allowed in England, are the pale of the church of England, fol. 7.

2. The Popes ceremonies and traditions, are good and politike lawes, wherby God hath enclosed the kings subiects vnder hys maiestie alone, ibidem.

3. As king Richard an euill man, made a good politicke law for the body & common welth of England: so can the Pope an euill man, make good lawes and wholesome doctrine for mans soule and Christes church, fol. 23.

4. * Whatsoeuer is good spoken, and vsed by mā, is much more of God, then Christes doctrine, is hys fathers doctrine, fol. 33.

5. He that sayth that the law of the Gospell ought onely to be holden in Christes church, and is sufficient alone for it, speaketh so far out of reason, that he is not worthy to be reasoned withall. fol. 37.

6. They that hold that the crosse of siluer or golde, ought not to be worshipped with kissing of it, & bowyng & kneeling Page 1794 to it, are enemies to Christes true crosse, & take away the meanes that might set out the glory of Christes crosse, fol. 49.

7. Neither Paule nor the crosse, can be worshipped with godly honour, fol. 61.

*8. As Christ vsed clay for an instrument to heale the blind mans eyes withall, & hath saued diuers by fayth, & made it an instrument of saluation, and as God hath ordained Timothy to be an instrument of saluation both to himselfe and for other, so may the Pope ordaine holy water to bee an instrument of saluation, both of body and soule, to all them that are sprinkled with it, fol. 64.

9. No man can commit Idolatry with his body alone, & in onely kissyng of an Image or Idol, & in only kneelyng to it, can no Idolatry be committed, fol. 52.

10. For as much as God vnderstandeth them that sing in Latin,* though they vnderstand not themselues, their praier is acceptable before God, fol. 76.

11. As a father may forbid certain of his children to marry, so may a king in hys kingdom forbid certayne of hys subiects to marry, that is to lay, all y^e priests of his realme, fol. 83.

*12. He that would take away the Popes ceremonies out of the church, should driue away all godlinesse and seemelines, all religious and deuout behauiour out of y^e church, fol. 94.

Here hast thou (good Reder) this stout prelate of Winchest. with all his properties, doyngs, & qualities, as in a certaine Anatomie proportioned out vnto thee, whereby thou maiest boldly iudge (and nothing erre in thy iudgement) what is to be esteemed of hym by his fruits, as who neither was tene Protestant nor right papist: neither cōstant in hys error, nor yet stedfast in the truth: neither frēd to the Pope,* & yet a perfect enemy to Christ: false in king Henries tyme, a dissembler in K. Edwards tyme, double periured, and a murderer in Queene Maries tyme, mutable and inconstāt in all tymes. And finally, where in his letters to the L. Protector and others, vsually he vanteth so much of his late soueraign lord K. Henry the 8. & of the great reputation that he was in with him, read I beseech thee, & behold in the depositions of the L. Paget in the old booke, pag. 806. col. 1. & also in the depositions of the Erle of Bedford, pag. 824. and there ye shall see the king before his death, both excepting hym out of his pardons, & quite strikyng hym out of his last wyll & testament, so detested & abhorred hym, as he did no english man more. And where as the L. Paget beyng sent in message from the K. to the bishoppe, by other words then the kings mynde and will was, of his owne dexteritie gaue to hym good & gracious words, which in deed the kyng neither knew, nor yet wer sent by hym: the B. perswading himselfe otherwise of the kings fauor towards hym, then it was in deed, was therin far deceiued, and brought into a fooles paradise: wherof read both in the old booke before, and also in this present volume.

To describe & paint out the vnstable mutabilitie of this B. aforesaid, albeit here need no more to be added besides that which is alredy declared,* yet notwithstanding, seyng the matter is not long, it shal not be out of the way to annexe withall vnto the premisses a piece of Drianders letter, written to one Crispine phisition in Oxford, sent from Antwerpe concerning the doyngs and behaiour of this B. of Winchester, whose story we haue now in hand. The copy of which Drianders letter,* written to the sayd Crispine hys friend, beginneth thus.

¶Doctissimo viro, Edmundo Crispino amico integerrimo, Oxoniae.

ANte meam ex Lutetia profectionē, dedi literas ad te per Anglum illum, communem amicum nostrum. &c.

¶The English wherof, as much as to the present purpose appertaineth, here followeth translated.

BEfore my departure from the Citie of Paris, I wrote vnto you by our friend the Englishman, &c.

Now you shalbe contented onely with the narration of your B. of Winchester, who (as appertained to the embassadour of so noble a Prince) came to Louane with a great brauerie, and was there receiued at one Ieremies house,* and most honourably entertained, where the facultie of Diuines for honor sake, presented him wyne in the name of the whole Uniuersitie. But our famous doctors, and learned Maisters, for that they would more deeply search and vnderstand the learnyng and excellency of the Prelate, perused and scanned a certaine Oration, made by hym, and now extant, intituled De vera obedientia, in the which hys Oration, he did impugne the supremacy of the B. of Rome, and preferred his Lords and kyngs authoritie, before the holy Apostolike sea, as they terme it: whiche beyng read and considered by them, they did not onely repent them for geuyng hym such honour, but also recanted that which they had done: and did not so much honor him afore, but now they were as earnest & as spitefull agaynst hym. Richard Lathomus, interpreter of termes, with the fauourers of that fraternitie, and other champions of the fallyng church, disputed with hym concernyng the Popes supremacy. This B. stoutely defended his sayd Oration. The Diuines contrary stifly maintained their opinion, & diuers tymes openly with exclamations, called the sayde B. an excommunicate person, and a schismatike, to no litle reproch and infamy of the English nation.* The Byshop not long after, myndyng to say masse in S. Peters church, they did deny vnto hym as to an excommunicate person, the Ornamentes and Uestimentes meete for the same, wherewyth he beyng hyghly offended, sodaynely hastned hys iourney from thence. The Deane the next day after, made an eloquent Oration, wherein hee openly disgraced, and defamed hym. You haue heard now a true storye, for oure Doctour was a beholder of the whole Tragedie, &c.

And this now beyng sufficient for Gardiners story, to leaue hym to his iudge, & to let him go, we shall returne & proceed (by the grace & leaue of the Lord) as the course of these dolefull dayes shall lead vs, to prosecute the residue of Christes Martyrs, as now in order followeth.

¶The burnyng of Iohn Webbe gentleman, George Roper, and Gregory Parke, at Caunterbury, as followeth.

NExT after the death & constant Martyrdom of the two most worthy champions & standerbearers of Christes army, D. Nich. Ridley,* and M. Hugh Latymer (of whom ye haue heard at large) followed three other stoute and bold souldiours, that is to say, Iohn Web gentlemā, George Roper, and Gregory Parke.

This Iohn Web was brought before the Bish. of Douer and Nich. Harpesfield,* or some other deputed in their rouse, long before the other two, videlicet, the xvj. day of September, and there had propounded vnto hym such ordinarie Articles (as it seemeth) as was commonly ministred by Boner to those of hys iurisdiction: & beyng willed for that present to depart, and to deliberate with hymselfe vpon the matter,* agaynst the next tyme of his appearance, he made aunswer that hee would no otherwyse say (by Gods grace) then hee had already sayde, which was this: As touchyng the Sacrament of Christes bodye, I do beleeeue (quoth he) to be left vnto hys Church (wyth thankes geuyng) in commemoration of hys death & passion, vntill his commyng agayne. So that it is left in remembraunce of hys body, and not by the wordes of consecration to be made his body, really, substantially, and the same body that was borne of the virgin Mary: I vtterly do deny that. After this (besides sundry other tymes) the third day of October, the sayd Ioh. Web, & Gregory Roper, & George Parke were brought all three together before the sayd Iudge: who there and then agreeyng, and stedfastly allowyng the former aunswere made before by Maister Webbe, were by the bloody Prelates adiudged heretikes, and therefore about the ende of the same month of October, or els as I otherwyse finde in the latter ende of Nouember, they together were taken and brought out of prison to the place of Martyrdom. Who by the way goyng toward the stake, sayd certaine Psalmes mournefully. Roper was a yonger man of a fresh colour, courage, & complexion, the other two were somewhat more elderly, all goyng in white linnen, with their gownes vpon. Roper at his commyng to the stake puttyng of hys gowne, fet a great leape. So soone as the flame was about hym,* the sayd Roper put out both hys armes from hys bodye lyke a Rood, and so stood stedfast, continuynge in that maner, not pluckyng his armes in, tyll the fire had consumed them, and burnt them of.

And thus these foresayde Martyrs of Christ, beeyng brought (as I sayde) to the stake,* and there compassed about with a chayne, were burnt and consumed all thre together in one fire at Canterbury, abidyng most patiently their torments, and countyng themselues happy,* & blessed of the lord, that they were made worthy to suffer for Christes Gospels sake.

William Wiseman.

THE 13. of Decemb. in the Lollards Tower died William Wiseman, a Clothworker of London,* where hee Page 1795 was in prison and bands for the Gospel & worde of God. How, and whereupon he deceased, it is not fully certaine. Some thought that either through famine,* or ill handling of some murtheryng papists, he was made away. By reason whereof, the Crouner named Iohn Gibbes Gentleman, with an enquest of twelue men, were fayne to sit vpō hym, who although to the outward apperance were sayd to finde nothyng in hym els, but onely Gods visitation, yet what other priuy causes there might be of hys death, the Lord knoweth, I haue not to say. After the sayd William was departed (as is sayde) in the Tower, the holy Catholike church men, cast hym out into the fieldes, commanded that no man should bury him, according as theyr deuout maner is to do w^t all such as dye in lyke sort, whō they account as prophane, and worthy of no buriall, but to be cast to dogs and birdes, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, as the Poet sayeth. And yet all this their mercilesse commaundement not withstandyng, some good Tobies there were, which buried hym in the euenyng, as commonly they did all the rest, throwen out in lyke sort, whom they were woont priuily by night to couer, and many tymes the Archers in the fields standyng by, and singing together Psalmes at their buriall.

¶James Gore.

*IN the same month, about the 7. day of Decemb. deceased also Iames Gore in the prison at Colchester, layed there in bands for the right and truth of Gods word.

☞The processe and historie of M. Iohn Philpot, examined, condemned, and Martyred for the maintenance and defence of the Gospels cause, against the Antichristian Sea of Rome.

NExT foloweth the constant Martyrdome of M. Iohn Philpot,* of whome partly ye heard before in the beginning of Queene Maries time in prosecutyng the disputation of the Conuocation house. He was of a worshipfull house, a knights sonne borne in Hamshire, brought vp in the new Colledge in Oxford, where he studied the Ciuill lawe, the space of 6. or 7. yeares, besides the study of other liberall artes, especially of the tongs, wherein very forwardly he profited, namely in the knowledge of the Hebrue tong, &c. In wit•he was pregnāt and happy, of a singuler courage, in spirit feruent, in religion zelous and also well practised and exercised in the same (which is no small matter in a true deuine) of nature and condition plaine and apert, far from all flatterie, farther from all hypocrisie and deceitfull dissimulation. What his learnyng was, hys owne examinations penned of hys owne hand can declare.

From Oxford desirous to see other countries as occasion serued thereunto, he went ouer into Italy,* and places thereabouts, where he commyng vpon a tyme from Uenice to Padua, was in daunger through a certayne Franciscan Frier, accompanying hym in hys iourney, who cōmyng to Padua, sought to accuse hym of heresie. At length returnyng to England hys countrey agayne, as the tyme ministred more boldnes to hym in the dayes of King Edward, he had diuers conflicties with Gardiner the bishop, in the Citye of Winchester, as appeareth by dyuers of Winchesters letters, and hys examinations. Wherof read before.

After that, hauyng an aduauſon by the ſayd B. he was made there Archdeacon of Winchester, vnder D. Pomet,* who then ſucceeded Gardiner in that Biſhoprike. Thus duryng the tyme of K. Edward, he continued to no ſmall profite of thoſe parties thereabout. When that bleſſed king was taken away, & Mary hys ſiſter came in place, whoſe ſtudy was wholly bent to alter the ſtate of religion in the wofull realme of England:* firſt ſhe cauſed a Conuocation of the Prelates & learned men to be congregated, to the accompliſhment of her deſire.

In the which Conuocation, M. Philpot beyng preſent accordyng to hys roume and degree, with a few other ſuſtained the cauſe of the Goſpel manfully agaynſt the aduerſary part (as is aboue recited) for the which cauſe, not withſtandyng the liberty of the houſe promied before, hee was called to accompt before B. Gardiner the Chauncellour, then beyng hys Ordinary, by whome he was firſt examined,* although that examination came not yet to our handes. From thence agayne he was remooued to Boner and other Commiſſioners, with whom he had dyuers & ſundry conflictes, as in hys examination here followyng, may appeare.

¶The firſt examination of M. Iohn Philpot, before the Queenes Commiſſioners, M. Chomley, M. Roper, & Doct. Story, and one of the Scribes of the Arches,* at Newgate Sessions hall. 2. Octob. 1555.

DOct. Story, before I was called into an inner Parler where they ſate, came out into the Hall where I was, Page 1796 to view me among other that there were, & paſſing by me ſayd: Ha M. Philpot, and in returnyng immediately agayne, ſtayed againſt me, beholdyng me, and ſaying, that I was well fed in deed.

Philpot.

*If I be fat and in good liking (M. Doctor) it is no maruell, ſince I haue bene ſtalled vp in priſon this twelue months and a halfe, in a cloſe corner. I am come to know your pleaſure wherfore you haue ſent for me.

Story.

We heare that thou art a ſuſpect perſon, and of hereticall opinions, and therefore we haue ſent for thee.

Phil.

*I haue bene in priſon thus long, only vpon the occaſion of diſputation made in the Conuocation houſe, and vpon ſuſpect of ſettyng forth the report thereof.

Story.

If thou wilt reuoke the ſame, and become an honeſt man, thou ſhalt be ſet at liberty, and do right well: or els thou ſhalt be committed to the Biſh. of London. How ſaiest thou, wilt thou reuoke it or no?

Phil.

I haue alredy answered in this behalfe to myne Ordinarie.

Story.

If thou answerest thus when thou comest before vs anone, thou shalt heare more of our myndes: and with this he went into the Par•er, and I within a little whyle after, was called in.

The Scribe.

Sir, what is your name?

Phil.

My name is Iohn Philpot. And so he intituled my name.

Story.

This man was Archdeacon of Winchester of Doct. Pomets presentment.

Phil.

I was Archdeacon in deed, but none of his presentment, but by vertue of a former aduouson geuen by my L. Chancellor that now is.

Story.

Ye may be sure that my L. Chauncellor would not make any such as he is Archdeacon.

Roper.

Come hither to me M. Philpot. We heare say that you are out of the catholike church, and haue ben a disturber of the same: out of the which who so is, hee cannot be the chyld of saluation. Wherefore, if you will come into the same, you shall be receiued and finde fauour.

Phil.

I am come before your worshipfull Maisterships at your apointmēt,* vnderstanding that you are magistrates authorised by the Queenes maiesty, to whom I owe and wil do my due obedience to the vttermost. Wherefore I desire to know what cause I haue offended in, wherefore I am now called before you. And if I cānot be charged with any particuler matter done contrary to the lawes of this Realme, I desire your maisterships that I may haue the benefit of a subiect, and be deliuered out of my long wrong •all imprisonment, where I haue lyen this twelue month and this halfe, without any calling to answer before now, and my liuyng taken from me without all law.

Roper.

Though we haue no perticular matter to charge you withall, yet we may both by our Commission, and by the law driue you to answer to the suspicion of a slaunder goyng on you: & besides this, we haue statutes to charge you herein withall.

Phil.

If I haue offended any statute, charge me therewithall: and if I haue incurred the penaltie therof, punish me accordingly. And because you are magistrates and executors of the Queens maiesties lawes, by force wherof you do now sit, I desire that if I be found no notorious transgressor of any of them, I may not be burdened with more then I haue done.

Cholm.

If the Iustice doe suspect a fellow, he may examine him vpon suspition therof, & commit him to prison though there be no fault done.

Sto.

I perceiue whereabout this man goeth. He is playne in Cardmakers case, for he made the selfe same allegatiōs. But they will not serue thee, for thou art an heretike, and holdest against the blessed masse: how sayst thou to that?

Phil.

I am no heretike.

Story.

*I wil prooue thee an heretike. Whosoeuer hath holden against the blessed masse, is an heretike: but thou hast holden agaynst the same, therefore thou art an heretike.

Phil.

That which I spake, & which you are able to charge me withal, was in the conuocatiō, where by the Queenes maiesties will & her whole counsail, liberty was geuen to euery man of the house to vtter his conscience, & to say hys mynd freely of such questiōs in religiō, as there were propounded by the Prolocutor, for the which now I ought not to be molested and imprisoned as I haue bene, neither now be compelled of you to answer to the same.

Story.

Thou shalt go to the Lollards Tower, & be handled there like an heretike as thou art, and answer to y^e same that thou there didst speake, and be iudged by the Byshop of London.*

Phil.

I haue already bene conuented of this matter before my Lord Chancellor myne Ordinary, who this long time hath kept me in prison: therfore if his Lordship will take my lyfe away, as he hath done my liberty and liuyng, hee may, the which I thinke he cannot doe of hys conscience, and therefore hath let me lye this long in prison: wherefore I am content to abyde the ende of hym herein that is myne Ordinary, and do refuse the audiorie of the Bishop of Londō, because he is an vncompetent iudge for me, and not myne Ordinary.

Story.

But Sir,* thou spakest wordes in the Conuocation house, which is of the B. of Londons Dioces, & therefore thou shalt be caried to the Lollardes Tower to be iudged by hym for the words thou spakest in his Dioces agaynst the blessed masse.

Phil.

Sir, you know by the law, that I may haue Exceptionem fori: and it is agaynst all equitie, that I should bee twice vexed for one cause, and that by such, as by the lawe haue nothyng to do with me.

Roper.

You can not deny, but that you spake agaynst the Masse in the Conuocation house.

Sto.

Doest thou deny that which thou spakest there, or no?

Phil.

I cannot deny that I haue spoken there, and if by the law you may put me to death therefore, I am here redy to suffer whatsoeuer I shall be adiudged vnto.

The Scribe.

This man is fed of vayne glory.

Cholm.

Play the wise gentleman and be conformable, and be not stubborne in your opinions, neither cast your selfe away. I would be glad to you good.

Phil.

I desire you sir with the rest here,* y^t I be not charged further at your hands, then the law chargeth me, for that I haue done, since there was then no law agaynst that directly, wherewith I am now charged. And you M. Doctor (of old acquaintance in Oxford) I trust will shew me some friendship, and not extremitie.

Story.

I tell thee, if thou wouldst be a good catholike man, I would be thy friend, and spend my gowne to doe thee good: but I wyll be no friend to an hereticke as thou art,* but wil spend both my gowne & my coat, but I wil burne thee. How sayest thou to the Sacrament of the aultar?

Phil.

Sir, I am not come now to dispute with your maistership, and the tyme now serueth not thereto, but to answer to that I may be lawfully charged withall.

Story.

Wel, since thou wilt not reuoke that thou hast done, thou shalt be had into the Lollards Tower.

Phil.

Sir, since you will needes shew me this extremitie,* and charge me with my conscience, I do desire to see your Commission, whether you haue this authority so to do, and after the view therof I shal (according to my duety) make you further answer, if you may by the vertue therof burthen me with my conscience.

Roper.

Let hym see the Commission: is it here?

Story.

Shall wee let euery vyle persone see our Commission?

Cholm.

Let him go from whence he came, and on Thursday he shall see our Commission.

Story.

No, let hym lie in the meane while in the Lollardes Tower: for I will sweepe the Kings Bench & all other prisons also of these heretikes: they shall not haue that resort as they haue had, to scatter their heresies.

Phil.

You haue power to transferre my body from place to place at your pleasure: but you haue no power ouer my soule. And I passe not whether you commit me, for I can not be worse entreated then I am, kept all day in a close chamber: wherfore it is no maruell that my flesh is puft vp wherewithall M. Doctor is offended.

Story.

Marshall, take him home with you agayne, and see that you bring him againe on Thursday, and then we shal ridde your fingers of him, and afterward of your other heretikes.

Philpot.

God hath appointed a day shortly to come, in the which he will iudge vs with righteousnesse, how so euer you iudge of vs now.

Roper.

Be content to be ruled by M. Doctor, & shew your selfe a catholike man.

Phil.

Sir,* if I should speake otherwise then my conscience is, I should but dissemble with you: & why be you so earnest to haue me shew my self a dissembler both to God and you, which I cannot do?

Roper.

We do not require you to dissemble with vs, but to be a Catholike man.

Phil.

If I do stand in any thing against that wherein any man is able to burthen me with one iote of the Scripture, I shall be content to be counted no Catholike man, or an heretike, as you please.

Story.

Haue we Scripture, Scripture? and wyth that he rose vp, saying: who shalbe Iudge I pray you? This mā is lyke his fellow Woodman, which the other day woulde haue nothyng els but scripture. And this is the beginning of this tragedie.

¶The second examination of Iohn Philpot before the Queenes Commissioners, M. Cholmley, Roper, D. Story, D. Cooke, and the Scribe, the 24th day of Octo. 1555. at Newgate Sessions Hall.

*AT my comming, a man of Algate of myne acquaintāce said vnto me, God haue mercy on you, for you are alredy condemned in this world: for D. Story said, that my L. Chancellor hath commaunded to do you away. After a little consultation had betwene them, M. Cholmley called me vnto him, saying.

Cholm.

M. Philpot, shew your selfe a wise man, & be not stubburne in your owne opinion, but bee conformable to the Queenes proceedyngs, and lyue, and you shall be wel assured of great fauour and reputation.

Phil.

I shall do as it becommeth a Christian man to do.

Story.

This man is the rankest heretike that hath bene in all my L. Chancellors Dioces, and hath done more hurt then any man els there: therfore hys pleasure is, that hee should haue the law to proceede against him, and I haue spoken with my L. herein, and he willeth him to be committed to the B. of London, & there to recant, or els burne. He houled and wept in the Conuocation house, and made such adoe as neuer man did, as all the heretikes doe when they lacke learnyng to aunswer. He shall go after hys fellowes. How sayst thou, wilt thou recant?

Phil.

I know nothyng I haue done, y^t I ought to recant.

Story.

Well, then I pray you let vs commit him to y^e Lollards Tower, there to remaine vntil he be further examined before the B. of London, for he is to fine fedde in the kings Bench, and he hath too much fauour there. For hys keper said at the doore yesterday, that he was the finest fellow, and one of the best lerned in England: and with this he rose vp and went his way.

Cooke.

This man hath most stoutely mainteined heresies since the Queenes comming in, as any that I haue heard of: therfore it is most meete he should be adiudged by the B. of London, for the heresies he hath mainteyned.

Phil.

I haue mainteined no heresies.

Cooke.

No haue? Did ye not openly speake against the sacrament of the aultar in the Conuocation house? Call you that no heresie? Wilt thou recant that, or not?

Phil.

It was the Quenes Maiesties pleasure y^t we should reason thereof, not by my seeking, but by other mens procuring, in the hearyng of the Counsaile.

Cooke.

Did the Queene geue you leaue to be an heretike? You may be sure her grace wyl not so do. Wel, we wil not dispute the matter with you, my L. of London shall proceed by inquisition vpon thee, and if thou wilt not recant, thou shalt be burned.

Phil.

My L. of London is not myne Ordinary in this behalfe, and I haue already answered vnto myne Ordinary in this matter: and therefore (as I haue sayd before) you shall do me great wrong, to vex me twice for one matter, since I haue sustained this long imprisonment, besides the losse of my liuyng.

Roper.

You were a very vnmeet man to be an Archdeacō.

Phil.

I know I was as meet a mā as he that hath it now.

Cooke.

A meete man quoth he? He troubled M. Roper and the whole countrey.

Phil.

There was neuer poore Archdeacon so handled at your handes as I am, and that without any iust cause ye be able to lay vnto me.

Cooke.

Thou art no Archdeacon.

Phil.

I am Archdeacon still,* although another be in possession of my liuyng: for I was neuer depriued by any law.

Cooke.

No sir, that needeth not: for a notorious heretike should haue no Ordinary proceeding about his depriuation: but the B. may vpon knowledge thereof proceed to depriuation.

Phil.

M. Doctor, you know that the common law is other wise: and besides this,* the statutes of this Realme be otherwyse, which geueth this benefit to euery person, thogh he be an heretike, to enioy his liuyng vntill he bee put to death for the same.

Cholm.

No, there thou art deceyued.

Phil.

Upon the liuyng I passe not. But the vniust dealing grieueth me, that I should bee thus troubled for my conscience, contrary to all law.

Cholm.

Why, wyll you not agree that the Queenes Maiestie may cause you to be examined of your fayth?

Phil.

Aske you M. Doctor Cooke, and he will tell you that the temporall magistrates haue nothing to doe with matters of fayth for determination thereof. And S. Ambrose sayeth: Diuina Imperatoriae maiestati non sunt subiecta, that the thyngs of God are not subiect to the power and authoritie of Princes.

Cooke.

No? may not the temporall power commit you to be examined of your fayth to the bishop?

Phil.

Yea sir, I deny not that: but you will not grant that the same may examine any of their owne authoritie.*

Cooke.

Let hym be had away.

Phil.

Your maistership promised mee the last tyme I was before you, I should see your commission by what authoritie you do call me, and whether I by the same be bound to answer to so much as you demaund.

Roper.

*Let him see the Commission.

The Scribe.

Then he exhibited it to M. Roper, and was about to open the same.

Cooke.

No, what will you do? he shall not see it.

Phil.

Then do you me wrong, to call me and vexe me, not shewing your authority in this behalfe.

Cooke.

If we do you wrong, complayne on vs: and in the meane while thou shalt lye in the Lollardes tower.

Phil.

Syr, I am a poore Gentleman: therefore I trust of your gentlenes you wil not commit me to so vile & strait a place, being found no haynous trespasser.

Cooke.

Thou art no Gentleman.

Phil.

Yes that I am.

Cooke.

An hereticke is no Gentleman: for he is a Gentleman that hath gentle conditions.

Phil.

The offence can not take away the state of a Gentleman as long as he liueth, although he were a traytor: but I meane not to boast of my gentlemanship, but will put it vnder my f•ot, since you do no more esteeme it.

Story.

What wil you suffer this heretick to prate with you all this day?

Cooke.

He sayth he is a Gentleman.

Story

A gentleman quoth he? he is a vile hereticke knaue: for an hereticke is no Gentleman. Let the Keeper of Lollardes Tower come in, and haue him away.

The keeper.

*Here Sir.

Story.

Take this man with you to the Lollardes Tower, or els to the Bishops Colehouse.

Phil.

Syr, if I were a dogge, you coulde not appoynt me a worse and more vile place: but I must bee content wyth whatsoeuer iniury you do offer me. God geue you a more mercifull hart: you are very cruell vpon one that hath neuer offended you. I pray you M. Cholmly, shew me some frēdship, that I be not caryed to so vile a place. And he called me aside, and sayd:

Cholm.

I am not skilfull of theyr doinges, neither of their lawes: I cannot tell what they meane. I woulde I coulde do you good.*

Phil.

I am content to goe whyther you wyll haue mee. There was neuer man more cruelly handled, thē I am at your handes, that without any iust cause knowne, should thus be entreated.

Story.

Shall we suffer this hereticke thus to reproue vs? haue him hence.

Phil.

God forgeue you, & geue you more mercifull harts, & shew you more mercy in the time of neede: Et quod facis, fac citius: Do quickly that you haue in hand.

Story.

Do you not heare how he maketh vs Iud•sses?

Phil.

That is after your owne vnderstanding.

After this, I with foure other mo were brought to the Keepers house in Pater noster Row, where we Supped, and after supper I was called vp to a chamber by the arch'deacon of Londons seruant, & that in his maysters name? who offred me a bed for that night. To whō I gaue thanks, saying: that it shoulde be a grieue to me to lie well one night, and the next worse: wherefore I will begin (sayde I) as I am like to continue, to take such part as my felowes do.* And with that we were brought through Pater noster row, to my Lord of Londons Colehouse: vnto the whiche is ioyned a litle blinde house, with a great payre of stockes appoynted both for hand & foot, but thanks be to God we haue not playd of those organes yet,* although some before vs had tried thē) & there we founde a Minister of Essex a married priest, a man of godly zeale, w^t one other poore mā. And this minister (at my cōming) desired to speake w^t me, & did greatly lament his owne infirmity, for that through extremity of imprisonmēt, he was constrayned by writing to yelde to the bishop of London: whereupon he was once set at li•erty,* and afterwarde felt suche a hell in his conscience, that he could scarce refrayne from destroying himself, and neuer could be at quiet vntill he had gone vnto the bishops Register, desiring to see his bill again, the which as soone as he had receiued, he tare it in pieces: & after he was as ioyfull as any man might bee. Of the whiche when my Lord of London had vnderstanding, he sent for him, and fell vpon him like a Lion, and like a manly Bishop buffeted him well, so that he made his face blacke and blew, & pluckt away a great piece of his beard: but now thanks be to God, he is as ioyfull vnder the crosse, as any of vs, and very sorye of his former infirmity, I write this because I would all men to take heed how they do contrary to theyr conscience: which is to fal into the paynes of hell. And here an end.

The maner of my calling first before the Bishop of London, the second night of mine imprisonment in his Colehouse.

The Bishop sent vnto me, M. Iohnson, his Register, with a messe of meate and a good pot of drinke, and breade,* saying, that my Lord had no knowledge erst o• my beinge here, for whiche he was sorry: therefore he had sent me and my felowes that meat, knowing whether I would receiue the same.

I thanked God for my Lordes charity that it pleased him to remember poore prisoners,* desiring almighty God to encrease the same in him and in all others: and therefore I would not refuse his beneficence, and therwith tooke the same vnto my brethren, praying God for his prouidence towards his afflicted flocke, that he styrred our aduersaries vp to helpe the same in their necessity.

Iohnson.

My Lorde woulde knowe the cause of your sending hither (for he knoweth nothing thereof) & wondreth that he shoulde be troubled with prisoners of other dioces then his owne.

Philpot.

I declared vnto him the whole cause. After the which he sayd, my Lordes will was that I should haue any frendship I would desire, and so departed.

Within a while after, one of my Lordes gentlemen cōmeth for me, and I was brought into his presence, where he sat at a table alone, with three or foure of his chapleins waiting vpon him, and his Register.

Bon.

M. Philpot, you are welcome, geue me your hand.

Phil.

With that, because he so gently put forth his hand, I to render curtesy for curtesy, kissed my hande, & gaue hym the same.

Boner.

I am right sorry for your trouble,* & I promise you before it was within these two hours, I knew not of your being here. I pray you tell me what was the cause of your sending hither: for I promise you I knew nothing thereof as yet, neither I woulde you shoulde thinke, that I was the cause thereof: and I maruell that other men wyll trouble me with theyr matters,* but I must be obedient to my betters: and ywis, men speake otherwise of me then I deserue.

Phil.

I shewed him the summe of the matter: that it was for the disputation in the conuocation house, for the which I was agaynst all right molested.

Boner.

I maruell that you shoulde be troubled therefore, if there was none other cause but this. But peradventure you haue mainteyned the same since, and some of your frendes of late haue asked, whether you doe stande to the same, and you haue said, Yea: and for this you might be cōmitted to prison.

Phil.

If it shall please your Lordshippe, I am burdened none otherwise then I haue tolde you, by the Commissioners, who haue sēt me hither, because I would not recant the same.

Boner.

A man may speake in the parliament house though it be a place of free speech, as he may be imprisoned for, as in case he spake wordes of high treason against the king or queen: & so it might be that you spake otherwise then it become you, of the Church of Christ.

Phil.

I spake nothing which was out of the articles whiche were called in question, and agreed vpon to be disputed by the whole house, and by the Queenes permissiō and the Counsell.

Boner.

Why, may we dispute of our fayth?*

Phil.

Yea that we may.

Boner.

Nay, I trow not, by the law.

Phil.

In deed by the Ciuill law I know it is not lawfull, but by Gods law we may reasō therof. For S. Peter saith: Be ye ready to render accompt vnto all men of that hope whiche is in you that demaund you of the same.*

Boner.

In deede Saynt Peter sayth so. Why, then I aske of you what your iudgement is of the Sacramente of the Aultar?

Phil.

My Lord, Saynt Ambrose sayth,* that the disputatiō of faith ought to be in the congregation, in y^e hearing of the people, and that I am not bound to render account therof to euery man priuately, vnlesse it be to edify. But nowe I cannot shewe you my minde, but I muste runne vpon the pikes in daunger of my life therfore. Wherefore, as the said Doctor sayd vnto Ualentinian the Emperour, so say I to your Lordship: Tolle legem, & fiet certamen:*Take awaye the lawe, and I shall reason with you. And yet if I come in open iudgement, where I am bound by the law to aunswere▪ I trust I shall vtter my conscience as freely as any that hath come before you.

Boner.

I perceiue you are learned, I would haue such as you be about me. But you must come & be of the church, for there is but one Church.

Phil.

God forbid I should be out of the church, I am sure I am within the same: for I know, as I am taught by the scripture, that there is but one catholick church,*Vna Colūba, vna Sponsa, vna Dilecta: One Doue, one Spouse, one beloued Congregation, out of the which there is no saluation.

Page 1799

Boner.

How chaunceth it then, that you go out of the same and walke not with vs?

Phil.

My Lorde, I am sure I am within the boundes of the Church whereupon she is builded, which is the word of God.

Boner.

What age are ye of?

Phil.

I am foure and forty.

Boner.

*You are not now of the same fayth your godfathers and godmothers promised for you, in the which you were baptised.

Phil.

Yes that I thank God I am: for I was baptised into the fayth of Christ which I now hold.

Boner.

How can that be? there is but one fayth.

Phil.

I am assured of that by Saynt Paule, saying: That there is but one God, one fayth, and one baptisme, of the which I am.

Boner.

You were xx. yeare ago of an other fayth then you be now.

Phil.

In deede (my Lorde) to tell you playne, I was then nullus fidei, of no fayth, a neuter, a wicked liuer, neither hoat nor colde.

Boner.

Why, doe you not thinke that wee haue nowe the true fayth?

Phil.

I desire your Lordship to hold me excused for answering at this time. I am sure that Gods worde throughlye with the Primitiue church and all the aũcient writers doe agree with this fayth I am of.

Boner.

Well, I promise you I meane you no more* hurte, then to mine owne person: I will not therfore burthē you with your conscience as nowe, I maruell that you are so mery in prison as you be, singing and reioysing, as y^e prophet saith: Exultātes in rebus pessimis: reioising in your naughtinesse. Me thinketh you do not wel herein: you should rather lament and be sorry.

Phil.

*My Lord, the myrth that we make is but in singing certayne Psalmes, according as we are commaūded by S. Paule, willing▪ vs to be mery in the Lord, singing together in Hymnes and Psalmes: and I trust your Lordship can not be displeased with that.

Boner.

We may say vnto you, as Christ said in the Gospel: Tibijs cecinimus vobis, & non planxistis.

Phil.

Here my Lorde stumbled, and coulde not bring forth the text, and required his Chapleines to help, and put him in remembrance of the text better: but they were mumme: and I recited out the text vnto him, whiche made nothing to his purpose, vnles he would haue vs to mourn, because they, if they laughe, sing still sorrowfull thinges vnto vs, threatning fagots and fire.

We are my Lord, in a darcke comfortlesse place, & therefore it behoueth vs to be mery, least, as Salomon sayeth: sorrowfulnesse eate vp our harte. Therefore I truste your Lordship will not bee angrie for our singing of Psalmes, since Saynt Paule sayth: If any man bee of an vpriht minde, let hym sing. And we therefore, to testifye that we are of an vpriht minde to God (though wee be in misery) doe sing.

Boner.

I will trouble you no further as now. If I can doe you any good, I will bee glad to doe it for you. God be with you, good Mayster Philpot, and geue you good night. Haue him to the Sellar, and let him drinke a cup of wine.

*Thus I departed, and by my Lordes Register I was brought to his Sellar doore, where I dranke a good cup of wine. And my Lords Chapleine M. Cousin folowed me, taking acquayntance, saying, that I was welcome, & wished that I would not be singular.

Phil.

I am well taught the contrary by Salomon, saying: Vae soli: Wo be to him that is alone. After that I was caryed to my Lordes Colehouse agayne, where I with my sixe felowes do rouse together in the straw as chearefully (we thanke God) as other do in theyr beds of Downe.

Thus for the third fitte.

¶The fourth examination of M. Philpot in the Archdeacons house of London, the sayd moneth of October, before the Bishops of London, Bath, Worcester, and Glocester.

BOner.

Mayster Philpot, it hath pleased my Lordes to take paines here to day, * to dine with my poore archdeacon, and in the diner time it chaunced vs to haue communication of you, & you were pitied here of many that knew you in the new Colledge in Oxforde: and I also doe pittie your case, because you seeme vnto me by the talke I hadde with you the other night, to be learned, & therefore now I haue sent for you to come before them, that it might not be sayd hereafter, that I had so many learned Bishops at my house, and yet would not vouchsafe them to talk with you, and at my request (I thanke them) they are content so to do. Now therfore vtter your mind freely, & you shal with all fauour be satisfied. I am sory to see you lye in so euill a case as you doe, and would fayne you should do better, as you may, if you list.

Bath.

My Lordes here haue not sent for you to fawn vpō you, but for charities sake to exhorte you to come into the right catholicke way of the church.

Worc.

Before he beginneth to speake,* it is best that he call to God for grace, and to praye that it might please God to open his hart, that he may conceiue the truth.

Phil.

With that I fell downe vpon my knees before them, and made my prayer on this maner.

Almighty God, which art the geuer of all wisdom, and vnderstanding, I beseech thee of thine infinite goodnes and mercye in Iesus Christ, to geue me most vile sinner in thy sight, the spirite of wisdom to speake and make answeere in thy cause, that it may be to the contentation of the hearers before whom I stand & also to my better vnderstanding, if I be deceiued in any thing.

Boner.

Nay, my Lorde of Worcester, you did not well to exhort him to make any prayer. For this is the thing they haue a singular pride in, that they can oftē make their vain prayers in the which they glory much. For in this poynt they are much like to certayne errant heretickes,* of whom Pliny maketh mention, that didde dayly sing antelucanos Hymnos: Prayse vnto God before the dawning of the day.

Phil.

My Lord, God make me & all you here present suche hereticks as those were y^t soong those morning himnes: for they were right christians, with whom the tyrantes of the world were offendeh for their well doing.

Bath.

Proceede to that he hath to saye. He hath prayed I can not tell for what.

Boner.

Say on, M. Philpot: my Lordes will gladly heare you.

Phil.

I haue, my Lordes, bene this tweluemoneth and an halfe in Prison without any iust cause, that I knowe,* and my liuing taken from me without any lawfull order, and now I am brought (contrary to righte, from myne owne Territory and Ordinary, into another mans iurisdiction, I know not why. Wherefore, if your Lordships cā burden me with any euill done, I stand here before you to purge me of the same. And if no suche thing may bee iustly layd to my charge, I desire to be released of this wrongful trouble.

Boner.

There is none here goeth about to trouble you, but to do you good, if we can. For I promise you, ye were sent hither to mee without my knowledge. Therefore speake your conscience without any feare.

Phil.

My Lord, I haue learned to aunswere in matters of Religion, In Ecclesia legitimè vocatus: In the Congregation being thereto lawfully called:* but nowe I am not lawfullye called, neither is here a iust congregation where I oughte to answere.

Boner.

In deede this man tolde mee the last time I spake with him, that he was a Lawyer, and woulde not vtter his conscience in matters of fayth, vnlesse it were in the hearing of the people, where hee mighte speake to vayne glory.

Phil.

My Lord, I sayd not I was a Lawyer, neither do I arrogate to my selfe that name although I was once a nouice in y^e same, where I learned something for mine owne defence, whē I am called in iudgement to answere to any cause, & whereby I haue bene taught, not to put my selfe further in daūger then I neede, and so farre am I a Lawyer, and no further.

Bath.

If you will not answere to my Lordes request, you seme to be a * wilfull man in your opinion.

Phil.

My Lorde of London is not mine Ordinarye before whom I am bound to answere in this behalfe, as maister D. Cole (which is a Lawyer) can well tell you by y^e lawe. And I haue not offended my Lord of Londō wherefore he should call me.

Boner.

Yes, I haue to laye to your charge, that you haue offended in my dioces by speaking agaynst the blessed sacrament of the aultar, and therefore I may call you & proceed agaynst you to punish you by the law.

Phil.

I haue not offended in your Dioces. For that whiche I spake of the Sacrament was in Paules Church in the Conuocation house,* which (as I vnderstand) is a peculiar iurisdiction belonging to the Deane of Paules, and therefore is counted of your Lordships Dioces, but not in your Dioces.

Boner.

Is not Paules Church in my Dioces? Well I wote, it costeth me a good deale of money by the yeare, the leading thereof.

Phil.

That may be, & yet be exempted from your lordships iurisdiction. And albeit I had so offended in your Dioces, yet I ought by the law, to be sent to mine Ordinarye, if I Page 1800 require it, & not to bee punished by you that are not mine Ordinary. And already (as I haue told you) I haue bene conuented of mine Ordinary for this cause, which you goe about to enquire of me.

Boner.

How say you, M. D. Cole, may not I proceed against him by the law, for that he hath done in my dioces?

Cole.

Me thinketh M. Philpot needeth not to stande so muche with your Lordship in that point as he doth, sithen you seeke not to hinder him, but to further him: therfore I thinke it best that he go to the matter that is layde agaynst him of the Conuocation, and make to longer delay.

Phil.

I would willingly shew my mind of the matter, but I am sure it will be layd agaynst me to my preiudice whē I come to iudgement.

Cole.

Why, then you may speake by protestation.

Phil.

*But what shall my protestation auayle in a cause of heresy (as you call it) if I speake otherwise then you wyll haue me, since that which I spake in the conuocatiō house, being a place priuiledged, can not now helpe me?

Boner.

But M. Doct. Cole, may I not proceede agaynst him for that offence he hath done in my dioces?

Cole.

You may call him before you, my Lord, if he be fouūd in your dioces?

Phil.

*But I haue by force bene brought out of mine owne Dioces to my Lordes, and required to be iudged of myne owne Ordinary: and therefore I know mayster Doctour will not say of his knowledge, that your Lordship oughte to proceed agaynst me. And here Mayster Doctour would say nothing.

Worcest.

Doe you not thinke to finde before my Lord here as good equity in your cause, as before your owne Ordinary?

Phil.

I canne not blame my Lorde of Londons equitye, with whom (I thanke his Lordship) I haue found more gentlenes since I came, then of mine owne Ordinary (I speak it for no flattery) this twelue moneth and this halfe before, who neuer woulde call me to aunswere, as his Lordship hath done now twise. Sed nemo prohibetur vti iure suo:* but I ought not to bee forestalled of my right, and therefore I challenge the same for diuers other considerations.

Boner.

Nowe you can not saye hereafter, but that ye haue bene gently cōmuned withal of my Lordes here, & yet you be wilfull & obstinate in your error, and in your owne opinions, & will not shewe any cause why you will not come into the vnity of the Church with vs.

Phil.

My Lordes, in that I doe not declare my minde according to your expectation, is (as I haue sayd) because I can not speak without present daunger of my life. But rather then you shoulde report me by this, either ostinate or selfe willed without any iust ground, wherupon I stand: I will open vnto you somewhat of my minde, or rather y^e whole, desiring your lordships which seme to be pillers of the Church of Englande, to satisfye me in the same: and I will referre all other causes in the which I dissēt from you vnto one or two articles, or rather to one, which includeth them both: in the which if I can by the scriptures be satisfied at your mouthes, I shall as willingly agree to you as any other in all poyntes.

Boner.

These heretickes come alwayes with their ifs, as this man doth now,* saying: if he can be satisfied by the scriptures: so that he will alwayes haue this exception, I am not satisfied, although the matter be neuer so playnly proued agaynst him. But wil you promise to be satisfied, if my Lordes take some paynes about you?

Phil.

I say (my Lord) I will be satisfied by the Scriptures in that wherein I stand. And I protest here before God & his eternall sonne Iesus Christ my Sauour, and the holy ghost and his Angels, and you here present that be iudges of that I speak, that I do not stand in any opiniō of wylfulness, or singularity, but onely vpon my conscience, certainly informed by gods word, from the which I dare not go for feare of damnatiō: and this is the cause of mine earnestnes in this behalfe.

Boner.

I will trouble my Lords no longer, seing that you will not declare your minde.

Phil.

I am about so to doe, if it please your Lordshippe to heare me speake.

Bathe.

Geue him leaue (my Lord) to speake that he hath to say.*

Phil.

My Lordes, it is not vnknowne to you, that the chiefe cause why you do count me and such as I am for hereticks, is because we be not at vnity with your Churche. You say, you are of the true Church: and we say, we are of the true Church. You say, that who is out of your church, is damned: and we thinke verily on the other side, that if we depart from the true church, wheron we are graffed in Gods word, we should stand in the state of dānatiō. Wherfore if your Lordship can bring any better authorities for your church, then we can do for ours, & proue by the scriptures that the Churche of Rome nowe (of the which you are) is the true Catholick Church, as in al your sermons▪ writings, and argumentes you doe vpholde, and that all christen persons ought to be ruled by the same vnder pain of damnation (as you say) and that the same Churche (as you pretend) hath authority to interprete the scriptures, as it semeth her good, and that all men are bound to folow such interpretations onely: I shalbe as conformable to the same Church as you may desire me, the whiche otherwise I dare not: therfore I require you for Gods sake to satisfy me in this.

Cole.

If you stand vpon this poynt onely, you may soone be satisfied if you list.

Phil.

It is the thing that I require, & to this I haue sayd, I will stand, and refer all other controuersies wherein I stand now agaynst you, and will put my hād therto, if you mistrust my word.

Boner.

I pray you, mayster Philpot, what faith were you of twenty yeares ago? This man will haue euery yeare a new fayth.*

Phil.

My Lorde, to tell you playne, I thinke I was of no fayth: for I was then a wicked liuer, and knewe not God then, as I ought to do, God forgeue me.

Boner.

No were? that is not so. I am sure you were of some fayth.

Phil.

My lord, I haue declared to you on my cōsciēce what I then was and iudge of my selfe. And what is that to the purpose of the thing I desire to be satisfied of you?

Boner.

Mayster Doctour Cole, I pray you say your mind to him.

Cole.

What will you say, if I can proue that it was decreed by an vniuersall coūcell in Athanasius time? that all the christen church should folow the determinatiō of y^e church of Rome? but I do not now remember were.

Phil.

If you Mayster Doctour canne shewe me the same, graunted to the Sea of Rome, by the authority of the scripture, I will gladly harken thereto. But I thinke you be not able to shewe any suche thinge: for Athanasius was President of Nicene councell, and there was no such thing decreed, I am sure.

Cole.

Though it were not then, it might bee at an other time.

Phil.

I desire to see the prooffe thereof. And vpon this M. Harpsfield Chauncellor to the Bishop of Londō, brought in a booke of Ireneus, with certaine leaues turned in, and layd it before the Bishops to helpe them in theyr perplexity, if it might be: the which after the Bishops of Bath and Glocester had read together, the Bishop of Glocester gaue me the booke.

Gloc.

Take the booke, M. Philpot, and looke vppon that place, and there may you see how the church of Rome is to be folowed of all men.

Phil.

I tooke the Booke, and read the place, the which after I had read, I sayd it made nothing agaynst me,* but agaynst the Arians and other Heretickes, agaynst whome Ireneus wrote, prouing that they were not to be credited, because they did teach and folowe after straunge doctrine in Europa, and that the chiefe Church of the same was founded by Peter and Paule, and had to this time continued by faythfull succession of the faythfull Bishoppes in preaching the true Gospell, as they had receiued of the Apostles, and nothing like to the late sprong Heretickes. &c. Whereby hee concludeth agaynste them, that they were not to be heard, neither to bee credited, the whiche thing if you my Lordes be able to prooue nowe of the Church of Rome, then had you as good authoritye agaynst me in my cause now, as Ireneus had agaynst those heretickes. But the church of Rome hath swarued from the truth and simplicitye of the Gospell,* whiche it maintained in Ireneus time, and was vncorrupted from that whiche it is nowe: wherefore your Lordships can not iustly apply the authority of Ireneus to the Church of Rome now, which is so manifestly corrupted from the Primitiue Church.

Boner.

So will you saye still, it maketh nothinge for the purpose, whatsoeuer authority wee bring, and will neuer be satisfied.

Phil.

My Lorde, when I doe by iust reason, proue that the authorities which be brought agaynst me doe not make to the purpose (as I haue alredy proued) I trust you will receiue mine aunswere.

Worc.

It is to be prooued most manifestly by all auncient writers,* that the Sea of Rome hath alwayes folowed the truth, and neuer was deceiued, vntill of late certayne heretickes had defaced the same.

Phil.

Let that be proued, and I haue done.

Worcest.

Nay, you are of suche arrogancy, singularitye, and vayne glory, that you will not see it, be it neuer so wel proued.

Phil.

Ha, my Lordes, is it nowe time (thinke you) for me to folow singularity or vayne glory, since it is now vpon daunger of my life and death, not onely presently, but also before God to come? and I know, if I dye not in the true fayth, I shall dye euerlastingly, and agayne I knowe, if I do not as you would haue me, you will kill me and many thousandes moe: yet had I leuer perish at your handes, then to perishe eternally. And at this time I haue lost all my cōmodities of this worlde, and now lye in a colehouse, where a man would not lay a dog, with the whiche I am well contented.

Cole.

Where are you able to prooue, that the Churche of Rome hath erred at any time? and by what Historye? certayne it is by Eusebius, that the Church was stablished at Rome by Peter and Paul, and that Peter was bishop 25. yeares at Rome.

Phil.

I know well that Eusebius so writeth: but if we cōpare that which saynt Paul writeth to the Galathians the first it will manifestlye appeare the contrarye,* that he was not halfe so long there. He liued not past 35. yeres after he was called to be an Apostle: and Paul maketh mention of his abiding at Hierusalem after Christes death more then 18. yeares.

Cole.

What did Peter write to the Galathians.

Phil.

No, I say Paule maketh mention of Peter writing to the Galathians, and of his abiding at Hierusalem. And further, I am able to proue, both by Eusebius & other Historiographers, that y^e church of Rome hath manifestly erred, and at this present doth erre, because shee agreeth not with that which they wrote. The primitiue Church didde vse according to the Gospell, and there needeth none other prooffe but compare the one with the other.

Bon.

I may compare this man to a certayne man I reade of,* which fell into a desperation, & wēt into a wood to hang himselfe, and whē he came there, he went vewing of euery tree, and could find none on the which he might vouchsafe to hange himselfe. But I will not apply it as I mighte. I pray you (M. Doctor) go forth with him.

Cole.

My Lord, there be on euery side on me that be better able to answer him, and I loue not to fall in disputation, for that now a daies a man shal not but susteine shame and obloquy thereby of the people. I had leuer shewe my mind in writing.

Phil.

And I had leuer that you should do so then otherwise, for then a man may better iudge of your words then by argument, and I beseeche you so to do. But if I were a rich man, I durst wager an hundred pōundes, that you shal not be able to shew that you haue sayde,* to be decreed by a generall Counsell in Athanasius time. For this I am sure of, that it was concluded by a generall Councell in Africa many yeares after, that none of Africa (vnder payne of excommunication) should appeale to Rome: the which Decree I am sure they woulde not haue made, if by the scriptures & by an vniuersall Councell it had bene decreed, that al mē should abide & folow the determination of the church at Rome.

Cole.

But I can shew that they reuoked that error again.

Phil.

So you say, M. Doctour, but I pray you shewe me where. I haue hitherto heard nothing of you for my contēation, but bare wordes without any authority.

Boner.

What, I pray you, ought we to dispute with you of our fayth? Iustinian in the law hath a title, De fide Catholica, to the contrary.

Phil.

I am certayne the Ciuill lawe hath such a constitution: but our fayth must not depend vpon the ciuill law. For as saynt Ambrose sayth: *Non lex sed fides congregauit Ecclesiam: Not the lawe but the Gospell (sayth hee) hath gathered the church together.

Worcest.

M. Philpot, you haue the spirit of pride wherewith ye be led, which will not let you to yelde to the truth: leaue it for shame.

Phil.

Syr, I am sure I haue the spirite of fayth, by the which I speake at this present: neyther am I ashamed to stand in my fayth.

Glocest.

What do you thinke your selfe better learned then so many notable learned men as be here?

Phil.

Elias alone had the truth, when they were foure hūdreth priestes agaynst him. *

Worcest.

Oh, you would be counted now for Helias. And yet I tel thee he was deceiued: for he thoght there had bene none good but himselfe, and yet he was deceiued, for there were seuen hundred besides him.

Phil.

Yea but he was not deceiued in doctrine, as the other seuen hundred were.

Worcest.

By my fayth you are greatly to blame: that you can not be contēt to be of the Church which euer hath •en of that faythfull antiquity.

Phil.

My Lord I know Rome, and haue bene there, wher I saw your Lordship.

Worcest.

In deede I did flee from hence thither, and I remember not that I saw you there.* But I am sorry that you haue bene there: for the wickednesse which you haue seene there, peradventure causeth you to do as you do.

Phil.

No, my Lord, I doe not as I do, for that cause: for I am taught otherwise by the Gospell, not altogether to refuse the minister for his euill liuing, so that he bring sound doctrine out of Gods booke.

Worc.

Doe you thinke that the vniuersall Church may be deceiued?*

Phil.

S. Paul to the Thessalonians prophesieth that there should come an vniuersall departing from the faith in the latter dayes before the cōming of Christ, saying: Non veniet Christus nisi venerit defectio prius: that is: Christ shal not come, till there come a departing fyrst.

Cole.

Yea, I pray you, how take you the departyng there in S. Paule? It is not meant of fayth,* but of the departing from the Empyre: For it is in Greeke, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 .

Phil.

Mary in deed you (M. Doctour) put me in good remēbraunce of the meaning of S. Paule in that place, for Apotasia is properly a departing from the fayth, and thereof commeth Apostata, whiche properly signifieth one that departeth from his fayth: and S. Paule in the same place after speaketh of the decay of the Empyre.

Cole.

Apostasia doth not onely signify a departing frō the fayth, but also from the Empyre, as I am able to shew.

Phil.

I neuer read it so taken, and when you shalbe able to shew it (as you say in woordes) I will beleue it, and not before.

Worcest.

I am sorry that you shoulde be agaynst the Christen world.

Phil.

The world commonly and such as be called Christians (for the multitude) hath hated the truth, and bene enemies to the same.

Gloc.

Why, M. Philpot, doe you thinke that the vniuersall church hath erred, and you onely to be in the truth?

Phil.

The church that you are of, was neuer vniuersall,* for two parts of the world, which is, Asia & Africa neuer consented to the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, as at this day they do not, neither do folow his decrees.

Gloc.

Yes, in Florentines Councell they did agree.

Phil.

It was sayde so by false report, after they of Asia and Africa were gone home: but it was not so in deed, as the se|quele of them all hitherto doth proue the contrary.

Gloc.

I pray you by whom will you be iudged in matters of controuersy which happen dayly?

Phil.

By the word of God. For Christ sayth in S. Iohn: The word that he spake, shall be Iudge in the latter day.

Gloc.

What if you take the word one way, and I an other way: who shall be iudge then?

Phil.

The Primitiue Church.

Gloc.

I know you meane the Doctors that wrote thereof.

Phil

I meane verely so.

Gloc.

What if you take the Doctors in one sense, and I in an other, who shalbe iudge then?

Phil.

Then let that be taken whiche is moste agreeable to Gods word.

Cole.

My Lordes, why do you trouble your selues to answeere him in this matter? It is not the thing which is laid to his charge, but his error of the sacrament, and he to shift himselfe of that, brought in another matter.

Phil.

This is the matter, M. Cole, to the which I haue referred all other questions, and desire to be satisfied.

Worc.

It is wonder to see how he standeth with a few agaynst a great multitude.

Phil.

We haue almost as many as you. For we haue Asia, Africa, Germany, Denmarke, and a great part of France, and dayly the number of the Gospel doth encrease: so that I am credibly informed,* that for this Religion in the whiche I stande, and for the whiche I am like to dye, a greate multitude doth dayly come out of Fraunce through persecution, that the Cityes of Germany bee scarce able to receiue them: and therefore your Lordship may be sure, the word of God will one day take place, doe what you can to the contrary.

Worc.

They were wel occupied to bring you such newes, and you haue bene well kept to haue such resort vnto you. Thou art the arrogantest fellow & stoutest fond fellow that euer I knew.

Phil.

I pray your Lordship to beare with my hasty speech: for it is part of my corrupt nature to speake somewhat hastily: but for all that I meane with humility to do my duty to your Lordship.

Boner.

M. Philpot, my Lordes will trouble you no further Page 1802 at this time, but you shall goe from whence you came, and haue such fauor as in the mean while I can shew you: and vpon wednesday next you shalbe called agayn to be heard what you can say for mainteinaunce of your error.

Phil.

*My Lorde, my desire is to be satisfied of you in that I haue required: and your Lordship shall finde me, as I haue sayd.

Worc.

We wish you as well as our selues.

Phil.

I thinke the same (my Lordes) but I feare you are deceiued, and haue a zeale of your selues, not according to knowledge.

Worc.

God send you more grace.

Phil.

And also God encrease the same in you, and opē your eyes that you may see to mayneteyne his trueth and hys true Church.

Then the bishops rose vp & consulted together, & caused a writing to be made, in y^e which I think my bloud by thē was bought & sold, & thereto they put to theyr handes, and after this I was caried to my Colehouse agayne.

¶Thus endeth the fourth part of this tragedy. God hasten the end therof to his glory. Amen.

*BEcause I haue begon to write vnto you of mine examinations before the Bishop & other, more to satisfy your desire then it is any thing woorthy to be written: I haue thought it good to write vnto you also that whiche hath bene done of late, that the same might come to light which they do in darcknes and priuy corners, and that the world now and the posterity hereafter might knowe how vnorderly, vniustly, & vnlearnedly these rauening wolues doe proceed agaynst the seely and faythfull flocke of Christ, and condemne & persecute the sincere doctrine of Christ in vs, which they are not able by honest meanes to resist, but only by tyranny and violence.

The 5. examination of Iohn Philpot, had before the Bishops of London, Rochester, Couentry, S. Asses (I trow) and one other, whose Seas I know not, Doctor Story, Curtop, Doctor Sauerson, Doctor Pendleton, with diuers other Chaplaynes and Gentlemen of the Queenes Chamber and diuers other Gentlemen, in the Gallery of my Lord of Londons Palace.

BOner.

M. Philpot come you hither, I haue desyred my Lordes here and other learned mē to take some paines once agayne,* and to do you good: & because I do minde to sit in iudgement on you to morow (as I am commaūded) yet I would you should haue as much fauor as I cā shew you, if you wilbe any thing cōformable. Therfore play the wise man, and be not singuler in your opiniō, but be ruled by these learned men.

Phil.

My Lord, in that you say you will sit on me in iudgement to morrow, I am glad thereof. For I was promised by them which sent me vnto you, that I should haue bene iudged the next day after: but promise hath not bene kepte with me, to my farther grieffe. I looke for none other but death at your hands, and I am as ready to yeld my life in Christes cause, as you be to require it.

Boner.

Lo what a wilfull man this is? By my fayth it is but folly to reasō with him, neither with any of these heretickes. I am sory that you wilbe no more tractable, & that I am compelled to shew extremity agaynst you.

Phil.

My Lord, you need not to shew extremity against me v•les you list: neither by y^e law (as I haue sayd) you haue any thing to do with me, for that you are not mine Ordynary, albeit I am (contrary to all right) in your prison.

Boner.

Why, the Queenes Commissioners sent you hither vnto me vpon you examination had before them. I know not well the cause: but I am sure thhy would not haue sent you hither to me, vnles you had made some talke to them, otherwise then it becommeth a christian man.

Phil.

My Lorde, in deede they sent me hither without any occasion then ministred by me. Onely they layd vnto me y^e disputation I made in the Conuocation house, requyring me to aunswere the same, and to recant it. The which because I would not do, they sēt me hither to your lordship,

Boner.

Why did you not aunswere them thereto?

Phil.

For that they were temporall men, & ought not to be iudges in spiritual causes wherof they demaunded me, w^tout shewing any authority wherby I was bound to aunswere them, & hereupon they committed me to your prisō.

Boner.

In deed I remember now, you maynteined open heresy in my Dioces: * wherfore the Cōmissioners sent you vnto me that I shoulde proceede agaynst you, for that you haue spoken in my Dioces.

Phil.

My Lord, I stand still vpon my lawfull plea in this behalfe, that though it were a great heresy as you suppose it, yet I ought not to be troubled therefore in respect of the priuiledge of the Parliament house, wherof the Conuocation house is a member, where al men in matters propoūded may franckly speake theyr mindes: * and here is presēt a Gentleman of the Queenes Maiesties that was presēt at the disputation, and can testifye that the questions whiche were there in controuersy, were not set forth by me, but by the Prolocutor, who required in the Queenes Maiestyes name, all men to dispute theyr mindes freely in the same, that were of the house.

The Queenes Gentleman.

Though the Parliament house be a place of priuiledge for men of the house to speak, yet may none speake any treason agaynst the Queene, or maintein treason agaynst the crowne.

Phil.

But if there be any matter whiche otherwise it were treason to speake of, * were it treason for any persō to speak therin, specially the thing being proposed by the speaker? I thinke not.

The Queenes Gentleman.

You may make the matter easy enough to you yet, as I perceiue, if you wil reuoke y^e same which you did there so stubbernelly mainteine.

S. Asse.

This man did not speake vnder reformatiō as manye there did, but 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 whiche is earnestly and perswa•bly as euer I heard any.

Phil.

My Lordes, since you will not cease to trouble me for that I haue lawfully done,* neither will admit my iust defence for that was spoken in the conuocation house by me, contrary to the lawes and custome of the Realme. I appeale to the whole Parliament house, to bee iudged by the same, whether I ought thus to be molested for that I haue there spoken.

Rochest.

But haue you spoken and maynteyned the same since that time, or no?

Phil.

If any man can charge mee iustly therewith, here I stand to make aunswere.

Rochest.

How say you to it now? will you stād to that you haue spoken in the Conuocation house, and do you thinke you sayd then well, or no?

Phil.

My Lorde, you are not mine ordinary to proceede ex officio agaynst me and therfore I am not bound to tell you my conscience of your demaundes.

S. Asse.

What say you now? Is not there in y^e blessed sacramēt of y^e aultar (& with that they put of al their caps for reuerence of that Idoll) the presence of our Sauour Christ,* really and substantially after the wordes of consecration?

Phil.

I do beleue in the Sacrament of Christes body duely ministred to be such maner of presēce, as the word teacheth me to beleue.

S. Asse.

I pray you how is that?

Phil.

As for that I will declare an other time when I shall be lawfullye called to dispute my minde of this matter but I am not yet driuen to that point. And the scripture sayth: All thinges ought to be done after an order.

An other Bish.

This is a froward & a vayneglorious man.

Boner.

It is not lawfull for a man by the ciuill lawe to dispute his fayth openly, as it appeareth in the title, De summa trinitate & fide catholica.

Phil.

My Lorde, I haue aunswered you to this question before.

Boner.

Why? I neuer asked thee of this before now.*

Phil.

Yes that you did at my last examination, by that token I aunswered your Lordship by S. Ambrose, that the church is congregated by the word, and not by mans law. Wherefore I adde now further of this saying: Quôd qui fidem repudiat, & legem obijcit, iniustus est, quia iustus ex fide vivit. i. That he which refuseth the word, and obiecteth the lawe,* is an vniust man, because the iust shall liue by fayth. And moreouer (my Lord) the title which your Lordship alledgeth out of the law, maketh it not vnlawfull to dispute of all the articles of the fayth, but of the Trinity.

Boner.

Thou lvest, it is not so? and I will shew you by the Booke how ignoraunt he is. And with that he went with all haste to his study, and fet his booke and openly read the texte and the title of the lawe, and charged mee with suche wordes as seemed to make for his purpose, saying: howe sayst thou to this.

Phil.

My Lord, I say as I sayd before, that the law meaneth of the catholicke fayth determined in the Councell of Calcedonia, where the articles of the creed were onely cōcluded vpon.

Bon.

Thou art the veriest beast that euer I heard, I must needes speake it, thou compellest me thereunto.

Phil.

Your Lordship may speake your pleasure of me. But what is this to the purpose, which your lordship is so earnest in? You know that our fayth is not grounded vpon the ciuill law: * therefore it is not materiall to me whatsoeuer the law sayth.

Boner.

By what lawe wilt thou bee iudged? Wilt thou bee iudged by the common law.

Phil.

No my Lord, our fayth depēdeth not vpon the lawes of man.

S. Asse.

He will be iudged by no law, but as he list himselfe.

Worcest.

The common lawes are but abstractes of y^e scrip|tures and Doctors.

Phil.

Whatsoeuer you do make them, they are no groundes of my fayth, by the which I ought to be iudged.

Boner.

*I must needes proceed agaynst thee to morow.

Phil.

If your Lordship so do, I wil haue Exceptionem fori, for you are not my competent Iudge.

Bon.

By what law canst thou refu•e me to be thy iudge?

Phil.

By the Ciuill law, De competente Iudice.

Boner.

There is no such title in the law. In what booke is it, as cunning a Lawyer as you be.

Phil.

*My Lorde, I take vpon me no great cunning in the law: but you driue me to my shiftes for my defence, and I am sure, if I had the books of the law, I were able to shew what I say.

Boner.

What? De competente Iudice? I will go fet thee my bookes. There is a title in deed De officijs Iud•cis ordinarij.

Phil.

Uerely that is the same De competente Iudice, whiche I haue alledged. With that he ran to his study, & broughte the whole course of the law betwene his hands, which (as it might appeare) he had wel occupied, by y^e dust they were embrued withall.

Boner.

There be the bookes: finde it now (if thou canst) and I will promise thee to release thee out of prison.

Phil.

My Lorde, I stand not here to reason ma•ters of the Ciuill law, although I am not altogether ignorant of the same, for that I haue bene a Student in the same sixe or seuen yeares: but to aunswere to the Articles of fayth wyth the which you may lawfully burthē me. And whereas you go about vnlawfully to proceede. I challenge according to my knowledge, the benefite of the law in my defence.

Boner.

Why, thou wilt aunswere directly to nothing thou art charged withall: therefore saye not hereafter but you might haue bene satisfied here by learned mē, if you would haue declared your minde.

Phil.

My Lorde, I haue declared my minde vnto you and to other of the Byshops at my last being before you, * desyring you to be satisfied but of one thing, wherunto I haue referred all other controuersies: the whiche if your Lordships now, or other learned men can simply resolue me of, I am as contented to be reformable in all thinges, as you shall require: the which is to proue that y^e church of Rome (wherof you are) is the Catholicke Church.

Couen.

Why? do you not beleue your Creed, Credo Ecclesiam Catholicam.

Phil.

Yes that I do: but I cannot vnderstād Rome (wherwith all you burden vs) to be the same, neither like to it.

S. Asse.

*It is most euidēt that S. Peter did builde the Catholicke Church at Rome. And Christ sayd: Tu es Petrus, & super hanc Petram aedificabo Ecclesiam meam.

Moreouer, the succession of bishops in the see of Rome can be proued from time to time, as it can be of none other place so well, which is a manifest probation of the Catholicke Church, as diuers Doctors do write.

Phil.

That you would haue to be vndoubted, is most vncertaine, & y^t by the authority which you alledge of Christ, saying vnto Peter: Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke I will build my Church, vnles you can proue the rocke to signifye Rome, as you would make me falsly beleue. And although you can prooue the succession of Bishops from Peter, yet this is not sufficient to proue Rome the catholicke church, vnles you can proue the profession of Peters fayth wherevpon the catholic church is builded, to haue continued in his successors at Rome, and at this present to remayne.

Bon.

Is there any mo churches thē one catholicke church▪ And I pray you tel me, into what faith were you baptised.

Philpot.

I acknowledge one holy Catholicke and Apostolicke Church, wherof I am a member (I prayse God) and I am of that catholicke fayth of Christ, where into I was baptised.

Couen.

I pray you, can you tell what this word Catholicke doth signify?* shew if you can.

Phil.

Yes that I can, I thanke God. The catholicke fayth, or the Catholicke Churche is not as now a dayes the people be taught, to be y^t which is most vniuersall, or of moste part of men receiued,* whereby you do inferre our fayth to hang vpō the multitude, which is not so, but I esteeme the Catholicke Church to be as S. Austen defineth the same. Aestimamus fidem Catholicam a rebus praeteritis, praesentibus, & futuris.*i. We iudge (sayth he) the catholicke fayth, of that whiche hath bene, is and shalbe. So that if you can be able to prooue that your fayth and Church hath bene from the beginning taught, and is, and shalbe: then may you coūt your selues Catholicke, otherwise not. And Catholicke is a Greeke word compounded of 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which signifieth after or according, and 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, a summe, or principle, or whole. So that catholicke Church or Catholicke fayth is as much to say, as the first, whole, sound, or chiefest fayth.

Boner.

Doth S. Austen say so as he alledgeth it? or doth he meane as he taketh the same? How say you M. Curtop?

Curtop.

In deed (my Lord) S. Augustine hath such a saying, speaking agaynst the Donatistes, that the Catholicke fayth ought to be esteemed of thinges in times past, and as they are practised according to the same, and ought to bee through al ages, and not after a new maner, as the Donatistes began to professe.

Phil.

You haue sayd well M. Curtop, and after the meaning of S. Austen, and to confirme that which I haue said for the signification of Catholicke.

Couen.

Let the booke be sene my Lord.

Bon.

I pray you my Lord be cōtēt, or in good fayth I will breake euen of & let al alone. Do you thinke the Catholicke Church (vntill it was within these few yeres in y^e which a few vpō singularity haue swerued frō y^e same) haue erred?

Phil.

I do not thinke that the Catholicke Church can erre in doctrine: but I require you to prooue this Church of Rome to be the Catholicke Church.

Curtop.

I can proue that Ireneus (which was within an hundred yeares after Christ) came to victor then bishop of Rome,* to aske his aduise about the excōmunication of certayne heretickes, the which he would not haue done (by al likelihood) if he had not taken him to be supreame head.

Couent.

Marke well this argument. How are you able to aunswere to the same (Aunswere if you can.

Phil.

It is soone aunswered my Lorde, for that it is of no force, neither this fact of Ireneus maketh no more for the supremacy of the Bishoppe of Rome, then mine hath done which haue bene at Rome as well as he, and mighte haue spoken with the Pope if I had list: and yet I would none in England did fauor his supremacy more then I.

S. Asse.

You are the more to blame (by the fayth of my body) for y^t you fauor the same no better, since all the Catholicke Church (vntill this fewe yeares) haue taken him to be supreame head of the Church, besides this good man Ireneus.

Phil.

That is not likely, that Ireneus so tooke him, or the primatiue Church: for I am able to shewe seauen generall Councils after Ireneus time wherein he was neuer so taken, which may be a sufficient prooffe that the catholick primitiue church neuer tooke him for supreme head.

The other Bish.

This man will neuer be satisfied, say what we can. It is but folly to reason any more with him.

Phil.

O my Lordes, would you haue me satisfied with nothing? Iudge (I pray you) who of vs hath better authority, he whiche bringeth the example of one manne going to Rome, or I that by these many generall councils am able to proue, that he was neuer so takē in many hūdred yeares after Christ, as by Nicene, Ephesine the first and the seconde,*Calcedone, Constantinopolitane, Carthaginens. Aquiliense.

Couen.

Why will ye not admit the Church of Rome to be the Catholicke Church?

Phil.

Because it followeth not the primitiue Catholicke church, neither agreeth with the same, no more then an apple is like a nut.

Couent.

Wherin doth it dissent?

Phil.

It were to long to recite all, but two thinges I will name: the supremacy and transubstantiation.

Curtop.

As for transubstantiation, albeit it was set forth & decreed for an article of fayth not much aboue 300. yeares, yet it was alwayes beleued in the church.

Bon.

Yea that it was. Uery well sayd of you M. Curtop.

Phil.

Ye haue sayde right, that Transubstantiation is but a late plantation of the byshop of Rome,* & you are not able to shew any auncient writer, that the primitiue church did beleue any such thing: and with this Curtop shrank away. And immediately after, the Ambassadors of Spayne came in, to whom my Lord of London went, leauing the other with me. To whome I sayde: my Lordes, if you can shew me that this church of Rome (wherof you are members) is the true Catholicke Church,* I shall be content to be one thereof, and as conformable to the same as you can require me in all things: for I know there is no saluation but within the Church.

Couen.

Can you disproue that the Church of Rome is not the Catholicke Church.

Phil.

Yea that I am able: but I desire rather to heare of you for the prooffe thereof.* And seing I cannot haue my request at your hāds, neither be satisfied with any probable authority, I will shewe you good prooffe why it is not. For if the primatiue Church were Catholicke, as it was in deed, and ought to be the form and scholemaysters of the Church to the worldes end: then is not the church of Rome now the Catholicke church which dissenteth so farre from the same Page 1803 <1 page duplicate> Page 1804 both in doctrine and vse of the sacramentes.

Couent.

How proue you that the Church of Rome nowe dissenteth in doctrine and vse of the sacramentes from the primitiue Church?*

Phil.

Compare the one with the other, and it will soone appeare: as ye may see both in Eusebius and other Ecclesiasticall and auncient writers.

Couent.

What haue you to say more, why it is not the catholicke Church?

Phil.

Because it is not (by youre interpretation of Catholicke) vniuersall neyther neuer was, albeit you falsely perswade the people that it is so. For the world being deuided in three partes, Asia, Africa, and Europa, ii. partes therof, Asia, and Africa professing Christ as wel as we, did neuer consent to the Church of Rome, which is of Europa: whiche is a sufficient testimony that your faith was neuer vniuersall.

Couent.

How proue you that?

Phil.

At the Historiographers whiche write of the proceedings of the Church, doe testifie the same. Besides that, this present time doth declare that to be true which I say. For at this present the Church of Asia and Africa doe not consent to the church of Rome. Yea and besides all thys, most parte of Europa doth not agree neither allowe the Church of Rome: as Germanye the kingdome of Denmarke, the kingdome of Poole, a great part of Fraunce, England, and Zeland, which is a manifest probation that your Church is not vniuersall. And after this, the Bishop of London called away the other Bishops, and lefte with me diuers Gentlemen, with certayne of his Chaplaynes, as Doctor Sauerson an Englishman, which had proceeded Doctor in Bonony, who after began with me in this maner.

Doctour Sauer.

Mayster Philpot, I remember you beyond sea since the time you reasoned with a Fryer (a notable learned man) commyng from Uenice to Padua in a barge.

Phil.

I cannot forget that, for the Fryer threatned me to accuse me of heresie as soone as he came to Padua, for that I talked with him so boldly of the truth. He was no suche learned manne as you name hym to be, but onely in hys schole poyntes a good Purgatory Fryer.

Doct. Sauer.

Well, he was a learned man for al that. And I am sorry to heare y^t you this day hauing cōmoned wyth so many notable learned men, are no more conformable to them then you be.

Phil.

I will be conformable to all them that be conformable to Christ in his word. And I praye you good mayster Doctour, be not so conformable to please men more then GOD, contrary to your learning for worldly estimations sake.

Doct. Sauer.

No that I am not. Upon what occasion shuld you thinke thus of me?

Phil.

Upon no euill that I doe knowe of you, Mayster Doctour: but I speake as one wishing that you shoulde not be led away from the truth for promotions sake, as many Doctours be now a dayes.

Doct. Sauer.

*I haue heard your argumentes hetherto, and me thinketh that a great many of the olde ancient writers be agaynst you in that you doe not allowe the churche of Rome neyther the supremacie: for saint Cyprian (whiche is an old ancient writer) doth allowe the byshop of Rome to be the supreme head of the Church.

Phil.

That I am sure of he doth not. For he writing vnto Cornelius then Byshoppe of Rome, calleth hym but his companion and fellow Byshop, neither attributed to hym the name either of Pope, or els of any vsurped terms which now be ascribed to the Bishop of Rome to the setting forth of his dignitie.

Doct. Sauer.

You cannot be able to shewe that S. Cyprian calleth Cornelius his fellow Byshop.

Phil.

I will wager with you that I amble to make, that I can shew it you in Cyprian, as I haue sayd.

Doctor Sauer.

I will lay none other wager with you, but booke for booke,* that it is not so.

Phil.

I agree thereto, and I praye you one of my Lordes Chaplaynes to fet vs Cyprian hether for the tryal hereof. And with that one of them went to my Lordes study and brought forth Cyprian, & by and by he turned to the fyrst booke of his Epistles,* the 3. Epistle, and there would haue seemed to haue gathered a strong Argument for the supremacie of the Byshop of Rome, because he sayth: It goeth not well with the Church when the hygh Prieste is not obeyed, which supplyeth the stead of Christ after Gods word, and the cōsent of hys fellow Byshops. and the agreement of the people.

Doct. Sauer.

How can you auoyd this place which maketh so playnely for the Bishop of Romes supremacy?

Phil.

It maketh not so playne, mayster Doctour, on your side, as you gather, as by and by I wil geue you to vnderstand. But first I challenge the wager which wee made y^t your booke is mine.* For here you may see that hee calleth Cornelius his fellow byshop, as he doth also in other pla^{ces}. And now for the vnderstanding of that place, you do misconstrue it, to make the high Priest onely for the Bish. of Rome and otherwise then it was in hys tyme. For there were by Nicene Councell iiii. Patriarckes appoynted, the Patriarcke of Hierusalem, the Patriarcke of Constantinople, the Patriarcke of Alexandria, and the Patryarcke of Rome, of whiche foure the Patriarcke of Rome was placed lowest in the Councell, and so continued many yeares, for the tyme o^r vii. or viii. generall Councelles, as I am able to shew.

Therefore S. Cyprian writing to Cornelius Patriarcke of Rome? whome he calleth hys fellowe Byshoppe) findeth himselfe offended, that certayne heretickes beyng iustly excommunicated by him (as the Nouatians were) did flye from the Dyoces, whiche was their chiefe bishop refusing to be obedient to him and to bee reformed, to the Bishop of Rome and to the Patriarcke of Constantinople, and there were receaued in communion of congregation, in derogation of good order and discipline in y^e church and to the mayntayning of heresies and schismes: and that heresies did spring vp and schismes dayly rise hereof, that obedience was not geuen to the Prieste of God, nor once considered him to be in the Church, for the time, the priest and for the time the Iudge in Christes steade (as in the decree of Nicene Councell was appoynted) not the Byshop of Rome onely, but euery Patriarcke in his precinct: who had euery one of them a Colledge or Cathedrall church of learned Priestes, in hearyng of whome by a conuocation of his fellow Byshops, with the consent of the people, all heresies were determined by the word of God: and this is the meanyng of S. Cypryan.

D. Sauer.

You take it so, but it seemeth to me otherwise.

Phil.

Upō what groūd it shuld seeme otherwise vnto you, I know not but this meaning whiche I haue declared y^e general Councils. 7. or 8. one after an other, confirmed it so to be, whiche did not allowe one supreme head onely.

Pend.

There were not so many generall Councils, but 4. onely allowed.

Phil.

That is not so M. Pendleton, although there be 4. specially allowed for the confirmation of the Trinitie: but beside these foure there were many other generall Councils, as you may learne by many writers.*

A Chaplayne.

Did not Christ builde his Church vpon Peter S. Cyprian sayth so.

Phil.

S. Syprian De simplicitate praelatorum declareth in what respect he so sayd. In persona vnus dedit Dominus omnibus claues, vt omnium vnitatem denunciaret. i. God gaue in person of one man the keyes to all, that he might signifie the vnitie of all men. And also saynt Austen sayth in the x. treatise of S. Iohn: Si in Petro non esset Ecclesiae mysterium, non ei diceret Dominus tibi dabo claues. Si autem hoc Petro dictum est non habet Ecclesia: si autem Ecclesia habet, quando claues accepit, Ecclesiam totam designauit. i. If in Peter hadde not bene the misterie of the Church, the Lord had not sayde vnto him (I will geue vnto thee the keyes. For if that were sayd vnto Peter, the Church hath them not: if the Church haue them,*when Peter receiued them he signified the whole Church. And also S. Hierome a Priest of Rome writing to Nepotian, sayth: that al Churches do leane to their owne Pastours,*where he speaketh of the Ecclesiasticall Hierarchie or regiment, where hee maketh no mention of the Bishop of Rome. And Ad Euagium hee sayth, that wheresoeuer a Byshop be, whether it be at Rome, or at Euagie, or at Regium, he is of one power and of one Iurisdiction.

D. Sauer.

S. Hierome De coelesti hierarchia? It was Dyonisius you meane.

Phil.

I say not that Hierome wrote anye booke so intituled. But I say, that in the Epistle by me alledged, hee maketh mention of the Ecclesiasticall regiment.

D. Sauer.

I wonder you will stand so steadfast in your errour, to your owne destruction.

Philpot.

I am sure we are in no errour, by thy promise of Christe made to the faythfull once, whiche is, that he will geue to hys true Church suche a spirite of wisdom, that the aduersaries therof should neuer be able to resist. And by this I knowe we are of the trueth, for that neyther by reasoning neyther by writing, your Sinagogue of Rome is able to aunswere. Where is there one of you all that euer hath bene able to answere any of the godly learned ministers of Germany, who haue disclosed your counterfayt Religion? Which of you all (at this day) is able to answere Caluins institutions, which is minister of Geneua?

D. Sauer.

A godly minister in deede of receite of •urpurses,* and runnagate traytours. And of late I can tell you, there Page 1805 is such contention fallen betweene hym and his own sects that he was fayne to flye the towne, about predestination. I tell you truth, for I came by Ieneua hether.

Phil.

I am sure you blaspheme that godly man, and that Godly church where he is minister, as it is your churches condition when you cannot answere men by learnyng, to oppresse them with blasphemies and false reportes. For in the matter of predestination hee is in none other opinion then al the Doctors of the church be, agreeing to the scriptures.

Sauer.

Men be able to answere hym if they list. And I pray you which of you haue answered Byshop Fishers booke.

Phil.

Yes (mayster Doctor) that booke is answered and aunswere agayn, if you list to seek what hath bene written agaynst hym.

And after this Doct. Story came in. To whom I said mayster Doctor,* you haue done me great iniury, and with out law haue straightly imprisoned me, more like a Dogg thē a man. And besides this, you haue not kept promise w^t me, for you promised that I should be iudged the next day after.

Story.

*I am come now to keepe promise with thee. Was there euer such a fantastickall man as this is? Nay, he is no man, he is a beast. Yea these heretickes be worse then brute beastes: for they will vpon a vayne singularitie take vpon them to be wiser then all men, being in deede very fooles and Asseheades, not able to mayntayne that whiche of an arrogant obstinacie they do stand in.

Phil.

M. Doct. I am content to abide your rayling iudgement of me now. Say what you will I am content, for I am vnder your feete to be troden on as you list. God forgeue it you: yet I am no hereticke. Neither you nor anye other shall be able to proue that I hold any iote agaynst y^e word of God, otherwise then a Christian man ought.

Story.

The word of God? forsooth the word of God. It is but a folly to reason wyth these heretickes, for they are incurable and desperate.* But as I may reasō with thee, not that I haue any hope to winne thee, whom wilt thou appoynt to be iudge of the word wherto thou standest?

Phil.

Uerely the word it selfe.

Story.

Doe you not see the ignoraunce of this beastly hereticke? He willeth the word to be iudged of the word. Can the word speake?

Phil.

If I cannot proue y^t which I haue sayd by good authoritie, I will be content to be counted an hereticke and an ignoraunt person, and further what you please.

Story.

Let vs heare what wise authoritie y^u canst bring in.

Phil.

It is the saying of Christe in S. Iohn: Verbum quod locutus sum,iudicabit in nouissimo die The word which I haue spoken (sayth Christ) shall iudge in the last day. If the worde shall iudge in the last day, much more it ought to iudge our doings now: And I am sure I haue my iudge on my side, who shall absolue and iustifie me in an other world. How soeuer now it shall please you by authoritie vnrighteously to iudge of me and others, sure I am in an other world to iudge you.

Story.

What? you purpose to be a stincking Martyr, & to sit in iudgement with Christ at the last day to iudge the 12. tribes of Israell.*

Phil.

Yea sir, I doubte not thereof, hauing the promise of Christ, If I dye for righteousnes sake, which you haue begon to persecute in me.

Story.

I told you it is but vayne to argue with this hereticke: he is drowned in his heresies without all learning.

Phil.

Syr, I haue brought you for that I haue sayd, good authoritie out of Gods booke, to the whiche you answere nothing, but go about still to geue rayling iudgement aagaynst me without any cause.

Story.

I will come to you by and by. When as the Iudge in Westminster hall geueth sentence, doth the worde geue sentence, or the Iudge? tell me.

Phil.

Ciuill matters be subiect to Ciuell men, & they haue authoritie by the worde to bee iudge of them.* But the word of God is not subiect to mans iudgemēt, but ought to iudge all the wisdomes, thoughtes, and doynge of men and therefore your comparison disproueth nothing that I haue sayd, neither answereth any whit therto.

Story.

Wilt thou not allow the interpretation of the church vpon the scriptures?

Phil.

Yes, if it be according to the word of the true church: and this I say to you,* as I haue sayd heretofore, that if yee can proue the church of Rome (wherof ye are) to be y^e true Catholicke Church which I ought to follow, I wil be as ready to yeld therto (as long as it can be so proued) as you may desire me.

Story.

What a fellow is this? He will beleue nothing but what he list himselfe.* Are we not in possessiō of the church? Haue not our forefathers these many hundred yeares takē this church for the catholicke church wherof we are now? And if we had none other prooffe but this it were sufficiēt: for prescription of time maketh a good title in the law.

Philpot.

You doe well (mayster Doctour) to alledge prescription of many yeares,* for it is all that you haue to shew for your selues. But you must vnderstand, Ex diuinis nulla occurrit praescriptio, y^t prescription hath no place in matters belonging to God, as I am able to shewe by the testimony of many Doctours.

Story.

Well sir, you are like to go after your fathers Latimer the Sophister, and Ridley, who had nothing to alledge for hymselfe but that hee had learned his heresie of Cranmer. Where I came to him with a poore Bachelor of Arte, he tremblēd as though hee had had the palsey, as these hereticke haue alwayes some token of feare whereby a man may know them,* as you may see this mans eies do tremble in his head. But I dispatched them: and I tell thee that there hath bene yet neuer a one burnte, but I haue spoken with him, & haue bene a cause of his dispatch.

Phil.

You haue the more to aunswere for, Mayster Doctor as you shall feele in an other world, how much soeuer you do now triumph of your proceedings.

Story.

I tell thee I will neuer be confessed therof. And because I cannot now tary to speake with my Lord, I pray one of you tell my Lord, that my comming was to signifie to his Lordship, that he must out of hand rid this hereticke away. And going away he sayd vnto me, I certifie thee that thou mayst thanke none other man but me.

Phil.

I thanke you therefore with all mine hart: and God forgeue it you.

Story.

What? doest thou thanke me? if I had thee in my study halfe an houre, I thinke I should make you sing an other song.

Phil.

No maister Doctour, I stand vpon to sure a ground to be ouerthrowne by you now.* And thus they departed al away from me one after an other, vntil I was left al alone. And afterwards with my keeper going to my Colehouse (as I went) I met with my Lord of London, who spake vnto me gētly, as he hath hetherto in words saying:

London.

Philpot, if there be any pleasure I may shewe you in my house, I pray you require it and you shall haue it.

Philpot.

My Lord the pleasure that I will require of your Lordship is to hasten my iudgement which is committed vnto you, & so dispatche me forth of this miserable world,* vnto my eternall rest. And for all this fayre speache I can not attain hetherto this fortnight space, neither fire nor cādle, neither yet good lodging. But it is good for a man to be brought low in this world, & to be counted amongst y^e vilest, that hee may in time of rewarde receiue exaltation & glory. Therfore praised be God y^t hath humbled me, & geuen me grace with gladnes to be content there withall.

Let all that loue the truth say. Amen.

Thus endeth the fift Tragedy.

The sixt examination of Iohn Philpot had before the right honourable Lordes, Lorde Chamberlayne to the kinges Maiesty, the Vicount Herford, commonly called Lord Ferrers, the Lord Rich, the Lord S. Iohns, the Lord Winsor, the Lord Shandoys, Sir Ioh. Bridges Lieutenant of the Tower, and two other moe whose names I know not, with the B. of London and Doctour Chadsey, the sixt day of Nouember. An. 1555.

PHilpot.

Before that I was called afore the Lordes, and whiles they were in sitting downe, the Byshop of Lōdon came aside to me and whispered in myne eare,* willing me to vse my selfe before the Lordes of the queenes maiesties Councell prudently, and to take heede what I sayd: & thus he pretendeth to geue me counsaile because he wished me to do well, as I might now do if I list. And after the Lordes & other worshipfull gentlemen of y^e queenes Maiesties seruauntes were set, my Lorde of London placed himselfe at the end of the table, & called me to hym, & by the Lords I was placed at the vpper end agaynst him: where I kneeling downe, the Lordes commaunded me to stande vp, and after in this manner the Byshop began to speake.

London.

M. Philpot, I haue heretofore, both priuately my selfe, and openly before the Lordes of y^e Clergy,* mo times then once caused you to bee talked withall to reforme you of your errors, but I haue not found you yet so tractable as I would wish: Wherefore now I haue desired these honorable Lordes of the temporaltie and of the Queenes Maiesties Counsaile, who haue taken paynes with me this day (I thanke them therefore) to heare you what you can say, that they may be iudges whether I haue sought all meanes to do you good or no: and I dare be bold to say in theyr behalfe, that if you shew your selfe conformable to the Queenes Maiesties proceedinges, you shall finde as Page 1806 much fauour for your deliuerance, as you can wishe. I speake not this to fawne vpō you, but to bryng you home into the Church. Now let them heare what you can say.

Phil.

My Lorde I thanke God of this daye, that I haue such an honorable audiēce to declare my mynd before.* And I cannot but commend your Lordships equity in this behalfe, which agreeth with the order of the primatiue church which was, if any body had bene suspected of heresie (as I am now) he should be called, first before the archbishop or byshop of the Dioces where he was suspected, secondly in the presence of others his fellow byshops and learned elders, and thirdly in hearyng of the layty: where after the iudgement of Gods word declared, and with the assent of other Bishops and consent of the people he was condemned to exile for an hereticke,* or absolved. And the seconde poynt of that good order I haue found at your Lordships hands already in being called before you & your fellow bishops: & now haue the third sort of mē at whose hands I trust to finde more righteousnes in my cause then I haue found w^t my Lordes of y^e Clergy, God graunt I may haue at last the iudgement of Gods word concerning the same.

London.

M. Philpot. I praye you ere you go any further tell my Lordes here playnely whther you were by me or by my procurement committed to prison or not, and whether I haue shewed you anye crueltie sithen yee haue bene committed to my prison.

Phil.

If it shall please your Lordship to geue me leaue to declare forth my matter, I wil touch that afterward.

Rich.

Aunswere first of all to my Lordes two questions, & then proceede forth to the matter. How say you? wer you imprisoned by my Lorde or no? can you finde anye faulte since with his cruell vsing of you.

Phil.

I cannot laye to my Lordes charge the cause of my imprisonmēt, neyther I may say that he hath vsed me cruelly,* but rather for my part I might say that I haue found more gentlenesse at his Lordships handes then I dyd at myne owne Ordinaries for the time I haue bene wythin his prison, for that he hath called me three or foure times to mine answere, to the which I was not called twelue mōth and a halfe before.

Rich.

Well, now go to your matter.

Phil.

The matter is, that I am imprisoned for the disputations had by me in the Conuocation house agaynst the sacrament of the aaltar, which matter was not moued principally by me, but by the Prolocutor, with the consent of y^e Queenes Maiestie and of the whole house, and that house being a member of the Parliament house, ought to be a place of free speeche for all men of the house, by the ancient and laudable custome of this realme. Wherefore I thynke my selfe to haue sustayned hetherto great iniury for speaking my conscience freely in suche a place as I might lawfully do it: and I desire your honorable Lordships iudgement which be of the Parliament house, whether of right I ought to be impeached therefore, and sustayne the losse of my liuing (as I haue done) and moreouer of my life, as it is sought.

Rich.

You are deceaued herein: for the Conuocation house is no part of the Parliament house.*

Phil.

My Lord, I haue alwayes vnderstāded the contrary by suche as are more experte menne in thinges of thys realme then I: and againe, the title of euery Acte leadeth me to thinke otherwise, which alledgeth the agreement of the spiritualitie and temporaltie assembled together.

Rich.

Yea, that is meant of the spirituall Lordes of the vpper house.

Winsor.

In deed the Conuocation house is called together by one writte of the Summons of y^e Parliament of an old custome:* notwithstanding that house is no part of the parliament house.

Phil.

My Lordes, I must be contēted to abide your iudgementes in this behalfe.

Rich.

We haue told you the truth. Mary yet wee woulde not that you should be troubled for any thinge that there was spoken, so that you hauing spoken amisse, do declare now that you are sory therfore.

Lond.

My Lordes he hath spoken there manifest heresie, yea and there stoutly mayntayned the same against y^e blessed sacramēt of the aultar (and with that he put off his cap that al the Lords might reuerence & vayle theyr bonets at that Idoll as they did) and would not allow the reall presence of the body and bloude of Christe in the same: yet my Lordes, God forbid that I shoulde goe about to shewe him extremity for so doing, in case he will repent & reuoke his wicked sayings: & if in faith he wil so do, w^t your lordships consent he shalbe released by and by. Mary if he wil not, he shal look for y^e extremitie of the law, & that shortly.

Chamb.

My Lorde of London speaketh reasonably vnto you: take it whiles it is offered you.

Rich.

How say you? Will you acknowledge the reall presence of the bloud and body of Christ, as a• the learned mē of this realm do in the Masse, and as I do, and wil beleue as long as I liue, I do protest it?

Phil.

My Lord I do acknowledge in the sacramente of the body and bloud of Christ such a presence, as the worde of God doth allow and teach me.

Rich

That shalbe none otherwise then you lift.

London.

A sacrament is the signe of a holy thing:• So that there is both the signe which is the accident (as y^e whitenes, roūdnes, & shape of bread) and there is also the thyng it selfe, as very Christ both God and man. But these heretickes will haue the sacramentes to be but bare signes. How say you? declar• vnto my Lordes here whether you do allow the thing it selfe in the sacrament or no?

Phil.

I do confesse y^t in the Lordes supper there is in due respectes both the signe and the thing signified,• when it is duely ministred after the institution of Christ.

London.

You may see how he goeth about the bush (as he hath done before) with my Lords of the Clergy, and dare not vtter his minde playnly.

Rich.

Shew vs what maner of presence you allowe in the sacrament.

Philpot.

If it shall please you my Lord of London, to geue me leaue to proceede orderly thereunto, and to let me declare my minde without interruption, I wil throughly open my minde therin.

L. Shand.

I pray you my Lord, let hym speake his mynde.

Phil.

My Lordes, that at the first I haue not plainly declared my iudgemēt vnto you in this, because I cānot speake hereof without the daunger of my life.

Rich.

There is none of vs here that seeketh thy life, or meane to take any aduauntage of that thou shalt speake.*

Phil.

Although I mistrust not your honorable Lordships y^r be here of y^e tēporalty: yet here is one that sitteth against me (pointing to my Lord of London) that wil lay it to my charge euen to the death. Notwithstanding, seeing youre honours do require me to declare my minde of the presēce of Christ in the sacrament, that ye may perceauē that I am not ashamed of the Gospell of Christe, neither doe mayntayne any opinion without probable and sufficient authoritie of the Scripture, I will shewe franckly my minde without all colour, what soeuer shall ensu• vnto me therfore, so that my Lord of London wil not let me to vtter my minde.

Rich.

My Lord, permit him to say what he can, seeyng hee is willing to shew his mind.

London.

I am content my Lordes, let him say what he can I will heare him.

Phil.

That which I doe entend to speake vnto you (right honourable Lordes) I do protest here,* first before God & his Angels, that I speake it not of vaynglory, neyther of singularitie, neither of wilfull stubburnes, but truely vpon a good conscience grounded on Gods worde, against y^e which I dare not do for feare of damnation which wil follow that which is done contrary to knowledge. Neyther do I disagree to the proceedinges of this realme in the religion for that I loue not the Queene (whom I loue from the bottome of my hart) but because I ought to loue & fear God in his word more then man in his lawes, though I stand as I seeme to do in this consideration, and for none other as God I call to witnes.

There be two things principally, by the which y^e clergy at this day doth deceiue the whole realm: that is, * y^e sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ, and the name of y^e Catholicke church: y^e which both they do vsurpe, hauing in deed none of them both. And as touching theyr Sacrament, which they terme of the aulter, I say now as I sayd in the Conuocation house that it is not the Sacramente of Christ, * neither in the same is there any maner of Chrystes presence. Wherefore they deceiue the Queenes maiesty: and you of y^e nobilitie of thys realme, in making you to beleue y^t to be a sacrament which is none, and cause you to commit manifest Idolatry in worshipping that for God, whiche is no God. And in testimony of this to be true, besides manifest prooffe which I am able to make to the Queenes maiesty and to all you of her nobility, I will yeld my lyfe. The which to do, if it were not vpon a sure groūd, it were to my vtter damnation.

And where they take on them the name of the Catholicke church (wherby they blinde many folkes eyes) they are nothing so, * calling you from the true religion whiche was reuealed & taught in K. Edwardes time, vnto vaine superstition. And this I will say for the tryall hereof, that if they can proue themselues to be the catholicke church (as they shal neuer be able to do) I wil neuer be agaynst their doynge, but reuoke all that I haue sayd. And I shall desire you (my Lordes) to be a meane for me to the Queenes Page 1807 maiestie, that I may be brought to y^e iust triall hereof. Yea I will not refuse to stand agaynst ten of the best of them in this realme. And if they be able to proue otherwise then I haue sayd, either by writing or by reasoning, with good & lawfull authoritie, I will here promise to recant whatsoever I haue sayd, * & to consent to them in all poyntes. And in the declaratiō of these things more at large, which now I write in summe: the Bishop of London eftsones would haue interrupted me, but the Lords procured me libertie to make out my tale, to the great grieve of my Lord bishop of London, as it appeared by his dumpes he was in.

Londō.

It hath bene told me before, that you loue to make a long tale.

Rich.

Al heretickes do boast of the spirite of God, and euery one would haue a church by himselfe: as Ioan of Kent and the Anabaptistes. I had my selfe Ioan of Kent a seuen night in my house after y^e writ was out for her to be burnt where my Lorde of Canterb. and Bishop Ridley resorted almost daily vnto her: but she was so high in the spirite y^t they could do nothing with her for all theyr learning. But she went wilfully vnto the fire, was burnt, and so do you now.

Phil.

As for Ioan of Kent, shee was a vayne woman (I knew her well & an heretick indeed,* well worthye to bee burnt because she stooode agaynst one of the manifest artycles of our faith, contrary to the scriptures: and such vayne spirites be soone known from y^e true spirite of God & hys church, for y^t the same abideth w^tin the limites of GODS word and will not go out of the same, neither stubburnely mayntaine any thing cōtrary to the word, as I haue gods word throughly on my side to shew for that I stand in.

London.

I pray you, how will you ioine me these ij. scriptures together: Pater maior me est, & pater & ego vnum sumu{us} I must enterprete the same, because my Lordes here vnderstand not the Latin: that is to saye: The Father is greater then I, and I and the father are one. But I cry you mercye my Lordes, I haue mispoken, in saying you vnderstande no Latine: for the most part of you vnderstand Latin as well as I. But I spake in consideration of my Lord Shādoys and M. Bridges his brother, whom I take to be no great Latin men. Now shew your cunning, and ioine these two scriptures by the word if you can.

Phil.

Yes that I can right well. For we must vnderstande that in Christ there be two natures, the diuinitie and Humanitie, & in respect of his humanitie it is spoken of christ The Father is greater then I. But in respect of hys Deitie, he sayd agayne: The Father and I be one.

London.

But what scripture haue you?

Phil.

Yes, I haue sufficient scripture for the prooofe of that I haue sayd.* For the first, it is written of Christ in y^e Psalmes: Diminuisti eum paulominus ab Angelis: Thou hast made him a little lesser then Aungels. It is the xv. Psalme, beginning? Coeli enarrant. And there I misreckoned, wherewithall my Lord tooke me.

London.

It is in Domine Dominus noster. Yee may see my Lords how wel this man is vsed to say his Mattins.

Phil.

Though I say not Mattins in suche order as youre Lordship meaneth: yet I remember of olde, that Domine Dominus noster, and Coeli enarrant, bee not farre asunder: and albeit I misnamed the Psalme, it is no preiudice to the truth of that I haue proued.

London.

What say you then to the second scripture? howe couple you that by the word to the other?

Phil.

The text it selfe declareth, y^t notwithstanding Chryst did abase himself in our humayne nature: yet he is stil one in Deitie with the Father. And this S. Paule to the Hebrues doth more at large set foorth. And as I haue by the scriptures ioyned these two scriptures together, so am I able to do in all other Articles of fayth which we ought to beleue and by the manifest word of God to expound them.

London.

How can that be, seing saynct Paule sayth, that the letter killeth, but it is the spirite that geueth life.

Philpot.

S. Paul meaneth not the worde of God, written in it selfe killeth, which is the word of life and the faythfull testimonie of the Lord, but that the worde is vnprofitable and killeth him that is void of the spirite of God, although he be the wisest man of the world, and therfore S. Paule sayd, That the Gospell to some was a sauour of life vnto lyfe, and to some other a sauour of death vnto death.* Also an example hereof we haue in the vi. of Iohn, of them who hearing y^e worde of God without the spirite were offended thereby: wherefore Christ sayd, The flesh profiteth nothing, it is the spirite that quickeneth.

London.

What? do you vnderstand that of S. Paule and of S. Iohn so?

Philpot.

It is not mine owne interpretation, it is agreable to the word in other places: and I haue learned y^e same of auncient fathers interpreting it likewise.* And to y^e Corinthians as it is written: Animalis homo non percipit ea quae sunt spiritus Dei: spiritualis dijudicat omnia. The natural man perceiueth not the thinges that bee of the spirite of God: but the spirituall man whiche is indued with the spirite, iudgeth all thinges.

London.

You see my Lordes, that this man will haue but hys owne minde, and will wilfully cast away himselfe. I am sory for him.

Phil.

The words y^t I haue spoken be none of mine but of the Gospell, wheron I ought to stand. And if, you my lord of London, can bring better authoritie for the faythe you would draw me vnto, then that which I stand vpō, I wil gladly heare y^e same by you or by any other in this realm.

Wherefore I kneeling down, besought the Lords to be good vnto me a poore Gentleman,* that would fayne lyue in the world if I might: and to testifie: as you haue heard me to say this day, that if any man can approue y^t I ought to be of any other maner of faith then that of which I now am, and can proue the same sufficiently, I will be neyther wil•ull neither desperate, as my Lorde of London woulde make you beleue me to be.

Rich.

What countrey man be you? are you of the Philpots of Hampshyre?

Phil.

Yea my Lorde I was Sir Peter Philpots sonne of Hampshyre.

Rich.

He is my neare kinsman: wherefore I am the more sory for him.

Phil.

I thanke your Lordship that it pleaseth you to chalenge kinred of a poore prisoner.

Rich.

In faith I would go an hundreth miles on my bare feete to do you good.

Cham.

He may do well enough if he liSt.

S. Iohn.

M. Philpot: you are my countryman, & I woulde be glad you should do well.

Rich.

You said euen now, that you would desire to mayntaine your beliefe before ten of the best in the realme. You did not well to compare with the Nobilitie, of the Realme.* But what if you haue tenne of the best in the Realme to heare you, will you be tryed by them?

Phil.

My Lord, your Lordshippe mistaketh me to thinke that I challenge tenne of the best of the Nobilitie in thys realme: It was no part of my minde, but I meant of the best learned on the contrary side.

Rich.

Wel I take your meaning What if meanes be made to the Queenes maiestie, that you shall haue your request will you be iudged by them?

Phil.

My Lord, it is not meete that a man shoulde be iudged by his aduersaries.

Rich.

By whom then would you be iudged?

Phil.

I will make your honours iudges, that shalbe hearers of vs.

Rich.

I dare be bolde to procure for you of the Queenes maiestie that you shall haue tenne learned men to reason with you and twenty or forty of the Nobility to heare, so you wil promise to abide theyr iudgement. How say you? will you promise here afore my Lordes so to do?

Phil.

I will be contented to be iudged by them.

Rich.

Yea, but wil you promise to agree to theyr iudgemēt.

Phil.

There be causes why I may not so do, vnlesse I wer sure they would iudge according to the word of God.

Rich.

O, I perceauē you wil haue no man iudge but your selfe,* and thinke your selfe wiser then all the learned men of this Realme.

Phil.

My Lorde, I seeke not to be myne owne iudge, but am contēt to be iudged by other, so that the order of iudgement in matters of religion be kept that was in the primatiue Church, which is, first that Gods wil by his word was sought, and thereunto both the spiritualty and temporaltie was gathered together, and gaue theyr consentes & iudgement, & such kind of iudgement I will stand to.

London.

My Lordes he would make you beleue that hee were profoundly seene in auncient writers of the iudgementes of the primatiue Church, and there was neuer any such maner of iudgement vsed as he now talketh of.

Phil.

In the Epistles of S. Ciprian I am able to shewe it you.

London.

A, I tell you there is no such thing: fet me Cyprian hether.*

Phil.

You shall finde it otherwise when the booke commeth. And D. Chedsay his Chaplayne (whom he appointed to fet his booke) whispered the Bishop in his care, and fet not the booke, by likelihoode that he should haue susteined the reproche thereof if the booke had bene fet. Well my Lord (quoth I) mayster Doctor knoweth it is so, or els he would haue fet the booke ere this.

Rich.

You woulde haue none other iudge (I see) but the worde.

Phil.

Yes my Lord: I will be tryed by the word, & by such Page 1808 as will iudge according to the word. As for an example, if there were a controuersy betweene your Lordship and an other vpon the words of a statute, must not the words of the statute iudge and determine the controuersie?

Rich.

*No mary the Iudges of the law may determine the meaning therof.

Load.

He hath brought as good an example agaynst hym selfe as can be.

And here the B. thought he had good handfast against me, and therefore enlarged it with many wordes to the iudgement of the Church.

The Lordes.

Hee hath ouerthrowne himselfe by his owne argument.

Phil.

My Lords, it seemeth to your honours y^t you haue great aduauntage of me by the example I brought in,* to expresse my cause? but if it be pondered throughly, it maketh wholly with me, and nothing against me, as my Lord of London hath pretended. For I will aske of my Lorde Rich here whom I know to haue good knowledge in the lawes and statutes of this realm, albeit a Iudge may discern the meaning of a statute agreeable to y^e wordes, whether the same may iudge a meaning contrary to the expres wordes or no?

Rich.

He cannot so do.

Phil.

Euen so say I, that no man ought to iudge the word of God to haue a meaning contrary to the expresse words therof, as this false church of Rome doth in many things: and with this the Lordes seemed to be satisfied, and made no further replication herein.

Rich.

I meruaile thē why you do deny the expresse words of Christ in the sacrament, saying, This is my body, and yet you will not sticke to say it is not his body. Is not GOD omnipotent? and is not he able as well by his omnipotencie to make it his body, as he was to make man flesh of a peece of clay? Did not he say: This is my body whiche shalbe betrayed for you? and was not his very bodye betrayed for vs therefore it must needes be his body.

London.

My Lord Rich, you haue sayde wonderfull well and learnedly. But you might haue begon with hym before also in the 6. of Iohn, where Christe promised to geue his body in the sacrament of the aultar, saying: Panis quem ego dabo, caro mea est: The bread which I will geue, is my fleshe. How can you answere to that?

Phil.

If it please you to geue me leaue to answere first my Lord Rich, I will also answere this obiection.

Rich.

Answere my lord of Lōdon first, & after come to me.

Philpot.

My Lord of London may be soone answered, that that the saying of S. Iohn is,* that the humanitie of chryst which he took vpon him for the redemption of man, is the bread of life, whereby our bodyes & soules be susteined to eternall lyfe, of the which the sacramentall bread is a liuely representation and an effectuall cohabitation to all suche as beleue on his Passion: and as Christ sayth in the same 6^a of Iohn,* I am the bread that came downe from heauen:, but yet he is not materiall neither naturall bread. Likewise y^e bread is his flesh, not naturall or substantiall, but by signification, and by grace in a sacrament.

And now to my Lord Riches argument. I do not deny the expresse wordes of Christ in the sacrament, This is my body: but I deny that they are naturally and corporally to be taken: they must be taken sacramentally and spiritually, according to the expresse declaration of Christ saying, that the wordes of the sacrament whiche the Capernites tooke carnally, as the papistes nowe doe, ought to be taken spiritually, & not carnally, as they falsly imagine not waying what interpretation of Christe hath made in this behalfe, neither follow the Institution of Christ, neyther the vse of the Apostles and of the primatiue Church, who neuer taught, neither declared no such carnall maner of presence as is now exacted of vs violently without any ground of scripture or antiquitie,* who vsed to put oute of the Church all such as did not receiue the sacrament wyth the rest, and also to burne that which was left after the receiuing, as by the Canon of the Apostles and by the decree of the Councell of Antioch, may appeare.

London.

No, that is not so: they were onely Cathecumeni which went out of the Church at the celebration of the cōmunion, and none other.

Phil.

It was not onely of such as were Nouices in fayth but all others that did not receaue.

London.

What say you to the omnipotencie of God? is not he able to performe that which he spake, as my Lord Rich hath very well said? I tell thee, that God by his omnipotency may make himselfe to be this carpet if he will.

Phil.

As concerning the omnipotencie of God, I say that God is able to do (as the Prophet Dauid sayth) what soeuer he willeth: but he willeth nothing that is not agreeable to hys word: as that is blasphemy which my Lorde of London hath spoken, that God may become a Carpet. For as I haue learned of auncient writers: *Non potest Deus facere quae sunt naturae suae contraria: That is, God cannot doe that which is contrary to his nature, as it is contrary to y^e nature of God to be a Carpet. A Carpet is a creature: & God is the creator: and the creator cānot be the creature: wherfore vnlesse you can declare by the worde, that Christ is otherwise present with vs then spiritually and sacramentally by grace, as he hath taught vs, * you pretend the omnipotencie of God in vayne?

London.

Why? wilt thou not say that Christ is really present in the sacrament? Or do you deny it?

Phil.

I deny not that Christ is really in the Sacrament to the receauer therof according to Christes institution. *

London.

What meane you by really present?

Phil.

I meane by really present, present in deed.

London

Is God really present euery where?

Phil.

He is so.

London.

How proue you that?

Phil.

The Prophet Esay sayth? That God filleth all places: and where soeuer there be two or three gathered together in Christes name, there is he in the midst of them.

London?

What? his humanitie?

Phil.

No my Lord, I meane the deitie, accordinge to that you demaunded.

Rich.

My Lord of London,* I praye you let mayster Doctour Chedsey reason with him, and let vs see how hee can aunswere him: for I tell thee he is a learned man in deede & one that I do credite before a great many of you, whose doctrine the Queenes maiestie and the whole realme doth well allow, therefore heare him.

Lond.

My Lordes I pray you, wil it please you to drinke? you haue talked a great while, and much talke is thursty.* I will leaue M. Doctour and him reasoning together a while, with your leaue, and will come to you by and by a'gayne. He went (as I suppose) to make rowme for more drinke, after the Lordes had dronken.

Rich.

My Lord Rich sayde to the Lordes, I praye you let the poore man drinke, for hee is thirsty: and with that,* hee called for a cup of drinke, and gaue it me, and I dranke before them all: God requite it hym, for I was a thyrst indeede. Afterwardes Doctor Chadsey began in this wise, making a great processe, of the which this is the effect.

Chadsey.

M. Philpot findeth fault with the Conuocation house before your Lordships, that he hath layne this long in prison, and that he had there a dosen Arguments,* wherof he could not be suffred to prosecute one throughly, whiche is not so, for he had * leaue to say what he could & was aunswere to asmuche as he was able to bring: and when he had * nothing els to say, he fell to weeping.* I was there present and can testifie therof: albeit there is a booke abroad of the report of the disputation to the contrary in y^e which there is * neuer a true worde. And where as you require to be satisfied of the sacrament, I will shew you the * trueth therof, both by the scriptures, and by the Doctors.

Philpot.

It is a shrewed lykelihooode that you will conclude with any truth, since you haue begonne with so many vntruthes,* as to say that I was aunswere whiles I had any thyng to say, and that I wept for lacke of matter to say, and that the booke of the reporte of the disputation is nothing true. God be prayسد, there were a good many of Noble men, Gentlemen, and worshipfull men y^t heard and saw the doings therof, which can testifie that you here haue made an vniust report before these honorable Lords. And that I wept was not for lacke of matter, as you slaüder me: for

I thank God, I haue more matter thē y^e best of you all shall euer be able to answeere, as litle learning as I haue: but my weeping was, as Christes was vpon Hierusalem seeing the destruction that should fall vppon her: and I foreseeing then y^e destruction whiche you (thorough violence and vnrighteousnesse, which you there declared) would worke agaynst the true Church of Christ and his faythfull members (as this daye beareth witnesse) was compelled to weepe in remembraunce of that whiche I w^t infinite more haue felt and shall feelee.

Al these words I did then speake out, being interrupted by my Lord Rich, saying that I shoulde suffer hym to proceede out in his matter,* and afterwarde I shuld haue leysure to aunswere him in euery Article. But he promysed more then he could performe as the end did wel declare for he had not the consent of the spiritualtie to his promise, which now rule the rost. God shorten their cruell dayes,* for his electes sake. And therefore I adde this, which I had purposed to haue spoken if then I might haue bene suffered, least any that perfectly know not the thinges done in the Conuocation house and now layd to my charge, if they shoulde not be aunswered by me, might reckon Doctour Chadseys sayinges to bee true. And as concerning the Page 1809 booke of the report of the disputations, I wrote the same & it is true in euery argument, as M. Deane of Roochester, and M. Cheyney Archdeacon of Herford (yet being aliue, and within the realme) can testifie.

Chadsey.

You haue of scriptures the foure Euangelistes for the probation of Christes reall presence to be in the sacrament after the wordes of consecration, with S. Paule to the Corinthians: whiche all saye: Hoc est corpus meum: This is my body. They say not as you woulde haue me to beleue,* this is not the bodye. But specially the 6. of Iohn proueth the same most manifestly, where Christ promised to geue his body, which hee performed in his last supper, as it appeareth by these wordes. Panis quem ego dabo, caro mea est, quam ego dabo pro mūdi vita: The bread whiche I wyll geue is my flesh, which I wil geue for the life of the world.

Phil.

My Lord Rich, with your leaue, I must needes interrupt him a litle, because he speaketh open blasphemy against y^e death of Christ: for if that promise brought in by s. Iohn was performed by Christ in his last supper, thē needed he not to haue dyed after he had geuen the sacrament.

Rich.

Let maister Doctour make an end of his argumēts, and afterward object to him what you can.

Chadsey.

You must note that there is twise *Dabo in thys saying of S. Iohn, & the first is referred to the sacrament of the au•tar: & the second to y^e sacrifice vpon the crosse: and besides these manifest scriptures, there bee many auncient Doctors prouing the same, as Ignatius, Irenaeus, & S. Cyprian (whose authoritie he recited at large) which I do omitte because I was not permitted to answeere the same.

Rich.

Now aunswere, and object to him what you can, & you shalbe heard.

Phil.

My Lord, the chieftest ground where he with the rest of his side do ground thēselues agaynst vs,* be these words This is my body, with a false pretence of the omnipotency of God. And before I will come to the particular aunsweres of all that he hath alledged, for that your Lordships may y^e better vnderstand me, what I meane and whereuppon I stand, I will require mayster Doctor to aunswere me one question. But first of all I do protest to your honours that I thinke as reuerently of the sacrament, as a christian mā ought to do, and that I acknowledge the sacrament of the body and bloud of Christe, ministred after Christes Institution, to bee one of the greatest treasures and comfortes that he left vs on the earth: and contrariwise it is most discomfort and abhominable, not being ministred as it ought to be, as it is vsed now a dayes. And now to my question, which is this:* whether these wordes onely: Hoc est corpus meum: This is my body, spoken by a priest ouer the bread and wine, may make the body and bloud of Christ, as you suppose or no?

Chedsey.

Staggering what he might say, at last hee sayd, that these wordes alone pronounced by the Priest, be sufficient to make the bread and the wyne the very bodye and bloud of Christ really.

Philpot.

*That is blasphemy to say, and agaynst al y^e scriptures and Doctours, who affirme that the forme and substance in consideration must be obserued whiche Christ vsed and did institute as S. Cyprian sayth: In sacrificio quod Christus est, non nisi Christus sequendus: In the sacrifice whiche is Christ, onely is Christ to be followed. And by the lawe it is forbidden to adde or take away from Gods word. And S. Peter sayth,*If anye man speake, let him speake as the worde of God. Wherefore whosoeuer sayth that these wordes onely: This is my body, do make a presence of christ, without, blesse, take, and eate, which be three as substanciall poyntes of the Sacramente as, Thys is my bodye, is, he is highly deceiued.

Therefore S. Austen sayth, Accedat verbum ad elementum & fit sacramentum: Let the word be ioyned to the element, and it be commeth a sacrament: So that if the entier worde of Christes Institution be not obserued in the ministration of a Sacrament, it is no sacrament: as the sacrifices which the ten tribes did offer at Bethell to God, were not acceptable because they were not in all poyntes done according to Gods word. Wherefore except blessing be made after the word (whiche is a due thanksgeuing for our redemption in Christ) and also a shewing forth of the Lordes death in such wise as the congregation may be edified: and moreouer a taking and eating after Christes commaundement: except (I say) these three partes be first performed (which is not done in the Masse) these wordes: This is my bodye, which are last placed in the Institution of the Lords supper, can not be verified. For Christe commaunded aswell, Take, ye, eate ye, as This is my body.

Chadsey.

Christ sayd: Take, eate, this is my body, and not, take ye,* eate ye.

Phil.

No did Mayster Doctour? Be not these the wordes of Christ: Accipite manducate? and do not these wordes in the plurall number signifie, Take ye, eate ye: and not take thou, eate thou, as you would suppose?

Chadsey.

I graunt it as you say.

Phil.

Likewise of conseqencie, you (Mayster Doctour) must needes deny, which you haue sayd, that these words, This is my body, being onely spoken, be sufficient to make y^e body and bloud of Christe in the sacrament, as you haue vntruely sayd.

London.

Then came in the bishop agayne, and sayd, what is it that you would haue mayster Doctor deny?

Phil.

My Lord M. Doctor hath affirmed that these words This is my body, spoken by the prieste, onely doe make the sacrament.

London.

In deede if mayster Briges shoulde speake these wordes ouer the bread and wine,* they woulde be of none effect: but if a priest speake them after a due maner, they are effectuell, and make a reall body.

Phil.

Mayster Doctor hath sayd otherwise.

London.

I thinke you mistake him: for hee meaneth of the wordes duely pronounced.

Philpot.

Let hym reuoke that he hath graunted, and then will I begin agayne with that whiche before was sayde: that, This is my bodye, hath no place, except, blesse, take, and eate, duely go before. And therefore because the same words do not go before This is my body, but preposterously follow in your sacrament of the Masse, it is not the sacrament of Christ, neither hath Christ in it present.

Chadsey.

If, This is my body, onely do not make the Sacrament, no more do, blesse, take, and eate.

Philpot.

I graunt that the one without the other cannot make the sacrament. And it can be no sacrament vnlesse y^t whole action of Christ doth concurre together accordyng to the first Institution.

Chadsey.

Why, then you will not haue it to be the bodye of Christ, vnlesse it be receaued.

Phil.

No verely, it is not the very body of Christ to none other,* but to such as condignely receaue the same after hys Institution.

London.

Is not a loafe a loafe, being set on y^e table though no body eate therof.

Phil.

It is not like my Lord. For a loafe is a loafe before it •e set on the Table:* but so is not the Sacrament a perfecte Sacrament before it be duely ministred at the table of the Lord.

London.

I pray you, what is it in the meane while, before it is receaued.

Phil.

It is (my Lord) the signe begon of a holy thing, & yes no perfect sacrament vntill it be receaued. For in the sacrament there be two thinges to be considered, the signe and the thing it selfe, which is Christ and hys whole Passion, & it is that to none but to such as worthily receaue the holy signes of bread & wine, according to Christes institutiō.

Winsor.

There were neuer none, that denyed the words of Christ as you do. Did he not say: This is my body?

Philpot.

My Lord, I pray you be not deceaued. We do not deny the wordes of Christ: but we say,* these wordes bee of none effect, being spoken otherwise then Christe did institute them in hys last supper. For an example: Chryst biddeth the church to baptise in the name of the father, the sonne, and the holy Ghost: if a Priest say those wordes ouer y^e water and there bee no childe to be Baptised, those wordes onely pronounced doe not make Baptisme. And agayne, Baptisme is not onely Baptisme to suche as bee baptised, and to none other standing by.

L. Chamb.

I pray you my Lord, let me aske him one question. What kinde of presence in the sacrament (duely minystred according to Christes ordinaunce) do you allow?

Philpot.

If any come worthely to receaue, then do I confesse the presence of Christ wholly to bee, with all y^e fruites of his Passion, vnto the sayd worthy receauer, by the spyrite of God, and that Christ is therby ioyned to hym and he to Christ.

L. Chamb.

I am aunswered.

London.

My Lordes take no heede of him, for hee goeth about to deceaue you. His similitude that he bryngeth in of Baptisme, is nothing like to the sacrament of the aultar. For if I should say to sir Iohn Briges beyng with me at supper, & hauing a fat Capō, take, eate, this is a fat Capon although he eate not thereof, is it not a Capon still? And likewise of a peece of Beefe, or of a cup of wyne, if I saye:* drinke, this is a good cup of wyne, is it not so, because hee drinketh not therof?

Phil.

My lord your similitudes be to grosse for so high misteryes as wee haue in hande, as if I were your equall, I could more playnly declare, and there is much more dissimilitude betweene common meates and drinkes then there is betweene baptisme and the sacramente of the body and bloud of Christ. Like must be compared to lyke. & Page 1810 spir•tuall things with spirituall, and not spirituall things w^t corporall things. And meates and drinkes be of theyr owne natures good or euill, and your woordēs commending or discommēding, do but declare what they are. But the sacraments be to be considered according to the worde which Christ spake of them, of the which, Take ye, & eate ye, besome of the chiefe, concurrent to the making o• y^e same, without the which there can be no sacraments: and therfore in Greeke, the Sacrament of the body and bloude of Christ is called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 .i. Communion, and likewyse in the Gospell Christe commaunded, saying: Diuidite inter vos. i. Diuide it among you.

Chadsey.

S. Paule calleth it a Communication.

Phil.

That doeth more expresly shew that there must be a participation of the Sacrament together.

Lon.

My Lords, I am sory I haue troubled you so long with this obstinate man, with whom we can do no good: I wil trouble you no longer now: * and with y^t the Lordes rose vp; none of them saying any euil worde vnto me, half amazed, in my iudgement, God worke it to good.

Thus endeth the sixt part of this Tragedie: The seuenth looke for with ioy.

The vij. examination of Iohn Philpot, had the xix. of Nouember before the Bishops of London and Rochester, the Chauncellour of Lichfield, and Doctour Chadsey.

LONDON

Syrha come hither. How chance you come no sooner? It is wel done of you to make master Chauncellor and me to tary for you this houre? * by the faith of my body, halfe an houre before masse, and halfe an houre euen at masse, looking for your comming?

Phil.

My Lorde, it is not vnknownen to you, that I am a prisoner, and that the doores be shut vpon me, & I can not come when I list: but as soone as the doores of my prison were open, I came immediately.

London.

We send for thee, to the intent thou shouldest haue come to Masse. Howe say you, woulde you haue come to Masse or no, if the doores had sooner bene opened?

Phil.

My Lord, that is an other maner of question.

Lon.

Loe maister Chauncellour, I tolde you we shoulde haue a froward fellow of him: he will answere directly to nothing. I haue had him before both spiritual Lords and the temporall, and thus he fareth stil: yet he rekeneth him selfe better learned then all the realme. Yea, before y^e temporall Lordes the other day, * he was so foolish to chalenge the best: he woulde make him selfe learned, and is a verye moraunt foole in deede.

Phil

I reckon I answered your Lordshippe before the Lordes plaine enough.

London.

Why answereest thou not directly, whether thou wouldest haue gone to Masse with vs or no, if thou haddest c•me in time?

Phil.

Mine answere shall be thus, that if your Lordship can prooue your masse, whereunto you would haue me to come, to be the true seruice of God, wherunto a Christian ought to come, I will afterward come with a good will.

London.

Loke I pray you: the King and the Queene, and all the Nobilitie of the realme doe come to Masse, and yet he will not. * By my faith thou art too well handled: thou shalt be worse handled hereafter, I warrant thee.

Phil.

If to lie in a blind Colehouse, may be counted good handling, both without fire & candle, then may it be sayd, I am well handled. Your lordship hath power to entreat my body as you list.

Lond.

Thou art a foole, and a very ignoraunt foole. Maister Chauncellour, in good faith I haue handled hym and his fellowes with as much gentlenesse as they can desire. I lette their frends come vnto them to relieue them. And wot ye what? the other day they had gottē themselues vp into the top of the leades with a many of preutises, gasing abroad as though they had bene at libertie: but I shall cut of your resort: and as for the prentises, they were as good not to come to you, if I take them.

Philpot.

My Lord, we haue no such resorte to vs as your Lordship imagin•th, and there commeth very fewe vnto vs. And of prentises I know not one, neither haue we any leades to walke on ouer our Colehouse,* that I wot of: wherfore your Lordship hath mistaken your marke.

Lond.

Nay, nowe you thinke (because my Lorde Chauncellour is gone) that we wil burne no mo: yes I warrant thee, I will dispatch you shortly, vnlesse yo• do recant.

Phil.

My lord, I had not thought that I shuld haue ben <◇> now,* neither so raw as I am, but wel rosted to ashes.

Chaunc.

Case not your selfe wilfully away M. Philpot. Be content to be ruled by my lord here, and by other learned men of this realme, and you may do wel inough.

Phil.

My conscience beareth me recorde y^t I seeke to please God, & that the loue and feare of God causeth me to do as I doe: and I were of all other creatures most miserable, if for mine owne will onely I did loose all the commodities I might haue in this life,* and afterward to be cast to damnation. But I am sure, it is not my wil wheron I stande, but Gods will, which will not suffer me to be cast away, I am sure.

Chaunc.

You are not so sure, but you may be deceiued.

Lon.

Well, since thou wilt not be conformable by no faire meane, I will procede against thee Ex officio,* and therefore harken here to such articles as I haue heere wrytten, and I charge thee to make answere to them: and with that he red a li•ell which hee had in his hand of diuers Articles, and when he had done, he bad me answere.

Philpot.

Your libel (my lord) containeth in summe, 2. speciall poyntes: The first pretendeth, that I should be of your dioces, and therefore your lordship vpon diuers suspectes & infamies of heresie going vpon me, is moued to procede against me by your ordinarie office:* the which first is not true, for that I am not of your Lordships diocesse, as the libel doth pretēd. And the second is, that I being baptised in the catholicke church, and in y^e catholicke faith, am gone from them: the which is not so, for I am of that catholicke faith and church as I was baptised vnto.

London.

What? art thou not of my Dioces? Where are ye now, I pray you?

Phil.

My lord, I can not deny but I am in your cole house, which is your diocesse: yet am I not of your diocesse.

Lond.

You were sent hether vnto me by the Queenes maiesties commissioners, and thou art nowe in my diocesse: wherefore I will proceede against thee as thy Ordinarie.

Phil.

I was brought hether through violence, and therefore my present being now in your diocesse, is not enough to abridge me of mine owne ordinary iurisdiction,* neither maketh it mee vnwillingly subiecte to your iurisdiction since it commeth by force, and by such men as had no iust authority so to doe, no more then a sanctuarie man being by force brought forth of his place of priuiledge, doth ther by lose his priuiledge, but alwaies may challenge the same where soeuer he be brought.

Chadsey.

Hath not the Queenes maiestie authoritie by her commissioners, to remoue your body whether shee will? and ought you not to obey heerein.

Phil.

I graunt y^t the Queenes maiestie (of her iust power) may trāspose my body, whether it shall please her grace to commaunde the same. But yet by your lawes.Spiritualia non sunt subiecta Imperatoris potestati.* i. Spiritual causes be not subiect to the temporal power. As for example: you M. doctor if the Queenes maiestie woulde appoynt two temporall men to be iudges ouer you in certaine spirituall matters, might not you alledge the priuiledge of a clearke, demaund competent spirituall iudges in your causes?

London,

Doth not a man (I pray you) sortiri forum ratione delecti?

Phil.

My Lord, your rule is true in temporal matters, but in spirituall causes it is not so: which be otherwise priuiledged.

London.

What sayest thou then to the seconde article, and to the other?

Phil.

My Lord, I say that I am not bound to answere the second, neither the rest, vnlesse the first be prooued.

London.

Well, suppose the first may be prooued (as it will be) what wil you say then to the second, that you are not of the same catholicke faith, neither of the same church now, as you were baptised in?

Phil.

I am of the same catholicke faith, and of the same catholicke church which is of Christ, the pillar and stablshment of truth.

London.

Nay that you are not.

Phil.

Yes that I am.

London.

Your Godfathers and Godmothers were of an other faith then you be now.

Phil.

I was not baptised neither into my Godfathers faith nor my Godmothers, but into the faith,* & into the church of Christ.

London.

How know you that?

Phil.

By the word of God, which is the touchstone of faith and the limites of the Church.

Lon.

Howe long hath your church stand I pray you?

Phil.

Euen from the beginning, from Christ and from his Apostles, and from their immediate successors.

Chaun.

He will prooue his church to be before Christ.

Phil.

If I did so, I goe not amisse: for there was a church before the comming of Christe, which maketh one catholicke church.

Chaun.

It is so in deede.

Phil.

I will desire no better rule then the same whiche is oftentimes brought in of your side, to proue both my faith Page 1811 and the catholicke church: that is, antiquitie, vniuersality, and vnitie.

Lond.

Do you not see what a bragging foolish felow this is? He would seeme to be very well seene in the Doctors, and he is but a foole.* By what Doctour arte thou able to proue thy Church? Name him, and thou shalt haue him.

Phil.

My Lorde, lette me haue all your auncient wryters with pen, and inke, and paper, and I will prooue both my faith and my Church out of euery one of them.

Lond.

No that thou shalt not haue. You shall see howe he lieth. S. Cyprian sayeth, there must be one high Priest, to the which the residue must obey, and they will allowe no heade, neither Uicar generall.

Phil.

S. Cyprian saith not, that there shoulde be a Uicare general ouer al. For in his booke De simplicitate Praelatorū, I am sure he saith the contrary: *Vnus episcopatus est, cuius pars in solidum a singulis tenetur. i. There is but one bishopricke which is wholly possessed of euery Bishop in part.

London.

Fet hether the booke, thou shalt see the manifest place against thee.

D. Chadsey brought the booke, and turned to the place in an Epistle wryttē vnto Cornelius, then bish. of Rome, and recited these words in summe, that it went not wel with the Church, *where the high Priest was not obeied, & so would haue concluded for the confirmation of y^e Bishops saying.

Phil.

M. Doctour you misconstrue the place of S. Cyprian: for he meaneth not thereby the high Priest, the bishop of Rome: *but euery Patriarke in his precincts, of whome there were 4. appoynted in his time. And in wryting vnto Cornelius he meaneth by y^e high priest, himselfe, which was then chief Bishop of Africa, whose authority the heretickes began to despise. Whereof he complaineth to Cornelius, & sayth: the church can not be well ordered, where y^e chief minister by order, after the iudgement of the scriptures, after the agreement of the people, and the consent of his fellow Bishops, is not obeied.

Lond.

Hath not the Bishop of Rome alwaies bene supreme head of the Church, and Christes Uicare in earth euen from Peter?

Phil.

No, that he was not. For by y^e word of God he hath no more authoritie, *then the Bishop of London hath.

London.

Was not Peter head of the Churche? And hathe not the Bishop of Rome, which is his successour, the same authoritie▪

Phil.

I graunt that the B. of Rome, as he is the successor of Peter, hath the same authority as Peter had: but Peter had no more authority, *then euery one of the apostles had.

Chauncel.

Yes that S. Peter had: for Christ said specially vnto him: Tibi dabo claues regni coelorum: I wil geue thee the keies of the kingdom of heauen: The which he spake to none other of his Disciples singularly but to him.

Phil.

S. Augustine answereth otherwise to the obiection, and sayeth: That if in Peter there had not bene the figure of the Church,*the Lord hadde not saide to him, to thee will I geue the keyes of the kingdome of heauen. The which if Peter receiued not, the Churche hath them not. If the Churche hath them, then Peter hath them not.

Lond.

What if I can prooue and shew you out of the Ciuill lawe, that all Christendome ought to folowe the holy Catholicke Churche of Rome,* as there is a speciall title thereof, De Catholica fide & sancta Romana Ecclesia.

Phil.

That is nothing material, seeing the things of God be not subiect to mans lawes: and Diuine matters must be ordered by the word of God, and not of man.

A Doctour.

What will you say, if I can prooue that Christ builded his Church vppon Peter, and that out of S. Cyprian?* Wil you then beleue that the B. of Rome ought to be supreme head of the Church?

Phil.

I know what S. Cyprian wryteth in that behalfe: but he meaneth nothing as you take it.

A Doctour.

S. Cyprian hath these woordes: Quòd super Petrum fundata fuit Ecclesia, tanquam super originem vnitatis. That vpon Peter was builded the Church, as vppon the first beginning of vnitie.

Phil.

He declareth that in an example, that vnitie must be in the church:* he grounded on Peter his church alone, and not vpō men. The which he doth more manifestly declare in the booke De simplicitate Praelatorum, saying: In persona vnus Christus dedit omnibus claues, vt omnium vnitatem denotaret. In the person of one man God gaue the keyes to al, that he in signification thereby might declare the vnitie of all men.

A Doctour.

What? will you vnderstande S. Cyprian so? That were good in deede.

Phil

I thinke you can not vnderstand s. Cyprian better, then he doth declare him selfe.

Lond.

I will desire you (M. Chauncellour) to take some paines with M. Doctor Chadsey, aboute his examination,* for I must go to the Parlament house. And I wil desire you to dine with me.

Phil.

Then the D. tooke againe his former authoritie in hand for want of another, and would haue made a farther circumstance, digressing from his purpose. To whome I said, he knew not whereabout he went, and therewith he laughed. And I saide, his diuinitie was nothing but scoffing.

M D.

Yea? then I haue done with you: and so went away.

Phil.

You are too yong in diuinitie to teach me in the matters of my faith.* Though you be learned in other things more then I, yet in Diuinitie I haue ben longer practised then you, for any thing I can heare of you: therefore be not too hastie to iudge that you doe not perfectly know.

Chauncel.

Peter and his successours from the beginning haue bene allowed for the supreme head of y^e Church, and that by the Scriptures, for that Christ sayde vnto hym in S. Iohn thrise: Feede my sheepe, pasce oues meas.

Phil.

That is none otherwise to be taken, then Ite,praedicate, go ye & preach: which was spoken to all the Apostles, as well as vnto Peter. And that Christ sayd thrise: Pasce oues meas, Feede my sheepe, it signifieth nothing else but the earnest studie that the ministers of God oughte to haue in preaching the woord. God graunt that you of the Cleargie would way your duetie in this behalfe more then you doe. Is this a iust interpretation of the Scripture, to take pasce oues meas, for to be lord of the whole world? In this meane while came in a Batcheler of Diuinitie, which is a reader of Greeke in Oxford belonging to the Bishop, and he tooke vpon him to helpe M. Chancellor.

Scholer.

What wil you say if I can shew you a Greke author called Theophilact, to interprete it so? wil you beleue his interpretation?

Phil.

Theophilacte is a late wryter, and one that was a fauourer of the B. of Rome: * and therefore not to be credited since his interpretation is contrary to the manifest words of the scripture, and contrary to the determination of many general Councils.

Scholer.

In what general Council was it otherwise, that the Bishop of Rome, was not supreme head ouer all.

Phil.

In Nice Councell I am sure it was otherwise: for Athanasius was there the chiefe Bishop and president of the Counsell, and not the Bishop of Rome. *

Scholer.

Nay, that is not so.

Phil.

Then I perceiue you are better sene in wordes then in knowledge of things: and I will gage with you what you will, it is so: as you maye see in the Epitome of the Councils.

Scholer.

I will set Eusebius and shew the contrary, and the booke of general Councils. He went into my Lordes closet, and brought Eusebius: * but the generall Councils he brought not, saying (for sauing of his honestie) that hee could not come by them, and there he wold haue defended that it was otherwise in Eusebius, but was not able to shew the same, and so shranke away confounded.

Chaun.

The church of Rome hath bene alwaies taken for the whole catholike church: therefore I would aduise you to come into the same with vs. You see all the men of this realme do cōdemne you. And why wil you be so singular.

Phil.

I haue said, and stil do say, that if you can be able to proue it vnto me, that I wil be of the same. But I am sure that the Church whiche you make so much of,* is a false church, and a synagoge of satan. And you with the learned men of the realme doe persecute the true church, and condemne such as be more righteous then you.

Chaun.

Do you heare (M. doctor) what he sayeth, that the church of Rome is the deuill?

Chad.

I wish you did thinke more reuerently of y^e church of Rome. What will you say if I can shewe you out of S. Austen in his Epistle wrytten vnto Pope Innocentius,* that the whole general Councell of Carthage did allowe the church of Rome to be chieftest ouer all other?

Phil.

I am sure you can shewe no such thing. And w^t that he set the booke of S. Austine, and tourned to the Epistle: but he could not prooue his allegation manifestly, but by coniectures in this wise.

Chad.

Here you may see y^t the council of Carthage writing to Innocent. the bish. calleth the sea of Rome the apostolike sea. And besides this they write vnto him, certifying him of thinges done in y^e council for the condemnation of the Donatistes, requiring his approbations in the same, which they would not haue done, if they had not taken the church of Rome for y^e supreme head of others. And moreouer you may see howe s. Austine doth proue the church of Rome to be the catholike church by cōtinuall succession of the B. vntil his time, which succession we can proue vntil our daies: therefore by the same reason of s. Austine we say now, that the church of Rome is the catholicke church.

Phil.

M. Doctour, I haue considered how you do weigh Page 1812 S. Augustine:* and contrary to his meaning and wordes, you wou•d inferre your false cōclusion. As cōcerning that it was called by him the Apostolicall Sea, that is not material to proue the church of Rome now to be y^e catholicke church. I will grau•t it now that it is the Apostolicke sea in re•pect that Paule and Peter did once there preach the Gospell, and abode there for a certaine season. I woulde you could proue it to be the Apostolicall sea of y^e true religion and sinceritie as the Apostle left it, and did teach the same: the which if ye could doe, you might boast of Rome as of the Apostolicall sea: otherwise it is nowe of no more force, then if the Turke at Antioch & at Ierusalem should boast of the Apostolike seas, because the Apostles once did there abide, and founded the church of Christ.

And where as that the whole Councell of Carthage did wryte vnto Pope Innocentius, certifying him of that was done in the general councell, & willing him to set his helping hand to the suppressing of the Donatistes, as they had done, that facte of the Councell prooueth nothing the supremacie of the B. of Rome, no more then if the whole Conuocation house now gathered together, and agreeing vpon certaine articles, might send y^e same to some bishop, that vpon certaine impediments is not present, willing him to agree therto, & to set them forth in his dioces. The which fact doth not make any such bish. of greater authoritie then y^e rest, because his consent is brotherly required.

And touching the succession of the Bishops of Rome brought in by s. Austen, it maketh nothing nowe thereby to proue y^e same catholike church, vnles you can conclude w^t the same reason as s. Austen doth. And the rehearsall of the succession of the bishops doth tende to this only, to proue y^e Donatistes to be heretickes, because they began aswell at Rome as in Affrica, to founde an other church of their own setting vp then was groundd by Peter and Paul, and by their successors, whome he reciteth vntill his time, which all taughte no such doctrine, neither no suche church as the Donatists. And if presently you be able to prooue by the bishops of Rome (wherof you do glory) that such doctrine hath ben taught by any of the successors of Peters sea, as is nowe taught & beleued of vs, you haue good reason against vs: otherwise it is of no force, as I am able to declare.

Chaunc.

*Wel M. Doctour, you see we can doe no good in persuading of him: let vs minister the Articles, which my Lord hath left vs, vnto him. How say you M. Philpot to these articles? M. Ihonsō, I pray you write his answers.

Phil

M. Chauncellor, you haue no authoritie to enquire 〈◇〉 my beliefe in such articles as you goe about, for that I am not of my Lord of Londons Dioces: and to be brief with you, I will make no further answer heerein, then I haue already to the Bishop.

Chaunc

Why, then let vs go our waies, and let his keper take him away.

Thus endeth the vij. part of this Tragedie.

The summe of a priuate conference or talke betwene M. Philpot and the Bishop.

PHil.

The next day in the morning betime, the Byshop sent one of his mē vnto me, * to cal me vp into his chappell to heare Masse.

Bishops man.

Maister Philpot where be you?

Phil.

Who is that calleth me?

Bishops man.

My Lords wil is, you should rise and come to heare Masse: wil you come or no?

Phil.

My stomacke is not verye good this morning: you may tell my Lorde I am sicke. After this the Keeper was sen• to bring me to my Lord.

The keper.

M. Philpot, you must rise & come to my Lord.

Phil.

I am at your commaundement (M. Keeper) assoone as I can: * and going out of the prison he asked me, saying:

The Keeper.

Will you goe to Masse?

Phil.

My stomacke is to raw to digest such raw meates of flesh, bloud and bone this morning. After this my Keeper presented me to the Bishop in his Hall.

Lond.

M. Philpot, I charge you to answere to such Articles as my Chapleine, and my Register haue from me to ob•ect against you, go and answer them.

Phil.

My Lord, Omnia iudicia debent es•e publica: All iudgements ought to be publicke. Therfore if your Lordship haue any thing to charge mee lawfully withall, lette mee be in iudgement lawfully and openly called, and I wil answer according to my duetie: otherwise in corners I will not.

London.

Thou art a foolish knave I see wel inough: thou shalt aunswere whether thou wilt or no. Goe thy waies with them I say.

Phil.

I may well go with them at your Lordships pleasure: but I will make them no further answeare then I haue said already.

Lond.

No wilt thou knave? Haue him away, and set him in the stockes. What foolish knave?

Phil.

In deeds (my Lord) you handle me with others like fooles: and we muste be content to be made fooles at your handes▪ stockes and violence is your Bishoplike almes. You goe about by force in corners to oppresse, & be ashamed that your doings should come to light: God shorten your cruel kingdom for his mercies sake. And I was put by and by into the stocks, in an house alone, separte from my fellowes. God be praised y^t he hath thought me woorthy to suffer any thing for his names sake. Better it is to sit in the stockes of this world, then to sit in the stockes of a damnable conscience.

An other conference betwene the Byshop and M. Philpot and other prisoners.

PHil.

The next day after, an houre before day,* the Bishop sent for me againe by the Keeper.

The Keeper.

M. Philpot arise, you must come to my Lord.

Phil.

I wonder what my Lorde meaneth, that he sendeth for me thus earely. I feare he will •se some violence towards me, wherfore I pray you make him this answer, that if he send for me by an order of lawe, I will come and answer: otherwise, since I am not of his dioces, neither is hee mine Ordinarie, I will not (without I be violently constrained) come vnto him.

Keeper.

I will go tell my Lord what answeare you make: and so he wēt away to the bishop, and immediatly returned w^t two of the Bishops men, saying that I must come whether I would or no.

Phil.

If by violence any of you will enforce me to go,* then must I go, otherwise I wil not: and therwith one of them tooke me with force by the arme, and led me vp into the bishops gallerie.

Lond.

What? thou art a foolish knaue in deede: thou wilt not come without thou be •et.

Phil.

I am brought in deede (my Lord) by violence vnto you, and yo•r crueltie is suche, that I am afrayde to come before you. I would your lordship would gently procede against me by the lawe.

London.

I am blamed of the Lordes the Bishoppes,* for that I haue not dispatched thee ere this. And in Faith I made sute to my Lorde Cardinal, and to all the Conuocation house, that they would heare thee? And my Lorde of Lincolne stode vp, and said y^t thou wert a frantike fellow, and a man that wil haue the last worde.* And they all haue blamed me, because I haue brought thee so oftē before the Lordes openly: and they say it is meat & drinke to you to speake in an open audiēce, you glory so of your self. Wherefore I am commaunded to take a farther order with thee, and in good faith if thou wilt not relent, I will make no farther delay. Mary if thou wilt be cōformable, I wil yet forgeue thee all that is past, & thou shalt haue no hurte for any thing that is all ready sayd or done.

Phil.

My Lord,* I haue answered you already in this behalfe, what I will do. And as for report of master White, Bish. of Lincolne, I passe not: who is known to be mine enemie, for that I being Archdeacon, did excommunicate him for preaching naughty doctrine. If Christ my maister were called a mad man, it is no maruell though ye counte me frantike.

London.

Haddest not thou a pig brought thee the other day with a knife in it? Wherefore was it (I pray thee) but to kil thy selfe? Or as it is told me (Mary I am counselled to take hede of thee) to kil me? but I feare thee not. I trow I am able to tread thee vnder my feete: do the best thou cāst.

Philpot.

My Lorde, I can not denie but that there was a knife in the Pigges belly that was brought me.* But who put it in, or for what purpose I know not, vnlesse it were because he that sent the meate, thought I was without a knife, and so put it in. But other things your Lordshippe nedeth not to feare: for I was neuer without a knife since I came to prisone. And touching your owne persone, you should liue long if you should liue vntil I go about to kill you: and I confesse, by violence your Lordship is able to ouercome me.*

London.

I charge thee to answer to mine articles. Hold him a booke. Thou shalt sweare to answer truly to all Page 1813 such Articles, as I shall demaunde thee of.

Phil.

I wil first know your Lordship to be mine Ordinarie, before I sweare herein.

London.

What, we shall haue an Anabaptist of thee, which thinketh it not lawfull to sweare before a Iudge.

Phil.

My Lorde, I am no Anabaptist, I thinke it lawfull to sweare before a competent Iudge, being lawfully required. But I refuse to sweare in these causes before your Lordship, because you are not mine Ordinarie.

London.

I am thine Ordinary, & heere do pronounce by sentence peremptory,* that I am thine Ordinary, and that thou art of my dioces: and here he bad cal in more to beare witnes. And I make thee (taking one of his seruaunts by the arme) to be mine notarie. And now hearken to my articles, to the which (when he had read them) he monished me to make answer, and said to the keeper, fet me his fellowes, and I shall make them to be witnes against him.

In the meane while came in one of the sheriffs of London, whom the Bishop (calling for two chaires) placed by him, saying: M. Sheriffe I would you should vnderstand how I do procede against this man.* M. sheriffe, you shal heare what Articles this man doth maintaine: and so red a rablement of fained Articles: that I shoulde deny Baptisme to be necessary to them that were borne of Christian parentes, that I denied fasting and Prayer, and all other good deedes, & I maintained only bare faith to be sufficiēt to saluation what so euer a man did besides, & I maintained God to be the author of all sinne and wickednes.

Phil.

Ha my Lord, haue ye nothing of truth to charge me withal, but ye must be faine to imagin these blasphemous lies against me? You might as well haue sayd I had killed your father. The Scriptures say, That God wil destroye all them that speake lies. And is not your Lordshippe ashamed to saye before this woorshipfull Gentleman (who is vnknown to mee) that I maintaine these abominable blasphemies whiche you haue rehearsed: whyche if I did maintaine, I were wel worthy to be counted an heretick, and to be burned an hundred times if it were possible.

London.

*I doe object them vnto thee, to heare what thou wilt say in them, and howe thou canst purge thy selfe of them.

Philpot.

Then it was not iustly sayd of your Lordship in the beginning, that I did maintaine them, since almost I hold none of these Articles you haue read, in form as they are wrytten.

London.

Howe sayest thou? wilt thou aunswere to them or no?

Phil.

I will first know you to be mine Ordinary, and that you may lawfully charge me with suche things, and then afterward being lawfully called in iudgemēt, I wil shew my minde fully thereof, and not otherwise.

London.

Well, then I wil make thy fellowes to be witnes against thee: * where are they? come.

Keeper.

They be heere my Lord.

London.

Come hether Syrs, holde them a booke, you shall swere by the contents of that booke, that you shal (all maner of affections laid a part) say the truth of all such Articles as you shalbe demanded of, concerning this mā here present, which is a very naughty man, and take you hede of him y^t he doth not deceiue you, as I am afraid he doth you much hurt, and strengtheneth you in your errorrs.

Prisoners.

My Lord, we will not sweare except we know whereto: * we can accuse him of no euill, we haue bene but a while acquainted with him.

Phil.

I wonder your Lordship knowing the law, wil go about contrary to the same, to haue infamous persones to be witnesses, for your Lordship doeth take them to be heretickes, and by the law an hereticke can not be a witnes.

London.

Yes, one hereticke against an other may be well inough.* And master Sheriffe, I will make one of them to be winnesse against an other.

Phil.

You haue the lawe in your hande, and you will doe what you list.

Prisoners.

No my Lord.

London.

*No will? I will make you sweare, whether you will or no. I weene they be Anabaptists, M. sheriffe, they thinke it not lawfull to sweare before a Iudge.

Phil.

Wee thinke it lawfull to sweare for a man iudicially called, as we are not now, but in a blinde corner.

London.

Whye then, seeing you will not sweare againste your fellowe, you shall sweare for your selues, and I doe heere in the presence of maister sheriffe object the same Articles vnto you, as I haue done vnto him, and do require you vnder the paine of excommunication, to answer particularly vnto euery one of them when you shalbe examined, as you shall be by and by examined after by my Register and some of my Chaplaines.

Prisoners.

My Lord, we wil not accuse our selues. If any man can laye any thing against vs, we are heere ready to answeere thereto: otherwise we pray your Lordship not to burden vs: for some of vs are heere before you, we knowe no iust cause why.

London.

Maister Sheriffe, I will trouble you no longer with these froward men. And loe he rose vp and was going away, talking with maister sheriffe.

Philpot.

Maister Sheriffe,* I pray you recorde howe my Lorde proceedeth against vs in corners without all order of lawe, hauing no iust cause to lay against vs. And after this were all commaunded to be put in the stockes, where I set from morning vntill night, and the Keeper at night vpon fauour let me out.

An other priuate conference betwene the Bishop and Maister Philpot in the Colehouse.

PHil.

The Sonday after,* the bishop came into the Colehouse at night with the Keeper, and viewed the house, saying that he was neuer here afore: whereby a man may gesse how he hath kept Gods commandement in visiting the prisoners, seeing he was neuer w^t them that haue bene so nigh his nose: And he came not then for any good zeale, but to view the place, & thought it too good for me, • therefore after supper betwene 8. and 9. he sent for me, saying.

Lond.

Sir,* I haue great displeasure of the Queene & the Counsell for keeping you so long, and letting you haue so much libertie. And besides that, you be yōder, and strengthen the other prisoners in their errours, as I haue layde waite for your doings, & am certified of you well inough: I wil sequester you therfore from them, and you shal hurt no mo as you haue done, and I wil out of hand dispatche you, as I am commaunded, vnlesse you will be a conformable man.

Phil.

My Lorde, you haue my body in your custodye: you may transport it whither it please you: I am content. And I wold you wold make as quicke expeditiō in my iudgement, as you say, I long therfore, and as for cōformitie, I am ready to yeld to all truth, if any can bring better thē I.

London.

Why? you wil beleue no man but your self, what so euer they say.

Phil.

My belief must not hang vpon mens sayings, without sure authority of gods word, y^t which if any can shew me, I wil be pliant to the same: Otherwise I can not goe from my certaine faith, to that which is vncertaine.

London.

Haue you then the truth onely?

Phil.

My Lord, I will speake my minde freely vnto you, and vpō no malice I beare to you, before God. You haue not the truth, neither are you of y^e church of God: but you persecute both the truthe and the true churche of God, for the which cause you cā not prosper long. You see god doth not prosper your doinges according to your expectation. He hath of late shewed his iust iudgement against one of your greatest doers, who by reporte died miserably. I enuie not your authority you are in. You that haue learning should know best howe to rule. And seeing God hath restored you to your dignity and liuing againe,* vse the same to Gods glory, & to the setting foorth of his true religion: otherwise it wil not continue, do what you can. With this saying he was apased, and sayd at length.

Lon.

That good man was punished for such as thou art. Where is the Keeper? Come let him haue him to the place that is prouided for him. Go your way before.

Phil.

And he followed me, calling the Keeper aside, commaunding to keepe all men from me, & narrowly to search me (as the sequele did declare) and brought me to his priuy dore that goeth into the church, and commaunded two of his men to accompany the Keper, and to see me placed.

And afterwardes I passed through Paules vp to Lollardes tower,* and after that turned a long al the West side of Paules throughe the wall, and passing through 6. or 7. dores, came to my lodging thorough many straits: where I called to remembrance that strait is the way to heauen. And it is in a Tower right on the other side of Lollardes tower, as high almost as the battlements of Paules, viij. foote of bredth, and xij. of length, and almost ouer the prison where I was before, hauing a windowe opening towards the East, by the which I may looke ouer the tops of a greate many of houses, but see no manne passing into them: and who so walketh in the Bishoppes vtter gallery going to his Chappell, may see my windowe & me standing in the same.*

And as I was come to my place, the Keeper pluckt of my gowne, & searched me very narrowly, and tooke away penner, inkhorne, girdle and knife, but (as God would) I had an inckeling a little before I was called, of my remouing, and therupon made an errant to the stole, where ful Page 1814 sore against my will I cast away many a sweete letter and friendly: but that I had wrytten of my last examination before, I thruste into my hose, thinking y^e next day to haue made an ende therof, and with going it was falne downe to my legge, the which he by feeling did soone espie, and asked what that was. I sayd they were certaine letters: and with that he was very busie to haue them out. Let me aloue (sayde I) I will plucke them out,* with that I put in my hande, hauing two other letters therein, and brought vp the same wryting to my codpeece, and there left it, geuing him the other two letters that were not of any great importance. The which for to make a shewe that they had bene weightie, I began to teare aswel as I could, til they snatched them from me, & so deluded him (I thanke God) of his purpose.

After this hee went his way, and as he was goynge, one of them that came with him, sayd, that I did not deliuer the wrytings I had in my hose, but two other letters I had in my hād before. No did quoth he? I wil go search him better: the which I hearing, conueied mine examination I had writtē, into an other place besides my bed, and tooke all the letters I had in my purse, and was tearing of them when he came again, and as he came I threw the same out of my window, saying that I hard what he said: wherefore I did preuent his searching againe, whereof I was right glad. God be praised that gaue me that present shift to blinde their eyes from the knowledge of my wrytings, the which if they had knowen, it would haue bene a great occasion of more straiter keeping and looking vnto, although they looke as narrowly as they may.

The eight examination of Iohn Philpot before the B. of London, the B. of S. Dauids, M. Mordant and others, in the Bishops Chappell.

THE next day after, my Keeper came before daye in the morning to cal me downe,* & so was I brought down into his Wardrobe, where with a Keeper I was left, and there continued al the day. But after dinner I was called downe into the Chappell, before the Bishop of London, the B. of saint Dauids, M. Mordant one of the Queenes Counsaile, maister Archedeacon of London, and before a great many moe Balaamites: and the Bishop spake vnto me in this wise.*

Lond.

Sir, here I object and lay vnto you in the presence of my Lorde of S. Dauids, and of M. Mordant, & of these worshipfull men, these articles here in this libel cōteined, and openly he read them.

To whom when I would particularly haue answered to some of his blasphemies, he would not permit me, but sayde, I shoulde haue leasure enough to saye what I would, when he had saide, & to these here I adde an other schedule. Also I require thee to aunswear to the Cathechisme set forth in the schismatical time of king Edward. Also I will thee to answer to certaine conclusions, agreed vpon both in Oxford and Cambridge. And I heere do bring forth these witnesses against thee, in thine own presence, namely my Lord of S. Dauids, maister Mordant, and master Harpsfield, with as many of you as were present in the disputation he made in the conuocation house, willing you to testifie (of your othes taken vpon a booke) his stubborne and vnreuerend behauiour he did there vse against y^e blessed sacrament of the aultar. Geue me a booke, and receiuing one, he opened the same, saying: I wil teach him heere one tricke in our lawe, which he knoweth not: that is, My Lord of S. Dauids, because you are a Bishop you haue this priuiledge, that you may sweare, Inspectis Euangelijis & non tactis: By looking on the Gospel booke without touching of the same.* And so he opened the booke in hys sight, and shut it againe, and caused the other to put theyr hands on the booke, and tooke their othe, and willed them to resort to his Register to make their depositions when they might be best at leisure: and afterwarde he tourned to me, and sayd: Now sir, you shall aunswear but 2. wordes, whether you will aunswear to these articles which I haue laid vnto you, directly, yea, or nay.

Phil.

*My Lord, you haue told a long tale against me, conteining many lying blasphemies, which cā not be answered in two woordes. Besides this, you promised me at the beginning, that I should say what I could for my defence and now will you not geue me leaue to speake? What law is this?

Lond.

Speake, yea, or nay: for you shal say no more at this time. The cause was (as I gesse) that he saw so many there gathered to heare.*

Phil.

Then my two wordes you would haue me speake, shall be that I haue appealed from you, and take you not for my sufficient iudge.

Lon.

In dede (M. Mordant) he hath appealed to the king and to the Queene: but I wil be so bold with her maiesty, to stay that appeale in mine owne hands.

Phil.

You will doe what you list (my Lorde) you haue the lawe in your handes.

Lond.

Wilt thou answere, or no?

Phil.

I will not answere otherwise then I haue sayd.

Lon.

Register, note his answer that he maketh.

Phil.

Knocke me in the head with an Hatcher,* or set vp a stake, and burne me out of hand without further lawe: as well you may doe so, as doe that you doe, for all is wythout order of lawe. Suche tyrannie was neuer seene, as you vse now adaies. God of his mercy destroy your cruel kingdome. And whilst I spake this, the Bishop went away in haste.

S. Davids.

M. Philpot, I pray you be quiet, and haue pacience with you.

Phil.

My Lorde, I thanke God I haue pacience to beare and abide al your cruel intents against me, notwithstanding I speake this earnestly, being mooued thereto iustly, to notifie your vniust and cruell dealing with men in corners, without all due order of lawe.

After this, at nighte I was conducted againe by three or foure into the Colehouse.

The ninth examination of M. Philpot before Boner and his Chaplaines.

IN the morning the nexte daye I was called downe betunes, by my keper,* and brought againe into the Wardrobe, where I remained vntil the Byshop had heard hys Masse, and afterwarde he sent vp for me into his inwarde Parlour, and there he called for a chaire to sit downe, and brought his infamous Libell of his forged Articles in his hande, and sate downe, willing me to drawe neare vnto him, and saide:

Lon.

I am this day appoynted to tarry at home from the Parlament house, to examine you and your fellowes vpon these Articles, and you stande dalying with me, and will neither answere to nor fro. Ywis al your exceptions will not serue you. Will it not be a faire honestie for you, (thinke ye) that when thou comest afore my Lorde Maior and the Sheriffes, & other worshipful audience, when I shall say before them all, that I haue had thee these many times before me, and before so many learned men, and then thou couldest saye nothing for that thou standest in, for all thy bragges of learning, neither wouldest answere directly to any thing.

Phil.

My Lord, I haue told you my mind plaine enough:* but yet I do not intend to lose that priuiledge the law geueth me, the which is free choise to aunswere where I am not bound, and this priuiledge wil I cleaue vnto, vntil I be compelled otherwise.

Lon.

Well, I perceiue you will playe the obstinate foole. Lay thine appellation when thou comest in iudgement, and answere in the meane while to these articles.

Phil.

No, my Lord, by your leaue I wil not answeare to them, vntill my lawfull appeale be tried.

Lon.

Wel, thou shalt heare them, and with that he began to reade them.

Phil.

I shranke backe into the windowe,* and looked on a booke, and after he had read them ouer, he said vnto me.

Lon.

I haue read them ouer, although it hath not pleased you to heare mee. I marueile (in good faith) what thou meanest to be so wilful and stubborne, seeing thou mayest doe wel enough if thou list. It is but a singularitie. Doest thou not see all the realme against thee?

Phil.

My Lord, I speake vnto you in the witnes of God, before whom I stand, y^t I am neither wedded vnto mine owne will, neither stand vpon mine owne stubbernesse or singularitie, but vpon my conscience instructed by Gods word: and if your Lordship can shew better euidence then I haue for a good faith, I will folowe the same.

Lon.

What, thou wilt not (loe) for all that. Well, all that is past shall be forgotten: and be conformable vnto vs. Iwis thou mightest find as much fauour as thou wouldest desire.

Phil.

Then I perceiuing that he fawned so much vpon me, thought it good to geue hym some comfort of relēting, to the end I might openly geue him and his hypocriticall generation, openly a further foyle, perceiuing that they dare reason opēly with none, but with such as be vnlearned; and for lacke of knowledge not able to aunswere, or els with such as they haue a hope, that for feare or loue of the worlde, will recant. I sayde: My Lorde, it is not vnknownen to you, that I haue openlye in the audience of a great number, stand to the maintenance of these opinions I am in, & by learning did offer to defende them: therefore Page 1815 my Lord) I would it might openly appeare to the world, that I am wonne by learnyng, or els what wyll they say, but that eyther for feare or loue of the worlde, I am without any ground turned from the truth? and if I haue any kinde of learning openly shewed, I shalbe as conformable as you may require me.

Lond.

Yea mary, now ye speake somewhat like a reasonable man. I wis you might haue had a great deale more fauour in my house and libertie then you haue had: and you shall lacke nothing that is within my house, call for it, and you shall haue it. And what is it that you woulde openly by learnyng somewhat be satisfied in, tell me?

Phil.

My Lord, I haue openly sayd, and do beleeeue it also, that your sacrifice of the Masse is no Sacrament.

Lond.

*What, doe you deny the presence of Christe in the Sacrament?

Phil.

No, my Lorde, I deny not the presence of Christ in the Sacrament, but I haue denyed the Sacrament of the Alter, as it is vsed in your Masse, to be y^e true Sacrament of Christes institution. And first it must be proued a sacrament, ere there can be any kind of presence graunted.

Lond.

Why, do you deny the Masse to be a Sacrament? I pray you what is a Sacrament? Is it not a signe of a holy thyng, as saint Austine doth define it?

Phil.

*Yes verily that it is.

Lond.

Then I make this argument vnto you. A Sacrament is the signe of a holy thing: but the Masse is a signe of a holy thing: Ergo, it is a Sacrament.

Phil.

You must adde this to your Maior or fyrst proposition, as saint Austine doth meane, that a Sacrament is the signe of a holy thing instituted of God, and commaunded: for otherwise it can be no Sacrament, for all men can not make a Sacrament.

Lond.

I graunt that, and such a signe of a holy thyng is the Masse of Christes institution.

Phil.

I deny that, my Lord:

Lond.

*I will proue this by S. Austine by and by. I will go shew you the booke, & you shall haue any booke I haue that you wyll demaund. Hoe, who is without there? call me M. Doct. Chadsey, M. Archdeacon, M. Cosins, and other Chapleynes hyther.

Here, my Lorde, Maister Doctour Chadsey is gone to Westminster, and Maister Archdeacon was here euen nowe.

Lond.

M. Cosins, I pray you examine him vpon these Articles, and write his aunswere he maketh to euery one of them. I will go examine his felowes, and sende you S. Austine by and by. I finde this man more conformable then he was before.

Cosins.

I trust my Lord, you shall finde him at length a good Catholicke man. Mary here be a sight of heresies: I dare say, you will hold none of them, neither stand in any of them. How say you to the first?

Phil.

M. Cosins, I haue tolde my Lord already, that I will aunswere to none of these articles he hath objected against me: but if you will with learning aunswere to that which is in question betweene my Lorde and me, I wyll gladly heare and common with you.*

Cosins.

No wyll you? Why, what is that then which is in question betweene my Lord and you?

Phil.

Whether your Masse be a Sacrament or no?

Cosins.

What, the Masse to bee a Sacrament? who euer doubted thereof?

Phil.

If it be an vndoubted trueth, you may the sooner proue it: for I doubt much thereof.

Cosins.

Why, I wyll prooue it. It is the signe of a holy thing: Ergo, it is a Sacrament.

Phil.

I deny your antecedent.

Cosins.

What, wyll you so? then there is no reasoning with you.

*Thus master Cosins gaue ouer in the plaine fielde for want of further prooffe. And then the morowe Masse Chaplein began to speake for his occupation, & with that M. Harpsfield came out from my Lord with S. Austines Epistles, saying:

Harps.

My Lorde hath sent you here S. Austine to looke vpon, and I pray you looeke what he sayth in a certayne Epistle which he writeth. I wyll reade ouer the whole. Here may you heare the celebration of the Masse, & howe he reproueth them that went a haukyng and huntynge before the celebration of the same, on the Sabboth and holy dayes.

Phil.

I perceiue the contentes of this Epistle, and I see nothing herein against me, neither nothing that maketh for the profe of your Sacrament of the Masse.

Harps.

No, doth he not make mention of the Masse, & the celebration thereof? what can be spoken more playne?

Phil.

S. Austine meaneth of the celebration of the Communion, and of the true vse of the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ, and not of your priuate Masse,* which you of late yeares haue erected in the steede thereof. For this worde Masse hath bene an old terme attributed to the Communion, euen from the Primitiue Church. And I pray you tell me what Missa doth signifie. I thinke not many that say Masse, can well tell.

Cosins.

No can? that is maruell.

Phil.

Then tel, if you can. But M. Cosins & my morow masse Chaplaine were dumbe, looking vpon M. Harpsfield for helpe, and at length he spake.

Harps.

You thinke it cōmeth of the Hebrue word Massah,* as though none were seene in the Hebrue but you.

Phil.

I haue not gone so long to Schole, to deriue the signification of Missa, which is a Latine worde out of Hebrue: but I haue learned to interprete Greeke wordes by Greeke, and Latine by Latine, and Hebrue by Hebrue. I take the Communion to be called Missa á mittendo, of such thinges as at the celebration of the Communion were sent by such as were of abilitie, to the reliefe of the poore, where the rich brought after their deuotion & abilitie, and required the Minister in the celebration of the Communion, to pray vnto God for them, and to accept their common almes, whiche they at suche times did sende for the helpe of their poore brethren and sisters: and for this cause was it called Missa, as learned men doe witnesse. At the which celebration of the Masse, all that were present did communicate vnder both kindes, accordyng to Christes institution, as they dyd in Saint Augustines tyme. But vnlesse you can shew that your Masse is vsed as thē was, ye shall neuer by the name of Masse (which saint Austine attributed to the true vse of the Communion) proue your priuate Masse to be a Sacrament, vnlesse ye can proue the same nowe to be in your Masses as was then, whiche is cleane contrary.

Harps.

What, deny you the Masse to be a Sacrament?* For shame speake it not.

Phil.

I wyll not be ashamed to denye it, if you can not proue it.

Har.

Why, it is a sacrifice, which is more thē a sacrament.

Phil.

You may make of it as much as you list: but you shall neuer make it a Sacrifice, as you imagine thereof, but first it must be a Sacrament, for of the Sacrament you deduce your Sacrifice.

Harps.

Why, doth not Christe say: This is my body? and doth not the Priest pronounce the same that Christ did?

Phil.

The pronounciation is not only enough, vnlesse the wordes be therewithall applied to the vse,* as Christ spake them to. For though you speake the wordes of Baptisme ouer water neuer so many tymes, yet there is no Baptisme vnlesse there be a Christian person to be baptised.

Harps.

Nay, that is not lyke: for, Hoc est corpus meum, is an indicatiue proposition, shewing a working of God in the substance of bread and wine.

Phil.

It is not onely an indicatiue proposition, but also imperatiue or commaundyng. For he that sayd: Hoc est corpus meum. i. This is my body, sayde also: Accepite, manducate. i. Take ye, eate ye. And except the former part of the institution of Christes Sacrament be accomplished accordyng to the Communion, the latter, This is my body, can haue no verification, take it which way you wyll, and how you wyll.

Morowmasse Chap.

Why, then you wyll make the Sacrament to stand in the receiuing, and that receiuing maketh it a Sacrament.

Phil.

I do not say,* that the receiuing maketh it the Sacrament onely: but I say, that a common receiuing must needes be con•urrent with the true Sacrament, as a necessary member, without the which it can not be a Sacrament, because Christe hath made this a principall parte of the Sacrament, Take ye, eate ye, whiche you doe not in your Masse accordyng to Christes institution: wherefore it can be no Sacrament, for that it wanteth of Christes institution.

Cosins.

We do forbyd none to come to it, but as many as lyst, may be partakers with vs at the Masse, if they require it.

Phil.

Nay, that they shal not, though they require it. You wyll minister but one kinde vnto them, which is not after Christes institution. Besides that, you ought before you go to Masse, to exhort al that be present, to make a Sacrifice of thanks geuing for Christes passion with you,* and to exhort them to be partakers with you, accordyng to Christes commaundemet, saying vnto all that be present: Take ye, eate ye: and likewyse by preaching shew forth the Lordes death, which you do not.

Cosins.

What and if al things be done euen as you would haue it, and whilest the Minister is about to minister the Page 1816 Sacrament before any haue receyued it, there rise a sodain onely burly, that the communicants be compelled to go away: is it not a sacrament for all that none hath communicated beside the priest?

Phil.

In this case where all thyngs are appoynted to bee done according to gods word, if incident necessity had not let, I can not say, but it is a sacrament, and that hee which hath receiued, hath receiued the true sacrament. After this the morowmasse priest made this apish reason.

The morowmasse priest.

If the sacrament of the masse be no Sacrament, vnlesse all do receiue it, because Christ sayde: Take ye, eate ye, then the sacrament of Baptisme is no Sacrament, where there is but one baptised, because Christ sayd to his Apostles: Go preach the Gospell to all creatures, baptising all nations in the name of the father. &c.

Phil.

In that saying of Christ: Baptising all nations, is a cōmaundement to the Apostles, to baptise all sorts of men, & to exclude none that do beleue, be he Gentile or Iew, not meanyng all at once,* for that were impossible. And there are many examples, that baptisme may be singularly ministred to one person, as we haue example in Christ baptised o• Iohn, and in the Eunuch baptised of Phillip, with many mo such like: but so haue you not of the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ, but contrarywise by the expresse wordes of S. Paule you are commaunded to vse it in a Communion and participation of many together,* the 11. to the Corinthians: Quoties conuenitis ad manducādum, alius alium expectate: As ofte as ye come together to eate (meanyng the Lordes supper) tary one for an other. And also the Minister in the celebration of the sacrament, speaketh vnto all that be present in Christes behalfe, to cōmunicate with hym, saying: Take ye, and eate ye. Wherefore, as many as bee present and doe not communicate, breake Gods commandement in not receiuyng the same, and the minister is no iust minister that doth not distribute the sacrament as Christ did,* to all that are present, and where Gods word is transgressed, there is not Christ present, & consequently it is no Sacrament.

Harps.

What, would you haue it no sacrament without it be a Communion?

Phil.

I make it not so, but gods expresse word teacheth me so, yea, also all the auncient writers: as S. Chrysostome writing vpon the Epistle to the Ephesians saith:*That the oblation is in vayne, where as none doth communicate with the priest. If by his iudgement the action of the priest alone is in vayne, where is no Communion, how can that be a sacrament which he calleth a vayne oblation, and a vayne standyng at the aultar?

Cosins.

You are such another fellow as I haue not heard, that will not haue the Masse to be a sacrament: you are no man for me to reason withall. Come, let vs go, poyntyng to the morrowmasse
Chaplaïne: we will leaue you (maister Archdeacon) and him together: and so they went away.
Afterward the Archdeacon fell into earnest perswasions with me, saying:

Harps.

M. Philpot you and I haue bene of olde acquaintance a long tyme. We were schoolefellowes both in Winchester and in Oxford many yeares. Wherefore I must wish you as well to do as my selfe, & I pray you so thinke of mee.

Phil.

I thanke you for your good will towards me. But if you be deceiued (as I am sure you are) I shall desire you not to wish me deceyued with you.* For afore God I tell you plainly you are highly deceiued, and maintain fals religiō, and be not those men you take your selues for: and if you do not repent, & leaue of your persecuting of Christes truth, you will go to the deuill for it. Therefore consider it in time, I geue you warning: for in y^e day of iudgement, els I shall be a witnes agaynst you, that I told you this here talkyng together.

Harfsfield.

Fie, that is but your owne vayne singular opinion. I perceyue you are still now that man you were in Oxford.

Phil.

I trust you can report no notorious euill that euer you knew by me there.

Harfsfield.

I can say no euill of your conuersation, but I knew you to be a studious man. Marry, if you remember when we mette in disputation in Paruis, you would not lightly geue ouer, and for that cause I speake that I haue sayd.

Phil.

M. Harpsfield, you know in the Schooles at Oxford, when we were young men, we did striue much vpō vaine glory, and vpon contention, more then for the truth: but now our yeares and our riper learnyng teach vs to fall to a truth, which must bee our portion for euer. And if I was then, in my tyme of ignorance earnest in myne owne cause, I ought now to be earnest in my Maister Christes cause, and in his truth. I knowe now that nothyng done vpon vayne glory and singularitie, can please God, haue it neuer so goodly a shew: wherefore I pray you iudge not so of me now.

Harps.

What, will you thinke your selfe better learned, thē all the learned men in this realme?

Phil.

My faith hangeth not vpon the learned of the world,* but vpon the learned of Gods word.

Harps.

Well, I will talke with you no more as nowe, but pray to God to open your hart.

Phil.

I pray God open both our harts, to do more his wil then we haue done in tymes past.

Harps.

Ho Keper, take hym away with you.

Phil.

I pray you Maister Harpesfield, tell me what this Pronounce (Hoc) doth demonstrate and shew in this Indicatiue proposition, as you call it: Hoc est corpus meum:* This is my body.

Harpesfield.

It doth demonstrate the substaunce of breade, which by the words spoken by the Priest, and by the omnipotencie of God, is turned into the substance of Christs very body.

Phil.

Is the substaunce of the bread (as you say) turned into Christes body?

Harps.

Yea that it is.

Phil.

Why,* then Christes body receyueth daily a great increase of many thousand pieces of bread into his body, and that is his body become now, which was not before, and by this you would seeme to make, that there is an alteration in Christes glorified body, which is a wicked thing to thinke.

Harps.

Then he set about agayne, and remembryng better hymselfe,* and seying the inconuenience of his first assertion of the transubstantiation of bread into Christes body, hee sayd, that the substance of bread after the words spoken by the priest, was euacuated or vanished away by the omnipotencie of God.

Phil.

This is another song then you sang first. And here you may see how contrary you are to your selues. For in deed your scoolemen do holde, that the very substaunce of bread is really turned into the substance of Christes body. And now you perceiuyng of late the inconuenience which is objected against you in that opinion,* you are driuen to imagine a new shift, and say, the substance of bread is cuacuated, contrary to that your church hath first beleued and taught. O what contrarietie is there among you, and all to deface the sincere truth?

Harps.

Is not God omnipotent? and cannot he doe as hee hath sayd?

Phil.

But his omnipotencie wil not do as you say,* contrary to hys word and to hys honour. It is not Gods honor to include hym bodily in a piece of bread, and of necessitye to tye hym therto. It is not gods honour for you to make a piece of bread God and man, which you see before your face doth putrifie after a certaine tyme. Is not Gods omnipotency as able to geue his body with the Sacramentall bread, as to make so many turnyngs away of y^e bread, as you doe, and that directly against the Scripture, which calleth it bread many tymes after the consecration? Are you not ashamed to make so many alterations of y^e Lords holy institution as you do,* and to take away the substantiall partes of the Sacrament, as, Take ye, eate ye, drinke ye all of this. Do ye this in remembraunce of me: & to place in their steades, Heare ye, gaze ye, knocke ye, worship ye, offer ye, sacrifice ye for the quicke and the dead? If this be not blasphemy to God and hys Sacrament, to adde and to pluck away in this sort, and that contrary to the mynd of all ancient writers, and contrary to the example of Christ & hys Apostles, tell me.

Harps.

I know you haue gathered the sayings of the Doctors together, which make for your purpose. I wyll talke no longer with you.

Phil.

I pray God open both our harts, to do more his wil then we haue in tymes past.*

Harps.

O Keeper, take hym away with you.

¶The tenth examination of Iohn Philpot, before B. Boner, his Register, and others.

The next day after diuer I was brought into my Lords vpper Hall,* and there he called me before hym and his Register, and before Doct. Chedsey in the presence of two homely Gentlemen and a Priest, which I knew not: at what tyme the B. sayd.

London.

I do here lay vnto this man in your presence (requiryng you to be a witnesse against him, as much as you know in any of them) these articles, this booke of the Catechisme made in K. Edwards dayes, also these conclusions agreed vpon both in Oxford and Cambridge: also I lay vnto hym, that he hath despised the Censures of the Page 1817 Church, & hath stood accursed more then this twelmonth, and neuer required absolution thereof. How say you, wast thou not accursed by my L. Chancellor?

Phil.

I was excommunicated by him wrongfully, & without any iust cause and without order of law,* beyng neuer personally cited.

Lond

Didst not thou tell me the other day, when I required thee to come to the masse, that thou wast excommunicated, & therefore by the law couldest not heare masse? How long hast thou •ene thus excommunicate?

Phil.

More then a xij. month and a halfe.

Lond.

Loe, you may heare what he sayth. Write it.

Phil.

But as you would haue written that I haue sayd, I haue bene thus long excōmunicated,* so also let him write, that I did require of my L. Chauncellor that did excommunicate me, my absolution: but he would not geue it me saying that I was excōmunicatus ipso iure, because I was an heretike

Gentleman.

Why do you not require absolutiō at my lords hands here now?*

Phil.

Because hee is not myne Ordinary, neither hath by the law any thing to do with me of right.

Lond.

What an obstinate foole is this? I tell thee I will be thine Ordinary whether thou wilt or no.

Phil.

*And because of this your vnrighteous force towards me, I haue appealed from you, & require you M. Register, that my appeale may be entred in writyng.

Lond.

Haue you heard such a froward fellow as this? hee seemed yesterday to be very tractable, & I had a good hope in hym. I tell thee thou art of my Diocesse.

Phil.

I am of Winchester Diocesse, and not of London Diocesse.

Lond.

I pray you may not a man be of two Diocesses at oute?

Phil.

No, that he cannot.

Lond.

Lo, wyll you see what an ignoraunt foole is this in the law, in that which he would seeme to be seene? I tell thee a man may be of three Diocesses at once: as if thou wer• borne in London, by reason therof thou shouldst bee of my dioces: or els, if thou wert not borne, but haddest a dignitie here, also thou art to be counted of my diocesse, or els by reason of thy habitation in my dioces.

Phil.

In none of these respects I am of your Lordshippes dioces. But for all that, this will not follow, that I dwellyng at Winchester, am at that present of London dioces.

London.

What will you lay thereof? wilt thou recant if I prooue it?

Phil.

But what shall I win, if you do not?

Lond.

I will geue thee my bishoprike, if I prooue it not.

Phil.

Yea, but who shall deliuer it me, if I win?

Lond.

Thou art an arrogant foole. Enter their othes, and take these witnesses depositiōs. I must be gone to the parliament house.

After this spake vnto me a Priest standing by, askyng me whether I was kin to my L. Rich, or no?

Phil.

I sayd, he sayd so himselfe vnto me the other day, but how, I know not.

Chadsey.

I heard him say, that he was his very nigh kinsman.

Baalamite.

Why, then you & I must be of kin, for hee is my nigh kinsman.* How chance it that you and I be of contrary iudgements?

Phil.

It is no meruail, for Christ prophesied, That the father shall be deuided agaynst the sonne, and the sonne against the father for my truths sake.

Baala.

You do hold (as I vnderstand) agaynst the blessed sacrament of the aulter, and agaynst the holy masse.

Phil.

If you can prooue it a Sacrament, I wil not hold agaynst you.

Baala.

*What prooue it a Sacrament quoth he? doth not S. Paul say: Quae oculus non vidit & auris non audiuit, ea praeparauit Deus diligentibus se? That such thinges as the eye hath not seene, neither eare heard, hath God prepared for them that loue hym.

Phil.

That saying of S. Paule concerneth nothyng your sacrament, but is ment of the heauenly ioyes that bee prepared for all faythfull beleeuers.

Baala.

Why, then I perceiue you vnderstand not S. Paul. By God, you are deceiued.

Phil.

You ought not to sweare kinsman, if you will that I shall so cal you, & without disworship of our kinred, I vnderstand S. Paul as wel as you, and know what I say: and with that shewed hym a Greeke Testament with Erasmus translation, & with the old also, demaundyng him which text he was best acquainted withall.

Baala.

I knew Greeke too once, as well as you, I care not which you read.

Phil.

You knowe them then all alike: you vnderstand the one as well as the other. With this my Baalamite kinsman departed in a fury.

The next day after I was brought down againe after dinner, to the Chappel,* and there my Baalamite kinsman (to verifie the scriptures, as a mans owne kinsfolks shall be hys enemies) came in with the B. as a witnes agaynst me: and there the B. caused another that came to hym about other matters, to sweare also to be a witnes against me, which was a priest also, saying.

London.

You shall sweare to depose all the truth of certain Articles you shall be enquired of concernyng this man: * & here I (accordyng to the lawe) do bryng them forth in thy presence.

Phil.

My Lord I doo not agree to the production of them but doo appeale from all these & others your proceedinges agaynst me: and require you, Maister Register, that my appeale may be entred, & I wil geue you for your labour.

Reg.

Your appeale shalbe entred at leasure. Whom doe you appeale vnto? tell me.

I appeale to a higher Iudge, as to the Lieutenaunt of the Archbishopricke of Canterbury: for I know not who is bishop therof at this present. With that y^e B. went away, and my Baalamite kinsman looking big vpon me, but sayd neuer a woord.

Thus I haue in hast scribled out all myne examinations hetherto, that the same whiche hath bene done vnto me in darke, myght come to lyght, & that the papistes vniust procedyngs and nakednes in their false religiō, might be known to their confusion. Iesus is Imanuel, that is, God with vs, Amen. 1555.

The 11. examination of Iohn Philpot, had on S. Andrewes day, before the Bishop of Duresme, the Bishop of Chichester, the Bishop of Bathe, the Bishop of London, the Prolocutor, Maister Christopherson, and Doct. Chedsey, Maister Morgan of Oxford, Maister Hussey of the Arches, Doctor Weston, Doctor Harpsfield, Archdeacon, M. Cosins and M. Iohnson Register to the Bishop of London, in hys palace.

I Was commyng beyng sent for with my Keeper, * and the B. of London met me in his hall dore, and full manerly he played the Gentleman Usher to bryng mee before the Lordes, saying:

Lond.

My Lordes I shal desire you to take some paynes with this man, he is a gentleman, and I would he should do well: but he wil wilfully cast away hymselfe.

Dures.

Come hether sir, what is your name?

Phil.

My name is Philpot.

Dures.

I haue heard of that name to be a worshipful stock, and since you be a Gentleman, doe as you may liue worshipfully among other Gentlemen. What is the cause of your trouble now?

Phil.

I told hym the cause as in my former examinations is expressed.

Dures.

Well, all causes set apart, will you now bee a conformable mā to the catholike faith, and leaue all new fangled opinions and heresies? Iwis I was in Germany with Luther at the beginning of these opinions, & can tell how they began. Leaue them, and follow the Catholique church throughout the whole world, as the whole realme now doth.

Phil.

My Lord, I am of the Catholike fayth, and desire to lyue and dye in the same, but it is not vnknownen to your Lordshippe, that I with others these xx. yeres haue bene taught another maner of faith then you now goe about to compell vs vnto: wherefore it is requisite that we haue a tyme to weigh the same, and to heare how it agreeth with Gods word. For fayth is not at a sodaine, neither wonne, neither remooued, but as S. Paule saith: Fayth commeth by hearyng, and hearing by the worde: Fides ex auditu, *auditus per verbum.

Chich.

And if you will geue me leaue my L. I will shewe hym how he taketh the saying of S. Paul amisse, as many other now adayes alledgyng the same do, that they ought not to be compelled to beleue, where as S. Paul meaneth of Infidels, and not of the faithfull. And so S. Augustine writyng agaynst the Donatistes, sayth: that the faythfull may be compelled to beleue.

Philpot.

Saint Bernard (and if it please your Lordship) doth take that sense of Saint Paule as I doe, saying: that Fides est suadenda, & non imponenda: Faith must be persuaded to a man, and not enioyned. And Saint Augustine speaketh of suche as were first thoroughly perswaded by manifest Scriptures, and yet would resist of stubborne wilfulnesse.

Page 1818

Chich.

So Bernard meaneth of Infidels also.

Phil.

No, my Lord, that he doth not: for he wryteth not of the Infidels, but hee writeth of such as were deceived by errours.

Chichester.

My L. of Duresme, I haue bene so bold to interrupt your Lordship of your tale: I pray you now proceed on.

Duresme.

M. Philpot will you bee of the same Catholike faith and Church with vs you were baptised in, and your godfathers promised for you, and hold as we do? and then may you be rid out of trouble. I perceiue you are learned, and it is pitie but you should do well.

Philpot.

I am of the same Catholique fayth and catholique Church I was baptised vnto,* and in that wyll I liue and dye.

Dures.

That is wel said: if you hold there, you cannot doe but well.

Chich.

Yea, my Lord, but he meaneth otherwyse then you do. Are you of the same faith your godfathers and godmothers were, or no?

Phil.

I cannot tell what faith they were of certainly, but I am of the faith I was baptised vnto, which is, in the fayth of Christ. For I was not baptised in the faith of my Godfathers, but in the faith of Christ.

Christo.

S. Augustine saith, that Infants are baptised in fide susceptorum: In the fayth of their Godfathers.

Phil.

S. Augustine in so saying, meaneth of the fayth of Christ, which the Godfathers do or ought to beleeue, and not otherwyse.

Duresme.

How say you, will you beleue as we do, and all the learned of the Realme or no, and be of one church with vs?

Phil.

My Lordes it is not vnknown vnto you, that there hath bene alwayes two churches.

Chichest.

Nay, that is not so: there is but one Catholike church.

Phil.

*I shall desire your Lordships to heare out my tale, & to take my meanyng. For I knowe there is but one true Church: but alwayes from the beginnyng there hath bene ioyned to the same true Church, a false Church, aduersarie to the true, and that was declared at the first in Abell and Caine, who persecuted and slew hys brother, in whome (as Saint Augustine witnesseth) is represented the false & true Church. And after that, as soone as God hath chosen his peculiar people, and shewed vnto them his sanctuary, holy statutes, and will, anone after arose the false Church, and tenne of the twelue tribes of Israell deuied themselues from the true church of Iuda and Beniamin, and made to themselues at Bethel, & set vp golden calues, and yet pretended therewith to serue God, and so abused his word: Notwithstandyng, God was displeased with them, and ceased not hys wrath, vntill he had vtterly destroyed them.

Chich.

I will graunt you before the commyng of Christ, there were two churches in the old law: but in the newe law since Christes commyng, you cannot shew it to be so by the scripture.

Phil.

Yes my L. that I can, if you will geue me leaue. After Christ had chosē his xij. Apostles, was there not a Iudas in the new law, and a Simon Magus? And were not they of the false church?

Chich.

Yea, but I meane after the Gospell was written, where can you find me two churches after Christ had ascended, and sent the holy Ghost?

Phil.

The Gospell was within 8. yeares after the ascension written by S. Mathew, and the writyng therof is not materiall to the declaration of these two churches, to haue bene alwayes from tyme to tyme, as by example it may be shewed: and yet as euil as my memory is, I remember in the new Testament is mention made of two churches,* as it appeareth in the Apocalyps: and also S. Paule to the Thessalonians maketh mention, that Antichrist with hys false generatiō shall sit in the temple. To the which Chichester replied not.

Dures.

The Church in the scripture is likened to a great fishers net, which conteineth in it both good fishes & bad fishes. I trust you wil be of the better sort, and leane to the truth.

Phil.

My Lord it is my whole desire now to follow that which is good, whatsoeuer I haue done in times past, and to cleaue to gods truth.

Dures.

Do you so, and then shall you do well. It is almost night, my L. of London, I must needes be gone.

Lond

Nay, my L. of Duresme, I must desire your Lordship,* and my L. of Chichester to tary a litle while. And before he had so sayd, the B. of Bathe went his way without saying any word. What my L. of Bath will you be gone? I pray you tary. My Lordes, I haue earnest matter to charge this man withall, wherof I would your lordships to be made priuy▪ and I haue them here written in a libel. I pray you sit downe againe, or els I will. First I •ay to him here,* that hee hath written in a Bible which I tooke from hym, this erroneous saying: Quod spiritus est vicarius Christi in terra. i. The holy Ghost is Christes Uicare in earth. Wilt thou abide by this saying of thine. That the spirit is Christes vicar on earth?

Phil.

My L. it is not my saying, it is a better learned mā's then myne. For I vse not to write myne owne sayings, but the notable sayings of other auncient writers, as all the others be where ye find the same writen. And as I remember, it is euen the saying of Saint Bernard, & a saying that I neede not to be ashamed of, neyther you to bee offended, as my L. of Duresme, and my L. of Chichester by their learnyng can discerne, and will not reckon it euill sayd.

Lond.

No will? Why, take away the first syllable, and it foundeth Arius.

Phil.

That is farre fetched in deede: if your Lordship will scan mens sayings in such wise, you may finde out what you list.

Lond.

But to helpe this, I finde moreouer written wyth hys owne hand in another booke: *In me Ioanne Philpotto vbi abundauit peccatum, superabundauit & gratia: that is▪ In me Iohn Philpot where sinne did abound, grace hath superabounded. I pray you what superabundāt grace haue you more then other men? So said Arius, that he had the aboundance of grace aboue all other.

Phil.

My L. you neede not to be offended with that saying more then the other, for it is the saying of S. Paule hymself, and I did apply it to my self for my comfort, * knowing that though my sinnes be huge & great in the sight of God yet is his mercy & grace aboue them all. And concernyng Arius & his adherents, I defie them, as it is well known I haue written against them.

Lond.

Also I lay to thy charge that thou killedst thy father and wast accursed of thy mother in her deathbed, as I can bring witnes hereof.

Phil.

O Lord, what blasphemy is this? * Hath your Lordship nothing of truth to charge me withall, but (as I may speake it with your honoures) such forged blasphemous lyes? If any of these can be prooued, I will promise here to recant at Paules Crosse, what you wil haue me: I am so sure they are as great blasphemies as may bee objected agaynst any man. Ha, my Lordes, I pray you consider how my L. of London hath hitherto proceded against me: for in deed he hath none other but such pretensed slaunderous lyes.

Chich.

They be Parerga: that is, matters beside the purpose.

Dures.

My Lord, I must needes bid you farewell.

Lond.

Nay my Lord, here is a letter which I shall desire your Lordship to heare ere you goe. * This man (beyng in my kepyng) hath taken vpon hym to write letters out of prison, & to peruert a yong Gentleman called M. Greene in my house, (call him hither) and hath made a false report of his examination, as you shall heare, not beyng content to be euill himselfe, but to make others as bad as himselfe. He all to tare the letter when he saw my man went about to search hym, but yet I haue pieced it agayne togither, & caused a copy to be written therof, and he red the torne letter, biddyng M. Christopherson and Morgan to marke the copy thereof.

The contents of the letter was the examination of M. Greene before the B. of London in the presence of Maister Feckenham Deane of Paules, and of diuers others,* whose ready answers in the Scriptures and in the Doctors was wondred at of the Deane hymselfe, and of many others, as M. Fecknam did report: and that he was committed to D. Chadsey, and to haue his meat from the Bishops owne table. How say you my Lords, was this wel done of hym beyng my prisoner, to write this? And yet he hath written a shamefull lye, that he was in D. Chadseys keping. How say you M. Doc. Chadsey, is it not a shamefull lye?

Chad.

Yes my L. he was neuer in my keping.

London.

Art thou not ashamed to write suche shamefull lyes? Come hether M. Greene,* did not I shew you this letter?

Greene.

Yea forsooth my L. you shewed it me.

Lond.

How thinke you my Lordes, is not this an honest man to belye me?

Phil.

Your Lordship doth mistake all things. This letter (as your Lordship may perceiue,* and all other that haue heard the same) was not written by me, but by a friend of myne, certifieng me at my request how M. Greene sped at the B. of Londons hands: and there is nothing in the Page 1819 letter that either I, or he that wrote it neede to feare, but that might be written as my report.

London.

Then tell me who wrote it, if you dare.

Phil.

No, my L. it is not my duty to accuse my friend, and specially seyng you will take all thyngs at the worst: neither you shall neuer know of me who wrote it. Your lordship may see in y^e end of the letter, that my friend did write vnto me vppon the occasion of my appeale which I haue made to the whole Parliament house about such matters as I am wrongfully troubled for.

London.

I would see any so hardy to put vppe thine Appeale.

Phil.

My L. I cannot tell what God will worke, I haue written it,* speed as it may.

Lond

My L. I haue vsed him with much gentlenes since he came to me. How sayst thou, haue I not?

Phil.

If to lie in the vilest prison in this towne (being a gētleman, and an Archdeacon) and in a colehouse by the space of v. or vj. weekes alreedy, without fire or candle, bee to be counted gentlenes at your handes, I must needes say I haue found gentlenes. But there were neuer men so cruelly handled as we are at these dayes.

London.

Loe, what a Uarlet is this? Besides this (my Lordes) euen yesterday hee procured hys man to bryng a bladder of blacke Pouder, I can not tell for what purpose I.

Phil.

Your Lordship needeth not to mistrust the matter: it is nothing but to make inke withall, for lack of inke, as I had it before in the kings Bench, when my keeper tooke away my inkehorne.

Lond.

And why shouldst thou go about any such thing vnknowyng vnto me beyng thy keeper? for I am thy keeper in this house I tell thee.

Phil.

My L. because you haue caused my penner and inkehorne to bee taken from mee,* I woulde yet faine that my friends might vnderstand what I lacke, not that I intended to write any thing that I would be afraid shold come to your sight.

Lond.

More then this my L. he caused a pig to be roasted, and made a knife to be put betwene the skin, and the flesh, for what purpose iudge you. How sayest thou, didst thou not so?

Phil.

I cannot deny but there was halfe a pig sent me, and vnder the same a knife lying in the sauce, but for no ill pur'pose that I knowe, your Lordship may iudge what you will.* It was not to kill my selfe, nor none other, as you would haue men to beleue: for I was neuer yet without a knife since I came to prison. Therefore all these bee but false surmises, and not worth rehearsall.

Lond.

I haue here to say to his charge (chiefest of all) hys booke of the report of the disputation had in the Conuocation house, which is the rākest heresie that may be, against the blessed Sacrament of the aaltar. How say you, Maister D. Weston? did he maintain the same there stubbornly, or no?

West.

Yea my L. that he did, and would neuer be aunswered. And it is pity that the same worshipfull congregation should be slaundered with such vntrue reports.

Phil.

*You answered me in deed, M. Doct. (beyng thē Prolocutor) goodly, with hold thy peace, and haue hym to prison, and put hym out of the house. I haue read the booke, & I fynde the report of euery mans Argument to be true in all poynts. And if there be any fault, it is, because he setteth forth your doynges too fauourably, and nothyng lyke to that you did vse me, beyng an Archdeacon, and not of the worst of the house.

West.

Thou art no Archdeacon.

Phil.

In deed M. Doct. ye haue among you vnarchdeaoned me as now (I thanke God of it) and that without all order of law.

Lond.

I pray you my Lordes hearken what he writeth of himselfe. I read it ouer this morning, and made a note of it. He saith, that D. Weston called hym frantike and mad man, and sayd, he should go to Bedlem.

Phil.

In deed my L. so it pleased M. Weston to taunt at me and say his shamefull pleasure: but yet I was no whitte the more for all his sayinges, then Christ was when the Scribes & the Pharises said likewyse he was madde, and that he was possessed of a deuill, most blasphemously.

Dures.

My L. of London I can tary no longer. I must needes bid you farewell.* M. Philpot, me thinketh you haue sayd well, that you will abide in the Catholike faith, and in the Catholike Church: I pray you so do, and you shall do right well. And so hee departed with M. Weston and M. Hussey.

Phil.

I haue purposed so to doe, how so euer I speede, by Gods grace.

Lond.

I pray you my L. of Chichester, and M. Prolocutor and M. Doct. Morgan, to common with hym whyles I bryng my L. of Duresme goyng.

Christopherson.

M. Philpot, I was acquaynted with you at Rome (if you bee remembred, but you haue forgotten me) and talked somewhat with you of these matters, and I finde you now the same man as you were then. I wish it were otherwyse. For gods sake bee conformable to men that be better learned then you, and stand not in your own conceit.

Phil.

Where as you call mee to remembraunce of acquaintance had at Rome, in deede it was so, though it were but very straunge on your part to meward, beyng driuen to necessitie.

Christoph.

You knowe the world was dangerous at that tyme.

Philpot.

Nothing so dangerous as it is now: but let that passe. Where as you say, you find me the same man I was then, I prayse God for that you see not me like a reed waueryng with euerye wynde. And where as you woulde haue me follow better learned men then my selfe: in deed I do acknowledge that you with a great many other,* are far better learned then I, whose bookes in respect of learnyng, I am not worthy to cary after you: but fayth & the wisdom of God consisteth not in learning onely, & therefore S. Paule willeth, that our fayth be not grounded vppon the wisdom of man. If you can shew by learnyng out of Gods booke, y^t I ought to be of an other fayth then I am, I will heare you and anye other man whatsoeuer he bee.

Christoph.

I meruaile why you should dissent from the catholike Church, since it hath thus long vniuersallye bene receiued, except within this fiue or sixe yeares here in England.

Phil.

I do not dissent from the true catholike church: I do only dissent from the B. of Rome, which if you can prooue to be the catholike church of Christ, I will bee of the same also with you.

Christo.

Wil you beleue S. Cyprian, if I can shew you out of hym. Quòd Ecclesia Romana est talis ad quam perfidia accedere non potest: That the Church of Rome is such a one, vnto the which misbeliefe cannot approach.

Phil.

I am sure you cannot shew any such saying out of s. Cyprian.

Christo.

What will you lay thereon?

Phil.

I will lay as much as I am able to make.

Morgan.

Will you promise to recant, if he shew his saying to be true?

Phil.

My fayth shall not hang vpon any Doctours saying, further then he shalbe able to prooue the same by gods worde.

Christo.

I wil go fet the booke and shew it him by and by: and therewithall he went into the Bishops study, & fet Cyprian, & appointed out these words in one of his Epistles: Ad Romanos autem quorum fides Apostolo praedicante laudata est, non potest accedere perfidia: But vnto the Romaines whose fayth by the testimony of the Apostle, is praysed, misbeliefe can haue no accesse.

Phil.

These wordes of Cyprian doe nothing prooue your pretended assertion, which is, that to the Church of Rome there could come no misbeliefe.

Christoph.

Good Lord, no doth? What can bee sayde more plainely?

Philpot.

Hee speaketh not of the Churche of Rome absolutely.

Christo.

By God, a chyld that can but his Grammer, wyll not deny that you do, the words be so playne.

Phil.

Sweare not M. Doct. but weigh Cyprians wordes with me, and I shall make you to say as I haue sayd.

Christo.

I am no D. but I perceiue it is but labour lost to reason with you.

Boner.

And with that the B. of London came in blowyng agayne, and sayd: * What is my L. of Chichester gone away also? (for he euen a little before departed also without any other word saying, but he must needes be gone.) What is the matter you now stand vpon?

Morgan.

M. Christopherson hath shewed M. Philpot a notable place of the authoritie of the Church of Rome, and he maketh nothyng of it.

Boner.

Where is the place? let me see. By my faith here is a place alone. Come hither sir, what say you to this? Nay tary a little, I will helpe this place with S. Paules owne testimony the first to the Romaines, where he sayeth, that their faith is preached throughout the world: how cā you be able to answer to this?

Phil.

Yes, my L. it is soone aunswered, if you will consider al the words of Cyprian: for he speaketh of such as in his tyme were faithfull at Rome,* that folowed the doctrine of saint Paul, as he had taught them, and as it was notified Page 1820 throughout the world by an Epistle which he had written in the commendation of their fayth. With such as are praised of S. Paul at Rome, for followyng the true faith, misbeliefe can haue no place. And now if you can shewe that the faith which the church of Rome holdeth now,* is that faith which the Apostle praised & allowed in the Romans in his tyme, then wil I say that S. Cyprian then said, and with you, that infidelitie can haue no place there: but otherwyse it maketh not absolutely for the authority of the Church of Rome, as you do mistake it.

Christo.

You vnderstand Cyprian well in deed: I thinke you neuer red hym in your lyfe.

Phil.

Yes, M. Doct. that I haue, I can shew you a booke noted with myne owne hand: though I haue not read so much as you, yet I haue read somewhat. It is shame for you to wrast and wreath the Doctors as you do, to maintain a fals religion, which be altogether against you, if you take them aright, and in deede your false packing of doctors together,* hath geuen me and others occasion to looke vpon them, wherby we find you shamefull liers, and misreporters of the ancient doctors.

Morgan.

What, wil you be in hand to allow doctors now? they of your sect do not so. I meruaile thereof you will allow them.

Phil.

I do allow them in as much as they doe agree wyth the scriptures, and so do al they which be of the truth, how so euer you terme vs: and I prayse God for that good vnderstandyng I haue receyued by them.

Christo.

What, you vnderstand not the Doctors, you may be ashamed to say it.

Phil.

I thanke God I vnderstand them better then you: for you haue Excaecationem cordis, The blindnes of heard, so that you vnderstand not truely what you read, no more then the wall here, as the takyng of Cyprian doth wel declare. And afore God, you are but deceyuers of the people,* for all your brag you make of learnyng, neyther haue ye Scripture or auncient doctour on your side, being truly taken.

Morgan.

Why, all the Doctors be on our side, and agaynst you altogether.

Phil.

Yea, so you say when you be in your pulpits alone, & none to answer you. But if you wil come to cast accounts with me therof, I will venter with you a recantatiō, that I (as little sight as I haue in the doctors) wil bring more authorities of ancient Doctors on my side, then you shall be able for yours, and he y^t can bring most, to him let y^e other side yeeld. Are ye so content herewith?

Christo.

It is but folly to reason with you: you wil beleue no man but yourselfe.

Phil.

I will beleue you or any other learned man, if you cā bring any thing worthy to be beleued. You cannot winne me with vaine words from my fayth. Before God there is no truth in you.

Morgan.

What, no truth, no truth? ha, ha, he.

Phil.

Except the Articles of the Trinitie, you are corrupt in all other thyngs, and sound in nothyng.

Morgan.

What say you? do we not beleue well on the sacrament?

Philpot.

It is the thing which (among all other) you doe most abuse.

Morgan.

Wherein I pray you? tell vs.

Phil.

I haue told you before (M. Doct.) in the Conuocation house.

Morgan.

*Yea marry: in deed you told vs there very well. For there you fell down vpon your knees, and fel to weepyng: ha, ha, ha.

Phil.

I did weepe in deed, and so did Christ vpon Ierusalem, and am not to be blamed therefore, if you consider the cause of my weepyng.

Morgan.

What, make you your selfe Christ? ha, ha.

Phil.

No sir, I make not my selfe Christ: but I am not ashamed to do as my maister and sauour did, to bewaile & lament your infidelitie and idolatrye, which I there foresaw thorough tyranny you would bryng agayne to this realme, as this day doth declare.

Morgan.

That is your argument.

Christo.

*Wherein do we abuse the Sacrament? tell vs.

Phil.

As I may touch but one of the least abuses, you minister it not in both kynds as you ought to doe, but keepe the one halfe from the people, contrary to Christes institution.

Christo.

Why, is there not as much conteined in one kynd, as in both? And what neede is it then to minister in both kyndes?

Phil.

I beleeeue not so, for if it had, Christ would haue geuē but one kind only:* for he instituted nothing superfluous, and therfore you cannot say that the whole effect of the sacrament is as well in one kind, as in both, since the scripture teacheth otherwyse.

Christo.

What, if I can prooue it by scripture, that we may minister it in one kind? The apostles did so, as it may appeare in the Actes of the Apostles, in one or two places, where it is written that the Apostles continued In orationibus & fractione panis: In prayers, and in breakyng of breade, which is ment of the Sacrament.

Philpot.

Why, Maister Doctour, do you not knowe that Saint Luke by the makying mention of the breakyng of bread, meaneth the whole vse of the sacrament, accordyng to Christes institution, by a Figure which you haue learned in Grammer, *Synecdoche, where part is mentioned, and the whole vnderstanded to bee done, as Christ commanded it.

Christo

Nay, that is not so. For I can shew out of Euseb. in Eccles hist. that there was a man of God, (whom he named) that sent the Sacrament in one kynd by a boy to one that was sicke.

Phil.

I haue read in deed that they did vse to geue y^t was left of the Communion bread, to children, to mariners, & to women, and so peraduenture the boy might cary a piece of that was left to the sicke man.

Christo.

Nay, as a Sacrament it was purposely sent vnto hym.

Phil.

If it were so, yet can you not precisely say, that he had not the cup ministred vnto him also by some other sent vn^to him: but though one man did vse it thus, doth it folow that all men may do the like? S. Cyprian noteth many abuses of the sacrament in his tyme, which rose vppon singular mē's examples, as vsing of water in stead of wyne: therfore he sayth: Non respiciendum quid aliquis ante nos fecerit, sed quid Christus qui omnium primus, ante nos fecerit & mandauit: that is, Wee must not looke what any man hath done before vs, but what Christ first of all men did & commanded.

Christo.

Hath not the church taught vs so to vse the sacrament? and how do we know that Christ is Homousios, that is, of one substance with the father, but by the determination of the church? How can you prooue that otherwise by expresse words of scripture, and where find you Homousios in all the scripture?

Phil.

Yes, that I doe, in the 1. to the Hebrues, where it is written, that Christ is the expresse Image of Gods owne substance, eiusdem substantiae.

Christo.

Nay, that is not so. It is. There is no more but expressa imago substantiae: The expresse image of gods substance, and Image is accident.

Phil.

It is in the text, Of his substance, Substantiae illius▪ or of his owne substance, as it may be right wel interpreted. Besides this, that which Christ spake of himself in s. Ioh. manifesteth the same, saying: I & the father be one thing: Ego & pater vnum sumus. And where as you say, Imago here is accident, the ancient fathers vse this for a strong argument, to prooue Christ to be God, because he is the very Image of God.

Christo.

Yea do? is this a good argument, because wee are the Image of God, Ergo, we are God.

Phil.

We are not called the expresse Image of God,* as it is written of Christ, and wee are but the Image of God by participation, & as it is written in Genesis, wee are made to the likenesse and similitude of God. But you ought to know (M. Christoph,) that there is no accident in God, & therefore Christ cannot be the image of God, but he must be of the same substance with God.

Christo.

Tush.

Morgan.

How say you to the presence of the Sacrament?* will you stand to the iudgement here of your booke, or no? or will you recant?

Phil.

I know you go but about to catch me in wordes. If you can prooue that booke to be of my setting forth, lay it to my charge when I come to iudgement.

Morgan.

Speake, be you of the same mynd as this booke is of, or no? Sure I am you were once, vnlesse you become another maner of man then you were.

Phil.

What I was, you know: what I am, I will not tell you now: but this I wil say to you by the way, that if you can prooue your Sacrament of the Masse (as you now vse it) to be a sacrament, I will then grant you a presence: * but first you must prooue the same a sacrament, and afterward entreat of the presence.

Morgan.

Ho, do you doubt that it is a sacrament?

Phil.

I am past doubtyng, for I beleeeue you can neuer be able to prooue it a Sacrament.

Christo.

Yea doe, good Lord, doth not S. Augustine call it the sacrament of the aultar? How say you to that?

Phil.

That maketh nothyng for the probation of your Sacrament. For so he with other auncient writers do call the holy Communion or the supper of the Lord in respect that Page 1821 it is the Sacrament of the Sacrifice which Christ offered vpon the aultar of the Crosse, the which Sacrifice all the aultars and sacrifices done vpon the aultares in the olde lawe did prefigure and shadow, the which pertaineth nothyng to your sacrament hangyng vpon your aultares of lyme and stone.

Christo.

No doth? I pray you what signifieth aultar?

Phil.

*Not as you falsly take it, materially, but for the sacrifice of the aultar of the crosse.

Christo.

Where finde you it euer so taken?

Phil.

Yes that I do in S. Paul to the Hebrues 13. where he saith: Habemus altare de quo non est fas edere his qui tabernaculo deseruiunt: We haue an aultar, of the which it is not law full for them to eate, that serue the tabernacle. Is not aultare there taken for the sacrifice of the aultar, and not for the altar of lyme and stone?

Christo.

Wel, God blesse me out of your company. You are such an obstinate heretike, as I haue not heard the lyke.

Phil.

*I pray God kepe me from such blind doctors, which when they are not able to prooue what they say, then they fall to blasphemynge (as you nowe doe) for lacke of better prooffe. In the meane while the B. of London was talking with some other by, & at length came in to supply his part and sayd.

Boner.

I pray you maisters, hearken what I shall saye to this man: come hither maister Greene. And now sir (poin|ting to me) you can not thinke it sufficient to bee naught your selfe, but must go about to procure this yong gentleman by your letters to do the lyke.

Phil.

My Lord he cannot say, that I euer hitherto wrote vnto hym concernynge any such matter, as hee here can testifie.

Greene.

No, you neuer wrote vnto me.

Boner.

Why, is not this your letter which you did wryte concernynge hym?

Phil.

I haue shewed your Lordship my mynd concerning that letter alreedy: it was not written to M. Greene, neyther was he priuy of the writynge thereof.

Lond.

*How say you then, If a man be in an error, and you know thereof, what are you bound to do in such a case?

Philpot.

I am bound to do the best I can to bring hym out of it.

Lond.

If M. Grene here be in the like, are you not bounde to reforme him thereof if you can?

Phil.

Yes that I am, & wil do to the vttermost to my power therein. The B. remembryng hymselfe, thinking that he would but shrewdly after his expectation be holpen at my mouth, but rather cōfirmed in that which he called an errour, ceased to go any further in hys demaund, and called M. Greene aside, and before his Register red hym a letter. I know not the contents thereof: and therewithal he gaue M. Greene the booke of my disputation in the cōuocation house, and afterward went aside, commoning w^t M. Christopherson, leauyng M. Morgan, maister Harpsfield, and M. Cosins to reason with me in the hearyng of M. Greene.

Morgan.

*M. Philpot I would aske you how old your religion is.

Philpot.

It is older then yours by a thousand yeares and moe.

Morgan.

I pray you where was it fifty yeares ago?

Phil.

It was in Germany apparant by the testimony of Husse, Ierome of Prage, and Wickliffe, whome your generation a hundreth yeares agoe and moe, dyd burne for preachyng the truth vnto you: and before their tyme and since hath bene, although vnder persecution it hath bene put to silence.

Morgan.

*That is a maruelous strange religion, which no man can tell certainly where to find it.

Phil.

It ought to be no meruail vnto you to see gods truth through violence oppressed: forsh it hath bene frō the beginning from time to tyme, as it appereth by stories, & as Christes true religion is now to be found here in Englād although hypocrisie hath by violence the vpper hād. And in the Apocalyps you may see it was prophesied, that the true Church should be driuen into corners, and into wildernes, and suffer great persecution.

Morgan

A, are you seene in the Apocalyps? there are many strange thyngs.

Phil.

If I tel you the truth which you are not able to refel beleeeue it, & dally not out so earnest matters. Me thinke you are liker a scoffer in a play, then a reasonable doctor to instruct a man: you are bare arsed & dance naked in a net, and yet you see not your owne nakednes.

Morgan.

*What (I pray you) be not so quicke with me. Let vs talke a little more coldly together.

Philpot.

I will talke with you as mildely as you can desire, if you wil speake learnedly and charitably. But if you go about with taunts to delude truth, I will not hyde it from you.

Morgan.

Why, will you not submit your iudgement to the learned men of this Realme?

Phil.

Because I see they can bring no good ground, whereupon I may with a good conscience settle my fayth more surely then on that which I am now grounded vppon by Gods manifest word.

Morgan.

No do? that is maruell that so many learned men should be deceyued.

Phil.

It is no maruell by S. Paule: for he sayeth, That not many wyse, *neither many learned after the world bee called to the knowledge of the Gospell.

Morgan.

Haue you then alone the spirite of God, and not we?

Phil.

I say not that I alone haue the spirite of God, but as many as abide in the true faith of Christ, haue the spirit of God as well as I.

Morgan.

Howe knowe you that you haue the Spirite of God?

Phil.

By the fayth of Christ which is in me.

Morgan.

A, by faith do you so? I ween it be the spirit of the buttry,* which your fellowes haue had that haue ben burned before you, who were dronk the night before they wēt to their death, and I weene went dronken vnto it.

Phil.

It appeareth by your communication, that you are better acquainted with the spirit of the Buttry, then with the spirit of God. Wherefore I must now tell thee (thou painted wall & hypocrite) in the name of the liuing Lord, whose truth I haue told thee, that God shal raine fire and brimstone vpon such scornors of his worde, and blasphemers of his people as thou art.

Morgan.

What, you rage now.

Phil.

Thy foolish blasphemies hath compelled the spirit of God which is in me, to speake that which I haue said vnto thee, thou enemy of all righteousnes.

Morgan.

Why do you iudge me so?

Phil.

By thine owne wicked words I iudge of thee, thou blynd and blasphemous Doctour: for as it is written: By thy words thou shalt be iustified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned. I haue spoken on Gods behalfe, & now haue I done with thee.

Morgan.

Why, then I tel thee Philpot, that thou art an heretike, and shalt be burnt for thine heresy, and afterwards go to hell fire.

Phil.

I tel thee, thou hypocrite,* that I passe not this for thy fire and fagots, neither (I thanke God my Lord) stande in feare of the same: my faith in Christ shall ouercome thē. But the hel fire which thou threatnest me, is thy portion, and is prepared for thee (vnlesse thou spedily repent) and for such hypocrites as thou art.

Morgan.

What, thou speakest vpon wyne, thou hast tipled well to day, by likelihood.

Phil.

So said the cursed generation, of the Apostles beyng replenished with the holy Ghost, & speaking the wōdrous works of God, they said they were dronk, when they had nothing els to say, as thou doest now.

Morgan.

Why, I am able to answer thee, ywis, I trow.

Phil.

So it seemeth with blasphemies and lyes.

Morgan.

Nay, euen with learnyng, say what thou canst.

Phil.

That appeared well at my disputation in the Conuocation house,* where thou tookest vpon thee to aunswer those few arguments I was permitted to make, and yet wast not able to aunswere one, but in thyne aunsweres did fumble and stammer, that the whole house was ashamed of thee: and the finall conclusion of all thine answers was, that thou couldst answer me, if I were in the scholes at Oxford.

Morgan.

What, did I so? thou beliest me.

Phil.

I do not belye thee: the booke of the report of y^e disputation beareth record therto, and al that were present then, can tell (if they list) thou saydst so. And I tell thee playne, thou art not able to answer that spirit of truth, which spea|keth in me for the defence of Christes true Religion. I am able by the might therof, to driue thee roūd about this gallery before me: and if it would please the queenes maiesty and her Councell to heare thee and me, I woulde make thee for shame shrinke behinde the doore.

Morgan.

Yea would you so?

Phil.

Thou hast the spirite of Illusion and Sophistrye, which is not able to counteruaile the spirit of truth.* Thou art but an Asse in the true vnderstanding of thinges pertayning vnto God. I cal thee Asse not in respect of malice, but in that thou kickest agaynst the trueth, and art voyde of all godly vnderstāding, not able to answere to that thou braggest in.

Morgan.

Why, haue I not answered thee in all things thou hast sayd vnto me? I take them to record.

Page 1822

Phil.

Aske of my felow whether I be a theefe.

Cosins.

Harke, he maketh vs all theeues.

Phil.

You know that phrase of the Prouerbe, that like will holde with like. And I am sure, you will not iudge with me, against him, speake I neuer so true: and in this sense I speake it. The strongest answere that he hath made against me is, that you will burne me.

Morgan.

Why, we doe not burne you: it is the Temporall men that burne you, and not we.

Phil.

Thus you woulde (as Pilate dyd) washe your handes of all your wicked doinges. But I pray you Inuocate seculare brachium: call vpon the secular power to be executioners of your vnrighteous iudgementes. And haue you not a title in your law, De haereticis comburendis for, to burne heretickes?

Harps.

I haue hearde you both a good while reason together, and I neuer hearde so stout an hereticke as you are M. Philpot.

Cosins.

Neither I in all my life.

Phil.

You are not able to proue me an heretick, by one iote of Gods word.

Harps.

You haue the Spirite of arrogancy, I will reason with you no more.* And so he was departing, and M. Cosins also. And with that the bishop and Christoforsō came in agayne, and sayd.

Boner.

Mayster Doctour, howe doeth this man and you agree?

Morgan.

My Lord, I doe aske him where his church was fifty yeares agoe?

Boner.

Are you not halfe agreed, as one man sayd once to tway parties, of whō the one was equally disagreeing frō the other?

Christo.

My Lorde, it is but folly to reason with hym any further: your Lordshippe shall but loose time, for he is incurable.

Boner.

Well then, let his keeper haue him away. And with that Doct. Chadsey led me a way by the which we coulde not passe, and therfore came backe agayne through the byshops chamber, where al these doctors were clustred together: and as I was passing, the Bishoppe tooke me by the gowne and sayd: Wote you what M. Christoferson telleth me? I pray you M. Christoforson, rehearse the sentence in Latine, and so he did. The contentes thereof was, that an hereticke would not be won.

Christo.

S. Paule sayth: Haereticum hominem post vnam atque alteram admonitionem deuita: Flee an heretick after once or twise warning.

All the Doctors.

Yea, my Lord, it is best you so do, & trouble your Lordship no more with him.

Phil.

*You must first proue me iustly to be an hereticke, before you vse the iudgement of S. Paule agaynst me: for he speaketh of such as hold opiniō against the manifest word, the which you cannot proue by me. And because you want in your prooffe, & be able to proue nothing agaynst me, ther'fore you go about falsly to suppose me to be an heretick, for the safegard of your owne counterfeit honesties: but afore God you are the heretickes, which so stoutly & stubbornly mainteine so many thinges directly agaynst Gods word, as God in his time shall reueale. As I wēt out of his chāber, the Bishop called me aside and sayd:

Boner.

I pray thee in good sadnes, what meanest thou by writing in the beginning of the Bible: Spiritus est Vicarius Christi in terris:*The spirit is the vicar of Christ on the earth? Iwis you haue some speciall meaning therof.

Phil.

My Lorde, I haue none other meaning then (as I haue tolde you alreadye) that Christe since hys ascension worketh all thinkes in vs by his spirite, and by his spirite doth dwell in vs. I pray you my Lord, let me haue my bible, with other lawfull bookes and writinges whiche you haue of mine, whereof many of them be none of myne, but lent to me by my frendes.

Boner.

Your Bible you shall not haue, but I will perhaps let you haue an other: & after I haue perused the rest, you shall haue such as I thinke good.

Phil.

I pray your Lordshippe then, that you would let me haue candle light.

Boner.

To what purpose, I pray you?

Phil.

The nightes be long, & I would fain occupy my selfe about somewhat and not spend my time idly.

Boner.

You may then pray.

Phil.

I cannot well say my prayers without light.

Boner.

*Can you not say your Pater noster, without a Candle? I tell you sir, you shall haue some meate and drink of me, but candle you get none.

Phil.

I had leauer haue a Candle, then your meate or drinke: but seeing I shall not haue my request, the Lorde shalbe my light.

Boner.

Haue him downe.

Chad.

I will bring him to his keeper, my Lord. M. Philpot, I wonder that all these learned men whom you haue talked withall this day, can nothing perswade you?

Phil.

Why, M. Doctor, would you haue me to be perswaded with nothing? or would you haue me builde my fayth vpon sand? What do you all bring, wherby I ought by any sufficient authority to be perswaded to you?

Chad.

I am sorry you will so wilfully cast away your selfe, where as you might liue worshipfully. Do you not thinke other haue soules to saue as well as you haue?

Phil.

Euery man shall receiue according to his owne doinges. Sure I am you are deceiued and mainteine a false religiō: and as for my casting away, I would my burning day were to morow: for this delay is euery day to dye, and yet not to be dead.

Chad.

You are not like to dye yet, I can tell you.

Phil.

I am the more sory thereof. But the will of God bee done of me to his glory. Amen.

12. Examination of Iohn Philpot, on Wednesdaye the fourth of December before the Bishop of London, the Byshop of Worcester, and the Byshop of Bangor.

IN the morning I was fet down to the wardrobe adioyning to the chappell,* and within a while after came three of the Bishops Chapleines vnto me, saying:

Chapleines.

M. Philpot, my Lord hath sent vs vnto you, to desire you to come to masse, certifying you that ther is a Doctor of Diuinity a Chapleine of my Lordes,* a notable learned man, called Doct. Chadsey, going to masse: therefore we also pray you, good M. Philpot, be contēt to come: it is hard hereby.

Phil.

I wonder my Lorde woulde trouble you in sending you about this matter, seing he knoweth I am a man (by your law) that can not heare masse, because I stand excōmunicate.

Bishops Chap.

Your excommunication is but vpon a contumacy, and my Lorde will dispense with you, if you wyl come.

Phil.

My Lorde cannot, for he is not mine Ordinary, and I will not seeke any suche thing at his handes. With thys aunswere they went theyr way. And after Masse the Byshop called me before him into his Chappell, and there in the presence of his Register (after he had sayd his mynde, because I would not come to Masse) recited the Articles,* which he often times before had done in that behalfe, with the depositions of the witnesses, of whome some were not examined.

Boner.

Sir, what cā you now say, why I should not proceede to geue sentence agaynst thee as an hereticke?

Phil.

Why, my Lord, will you proceede to geue sentence against me before your witnesses be examined: * that is plain agaynst your owne Lawe, as all your doinges haue bene hitherto.

Boner.

See what a foole thou art in the lawe. I neede not to recite the depositions of the witnes, but if I liste: for I know them well enough already.

Phil.

It appeareth in deed you may do what you list.

Boner.

Tell me, I say, whether thou wilt answer, or no: & whether if thou were absolved of thine excommunication. thou wouldest come to masse, or no?

Phil.

I haue aunswered as much as I intend to do, vntyll I be called to lawful iudgemēt: and as concerning my cōscience, I will not make you God to sit there as yet: it is Gods part onely to be searcher of my hart.

Boner.

Looke how foolishly he speaketh. Art thou GOD? and yet doest thou not sit in thine owne conscience?

Phil.

I sit not in mine owne conscience: but I know it, & God there onely ought to sit, and no man els.

Boner.

Thou art a noughty felowe, and hast done mucche hurt, * & hast seduced other poore felowes here in prisō wyth the, by thy comforting of them in their errors, & hast made them reioyce and sing with thee.

Phil.

Yea, my Lord, we shall sing, when you and suche other as you are, shall cry, Vae, Vae, Woe, woe, except you repent.

Boner.

What an arrogant Foole is thys? I wyll handle thee like an hereticke, and that shortly.

Phil.

I feare nothing (I thanke God) you can doe to me. But God shall destroy suche as thou art, and that shortly, as I trust.

Boner.

Haue him away, this is a knaue in deed.

Phil.

And I was had into the Wardrobe again by my keper, and within an houre after was sent for to come before him and the bishops of Worcest•r and Bangor.

Boner.

Syr, I haue talked with you manye tymes, and haue caused you to bee talked with of manye learned men Page 1823 yea and honourable both Temporall and Spirituall, and it auayleth nothing with you, I am blamed that I haue brought thee afore so many: for they say, thou gloryest to haue many to talke withall. Well, nowe it lyeth thee vpon to looke to thy selfe: for thy time draweth neare to an ende, if thou doe not become conformable. And at this presente we are sent from the Synode to offer you this grace, that if you will come to the vnity of the Church of Rome with vs, and acknowledge the reall presence of Christ in the sacrament of the aultar with vs, all that is past shalbe forgeuen, and you receiued to fauor.

Worcest.

Mayster Philpot, we are sent (as you here haue heard,* by my Lord of London) from the Synode, to offer you mercy, if you will receiue it. And of good will I beare you, I wishe you to take it, whilst it is offered, and bee not a singular man agaynste a whole multitude of learned men, which now in fasting and prayer are gathered together to deuise thinges to doe you good. There haue manye learned men talked with you: why should you think your selfe better learned thē them all? Be not of such arrogancy, but haue humility, and remember there is no saluatiō but in the church.

Bangor.

Me thinketh my Lorde hath sayde wonderfullye well vnto you, that you shoulde not thinke your selfe so well learned, but other men are as well learned as you, neither of so good wit, but other be as wise as you, neither of so good memory, but other haue as good memory as you. Therfore mistrust your owne iudgement, and come home to vs agayne.* I wis I neuer liked your Religion, because it was set forth by violence and tyranny, and that is no token of true Religion. And I was that same maner of man then that I am now, and a greate manye moe. Mary, for feare we held our peace, and bare with that time. Wherefore M. Philpot, I would you did wel, for I loue you: & therefore be content to come home with vs agayne into the catholicke church of Rome.

Phil.

Where, my Lorde (as I may begin first to aunswere you) you say, that Religion is to be misliked, which is set forth by tyranny, I pray God you geue not mē occasion to thinke the same by yours at this day, which haue none other argument to stand by,* but violence. If you can shewe me by any good sufficient ground, whereby to ground my conscience, that the church of Rome is the true Catholicke church, wherunto you cal me, I wil gladly be of the same: otherwise I can not so soone chaunge the Religion I haue learned these many yeares.

Bangor.

Where was your Religion (I pray you) an hundred yeares agoe, that any man knew of it?

Phil.

*It was in Germany, and in diuers other places apparant.

Worc.

Jesus, will you be still so singuler a man? What is Germany to the whole world?

Boner.

My Lordes, I pray you geue me leaue to tell you, that I sent for him to heare masse, this morning: and wote you what excuse he made vnto me? forsoothe that he was accursed, alledging his own shame. He playeth as y^e varlet Latimer did at Cambridge.* When the Uicechancellor sent for him (who intended to haue excommunicated him for some of his heresies) & the Chancellor was cōming to hys chamber, he hearing that the Chancellor was comming, made answere that he was sick of the plague, & so deluded the Chancellor: euen so this man sayth, he is acursed, because he will not come to masse.

Worc.

My Lorde (I am sure) here doth behaue hymselfe like a father vnto you: therfore be admonished by him, and by vs that come now frendly vnto you, and folow your fa'thers before you.

Phil.

It is forbidden vs of God by the Prophet Ezechiel, to folow our fathers, neither to walke in theyr commaundementes.

Worc.

It is written also in an other place: Interroga patres: Aske of your fathers.*

Phil.

We ought to aske in deed our fathers that haue more experience and knowledge then we, of Gods will, but no more to allow them, then we perceiue they agree with the Scripture.

Worc.

You will be a contentious man, I see well: and S. Paul saith, that we, neither the church of god haue no such custome.

Phil.

I am not contentious but for the verity of my fayth, in y^e which I ought to contēd with all such as do impugne the same without any iust obiection.

Worc.

Let vs rise my Lord, for I see we shall doe no good.

Boner.

Nay, I pray you tary and heare the articles I laye to his charge. And after he had recited them, they arose, & after standing they reasoned with me a while,

Worc.

Mayster Philpot, I am very sory that you will bee so singular. I neuer talked with none yet in my Dioces, but after once cōmunication had with me, they haue bene contēted to reuoke theyr errors, & to teach the people how they were deceiued, & so do muche good, as you may, if you list. For as I vnderstande you were Archdeacon of Winchester (which is the eye of the Bishop) and you maye doe much good in that countrey, if you would forsake your errors, and come to the catholicke church.

Phil.

Wherwithall you so soone persuaded thē to your wil, I see not Errour, that I knowe, I holde none, and of the Catholicke Church I am sure I am.

Worc.

The Catholicke Churche doeth acknowledge a reall presence of Christ in the Sacrament, and so wyll not you.

Phil.

That is not so: For I acknowledge a very essentiall presence in the duely using of the sacrament.

Worc.

What, a reall presence?

Phil.

Yea, a reall presence by the spirite of God in the right administration.

Worc.

That is well sayd: and do you agree with the Catholicke church also?

Phil.

I do agree with the true catholicke church.

Worc.

My Lord of Londō, this man speaketh reasonably now.

Boner.

You do agree in generalities, but whē it shal come to the particularities, you will farre disagree.

Worc.

Well keepe your selfe here, and you shall haue other learned Bishops to commō further with you, as my lord of Duresme, and my Lord of Chichester (whome I heare say) you do like well.

Phil.

I doe like them as I doe all other that speaketh the truth. I haue once already spoken with them, & they foude no fault with me.

Worc.

Pray in the meane season for grace to God.

Phil.

Prayer is the comfortablest exercise I feele in my trouble, and my cōscience is quiet, and I haue the peace of mind, which cannot be the fruites of heresy.

Worc.

We will bid you farewell for this time.

Phil.

AFTER diner they called for me agayne,* and demaūded of me whether I meant as I spake before diner, and not to go from it. To whom I aunswered that I would not go from that I had sayd.

Worc.

You sayd at my departing from you before dinner, that if we did burne you, we should burne a catholick mā. Will you be a Catholicke man, and stand to the catholicke Church.

Phil.

I will stand to the true catholicke church.*

Worc.

Will you stand to the catholicke church of Rome?

Phil.

If you can proue the same to be the catholicke church I will be one therof.

Worc.

Did not Christ saye vnto Peter, and to all hys successors of Rome: Pasce oues meas, pasce agnos meos? Feed my sheepe, feed my Lambes? which doth signify, that he gaue him a more authority then the rest.

Phil.

That saying perteyneth nothing to the authority of Peter aboue others, but declareth what Christ requireth of his beloued Apostles, that they should with all diligence preache to the flocke of Christ, the waye of saluation, and that doeth the iteration of feeding spoken to Peter, onelye signify. But the Bishoppe of Rome litle regardeth thys spirituall feeding,* and therefore he hath imagined an easier way to make himselfe Lord of the whole world, yea and of Gods word too, and doth not feede Christes flock as Peter did.

Worc.

How can you tell that?

Phil.

Yes, I haue bene there, and I coulde not learne of all his countrymen, what euer he preacheth.

Worc.

Though hee preacheth not one waye, he preacheth an other, by procuring good order for the Church to bee kept in.

Phil.

I am sure that it will be his damnation before God, that he leaueth that he is commaunded of Christ, & setteth forth his owne decrees to deface the Gospell.

Worc.

It is the euill liuing that you haue seene at Rome, that causeth you to haue this ill iudgemēt of the church of Rome. I cannot tarry nowe with you to reason further of the matter. How say you to the reall presence of the sacrament, will you stand to that?

Phil.

I do acknowledge (as I haue sayd) a reall presēce of the sacrament in the due administration therof,* to the worthy receiuers by the spirit of God.

Worc.

You adde now a great many moe wordes then you did before: and yet you say more of the Sacrament, then a great many will do.

Thus they departed: and after them came in to me D. Chadsey, and D. Wright Archdeacon of Oxforde,* with a great many moe.

Chadsey.

Mayster Philpot, here is mayster Archdeacon of Page 1824 Oxford come to you, to geue you good counsell: I pray you heare him.

Phil.

I will refuse to heare none that will counsell me any good: and if any can bring any matter better then I haue, I will sticke therunto.

Wright.

I would wyssh you, Mayster Philpot to agree with the Catholique Church, and not to stande in your owne conceite: you see a great many of learned mē against you.

Phil.

I am (Mayster Doctor) of the vnfayned Catholicke Church, and will liue and dye therein: and if you can proue your church to be the true Catholicke church, I wil be one of the same.

Wright.

I came not to dispute with you, but to exhorte you. Here be better learned then I that can enforme you better then I.

Chad.

What prooffe woulde you haue? I will prooue vnto you our church to haue his being and foūdatiō by the scriptures,* by the Apostles, and by the primitiue church, confirmed with the bloud of martyrs, and the testimony of al Confessours.

Phil.

Geue me your hand, M. Doctor, proue that, & haue with you.

Chadsey.

If I hadde my Bookes here, I coulde soone prooue it,* I will goe fet some: and with that he wente and fet his booke of Annotations, saying: I can not bring my Bookes well, therefore I haue brought my booke of Annotations, and turned there to a Common place of the Sacrament, asking me whether the Catholicke Church did not allow the presence of Christes body in the Sacrament, or no? I heare say, you doe confesse a reall presence: but I wil be hanged, if you wil abide by it. You will denie it by and by.

Phil.

That I haue sayd, I cannot deny, neither intend not, whatsoever ye say.

Chad.

If there be a reall presence in the Sacrament, then euill men receiue Christ, which thing you wil not graunt, I am sure.

Phil.

I denye the Argument. For I doe not graunte in the Sacrament,* by transubstantiatiō any reall presence, as you falsly imagine, but in the due administration to y^e worthy receiuers.

Chad.

I will prooue that the euill and wicked men eate the body of Christ, as well as the good men, by Saynt Austine here.

Phil.

And in the beginning of his Texte Sayncte Augustine seemeth to approoue his assertion: but I bade hym reade out to the end, and there saynt Austine declareth that it was quodam modo,* after a certayne maner the euill men receiued the body of Christ, which is sacramentally onely, in the vtter signes, and not really, or in deede, as the good doth. And thus all the Doctours that you seeme to bring in for your purpose, be quite against you, if you did rightly weigh them.

Chad.

By God you are a subtile felow. See how he would writhe S. Austines wordes.

Phil.

See who of vs wrieth S. Augustine more, you or I, which take his meaning by his owne expresse words. And seing you charge me of subtletye, what subtletye is this of you, to say, that you will proue your matter of the churche euen from the beginning,* promising to shew your Bookes therin, and when it commeth to the shewing, you are able to shew none, and for want of prooffe slip into a bymatter, & yet faynt in the prooffe thereof. Afore God you are bare arst in all your religion.

Chad.

You shalbe cōstrained to come to vs at length, whether you will, or no.

Phil.

Holde that argument fast: for it is the best you haue, for you haue nothing but violence.

¶The thirteenth examination of Mayster Philpot, before the Archbishop of Yorke, and diuers other Bishops.

*The Thursday after, I was called in the morning before the Archbishop of Yorke, the Byshop of Chichester, the Bishop of Bath, and the Bishop of London. The Byshop of Chichester being first come, beganne to talke with me.

Chich.

I am come of good will to talke with you, to instruct you what I can, to come to the Catholicke church, & to will you mistrust your owne iudgement, & to learn first to haue humility, & by the same to learne of others that be better learned then you, as they did learne of such as were their betters before them.

Phil.

We must all be taughte of God, and I will with all humilitie learne of them that will infourme me by Gods worde, what I haue to doe. I confesse I haue but little learning in respect of you, * that both of your yeares and great exercise to excell therein: but fayth consisteth not onely in learning, but in simplicitie of beleuing that whiche Gods woorde teacheth. Therefore I will bee gladd to heare both of your Lordshippe, and of any other (that God hath reuealed vnto by hys word) the true doctrine therof, and to thank you, that it doth please you to take paynes herein.

Chich.

You take the first alleged, amisse, as though all men should be taught by inspiratiō, and not by learning. How do we beleue the gospel, but by the authority of the church and because the same hath allowed it?

Phil.

S. Paule sayth: He learned not the Gospell by men, * neyther of men, but by the reuelatiō of Iesus Christ: which is a sufficient prooffe that the Gospell taketh not his authoritie of man, but of God onely.

Chich.

S. Paule speaketh but of his own knowledge how he came thereto.

Phil.

Nay, hee speaketh of the Gospell generally, Whyche commeth not from man, but from God, * and that the Church must onely teach that which commeth from God, and not mans preceptes.

Chich.

Doth not Saynt Augustine say: I would not beleue the Gospell, if the authority of the Church did not mooue me thereto?

Phil.

I graunte that the authoritye of the Church doeth moue the vnbeleeuers to beleue, but yet the Church geueth not the woorde his authority: * for the woorde hath his authority onely from God, and not of man: mē be but disposers thereof. For firste the woorde hath his beyng before the Church, and the woorde is the foundation of the church: and first is the foundation sure, before the building theron can be stedfast.

Chich.

I perceiue you mistake me. I speake of the knowledge of the Gospell, and not of the authority: for by the church we haue all knowledge of the Gospell.

Phil.

I confesse that. For fayth commeth by hearing, and hearing by the woorde. * And I acknowledge that God appoynteth an ordinarye meanes for men to come vnto the knowledge now, and not myraculously, as he hath done in times past: yet we that be taught by men must take heede that we learne nothing els but that which was taught in the Primitiue church by reuelation. Here came in the Byshop of Yorke, and the Bishop of Bath, and after they had saluted one another, and commoned a while together, the Archbishop of Yorke called me vnto them, saying,

Yorke.

Syr, wee hearing that you are out of the way, are come of charity to enforme you, & to bring you into y^e true fayth, and to the catholicke church againe, * willing you first to haue humility, and to be humble & willing to learne of your betters: for els we can do no good with you. And god sayth by his Prophet: On whom shall I rest, but on the humble & meeke, and such as tremble at my word. Now if you will so be, we will be glad to trauell with you.

Phil.

I know that humility is the doore wherby we enter vnto Christ, and I thanke his goodnes I haue entred in at the same vnto him, & with all humility heare whatsoever truth you shall speake vnto me.

Yorke.

What be the matters you stande on, and require to be satisfied in?

Phil.

My Lord, & it please your grace, we were entred into a good matter before you came, of the church and howe we should know the truth but by the church.

Yorke.

In deede that is the head, we neede to begynne at. For the church being truely knowne, we shal sooner agree in the particular thinges.

Phil.

If your Lordships can proue the church of Rome to be y^e true catholicke church it shall do much to persuaide me toward that you would haue me encline vnto.

Yorke.

Why, let vs go to the definition of the church. What is it?

Phil.

It is a Congregation of people, dispersed throughe the worlde, agreeing together in the woorde of GOD,* vsing the Sacramentes and al other thinges according to the same.

Yorke.

Your definition is of many wordes to no purpose.

Phil.

I do not precisely define the church, but declare vnto you what I thinke the church is.

Yorke.

Is the church visible or inuisible?

Phil.

It is both visible and inuisible.* The inuisible church is of all the electes of God onely: the visible consisteth of both good and bad, vsing all thinges in fayth, according to Gods word.

Yorke.

The church is an vniuersall congregation of fayth full people in Christ through the world: which this worde Catholick doth well expresse: for what is Catholicke els? * doth it not signify vniuersall?

Phil.

The church is defined by S. Austine to be called Catholike Page 1825 in this wyse: Ecclesia ideo dicitur Catholica, quia vniuersaliter perfecta est & in nullo claudicat: The Church is called therefore Catholike, because it is throughly perfect, and halteth in nothyng.

Yorke.

Nay, it is called Catholike, because it is vniuersally receyued of all christian nations for the most part.*

Ph•lpot.

The Church was Catholique in the Apostles tyme: yet was it not vniuersally receyued of the worlde: but because their Doctrine whiche they had receyued of Christ, was perfect, and appoynted to be preached and receyued of the whole world, therefore it is called the Catholike fayth, and all persons receiuyng the same, to be counted the catholike church. And S. Austine in another place writeth, that the catholike church is that which beleeueth aright.

Yorke.

If you wyll learne, I wyll shewe you by Saint Austine,* writing agaynst the Donatistes, that he proueth the catholick Church by two principall pointes, which is, vniuersality and succession of Bishops in one Apostolical Sea from time to time. Now thus I will make myne argument.

*The Church of Rome is vniuersal, and hath her succession of bishops from time to time.

Ergo, it is the Catholicke Church.

How answer• you to this argumēt?

Phil.

I denye the antecedent, that the Catholique Church is onely knowne by vniuersality, and succession of Byshops.

Yorke.

I will prooue it. And with that he brought forth a booke which he had noted out of the Doctours, and turned to his common places therein of the church, and recited one or two out of S. Austine, & specially out of his Epistle written agaynst the Donatistes, where S. Austine manifestly * proueth, that the Donatistes were not the catholick church, because they had no successiō of bishops in their opinion, neither vniuersality: & the same force hath S. Austines argument agaynst you.

Phil.

My Lorde, I haue weighed the force of that Argument before now, & I perceiue it maketh nothing agaynst me, neither it commeth to your purpose. For I will stand to y^e triall of S. Austine for the approbatiō of the catholick Church, wherof I am. For S. Austin speaketh of vniuersality ioyned with verity, & of faythfull successours of Peter, before corruption came into the Church. And so if you can deduce your argumēt for the sea of Rome now, as S. Austin might do in his time, I woulde say it might bee of some force: otherwise not.

Yorke.

S. Austine proueth the Catholicke church * principally by succession of bishops, and therfore you vnderstād not S. Austen. For what, I pray you, was the opinion of the Donatistes, agaynst whom he wrote? Can you tell? What country were they of?

Phil.

They were a certayne sect of men, affirming among other heresies, that the dignity of the sacramentes depended vpon the worthines of the Minister: so that if the minister were good, the sacraments which he ministred were auayleable or els not.

Chichest.

That was theyr error, and they had none other but that: * And he read another authority of S. Austen out of a booke, which he brought euen to the same purpose that the other was.

Phil.

I challenge saynt Austen to be with me throughly in this poynt, & wil stand to his iudgement, taking one place with an other.

Chich.

*If you will not haue the Church to be certeine: I pray you by whom will you be iudged in matters of controuersy?

Phil.

I doe not deny the Churche to be certayne: but I denye that it is necessarily tyed to any place, longer then it abideth in the word, & for all controuersies the word ought to be iudge.

Chich.

But what if I take it one way, and you an other? how then?

Phil.

S. Austine sheweth a remedye for that, and willeth, quòd vnus locus per plura intelligi debeat: *That one place of the Scripture ought to be vnderstand by the moe.

Yorke.

How aunswere you to this argument?

*Rome hath knowne succession of Bishoppes whiche your church hath not.

Ergo, that is the Catholick Church, and yours is not, because there is no suche succession can be proued for your Church.

Phil.

I denye (my Lorde) that succession of Bishoppes is an infallible point to know the church by: for there may be a succession of bishops knowne in a place, * and yet there be no church, as at Antioche and at Hierusalem, and in other places, where y^e Apostles abode as well as at Rome. But if you put to the succession of bishops succession of doctrine withall (as S. Austen doth) I will graunt it to be a good prooffe for the Catholick church: * but a locall successiō onely is nothing vayneable.

Yorke.

You will haue no church then, I see well.

Phil.

Yes, my Lord, I acknowledge the catholicke church, as I am bound by my Creed: but I cannot acknowledge a false church for the true.

Chich.

Why, is there two catholicke churches then?

Phil.

No, I know there is but one catholicke Church, but there haue bene and be at this present, that take vpō them the name of Christ & of his church, which be not so in deed, as it is written: That there be that call themselues Apostles & be not so in deed, but the Synagogue of Sathan and lyers: * And now it is with vs, as it was with the two women in Salomons time, whiche lay together, * and the one suppressed her childe, and afterward went about to challenge the true mothers childe.

Chich.

What a babling is here with you nowe? I see you lacke humilitie. You will goe aboute to teache, and not to learne.

Phil.

My lords, I must desire you to beare with my hasty speech: it is my infirmity of nature. All that I speake is to learne by. I would you did vnderstād all my mind, that I might be satisfied by you through better authority.

Chich.

My Lord, and it please your grace, turne the argument vpon him, which you haue made, and let him shewe the succession of the Bishoppes of his Church, as we can doe. How saye you, canne you shewe the succession of Byshops in your Church from time to time? I tell you, this argument trubled Doctour * Ridley so sore, that he coulde neuer answeere it: yet he was a man well learned, I dare say you will say so.

Phil.

He was a man so learned, that I was not woorthye to cary his bookes for learning.

Chich.

I promise you he was neuer able to aunswere that. He was a man that I loued well, and he me: for he came vnto me diuers times being in prison, and conferred with me.

Phil.

I wonder, my Lord, you should make this argumēt which you would turne vpon me, for the trial of my church whereof I am, or that you would make bishop Ridley so ignoraunt that he was not able to aunswere it, since it is of no force. For behold, first I denyed you that local succession of Bishops in one place, is a necessary poynt alone to proue the Catholicke church by, and that which I haue denyed, you can not proue: * and is it then reason that you should put me to the triall of that, which by you is vnproued, and of no force to conclude agaynst me.

Chich.

I see, my Lordes, we doe but loose our labours to reason with him: he taketh himselfe better learned then wee.

Phil.

I take vpon me the name of no learning? I boaste of no knowledge, but of fayth & of Christ, & that I am bound vndoubtedly to know, as I am sure I do.

Chich.

These hereticks take vpō thē to be sure of al things they stād in. You should say rather with humility, I trust I know Christ, then that you be sure therof.*

Phil.

Let hym doubte of his fayth that listeth: God geue me alwayes grace to beleue that I am sure of true fayth & fauour in Christ.

Bath.

How will you be able to answere heretickes, but by the determination of the knowne Catholicke church?

Phil.

I am able to answere all heretickes by the woord of God and conuince them by the same.

Chich.

Howe arrogantlye is that spoken? I dare not say so.

Phil.

My Lord, I pray you beare with me: for I am bolde on the truth side, & I speake somewhat by experience that I haue had with hereticks: and I know the Arians be the subtlelest that euer were, & yet I haue manifest scriptures to beat them downe withall.

Chichester.

I perceiue nowe you are the same manner of man I haue heard of, whiche will not be satisfied by learning.

Phil.

Alas, my Lord, why do you say so? I do desire moste humbly to be taught, if there be any better way y^t I should learne: and hitherto you haue shewed me no bett•r: therefore I praye your Lordshippe not to misiudge without a cause.

Bath.

If you be the true Catholicke church, then will you hold with the real presence of Christ in y^e sacrament, which the true church hath euer mainteined.

Phil.

And I my Lord, with the true Churche doe holde the same in the due ministration of the sacrament: but I desire you, my Lord, there may be made a better conclusiō in our first matter, before we enter into any other: for if y^e Church Page 1826 be proued, we shall soone agree in the rest. In the meane while my Lorde of Yorke was turning his booke for moe places to helpe forth his cause.

Yorke.

*I haue found at length a very notable place, which I haue looked for all this while, of S. Austine De simplicitate credendi.

Chich.

It is but folly (my Lorde) that your Grace doe read him any moe places, for he esteemeth them not.

Phil.

I esteeme them, in as muche as they bee of force: as your Lordship doth heare me deny no doctors you bring, but onely require the true application of them, according to the writers meaning, & as by his owne wordes may be proued.

Yorke.

I will reade him the place, and so make an end. After he had read the sentence▪ he sayde, that by foure speciall poynts here S. Austine proueth the catholick church. The first is, by the consent of all nations, the secōd, by the Apostolick Sea, the third, by vniuersalitie, & the fourth, by this word Catholicke.

Chich.

That is a notable place in deede▪ and it please your Grace.

Phil.

I pray you, my Lord, of what church doth S. Austine write the same, of Rome, or not?

Yorke.

Yea, he writeth it of the Church of Rome.

Phil.

I will lay with your Lordshippe as much as I can make, it is not so▪ and let the booke be sene.

Bath.

What art thou able to lay, that hast nothing.

Yorke

Doth he not make mention here of the Apostolicke sea, whereby he meaneth Rome?

Phil.

That is very straitly interpreted my lord, as though the Apostolicke Sea had bene no where els but at Rome. But let it be Rome, and yet shall you neuer verify y^e same, vnlesse all the other conditions do go therewith as S. Augustine doth proceed withal, wherof none except the Apostolicke sea can now bee verified of the Church of Rome. For the fayth which that Sea now maynteineth hath not the consent of al nations neither hath had. Besides that, it cannot haue the name of Catholick, because it differeth frō the Catholicke Churches which the Apostles planted, almost in all thinges.

Yorke.

Nay, he goeth about here to proue the Catholicke Church by vniuersality:^{*} & how can you shew your church to be vniuersall fifty, or an hundreth yeares ago?

Phil.

That is not materiall, neither any thing agaynst S. Augustine. For my church (wherof I am) were to be coūted vniuersal, though it were but in x. persōs, because it agreeth w^t the same that the Apostles vniuersally did plant.

Yorke.

I perceiue you are an obstinate man in your opinion, & will not be taught: wherefore it is but lost labour to talke with you any lenger: you are a member to be cut of.

Chichester.

I haue heard of you before how you troubled the good Bishop of Winchester, and now I see in you that I haue heard.

Phil.

I trust you see no euill in me by this. I desire of you a sure ground to build my fayth on, & if you shew ne none, I pray you speake not ill of him that meaneth well.

Chichester.

Thou art as * impudent a fellow as I haue cōmuned withall.

Phil.

That is spoken vncharitably my Lord, to blaspheme him whom you can not iustly reprove.

Chich.

Why, you are not God. Blasphemy is counted a rebuke to Godward, and not to man.

Phil.

Yes, it may be as well verified of an infamy layde to man speaking in Gods cause, as you now do lay vnto me for speaking freely the truth afore GOD, to maynteyne your vayne Religion. You are voyd of all good ground. I perceiue you are blind guides and leaders of the blinde, & therfore (as I am bounde to tell you) very hipocrites, tyrannously persecuting the trueth, which otherwise by iust order you are able to conuince by no meanes. Your owne doctors and testimonies which you bring, be euidently agaynst you, and yet you will not see the truth.

Chichest.

*Haue we this thanke for our good will comming to instruct thee?

Phil.

My Lordes, you must beare with me, since I speake in Christes cause:* and because his glory is defaced, and his people cruelly and wrongfully slayne by you, because they will not consent to the dishonor of God, and to hypocrisie with you. If I told you not your fault it should be required at my hands in the day of iudgement. Therfore know you (ye hypocrites in deed) that it is the spirit of God that telleth you your sinne, & not I. I passe not (I thank God) of al your cruelty. God forgeue it you, & geue you grace to repent. And so they departed.

¶An other talke the same day.

The same day at night before supper, the bishop sent for me into his chappell in the presence of y^e archdeacon Harpesfield, Doctor Chadsey, & other his Chapleines,* and his seruauntes: at what time he sayd.

Lond.

Maister Philpot, I haue by sundry meanes gone about to do you good, and I maruell you do so litle consider it: by my trueth I can not tell what to say to you. Tell me directly, whether you will be a conformable man or no, & wherupon you chiefly stand.

Phil.

I haue tolde your Lordships oftentimes playne enough, wheron I stand chiefly, requiring a sure probation of the Church wherunto you call me.

Harps.

S. Austen writing agaynst the Donatistes, declareth foure speciall notes to know the Church by: * the cōsent of many nations, the fayth of the Sacramentes confirmed by antiquity, succession of Bishops, and vniuersality.

Lond.

I pray you Mayster Archdeacon, fette the booke hither: it is a notable place, let him see it. And the booke was brought and the bishop read it, demaunding how I could aunswere the same.

Phil.

My Lorde, I like S. Austens foure poyntes for the triall of the catholicke church, whereof I am: for it can abide euery poynt therof together, which yours can not do.

Harps.

Haue not we succession of Bishops in the Sea and church of Rome? Wherefore then do you deny our Church to be the catholicke church?

Phil.

D. Austine doth not put succession of Bishops onely to be sufficient, but he addeth the vse of the Sacramentes according to antiquity and doctrine vniuersally taughte & receiued of most nations from the beginning of the primatiue Church, the whiche your Church is farre from. But my church can auouch all these better then yours: therefore by S. Austins iudgement which you here bring, mine is the catholicke church, and not yours.

Harps. Chad.

It is but folly (my Lord) for you to reason w^t him, for he is irrecuperable. *

Phil.

That is a good shift for you to runne vnto, when you be confounded in your owne sayinges, & haue nothing else to say: you are euidently deceiued, and yet will not see it when it is layd to your face.

THus haue I at large set forth, as many of y^e sayd Iohn Philpot his examinations & priuy conferences, as are yet come to light, being faythfully written with his owne hand. And although he was diuers other times, after this examined, both openly in the Consistory at Paules, & also secretly in the bishops house: yet, what was there sayd, is not yet sufficiently knowne, either because M. Philpot was not himselfe suffered to write, or els for that his writings are by some kept close, and not brought forth otherwise thē as the bishops Register hath noted, whose handling of such matters, because it is (either for feare or for fauor of his Lord and maister) very slender, litle light of any true & right meaning can be gathered, especially in the behalfe of the answerer. Howbeit such as it is, such thought I good to put forth requiring the reader to iudge hereof according to his aunsweres in his former examinations.

¶The last examinations of M. Philpot in open iudgement, with his finall condemnation by Byshop Boner in the Consistory at Paules.

THE Bishop hauing sufficiently taken his pleasure with M. Philpot in his priuate talkes,* and seeing his zealous, learned, and immutable Constancy, thought it now high time to rid his handes of him, and therefore on the 13. and 14. dayes of December, sitting iudicially in the Consistory at Paules, he caused him to be brought thither before him and others, as it seemeth, more for orders sake, thē for any good affection to iustice and right iudgement. The effect aswell of which two sundry their procedinges, as also of one other had y^e 11. day of the same month in his chappell, appeare in a maner to be all one. The Bishop therefore first speaking to Mayster Philpot, sayd:

Lond.

M. Philpot,* amongst other thinges that were laid and objected vnto you, these three thinges ye were especially charged and burdened withall.

The first is, that you beyng fallen from the vnitye of Christes Catholicke Church, do refuse and will not come and be reconciled thereunto.

The second is, that you haue blasphemously spoken agaynst the sacrifice of the Masse, calling it idolatry.

And the third is, that you haue spoken agaynst the sacrament of the aultar, denying the reall presence of Christes body and bloud to be in the same.

And according to the will and pleasure of the Synode legatiue, ye haue bene oft & many times by me inuited and required to go from your sayd errors and heresies, and to returne to the vnity of the catholicke Church, which if you Page 1827 wil now willingly do, ye shalbe mercifully▪ & gladly receiued, charitably vsed, and haue al the fauor I can shew you. And now to tell you true, it is assigned and appoynted to geue sentence agaynst you, if you stande herein, & will not return. Wherefore if ye so refuse, I doe aske of you whether you haue any cause that you can shew, why I shoulde not now geue sentence agaynst you?

Phil.

Under protestatiō, not to go from my appeale that I haue made, and also not to consent to you as my cōpetent iudge, I say▪ touching your first obiection concerning the Catholick Church, I neither was nor am out of the same. And as touching the sacrifice of the Masse, and the Sacrament of the * aultar, I neuer spake agaynst the same. And as concerning the pleasure of the Synode, I say: that these xx. yeares I haue bene brought vp in the fayth of the true catholick church, which is contrary to your church, whervnto ye woulde haue me to come: and in that time I haue bene many times sworne (as wel in the reign of K. Henry the 8. as in the reigne of good King Edward his Sonne) agaynst the vsurped power of the Bishop of Rome, which othe I thinke that I am bounde in my conscience to keepe quia teneor reddere Domino iuramentum. But if you or any of the Synode can by Gods worde perswade me that my sayd othe was vnlawfull, and that I am bound by Gods law to come to your church, faith and religion, wherof you be now, I will gladly yeld, agree, and be conformable vnto you: otherwise not.

Boner then not able with all his learned Doctours to accomplish this his offered condition,* fel to perswading of him, as well by his accustomed wayne promises, as also by blondye threatninges to returne to theyr Churche: to the which he answered.

Phil.

You and all other of your sorte are hypocrites, and I would al the world did know your hypocrisy, your tyranny, ignoraunce and Idolatry.

Upon these wordes, the Bishop did for that tyme dismisse him, cōmaunding that on Monday the 16. day of the same moneth,* betwene the hours of one & three in the after noone, he shoulde agayne be brought thither, there to haue the definitiue sentence of condēnation pronounced against him, if he remayned then in his former constancy.

¶The last examination of Mayster Iohn Philpot.

AT which day and time, Mayster Philpot being there presented before the bishops of London,* Bath, Worcester, and Liechfield, Boner Bishop of London began hys talke in this maner.

London.

My Lorde Stokesley, my predecessour, when he went about to geue sentence agaynst an hereticke, vsed to make this prayer.

Deus qui errantibus vt in viam possint redire iustitiae veritatis tuae lumen ostendis,* da cunctis qui Christiana professione cēsentur, & illa respuere quae huic inimica sint nomini, & ea quae sint apta sectari per Christum dominum nostrum, Amen. Which I will folow. And so he read it with a loud voice in Latin. To the which Mayster Philpot sayd:

Philpot.

I would ye would speak in English, that all men might heare and vnderstand you: for Paul willeth that all things spoken in the congregation to edify, should be spoken in a tounge that all men might vnderstand.

Wherupon the Bishop did read it in English: & when he came to these wordes: to refuse those thinges which are foes to this name, Philpot said:

Phil.

*Then they all must turne away from you: for you are enemies to that name (meaning Christes name) and God saue vs from such hypocrites as would haue thinges in a tounge that men cannot vnderstand.

London.

Whom do you meane?

Phil.

You and al other that be of your generation and sect. And I am sory to see you sit in the place that you now sitte in, pretending to execute iustice, & doe nothing lesse but deceiue all men in this Realme.

And then turning himselfe vnto the people, he farther sayd: oh all you Gentlemē, beware of these men (meaning the Bishops) and al theyr doinges, which be contrary vnto the primatiue Church. And I would knowe of you my Lord by what authority you do proceed agaynst me?*

Lond.

Because I am Bishop of London.

Philpot.

Well, then ye are not my Bishop nor I haue not offended in your Diocesse: and moreouer I haue appealed from you, and therefore by your owne law you ought not to proceed agaynst me, especially being brought hither frō an other place by violence.

Lond.

Why? who sent you hither to me?

Philpot.

That did Doctor Story and Doctor Cooke, with other the king and Queenes Commissioners: & my Lord, is it not enough for you to werry your owne sheep, but ye must also meddle with other mens sheepe?

Then the Bishop deliuered vnto Philpot two books, one of the ciuill law, and the other of the Canon, out of the which, he would haue proued that he had authority to proceede agaynst him in such sorte as he did. M. Philpot then perusing the same, and seeing the small and slender prooffe that was there alledged, sayd vnto the Bishop.

Philpot.

I perceiue your law and Diuinity is all one: for you haue knowledge in neither of them: and I woulde ye did know your owne ignoraunce: but ye daunce in a net, and thinke that no man doth see you. Hereupon they hadde much talke, but what it was, it is not yet knowne. At last Boner spake vnto him and sayd:

Lond.

Philpot, as concerning your abiectiions agaynste my iurisdiction, ye shall vnderstand that both the Ciuill & Canon lawes make against you: and as for your appeal, it is not allowed in this case. For it is written in the law: A iudice dispositionem iuris exequente, non est appellandum.

Phil.

My Lord it appeareth by your interpretation of the law, that ye haue no knowledge therin,* nor that ye do vnderstand the lawe: for if ye did, ye would not bring in that Text.

Hereupon the Bishop recited a law of the Romaines that it was not lawful for a Iew to keepe a Christian man in captiuity, and to vse him as his slaue,* laying then to the sayd Philpots charge. that he did not vnderstand the law, but did like a Iew. Wherunto Philpot aunswered:

Phil.

No, I am no Iewe: but you my Lord are a Iewe. For you professe Christ and mainteine Antichrist: you professe the Gospell, & maynteine superstition, & ye bee able to charge me with nothing.

Lond. and other Bish.

With what can you charge vs?

Phil.

You are enemies to all truth, and all your doinges be noughte full of Idolatrie, sauing the Article of the Trinity.

Whilest they were thus debating the matter, there came thither syr William Garret knight then Maior of Londō,* Sir Martin Bowes knight, and Thomas Leigh, then Shiriffe of the same City, and sat downe with the sayd byshops in the sayd Consistory, where and what time bishop Boner spake these wordes in effect as foloweth.

Lond.

Philpot, before the comming of my Lord Maior, be|cause I would not enter with you into the matter wherewith I haue heretofore & now intend to charge you with all, vntill his comming, I did rehearse vnto you a prayer both in English and in Latin, which bishop Stokesly my predecessor vsed when he entended to proceede to geue sentence agaynst an hereticke.

And here they did agayne reade the sayd prayer both in English and also in Latin: which being ended, he spake agayne vnto him and sayd:

Lond.

Philpot, amongst other I haue to charge you especially with three thinges.

1. First, where you haue fallen from the vnity of Christs catholicke church,* you haue therupon bene inuited and required, not onely by me, but also by many & diuers others catholicke Bishops, and other learned men, to return and come agayne to the same: and also you haue bene offred by me: that if you would so returne and confesse your errors and heresydes, you should be mercifully receiued, and haue so much fauour as I could shew vnto you.

2. The second is, that you haue blasphemously spoken agaynst the sacrifice of the Masse, calling it Idolatry and abomination.

3. And thirdly that you haue spoken and holden agaynst the Sacrament of the aulter, denying the reall presence of Christes body and bloud to be in the same.

This being spoken, the Bishop recited vnto him a certayne exhortation in English, the tenour and forme wherof is this.

Bishop Boners exhortation.

MAyster Philpot, this is to be told you, that if you, not being yet reconciled to the vnity of the catholicke church,* from whence ye did fall in the time of the late schisme here in this realme of England, agaynst the sea Apostolick of Rome, will now hartely & obediently be reconciled to the vnity of the same catholicke church, professing and promising to obserue & keep to the best of your power the faith and christian Religion obserued and kept of all faythfull people of the same: & moreouer if ye whiche heretofore, especially in the yere of our Lord. 1553. 1554. 1555. or in one of them, haue offended and trespassed grievously agaynst the sacrifice of the masse, calling it idolatry and abominable, and likewise haue offended & trespassed agaynst the sacrament of the aulter, denying the real presence of Christes body & bloud to be Page 1828 there in the sacramēt of the aulter, affirming also withal material bread and materiall wine to be in the sacrament of the aulter, & not the substaunce of the body and bloud of Christ: if yee, I say, wil be reconciled as is afore, and wil forsake your heresies and erroures before touched, being heretical and damnable, and will allowe also the sacrament of the Masse, yee shalbe mercifully receiued and charitable vsed, with as much fauoure as may be: if not, ye shalbe reputed, taken and iudged for an hereticke (as yee be in deede:) Now do you chuse what ye wil doe: you are counselled herein friendly and fauourable.

Ita est quod Ed. Boner. Epis. Lond.

The Bishoppes exhortation thus ended. M. Philpot turned himselfe vnto the Lord Maior and sayd:*

Phil.

To you my Lorde Mayor bearing the sworde, I am glad that it is my chance now to stand before that authoritie that hath defended the Gospell, and the truth of gods word: but I am sory to see that that authoritie whiche representeth the king and Queenes persons, should now be chaunged, and be at the commaundement of Antichrist. And ye (speaking to the Bishoppes) pretend to be the fellowes of the Apostles of Christ, & yet be very Antichristes and deceauers of the people: and I am glad that GOD hath geuen me power to stand here this daye, and to declare and defend my faith, which is founded on Christ.

Therefore as touching your first obiection, I say that I am of the Cotholicke church,* wherof I was neuer out, and that your church (whiche ye pretend to be the Catholicke church) is the church of Rome, and so the Babilonicall and not the catholicke church: of that Church I am not.

As touching youre second obiection, whiche is, that I should speake agaynst the sacrifice of the Masse, I doe say, that I haue not spoken agaynst the true sacrifice, but I haue spoken agaynst your priuate Masses that you vse in corners, whiche is blasphemy to the true sacrifice, for your sacrifice dayly reiterated, is a blasphemye agaynst Chrystes death, and it is a lye of your own inuention. And that abhominable sacrifice which ye set vppon the aulter, and vse in your priuate Masses in steade of the liuing sacrifice, is Idolatry, and ye shal neuer proue it by Gods word: therefore ye haue deceiued the people with that your sacrifice of the Masse, which ye make a masking.

Thirdly, where you lay to my charge that I deny the body and bloud of Christ to be in the sacrament of the aulter I cannot tell what aulter yee meane, whether it be the aulter of the Crosse, or the aulter of stone. And if yee call it the Sacrament of the aulter in respect of the aulter of the stone, then I defie your Christ: for it is a rotten Christ.

And as touching your transubstantiatiō, I vtterly deny it: for it was brought vp first by a Pope. Now as concerning your offer made from the Synode, whiche is gathered together in Antichristes name: proue me that to be of the catholicke Church (which ye shall neuer do) & I will follow you, and do as you would haue me to do. But yee are Idolaters, and dayly do commit Idolatry. Ye be also traytors: for in your Pulpits you rayle vpon good kings as king Henry, and king Edward his sonne, which haue stand agaynst the vsurped power of the Bishop of Rome: agaynst whome also I haue taken an othe, which if ye can shew me by Gods law that I haue taken vniustly, I will then yeld vnto you. But I pray God turne the King and Queenes hartes from your Sinagogue and churche, for you do abuse that good Queene.

Here the Bishop of Couentry and Lichfield began to shew where the true church was, saying.

Couen.

The true catholicke church is set vpon an high hil.

Phil.

Yea, at Rome, which is the Babylonicall church.

Couen.

No: in our true Catholicke church are y^e Apostles, Euangelistes, and martyrs: but before Martine Luther, ther was no Apostle, Euāgelist, or martyr of your church.

Phil.

Will ye know the cause why? Christ did prophesie, y^t in the latter dayes there should come false Prophetes and hipocrites, as you be?

Couen.

Your Church of Geneua, which ye call the Catholicke Church, is that which Christ prophesied of.

Phil.

I allow the church of Geneua, and the doctrine of y^e same: for it is, vna Catholica, & Apostolica, and doth follow the doctrine that the Apostles did preach: and the doctrine taught and preached in king Edwardes dayes, was also according to the same. And are yee not ashamed to persecute me and others for your Churches sake, which is Babilonicall and contrary to the true Catholicke Church?

And after this they had great conference togethers, aswell out of the Scriptures, as also out of the Doctours. But whē Boner saw that by learning they were not able to conuince M. Phil. he thought then by his diffamations to bryng him out of credite: and therefore turning himselfe vnto the Lord Mayor of London, brought forth a knyfe, and a bladder full of powder, and sayd.

London.

My Lorde, this man had a roasted pigge brought vnto him,* and this knife was put secretly betweene the skin & the flesh therof, and so was it sent him, being in prison. And also this pouder was sent vnto him, vnder pretence that it was good and comfortable for him to eate or drinke: whiche pouder was onely to make inke to wryte withall. For when his keeper did perceauē it, he tooke it & brought it vnto me. Whiche when I did see, I thought it had bene gunpouder, and thereupon I put fire to it, but it would not burne. Then I tooke it for poyson, and so gaue it to a dogge, but it was not so. Thou I tooke a little water, and it made as fayre inke, as euer I did write withall. Therefore my Lord, you may vnderstand what a naughty fellowe this is.*

Phil.

Ah my Lord, haue ye nothing els to charge me withall but these trifles, seeing I stande vppon lyfe and death? Doth the knife in the pigge proue the churche of Rome to be a catholicke church. &c.

Then the bishop brought forth a certayne instrument conteyning Articles and Questions, agreed vpon both in Oxford and Cambridge, whereof yee haue mention before pag. 1428. Also he did exhibite two Bookes in Print: the one was y^e Catechisme made in king Edwards dayes. An. 1552. the other concerning the true report of the disputation in the Conuocation house, mention wherof is aboue expressed.

Moreouer hee did bring foorth and layde to Mayster Philpots charge two letters: the one touching Barthelet Greene, the other contayning godly exhortations & comfortes: which both were written vnto him by some of his godly friendes: the tenour whereof wee thought here also to exhibite.

A letter exhibited by Boner, written by some frend of M. Philpot, and sent to him concerning the handling of Mayster Greene in Boners house at London.

YOu shal vnderstand that M. Greene came vnto the Bishop of London on Sonday last, where he was curteously receaued:* for what policie the sequele declareth. His entertaynment for one day or two, was to dyne at my Lordes owne table, or els to haue his meate from thence. During those dayes hee lay in Doctor Chadseys chamber, and was examined. Albeit in very deede the Bishop earnestly and faythfully promised manye right worshipful men (who were suters for him, but to him vnknown) that he in no case shoulde bee examined: before which M. Fecknam would haue had him in his frendly custody, if he would haue desired to haue conferred with him, whiche he vtterly refused. And in that the bish. objected agaynst him singularitie and obstinacie, his answere thereunto was thus: To auoyd al suspicion therof, although I my self am yong & vtterly vnlearned in respect of the learned (and yet I vnderstand, I thanke my Lord) yet let me haue such books as I shal require: and if I, by Gods spirite, do not therby answere all your books and obiections contrary therto, I wil assent to you. Wherunto the Bishop and his assented, permitting him at the first to haue suche bookes. Who at sondrye times haue reasoned with him,* and haue found him so stronge and rise in the scriptures and godly fathers, that sithens they haue not onely taken from him such libertie of bookes, but all other bookes, not leauing him so much as the new Testament. Since they haue bayted and vsed him most cruelly. This mayster Fecknam reported:* saying farther, that he neuer heard the like young man, & so perfect. What shall become farther of him God knoweth, but death I thinke for he remayneth more and more willing to dye, as I vnderstand. Concerning your bill I shal conferre with others therin, knowyng that the same Courte is able to redresse the same.* And yet I thinke it will not be reformed, for that I know fewe or none that dare or wil speake therein, or preferre the same, because it concerneth spirituall thinges. Notwithstanding, I will assertain you therof: committing you to the holy Ghost, who keepe you & vs all as his.

Your owne. &c.

The copy of an other letter written by the faythful and Christen harted Lady^a the Lady Vane, to Mayster Philpot, exhibited lykewise by Byshop Boner.

HArty thanks rendered vnto you my welbeloued in Christ, for the booke ye sent me,* wherein I finde great consolations, and according to the doctrine therof, do prepare my cheekes to the strikers, and my womanish backe to theyr burthens of reproofe, and so in the strength of my Page 1829 God I truste to leape ouer the wall: for his sweetnesse ouercommeth me dayly, & maketh al these poticary druggs of y^e world, euen medicinelike in my mouth. For the continuance wherof, I beseech thee (my deare fellow souldior) make thy faythful prayer for me, that I may with a strong and gladsome conscience finish my course, and obtayne the reward, though it be no whit due to my worke, I am not content y^t you so often gratifie me with thanks for that which is none worthy, but duty on my part & small reliefe to you. But if you would loue me so much, y^t I might supply your lackes, then would I think ye beleued my offers to be such, as agreed with my hart. And for the short charges ye speake of, y^e meanes are not so pleasant, if god (who my trust is in) will otherwise prepare: but Salomō saith: Al things haue here their time: You to day, & I to morow, & so y^e ende of Adams line is soone ronne out: The mightye God geue vs his grace, that during this time his glory be not defaced through our weakenes. Because you desire to shew your selfe a worthy souldiour, if neede so require. I will supply your request for the Scarfe yee wrote of, that ye may present my handy worke before your Captayne, that I be not forgotten in the odours of incense which our beloued Christ offereth for his owne: to whom I bequeth both our bodies and soules.

Your owne in the Lord. F.E.

Ouer and besides these letters, the Bishops did also bring forth a supplication made by mayster Philpot vnto the high Court of Parliament, whereof mention is made in the first of the two letters last mentioned: y^e copy wherof doth here ensue, as followeth.

To the King and Queenes Maiesties highnesse the Lordes spiritual and temporall, and the commons of this present Parliament assembled.

IN most humble wise complayneth vnto this honorable Courte of Parliament Iohn Philpot Clarke,* that where there was by the Queenes highnesse a parliament called in the first yeare of her gracious raygne, and after the olde custome a Couocation of the Clergy, your suppliant then being one of the sayd Conuocation house, and matters there rising vpon the vsing of the Sacramentes, did dispute in the same, knowing that there all men had and hath had free speach, and ought not to be after troubled for any thinge there spoken, and yet, that notwithstanding, not long after the sayd Parliament, your sayd suppliant (without any acte or matter) was commaunded to prison to the kings Benche by the late Lord Chauncellour, where he hath remayned euer sithens, vntil now of late that my Lord the B. of London, hath sent for your sayd suppliant to examine him, (being none of his Dioces) vpon certayn matters, wherein they would haue your Oratour to declare his conscience▪ whiche the sayd bishop sayth hee hath authoritie to do, by reason of an Acte of Parliament made in the first and second yeares of the king and queenes Maiesties raignes, for the reuiuing of three Satutes made agaynst thē that hold any opinion agaynst the Catholicke fayth: whereby he affirmeth that euery Ordinary may Ex Officio examine euery mans conscience: * and for that your sayde Oratour hath and doth refuse, that the sayd Bish. of London hath any authoritie ouer your sayd Oratour, for that he is neyther Diocesane, nor hath publyshed, preached▪ nor held any opinion against the Catholicke faith (notwithstanding the said Bishop of London deteineth him in the Colehouse in the stockes, without eyther bed, or any other thing to lye vpon, but straw) and for that your sayde Oratour cannot appeale for his reliefe from the sayd Bishop, to anye other Iudge, but the same bishop may refuse the same by theyr law, and therefore hath no succour and helpe, but by this high Courte of Parliament, for the explanatiō of the sayd Acte: therefore it may please you, that it may be enacted by the kinge and Queenes Maiesties the Lordes spirituall and temporall, and the Commons of this present Parliament assembled, and by the authoritie of the same, that no Byshop nor Ordinary shall committe nor detain in prison, any suspect person or persones for the Catholicke fayth, except he or they haue spoken, written, or done some manifest Act against the Catholicke fayth, and the same to be lawfully proued agaynst euery such person and persons, by the testimony of two lawfull witnesses, to be brought afore the sayd person or persons so accused before he or they shal eyther be committed to prison or conuict for any such offence or offences: the sayd former statute, made in the sayd first & second yeare of our said soueraigne Lord and Lady notwithstanding. Whereby your sayde Oratour shal not only bee set at libertie, & diuers other mo remayning in prison: but also the bloude of diuers of the Quueenes Maiesties true and faythfull subiectes preserued.

The condemnation of the worthy Martyr of God, Iohn Philpot.

THEse bookes, Letters, Supplications and other matters being thus read, the bishop demaunded of him, if the booke intituled The true report of the disputation. &c. were of his penning or not? Whereunto Philpot aunswered, that it was a good and true booke, and of hys owne penning and setting forth.

The bishops waxing now weary, and being not able by any sufficient ground, either of Gods worde, or of the true ancient Catholicke fathers,  to conuince & ouercome him, fell by fayre and flattering speach, to perswade wyth him, promising that if he would reuoke his opinions, and come home agayne to their Romishe and Babilonicall Church, he should not onely be pardoned that which was past, but also they would with al fauour and chearefulnes of hart, receiue him agayne as a true member therof. Whiche words when Boner saw would take no place: hee demandeth of M. Philpot (and y^t with a charitable affection, I warrant you) whether he had any iust cause to alledge, why he shoulde not condemne him as an hereticke.  Well quoth M. Philpot: your idolatrous sacrament which you haue found out, ye would fayne defend, but ye cannot, nor neuer shall.

In the end, the Byshop seeing hys vnmoueable stedfastnes in the trueth, did pronounce openly the sentence of condemnation against him. In the reading wherof, when he came to these words: Teque etiam tanquam haereticum, obstinatum, pertinacem. & impenitentem. &c. M. Philpot said, I thanke God that I am an hereticke out of your cursed Church: I am no hereticke before God. But God blesse you and geue you once grace to repent youre wicked doinges: and let all men beware of your bloody church.

Moreouer, whiles Boner was about the middest of the sentence, the bishop of Bath pulled him by the sleeue & sayd: My Lord, my Lord, knowe of him first whether hee will recant or no? Then Boner sayd (full like himselfe) oh let me alone: and so read forth the sentence.

And when he had done, hee deliuered him to the Sheriffes: * and so two officers brought him thorough the Byshops house into Pater noster rowe, & there his seruauant met him, and when he saw him, he said: Ah deare mayster.

Then M. Philpot sayd to his man: content thy self, I shall do well enough: for thou shalt see me agayne.

And so the Officers thrust him away, & had his mayster to Newgate: And as hee went, he sayde to the people: Ah good people, blessed be God for this day: and so y^e Officers deliuered him to the keeper. Then his man thrust to go in after his mayster, and one of the Officers sayd vnto him: hence fellow what shouldest thou haue? And he sayd I would goe speake with my Mayster? M. Philpot then turned him about, and sayde to him, to morow you shall speake with me.

Then y^e vnder keeper said to Mayster Philpot: is this your man? And he sayd, yea. So he did licence his man to go in with him, and M. Philpot and his mā were turned into a litle chamber on the right hand, and there remained a litle time, vntil Alexander the chief keeper did come vnto hym: who at his entring, greeted him with these words Ah, sayd he, hast not thou done well to bringe thy selfe hether? Well sayde M. Philpot, I must bee content, for it is Gods appointmēt: & I shal desire you to let me haue your gentle fauour: * for you and I haue bene of olde acquayntaunce. Well sayd Alexander, I will shew thee gentlenes and fauour, so y^u wilt be ruled by me. Then sayd M. Philpot: I pray you shew me what you would haue me to do.

He sayd, if you would recāt, I will shew you any pleasure I can. Nay, sayd M. Phil. I wil neuer recant whylest I haue my life, that which I haue spoken, for it is a most certayne truth, and in witnesse hereof, I will seale it wyth my bloud. Then Alexander sayd: This is the saying of all the whole packe of you heretickes. Whereupon hee commaunded him to be set vpon the block, * and as many irons vpon his legges as he might beare, for that he would not follow hys wicked minde.

Then the Clarke tolde Alexāder in his eare that maister Philpot hadde geuen hys man money. And Alexander sayd to his man: what money hath thy mayster geuen thee? His man said: my mayster hath geuen me none. No sayd Alexander? hath he geuē thee none? that will I know for I will search thee. Do with me what you list, & search me all that you can, quoth hys s•ruauant. Hee hath geuen me a tokē or two, to send to hys frends, as to hys brother and sister. Ah sayd Alexander to M. Philpot: Thou art a mayntayner of heretickes. Thy man should haue gone to some of thyne affinitie: but he shal be known wel enough. Nay, sayd M. Philpot: I do send it to my frendes. There he is: let him make aunswere to it. But good mayster Alexander, be so much my frend, that these irons may be taken of. Well, sayd Alexander, geue me my fees, and I will take them off: if not, thou shalt weare them still.

Page 1830 Then sayd Mayster Philpot, sir, what is your fees? he sayd, foure pound was his fees, Ah sayd mayster Philpot I haue not so muche: I am but a poore man, and I haue bene long in prison. What wilt thou geue me then, said Alexander? Syr (sayd he) I will geue you twenty shillings, and that I will send my man for, or elles I will lay my gowne to gage: for the time is not long (I am sure) that I shal be with you: for the bishop sayd vnto me that I shuld be soone dispatched.

Then sayd Alexander vnto him, what is that to me? & with that he departed from him, and commaunded hym to be had into Limbo,* and so his commaundement was fulfilled: but before he could be taken from the blocke, y^e clark would haue a grote.

Then one Wittrence, Steward of the house, took hym on his backe,* and caryed him downe, hys manne knewe not whether. Wherefore mayster Philpot sayd to his man: go to maister Sheriffe and shew hym how I am vsed, and desire maister Sheriffe to be good vnto me. And so hys seruante went straghtway, and tooke an honest manne with him.

And when they came to mayster Sheriffe (whiche was Maister Macham) and shewed him howe mayster Phil. was handled in Newgate. The Sheriffe hearyng this, tooke his ring of from his finger, and deliuered it vnto y^e honest man whiche came with M. Philpots man, and bad him go vnto Alexander y^e keeper, & cōmanded him to take of his irons, and to handle him more gentlye, and to geue his man again y^t which he had taken from him. And when they came agayn to the sayd Alexāder, & told their message from the Sheriffe, Alexander tooke the ring, and said: Ah, I perceauē that mayster Sheriffe is a bearer with him,* & all such heretickes as he is: therfore to morow I wil shew it to his betters: Yet at x. of the clocke he went into Mayster Philpot where he lay, and tooke of his irons, & gaue him such things as he had taken before from hys seruant.

Upon Tuesday at supper, being y^e 17. day of December there came a messenger from the Sheriffes, and bad M. Philpot make him ready, for the next day he should suffer, and be burned at a stake with fire. M. Philpot aunswered and sayd, I am ready: God graunt me strength, and a ioyfull resurrection. And so he went vnto his chamber, and poured out his spirit vnto y^e Lord God, geuing him most hartly thanks that he of his mercy had made hym worthy to suffer for his truth.

In the morning the Sheriffes came according to the order, about viii. of the clocke, and calleth for him, & he most ioyfully came downe vnto them. And there his man dyd meete him, and sayd: A deare maister, farewell. His mayster sayd vnto him, serue God and he will helpe thee.* And so he went with the Sheriffes vnto the place of execution: and when he was entring into Smithfield, the way was foule, & two officers tooke him vp to beare him to y^e stake. Then he sayd merily, what? will you make me a Pope? I am content to goe to my iourneys end on foote.* But first comming into Smithfield, he kneeled down there saying these wordes: I will pay my vowes in thee O Smithfield.

And whē he was come to the place of suffering, he kissed the stake & saide:* shall I disdayne to suffer at this stake seeing my redeemer did not refuse to suffer most vile death vpon the Crosse for me? And then with an obedient hart full meekely he sayd the Cvi.Cvii. and Cviii. Psalms: and when he had made an end of all hys prayers,* he said to the officers: What haue you done for me? & euery one of thē de|clared what they had don: & he gaue to euery of thē mony.

Then they bound hym vnto the stake, and set fire vnto that constant martyr: Who the xviii. day of December, in the middest of the fiery flames, yelded his soule into the handes of y^e almighty God, and full like a lambe gaue vp his breath his body being consumed into ashes.

Thus hast thou (gentle reader) the lyfe and doyngs of this learned and worthy souldiour of y^e Lord,* Iohn Philpot: w^t all his examinations that came to our handes: first penned and written with his owne hand, beyng meruaylously reserued from the sight and hands of hys enemies: who by all maner meanes sought not onely to stop hym from al writing, but also to spoyle and depriue him of that which he had written. For the which cause he was manye tymes stripped and searched in the prison of his keeper: but yet so happily these his writinges were conueyed and hid in places about him or els hys keepers eies so blinded that notwithstanding all this malicious purpose of the Bishops, they are yet remayning and come to light.

A prayer to be sayd at the stake, of all them that God shall account worthy to suffer for his sake.

MERCifull God and father, to whome oure sauour Christ approched in his feare and neede by reason of death,* & found comfort: Gracious God and most bounteous Christe on whome Stephen called in his extreeme neede, and receiued strength: Most benigne holy spirite, whiche in the middest of all Crosses and death, diddest comfort the Apostle S. Paule, with more consolations in Christ, then he felt sorowes and terrors, haue mercy

Page 1831 vpon me miserable, vile, and wretched sinner, which now drawe neare the gates of death, deserued both in soule and body eternally, by reason of manifold, horrible, olde and new transgressions, which to thyne eyes (O Lorde) are open and knowne: Oh be mercifull vnto me, for the bitter death and bloudshedding of thine owne onely sonne Iesus Christ. And though thy iustice do require (in respect of my sinnes) that nowe thou shouldest not heare me, measuring me with the same measure I haue measured thy Maiesty contemning thy dayly calles: yet let thy mercy whiche is aboue all thy works, and wherewith the earth is filled, let thy mercy (I say) preuaile towardes me, through and for the mediation of Christ our sauour. And for whose sake in that it hathe pleased thee to bring me forth now as one of his witnesses, and a record bearer of thy veritye and trueth taught by him, to geue my life therefore (to which dignitie I do acknowledge dear God that ther was neuer any so vnworthy and so vnmeet, no not the thief that hāged with him on the Crosse): I most hūbly therefore pray thee that thou wouldest, accordingly, ayde, helpe, & assiste me with thy strength and heauenly grace, that with Christe thy sonne I may finde comfort, with Stephen I may see thy presence, and gracious power, with Paule and all others whiche for thy names sake haue suffered affliction and death, I may finde so present with me thy gracious consolations, that I may by my deathe glorifie thy holy name, propagate, and ratifie thy veritie, comfort the hartes of the heauy, confirme thy Church in thy veritie, conuert some that are to be conuerted, and so depart foorth of thys miserable world, where I do nothing but daily heape sinne vpon sinne, and so enter into the fruition of thy blessed mercy: wherof now geue and encrease in me a liuely truste, sense, and feelinge, wherethrough the terrours of death, the tormentes of fire, the panges of sinne, the dartes of Sathan, and the dolours of hel may neuer depresse me, but may be driuen away thorough the working of that most gracious spirite: which now plenteously endue me withall, that through the same spirite I may offer (as I nowe desire to do in Christ by him) my selfe wholly soule and body, to be a liuely sacrifice, holy and acceptable in thy sight. Deare Father, whose I am, and alwayes haue bene, euen from my mothers wombe, yea euen before the world was made, to whome I commend my selfe, soule and body, family, and frendes, countrey and all the whole Church, yea euen my very enemies, accordynge to thy good pleasure,* beseeching thee intirely to geue once more to this Realme of England, the blessing of thy word agayn, with godly peace, to the teaching & setting forth of the same. Oh dear father, now geue me grace to come vnto thee. Purge and so purifie me by this fire in Christes death and Passion through thy spirite, that I may be a burnt offering of sweete smell in thy sight which liuest and raignest with the sonne and the holy God, nowe and euermore world without end. Amen.

¶Letters of Mayster Philpot.

¶A letter which he sent to the christian congregation exhorting them to refrayne from the Idolatrous seruice of the papists, and to serue God after his word.

IT is a lamentable thing to behold at this present in England,* the faithles departing both of men & women frō y^e true knowledge & vse of Christes sincere religion, which so plētifully they haue bene taught & do know, their own consciences bearing witnes to the veritie thereof. If that earth be cursed of God,* which eftsoones receiuing moisture & pleasant dewes from heauen, doth not bring forth fruite accordingly: how much more greuous iudgemēt shal such persons receiue, which hauing receiued from the father of heauē the perfect knowledge of his word by the ministry therof,* do not shew forth Gods worship after the same? If the Lord wil require in the day of iudgemēt a godly vsury of all maner of talentes which he sendeth vnto men & women how much more wil he require the same of his pure religion reuealed vnto vs (which is of al other talents the chieftest & most pertayning to our exercise in this life) if we hide the same in a napkin and set it not forth to y^e vsurye of Gods glory, and edifying of his church by true confessiō? God hath kindled the bright light of his Gospel, which in times past was suppressed & hid vnder y^e vile ashes of mās traditiōs, and hath caused the brightnes therof to shine in our harts,* to y^e end y^t the same might shine before men to y^e honor of his name. It is not onely geuen vs to beleue, but also to confesse & declare what we beleue in our outwarde couersation.* For as S. Paule writeth to the Romaines: The beliefe of the hart iustifieth, and toe acknowledge wyth the mouth,*maketh a man safe. It is al one before God, not to beleue at al, & not to shew forth y^e liuely works of our belief. For Christe sayth:Either make the tree good and his fruites good: or ells make the tree euill and the fruites euill, because a good tree bringeth forth good fruites: So that y^e person which knoweth his maysters will and doth it not, shalbe beaten with many stripes. And not all they which say Lord Lord shall enter into the kingdome of God, but he that doth the will of the father. And whosoeuer in the tyme of tryall is ashamed of me (sayth Christ) and of my wordes, of him the sonne of man will be ashamed before his father. After that wee haue built our selues into the true church of God,* it hath pleased him by geuing vs ouer into the hands of the wicked sinagoges, to proue our building, & to haue it knowne as wel to y^e world as to our selues y^t we haue bene wise builders into y^e true church of God vpon y^e rock, & not on the sand,* & therefore nowe the tempest is risen, and the stormes doe mightily blow agaynst vs, that wee might notwithstanding stand vpright and be firme in the Lord, to his honor and glory, and to our eternall felicitie. There is no newe thing happened vnto vs, for w^t such tãpests & dangerous weathers the church of God hath continually bene exercised. Nowe once agayne as the Prophet Aggeus telleth vs: The Lord shaketh the earth, that those might abide for euer,* which be not ouerthrowne.

Therefore my dearely beloued, be stable and immouable in the word of God,* and in the faythfull obseruation therof, and let no man deceiue you with vayn words: saying, that you may keepe your faith to your selues, and dissemble with Antichrist, and so liue at rest and quietnes in the world, as most men doe, yelding to necessitie. Thys is the wisdom of the fleshe but the wisdom of the fleshe is death and enmitie to God,* as our sauour for ensãple aptly did declare in Peter, who exhorted Christ not to goe to Ierusalem to celebrate the Passouer and there to be slayn, but counselled him to looke better to himselfe.

Likewise the worlde woulde not haue vs to forsake it, neither to associate our selues to the true church which is the body of Christ, whereof we are liuely members, and to vse the sacramentes after Gods word with the danger of our liues. But we must learne to answeere the world,* as Christ did Peter, and say: Go behynd me Sathan, thou fauourest not the thinges of God. Shall I not drinke of the cup whiche the father geueth me? For it is better to bee afflicted and to be slayne in the church of God, then to be counted y^e sonne of the king and the sinagogue of false religion.* Death for righteousnes is not to be abhorred, but rather to bee desired, which assuredly bringeth with it the crowne of euerlasting glory. These bloody executioners do not persecute Christes martyrs, but crowne them with euerlasting felicitie, we were borne into this world to be witnesses vnto the truth, both learned and vnlearned.

Now since the time is come y^t we must shew our fayth and declare whether we will be Gods seruauntes in righteousness & holines, as we haue bene taught & are boũd to follow, or els with hipocrisie to serue vnrighteousnes: let vs take good heed that we be found faithfull in the Lords couenaut and true members of hys Church: in y^t which through knowledge we are engrafted, from the whiche if we fall by transgression with the common sort of people, it will more straightly be required of vs, then many yet doe make accompt therof. We cannot serue two maysters: we may not halt on both sides, and thinke to please God:* we must bee feruent in Gods cause, or els hee will cast vs out from him. For by the first commaundement wee are commanded to loue God with all our hart, with all our mind with all our power and strength: but they are manifest transgressours of this commaundement, which with their heart, mynde or bodely power doe communicate with a straunge religion, contrary to the word of God, in the papisticall Sinagogue, which calleth it selfe the Church, and is not. As greatly do they offend God now which so doe, as the Israelites did in tymes past by forsaking Ierusalẽ the true church of God and by going to Bethell to serue God in a congregation of theyr owne setting vp,* and after theyr own imaginations and traditions: for the which doying God vtterly destroyed all Israell, as all the Prophetes almost doe testifie. This happened vnto them for our ensample, that we might beware to haue any fellowship with any like congregation to our destruction.

God hath one Catholicke church dispersed throughout the world, and therefore we are taught in our Creed to beleue one Catholicke Church, & to haue communion therewith: which catholicke church is grounded vpon y^e foundation of the Prophets and of the Apostles, and vpō none other, as S. Paule witnesseth to the Ephesians.* Therefore whersoever we perceauē any people to worship God truly after the word, there we may be certayne the church of Christe to bee: vnto the whiche we ought to associate oure selues, & to desire with the Prophet Dauid, to prayse God in y^e midst of this church.* But if we behold through iniquitie of time, segregations to be made with counterfayt religion, otherwise then the word of God doth teach, wee ought then if we be required, to be companions therof, to say agayne with Dauid:* I haue hated the Synagogue of the Page 1832 malignant, and will not sit with the wicked. In the Apocalips y^e church of Ephesus is highly commended, because she tried such as said they were Apostles, and were not in deede, & therefore would not abide the company of them. Further God commanded his people y^t they shuld not seek Bethel neither enter into Gilgal where idolatry was vsed by the mouth of his Prophet Amos.* Also wee must consider that our bodies be y^e tēple of God, & whosoever (as S. Paule teacheth) doth prophane the tēple of God, him the Lord wil de|stroy.* May we thē take y^e tēple of Christ & make it y^e mēber of an harlot. All strange religion and Idolatry is counted whoredome with the Prophetes, and that more detestable in the sight of God, then the aduoutrous abuse of y^e bodye.

*Therefore the Princes of the earthe in the reuelation of S. Iohn, be sayd to go a whoring, whē they are in loue w^t false religion, and follow the same. How then by any meanes may a christian man thinke it tollerable to be present at the popish priuate Masse (which is the very prophanation of the sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ) and at other idolatrous worshippings and rites, which be not after the word of God, but rather to the derogation therof, in setting mans traditions aboue Gods preceptes, since God by his word iudgeth all straunge religion, whiche is not according to his institutiō, for whoredom & aduoutry.

Some fondly think that the presence of the body is not materiall, so that the hart doe not consent to theyr wicked doings.* But suche persons litle consider what S. Paule writeth to the Corinthians, commaunding them to glorifie God as well in body as in soule.

Moreouer, wee can doe no greater iniury to the true Church of Christ, then to seeme to haue forsaken her, and disallow her by cleauing to her aduersary: whereby it appeareth to others which be weake, that we allow the same & so contrary to y^e word, do geue a great offence to y^e church of God, and do outwardly sclaunder (as much as menne may) the truth of Christ. But woe be vnto hym by whom any such offence commeth. Better it were for him to haue a milstone tyed about his necke, and to bee caste into the bottome of the sea. Such be traytors to the truth, like vnto Iudas, who w^t a kisse betrayed christ. Our god is a gelous God, and cannot be content that we should be of any other then of y^t vnspotted church, whereof he is the hed onely, and wherin he hath planted vs by baptisme. Thys gelousy which God hath towards vs, will cry for vengeance in the day of vengeance, against al such as now haue so large consciences to do that which is contrary to Gods glory,* and the sinceritie of hys worde, excepte they doe in time repent, and cleaue vnseperable to the Gospel of christ how much soeuer at this present both men and women otherwise in theyr owne corrupt iudgement,* do flatter thēselues.* God willeth vs to iudge vprightly, and to allow & follow that which is holy and acceptable in hys sight, and to abstayne from all maner of euill, and therefore Christ cōmaundeth vs in the Gospell to beware of the leauen of the Phariseis, which is hipocrisie.

S. Paule to the Hebrues sayth: if any man withdraw hymselfe from the fayth, his soule shal haue no pleasure in hym: therefore he sayth also: That we are none suche as doe withdraw our selues into perdition, but wee belong vnto sayth, for the attaynment of life.* S. Iohn in the Apocalips telleth vs playnly, that none of those, who are written in y^e book of lyfe, doe receaue the marke of the beast, which is of the Papisticall Sinagogue,* eyther in theyr foreheades, or els in theyr hands, that is, aparantly or obediently.

S. Paule to the Philippians affirmeth, that wee may not haue any fellowship with the works of darkenes, but in the middest of this wicked and froward generation we ought to shyne lyke lightes vpholding the word of truth. Further hee sayth, that wee may not touch anye vncleane thing:. Which signifieth that our outward conuersation in forreigne thinges, ought to be pure and vndefiled as well as the inward, that with a cleane spirite and rectified body we might serue God iustly in holines and righteousnesse all the dayes of our life.

Finally in the 18. of the Apocalips, God biddeth vs playnely to depart from this Babilonicall Synagogue, & not to be partakers of her trespasse. S. Paule to the Thessalonians commaundeth vs in the name of the Lorde Iesus Chryst, to withdraw our selues from euery brother y^t walketh inordinately, and not according to the institution whych he had receaued of hym.

Ponder ye therefore well good brethren & sisters, these scriptures whiche be written for your crudition and reformation,* wherof one iot is not written in vayne: which bee vtterlye agaynste all counterfait illusion to bee vsed of vs w^t the papysts in theyr phantastical religion, and be aduersaryes to all them that haue so light cōsciēces in so doing: and if they do not agree wyth thys aduersary (I meane y^e word of God) which is contrary to theyr attēpts he will as it is signified in the Gospell deliuer them to the Iudge, which is Chryst,* and the Iudge will declare them to y^e executioner, y^t is the deuill, & the deuill shal commit thē to the horrible prison of hell fire (where is the portion of al hypocrites) with sulphure and brimstone,* wyth waylyng & gnashyng of teech world wythout ende. But yet manye wyll say for theyr vayne excuse: God is mercifull, and hys mercy is ouer al. But the scripture teacheth vs, that cursed is he that sinneth vpon hope of forgeuenes. Truth it is, y^t the mercy of God is aboue all his workes, & yet but vpon such as feare him: for so is it written in the Psalmes: The mercy of God is on thē that feare him, and on such as put theyr trust in him.* Wher we may learn y^t they only put theyr trust in God, that feare hym, & to feare God, is to turne from euil and to do that is good. So that such as do looke to be partakers of Gods mercy, may not abide in that which is known to be manifest euil and detestable in y^e sight of god.

An other sort of persons doe make them a cloke for the rayne vnder the pretence of obedience to the Magistrates whome we ought to obey although they bee wicked.* But such must learne of Christ to geue to Caesar that is Cesars, and to God that is due to God, and with saint Peter to obey the hyher powers in the Lord, albeit they bee euill,* if they commaund nothing contrary to Gods word: otherwise we ought not to obey theyr commaundementes, although we shoulde suffer death therefore: as wee haue the Apostles for our example herein to follow, who answered the magistrates as we ought to do in this case, not obeying their wicked preceptes, saying: Iudge you whether it be more righteous that we should obey man rather then God.*

Also, Daniell chose rather to be cast into the denne of Lions to be deuoured, thē to obey y^e kings wicked cōmandements. If y^e blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch. There is no excuse for the transgression of Gods worde, whether a man do it voluntarily or at commaundement, although great damnation is to thē, by whom the offence commeth. Some other there be y^t for an extreme refuge in their euil doings, do rū to gods predestinatiō & electiō,* say'ing: y^t if I be elected of god to saluation, I shalbe saued, whatsoeuer I do. But such be great tempters of GOD and abhominable blasphemers of GODS holy election, and cast them selues downe from the pinnacle of the temple in presumption, that God may preser•• them by his aungels through predestination. Suche verily may reckon themselues to be none of Gods elect children, that will doe euill that good may ensue: whose damnation is iust, as S. Paule sayth. Gods predestination and election ought to be with a simple eye cōsidered, to make vs more warely to walke in good & godly cōuersation according to Gods word, & not to set cocke in the hoope, and put all on Gods backe to do wickedly at large: for the elect childrē of God must walk in righteousnes & holynes after y^t they be once called to true knowledge.* For so sayth S. Paule to y^e Ephesiā: That God hath chosen vs before the fōūdatiōs of the world were layd, that we should be holy & blameles in his sight.

Therefore S. Peter willet vs through good workes to make our vocation & electiō certaine to our selues,* which we know not but by the good workyng of Gods spirite in vs, accordyng to y^e rule of the Gospell: & he that cōformeth not him selfe to the same in godly conuersation, may iustly trēble & doubt that he is none of the elect children of God, but of the viperous generation, and a child of darkenesse. For the children of light will walke in the workes of light and not of darkenes: though they fall, they do not lye still.*

Let all vayne excusations be set a part,* and whiles ye haue light, as Christ commaundeth, beleue the light and abide in the same, lest eternall darkenesse ouertake you vnwares. The light is come into the world,* but (alas) men loue darkenesse more thē the light. God geue vs his pure eyesalue to heale our blindnes in this behalfe. O that men and women would be healed, and not seeke to be wilfully blinded. The Lord open their eyes,* that they may see how daūgerous a thyng it is to decline from the knowledge of truth, contrary to their conscience.

But what sayd I conscience? many affirme their conscience will beare them well enough to do all that they do,* and to go to the Idolatrous Church to seruice: whose cōsciēce is very large to satisfie man more then God. And although their conscience can beare them so to do, yet I am sure that a good conscience will not permit them so to doe: which cā not be good vnlesse it be directed after the knowledge of Gods word: and therefore in Latin this feelyng of mynde is called Conscientia, which soūdeth by interpretation, as much as with knowledge.

And therefore if our conscience be led of her selfe, & not after true knowledge, yet we are not so to be excused,* as S. Paul beareth witnes, saying: Although my cōscience acseth Page 1833 me not, yet in this I am not iustified. And he ioineth a good cōscience with these 3. sisters, charitie, a pure heart, & vnfayned fayth. Charitie keepeth Gods commaundements, a pure hart loueth and feareth God aboue all, & vnfayned fayth is neuer ashamed of the profession of the Gospell, whatsoever damage he shal suffer in body therby: the lord which hath reuealed hys holy will vnto vs by hys word, graunt vs neuer to be ashamed of it, and geue vs grace so earnestly to cleaue to hys holy word and true church, that for no maner of worldly respecte we become partakers of the workes of hipocrisie, which God doth abhorre: so that we may be found faythfull in the Lords Testament to the end both in hart, word, and deede, to the glory of God and our euerlasting saluation. Amen.

Ioh. Philpot prisoner in the Kinges Benche for the testimony of the truth. 1555.

To hys deare frend in the Lord Iohn Careles prisoner in the kinges Benche.

MY dearely beloued brother Careles, I haue receaued youre louing letters full of loue and compassion, in somuch that they made my hard hart to weepe, to see you so carefull for one that hath bene so vnprofitable a member as I haue bene and am in Christes church God make me worthy of that I am called vnto, and I pray you, cease not to pray for me but cease to weep for him who hath not deserued such gentle teares: and prayse God with me, for that I now approch to the company of them, whose want you may worthily lament: God geue your pittiful hart, his inward consolation. In deede my deare Careles, I am in thys world in hell, and in the shadow of death: but he that hath brought me for my desertes downe vnto hell, shall shortly lift me vpp to heauen, where I shall looke continually for your commyng & others my faythfull brethren in the kinges Benche. And though I tell you that I am in hell in the iudgement of this world, yet assuredly I feele in the same the consolation of heauen, I prayse God: and thys lothsome and horrible prison is as pleasaunt to me, as the walke in the garden of the kinges Bench.

You know brother Careles, that the way to heauen out of this life, is very narrow, and wee must striue to enter in at a narrowe gate. If God do mitigate the ouglenes of myne imprisonment, what will he do in the rage of the fire whereunto I am appoynted? And this hath happened vnto me that I might be hereafter an ensample of comfort, if the like happen vnto you or to any other of my deare brethren with you in these cruell dayes, in the which the deuill so rageth at the faythfull flock of Chryst, but in vayne (I trust against any of vs, who be perswaded that neither lyfe neither death is able to seperate vs from the loue of Christs Gospell, which is Gods high treasure committed to your brittle vessels to glorifie vs by the same. God of hys mercye make vs faythfull stewardes to the end, and geue vs grace to feare nothing what soeuer in hys good pleasure we shal suffer for the same. That I haue not written vnto you e•st, the cause is our strait keepyng and the want of light by night, for the day serueth vs but a while in our darke closet. This is the first letter that I haue writtē since I came to prison, besides the report of mine examinations: and I am fayne to scribble it out in hast.

Commend me to al our faythfull brethren, and bid thē with a good courage looke for their redemption, & frame themselues to be harty souldiours in Christ. They haue taken his prest money a great while, and now let them shew themselues readye to serue hym faythfully, and not to fly out of the Lordes campe into the world, as many do. Let them remēber that in the Apocalips the fearfull be excluded the kingdome. Let vs be of good cheare for our Lord ouercame the world, that wee shoulde doe the like. Blessed is the seruaunt whome when the Lord commeth, he findeth watching. O let vs watch and pray earnestly one for an other, that we be not led into tēptation. Be ioyful vnder the crosse & prayse the Lord cōtinually, for this is the whole burnt sacrifice which the Lord delighteth in. Cōmēd me to my father Hunt and desire him to loue and continue in the vnitie of Christs true Church, which he hath begon, and then shal he make me more & more to ioy vnder my crosse with him. Tel my brother Clements that he hath cōforted me much by his louing token in significatiō of an vnfayned vnitie with vs: let him encrease my ioy vnto the end perfectly. The Lord of peace be with you al. Salute al my louyng frends. M. Mering, M. Crooche, with the rest, and specially. M. Marshal. & his wife, with great thāks for his kindnes shewed vnto me. Farewel my deare Careles. I haue dalied with the deuill a while, but now I am ouer the shoes: God sende me well out.

Out of the Colehouse

by your brother Iohn Philpot.

An other letter to Iohn Careles, profitable to be read of all them which mourne in repentaunce for theyr sinnes.*

THE God of all comfort, and the father of our Lord Iesus Christ, send vnto thee my deare brother Carles, y^e inward consolation of hys holy spirite, in all the malicious assaultes and troublous temptations of our common aduersarye the deuill. Amen.

That God geueth you so contrite a hart for your sins I cannot but reioyce to beholde the liuely marke of y^e children of God, whole propertie is to think more lowly and vily of themselues, then of any other,* and oftentimes doe set theyr sinnes before them, that they might the more hee stirred to bring forth the fruites of repentance, & learne to mourne in this world, y^t in an other they might the more be stirred to bring forth the fruites of repentance, & learne to mourne in this worlde, that in an other they might bee glad and reioyce. Such a broken hart is a pleasaunt sacrifice vnto God: O that I had the like contrite hart. GOD mollifie my stony hart, which lamenteth not in suche wyse my former detestable iniquities. Praysed be God y^t he hath geuen you this sorrowful hart in respect of righteousness & I pray you let me be partaker of these godly sorrowes for sin, which be y^e testimony of the presence of y^e holy ghost Did not the sword of sorrow pearce the hart of the electe & blessed mother of our Lord? Did not Peter weepe bitterly for his sinnes, which was so beloued of christ? Did not Mary Magdalen wash the feet of our sauour with her teares, & receaued therewithall remission of her seuenfold sinnes.

Be of good comfort therefore myne owne deare hart,* in this thy sorrow, for it is the earnest peny of eternal consolation. In thy sorrow laugh, for y^e spirite of God is with thee. Blessed be they (sayth Chryst) that mourne: for they shall be comforted. They went forth and wept saythe y^e prophet such shall come agayne, hauing theyr gripes full of gladnes. And although a sorrowfull hart in consideratiō of his sinne, be an acceptable sacrifice before God, whereby wee are styrrd vp to more thankfulness vnto God, knowing y^t much is forgeuen vs that we might loue the more: yet the mā of God must keep a measure in y^e same,* least he be swal^lowed vp by too much sorow. S. Paul would not y^e Thessaloniās to be sory as other mē which haue no hope: suche a sorrow is not cōmēdable, but worketh dānation, & is far frō y^e childrē of God, who are cōtinually sorrowfull in god whē they look vpō their owne vnworthines, with hope of forgeuenes. For God to this end by his spirite setteth the sinnes of his elect still before them, y^t where they perceiue sinne to abound,* there they might be assured y^t grace shall superabound: & bringeth them down vnto hell, y^t he might lift thē vp with greater ioy vnto heauen. Wherefore myne own bowels in Christ, as long as you are not voyd altogether of hope: be not dismayd through your pens^{••}e hart for your sinnes, how huge so euer they haue bene, for God is able to forgeue more then you are able to sinne: yea, and he will forgeue hym which with hope is sory for his sins.

But know brother, that as oft as we doe go about, by the helpe of Gods spirite, to do that is good,* the euill spirite Sathan layeth hard wayt to turne the good vnto euil & goeth about to mixe the detestable darnell of desperation with the godly sorrow of a pure penitent hart. You be not ignoraunt of hys malicious subletie, and howe that continually he assaulteth y^e good which the grace of God planteth, I see the battel betwixt you and hym, but the victory is yours, yea and that dayly: For you haue layde hold vppon the anker of saluation, whiche is hope in Christe, the which will not suffer you to be made ashamed.

Be not discomforted that you haue this conflict: but be glad that God hath geuen you the same to try your faith, & that you might appeare dayly worthy of the kingdome of God, for the whiche you striue. God beholdeth your stryuing faith against Sathan, & is pleased w^t your mighty resistance. The spirite which is in you, is mightyer then al y^e aduersaries power. Tēpt he may, & lying awayt at youre heeles, geue you a fall vnwares: but ouercome hee shall not: yea he cannot,* for you are sealed vp already w^t a liuely fayth to be y^e childe of God for euer: & whō God hath once sealed for hys owne, hym he neuer vtterly forsaketh. The iust falleth 7. times, but he ryseth agayne. It is mās fraylty to fall, but it is y^e propertie of the deuils child to lye still.

This strife against sinne is a sufficient testimonye that you are the childe of God, for if you were not,* you shoulde feele no such malice as he now troubleth you withal. Whē this strōg Goliah hath y^e hold, al things be in peace which he possesseth, & because he hath you not, hee will not suffer you vnassaulted. But stand fast,* & hold out the Buckler of fayth, & with the sword of Gods promises smite hym on y^e scalpe, y^t he may receiue a deadly wound, and neuer be able to stand agaynst you any more. S. Iames telleth you that he is but a coward, saying: Resist the deuill and he will flye away. It is the will of God that he should thus long tempt you and not go away as yet, or els he had done wyth you long ere this. He knoweth already that he shal receiue the Page 1834 foyle at your hands, and encrease the crowne of your glory: for he that ouercommeth shall be crowned. Therefore glory in your temptations, since they shall turne to your felicity. Be not afraide of your continuall assaults: which be occasions of your daily victorie.* The woorde of God abideth for euer. In what houre soeuer a sinner repenteth him of his sinnes, they be forgeuen. Who cā lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect: Do you not perceiue the manifest tokens of your election? First your vocation to the Gospell, and after your vocation, the manifest gifts of the spirite of God geuen vnto you aboue many other of your condition, with godlinesse which beleueth and yeldeth to the authority of y^e scriptures, and is zealous for the same? Seeing you are Gods owne dearling, who can hurt you? Be not of a deiecte minde for these temptations, neyther make your vnfaired frends to be more sorrowful for you, then neede doth require.

Since God hath willed you at your baptisme in Christ to be carelesse, why doe you make your selfe carefull: Cast all your care on him.* Sette the Lorde before your eyes alwaies, for he is on your right side, y^t you shall not be mooued. Behold the goodnesse of God toward me. I am careles, being fast closed in a paire of stockes, which pinche me for very straitnes: and wil you be careful? I wil not haue that vnseemely addition to your name. Be as your name pretendeth, for doubtles you haue none other cause but so to be. Pray, I beseech you, that I may be stil careles in my careful estate, as you haue cause to be carelesse in your easier condition. Be thākful and put away all care, and then I shall be ioyfull in my straite present care. Commend me to all our brethren, and desire them to praye for me, that I may ouercome my tēptations: for the deuil rageth against me, I am putte in the stockes in a place alone, because I would not answer to such articles, as they would charge me w^tall in a corner at the bishops appoyntment, and because I did not come to Masse when the bish. sent for me, I will sic all the dayes of my life in the stockes (by Gods grace) rather then I wil consent to y^e wicked generation. Praise God & be ioyfull, that it hath pleased him to make vs worthy to suffer somewhat for his names sake. The deuil must rage for 10. daies. Commend me to maister F. and thanke him for his lawe bookes, but lawe, neither equitie wil take any place among these bloud thirsty. I would for your sake their vniust dealing were noted vnto the parlament house, if it might auaille. God shortē these euil daies, I haue answered the bish. meetely plaine already, and I said to him, if he wil cal me in open iudgement, I wil answer him as plainly as he will require: otherwise I haue refused, because I feare they will condemne me in hugger mugger. The peace of God be with you my dear brother. I canne wryte no more for lacke of light, and that I haue wrytten I can not reade my selfe, and God knoweth it is wrytten farre vneasily. I pray God you may picke out some vnderstanding of my minde towards you. Wrytten in a Colehouse of darkenesse, oute of a paire of paynefull stockes, by thine owne in Christ.

Iohn Philpot.

An other letter of M. Philpot, to certaine godlye women, forsaking their owne countrey for the Gospell: full of frutefull precepts and lessons for all good women.

*The spirite of truthe, reuealed vnto you my dearely beloued, by the Gospell of oure Sauour Iesus Christe, be continually abiding with you, and augmented into a perfect building of you into the liuely temple of God, through the mighty operation of hys power. Amen.

I reade in the Euangelistes, of certaine Godly women, that ministred vnto Christ, folowing him in the daies of his Passion, and neuer forsoke him, but being dead in his graue, brought oyl to annoynt him, vntill that he had shewed himselfe vnto them after his resurrection, and bidden them shewe vnto his Disciples, which at his Passion were dispersed, and tell them that he was ri•en, and that they shoulde see him in Galile. To whome I may iustly compare you (my louinge Sisters in Christe) who of late haue seene him suffer in his mēbers, and haue ministred to theyr necessity, annoynting them with the comfortable oyle of your charitable assistance, euen to the death: and now since yee haue seene Christ to liue in the ashes of them, whome the tyrans haue 〈◇〉, he willeth you to go away vpon iust occasion offred you, and to declare to our dispersed brethren and sisters, that he is 〈◇〉 and liueth in his electe members in Englande, and by death doth ouercome infidelitye, and that they shall see him in Galile, which is by forsaking this world, and by a faithful desire to passe out of this world by those waies which he with his holy Martyrs hath gone on before.

God therfore (entire sisters) directe your way, as he did Abraham & Tobias vnto a strange land: God geue you health both of body and soule, that ye may go from vertue to vertue,* and grow from strength to strength, vntil yee may see face to face the God of Syon in his holy hil, with the innumerable companie of hys blessed Martyrs and Saintes. Let there be continuall ascensions vnto heauen in your hearts. Let there be no decrease of any vertue, which is already planted in you. Be as the light of the iuste, such as Salomon saith, increaseth to the perfect day of the Lord. Let the strength of God be commended in your weake vessels, as it is. Be examples of faith and sobrietie, to al that ye shal come in company with all. Let your godly conuersation speake where your tounge may not, in the congregation. Be swift to heare, and slow to speake, after the counsell of S. Iames. Be not curious about other mens doings, but be occupied in praier, and cōtinual meditation, with reuerent talking of the word of God, wythout contention amongst the Saintes. Lette your faith shine in a straunge countrey, as it hath done in youre owne, that your father which is in heauen, may be glorified by you to the ende.

This farewell I send you, not as a thing nedefull, (which know already what your duety is, & be desirous to performe the same) but as one that would haue you vnderstand that he is mindeful of your godly conuersation, wherof he hath had good experiēce and therefore wryteth this to be as a perpetual memorial betwixt you and him, vntil our meeting together before God, where we shall ioy that we haue here louingly put one an other in memory of our duetie to performe it.

Farewell againe, mine owne bowels in Christ, and take me with you where soeuer you goe, and leaue your selues wyth me, that in spirite we may be present one with an other. Commende me to the whole congregation of Christe, willing them not to leaue their countrey without witnesse of the Gospell, after that we al be slaine, which already be stalled vp and appoynted to the slaughter, and in the meane season to praye earnestly for our cōstancie, that Christ may be glorified in vs, and in them bothe by life and death. Farewel in the Lord.

Yours for euer, Iohn Philpot.

An exhortation to his owne sister, constantly to sticke to the truth, which she had frutefully professed.

GOD the eternall Father,* who hath iustified you by the bloud of his sonne Iesus Christ, and called you to hallow his name through a good conuersation and profession of life, he sanctifie you with daily encrease of vertue & faith by his holy spirit, that you may appeare a vessell of sanctification, in the midst of this wicked & peruerse generation, to the laud and praise of the Gospel, Amen.

I haue occasion (mine owne deare sister) to praise God in you for 2. causes: the one, that to your habilitie you are ready to shew your self a naturall louing sister to me your poore afflicted brother, as by your gētle tokens you haue eftsoones testified being absent, as also presently visiting me: which wel declareth that you be a very naturall sister in dede, and to be praised in this behalfe. But in the other, y^t you be also a sister to me in faith after Christes Gospell, I am occasioned to thanke God so muche the more,* howe much the one excelleth the other, and the spiritual consanguinitie is more perdurable then that which is of flesh & bloud, & is a worker of that which is by nature: for commonly such as be vngodly, be vnnatural & only louers of themselues, as daily experience teacheth vs. The lyuing Lord, which through the incorruptible sede of his worde, hath begotten you to be my liege sister, geue you grace so to growe in y^t generation, that you may encrease to a perfect age in the Lord, to be my sister with Christ for euer.

Looke therefore that you continue a faythfull sister as you are called and are godly entered, not onely to me but to all the Church of Christ, yea to Christ himselfe, who voucheth you in this your vnfayned fayth, worthy to bee his sister. Consider this dignitie to surmount all y^e vayne dignities of the worlde, & let it accordingly preuayle more with you, then all earthly delightes: For therby you are called to an equall portion of the euerlasting inheritaunce of Christ, if now in no wise you do shew your selfe an vnnaturall sister to him in forsaking him in trouble, which I trust you will neuer for no kinde of worldly respect doe. You are vnder daungerous temptations to be turned frō that naturall loue you owe vnto Christ, and you shalbe tryed with Gods people thorough a siue of great afflictioⁿ:* for so Sathan desireth vs to be sifted, that through feare of sharp troubles we might fall from the stablenes of our fayth, and so be depriued of that honour, ioy, and reward, which is prepared for such as continue faythfull brothers and sisters in the Lordes couenant to the ende. Therefore the wise man in the booke of Ecclesiasticus: biddeth them that come to the seruice of the Lorde,*To prepare them selues to suffer temptations.

Since then y^t for the glory of God and our faith, we are called now to abide the brunt of them, and that when our Page 1835 aduersary hath done all that he can, yet wee may be stable and stand: this Christ our first begotten brother loketh for at our handes, and all our brethren and sisters in heauen, desire to see our faith thorough afflictions to be perfecte, that we might fulfil their number:* and y^e vniuersal church here militant, reioyceth at our constancie, whom al by the contrary we should make sorie, to the daunger of the losse both of body and soule. Feare not therefore, what soeuer be threatned of the wicked world: prepare your back, and see it be ready to carye Christes crosse. And if you see any vntowardnes in you (as the flesh is continually repugnant to the will of God) aske with faithfull praier that the good spirit of God may lead your sinful flesh whether it would not:* for if we will dwell in the flesh and folow the counsell therof, we shall neuer doe the will of God, neither worke that tendeth to our saluation.

You are at this present in the confines and borders of Babylon, where you are in danger to drink of the whores cup, vnles you be vigilant in praier. Take hede the Serpent seduce you not frō the simplicitie of your faith, as he did our first mother Eue.* Let no worldly felowship make you partaker of iniquitie. He y^t toucheth tarre can not but be defiled therby. With such as be peruerse, a mā shall sone be peruerted: with the holy you shalbe holy. Therefore say continually with the Prophete Dauid:*Vnto the Saints that be on the earth, al my wil is on them. You haue bene sanctified and made pure thorough the truth: take heede you be not vnholied and vndefiled, lest the last be worse then the first. I wryte not this because I stand in any doubt of your sincere continuance (of the which I haue had so good experience): but because the daies be euil, and in the same it is the duety of euery one of vs to exhort an other.

I am bold to put you (my good sister) in remembrance of y^t which doth not a litle comfort me to remember, in my troubles & daily temptations. Wherefore I doubt not, you will take y^t in good part which commeth frō your brother both in spirit & body, who tendreth your saluation as earnestly as his owne, that we might ioye together eternally with such ioy as the world shal neuer be able to take from vs. Thankes be vnto God, you haue begon to run a good & great time wel in the waies of the Lorde: run out of the trace, to y^e end which you haue begon, & then shall you receiue y^e crown of glory.* None shalbe crouned but such as lawfully striueth. Be not ouercome of euill, but ouercome euil w^t good,* & the Lorde shall make you one of those faithfull virgines that shal follow the Lambe wheresoeuer he goeth: the which Christ graunt both you and me, Amen.

Commend me to all them that loue me in y^e Lord vnfainedly. God encrease our faith, and geue vs neuer to be ashamed of his Gospell. That same request which I haue made to my brother Thom. I make also to you, desiring you by all meanes you can to accōplish my request,* y^t my sureties might be satisfied with that is mine owne, to the contentation of my minde, which can not be quiet vntill they be discharged: therefore I pray you help to purchase quietnes that I might depart out of this worlde in peace. My dissolution I looke for daily, but the Lorde knoweth howe vnworthy I am of so high an honour, as to die for the testimony of his truth. Pray that God would vouchsafe to make me worthy, as he hath don of long imprisonment, for y^e which his name be praised for euer. Pray and looke for the comming of the Lorde, whose wrath is great ouer vs, and I wil pray for you as long as I liue. The 9. of Iuly in the kings Bench.

Your owne louing brother as well in faith as in body. Iohn Philpot.

An other Letter of Iohn Philpot to certaine Godly brethren.

The grace of God the Father, and the peace of our sauour Iesus Christ his eternall sonne,* and the consolation of the holy Ghost our comforter, strengthen your hearts and cōfort your mindes that you maye reioyce, and liue in the truthe of Christes Gospel to the ende. Amen.

I doe much reioyce, dearely beloued in the Lord, to heare of your cōstant faith in the word of God, which you haue so purely receiued: which doe not with the wordlings decline frō the purity therof,* albeit ye suffer grief & trouble therby: for the which I praise God most hartely: and the Lord of all strength, who hath begon this good woorke in you, make it perfite to the ende, as I doubt not but he wil, for the faithful zeale ye haue to his truth & to his afflicted church. Therefore that ye may the better stand and beare the brunte of many temptations, which you are like to be assaulted withall in these wicked and stormie daies:* I thought it good, as it is the duety of one christian man to exhort an other in the time of trouble, to put you in remembraunce therof, & to wil you with the wise man to prepare your selues to temptatiōs: & to beware that ye, which yet do stand by the goodnes of God, may not fall from your liuely knowledge and hope. It is an easie thing to begin to do wel, but to cōtinue out in well doing, is the onely property of the children of God, and such as assuredly shal be saued. For so sayth our Sauour in his Gospel:* Blessed are they that perseuere to the ende.

Let not therefore this certaintye of your saluation, which is cōtinuance in the sincerity of faith, slide frō you. Esteeme it more then al the riches & pleasures of this world, for it is the most acceptable treasure of eternall life. This is that precious stone, for the which the wise marchant man, after the Gospell, doeth sell all that he hath, & bieth the same.* God in the 3. of the Apocal. doth signifye to the church, that there shall come a time of temptation vpon the whole world, to trye the dwellers on the earth. Frō the danger of which temptation al such shalbe deliuered as obserue his worde: which worde there is called the worde of patience:* to geue vs to vnderstande that we must be ready to suffer all kinde of iniuries and sclaunders for the profession thereof.

Therefore God cōmandeth vs there to hold it fast, that no man might berefte vs of our crowne of glorye,* and S Peter telleth vs now we are afflicted with diuers assaies, as it is need it should so be. That the triall of our faith being much more precious then gold that perisheth, and yet is tried by fire, might redound to the laud, glory, and honour of Iesus Christ.* S. Paule to the Hebrues sheweth vs, that Christe our Sauour was in his humanitie made perfect by afflictions, that we being called to perfection in him, might more willingly susteine the troubles of the worlde, by the which God geueth all them that be exercised in the same for his sake, his holinesse. And in the 12. chap. of the said Epistle is wrytten: My sonne refuse not the correction of the Lord, nor shrink not, when thou art rebuked of him: for the Lord doth chastice euery sonne whome he receiueh. &c. Christ in the Gospell of S. Iohn biddeth his disciples to looke after afflictions,* saying in the worlde yee shall haue trouble, but in me yee shall haue ioy. And therefore in the midst of their trouble,* in the 21. of S. Luke hee biddeth them, looke vp and lift vp their heads, for your redemption (sayeth he) is at hand.* And in the 22 he sayth to all suche as be afflicted for him: You are those that haue abidden with me in my temptations, and therefore I appoynt vnto you a kingdom, as my father hath appoynted for me, to eate and drinke vpon my table in my kingdome.

O howe glorious be the crosses of Christe, which bring the bearers of them vnto so blessed an ende.* Shall we not be glad to be partakers of such shame as may bring vs to so high a dignitie? God open their eyes to see al things, as they be, and to iudge vprightly. Then doubtlesse we would thinke with Moises, that it is better to be afflicted with the people of God: then to be counted the king of Egypts sonne. Then should we ioyfully say with Dauid in all our aduersities and troubles: It is good (O Lord) thou hast brought me lowe, to the ende I might learne thy righteousnesse. Therefore S. Paule woulde not glory in any other thyng of the worlde, but in the crosse of Christ, & in other his infirmities. We haue the commaundement of Christe, daily to take vppe his crosse and follow him. We haue the godly ensamples of all his apostles and holy martyrs, which with great ioy and exultation, haue suffered the losse of landes, goods and life, for the hope of a better reward: which is laide vp for all those in heauen, that vnfainedly cleaue to the gospel, and neuer be ashamed therof.

Great is the felicitye of the world to the outwarde man, and very pleasant are the transitory delights therof: but the rewarde of the rightuous after the word of God,* doth incomparably excell them all, in so much that S. Paul to the Rom. doth plainly affirme, that all the tribulations of this world can not deserue that glory which shall be shewed vpon vs.

Let vs therefore good brethren and sisterne, be mery & glad in these troublesome daies, the which be sent of God, to declare our faith, and to bring vs to the ende and fruition of that which we hope for. If we woulde enter into the Lordes Sanctuarie, and behold what is prepared for vs▪ we could not but desire the Lord to hast the day of our death, in the which we might set forth by true confession, his glory. Neither should we be afraide to meete our aduersaries, which so earnestly seeke our spoile and death, as Christ did Iudas and that wicked route,* which came to apprehēd him, saying. I am he whom ye seeke. It is commaunded vs by the Gospel, not to feare them, that canne kill the bodye, but to feare God, who can cast both body and soule into hel fire. So muche wee are bounde to obserue this commaundement as anye other which God hath geuen vs. The Lorde encrease our faith, that we feare God more then man. The Lord geue vs such loue towards him & his truth, that we may be content to forsake all & followe him. Nowe wil it appeare what we loue best: for to that we loue, we will sticke. There is none to be counted woorthy a Christian, except he can finde in his heart for Christes sake,* if the confession of his truth doth require it, to renounce al which he hath and followe him: and in so doing he gaineth an hundreth folde more in this life (as our Sauour sayde to Peter) and heere after is assured of eternal life. Beholde I pray you, what he loseth, wh•ch in this life receiueth a 100. for one, with assurāce of eternall 〈◇〉 .

Page 1836 O hapy exchaunge. Perchaunce your outward man will say: if I were sure of this great recompence here, I could be glad to forsake all. But where is this 100. folde in this life to be founde? Yes truely: for in stead of worldly riches which thou doest forsake, which be but temporall,* thou hast found the euerlasting riches of heauen, which be glory, honour and praise, both before God, aungels and men: and for an earthly habitation, hast an eternall mansion with Christ in heauen, for euen now thou art of the citie and housholde of the Saints with God, as it is verified in the 4 to the Philippians. For worldly peace, which canne last but a while, thou doest possesse the peace of God, which passeth al vnderstanding: and for the losse of a few frends, thou art made a felowe of the innumerable companie of heauen, and a perpetuall friend of all those that haue died in the Lord, from the beginning of the world. Is not this more then an 100. fold▪ Is not the peace of God which we in this world haue through faithfull imitation of Christ (which the world can not take from vs) x.M. fold more, then those thinges that moste highly be esteemed in the worlde, without the peace of God? Al the peace of the world is no peace but mere anguish and a gnawing fury of hel. As of late God hath set example before our eyes, to teach vs how horrible an euill it is to forsake the peace of Christes truth, which breedeth a worm in conscience that neuer shall rest.

O that we would way this with indifferent ballances. Then shoulde we not be dismaied of this troublous time, neyther sorrow after a worldly manner, for the losse which we are now lyke to sustaine, as the weake faithlesse persones do, which loue theyr goods, more then God and the things visible, aboue those which be inuisible: but rather would heartely reioyce and be thankful, that it pleaseth God to call vs to be souldiours in his cause, against the woorkes of hypocrisie, and to make vs like vnto oure Sauour Christ in suffering, whereby we maye assure our selues of his eternall glory: For blessed are they, sayth Christ, that suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake.* And as S. Paule witnesseth to Timothe: If we die with Christ, we shall liue with Christ: and if we deny him, he will deny vs.

O that wee would enter into the veile of Gods promises. Then should we wyth S. Paule to the Phillippians,* reiect all and count all things but for drosse, so that we may gaine Christ. God which is the lightener of all darkenesse, and putter awaye of all blindnesse, annoynte oure eyes with the true eyesalue, that wee might beholde his glory, and our eternall felicitie, which is hidden with Christ, and prepared for vs that doe abide in his Testament: for blessed is that seruante, that whome the maister when he commeth, as Christ sayde, doth finde faithfull. Let vs therefore watch,* and pray one for an other, that we yelde not in any poynt of our Religion to the Antichristian Synagogue, and that we be not ouerthrowen of these temptations. Stande therefore, and be no cowardes in the cause of your saluation: for his spirite that is in vs, is stronger then he which in the worlde doth nowe rage against vs. Let vs not put out the spirit of God from vs, by whose might we shall ouercome our ennemies, and then death shall be as greate a gaine to vs as it was to the blessed Apostle S. Paule. Why then doe ye mourne? why do ye weepe? why be ye so carefull, as though God had forsaken you? hee is neuer more present with vs, then when we be in trouble, if we doe not forsake hym. We are in his handes, and no bodye can doe vs anye iniurie or wrong without his good will and pleasure. He hath commaunded hys aungels to kepe vs, that we stomble not at a stone without his diuine prouidence. The Deuill can not hurt anye of vs, and muche lesse any of his ministers, without the good will of our eternall father.

Therefore let vs be of good comfort, and continuallye geue thanks vnto God for our estate,* what so euer it be: for if we murmure against the same, wee murmure against God, who sendeth the same. Which if we doe, we kicke but against the pricke, and prouoke more the wrath of God against vs: which by pacient suffering, otherwise would sooner be turned into our fauor through faithfull prayer.

I beseeche you with S. Paule, to geue your bodies pure, and holy sacrifices vnto God. He hath geuen vs bodies to bestowe vnto his glory, and not after our owne concupiscence. If manye yeares God hath suffered vs to vse oure bodies, which bee his temples, after the lust of the flesh, in vaine delightes, not according to his glory: is it not our duetie in the latter end of our life, the more willingly to yeelde vnto Gods glory our bodies, with all that wee haue, in demonstration of true repentaunce of that we haue euill spent before? Cannot the ensample of the blessed man Iob horribly afflicted, cause vs to say? The Lord hath geuen it,* the Lorde hath taken it: blessed be the name of the Lord Euen as it hath pleased the Lord, so is it come to passe. If we cast oure whole care likewise vpon God, he will turne our misery into felity, as well as he did to Iob. God tempteth vs now, as he did our father Abraham,* commaunding him to slaye his sonne Isaac in sacrifice to him: which Isaac by interpretation doth signifie mirth and ioy. Who by his obedience preserued Isaac vnto long lyfe, and offered in his stead a Ramme that was tied by the hornes in the brambles. Semblably we all are commanded, to sacrifice vnto God our Isaac, which is our ioy and consolation:* the which if we be ready to do, as Abraham was, our ioy shall not pearish, but liue and be encreased, although our ramme be sacrificed for our Isaac: which doth signifie that the pride and cōcupiscence of our flesh entangled thorough sinne, with the cares of this stinginge world, must be mortified for the preseruatiō, and perfecte augmētation of our mirth & ioy, which is sealed vp for vs in Christ.

And to withstande these present temptations,* wherewithall we are nowe encombred, ye can not haue a better remedy then to set before our eyes, howe our Sauour Christ ouercame them in the desert, and to follow his ensample: that if the deuill hymselfe, or any other by him, willeth you to make stones bread, that is, to take suche a worldly wise way, that yee may haue your faire houses, landes, and goodes to liue on still, yee must say, that man liueth not onely by bread, but by euery woorde that procedeth out of the mouth of God.

Againe, if the deuill counsaileth you, to cast youre selues downe to the earth, as to reuoke your sincere beliefe, and Godly conuersation,* and to be conformable to the learned men of the world, pretending that God will be wel enough content therewith: yee must aunsweare that it is wrytten, that a man shall not tempt his Lord God.

Further, if the deuill offer you large promises of honoure, dignitie and possessions, so that yee will worshippe Idols in hys Synagogue, ye must say: goe behinde me Sathan, for it is otherwise wrytten, that a man must worship his Lorde God, and serue him onely.

Finally, if your mother, brother, sister, wife, childe, kinsman, or frend, do seeke of you, to do otherwaies then the word of God hath taught you, ye must say with Christ, that they are your mothers, brothers, sisters, wiues, children and kinsmen, whiche doe the wil of God the father. To the which wil the Lord for his mercy, conforme vs all vnfaignedly to the end. Amen.

Your louing and faithful brother in Christ, in captiuitie, Iohn Philpot. An. 1555.

To his friend and faithfull brother in the Lord Maister Robert Harrington.

GEntle M. Harrington, I can not tell what condigne thanks I may geue vnto God for you,* in respecte of y^e great gentlenesse and paine which you haue taken for the reliefe of me and of other our afflicted brethren in Christe. God be praised for his mercy, whose louing prouidēce we haue seene towards vs by such faithful stewardest as you ben towards a great many. Blessed be you of God for the louing care whiche you haue taken for his poore flocke. God hath reserued your reward of thanks in heauen, and therefore I goe not about to render you any, least I might seeme to iudge, y^t you looked for that heere, which is reserued to a better place. I thanke God for that I haue found by your faithfull and diligent industry, & God forgeue me my vnworthinesse for so great benefites. God geue mee grace to serue him faithfully, & to runne out my race with ioy. Glorious is the course of the martyrs of Christ at this day. Neuer had the electes of God a better time for theyr glory then this is. Nowe may they be assured vnder the crosse, that they are Christes disciples for euer.

Mee thinke I see you desiring to be vnder the same. The flesh draweth backe, but the spirite sayeth,* it muste be brought whether it would not. Here is the victorie of the world: here is true faith and euerlasting glory. Who is he which desireth not to be foūd faithfull to his maister? And now is the time that euery faithfull seruant of Christ hath iust oportunitie to shew himselfe a glorious soldior in the Lordes sight. Nowe doe the Amalechites inuade the true Israelites, that the Israelites might with spede be glorified. I neede not, for want of vnderstanding, to admonish you hereof, but as a willing souldiour in Christ, to exhort you so to runne as you may get the victory, and that speedely with vs. A man y^t is bid to a glorious feast, wisheth his frend to go w^t him & to be partaker thereof. God doth cal me most vnworthy, amōg other, to drink of the bridecup of his sonne, wherby we shalbe made worthy (as many of our brethrē haue ben before vs) to sit at y^e right hād & at the left hand of Christ. O what vnspeakable cōdition is that? May any worldly thing stay vs from the desire therof? Since we seeke the kingdome of God, why do we not apprehend it, being so neare offered vnto vs?

Let vs approach neare vnto God, and God will draw neare vnto vs. God drawe vs after him, that we may all runne after the sauour of his sweete oyntmentes. Christe annoynt vs, that we may be suppld in these euil daies to run lightly vnto the glory of the Lord. Shame, imprisonment, losse of goods, and shedding of our bloud, be the iust price which we must willingly bestow for the same. Wherfore (dearly beloued in the Lord) let not the great charges keepe you backe frō bying this glory:* for the reward is x. Page 1837 thousand fold greater then the price.

That you haue married a wife, whome God blesse, I can not excuse you from this Marte, but you must bryng your wife for a vsurie to the Lorde, whose pleasure is in godly yokefelows.* I wish you to be as I am, except these horrible bandes, but yet most comfortable to the spirit, assuring you that we are made woorthy thorough Christ, of the kingdome for the which we suffer. Praised be y^e Lorde for the affliction which we suffer, and he geue vs strength to continue to the ende.

Commend me to M. Heath, & tel him that I woulde wish him w^t me, to prooue howe apt he is to cary the crosse of Christ. I praye for his continuāce in Christ, as for mine owne. Commend me to his wife and to mistres Hal, certifying them that I am brought to the gates of hel, that I might neuer enter into the same, but be raised vp from hel to heauen, through y^e word that sanctifieth vs. Commend me to M. Elsing & his wife, and thank them that they remēbred to prouide me some ease in prison, & tell them that though my Lordes Colehouse be but very blacke, yet it is more to be desired of y^e faithfull, then the Queenes palace. God make her a ioyful mother, & preserue them both to y^e comfort of gods people. Thus for this time, farewell dear brother. Written in posthast because of strait keeping.

This daye I looke to be called before the Commissioners againe. Pray (deare brother) for the spirite of wisdom to remaine with me. Commēd me to your wife, and I thanke you both for your tokens. Your token I haue sent to your wife, and my token vnto you, is my faithfull hart w^t this letter. Commend me to all my frends, and tell them, I thanke God, I am chereful in Christ, wishing thē to feare God more then man, and to learne to despise earnestly the vanities of this worlde: desiring you all to pray for me, that I may end my iourney with fidelitie. Amen.

Iohn Philpot.

Here followeth an other letter of M. Philpot to the Lady Vane, which, because for the length I could not wholly insert, I haue excerpated certaine specialties thereout, as followeth.

The principall spirite of GOD the father, geuen vnto vs by Christ Iesus our mercifull Sauour, confirme, strengthen, and stablish you in the true knowledge of the gospel, that your faithful heart (worshipfull and deare sister in the Lord) may attaine & tast with all the Saints, what is the height, the depth, the length, and the breadth of the sweete crosse of Christ. Amen. &c.

O, happy are you amōgst all other women, that haue found this precious stone which is hidden in the gospell: for the which we ought to sell all other thinges, and to purchase the same. O happy woman, whose heart God hathe mooued and enlarged to be in the profession thereof. Other seeke worldly goodes, hohours, and delightes: but you seeke with a good vnderstanding, to serue God in spirite and veritie. This is the gate that leadeth to heauen: this is your portion for euer. By this you shall see God face to face (which sight is vnspeakeable ioy) & by this shal ye see a full sight of all the beautiful heauenly powers, and of all the celestiall Paradise. By this shal ye know them that you neuer knewe, and be ioyous and gladde wyth those whiche you haue knowen heere in God, world without end. &c.

Ah, I lament the infidelitie of Englande, that after so great light, is stept into so huge darkenesse againe. The seruauent that knoweth his maisters will and doeth it not,* shall be beaten wyth many stripes. Ah, great be the plagues that hang ouer England, yea though the Gospell shoulde be restored againe. Happye shall that personne be, whome the Lorde shal take out of this worlde, not to see them.* Ah the great periurie which menne haue runne into so wilfully against God by receiuing Antichrist againe and his wicked lawes: which doe threaten a greate ruine vnto Englande. O that the Lorde woulde tourne his iust iudgements vppon the authours of the truce breaking betweene God and vs, that they myghte be broughte lowe (as Nabuchodonosor was) that his people might be deliuered, and his glorie exalted, God graunte that that good lucke which you hope shortly to come vppon the house of God, be a true prophecie, and not a well wishing onely. Ah Lorde, take away thy heauie hande from vs, and stretch it out vpon thine ennemies these hypocrites, as thou hast begon,* that they may be confounded. O let not the weake pearish for want of knowledge through our sinnes. Although thou kill vs, yet will we put our trust in thee.

Thus (deare heart) you teache me to pray with you in wryting. God heare our praier, and geue vs the spirite of effectuall prayer, to poure out our harts cōtinually together before God, that we may find mercy both for our selues, and for our afflicted brethren and sistern. I can not but praise God in you, for that pitifull heart that taketh other folkes calamities to heart, as your owne. Blessed be they that mourne, for suche shall be comforted. God wipe away all teares from your pitifull eies, and sorrow frō your merciful heart, that you may (as doutles you shal do shortly) reioyce with his elects for euer. You haue so armed me to the Lordes battell both inwardly and outwardly, that except I be a very coward, I can not faint, but ouercome by death. You haue appointed me to so good and gracious a General of the field, to so victorious a Captaine, and to so fauorable a Marshall, that if I should not goe on lustely, there were no spectacle of heauenlye manhode in me. I wil present your coate armour before my Captaine, and in the same I trust by him to ouercome.* The Scarffe I desire as an outward signe to shew our enemies, who see not our glorious ende, neither what God worketh inwardly in vs, thorough the blindness of their hearts, that they persecute Christes crosse in vs, whereby he hath sealed vp the truthe of his Gospell by his death vnto vs, that we by our death (if neede be) myghte confirme the same, and neuer be ashamed, whatsoever torment we doe suffer for his names sake: and our weake brethren seeing the same mighte be more encouraged to take vp Christes crosse, and to followe him. God geue vs grace to doe all thinges to his glory. Amen. &c.

The world wondreth how we can be mery in such extreeme misery, but our God is omnipotent,* which tourneth misery into felicity. Beleue me deare sister, there is no such ioy in the worlde as the people of Christ haue vnder the crosse. I speake by experience: therfore beleue me, and feare nothing that the world can do vnto you. For when they imprison our bodies, they sette our soules at liberty with God. When they cast vs downe, they lift vs vp: yea when they kill vs, then doe they bring vs to euerlasting life. And what greater glorie can there be, then to be at conformitie with Christ? which afflictions do worke in vs.

God open our eies to see more and more the glorie of God in the crosse of Iesus Christe, and make vs woorthy partakers of the same. Let vs reioyce in nothing with S. Paul, but in the crosse of Iesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified vnto vs, and wo to the worlde. The crosse of Christ be our standard to fight vnder for euer. Whiles I am thus talking with you of our common cōsolation, I forget howe I trouble you with my rude and vnordinate tediousnesse: but you must impute it to loue which can not quickly departe from them whome hee loueth, but desireth to poure himselfe into their bosomes.

Therefore though your flesh woulde be offended (as it might iustly be) at such rudenesse, yet your spirit will say nay, which taketh all thing in good part that commeth of loue. And now I am departing: yet will I take my leaue ere I goe, and woulde faine speake somewhat that might declare my sincere loue to you for euer: farewell. O elect vessell of the Lorde, to the comfort of hys afflicted flocke, farewell on earth, whome in heauen, I am sure, I shall not forget. Farewell vnder the crosse most ioyfully: and vntil we meete, alwaies remember what Christe sayeth: Be of good cheare, for I haue ouercome the world. &c.

God poure his spirit abundantly vpon you mine owne deare bowels in Christ, vntil you may come to see the God of all Gods with his electes in the euerlasting Syon. I send to you the kisse of peace, with the which I do most entirely take my leaue of you at this present. It is necessary we depart hence, or els we could not be glorified. Your heart is heauy because I say I must depart from you. It is the calling of the mercifull father, wherewithal you are contēt, and so am I. Be of good comfort: holde out your buckler of faith: for by the strength therof we shal shortly mete in eternal glory: to the which Christ bring both vs, Amen. Amen. The 10. of December. 1555.

Death why should I feare thee, since thou canst not hurt me,

But rid me from miserie, vnto eternall glorie.

Dead to the world, and liuing to Christ, your owne brother, sealed vp in the veritie of the Gospel for euer.

Iohn Philpot.

An other letter of M. Philpot, wrytten to the same Lady, being a great supporter of hym.

I Can not but most hartily geue God thāks for these hys gifts in you,* whose brightnes many beholding that are weake, are muche encouraged to seeke God likewise, & to cleaue to him, hauing the ensample of so faithful and constant a gentlewoman before their eyes. If the Queene of the South shall rise with the men of Christes generation, and condemne them, for that she came from the end of the world to heare the wisdom of Salomon: then shal your sincere and godly conuersation, thus shining in this dangerous time of the trial of christes people (being a womā of a right worshipfull estate and wealthy condition) condemne in the latter day a great many of these faint harted gospellers, which so soone be gone backe and turned from the truth, at y^e voyce of a handmaiden: seeing that neyther the feare of imprisonment, neither the possessions of the world (wherw^tal you are sufficiently indued aboue a great many) can separate you from the loue of the truthe,* which God hath reueled vnto you. Wherby it appeareth that the seede of Gods word which was sown in you, fel not, neither in y^e high way, neither amōg the thorns, neither vpō Page 1838 y^e stones, but vpon a good ground, which is blessed of god, and bringeth forth fruit, with great affliction, an 100. fold, to the glory of God, and the encrease of his church. &c.

In consideration wherof, S. Iames biddeth vs highly to reioyce, when soeuer we fall into many temptations, knowing that it is but y^e triall of our faith, that we might bring forth that excellēt vertue pacience, by the which we are made like to our redeemer Christ, w^t whome we heere being like in suffering, assuredly shall heereafter be pertakers of his eternall glory. Therefore s. Paul saith: God forbid that I should glory in any thing, but in the crosse of our lord Iesus Christ. I that am vnder the crosse with you (thankes be geuen to God therefore) haue felt in the same more true ioye and consolation, then euer I did by any benefite that God hath geuen mee in my life before. For the more the world doth hate vs, the nigher God is vnto vs, and there is no perfect ioy,* but in God. Wherefore Christ sayd: In me you shall haue ioy, but in the worlde affliction. Blessed be God which sendeth vs this affliction, that we mighte perfectly ioy in hym. For this cause in the ripest time of iniquitie, and in the moste feruent season of persecution of the true church,* which Christ in the 21. of Luke prophesied to come he willeth vs to be of good chere, and to lift vp our heads, for our redemption is at hand.

O that the Lorde would come and deliuer vs from this worlde, which is a vale of miserie, vnto his owne kingdome, where floweth perpetuall ioy and consolation. And verily that is the true and onely ioy which is conceiued, not of the creature, but of the Creator, the which when we doe possesse, no body canne take it away from vs. To the which ioy all other ioyes being compared, are but mournings, all delights sorrow, al sweetenes sower, all beauty filth, and finally al other things that be counted pleasant, are tediousnes. Your owne selfe is better witnes of thys, then I: aske your selfe, w^t whom you are best acquainted. Doeth not the holy Ghost speake the same in your heart? Haue you not perswaded your selfe this to be true, before I wrote thereof? For howe should you, being a woman, and a yong Gentlewoman, beautifull, and at your owne liberty, haue ouercome this your fraile kinde and age, and despised your excellent beautie and estate, vnlesse all those things which be subiect to the senses, had bene counted of you vile, & l^tle to be esteemed in cōparison of those things which inwardly do comfort you, to ouercome the flesh, the world, and the deuil. &c.

God encrease your ioy in all spirituall things, and establish your hope to y^e day of eternal rest. You haue forsaken darkenes, and are entred into light, God graunt the same may shine stil in you, vntil y^e perfect day come of the Lord, in the which is all our consolation.* Here we must be darkened, that there we may appeare as brighte as the sunne in the face of the whole world, & of all them that now condemne vs for our wel doing: whose iudges then we shall be, to their horrible grieve, though nowe wrongfully they iudge vs. Pray hartily, & that often, that God once again for his Christes sake, woulde be mercifull to his afflicted church in England. Faithfull prayer is the onely remedy that we haue against the fierie dartes of the Deuil, that be kindled against vs. By prayer the Amalechites shall be ouercome, and the roarings of the Lion, which seeketh still to deuoure vs, shalbe stopped & put to silence. The Lorde stoppe Leuiathans mouth, that he swallow not vp Gods seely people, according to his expectation.

Praise the Lord for the faithfull testimonie and sacrifice which 2. of our brethren of late, haue through fire rendred to the truth of the gossell, which nowe triumpheth by the death of godly Martyrs.* The Lorde is at hande, therefore watche and pray. The last of May. 1555. Captiue in the kings Bench.

Yours with heart in Christ, Iohn Philpot.

An other letter of maister Philpot, to the godly Ladie Vane.

*GOd the Father of our Lorde Iesus Christ encrease in your godly heart the faith of the gospell, which is your eternall inheritance, & the holy ghost comfort your spirite w^t all spirituall consolation, to the day of the Lord. Amen.

I can not but praise God moste highly & earnestly, my deare & faithful lady, for the great & vnfaigned loue whych you beare vnto me in Christ, * declared oftentimes, as wel now as of late, by manifest and liberal tokens. Blessed be God that hath made you so worthy a mēber in his kingdome. For it can not be but such shal reape with abūdance in time of reward, that here do sowe so plenteously in well doing. Albeit I am moste vnwoorthy to receiue any suche benefit at your hands, as in respect of a pillar of Christes church, which am scarce a shadow thereof. But the zeale of Christes church in you wisheth me to be such a one as the time doth require. God fulfill your desire of me, y^t I may be fōūd constant, & no wandring starre. I am not worthy of the name of a prophet, or of a minister of Gods woorde, for that I haue (being letted by the iniquitie of time) little or nothing labored therein. I am a friend of our common spouse Iesus, and do reioyce of the veritie of his woorde: for the which (praised be hys name) hee hath counted mee worthy to suffer: * and in deede who that geueth a draughte of water in the name of a disciple (as Christ hath promised) shall not lose his reward. Therefore, that your gentlenes doth in the name of him, which I am not, the Lorde recompence vnto you in all hys blessings, which he is accustomed to powre on them which loue his flocke vnfaignedly.

Good Lady, you haue to ioy that the kingdome of God is thus continually before your eies, and that you are not ashamed of the bands of Christ, which you with his people in part do suffer. They may be assured of y^e glory euerlasting, which heere are not ashamed to take vp the crosse of Christ, & to folowe him. Heere we must weepe and lament, whiles the worlde laugheth & triumpheth ouer vs: but our teares shall shortly be turned into vnspeakeable ioy, and we shall eternally be merrie together, when the world shall lament their infidelitie without ende. &c.

I woulde I were able to doe any thing y^t myght shewe condigne thāks for that sincere loue you beare vnto me in Christ. You adiure me (as it were) by your gentle letters to be bolde on you in all my needs. I thanke God whych ceaseth not to prouide for his. I lacke nothing at this present, but only hability to thank your faithful hart for your goodnesse towards me. I loue you and not yours, as it is meete christians to loue one an other in God: & your faith which I beholde in you, is more woorth vnto me then al your possessiōs. And I thinke I shal not neede long to be chargeable vnto you, for y^t this weeke I looke for commissioners to sit on me, & my fellow prisoners in prison, least the spirit of our breath might blowe further abroad. The wil of God be don. We are not so good as Iohn the Baptist which was beheaded in prison. Darknes cannot abide the light. Therefore their doings must declare what they are. We are as shepe appoynted for a sacrifice to the Lord. We must not feare the fire, for our Lord is a cōsuming fire which will put out the fierceness of raging torments from vs. Be not afraid of them y^t can kil the body, but feare him y^t can cast both body and soul into hel fire. God forbid that we should reioyce otherwise then in the crosse of Christ, & pray that he would make vs worthy to suffer for his sake. God wil haue our faith tried & knowen, * and therefore let vs willingly humble our selues vnder the mighty hād of God, that he may gloriously lifte vs vp in his good time. There is none perfectly faithfull in deede till he can say w^t S. Paule: I am perswaded that neither death, neither life, * neyther aungels, neither princes or powers, neither things present, neither things to come, neither highnes, neither lownes, neither any other creature is able to separate me from the loue of God which is in Christ Iesu our Lord. This faith God plant both in you and me vnmoouably. In this faith we haue to reioyce, and in none other.

All the tribulations of the worlde are not worthy of the eternall weighte of glory which is prepared for them, that here do with pacience abide the crosse. Wherefore let vs be stronge with the strengthe in him, that is able to make vs strong, & lament the weakenes, I might say the infidelitie of our faint gospellers. Christ whome we woulde pretend to haue put vpon vs, is the strēgth of God, and how then may they be weake where Christe is? We haue more to be glad, touching our selues, of this time, then we haue had of any time before, in y^e which we haue so ready a way to goe vnto God, and so good occasion to shew our duety in glorifying his holy name.* For if we be imprisonned in this cause, we are blessed. If we loose all that we haue, we are blessed a 100. fold. If we die, we are blessed eternally: so that in suffering of persecutions, all is full of blessings. Be blessed therefore (O elect Lady) of God, with the blessed of God, and flee (as you do) the concupiscence of the worlde. Embrace that which is perfect, and ioyfully looke for the comming and crosse of our Lorde Iesus Christ. &c. Thus desiring God to preserue you to his true peace, & to geue you victorie of that temptation which now is come to try our faith. Christe be with you, and blesse you both in body and soule: and my praier shal folow you wheresoeuer you goe, as I desire that you may be with me. The last weeke I sent your beneficence to Oxforde: I coulde not before haue a conuenient messenger. As soone as I haue worde, you shall be satisfied of your request. Loue me as you doe, and the God of loue be with you. The 20. day of August.

By yours with all his power, in the Lord, Iohn Philpot.

An other Letter full of spiritual consolation, to the sayd Ladie.

The mercye of God the father, & the consolation of the holy ghost thorow Iesus Christ,* be with you & strengthē you my deare mother and sister in the Lord, in these daungerous dayes, to the crowne of eternall glorye whiche is now offered to all faithfull souldiours in the Gospell. Amen.

As your good Ladiship doeth desire to heare from me, so am I desirous to wryte, as your gentlenesse and daily goodnes binedeth me. But Sathan of late hath letted me, who enuying al good exercises which I haue had and receiued by mine easie imprisonment in times past, hath brought me out of the kings Bench, into the bishop of Londons Colehouse, a darke and a vgly prison as any is about London (but my darke body of sinne hathe well deserued the same, and the Lord now hath brought me into outward darkenes, that I might the more be lightened by him, as he is moste present with his children in the midst of darkenesse) where I can not be suffred to haue any candle light, neither inke nor paper, but by stealth. Wherefore I can not wryte to you as I would, neither as my duety is. As Christ my maister was sent frō Annas to Caiphas, so am I sent from Winchester Dioces to London. I trust to make a speedye ende of my course: God geue mee grace and patience to be a faithfull follower of my master. I haue beene already this seuennight in his Colehouse, and haue of late bene foure times called to mine answeare, but hitherto not called to iudgement, which I do daily looke for, but I feare they wil prolong me and trie me by straight imprisonmēt a while, in the which Gods will be done.

*Pray (deare Lady) that my faith faint not, which I praise God is presently more liuely wyth mee then it hath beene in tymes past. I taste and feeble the faithfulness of God in his promise, who hath promised to be wyth hys in their trouble, and to delyuer them. I thanke the Lorde, I am not alone, but haue sixe other faithfull companions: who in our darknesse doe chearfully sing Hymnes and praises vnto God for his great goodnesse. Wee are so ioyful, that I wish you part of my ioy. For you that are so carefull of my bodely reliefe, howe can I but wish you spirituall consolation, and that aboundantly? Let not, deare heart, my strait imprisonment any thing molest you: for it hath added and daily doth, vnto my ioy: but rather be glad and thankfull vnto GOD with me, that it hath pleased him to make me most wretched sinner, woorthy to suffer any thing for his sake. Hitherto we haue not resisted vnto bloud God make vs neuer to count our bloud more precious in our eyes then his truth.

Ah my deare sister, I thanke you againe for your last letter you sent me: it is a singular comfort vnto me, as oft as I reade the same. I haue it in my bosome, and wil carie the same euen to the stake with me, in witnesse that Christ hath so constant and faithfull a Ladie in Englande. God succoure and keepe that spirite in you, for it is the verye spirite of adoption of the childe of God. Suche chearefull and holy spirites vnder the crosse, bee acceptable sacrifices in the sight of God: for Christ came to cast fire into the earth, and looketh that it shoulde be kindled. Be you feruent in spirite in our Christes cause, as you haue begonne, for that is the principall spirite wherewithall Dauid desired to be confirmed. O howe I doe reioyce your Ladiship to goe arme in arme with me vnto Christe, or rather before me. I can not but ioye of suche a worshipfull fellowe. Me thinketh I see you to mourne, and desire to be loosed out of the earthly and fraile habitacle of this body. O how amiable and pleasant is it to dwel in the Lords tabernacle? Our Christe and his heauenly compagne looke for vs: let vs haste and runne thereto, for beholde the Lord is ready to embrace vs. Mine owne bowels in the Lorde, be merry in the Lorde with your afflicted brother, who daily offereth your merciful almes: which most vnworthely I do receiue still of you, vnto the Lorde. But nowe deare mother, you neede not to burden so muche your selfe (as my last letters did signifie) for that my chargeable imprisonment is cut off, and a litle nowe serueth me: wherefore I praye you sende no more vntill I sende to you, for I haue sufficient and abounde. Gods peace be with you for euer. Out of my Lord of Londons Colehouse, the last of October.

Your owne, Iohn Philpot.

An other Letter of Maister Philpot to the sayde Ladie, wherein partly he complaineth of the dissimulation and periurie of English men, falling againe to the Pope, and partlye he expresseth his ioy in his afflictions.

I Cannot but ioy with you, my hearty beloued in Christ, of the fall of Senacherib,* since it is to the glory of God, and to the consolation of his church, to see the fall of theyr enemies before their face, according as it is wrytten: The iust shall reioyce when hee seeth the vengeance of the wicked.* God make this your ioy perfite: for as cōcerning my self, I counte not to see those good dayes whereof you haue a glimmering in this life. For although the Cockatrice be dead, yet his pestilent chickens, w^t the whore of Babylon yet liueth. But a great hope there is of their shorte confusion, because god doth not prosper their doings according to their expectation. Most happiest shal he be, whome the Lorde shall moste soonest take out of this life, that he may not see the plagues, which the manifest periurie, and the manifolde idolatrie and detestable dissimulation, and that of such as do know the truth, do threaten to come.

The Lord is iust, & all vnrighteousnes displeaseth him, & either heere or els in an other world he will punish this grosse infidelity of the worlde: but his elect, and such as he loueth, wil he punish here, that they should not be condēned heereafter with the world eternally, we haue nothing so much to reioyce in, as in the crosse of Iesu Christ, and in that we are partakers of his afflictions, which be the earnest penie of that eternall kingdome, which he vppon the crosse for vs hathe purchased. For as Paule hys faithfull witnes saith: If we suffer with him, we shall raigne with him. If we die with him, we shall liue with him.

Wherefore mine owne deare bowels, praise God w^t me moste intirely, that it hath pleased him now mercifully to visite the sinnes of my youth, & my huge vnthankfulnes, and by the same doth geue me such consolation, that he assureth me of his great goodnesse & mercy, and turneth his fatherly castigation into my crown of glory. O good God, what am I on whome he should shew this great mercy? To him that is immortal, inuisible, and onely wise, be all honor, praise and glory therfore, Amen.

This is the day that the Lord hath made, let vs reioyce and be glad in y^e same. This is the way, though it be narrow, which is ful of the peace of God,* & leadeth to eternal blisse, O how my heart leapeth for ioy, y^t I am so neare the apprehēision therof. God forgiue me mine vnthākfulnes, and vnworthines of so great glory. The swordes whyche pearced Maries hart in y^e passion of our Sauour, whych daily also go through your faithful hart, be more glorious and to be desired then the golden Scepters of this world, O blessed be they y^t mourne in this world to Godwarde, for they shall eternally be comforted. God make my stony heart to mourne more then it doth. I haue so muche ioy of the reward that is prepared for me most wretched sinner, y^t though I be in a place of darknes & mourning, yet I cā not lament, but both night & day am so ioyfull, as though I were vnder no Crosse at all: yea in all the dayes of my life I was neuer so merry,* the name of the Lorde be praised therfore for euer & euer, and he pardon mine vnthankfulnes. Our enemies do freat, fume, and gnash their teeth to see and heare that we, vnder this grieuous affliction in the world, can be so mery. We are of them counted as desperate persones, for the certaine hope & feeling which we haue of our euerlasting saluation: and it is no maruell, for the worldly man can not perceiue the things of God, it is meere foolishnesse and abomination to them.

Be thankfull vnto our God mine owne deare helper, for his wonderous working in his chosen people. Praye instantly y^t this ioy be neuer taken from vs, for it passeth all the delightes of this worlde. This is the peace of God which surmounteth all vnderstanding: this peace y^e more his chosen be afflicted, y^e more they feelee, & therfore can not faint, neither for fire, neither for water. Lette vs pray for our weake brethren & sisters sake, that it may please God to alleuiate the greuous and intollerable burden of these cruel daies. But touching our selues, let vs hartily besech our sauour to vouchsafe to geue vs this glorious gifte to suffer for hys Gospels sake, and that we may thincke the shame of the world to be our glory, as it is in deede. God increase our faith, and open our eyes to beholde what is prepared for vs. I lack nothing, praise be to God. I trust my marriage garment is ready. I will send you my examinations as soone as I can get them wrytten, if you be desirous of them.

God of his mercy fill your mercifull heart with all ioy and consolation of the hope to come. Out of the colehouse the 19. of Nouember.

Your owne loue, Iohn Philpot.

A Letter of M. Philpot, to a frende of his, prisoner the same time in Newgate, wherein is debated and discussed the matter or question of Infants to be baptised.

THE God of all lighte and vnderstanding, lighten your heart wyth all true knowledge of his word,* and make you perfect to the day of our Lorde Iesus Christ, wherevnto you are nowe called, through the mighty operation of his holy spirite. Amen.

I receiued yesternight from you deare brother S. and fellow prisoner for the truth of Christes Gospell, a Letter, wherein you gently require my iudgement cōcerning the Baptisme of infantes, which is the effect thereof. And before I doe shewe you what I haue learned out of Gods Page 1840 word & of his true & infallible church touchyng the same, I thinke it not out of the matter first to declare what vision I had the same night whiles musing on your letter I fell a sleepe, knowing that God doth not without cause reueale to his people who haue their mynds fixed on him speciall and spirituall reuelations to their comfort, as a tast of their ioy and kingdome to come, which fleshe and blood can not comprehend.

*Being in the midst of my sweete rest, it seemed me to see a great beautifull Citie all of the colour of Azure, and white, foure square in a marueilous beautifull composition in the midst of the skie, the sight whereof so inwardly comforted me, that I am not able to expresse the consolation I had thereof, yea the remembrance thereof causeth as yet my hart to leape for ioy, and as charitie is no churle, but would others to bee pertakers of his delight, so mee thought I called to others (I cannot tel whom) & whiles they came, and we together beheld the same, by and by to my great grieve it vaded away.

This dreame I thinke not to haue come of the illusion of the senses, because it brought with it so much spirituall ioy, and I take it to be of the workyng of Gods spirite for the contentation of your request, as he wrought in Peter to satisfy Cornelius. Therefore I interprete this beautifull Citie to be the glorious Church of Christ,* and the appearance of it in the skie, signifieth the heavenly state thereof, whose conuersation is in heauē, and that according to the Primitiue Church which is now in heauen, men ought to measure and iudge the church of Christ now in earth▪ for, as the Prophet Dauid sayth: The foundations thereof be in the holy hils,and glorious thyngs be spoken of the city of God. And the maruelous quadrature of the same, I take to signifie the vniuersal agreement in the same, and that all the Church here militant ought to consent to the Primitiue Church throughout the foure parts of the worlde, as the Prophete affirmeth, saying: God maketh vs to dwell after one maner in one house. And that I conceyued so wonderfull ioy at the contemplation therof, I vnderstand the vnspeakeable ioy which they haue that bee at vnitie wyth Christes Primitiue Church: For there is ioy in the holye Ghost, and peace, which passeth all vnderstanding, as it is written in the Psalmes: As of ioyful persons is the dwelling of all them that be in thee. And that I called others to the fruition of this vision, and to behold this wonderfull city, I conster it by the will of God this vision to haue come vppon me, musing on your letter, to the ende, that vnder this figure I might haue occasion to mooue you with many others, to behold the Primatiue church in all your opinions concernyng fayth, and to conforme your selfe in all poynts to the same, which is the pillar and stablishment of truth, and teacheth the true vse of the sacraments, and hauyng with a greater fulnesse then we haue, now the first fruits of the holy Ghost, did declare the true interpretatiō of the scriptures accordyng to all veritie, euen as our Sauour promised to send them an other comforter, whiche should teach them all truth.

And since all truth was taught & reuealed to the Primitiue church which is our mother, let vs all that be obedient children of God submit our selues to the iudgement of the Church for the better vnderstanding of the Articles of our faith, and of the doubtful sentences of the scripture. Let vs not go about to shew in vs by followyng any priuate mans interpretation vpon the word, an other spirite then they of the Primitiue Church had, least we deceyue ourselues. For there is but one fayth and one spirit, which is not contrary to hymselfe, neyther otherwyse now teacheth vs then he did then. Therefore let vs beleue as they haue taught vs of the Scriptures, and be at peace w^t them, accordyng as the true Catholicke Church is at this day: and the God of peace assuredly will be with vs, & deliuer vs out of all our worldly troubles and miseries, & make vs partakers of their ioy and blisse, through our obedience to sayth with them.

*Therefore God commaundeth vs in Iob, to aske of the elder generation, and to search diligently the memory of the Fathers. For we are but yesterdaies children, and be ignorant, and our dayes are like a shadowe, and they shall teach thee (sayth the Lorde) and speake to thee, and shall vtter wordes from their hartes. And by Salomon w^e are commaunded, * not to reiecte the direction of our mother. The Lorde graunt you to direct your steppes in all thinges after her, and to abhorre all contention with her. For as S. Paule writeth: If any man be contentious, neither we, *neither the Church of God hath any such custome.

Hitherto I haue shewed you good brother S. my iudge^ment generally of that you stande in doubt and dissent frō others, to the which I wishe you as myne owne harte to be conformable, and then doubtles you can not erre, but boldly may be glad in your troubles and triumph at the houre of your death, that you shall dye in the Church of God a faythfull Martyr, and receiue the crowne of eternall glory. And thus much haue I written vpon the occasion of a vision before God vnfayned. But that you may not thinke that I goe about to satisfie you with vncertain visions onely, and not after Gods word, * I will take the ground of your letter and specially answeare to the same by the scriptures and by vnfallible reasons reduced out of the same, & proue the Baptisme of Infantes to be lawfull, commendable, and necessary, whereof you seeme to stand in doubt.

In deed if you looke vppon the papisticall Synagogue onely, which hath corrupted gods word by false interpretations, and hath peruered the true vse of Christes sacraments, * you might seeme to haue good handfast of your opinion agaynst the Baptisme of Infants. But forasmuch as it is of more antiquitie and hath his beginning from gods worde, and from the vse of the Primatiue Church, it must not in respect of the abuse in the popish Church be neglected, or thought not expedient to be vsed in Christs church. Auxentius, one of the Arrians sect, with hys adherentes, was one of the first that denied the Baptisme of children, and next after hym, Pelagius the heretike, and some other there were in S. Bernardes tyme, as it doth appeare by hys writyngs, and in our dayes the Anabaptists, * an inordinate kynd of men stirred vp by the deuill, to the destruction of the Gospel. But the Catholike truth deliuered vnto vs by the Scriptures▪ playnly determineth, that al such are to be baptised, as whom God acknowledgeth for hys people, and voucheth them worthy of sanctification or remission of theyr sinnes. Therefore since that Infants be in the number or scroll of Gods people, and be partakers of the promise by theyr purification in Christ, it must needes follow thereby, that they ought to be baptised as well as those that can professe their fayth. For we iudge the people of God as well by the free and liberall promise of GOD, as by the confession of fayth.* For to whome so euer God promiseth hymselfe to be theyr God, & whom he acknowledgeth for his, those no man without great impietie may exclude from the number of the faythful. But God promiseth, that he will not onely be the God of such as doe professe hym, but also of Infants: promising them hys grace and remission of sinnes, as it appereth by the words of the couenaunt made vnto Abraham:I will set my couenant betweene thee and me (sayth the Lord) and betweene thy seede after thee in their generations, with an euerlasting couenaunt, to be thy God, and the God of thy seede after thee. To the which couenaunt Circumcision was added to be a signe of satisfaction as well in children as in men, & no man may think that this promise is abrogated with Circumcision & other ceremoniall lawes. For Christ came to fulfill the promises and not to dissolue them. Therfore in the Gospell he sayth of Infants, that is, of such as yet beleueed not:*Let thy little ones come vnto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdome of heauen. Agayne,It is not the will of your father which is in heauen, that any of these little ones do perish. Also, He that receyueth one such little chyld in my name, receyueth me. Take heede therefore that ye despise not one of these babes, for I tell you, their Angels do continually see in heauen my fathers face. And what may be sayd more playner then this: It is not the wyll of the heauenly father, that the Infants should perish? whereby we may gather that he receyueth them freely vnto this grace, although as yet they confesse not their fayth. Since then that the worde of the promise which is conteyned in Baptisme, pertayneth as well to children as to men, why shoulde the signe of the promise which is Baptisme in water, be withdrawen from childrē when Christ hymselfe commandeth them to be receiued of vs, and promiseth the reward of a Prophet to those that receiue such a little Infant: as he for an example dyd put before hys disciples.

Now will I prooue with manifest argumentes,* that children ought to be baptised, & that the Apostles of Christ did baptise children. The Lord commanded his Apostles to baptise all nations: therefore also children ought to bee baptised, for they are comprehended vnder this worde, All nations.

Further, whom God doth account among the faithfull, they are faythfull, for it was sayd to Peter,That thyng which God hath purified, thou shalt not say to bee common or vncleane: But God doth repute children among the faithfull: Ergo, they be faithfull, except wee had leaue to resiste God, and seeme stronger and wiser then he.

And without all doubte the Apostles baptised those which Christ commanded:* but he commanded the faythfull to be baptised, among the which infants be reckoned: The Apostles then baptised Infants.

Page 1841The Gospell is more then Baptisme, for Paule sayd: The Lord sent me to preach the Gospell, and not to baptise: not that he denied absolutely that he was sent to baptise, but that he preferred doctrine before Baptisme, for the Lorde commaunded both to the Apostles:* but children be receyued by the doctrine of the gospel of God, & not refused: therfore what person being of reason, may deny thē baptisme, which is a thing lesser then the Gospell? for in the Sacraments be two things to be considered,* the thing signified, and the signe, & the thing signified is greater thē the signe, and from the thing signified in Baptisme, children are not excluded: who therefore may deny them the sign, which is, Baptisme in water?

*S. Peter could not deny them to be baptised in water, to whom he sawe the holy Ghost geuen, which is the certayne signe of Gods people: For he sayeth in the Actes: May any body forbid them to be baptised in water,*who haue receyued the holy Ghost as well as we? Therefore S. Peter denied not Baptisme to Infantes, for hee knew certaynely both by the doctrine of Christ, and by the couenant which is euerlasting, that the kingdome of heauen pertayned to Infants.

None be receyued into the kyngdome of heauen, but such as God loueth,* and which are endued with his spirit, for who so hath not the spirite of God, he is none of hys. But Infantes be beloued of God, and therefore want not the spirit of God: wherefore if they haue the spirit of God as well as men, if they bee numbred among the people of God as well as we that be of age, who (I pray you) may well withstand children to be baptised with water, in the name of the Lord?

The Apostles in tymes past beyng yet not sufficiently instructed,* did murmure against those which brought their children vnto the Lord, but the Lord rebuked them, & said: Let the Babes come vnto me.* Why then doe not these rebellions Anabaptists obey the cōmandement of the Lord? For what do they now adayes els that bring their children to baptisme, then that they did in tymes past, which brought their children to the Lord, and our lord receiued them, and puttyng his hands on them, blessed them, & both by words and by gentle behauiour towards them, declared manifestly that children be the people of God, and entirely beloued of God.* But some will say, why then did not Christ baptise them? Because it is written: Iesus hymselfe baptised not, but hys disciples.

Moreouer, Circumcision in the old law was ministred to infants:* therefore baptisme ought to be ministred in the new law vnto children. For baptisme is come in the stead of Circumcision,* as S. Paule witnesseth, saying to y^e Collossians: By Christ yee are circumcised with a Circumcision which is without hands,*when ye put of the body of sinne of the flesh, by the Circumcision of Christ, beyng buried together with hym through Baptisme. Behold, Paule calleth Baptisme the Circumcision of a Christian man, which is done without hands, not that water may be ministred without handes, but that with hands no man any longer ought to bee circumcised, albeit the mysterie of Circumcisiō do stil remain in faythfull people.

To this I may adde, that the seruaunts of God were alwayes redy to minister the sacraments to them, for whō they were instituted. As for an example, we may beholde Iosue, who most diligently procured the people of Israell to be circumcised, before they entred into the lande of promise: but since the Apostles were the preachers of y^e word, and the very faithful seruants of Iesus Christ, who maye hereafter doubt that they baptised infants sithen baptisme is in place of Circumcision?

Item, the Apostles dyd attemperate all their doyngs to the shadowes and figures of the olde Testament: therefore it is certayne that they did attemperate Baptisme accordingly to Circumcision,* and baptised children because they were vnder the figure of Baptisme: for the people of Israell passed through the red sea, and the bottome of the water of Iordane, with their children. And although the children be not alwayes expressed, neither the women in the holy Scriptures, yet they are comprehended and vnderstood in the same.

Also the Scripture euidently telleth vs, that the Apostles baptised whole families or households: But the children bee comprehended in a familie or householde,* as the chieftest and dearest part thereof: Therefore we may conclude, that the Apostles dyd baptise Infantes or children, and not onely men of lawfull age. And that the house or houshold is taken for man, woman, and chyld, it is manifest in the 17. of Genesis, and also in that Ioseph doth call Iacob with all hys house, to come out of the land of Chanaan, into Egypt.

Finally, I can declare out of auncient writers, that the Baptisme of Infantes hath continued from the Apostles tyme, vnto oures,* neyther that it was instituted by anye Councels, neyther of the Pope, or of other men, but commended from the Scripture by the Apostles themselues. Origene vpon the declaration of S. Paules Epistles to the Romaines, expoundyng the vj. chapter, sayeth:*That the Church of Christ receyued the Baptisme of Infants from the very Apostles. S. Hierome maketh mention of the Baptisme of Infantes, in the third booke agaynst the Pelagians, and in hys Epistle vnto Leta. Saint Augustine reciteth for this purpose, a place out of Iohn Bishop of Cōstantinople, in hys first booke agaynst Iulian, chap. 2. and he agayne writyng to S. Hierome Epist. 28. sayth: That Saint Cyprian not makyng any newe decree, but firmly obseruyng the fayth of the Church iudged with hys fellowe Bishops, that as soone as one was borne, he might bee lawfully baptised. The place of Cypriā is to be seene in his Epistle to Fidus.

Also S. Augustine writyng agaynst the Donatists in the 4. booke, chap. 23. and 24. sayth, That the Baptisme of Infantes was not deriued from the authoritie of man, neyther of Councels, but from the tradition or doctrine of the Apostles.

Cyrril vpon Leuiticus, chap. 8. approoueth the Baptisme of children, and condemneth the iteration of Baptisme. These authorities of men I do alledge, not to tie the Baptisme of children vnto the testimonies of men, but to shew how mens testimonies do agree with Gods word, and that the veritie of antiquity is on our side, & that the Anabaptists haue nothyng but lyes for them, & new imaginations which fayne the Baptisme of children to be the Popes commandement.

After this will I aunswer to the summe of your argumentes for the contrary. The first which includeth all the rest, is, It is written: Goe ye into all the worlde, and preach the gladde tidynges to all creatures. He that beleeueth and is baptised, shall bee saued: but hee that beleeueth not, shall bee damned. &c.

To this I aunswer, that nothyng is added to Gods word by the baptisme of children, as you pretend, but that is done which the same word doth require, for that children are accounted of Christ in the gospell, among the nūber of such as beleue, as it appeareth by these words: He that offendeth one of these little babes which beleue in mee,it were better for hym to haue a myllstone tyed about hys necke, & to be cast into the bottome of the sea. Where plainly Christ calleth such as be not able to confesse their fayth, beleuers: because of his meere grace he reputeth them for beleeuers. And this is no wonder so to be taken, sithen God imputeth fayth for righteousnes vnto mē that be of a riper age: for both in men and children righteousnes, acceptation, or sanctification is of meere grace and by imputation, that the glory of Gods grace might be prayesd.

And that the children of faythfull parents are sanctified, and among such as doe beleue, is apparant in the 1. Cor. 7. And where as you doe gather by the order of the wordes in the sayd commaundement of Christ, that childrē ought to be taught before they be baptised, and to this ende you alledge many places out of the Actes, proouyng that such as confessed their fayth first, were baptised after: I aunswer, that if the order of wordes might weigh anye thyng •o this cause, we haue the Scripture that maketh as well for vs. For in * S. Marke we read, that Iohn dyd baptise in the desert, preachyng Baptisme of repentaunce. In the which place we see baptising go before, & preaching to follow.

And also I wyll declare this place of Mathew exactly considered, to make for the vse of baptisme in children, for S. Mathew hath it written in this wyse: All power is geuen me (sayth the Lord) in heauen and in earth, therefore going forth, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , that is, *Disciple ye (as I may expre the signification of the word:) that is, make or gather to me Disciples of all nations. And followyng, he declareth the way how they should gather to hym Disciples out of all nations, baptising them and teachyng: by baptising and teachyng ye shall procure a Church to me. And both these aptly and briefly seuerally he setteth foorth, saying: *Baptising them in the name of the Father and of the Sonne and the holy Ghost, teachyng them to obserue all thyngs whatsoever I haue commaunded you. Now then Baptisme goeth before doctrine.

But hereby I do not gather, that the Gentiles which neuer heard any thyng before of God, and of the sonne of God, and of the holy Ghost, ought to be baptised, neyther they would permit themselues to bee baptised before they knew to what end. But this I haue declared to shew you vpon how feeble foundation the Anabaptistes bee grounded. And playnly it is not true which they imagine of this text, that the Lord dyd onely commaund such to bee baptised Page 1842 whome the Apostles had first of all taught. Neyther here verily is signified who onely be to be baptised, but he speaketh of such as bee not of perfect age, and of the first foundations of fayth, and of the Church to bee planted among the Gentiles which were as yet rude and ignorant of religion.

Such as be of age may heare, beleue and confesse that is preached and taught, but so cannot infants: therefore we may iustly collect, that he speaketh here nothing of infants or children. But for al this they be not to be excluded from Baptisme.

It is a generall rule: He that doth not labour, must not eate. But who is so barbarous that might thinke hereby, that children should be famished?

*The Lord sent hys Apostles at the beginnyng of the setting vp his true religion vnto al nations, vnto such as were both ignorant of God, and were out of the couenant of God, and truly such persons it behooued not first to bee baptised and afterward taught, but first to be taught and after baptised. If at this day we should go to the Turkes to conuert them to the faith of Christ, verily first we ought to teach them, and afterward baptise such as would yeeld to be the seruants of Christ. Likewise the Lorde hymselfe in tymes past dyd, when first he renewed the couenāt with Abraham, and ordeyned Circumcision to be a seale of the couenānt after that Abraham was circumcised. But hee when he perceiued the infantes also to pertaine to the couenant, and that Circumcision was the sealyng vp of the couenant, did not only circumcise Ismael his sonne y^t was 13. yeres of age, but all other infantes that were borne in his house, among whom we reckon Isaac.

Euen so faythfull people which were conuerted from Heathen Idolatry by the preaching of the gospel, and cōfessing the faith, were baptised, when they vnderstood their children to be counted among the people of God, and that Baptisme was the token of the people of God,* they procured also their children to be baptised. Therefore as it is written: Abraham circumcised all the male children of hys house Semblably we read in the Actes and writynge of the Apostles, that after the Maister of the house was turned to the fayth, all the whole house was baptised. And as concernyng those which of olde tyme were compelled to confesse their fayth before they receyued baptisme, whiche were called Cathecumeni,* they were such as with our forefathers came from the Gentiles to the Church, who beyng yet rude of fayth, they did instruct in the principles of their beliefe, and afterward they did baptise them: but the same auncient Fathers notwithstanding, dyd baptise the children of faythfull men, as I haue already partly declared.

And because you doe require a hasty aunswer of your letter of one that is but a dull writer, I am here enforced to cease particularly, to go through your letter in aunswering thereto, knowyng that I haue fully answered euery part thereof, in that I haue already written, although not in such order as it had bene meet, and as I purposed. But forasmuch as I vnderstand that you will be no contentious man, neither in this matter, neither in any other, contrary to the iudgement of Christes Primatiue Church, which is the body and fulnesse of Christ. I desire you in the entire loue of hym, or rather Christ desireth you by me (that your ioy may be perfect, whereto you are now called) to submit your iudgement to that Church, and to bee at peace and vnitie with the same, that the coate of Christ which ought to be without seame, but now alas most miserably is torne in pieces by many daungerous sectes and damnable opinions, may appeare by you in no part to haue bene rented, neither that any giddy head in these dog dayes myght take an example by you to dissent frō Christes true Church: I beseech thee deare brother in the Gospell, follow the steps of the faith of the glorious Martirs in the Primatiue Church, and of such as at this day folow the same: decline not from them neither to the right hand nor to the left. Then shall death be it neuer so bitter, bee more sweeter then this lyfe: then shall Christ with al the heauenly Hierusalem triumphantly embrace your spirite with vnspeakeable gladnes and exaltation, who in this earth was content to ioyne your spirit with their spirites, accordyng as it is commaunded by the word, that the spirite of Prophets should be subiect to the Prophetes. One thyng aske with Daud ere you depart, and require the same that you may dwell with a full accorde in hys house,* for there is glory and worship: and so with Simeon in y^e temple embracing Christ, depart in peace: to the whiche peace Christ bryng both you and me, and all our louyng brethren that loue God in the vnity of fayth, by such wais as shall please hym to his glory. Let the bitter passion of Christ which he suffred for your sake, and the horrible torments which the godly Martyrs of Christ haue endured before vs,* and also the inestimable reward of your lyfe to come, which is hidden yet a little whyle from you wyth Christ, strengthen, comfort, and encourage you to the end of that glorious race which you are in, Amen.

Your yoke fellow in captiuitie for the veri•ie of Christes Gospell, to lyue and dye with you in the vnitie of fayth, Iohn Philpot.

☛ Diuers other letters were written by M. Philpot to diuers, but these as most principall I haue excerpted, and inserted. Amongest which I thought here not much impertinent to the place, to adioyne an other certayne letter of a godly & zealous Gospeller (whose name in her writyng doth not appeare) who in defendyng and commendyng the quarell of this M. Iohn Philpot, Christes most famous and worthy Martyr, was therefore troubled and brought before B. Boner. And therefore beyng appoynted by the sayd bishop, to appeare vpon a certayne day to aunswer for her selfe, In deede kept not her day with the Bishop, but in stead of her appearance, sent hym this letter, here followyng.

¶ Wo be vnto the Idolatrous Shepherds of England that feede themselues. Should not the Shepherdes feede the flocke? but ye haue eaten the fatte, ye haue clothed you with the wooll, the best fed haue ye slayne, but the flocke haue ye not nourished, the weake haue ye not holden vp, the sicke haue ye not healed, the broken haue ye not bound together, the outcastes haue ye not brought agayne, the lost haue ye not sought, but churlishly and cruelly haue ye ruled them. Ezech. 34.

FOR as much my Lord as my busines is such that I can not come vnto your Lordshippe accordyng to my promise, I haue bene so bold to write these few wordes vnto you, partly to excuse myne absence, and partly to answere your Lordships demaunds at my last most happy departure from you. As touchyng the breache of my promise w^t you in not commyng agayne at the hower appoynted, your Lordship shall vnderstand that I take the counsaile of the Angell, which warned the wyse men not to come agayne to Herode accordyng to their promise, but to turne home agayne another way. Now my Lord I perceiuyng your Lordship to be a more cruell tyraunt then euer was Herode, and more desirous to destroy Christ in hys poore members then euer was he, which to destroy Christ killed hys owne sonne, I thought good to take the Angels counsaile, and to come no more at you, for I see that you are set all in a rage lyke a rauenyng wolfe agaynst y^e poore lambs of Christ appoynted to the slaughter for the testimonye of the truth. In deed you are called the common cut throte & generall slaughter slaue to all the Bishops of Englande, and therefore it is wisdom for me and all other simple sheepe of the Lord, to keepe vs out of your butchers stalle as long as we can: especially seyng that you haue suche store alredy, that you are not able to drinke al their bloud, least you should breake your belly: and therefore let them lye still and dye for hunger. Therefore my L. I thought it good to tary a tyme vntill your Lordships stomacke were come to you a little better, for I do perceyue by your great fat cheekes that you lacke no lambes fleshe yet, and belike you are almost gluttet with suppyng so much bloud, and therefore you wyll let some of the leanest dye in prysonne, which wyll then bee meate good enough for your barkyng beagles Harpsfield and hys fellowes, but yet my Lord it were a great deale more for your Lordshippes honour, if your chaplaines myght haue the meat roasted in Smithfield at the fire of the stake, yea, and when it is somethyng fat and fayre likyng, for now they haue nothyng but skin and bones, and if the dogges come hastily to it, they maye chance shortly to be choked, and then your huntyng wyll be hindered greatly if it be not altogether marred. I heare say my Lord y^t some of the butcherly cures came of late to my house to seeke their pray, & that they go round about y^e citie (as Dauid sayeth) grinnyng and grudgyng that they haue not meat enough, therefore belyke they haue kylled my poore brethren and sistern that haue lye so long vpon the butcherly stall, and eaten them vp: for I heare say their friends could not be suffred to see them this three dayes & more, therefore I perceyue now that if I had come agayne accordyng to my promise, that your Lordship lyke a rauenyng Wolf, or els some of your helhounds would quickly haue weried me: but I see wel my appoynted time is not yet come, therefore I wyll yet lyue and thanke him for my deliuerance, with continuall songs of laude and prayse. Page 1843 Thus haue I ben bold to trouble your lordship w^t telling you the truth, and the very cause that I came not vnto you again accordyng to my vnpurposed promise, I trust your Lordship wil take this in good part, and accept it as a law^ffull excuse, not doubtyng but your Lordship would haue done the lyke, if you had bene in my case.

Now as concernyng the second part that caused me to write vnto your Lordship, which is to answer vnto your subtile or rather cruell demaund of my iudgement of the death of that blessed Martyr of Christ Iesus, good maister Iohn Philpot, I will not aunswer your Lordship simply and plainly, what perill so euer shall come thereof. Truly my Lord I do not onely thinke, but I am also most certayne and sure, that he as a very man of God, dyed a true Martyr and constant confesser of hys deare Lord and Sauour Iesus Christ, to whō he did most faithfully commit his sweete soule, who will surely kepe the same with hym in ioy and felicitie for euermore. Also my Lord I do verily beleue and know that your Lordship hath committed an horrible and most cruell murder in the vniustly condemnynge and killyng of hym, and that you shall make as heauy an account for hys bloud, which shortly shall be required at your handes, as euer your great graundfather cruell Caine did or shall do for his innocent brother Abell. Moreouer,* because I am crediblye informed that your Lordship doth beleue, and haue in secrete sayd, that there is no hell, I certifie you that your Lordship did neuer any thyng in all your lyfe that so much did redounde to your Lordships dishonor, and perpetual shame and infamy, as your killyng the body of this blessed Prophet doth, especially seeyng that he was none of your Dioces, nor had not offended any of your Lordships diuelish and cruel lawes. Uerily I heare almost euery body say in all places where I come, that your Lordship is made the common slaughter slaue to all your fellows, bitesheep Bishops I would say: yea the very papists themselues beginne now to abhorre your bloudthirstines, and speake shame of your tyranny. Lyke tyranny beleue me my Lord, euery chylde that can any whit speake, can call you by your name & say, bloody Boner is bishop of London, and euery man hath it as perfect vppon hys fingers endes, as his Pater noster, how many you for your part haue burned with fire, and famished in prison, they say the whole summe surmounteth to forty personnes within this three quarters of this yeare. Therefore my Lord, though your Lordship beleueueth that there is neither heauen, nor hell, nor God, nor deuill: yet if your Lordship loue your own honesty which was lost long agoe, you were best to surcese frō this cruel burnyng of true christian men, and also from murderynge of some in prison, for that in deed offendeth mens myndes most, yea euen your olde friendes the rankest papists that be. For say they Felix the Heathen ruler did not forbidde Paules friends to visite hym in prison, and to bring hym necessary reliefe, and therefore it is a very great shame and sinne, to see a Bishop that beareth the name of a christian, to be more cruell vpon his poore brethren, then an Heathen, Turke, or Infidell.

This is mens saying in euery place, not onely of this Realme, but also of the most part of the world, & the common talke they haue of your Lordship, therfore I thought to be so bold with your Lordship as to tell you of it, thogh perchance you wil geue me but small thanks for my labor. Well, as for that I put it to your Lordships choise, for I haue as much alrede as I looke for. Finally, my L. I will geue you to vnderstande, that the death of this constant Martyr and valiaunt souldiour of Iesus Christ, hath geuen a greater shake towards the ouerthrowyng of your papisticall kyngdome, then you shall euer be able to recouer agayne this 7. yeres, do the best ye can, and set as many crafty dawbers to patch it vp with vntempered clay as you wyll, yea, though pratyng Pendleton that wycked Apostata, apply all hys wily wits to helpe them. Uerilye my Lord, by all mens reports, his blessed lyfe could neuer ha•e done the lyke sorrow to Satans Synagoge, whereof some say your Lordship is a mightye member, as hys happy death hath done. You haue broken a pot in deede, but the precious worde contened therein, is so notably therewithall shed abroad, that the sweete sauour thereof hath woonderfully well refreshed all the true household or congregation of Christ, that they cannot abyde any more the stinkyng sauour of your filthy ware that came from the dunghill of Rome, though your Lordships Iudasses do set them a sayle euery where to fill your bagges, I put your Lordship out of doubt, that if you do breake mo such pots, you will marre your owne market altogether: for I promise you most men beginne to mislike your diuelish doyngs, and wonderfully to lothe your popishe pedlary wares.

Thus haue I accordyng to your Lordships commandements, shewed you simply what I thinke of that good mans death, whose bloud cryeth for vengeance agaynst your Lordships butcherly bloody proceedings in y^e eares of the Lord of hostes, who will shortly reuenge the same, vpon your pilled pate, and vpon the rest of all your pollshorne brethren, the very marked cattell of the great Antichrist of Rome. The measure of your iniquitie is filled vp to the brimme, therefore will God shortly poure in double vnto your deserued destruction. And then I weene your new made Prosolites will be glad to couer their crowns with a Cowe turd (sauyng your Lordships reuerence I should haue sayd first. Well, I rather desire the conuersion then confusion, the Lord send the one of them shortly as may be most to his glory. Amen.

I signifye also vnto your Lordshyp, that the raylyng words which your lying preacher shewed forth of hys filthy fountayne vpon Sondag, agaynst the deare seruaunt of God good M. Philpot, doth greatly redounde to your Lordships dishonesty, and much deface your spiritual honour. Uerily I see that the great wrath of GOD hath so blynded your eyes, that you see not what is with you, nor what is against you, but still you vomite out your owne shame, and make all the world wonder vpon you. Was it not enough for you to condemne hym most vniustly, ye contrary to your own lawes, and to kill his innocent body most tyrannously, but you must also set a lying limme of the Deuill, to blaspheme, slaunder, and belye him now he is dead. Oh viperous generation▪ seed of the serpent, & right children of the deuill, full well doe you counterfaite the fathers steps, whom Christ calleth a murderer, and a lyer from the beginnyng, which two thinges be the onely weapons of your war, wherwith you maintaine all your mischiefe, that is to say, lying and murder: for those whom ye cannot ouercome w^t your lying perswasions, them you kill most cruelly, and then blaspheme & belye them with railyng sentences when they are deade. But all this will not blynd the people of God, nor yet make them any whit the lesse beleue the truth, nor abate their loue from y^e true preachers thereof, yea it is a true signe and token that they are the very disciples of Christ: for he hath sayd, Blessed are ye when men reuile you and say all maner of euill sayings agaynst you for my names sake. Reioyce & be glad, for great is your reward in heauen. And doubtlesse great is that good mans reward in heauen by this time, as your Lordships damnation shall be great in hel, except you repent and surcease from sheddyng innocent bloud. But it is to be feared your hart is hardned as Pharaoes was, seyng that with Iudas ye haue sold and betrayed your maister. Take heed my Lord lest you come to the same ende or a worse then he did. For verily I cānot perceiue how you should escape it long: Therefore say not but a womā gaue you warning if you list to take it. And as for the obtaining of your popish purpose in suppressing the truth. I put you out of doubt, you shall not obtaine it so long as ye go this way to worke as you doe: for verily I beleeeue that you haue lost the harts of 20000. that were ranke papists with in this 12. months.

It is found very true that one holy doctor sayeth, the bloud of the Martyrs, is the seed of the Gospel, when one is put to death, a thousand doth rise for hym. And that this is true, you may well perceiue by the harty loue that the people shewed vnto good M^r. Philpot at his goyng to his death. They went not about to make an Idoll of hym as your adders brood would beare mē in hand, but they worshipped God which gaue such strength to his deare child, to die so constantly for the testimony of his truth, to y^e vtter destruction of that detestable idolatry which your lordship doth most diuelishly maintaine with the force of fire fagots, and sword: yea, & rather then faile, to famish men in prison agayne as ye haue done already. It is reported of your owne tormenters, that the 6. prisoners that you haue in your prison, be put into 6. seuerall places al the day and euery night brought together and set in the stocks. Forsooth my L. this doth get you a foule name all abroad the countrey, and yet all will not helpe your lordships pestilent purpose, but euery way hinder the fame. For Zorobabell will bee founde no lyer, which sayd, The truth should haue victory, you do but striue agaynst the streame and kicke against the pricke, the Lord doth laugh your doyngs to scorne, and will bring all your counsailes and deuises to naugh (as knoweth the Lord God) who of hys great mercy shortly conuert your Lordship, or vtterly cōfound you, and get his name a glory ouer you. Amen.

Your Lordships Oratour, who praieth daily to God that he may rewarde you according to your deeds.

*Anno. 1556. ¶The Story of seuen Martyrs suffryng together at London for the lyke testimony of Christes Gospel.

THE Catholike prelates of the Popes band beyng as yet not satisfied with this their one •eres bloody murderynge of the reuerend, lerned, & principal members of Christes church, (whereof there were now very few, which either were not consumed by most cruel fire, or els for the auoidynge of their pop•sh rage, compelled to flee their natural country) continued still this next yere also, which was an. 1556. in no lesse crueltie towards the more simple & inferior sort of people (I meane in degree, though, God be prayesed, not in stedfastnes) hauing yet sometimes amōgst them such as were both learned and of good estimation, as in continuance of this history shall appeare.

Wherefore (as the first fruites thereof) to beginne this yere withall, about the 27. day of Ianuary were burned in Smithfield at London, these seuen personnes hereafter followyng, to witte:

- Thomas Whittle, Priest.
- Barthelet Greene, Gentleman.
- Iohn Tudson, Artificer.
- Iohn Went, Artificer.
- Thomas Browne.
- Isabel Foster, wyfe.
- Ioane Warren, alias Lashford, Mayd.

All whith seuen as they were burned together in one fire, so were they likewyse all vppon one sort and forme of Articles condemned in one day. Howbeit, forasmuch as the gyfts of God in them were diuers (some more abounding in knowledge then others) their dealyngs wythall were also diuers, as shall be more plainly perceiued in the discoursing of their seuerall processes hereafter folowing. And therefore for the better vnderstandyng hereof, I will first (by the leaue of the Lord) passing ouer their priuate articles and examinations had at sundry tymes in the bishops house, set foorth their generall examinations in the publike Consistorie, vpon the Bishops articles there ministred vnto them, with their aunswers also vnto y^e same, accordyng as they all agreed after one maner and sort together, as here by the words both of the articles and theyr aunswers vnder written, may appeare.

¶The forme and wordes of Boners Articles ministred to the seuen persons aboue mentioned in his Consistorie.

AND first to behold the maner of speach in these bishops sittyng in their maiesty to terrifie the eares of the simple withall, let vs heare the pontificall phrase of this Bishops, beginnyng in this sort.

¶The within written articles, and euery of them, and euery part and parcell of them, we Edmund by the permission of God Bishop of London, do obiect and minister to thee Thomas Whittle, &c of our meere office▪ for thy soule health, & for reformation of thyne offences and misdemeanours, nourishyng thee in the vertue of obedience, and vnder the paynes of both censures of the Church, and also of other paynes of the lawe, to aunswere fully, playnely, and truely to all the same.

1 First, that thou N. hast firmly, stedfastly, and constātly beleueed in tymes past, and so doest now beleue at this present, that there is here in earth a catholike Church, in the which Catholike Church, the fayth and religion of Christ, is truely professed, allowed, receyued, kept and reteined of all faithfull and true christian people.

*2. Item, that thou the sayd N. in tymes past, hast also beleueed, and so doest beleuee at this present, that there are in the Catholique Church seuen Sacramentes, instituted & ordeined by God, and by the consent of the holy church allowed, approoued, receiued, kept, and reteyned.

3. Item, that thou the sayd N. wast in tymes past baptised in the fayth of the sayd catholike church,* professyng by thy godfather and godmothers, the fayth and Religion of Christ and the obseruation thereof, renouncing there the deuil & all hys pomps and works, and wast by the said sacrament of baptisme incorporate to the catholike church, & made a faythfull member thereof.

4. Item, that thou the sayd N. commyng to the age of 14. yeares, and so to the age of discretion, didst not depart from the sayd profession and fayth, nor diddest mislike any part of the same fayth or doyngs, but diddest like a faythfull Christian person abide and continue in all the same, by the space of certayne yeares, ratifieng and confirmyng all the same.

5. Item, that thou the sayd N. notwithstanding the premisses, hast of late, that is to say, within these two yeares last past, within the City & dioces of London, swarued at the lest way from some part of the sayd catholike faith and religion: and among other thyngs thou hast misliked and earnestly spoken agaynst the sacrifice of the Masse,* the sacrament of the altar, and the vnity of the church, raisyng & malignyng on the authoritie of the See of Rome, and the fayth obserued in the same.

6 Item, that thou the sayd N. hast heretofore refused, & doest refuse at this present to be reconciled againe to the vnitie of the church,* knowledging and confessing the autoritie of the sayd See of Rome to be lawfull.

7 Item, that thou the sayd N. mislikyng the sacrifice of the Masse, and the sacrament of the aultar, hast refused to come to thy parish Church to heare Masse,* and to receyue the sayd Sacrament, and hast also expresly sayd, that in the sayd Sacrament of the aultar, there is not the very bodye and bloud of our Sauour Christ, really, substantially, & truly, but hast affirmed expresly that the Masse is idolatry and abhomination, and that in the Sacrament of the aultar there is none other substance, but only materiall bread, and materiall wyne, which are tokens of Christes body & bloud onely, and that the substance of Christes bodye and bloud is in no wyse in the sayd Sacrament of the aultar.

8 Item, that thou the sayd N. beyng conuented before certaine Iudges or Commissioners, for thy disorder herein, and beyng found obstinate, wilfull, and heady, wast by their commaundement sent vnto me and my prison, to be examined by me, & Processe to be made against thee for thy offence herein.

9. Item, that all and singuler the premisses haue bene, and be true and manifest, and thy selfe not onely infamed and suspected therof, but also culpable therein: and by reason of the same, thou wast and art, of the iurisdiction of me Edmund B. of London, and before me accordingly, to the order of the Ecclesiasticall lawes, art to be conuented, and also by me to be punished and reformed.

¶Here follow likewyse their aunsweres in a generall, made to the Articles aboue rehearsed.

¶And first concernyng the first Article, in beleeuynge there is a Catholike Church.

TO the first Article they altogether agreeynge,* affirmed the same to bee true: Iohn Tudson, and Thomas Browne, further addyng, that the Church of England as it was at that present vsed, was no part of the true catholike Church.

¶Concernyng the second Article, that there be in the Church seuen Sacraments.

To the second Article they aunswered,* that they acknowledged but onely two Sacraments in Christes catholike Church, that is to say, Baptisme and the Supper of the Lord: Iohn Went and Tudson affirmyng that the sacrament of the aultar as it is vsed, is an Idoll, and no sacrament at all.

¶Concernyng the third Article, that they were first baptised in the fayth of the Catholike Church, professing by their Godfathers the profession of the same. &c.

To the third article they agreed and confessed all to be true,* that they were baptised in the fayth of Christ and of the church then taught: and afterward duryng the time of K. Edward the vj. they hearyng the Gospel preached, and the truth opened, followed the order of religion & doctrine then vsed and set foorth in the raigne of the sayd kyng Edward.

Concernyng the fourth Article that they for the space of certayne yeares did ratifie or allowe, and not departe from any part of the profession of the same Church.

To this fourth Article they graunted also and agreed: Iohn Went addyng moreouer,* that about seuen yeares past, he then beyng about twenty yeares of age, began to mislyke certayne thyngs vsed in the Church of England, as the ministration of the Sacrament of the aultare: likewyse all the ceremonies of the sayd Church, and dyd lykewyse at that present tyme mislike the same as they were vsed, although hys godfathers and godmothers promised for hym the contrary.

Iohn Tudson added also in much like sort, and sayde, that when he came to the yeres of discretion, that is, about nine yeares past, beyng about eightene yeares of age, he Page 1845 did mislike the doctrine and religion then taught and set forth in the church of England, sauynge in king Edwards tyme, in whose tyme the Gospell was truly set forth: and further sayde, that the doctrine set forth in the Queenes raigne,* was not agreeable to Gods word, nor yet to the true catholike church that Christ speaketh of, &c.

Isabell Foster with other graunted, adding likewyse, and saying to the sayde foure Articles, that she continued in the same faith and Religion which she was baptised in, after she came to the yeres of discretion as other common people did: howbeit, blindly and without knowledge, till the raigne of King Edward the sixt: at which tyme shee hearing the Gospel truly preached and opened to the people, receyued thereupon the fayth and religion then taught and set forth. &c.

¶Concernyng the fift Article, that they of late yeares haue swarued and gone away, misliked, and spokē agaynst the profession of the same Church, at least some part thereof, especially, the sacrifice of the Masse, the Sacrament of the altar, and the authoritie of the Church of Rome.

To the fift article, they aunswered the same to be true, accordyng to the contents thereof: Tho. Whittle addyng moreouer, that he had swarued & gone away, not in whole but in part, not from the whole Catholike Church, but frō the church of Rome, in speakyng agaynst the masse the sacrifice thereof, and the Sea of Rome.

*Ioane Lashford (aliâs Ioane Warne) grauntyng with the other the sayd Article, addeth moreouer, that she neuer hitherto swarued or went awaye, nor yet doth, from any part of Christs catholike faith and religion: but saith, that from the tyme she was xj. yeres of age, shee hath misliked the sacrifice of the masse, the sacrament of the altar, and the authoritie of the See of Rome, with the doctrine thereof, because they be agaynst Christes catholike church, and the right fayth of the same.

Bartlet Greene answering with the other to this Article, addeth, & saith, that he swarued not from the Catholike fayth, but only from the church of Rome, &c.

¶Concernyng the sixt article, that they refuse to be reconciled to the vnitie of the sayd Church of Rome.

To the 6. article they aunswer and confesse the same to be true, rendering the cause thereof, because (say they) the same church and doctrine therein set forth and taught, disagreeeth from the vnitie of Christes word, and the true catholike fayth, &c.

Whereunto Bartlet Greene answered▪ that he is contented to be reconciled to the vnitie of Christes Catholike church, but not of the church of Rome.

In lyke maner added also Iohn Went.

¶Concernyng the seuenth Article, that they refuse to come to heare Masse, and to receyue the sayde Sacrament, callyng it an Idol, &c.

To the seuenth Article, they aunswer and confesse the contents thereof to be true, geuyng withall the reason and cause of this their so doying, for that the masse with the sacrament thereof, as it was then vsed and set foorth in the Church of England, is dissonant to the word & teachyng of the Gospell. &c.

Iohn Went furthermore said, as concerning the masse, that he beleueth no lesse, but the masse which he calleth the supper of the Lord,* as it is now vsed in the realm of England, is naught, full of Idolatry, and against gods worde so farre as he seeth it: howbeit, he sayd y^t since the Queens coronation, by chance he hath bene present where y^e Masse hath bene sayd, whereof he is sory.

Isabel Foster also answering to the sayd articles with the other before, confessed moreouer, that since Queene Maries raigne she hath not heard Masse, nor receiued the sacrament, but hath refused to come in place where it was ministred: for she knoweth no such sacrament to bee. And beyng demanded of her beliefe in the same, she sayth, that there is but onely materiall bread, and material wine, and not the substance reall of the body of Christ in the same sacrament: for so she hath bene taught to beleue by the preachers in the tyme of K. Edward, whom she beleeueth to haue preached the truth in that behalfe.

¶Concerning the 8. Article, that they were sent by the Commissioners to the B. to be examined and imprisoned.*

To the 8. Article they grant the same, and the contents thereof to be so.

Thom. Whittle, addyng and affirmyng that the Lord Chancellor that then was, sent hym vp to the Bish. there present.

Bartlet Greene added, that he was sent vp to the sayd B. but for no offence herein articulate.

Iohn Went sayd that D. Story, Quene Maries commissioner examined hym vpon the Sacrament, & because he denied the reall presence, he presented this Examine to the bishop.

Iohn Tudson likewise examined by M. Cholmly and D. Story, vpon the same matters, and for not comyng to the Church, and accused by the same, because he would not agree to them, was sent to the B.

Tho. Browne also sayde, that he, for not commyng to the church of S. Brides, was brought by the Constable to the B. &c.

Ioane Warne confessed that she was sent by Doctour Story to the Bishoppe of London,* about twelue weekes agoe, since which tyme shee hath continued with the sayd Bishop.

¶ Concernyng the 9. Article.

To the 9. Article they confesse and say, that as they beleue the premisses before by them confessed to be true: so they deny not the same to be manifest, and that they bee of the iurisdiction of London.

And thus hauyng expressed their Articles, with their answers iointly made vnto the same, yet remayneth further more fully now to discourse the stories & handlyng of all the 7. aforesayd Martyrs seuerally and particularly by themselues, first beginning with Tho. Whittle.

☛ The history of all these 7. Martyrs, particularly described in order here followeth, & first of Tho. Whittle, who first recanting, then returning agayne with great constancy and fortitude, stode to the defence of Christes doctrine agaynst the Papists, to the fire.

IN the story of M. Philpot, mention was made before, of a married Priest,* whom he found in the Colehouse at hys first commyng thither, in heauines of mynd and great sorow, for recantyng the doctrine which hee had taught in K. Edwards dayes, whose name was Thom. Whittle of Essex: and thus lyeth his story. This Tho. Whittle after he had bene expelled from the place in Essex where he serued, went abroad where he might, now here and there as occasion was ministred, preachyng and sowyng the Gospel of Christ. At length beyng apprehended by one Edmund Alabaster, in hope of reward & promotion,* whiche he miserably gaped after, he was brought first as prisoner before the B. of Winchester, who then was fallen lately sicke of his disease, whereof not long after hee dyed most straungely. But the apprehender for his profered seruice, was highly checked & rated of the B. askyng if there were no man vnto whome he might bring such Rascals, but to him? Hence (quoth he) out of my sight thou varlet, what doest thou trouble me with such matters? The greedy cormorant beyng thus defeated of his desired pray, yet thinking to seek and to hunt further, caried his prisoner to the B. of London, with whom what an euill messe of hādling this Whittle had, and how he was by the B. all to beaten & buffeted about the face, by this his owne narration in a letter sent vnto his friend, manifestly may appeare.

Upon Thursday which was the x. of Ianuary, the B. of London sent for me Thom. Whittle minister out of the porters lodge,* where I had bene all night lying vpon the earth, vpō a pallet where I had as painful a night of sicknes as euer I had, God be thanked. And when I came before hym, he talked with me many thyngs of the sacrament so grossely, as is not worthy to be rehearsed. And amongst other thynges he asked me if I would haue come to masse that mornyng if he had sent for me. Whereunto I answered, that I would haue come to hym at hys cōmandement, but to your Masse (sayd I) I haue small affectiō. At which aunswer he was displeased sore,* & sayd I should be fedde with bread and water. And as I followed hym through the great hall, he turned backe and beat me with his fist, first on the one cheeke, and then on the other, as the signe of my beatyng did many dayes appeare. And then he led me into a little salthouse, where I had no straw nor bed, but lay two nightes on a table, and slept soundly, I thanke God.

Then vpon the Friday next after,* I was brought to my L. and he then gaue me many fayre words, and said he would be good to me. And so he goyng to Fulham, committed me to Doct. Harpsfield, that he and I in that after noone should common together, and drewe out certayne Articles, whereunto if I would subscribe, I shoulde bee dismissed. But D. Harpsfield sent not for me til night, and then perswaded me very sore to forsake my opinions. I answered I held nothing but the truth,* & therfore I could not so lightly turne therefrom. So I thought I should at y^e time haue had no more ado: but he had made a certaine bill, whiche the Register pulled out of his bosom, & red it. Page 1846 The bill in deed was very easily made, and therefore more daungerous: for the effect therof was to detest all errours and heresies against the sacrament of the aultar, and other sacramentes, & to beleue the fayth of the catholicke church, and liue accordingly.

¶The copy of this bill here mentioned, if it please the gētle reader to peruse, so as it came to our hands we haue hereunto adioyned, written and conteined in theyr owne wordes, as foloweth to be sene.

¶The Bill of submission offered to Thomas Whittell to subscribe.

I Thomas Whittell Prieste, of the Dioces of London, knowledge and confesse with my mouth agreeing wyth my hart before you reuerend father in God Edm. bishop of London my Ordinary,* that I do detest and abhorre all maner of heresies and errours agaynst the Sacrament of the aultar, or any of the Sacramentes of the Church, whiche heresies and errours haue heretofore bene condemned in any wise by the catholicke church: and I do protest and declare by these presents that I do both now hold, and also entēd by gods grace alwayes hereafter to hold, obserue and keepe in all poyntes the Catholicke fayth and beliefe of Christes Church, according as this church of England being a member of the sayd Catholicke Church doth now professe and keepe, and in no wise to swerue, decline or go from the sayd faith during my naturall life, submitting my selfe fully and wholly to you reuerend father my sayd Ordinarye in all thinges concerninge my reformation and amendement at all times. In witnesse whereof I the sayde Thomas Whittell Prieste haue hereunto subscribed my name, written. &c.

*To this Bill I did in deed set to my hand, being much desired and counselled so to do, and the flesh being alwaies desirous to haue libertye. I considered not throughly the inconuenience that might come thereupon: and respite I desired to haue had, but earnestlye they desired me to subscribe. Now when I had so done, I had litle ioy thereof. For by and by my mind and conscience tolde me by Gods worde that I had done euill by such a sleighty meanes to shake of the sweete Crosse of Christ, and yet it was not my seking, as God he knoweth, but altogether came of them. O the crafty subtlety of Sathan in his members. Let euery man that God shall deliuer into theyr hands, take good heede, and cleaue fast to Christ: for they will leaue no corner of his conscience vnsought, but will attempt all guilefull and subtle meanes to corrupt him, to fall both frō God and his trueth. But yet let no man dispayre of Gods help: for Peter did fall and rise agayne. And Dauid sayeth: A righteous man though he fall, he shall not bee cast away: for the Lorde vpholdeth him with his hande. For I for my part haue felt my infirmities, and yet haue I found Gods present helpe and comfort in time of neede, I thanke hym therefore.

The night after I had subscribed, I was sore greeued, and for sorrowe of conscience coulde not sleepe. For in the deliuerance of my body out of bondes, whiche I mighte haue had, I could finde no ioy nor comfort, but still was in my conscience tormented more and more, being assured by Gods spirit and his word, that I through euill counsell & aduisement had done amisse. And both with disquietnesse of minde and with my other cruell handeling, I was sickly, lying vpon the ground when the keeper came: and so I desired him to pray Doctour Harpsfield to come to me, and so he did.

And when he came, and the Register with him, I told him that I was not well at ease, but especially I told him I was greued very much in my conscience and minde because I had subscribed. And I sayd that my conscience had so accused me, through the iust iudgement of God and hys word, that I had felt hell in my conscience, and Sathan ready to deuoure me: and therefore I pray you M. Harpsfield (sayd I) let me haue the bill agayne, for I wyll not stande to it. So he gentlye commaunded it to be fetched, and gaue it mee, and suffered mee to pull out my name, whereof I was right glad when I had so done, although death should folow, And hereby I had experience of gods prouidence and mercy towards me, who trieth his people, and suffereth them to fall, but not to be lost: for in the midst of this temptation and trouble he gaue me warning of my deed, and also deliuered me, his name be prayd for euermore Amen.

Neither deuill nor cruell tyrant can plucke any of Christes sheepe out of his hand. Of the which flock of Christes sheepe I trust vndoubtedly I am one by meanes of hys death and bloudshedding,* which shall at the last day stand at his right hand, and receiue with other his blessed benediction. And now being condemned to dye, my conscience and minde, I prayse God is, quiet in Christ, and I by hys grace am very well willing and content to geue ouer this body to the death for the testimony of his truth & pure religion, agaynst Antichrist and all his false Religion & doctrine. They that report otherwise of me, speake not truely. And as for Fountayne, I saw not him all that while.

By me Thomas Whittell Minister.

¶Concerning the troubled mind of this Godly man, and tearing of his name out of the bill, here followeth the report of the same, written in the letters both of the sayde Harpsfield, and also of Iohnson the Register, beyng then present thereat, and reporters of the same vnto the bishop, as in theyr letters hereto annexed is to be sene.

The Copy of Nich. Harpsfieldes Letter, touching Mayster Whittell, written to Boner Byshop of London.

PLEaseth your good Lordship to vnderstand, that yesterday I dined with my Lord of Exceter,* who soon after my first cōming vnto him, asked me what newes. I answered none but good, that I had heard. No sayth he? Why, it is a rumour in the City, that to'morowe the Queenes Grace will take her iourney towards the king. I aunswered, that I thought it not to bee any whit true, but an inuention of Heretickes: yea and further sayeth he, there is report made abroad of my Lorde our Mayster, that he is in discomfort, and therefore will suffer no man to come vnto him. When I heard thus much, I began to laugh, and declare how vntrue this report was, so that my Lord (who before was very sad) afterward knowing the truth, reioyced much to heare that all was wel with your lordship, and desired me to do his harty commendations to your Lordship.

One of my Lord of Penbrokes retinue a very handsome mā, and as farre as I can yet learne Catholicke, is a suter to your lordship to haue licence to erect a schoole: and the order which he intēdeth to vse, is cōteined in this printed paper, which I send here in inclosed to your Lordship. I would be gladde for my Lorde of Penbrokes sake that he vnderstood, that vppon my motion your Lordship were content he should teach as he intendeth. Mayster Iohnson and I haue trauelled with the Prieste, and he hath subscribed his name to this draughte whiche is herein inclosed, and hath promised he will stand to the same before your Lordship.

When I had written thus much, sodenly came tydings to me that Iordanis conuersus est retrorsum.* Cluney comming to the Priest, found him lying prostrate, & groning as though he should haue dyed forthwith. Then Cluney tooke him vppe, and set hym vpon a stoole, and came to me and told me of this reuell. It chaūced that M. Iohnson was with me, and we went to this fond hereticke & fōūd him lying all a long, holding his hands vp, & looking hypocritically towards heauen. I caused Thomas More & Cluney to set him on the stoole, and with much adoe at length he tolde me that Sathan had bene with him in the night, and tolde him that he was damned, and weeping he prayed M. Iohnson and me to see the bill whereunto he subscribed, and when he sawe it, he tare out his name è libro scilicet viuientium. Me thinketh by him he will needes burne a Fagot, neither is there any other likelihood of the young woman. I haue enquired of the two persons which sue to haue a licence to eat flesh.* And the woman of Christ Church is in deed very much diseased, and hath bene long diseased, and she and her husband both Catholicke. Of the other yet I canne learne nothing. Thus Iesus euermore preserue your good Lordship, and my Mistres your Lordshippes sister, with all yours. This present Saturday.

Your Lordships most bounden seruaunt Iohn Harpsfield.

¶Here foloweth an other letter of Robert Iohnson Register, touching Thomas Whittell, written to Boner Bishop of London.

MY bounden duety premised, pleaseth your Lordshyp to vnderstande that this laste Fridaye in the after noone,* Mayster Archdeacon of London did diligently trauell with Syr Thomas Whittell I being present, and perceiuing his conformity, as outwardlye appeared, deuised a submission, and hee being content therewith did subscribe the same. But now this saterday morning Mayster Archdeacon and I, vpon Cluneys report, declaring that he fayned himselfe to be extracted of his senses, went vnto hym, to whom he declared that Sathan in the night time appeared vnto him, and said that he was damned, for that he had done against his conscience in subscribing the said submission, with other like wordes. &c. And thē Mayster Archdeacon at his earnest request, deliuered vnto him the submissiō. And thereupon the sayd Whittell did teare out his subscription, made in the foot of the same, as Page 1847 your Lordshippe shall perceiue by the submission sent now vnto your Lordship by Mayster Archdeacō: wherewith the sayd Whittell was somewhat quieted.

And as touching Ioane Lashford, Mayster Archdeacon didde likewise trauell with her, and shewing her Syr Thomas submission,* which I readde vnto her two times, demaunded if she could bee content to make the like submission, and she desired respite vntill this morning. And beyng nowe eftsoones demaunded, in likewise, sayth, that she will not make any thing in writing, nor put any signe thereunto. Mayster Archdeacon and I entend thy• after noone to examine the sayd Syr Thomas vpon Articles: for as yet there doeth appeare nothing in writing agaynste hym, as knoweth almighty GOD, who preserue your good Lordshyp in prosperity long with honour to endure. From London thys Saturday.

By your Lordships dayly bedesman, and bounden seruaunt, Robert Iohnson.

¶The Condemnation, Death, and Martyrdome of Thomas Whittell.

Concerning the woordes and aunsweres of the sayde Thomas Whittell at his laste examination before the Bishop,* vpon the xiiij. day of Ianuary, the yere aboue expressed, Boner with his other fellow Bonerlinge• sitting in his Consistory at after noone, first called forth Thomas Whittell, with who he began in effect as foloweth: because ye be a Priest (sayth he) as I and other Bishops here bee, and did receiue the order of Priesthooe after the ri•e and fourme of the Catholicke Church, ye shall not thinke but I will minister iustice as well vnto you, as to other. And then the sayd Boner in further communication did charge hym: that when in tymes past he had sayde Mas•e according to the order then vsed, the same Whittell nowe of late had rayled and spoken agaynste the same, saying that it was Idolatry and abomination. Whereunto Thomas Whittell aunswering agayne sayd,* that at such times as he so sayde Masse, he was then ignoraunt. &c. adding moreouer that the eleuation of the Sacramente at the Masse geueth occasion of Idolatry to them that be ignoraunt & vnlearned.

After this the bishop making hast to the Articles (whiche in all his examinations euer he harped vpon) came to this Article:* That thou wast in times past baptised in the fayth of the catholicke church.

To this the sayd Whittell inferred agayne: I was baptised in the fayth of the catholicke church, although I did forsake the Church of Rome. And ye my Lord do call these heresies that be no heresies, and do charge me therewith as heresies, and ye ground your selfe vpon that religion whiche is not agreable to Gods word. &c.

Then the sayd victorious souldiour and seruant of our Sauior, constant in the verity receiued and professed, was agayne admonished, and with perswasions entreated by the bishop: who because he would not agree vnto y^e same, the bishop forthwith proceeded, first to his actuall degradation, that is, to vnprist him of all his priestly trinkets, and clarkly habite. The order and maner of whiche theyr popish and most vayne degradation, before in the storye of Bishop Hooper pag. 1435. is to be sene. Then Whittell in the midst of the ceremonies,* whē he saw them so busy in disgrading him after theyr father the Popes Pontifical fashion, sayd vnto them: Paule and Titus had not so much ado with theyr priestes and bishops. And farther speaking to the bishop,* he sayd vnto him: My Lord, your Religion standeth most with the church of Rome, and not with the catholicke church of Christ.

The Bishop after this, according to his accustomed & formall proceedings, assayed him yet agayne with words, rather then with substantiall arguments, to conforme him to his Religion. Who then denying so to doe, sayd: As for your religion. I cannot be perswaded that it is accordyng to Gods worde.

The Bishop then asked what fault he found in the administration of the Sacrament of the Aultar.

*Whittell aunswered and sayde, it is not vsed according to Christes institution, in that it is priuately and not openlye done: And also for that it is ministred but in one kinde to the lay people, which is agaynst Christes ordinaunce. Farther, Christ commaunded it not to be eleuated nor adored: For the adoration and eleuation cannot be approued by Scripture.

Well, quoth Boner, my Lords here and other learned men haue shewed great learning for thy cōuersion, wherfore if thou wilt yet returne to the fayth and religion of the catholicke Church, I will receiue thee thereunto, and not cōmit thee to the secular power. &c. To make short, Whittell strengthened with the grace of the Lord, stood strong & vnmoueable in that he had affirmed. Wherfore the sentēce being readde, the next day folowing he was committed to the secular power, and so in few dayes after brought to the fire with the other sixe aforenamed, sealing vp the testimony of his doctrine with his bloud, which he willingly and chearefully gaue for witnes of the truth.

¶Letters of Thomas Whittell.

¶A letter of Thomas Whittell to Iohn Careles prisoner in the kinges bench.

THE peace of God in Christ bee with you continuallye dearely beloued bother in Christ,* with the assistaunce of Gods grace and holy spirit, to the working and perfourming of those thinges which may comfort and edefye hys Church (as ye dayly doe) to the glory of his name, and the encrease of your ioye and solace of Soule in this lyfe, and also your reward in heauen with Christ our Captain, whose faythfull Souldiours ye are in the life to come. Amen.

I haue greatly reioyced (my deare hart) with thanks to God for you, since I haue hearde of your fayth and loue which you bare towards God and his Sayntes, wyth a most godly ardent zeale to the verity of Christs doctrine and religion which I haue heard by the report of manye, but specially by the declaring of that valiaunt captayne in Christes church, that stout Champion in Gods cause, that Spectacle to the worlde, I meane our good brother Philpot, who now lyeth vnder the Aultar and sweetly enioyeth the promised reward. And specially I and my cōdemned fellowes gene thanks to God for your louyng and comfortable Letter in the deepenesse of our trouble (after the flesh) sent vnto vs to the consolation of vs al but most specially to me most sinnefull miser on mine own behalfe, but happye, I hope, through Gods louing kindnesse in Christ shewed vnto me: who suffered me to faynt & fayle through humaine infirmity, by the working of the Archenemy in his sworne Souldiours the Bishops and Priestes:* In whom so liuely appereth the very visage & shape of Sathan, that a man (if it were not preiudice to Gods word) might well affirme them to be Deuils incarnate, as I by experience do speake. Wherefore, who so shall for cōscience matters come in theyr handes, had need of the wylynesse of the Serpent to saue his head, though it be wyth the wounding of his body, and to take diligent heede how he consenteth to theyr wicked writings, or setteth his hād to theyr conueyances.

Sore did they assault me and craftely tempt me to their wicked wayes, or at least to a denegation of my fayth and true opinions, though it were but by colour and dissimulation. And (alas) something they did preuaile. Not that I did any thing at all like theyr opinions and false papisticall religion, or els doubted of the truth wherein I stand, but onely the infirmity of the fleshe beguiled me, desiring liberty by an vnlawfull meanes: GOD lay it not to my charge at that daye, and so I hartely desire you to praye. Howbeit vncertayne I am whether more profite came therby: profite to me, in that God suffered Sathan to buffet me by his foresayd minister of mischief, shewing me myne infirmity, that I should not boast nor reioyce in my selfe but onely in the Lord, who whē he had led me to hell in my conscience through the respect of his feareful iudgementes agaynst me for my fearefulnes, mistrust and crafty cloking in such spirituall and weighty matters (in the which mine agonye and distresse, I founde this olde verse true, Non patitur ludum fama, fides oculus) yet he brought me from thence agayne to the magnifyng of his name, suspecting of flesh and bloude, and consolation of mine owne soule, or els that I might feele disprofite in offending the congregation of God, which peraduenture wil rather adiudge my fall to come of doubtfulnesse in my doctrine and religion, then of humaine imbecility.

Well, of the importune burden of a troubled conscience for denying or dissembling the knowne verity,* I by experiēce could say very much more, which perhaps I will declare by writing, to the warding of other, if God graunte time: For now am I and my felowes ready to go hence euen for Christs cause: Gods name be prayسد who hath hitherto called vs. Pray, I pray you that we maye ende our course with ioy, & at your appoynted time you shall come after. But as the Lorde hath kept you, so will he preserue your life still, to the intent you should labour (as you do) to appease and conuince these vngodlye contentions and controuersies which now do too much raygn, brawling about termes to no edificatiō. God is dishonored, y^e church disquieted, & occasiō to speake euill of the gospel ministred Page 1848 to our aduersaries. But such is the subtlety of sathan that whom he cannot winne with grosse Idolatry in open religion, thē he seeketh to corrupt and deceiue in opinions, in a priuate profession. But here I will abruptly leaue, lest with my rude & simple veyne I should be tedious to you, desiring you (my louing brother) if it shall not seeme grieuous vnto you, to write vnto me & my fellowes yet once agayne, if you haue leysure, and we tune to the same.

*Prouide me M. Philpots 9. examinations for a friend of mine, and I shall pay you therefore, by the leaue of almighty God our heauenly Father, who correcteth all hys deare children in this world, that they should not be damned with the world, and tryeth the fayth of his Saynctes through many tribulations, that being founde constant to the end, he may crowne his owne giftes in them, & in heauen highly reward thē: Whether I trust to goe before, looking for you to followe (my faythfull frend) that we maye sing perpetuall praise to our louing Lord God for victory ouer Sathan and sinne, won for vs by Iesus Christ God and man, our onely and sufficient Sauour and Aduocate, Amen. Farewell and pray in fayth.

Yours Thomas Whittell Minister, and nowe condemned to dye for the Gospels sake. 1556.
Ianuary. 21.

¶All my felowes salute you. Salute all our faythful brethren with you.

¶To my deare frend and brother Iohn Went, and other his prison felowes in Lollardes Tower.

HE that preserued Ioseph prisoner in Egypt, fed Daniel in the Lions denne,* and deliuered Paul, Peter and the Apostles out of prison, vouchsafe of his goodnes to keep, feed, and deliuer you my good brother Went, with the other our fellow souldiors your prison felowes, as may be most to his glory, to your consolatiō, and the edification of his Church.

I cannot but praise God most earnestly, when I heare of your constancy in the fayth and ioye in the crosse of Christ which you now beare and suffer together,* with many other good members of Christ: which is a token that by Christ you are counted worthy the kingdome of God, as Paule sayth. And though the world counteth the yoake and crosse of Christ as a most pernicious and hurtfull thing, yet we which haue tasted how frendly the Lord is, cannot but reioice in this persecution as touching our selues, in as much as the cause for the which we suffer is the Lordes cause, and not ours:* at whose hand if we endure to the end, we shall receiue through his liberall promise in Christ, not onely a greate reward in heauen but also the kingdome of heauen it selfe, & also in the meane season be sure to bee defended and cared for, so that we shall lacke no necessarye thinges, neither a heare of our heades shall perishe without his knowledge. Oh what is he that would mistrust, or not gladly serue so louing a father? O how vnhappy are they that forsake him and put theyr trust in man? But how blessed are they that for his loue and for his holy woordes sake, in these troublesome dayes doe committe theyr soules and bodyes into his handes with wel doing, counting it greater happines and riches to suffer rebuke with Christ and his Church,* thē to enioy the pleasures of this life for a litle short seasō? This crosse that we nowe beare hath bene common to all the faythfull from Abell hitherto,* and shalbe to the end, because the Deuill hauyng great wrath agaynst God and his Christ,* can not abide that hee should for his manifolde mercies bee lauded and magnified, and Christ to be taken and beleued vpon for our onely and sufficient redemer,* Sauour, and aduocate: and therefore, because we will not deny Christ, nor dissemble with out fayth, but openly protest and professe the same before the world, he seeketh by all meanes to styrr vp his wicked members, to persecute and kill the bodies of the true Christians: as S. Iohn sayth, the Deuill shall cast some of you into prison, And Dauid sayth, I beleued, and therefore haue I spoken, but I was sore troubled. This notwithstanding, goe forward deare brethren, as ye haue begon, to fight the Lords battel, considering Christe the Captayne of your warre, who will both fight for you, geue you victorie, and also highlye rewarde your paynes. Consider to your comfort, the notable and chiefe shepherdes and souldiours of Christe, whiche are gone before vs in these dayes, I meane those learned and godly Bishops, Doctours, & other ministers of Gods word: whose fayth and examples we that be inferiours ought to folowe, as S. Paule sayth: Remember them that haue declared vnto you the worde of God,* the ende of whose conuersation see that ye look vpon, and folow theyr faith. The grace & blessing of God, with the ministry of his holy Angels, be with you for euer, Amen. All my prison felowes greeete you.

From the Colehouse this 4. of December,

By your poore brother Thomas Whittell, an vnworthy Minister of Christ, nowe his prisoner for the Gospels sake. Amen.

¶To all the true professors and louers of Gods holy Gospell within the City of London.

THE same faith for the whiche Abraham was counted righteous, and Mary blessed,* the Lorde GOD encrease and make stable in your hartes, my deare and faithfull brethren & sisters of London, for euer and euer, Amen.

Dearely beloued, be not troubled in this heat which is now come amongst you to try you, as though some straunge thing had happened vnto you, but reioyce in as much as ye are partakers of Christes passions, that when his glory appeareth, ye may be mery and glad. &c. Out of these wordes of S. Peter I gather most specially these 4. notes. First,* y^e persecution happeneth to Christes Church for their triall, that is, for the probation and prooffe of their fayth. Which fayth, like as it is knowne with God in the depth of our hartes, so will he haue it made manifest to y^e whole worlde through persecution, that so it may euidently appeare that hee hath such a Church and people vpon earth, which so trusteth in hym and feareth his holy name that no kinde of persecution, paynes, nor death,* shalbe able to separte them from the loue of hym. And thus was Abraham tried, and Iob tempted, that their fayth whiche before laye hid almost in their hartes, might bee made knowne to the whole world to be so stedfast and stronge, that the deuill, naturall loue, nor no other enemie, coulde bee able to bereaue them thereof. Whereby also GOD was to be magnified, who both tryeth his people by many tribulations, and also standeth by them in the midst of their troubles to deliuer them by lyfe or death, as he seeth best: like as he assisted Loth, and deliuered hym out of his enemies handes, Ioseph out of the handes of his Brethren and out of Prison,* Paule from his enemies in Damasco, and the Apostles out of the Stockes and Prison. These with many mo he deliuered to lyfe: And also he deliuered Abell, Eleazar, Steuen, and Iohn Baptist, with other manye by deathe, and hathe also by the tryall of their fayth made them good presidentes and examples to vs and all that come after, to suffer affliction in the like cause as Saynt Iames sayeth: Take, my brethren (sayth he) the prophets for an ensample of suffering aduersity and of long pacience, which spake vnto you in the name of the Lord: beholde we count them happy which endure. Y^e haue heard of the pacience of Iob, and haue knowne what end the Lord made with him, for the Lord is very pitifull and mercifull. Also the Lorde tryeth vs, to let vs see our owne hartes and thoughtes, that no Hypocrisy or Ambitiō deceiue vs, & that the strong in Christ may pray that he fall not but endure to the ende, and that those that fall through fearefull infirmity, might speedely repent and rise agayne with Peter, and also that the weake ones might bewaile theyr weakenes, and crye with Dauid: haue mercy vpon me O Lord, for I am weak: O Lord heale me for all my bones are vexed.*

Of this opening of the heart by persecution, spake holy Simion to Mary Christes mother when he sayde:* the Sworde, that is, the Crosse of persecution shall pearse thy Soule, that the thoughtes of many hartes may be opened. For like as a king that should go to battell, is cōpelled to looke in his cofers what treasure he hath, and also what number and puisaunce of menne and weapons hee hath, so that if he himselfe be vnready and vnarmed to bicker with hys enemye, he surceaseth and taketh truce for a time: euen so wee by persecutions haue our heartes opened that wee maye looke therein to see what fayth in Christ we haue, and what strength to withstand the enemies, and to beare the Crosse, that if we be riche in these treasures, we might reioyce and valiauntly go to Battell: or if we want these things, with all speede to call and crye vppon him which geueth all good giftes to those that aske them. Item, the crosse trieth the good people from the bad, the faythfull from the worldlinges and hipocrites,* and also cleanseth and scoureth the faythfull hartes from all corruption and filthinesse both of the flesh and the spirit. And euen as yron, except it be often scoured, will soone waxe rusty: so except our sinnefull hartes and flesh be often scoured with the whetstone of the Crosse, they will soone corrupt & ouergrowe with the ruste of all filthinesse and sinne. And therefore it is meete and good for vs (as the wise man sayeth) that as gold & siluer are tryed in the fire, so should the hartes of acceptable men be tried in the fornace of aduersity. Abide the triall (deare frendes) that yee may obteyne the Crowne of life. Fighte manfully in this the Lordes cause, that ye may obteyne a glorious victorye here,* and receiue a greate rewarde in heauen hereafter. As yee are called Christians, and woulde be angry to be called Iewes or Turkes, so declare your Christianity by folowing the steps of Christ, whose name ye beare: suffer with hym Page 1849 and for his Gospelles sake, rather then to denye him or to defile your fayth and conscience with false worshipping of Romish religion.

Take vp your Crosse (my deare hartes) now when it is offered you, and go vp with Christ to Ierusalem amōgest the Bishoppes, Priestes, and Rulers if God call you thereto, and they will anone sende you to Caluery: from whence (dying in the cause of the Gospell, wherein our good Preachers and Brethren haue geuen theyr liues) your soules (I warrant you) through Christ Iesu, shall ascend to God that gaue them,* and the body shall come after at the last day, and so shal ye dwell with the Lord for euer in vnspeakeable ioy and blisse. O blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake, as Christes people in this Iewish Englande nowe doth, for theyrs is the kingdome of heauen. O my beloued, set your mindes on this kingdome where Christ our head and king is, considering that as the brute beast tooketh downewardes with the face towardes the earth, so man is made contrariwise with his face looking vppward towardes, the heauens, because his conuersation should be in heauen and heauenlye thinges, and not vpon the earth and earthly thinges, and S. Paule sayth: set your mindes on thinges whiche are aboue,* where Christ is. And agayne he sayth: our conuersation is in heauen, from whence we looke for our Sauour, who will chaunge our vile bodyes, and make them like to his glorious body. Oh y^e glorious estate that we be called vnto.* The Lord preserue vs harmeles to his eternal king'dome through Christ Iesus our Lord. Amen.

The second thing that I note in the foresayde wordes of Peter,* is that he calleth persecution no straunge thinge. And trueth it is: for which of the Prophetes were not persecuted with Christ and his Apostles, and some of them in the end cruelly killed for the truthe sake? Cain killed Abell,* Isaac was persecuted of Ismaell, Iacob was hated of Esau, Ioseph was prisoned and set in the Stockes, the Prophet Esay was cut in two with a Saw, Ieremy was stoned, Micheas was buffeted and fed with bread and water, Helias was sore persecuted, Eleazar, and the woman with her 7. sonnes were cruelly killed. What Christ and the Apostles suffered it is well knowne. So that by many tribulations as (Paul sayth) we must enter into the kingdome of Heauen. All the holy Prophetes, Christ and hys Apostles suffered such afflictions not for euill doing, but for preaching Gods word, for rebuking the world of sinne, and for theyr fayth in Iesus Christ. This is the ordinance of GOD (my Frendes) this is the high way to heauen, by corporall death to eternall life: as Christ sayth, he that heareth my woordes and beleueueth in him that sent mee,* hath eternall life, and shall not come into iudgement, but is escaped from death to life. Let vs neuer feare death, which is killed by Christ, but beleue in him and liue for euer, as Paule sayth: There is no damnation to them that are in Christ Iesu, which walke not after the fleshe, but after the Spirit. And agayne Paule sayth: Death where is thy styng? * Hell where is thy victory? Thankes be to God which hath geuen vs victory through Iesu Christe. Besides this, ye haue seene and dayly doe see the blood of your good Preachers and Brethren which hath bene shed in the Gospelles cause in this sinnefull Sodome, this bloody Ierusalem, this vnhappy City of London. Lette not theyr blood be forgotten, * nor the blood of your good Bishop Ridley, who like a Shepheard, to your comforte & exāple, hath geuen his life for his sheepe, good S. Paule sath: remember them that haue spoken to you the word of God, and looke vpon the end of theyr conuersation, and folow theyr fayth. *

The Deuill euer stirreth vp false teachers, as he hath done now ouer all Englande, as Peter, Paule and Iude prophesied it should be, to poyson and kill our soules with the false doctrine. And where he fayleth of his purpose that way, then mooueth he his members to persecute the seely carcasses of the Saynctes, because they will not denye nor dissemble theyr pure fayth in our liuing Christ, and confesse a dead breadye Christ, and honour the same as Christ God and man, contrary to Gods commaūdement. This is the working of Sathan, * who knowing hys owne iust damnation, woulde all mankinde to be partakers wyth him of the same: * such a mortall hatred beareth he agaynst GOD and his people. And therefore when this wicked Tempter coulde not kill Christe with subtile tentation to fall downe and worship him, * then he styrred vp his seruantes the Bishops and Pharises to kill his body, wherby notwithstanding the Deuill loste his title and interest whiche hee had to mans soule, and man by his precious passion and death was raunsomed from the Deuil, death and Hell, to immortality & life euerlasting: and so when Sathan thought to haue wonne all in killing of Christ, he lost all: and so shall he doe in vs if wee abide constaunt• and strong in the fayth of our Lorde and Sauour Iesus Christe vnto the ende. God graunte it for his mercyes sake in Christ. Blessed are all they that put theyr trust in him, Amen.

Wherefore my hartely beloued brethren and sisters (be of good comfort through Iesus Christ: for he that is in vs, is stronger then he that is in the world. Therefore draw ye neare to God, and he will drawe neare to you. Resist the Deuill and he will (as Iames sayth) flee frō you. Beware of the leuen of the Phariseis. Touch not pitch, * least ye be defiled therewith. Eate no Swines flesh, for it is agaynst the law: I meane, defile not your selues neither inwardly nor outwardly with this false and wicked religion of Antichrist: for it is nothing els but pitche and Swines fleshe. Beware of the beastes marke least ye drinke of the cup of Gods wrath. If God haue geuen you knowledge & faith, * dissemble not therewith. Denye not the knowne veritye before men, least Christ deny you before his Father. * Come away from Babilon, as Iohn biddeth you, * and touche no vncleane thinge, but separate your selues from the company of the vngodly, as Paule commaundeth you. * Whatsoeuer ye haue done amisse heretofore, now repent & amend, for with the Lorde there is mercy and plenteous redemption.

The thirde thing and note which I gather out of the forsayd wordes of Peter, is this, that he sayth: * Reioyce because ye are pertakers of Christes Passion. Our sufferinges (my welbeloued) are Christes sufferinges: and that iniury that is done to vs for his sake, he reckoneth it to be done to himselfe, as he sayd to Paule: Saul, Saul, * why persecutest thou me? Therefore we ought to reioyce in our sufferinges, as Paule writeth: whiche we suffer with Christ and one with another, as Peter sayeth, and so to fulfill that whiche is behinde of the Passions of Christ in our flesh: whiche Christ hath by his Passion, * fully redeemed and saued vs in his owne person: how be it hys electe must suffer with hym and for him vnto the worldes ende, that he may be glorified in them, and they thereby corrected and cleansed from sinne in this worlde, and bee made more meete Temples for the holy Ghoste,* and also obteyne a greate rewarde in heauen for theyr suffering for righteousnesse sake, according to his promise. And therefore I saye (my Brethren) reioyce in the Lorde alwayes, and agayne I say reioyce.* Let vs reioyce in the Crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ, whereby the world is crucified to vs, and we to it.

And why shoulde wee so greatly reioyce in the Crosse of Christ, which we now suffer? * Because (sayth Peter) when his glory appeareth, we may be mery and glad. And this is the fourth note that I gather out of his wordes aboue written: Wherein is set out the reward of suffering, not to be had in this worlde: but at his comming to iudgement when we shalbe rayseed agayne: and then shal they that haue sowne in teares, reape in ioy, as Christ sayth: Blessed are they that weepe here, for they shall laughe.* Blessed are ye when men hate you, and thrust you out of theyr companye, raylinge on you, and abhorring your name as an euill thing for the sonne of mans sake, reioyce ye in that day and be gladde, for your reward is greate in Heauen.

Wherefore (my dearely beloued) through the hope of this heauenly ioy and rewarde, which he that can not lye hath promised (whiche ioye is so greate that no eare hath heard, no eye hath sene, nor the hart can thinke, where we shall dwell for euer in the heauenly City, the celestiall Ierusalem, in the presence of God the Father, & Iesus Christ our Mediatour, as Paul sayth, and in the company of innumerable Angels, and with the spirites and soules of all faythfull and iust men) reioyce and be glad: and seing ye be called to so great glory,* see that ye make your election and vocation sure by good workes,* and specially by sufferinge aduersitye for the Gospelles sake: for it is geuen vs of GOD (sayth Paule) not onely to beleue in Christ, but also to suffer for his sake. Continue in prayer, and praye for me that I may ende my course with ioy. Haue Brotherly loue amongst your selues, whiche is a token that ye be Christes Disciples.* Edify and comfort one an other in the word of the Lord, and the God of peace and loue be with you alwayes. Amen. For your liberality and kindnesse shewed vpon the Prisoners and afflicted people of GOD in thys time of persecution, the Lorde wyll reward you when he commeth to reward euery man according to theyr deedes, and will not leaue a cuppe of colde water bestowed vpon his faythfull people, vnrewarded.* God make you riche in all grace, that ye alwayes hauyng sufficient maye be riche vnto all manner of good woorkes. The Grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, the loue of GOD, Page 1850 and the felowship of the holy ghost be with you alwayes. Amen.

Your brother now in bondes for the Gospell, Thomas Whittell.

To my louing and faythfull brother, Iohn Careles Prisoner in the kinges bench.

*The same fayth for the which Abraham was accounted iust & Mary blessed, whereby also all iust men liue the Lord GOD our louing father encrease and stablish in you and me, to the obtaining of eternal life in our alone and sweet Sauior Iesus Christ. Amen.

I can not worthely and sufficiently prayse GOD (my hartely beloued brother) for the consolation and ioy that I receiued by reason of your louing letters, repenting me much that I being so long so neare you, did not enterprise to styrre vppe familiarity and communication betweene vs by writing, to mutuall consolation in Christe. For what is there vpon earth wherein to reioyce (where all thinges are transitory and vayne, yea manne himselfe, respecting this life) but, as Dauid sayeth, the Saynctes that dwell vpon the earth,* and such as excell in vertue? But here now I consider, that if the felowshippe, loue, and ioye of faythfull men and children of God being as wee nowe be in double bondage, the body within clay walles, and the soule within these frail earthly bodies, be so greate and comfortable: how vnspeakeable will these ioyes be, when we shall be deliuered from all corruption into the glorious liberty of the sonnes of God? Where we shalbe present together continuallye in our glorified bodies,* beholding the face of our father presently (whō now we see but in the glasse of fayth) with his deare sonne Christ our redemer & brother, and the blessed company of Aungels and all faithfull sauēd soules.

Of the incomparable good thinges and heauenlye treasures layd vp for vs in heauen by Christ Iesu. For the obtaining wherof, we ought to set light by all temporall griefes and transitorye afflictions so much the more, in that our good God is faythfull & will not suffer vs to be tempted aboue our strength, & that name'ly in the end of our life, when the tree where it falleth, lieth styll, as the preacher sayth: when euery one, causa sua dormit, & causa sua resurget: for els before the ende he suffereth his sometime to fall,* but not finally to peryshe: as Peter sinked vpon the Sea, but yet was not drowned, and sinned grievouslye vpon the land thorow infirmity denying his Mayster, but yet found mercy: for the righteous falleth oftentimes. And Christes holye Apostles are taught to •ay, remitte nobis debita nostra. Yea though the righteous fall, sayth Dauid, he shall not be cast away, for the Lord vpholdeth him with his hand. Oh the bottomlesse mercy of God to'wardes vs miserable sinners. He vouchsafe to plant in my heart, true repentaunce and fayth, to the obtaining of remission of all my sinnes in the mercies of God and merites of Christ his sonne, and therto I pray you say, Amen.

Oh my hartely beloued, it griueth me to see the spoyle & hauocke that Saule maketh with the congregation of Christe: but what remedy? This is Gods will and ordinaunce, that his people shall here both be punished in the fleshe, and tryed in theyr fayth, as it is written: Many are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord deliuereth them out of all: for by a strait path and narrowe doore must we enter. Whether? Into the ioyfull kyngdome of heauen: therefore blessed are you, and other that suffer persecution for Christes sake, for the professing of the same. Pray for me & my felowes (good brother) that we may fight a good fight, that we may keepe the fayth, and ende our course with ioyfull gladnesse, for now the time of our deliuerance is at hand. The Lord guide, defend and keep vs and you, and al his people in our iourney, that we may safely through a shorte death passe, to that long lasting life.

Farewell my deare and louing brother and felowe souldiour in Christ: farewell (I say) in him: who receiue our soules in peace when they shall depart from these tabernacles, and he graunte vs a ioyfull resurrection, and a mery meeting at the last day, & continuall dwelling together in his eternall heauenlye kingdome, through Iesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

Yours with my poore prayer, other pleasure can I do you none, Thomas Whittell, Minister.

To my deare brethren M. Filles and Cutbert.

MY deare and welbeloued brethren in Christ, Mayster Filles and Cutbert,* I wish you all welfare of soule & body. Welfare to the soule, is repentance of sinne, faythfull affiaunce in Christ Iesus,

& a godly life. Welfare to the body, is the health of the same, with all necessary thinges for this bodely life. The soule of man is immortall, and therefore ought to be well kept, least immortality to ioy, should turne to immortality of sorow. As for the body, be it neuer so well kept and much made of, yet shortly by nature will it perish and decay: But those that are engrafted & incorporated into Christe by true fayth, feeling the motion of Gods holy spirite, as a pledge of theyr election and inheritaunce, exciting and styrring them, not onely to seek heauenly thinges, but also to hate vice, and embrace vertue, will not onely doe these thinges, but also if need requyre, will gladly take vp theyr Crosse and folow their capteine, their king,* & theyr Sauior Iesus Christ (as his poore afflicted church of England now doth) agaynst that false and Antichristian doctrine and religion now vsed, & specially that blasphemous Masse,* wherein Christs supper and holy ordinaunce is altogether peruerterd & abused contrarye to his institutiō, & to Paules procedinges: so that, that which they haue in theyr Masse, is neither Sacrament of Christ,* nor yet sacrifice for sinne, as the Priestes falsely pretend. It is a sacrament, that is, as S. Augustine saith,* a visible sign of inuisible grace, when it is ministred to y^e communicants according to Christes example, and as it was of late yeres in this realm. And as for sacrifice, there is none to be made now for sinne: for Christ with one sacrifice hath perfited for euer those that are sanctified.

Beware of false Religion, and mens vayne traditiōs, and serue God with reuerence and godlye feare according to the doctrine of his Gospell, whereto cleaue ye that yee may be blessed,* though of wicked men ye bee hated and accursed. Rather drink of the cup of Christ with his church, then of the cuppe of that rosecoloured whore of Babilon, which is full of abominations. Rather striue ye to go to heauen by the path which is strait to flesh and bloud, with the litle flock, then to goe in the wide waye, folowing the enticementes of the world and the flesh, which leadeth to damnation. Like as Christ suffered in the flesh, sayeth S. Peter, so arme ye your selues with the same minde:* for Christ suffred for vs, leauing vs example to folow his footsteps. Blessed are they that suffer for his sake, great is their reward in heauen.* He that ouercommeth (sayth S. Iohn) shall eat of the tree of life: he shall haue a crowne of life, & not be hurt of the second death: he shall be clothed w^t white araye, & not be put out of the booke of life: Yea I will confesse his name sayth Christ, before my father, and before his Aungels, & he shalbe a pillar in the house of God, and sitte with me on my seat. And thus I bidde you farewell, myne owne Brethren and deare felowes in Christ. Whose grace and peace be alway with you. Amen.

This world I do forsake:

To Christ I me betake,

And for his Gospell sake.

Paciently death I take.

My body to the dust,

Now to returne it must:

My soule I know full well,

With my God it shal dwel.

Thomas Whittell.

¶An other Letter of M. Thomas Whittell written to a certayne Godly woman.

OH my deare and louing sister in Christe, be not dismayde in this storme of persecution,* for Paule calleth the Gospell the word of the Crosse, because it is neuer truely taught, but the crosse and cruell persecution immediately and necessarily doeth folow the same, and therfore it is a manifest token of Gods truth, and hath bene here and is still abroade, and that is a cause of the rage and crueltie of Sathan agaynste Christe and his members, which must bee corrected for theyr sinnes in this worlde: theyr fayth must be tried, that after triall and pacient suffering the faythfull may receiue the crowne of glorye. Feare not therefore my welbeloued, but proceede in the knowledge and feare of God,* and he will keepe you from all euill. Call vpon his holy name, & he will strengthen you and assiste you in all your wayes: and if it please him to lay his crosse vpon you for his Gospelles sake, refuse it not, neither shake it off by vnlawefull meanes, leaste you should (as God forbidde) finde a more grievous crosse, and torment of conscience, if you shoulde dissemble and denye the knowen verity, then is any persecution or death of body.* Oh howe happye are they that suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake? their rewarde is great in heauen. The momentanie afflictions of this life are not worthy of the glory that shal be shewed vpon vs. Oh remember the Godly weman of the old testament and new, which liued in Gods seruice and feare, and therefore are now in blisse and commended for euer: as namely Iudith, Hester, Abigael, the mother of the 7. sonnes, Mary, Elizabeth, Susanna, Lidia, and Phebe, and others. Set theyr examples before your eyes, and feare nothing: for Sathan is conquered by our Sauour Christe: sinne is put to flight, and the gate of immortality and eternall life is set wide open: God graunt we may enter therein through the doore Iesus Christ, Amen.

¶The Story of Mayster Bartlet Greene, Gentlemanne and Lawyer, Martyr.

After the Martyrdome of Thomas Whittell, nexte followeth in order to speake of Bartlet Greene, who the nexte day after the foresayde Whittell, was likewise condemned. Thys Greene was of a good house, and hauinge such Parentes, as both fauoured learning, and were also willing to bring vp this theyr childe in the same. Who after some enteraunce in other inferiour Schooles, was by them sent vnto the Uniuersity of Oxforde: where thorow exercise and diligent study, he so profited, that within short time he attained, aswell to the knowledge of sundery prophane Sciences, and also now in his last yeares, vnto the godly vnderstanding of Diuinitye. Whereunto through ignorance (in which he was trayned vp from his youth) he was at the first an vtter enemy, Faithfull and true seruantes of Christ, with the particular processes and names of such as were put to slaughter from the beginning of Ian. An. 1557. and the fifte of Queene Marie.

The order and maner of the Cardinals visitation in Cambridge, with the condemning, taking vp, and burning the bones and Bookes of Bucer and Paulus Phagius, An. 1557. Ian. 9.

Cardinall Poole, three yeares after his retourne into Englande, hauinge somewhat withdrawn his mind from other affaires of the realme, and hauing in all poyntes established the Romish religion, began to haue an eye to the vniuersity of Cambridge, whiche place amōg other, speciallye seemed to haue neede of reformation out of hand. To perform this charge,* were chosen Cuthbert Scot, not long before consecrated Bishop of Chester, Nicholas Ormanet an Italian, Archpriest of the people of Bodolon, in the dioces of Ueron, professed in bothe the lawes, and bearing the name of the popes Datary, Tho. Watson, elected Bish. of Lincolne, Iohn Chrystopherson, elected bish. of Chichester, and Henry Cole Prouost of the colledge of Eaton. There was good cause why the matter was especially cōmitted to these persons. For as touching Ormanet, it is wel knownen that he was a man of much estimation with Iulius the 3. at that time B. of Rome, and was appoynted to come into Englande with Cardinall Poole, because without his knowledge (as in whome hee put his chief trust and confidence) the B. would haue nothing done that was of any importance or weight.

These persones thus appoynted (in the meane while as the visitors were addressing themselues to their iourney) sent their letters with the Cardinals Citation before doctor Andrew Perne,* Uicechācellor then of Cambridge, with the other Commissioners associate, commāding him to warne all the Graduates of the Uniuersitie in theyr name, to be in a readinesse against the 11. day of Ianuarie, betwixt 8. and 10. of the clocke, in the church of S. Marye the virgin: willing him especially to be there hym selfe in presence, and also to sette forward all the residue, to whose charge it belonged, y^t they should search out all Statutes, Bookes, Priuiledges, and Monuments appertaining to the Uniuersitie, or to any of the Colledges, or finally to any of thēselues, and these to present the same before them at the day appoynted, and euery mā to appeare there personally: for they woulde not faile, but be there at the same time, to lay before them such things as should seme necessary to this charge of reforming y^e vniuersitye, and further to geue charge of all such things as should seme most for the profit & behoue of the same, together with such thyngs as were to be done on theyr parte, accordinge as shoulde seme most agreeable to the Decrees of the Canon lawe.

This citation of the Cardinal being brought to Cambridge by master bullocke, was first exhibited in the Conuocation house of Regents, and there openly redde by the Orator of the Uniuersitie the 11. of December.

*After thys, vppon the 24. of December, whyche was Christenmasse euen, the Uicechancellor, wyth the heads of houses meeting together in the Schooles, it was there cōcluded, that the visitors charges should be borne by the vniuersitie and Colledges (which then cost the Uniuersitie an 100. pound thicke) and also that no master of any Colledge should suffer any of the fellowes, scholers, or ministers, to goe foorth of the towne, but to retourne before the Uisitation.

On friday, the 8. of Ianuarie, the Queenes Commissioners, videlicet, Doctor Perne Uicechauncellor, Doctor Segewicke, Doctor Haruy, M. Francke, Kust, and an other who is here namelesse, also with sir Iames Dyer, the Recorder, M. Chapman, Euered sitting together in the Hal, certaine were there called by the appoyntment of L. Hawes, and charge giuen what should be done. And first the Commission was read. Then were all the high Constables called to bring in theyr precepts, and sworne. Also 2. of euery Parishe of 10. or 12. hundredes, were sworne to inquire of heresie, lollardie, conspiracie, seditious words, tales, and rumors against the King and Queene. Item, for hereticall and seditious bookes, for negligences & misdemeanour in the church, for obseruation of Ceremonies, for Ornaments, and stocke of the church.

We sayd at the first,* that the Cardinall thought the Uniuersitie to haue neede of reformation. The reason whye hee shoulde thinke so, was this: either because the same of long continuance since any man could remember, had cast of the Yoke of the B. of Rome, and cleaued to the wholesome doctrine of the gospel, or els by reason that bothe for the late schisme, not yet worne out of memorie, and for the doctrine of Martine Bucer, who not long before openlye in the sayd Uniuersitie interpreted holy Scripture, they saw many so sore corrupted and spotted with thys infection, that (euen as when a fire is spred in a towne) vnlesse a speedy remedy were adhibited out of hande, it were not possible, to their thinking, to quench it many yeares after. Who also feared (if it were not looked to in time) least this mischief should take rote, and by litle and litle infect al the members next vnto it, which yet were whole and sounde.

This was the yeare of our Lorde 1556. To the intent therfore to make a salue for this sore, the Inquisitours,* of whome we spake before, came vnto Cambridge the 9. day of Ianuarie. And as they were yet on theyr iourney, not farre from the towne, diuers of the Masters & Presidents of the colledges met them, and brought them courteously, first into the town, and after to their lodging. They were entertained in Trinity colledge by M. Iohn Christopher, son Master of the same house,* and lately before elected B. of Chichester. Notwithstanding they were desired, some to one place, and some to an other as occasion serued, eyther to do theyr dueties, or to shew theyr good wils: Cole to the kings Colledge, and D. Watson to S. Iohns. But whether it were for the acquaintaunce of Christopherson, or for the largenes of the house, which semed most conuenient for theyr purpose, they al tooke vp their lodgings in the sayd Colledge with M. Christopherson.

At theyr comming thether an Oration was made by a felowe of the house, who in the name of all the rest,* w^t long Protestation declared that they were moste heartely welcome thether, & that he and his fellowes gaue them great thanks, that it had pleased theyr lordships to haue so good opiniō of them, as to chuse their house especially to lodge in, whereby they had bothe encouraged them to stande in hope of some further beneuolence towards them, and also done great worship to theyr Colledge by theyr being there: wherefore they should looke at theyr hand agayne for as much duetie and reuerence, as lay in theyr power to perfourme.

To this Oration Watson made answer, that this forewarde and earnest good willes and mindes of theyrs,* in doing suche curtesie, was right thankfully taken, both of hun and his, exhortinge them to continue stedfastly in the same, and to procede also when nede should require: for it was so far from any of their thoughts, to stop thē in this theyr race, that they would rather haste them forward to runne throughe more speedely, being not w^tout good cause perswaded to conceiue good hope of their beneuolēce towards them, in asmuch as they would do for them, what soeuer might tourne to theyr profit and commoditie.

Thys day, for asmuch as it was towarde euening ere they came, and the sunne was going down,* was nothing els done. The next day being the 10. of Ianuarie, they bestowed in recreating them selues after theyr iourney, and in setting other things at a stay. Neuerthelesse to the entent the same should not escape altogether without doing of somewhat, they interdicted the 2. Churches, namely S. Maries, where Martin Bucer, and S. Michaels, where Paulus Phagius lay buried.

Page 1957*These menne were dead a good while before Paulus Phagius had scarce yet shewed the prooffe of his wit and learning, when he departed to God. 1549. Bucer lyued but a little after. During which time somewhat by wryting, but chiefly by reading and preaching openly (wherein the old man being painfull in the woorde of God,* neuer spared himselfe nor regarded his health) hee broughte all men into such admiration of him, that neyther his frends could sufficiently praise him, neither his ennemies in anye poynt finde fault with his singular life & sincere doctrine. A most certaine token wherof may be his sumptuous buriall, solempnised with so great assistance and gladnesse of all the degrees of the Uniuersitie, that it was not possible to deuise more to the settinge oute and amplifyinge of the same. The whole maner and order of the doying whereof, beyng wrytten by M. Nicholas Carre, a learned man in a little treatise to Syr Iohn Cheeke Knight, wyth an Epistle full of consolation as concerning his departure added thereunto, was sent afterwarde vnto Peter Martyr, then abiding at Oxford.

From the burial of Bucer and Phagius, vnto the cōming of these visitours were passed aboute 3. or 4. yeares more or lesse. And from the time that that blessed Kynge Edward the vj. deceased, vnto that day, the Priests neuer ceased to celebrate theyr Masses, and other kinde of Ceremonies in those places, and that without scruple of conscience, as farre as men could perceiue. But after the time that these Commissioners came thether, those things that before were accompted for sacred and holy, beganne to be denounced for prophane and vnholly. For they commanded that al those assemblies that should hereafter be made for the executing of holy Ceremonies, should be remoued to the kings Chappell, which is a place farre more stately then all the other.

*Now was come the 11. day, in the which the Uicechācellor of the Uniuersitie, with the maisters and presidents of the Colledges, and all the other Graduates of euerye house, were commanded to appeare before the said Commissioners in their habites. It was commanded that the scholers also should come in theyr surplises, but that was not done. They assembled in great nūber to Trinitie colledge: hauinge the Uniuersitie crosse borne before them, & in the gatehouse a forme was sette and couered, with cushings and carpet on the ground for the visitours. Where the Uicechancellor hauing on a Tishewe cope, sprinkled holy water on them, and purposed to sence them, but they refused it there, which notwithstanding afterwarde in the Queenes Colledge and elsewhere they refused not.

There M. Iohn Stokes common Orator of the vniuersitie, made an Oration in the name of all the rest. The Copie whereof I thought good heere to exemplificate, in Latin as it was pronounced.

Maister Stokes Oration to Queene Maryes Visitors at Cambridge, An. 1557. Ian. 11.

*Academia, Reuerendi Patres, in expectatione aduentus vestri sollicita aliquandiu fuit, nunc praesentia dominationum vestrarum valde recreata libentissime vultus vestros intuetur, & ad apertam voluntatis suae testificationem, ecce vniuersa se suasque opes effudit. Conuenit in hunc locum tota Cantabrigiae frequentia, adsunt omnes ordines, de quorum certa mihi & explorata ad hanc rem voluntate, illud publica fide apud dominationes vestras affirmo, eos & separatim singulos, & coniunctim omnes optatissimum hunc aduentum mirificis studijs, & consentientibus animis gratulari. Illud enim omnium animis habemus persuasum, & negotium hoc quod hodierno die, fauente Deo, excellentia vestra auspicatur, ad academiae rationes fore accommodum, neque in re, ad communem salutem tam necessaria, operam aliquando vestram nobis defuturam. Permulta sunt ad hanc opinionem confirmandam, sed caetera non persequor: ea tantum oratione attingam, quae ita intimè cum praesenti negotio cohaerent, vt diuelli ab eo disiungique nulla ratione possint. Atque sunt illa quidem numero certa & finita: verum re & virtute, ita immensa, vt nulla dicendi facultate mea plene comprehendi possent: quoniam tamen & antea sum professus summam esse academiae laetitiam, eamque iustis de causis in aduentu vestro susceptam, quaeso à vobis, vt dum eas breuiter recenseo faciles mihi aures praebeatis.

Reuerendiss. in Christo Pater Cardinalis Polus, Legatus, qui religionem oppressam restituit,*patriae ruinas suffulsit, leges & decreta quasi postliminio reduxit, iste inquàm, iste Polus Anglus, & verè noster Moyses, legationis vestrae autor est, à cuius excellenti virtute in omnes suae patriae partes plurima commoda dimanarunt. Quo vinculo necessitudinis, & si omnibus temporibus optima ab illo sperare liceret, quòd ex corpore simus ipsius reipublicae, arctior est tamen & interior causa, quae nobis cum dominatione illius separatim intercedit. Superiore anno academiae procurationem in se humanissimè recepit, quam liberari custodia ita coeptam tenere se velle, literis significauit, vt non solum incommoda dimoueret, quibus studia nostra affligerentur, sed vt ornamenta adijceret ea, quorum splendore augeri dignitas academiae aut maximè illustrari posset. Quae res & spem antea nostram confirmauit, & nunc in eam cogitationem nos adducit, vt omnem illius humanitatem in hanc vnam visitationem esse collectam putemus, in qua quidem ea a vobis expectamus omnia, quae summi cancellarij nostri insignis amor praeter communem charitatem academiae, quasi pupillae suae propriae pollicetur. Atque vtinam quidem ipse sine reipublicae detrimèto, hoc tempore adesse posset, & academiam suam è tenebris & profunda nocte emersam, ipse suis radijs verae religionis splendore illustraret, verum optioni nostrae publica vtilitas repugnat, qua valde impeditus sanctissimae sedis Apostolicae legatus, vos Vicarios substituit: quorum naturas propter prouidentiam, personas propter dignitatem, voluntates propter educationem aptissimas ad hanc rem esse iudicauit. Ita que illud verè & ex animis istorum omnium affirmare possum, vos eos esse viros quorum religionem amamus, virtutem colimus, voluntatem, fidem, & consilium ad publicam salutem impendimus. Post quam enim singulari & praestantissima virtute Cardinalis Poli, legati è superiorum temporum caligine, & tenebris, lucem in republica respicere coepimus, vna certè grauissima etiam superioris aetatis mala sensimus, quibus profecto infinitis & miserrimis etsi antea premeremur, tamen ad calamitatis nostrae magnitudinem accessit eiusdem ignoratio, vt (mea quidem opinione) eo simus magis miserabiles iudicandi, quòd tam turbulenta tempestate iactati ne moueri quidem nos, tam graui & periculoso haeresis morbo oppressi, aut aegrotare mentes nostras, non intelleximus. Valde enim periculosa est aegrotatio illa, quaecunque sine doloris sensu naturam conficit, & affectos saepe priùs extinguit, quam aegrotare se fateantur. Eiusmodi morbo Academia laborabat, quae ad alias fortasse res satis ingeniosa & solers, in hac Religionis causa, propter caput Ecclesiae laesum, vnde omnis sentiendi vis est, omnino hebes, stupida, & sine mente fuit, quoad tertio ante hunc anno diuina sanctissimi patris Iulij Clementia Angliae ferè emortuae miserata, iterum nos Ecclesiae inserit, corpus sensusque recreat, cuius ope conualescens Britannia, quam certa gehennae pericula effugerit, quiuis facile intelligit. Idem Academia cernit acutius, ne{que} quicquàm mali vsquam accidisse putat, quo nostra Regio in hac religionis vastitate & schismate miserius fuerit afflicta. Non est opus recensere in hoc loco euersa Monasteria, spoliata Tempia, strages sacerdotum, caedes nobilium, motus & tumultus populi, totius Regni egestatem, quae & si aliunde accidere possunt, tamen cum tam graua sint vt opprimant, vltionis & vindictae potius quam probandi causa in malos & nocentes infligi putamus. Sed sunt ista fortunae ludibria, grauiora sumus passi religionis & conscientiae detrimenta: pietas in Deum omnis euauerat, virginalis sacerdotum professio ad libidinem soluta est, animus quasi consopitus iacebat, quem nullae Ceremoniae excitabant, ipsa mens opinionum varietate ita distracta, ita sibi ipsi dissentiens, vt infinitis erroribus implicaretur. In his erant duo praecipue fontes, ex quorum riuiis & hausisse Academiam paulo liberalius, & illa potione ferme inebriatam confi•emur.

Prior ortum habebat ex illa nostri violenta diuulsione, à catholicae Ecclesiae vnitatem, re non dissimili illius pugnae, quam olim Menenius Agrippa in intestina ciuium discordia, de corpore humano memorabat. Posterior ex immensa palude & coeno Wicleuiano emanauit: quem celebris apud nos imo miserabilis de Sacramento altaris patefecit. De cuius rei veritate plerique suo sensu abundantes, pro arbitrio quisque suo statuerat. Nos Philosophos, nec illos quidem optimos, imitati ex Epicureorū schola ad scripturae lumen aliquid attulimus, quòd enim Christus omnino, praecise, & sine exceptione, de vera & perpetua sui corporis praesentia affirmarat (in cuius verbi veritate fundamentum fidei nostrae collocatur) id nos ita sumus interpretati, vt mācam & alienam Christi vocem iudicarem, nisi illa Epicuri propria particula (quasi) adderetur, & quod Christiani corpus & sanguinem, id nos quasi corpus & sanguinem diceremus. Sed non est istius temporis praeterita nimium meminisse, quae vtinam eterna obliuione obrui possent, neque vlla tantae labis memoria ad posteros nostros propagetur, tamen fuerunt attingenda generatim quidem, quòd erranti confessio salutaris sit, membratim verò, quod Academia his vulneribus à Censoria potestate confecta, à Censoria medicina ad salutem reduci postulat. Ipsa vero pro se & suis spondet omnes in authoritate vestra futuros, quos assiduis concionibus adeo ad poenitentiam edocuit, vt & eos ad sanam religionem fidissime transijsse, & in eadem diligenti praesentis vitae vsu superioris aetatis damna sarcituros putetis. When he had made an ende of speaking, the Byshop of Chester answered thereunto, that they tooke in ryghte good part, that the mother the Uniuersitie had made so open a declaration of her good will towards them: for the whych he gaue most hearty thanckes, desiring her to perfourme in deede and in her woorkes, the thyngs that shee had so largely promised of her selfe in woordes and communication.

AS concerning their good willes, there was no cause to mistrust. For theyr comming thether was not to deale any thyng roughly wyth such as fell to the amendement: but both the Cardinall hymselfe, and they also, were fully minded to shew fauour, deuising howe to bring al thyngs to peace and tranquillitie, desiring nothing more earnestly, then that they which haue erred & gone astray, shoulde retourne in the right pathe againe. The right reuerende father the Lord Cardinall (whom he wished to haue bene present) wished the self same thing also, desiring nothyng so much as he with hys owne hands to sustaine and hold vp nowe ready to fall, or rather to raise vp already fallen to the ground, the Uniuersitie hys ward: for he gladly taketh vpon him the name and duety of her Garden, whom it greatly grieued that the infections of the times past had spreade abroad so grievous diseases, that euen the Uniuersitie it self was touched with the contagious aire therof. For he woulde gladlier haue come thither to visite and salute it, then to correcte it, if the waightye affayres of the realme would haue permitted it. But now seing he could not so do, he had appoynted thys Commission, in y^e which he had assigned them to be his deputies, which (for because they knew him to set much store by the vniuersity) should extend the more fauor to it, and (for because they theselues had bene there brought vpp) woulde the more earnestly embrace it. The chiefe matter that they came for, tended to this ende y^t such as had erred should confesse their faults, and retourne into the right way againe. For they were in good forwardnesse of healing, that acknowledged themselues to haue offended. And therefore it was wisely propounded on hys part that he would not altogether excuse the faultes of the Uniuersitie, nor of other men, but confesse and acknowledge the crime, as that there were many thyngs had neede to be corrected and amended.

The cause why they were sent thither was to raise vp them that were fallen, and to receiue into fauour suche as were sory and would amend, wherin if (contrary to theyr expectation) they shoulde not be able to do so much wyth some men as they would: yet notwithstanding according to their duety, they wold shew themselues so dilygent for theyr parte, as that no lacke myghte be founde in them. For it was more openlye knowne than that it coulde be denied, that manye men did diuers thyngs of a frowarde wilfulnesse, and take stoutlye vppon them, wherewith as they were greatly mooued and agrieued (as reason was) so they coueted to remedy the mischiefe. Against whom, if any thing shuld seeme hereafter to be straitly determined, it was to be imputed to theyr own deserts, and not to the willes of them. Neither ought such as are whole & sound to be mooued at the chastisement of others, forasmuch as it pertained not onely to the wiping out of the foule blotte, which now stuck in the vniuersitie, but also to the health of many others which had taken much hurt by the infection of them.* For their owne partes, they more enclined vnto mercy then to rigour. Howbeit considering that so greate diseases could not by gentle medicines be healed, they were driuen of necessitie to vse stronger. And yet if they would be contented to bee broughte againe to theyr ryght mindes, which thing they chiefly coueted (for they wished that all shoulde amende and be led by wholesome counsel) & would yet at length waxe wery of their errors, and in stead of them frequent againe the ancient customes of themselues, & of theyr forefathers, they myghte boldlye looke for all kinde of humanitie and gentlenesse at theyr hands, in al this theyr busines of reformation, which they had now entred and begon, requesting no more of the Uniuersity but to doe as became them: which being performed, he promised that theyr beneuolence, neyther in anye publike nor in any priuate personnes case shoulde in any wise be behinde hand.

These things being finished,* they were broughte processionally to the kinge colledge, by all the Graduates of the vniuersity, wheras was song a masse of y^e holy ghoste with great solemnitie, nothing wanting in that behalfe y^t might make to the setting forthe of the same. In this place it was marked that Nich. Ormanet, commonly surnamed Datary (who albeit he wer inferior in estate vnto Chester being a Bish. yet was superior to them all in authoritye) while the Masse was a celebrating, eft standing, eft sitting and sometime kneeling on his knees, obserued certaine ceremonies, which afterward were required of al others to be obserued, as in processe hereof was to be seene.

From thence they attended all vpon the Legates to s. Maries church, which we declared before to haue ben interdicted. In the which place,* for as much as it was suspēded, although no masse might be song, yet ther was a sermon made in open audience by M. Pecocke in the Latine tounge, preaching against heresies and hereticks, as Bilney, Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley. &c. The which being ended, they proceeded eftsoones to the visitation. Where first D. Haruye did in the Cardinals name exhibite the cōmission to the bishop of Chester with a few words in Latin. Which being accepted, and by M. Clarke openly redde to the end, then the Uicechancellor wyth an Oration did exhibite the certificate vnder his seal of office,* with the Cardinals citation annexed, conteining euery mans name in the Uniuersitie and Colledges, with the Officers and all the maisters of houses. Among whom was also Roberte Brassey maister of the kings colledge, a woorthy old man, both for his wisdom and his hoare haires. Who hearing hys owne name recited next after the Uicechauncellours, sayd: he was there present as all the other were: neuerthelesse, for as much as y^e reformation of his house was wholly reserued to the discretion of the byshop of Lincolne, not only by the kings letters Patents,* but also by graunte of confirmation from the bishop of Rome him selfe, vnder a penaltie if he should suffer any strangers to entermeddle, he openly protested in discharge of hys duety, that vnlesse theyr Commission gaue them authoritye and iurisdiction vppon that Colledge, either by expresse woordes or manifest sense, he vtterly exempted himselfe from being present. This his exception they tooke all in great displeasure: alleaging that they were fullye authorysed for the order of that matter by the Cardinall, out of whose iurisdiction no place nor persons was exempted: wherefore he had done euil to call into question theyr authoritie,* so well knowen to all men. Chester seemed to be more mooued at the matter then all the other: and that was because Brassey had a litle before obtained the woorship of that rouse, eue• vtterly against his wil, and maugre his head, doing y^e worst he coulde against him.

After the formal solemnity of these things thus accomplished, the commission being red, and the citation exhibited, al the masters of houses being openly cited, euery mā for a while departed home to his owne house, wyth commandement to be at the common schooles of the sayd vniuersity at one of the clock the same day.* When the degrees of the vniuersitye, commonly called Regents & non Regents, were assembled thither, they spent the rest of y^e daye in reading ouer of Charters, graunted to the Uniuersity by kings and princes, in searching out of bulles & pardons from the pope, & in perusing of other Monuments pertaining to the Uniuersitie.

The next day folowing, being the 12. of Ianu. they resorted to the kings Colledge to make Inquisition,* eyther because the same for the woorthines therof was chiefe and soueraigne of all the residue, or els because that that house especially before all others, had beene counted, time out of minde, neuer to be without an hereticke (as they tearme them) or twaine. And at that present time, alb•it that many nowe alate had withdrawne themselues from thence, yet they iudged there were some remaining still. The order and maner how they would be intertained of euerye Colledge, when they shoulde come to make Inquisition,* they themselues appoynted, which was in this sort.

They commaunded the master of euery house together with the residue, as well fellowes as scholars, apparelled in priestlike garmēts (which they cal habits) to mete them Page 1959 at the vttermoste gate of theyr house towarde the towne. The maister him selfe to be dressed in like apparell as the Priest when hee rauisheth himselfe to Masse, sauing that he should putte on vppermoste his habite, as the rest dyd. The order of theyr goynge they appoynted to be in thys wise.* The Maister of the House to goe formost. Next vnto him euery man in hys order as he was of degree, seigniority, or of yeres. Before the M. should be caried a crosse & holy water to sprinckle the Commissioners withal, and then after that the sayd Commissioners to be sensed. And so after this meeting, and mumbling of a few deuotions, they determined with this pompe and solempnitie to bee brought to the Chappell.

Many thought they tooke more honor vpon them than belonged to the state of man. Other some (forasmuche as at that time they not only pretended the iurisdiction of the Cardinall,* but also represented the power and authoritye of the Bishop of Rome himselfe, who was accoumpted to be more than a mortall man) sayde it was farre lesse then of duety appertained to hys holinesse, in that the honoure that was done to his Legates, was not done to them but to his holinesse. Now was the houre come, at which they appoynted to meete:* and being entred the kings colledge gate, where they looked for the maister and fellowes of the house, seeing no man came to meete them, they proceeded forth to the Church doore, where they staid. There perceiuing how the maister and the rest of y^e house were dressing themselues as fast as they coulde, as in such order as was appoynted before, they came in sodenly vppon them, before they had set out any foote out of theyr places.

Then the maister first excused himselfe, that hee was ready no sooner,* acknowledging that it had bene his duety to haue bene in a readinesse. Secondly, he saide he was very glad of their comming, promising firste in hys owne name, and after in the name of all the rest, as muche reuerence, as mighte be, in all matters concerning theyr common veilitie, the which he doubted not, but should be performed at their hands, according to his expectation. But like as he had don the other day in S. Maries church,* the same exception he made to them nowe also: the whych his doing he besoughte them not to be offended withall. For seeing he did it onely for the discharge of his duetie, he had iuster cause to be helde excused.

Hee had scarsly yet finished his tale, but the Bishop of Chester with a frowning looke and an angry countenāce, interrupting him of his talke,* said: he needed not to repeat the things hee had protested before, nor they to make aunswer any more to those things wherin they had sufficiently enformed him before. He rather feared that their quarel was not good, that they made such a doe about it, & sought such starting holes. For so were diseased persones oftentimes woont to do, when for the paine and grieve they are not able to abide a strong medicine. As thoughe that anye man were able to graunte so strong a priuiledge, as to w^lstand the Popes authoritye. As for the bishops letters, he sayd must nedes make on his side,* and with such as were with him, & could not in any wise be alleged against him. Therefore he admonished him to desist from his vnprofitable altercation, and to conforme himselfe and his to such things as then were in doing.

After thys they went to Masse. Whych finished, wyth great solemnitie, first they went to the high aultare of the churche,* & hauing there saluted theyr God, and searching whether all were well about him or no, they walked thorow all the inner chappels of the Churche. The Church goodes, the crosses, the chalices, the masse bookes, the vestments, and whatsoeuer ornamentes were besides, were commaunded to be brought out vnto them. Whē they had sufficiently viewed all things, & had called foorth by name euery fellow and scholler of the house, they went to y^e masters lodging, where first and formost swearing them vpon a booke to answer to all such interrogatories as should be propounded vnto them (as farre as they knewe) they examined first the master himself, and afterward al the residue,* euery man in his tourne. But there were some that refused to take this oth, because they had geuen their faith to the Colledge before, and also because they thought it against all righte and reason to sweare against themselues: for it was contrary to all law that a man should be compelled to bewraye himselfe, and not to be suffred to keepe his conscience free, when there is no manifest prooffe to be laid to his charge: but much more vniust is it, that a man shoulde be constrained perforce to accuse himselfe. Neuertheles these persons also, after much altercation, at length (conditionally, that their faithe geuen before to the Colledge, wer not impeched therby) wer cōtēted to be sworn.

Three daies long lasted the Inquisition there. Thys was nowe the 3. day of their comming, & it was thought that the case of Bucer and Phagius was delayed longer then neded.* For they looked to haue had much altercation and businesse about the matter. Nowe, forasmuche as the present state of the case required good deliberation and aduisement, the Uicechauncelor and the maisters of the colledges assembled at the common schooles, wher euery mā gaue his verdict what he thought meete to be done in this matter of Bucer. After much debating, they agreed altogether in this determination: that for asmuch as Martin Bucer whiles he liued, had not onely sowed pernicious & erroneous doctrine among •hem, but also hadde hym selfe bene a sectarie and famous hereticke, erring from the Catholicke churche, and geuing others occasion to fall from the same likewise: a supplication should be made to y^e lord Commissioners, in the name of the whole vniuersity, that his deade carkas might foorthwith be digged vp (for so it was needefull to be done) to the intente that Inquisition might be made as touching his doctrine,* the which beyng brought in examination, if it were not foūd to be good and wholesome, y^e law might proceede against him: for it was against the rule of the holy Canons,* that his body should be buried in christen buriall. Yea, and besides that it was to the open derogation of Gods honor, and the violating of his holy lawes, with the great pearill of many mennes soules, and the offence of the faithfull, especially in so difficulte and contagions a time as that was.* Wherefore it was not to be suffered, that they, which vtterlye dissented from all other men in the trade of their liuing, lawes, and customes, should haue any parte with them in honoure of buriall. And therefore the glory of God first and before all things ought to be defended, the infamy (which through this thing riseth on them) with all speede putte awaye, no rouble at all left vnto those persones to rest in, who euen in the same places where they lay, were iniurious & noysome to the very elements, but the place ought to be purged, and all things so ordered as might be to the satisfying of the consciences of the weake. In executing whereof, so notable an example ought to be geuen to all men, that no man heereafter should be so bolde to attempt the like.

They gaue the same verdict by common assent vpon Phagius also.* Unto thys wryting they annexed an other by the which they lawfullye authorised Andrewe Perne the Uicechauncellour, to be the common factoure for the Uniuersitie. He was a man meere for the purpose, bothe for the office that he bare, and also because that by the testimony of Chrystopherson hee was deemed to be the moste Catholicke of all others. This supplication confirmed by the consent of all the Degrees of the Uniuersitie, and signed with theyr common seale, the nexte daye, whiche was the 13. of Ianuarie, the Uicechauncellour putte vpp to the Commissioners. Note here good reader, what a feat conueiance this was, to suborne the Uniuersitie vnder a colourable pretence to desire this thinge of them by waye of petition. As who should say, if they had not done so, the other would neuer haue gone about it of themselues.

But thys glose was soone found out. For the Cōmissioners had geuē the Uicechancellor instructions in wryting before. But peraduenture they thought by this means to remooue the enuie of this acte from themselues.

Thus the Uicechauncellour came vnto the Commissioners according to appoyntment made the daye before, about seuen of the clocke in the morning. Hee hadde scarce declared the cause of his comming, but that he hadde not only obtained his sute,* but also euen at the very same time receiued the sentence of condemnation, for taking vpp Bucer and Phagius, faire copied out by Ormanet Datarie himselfe. This was to be confirmed by the consente of the degrees of the Uniuersitie. Whereuppon a solempne Conuocation called congregatio regentium & non regentium for the same purpose was appoynted to be at ix. of the clocke: where the graduates being assembled together, the demaunde was propounded concerning the condemnation of Bucer and Phagius, and the grace asked, whyche was thys: Pleaseth it you that M. Bucer for the heresy es nowe recited, and many other by hym wrytten, preached, and taughte, wherein he dyed without repentaunce, and was buried in Christen buriall, may be exhumate and taken vp againe. &c. After this grace eftsoones being graunted, then was the Sentence of condemnation drawen by the Datarie, openlye redde, and immediatlye an other grace asked, that the same myghte bee Signed wyth the Common Seale. The whyche request was verye lightlye and easilye obtayned. And it was no meruaile.

For nowe after the deathe of Kinge Edward, since the time that the gouernement of the Realme came to the hande of Queene Marye, all suche persones being dryuen awaye as hadde reiecte the Romishe Religion (in whom wel nie alone rested whatsoeuer wit and learning Page 1960 was in the whole Uniuersitie besides) such a sort of Raskals were put in their roubles, that all places now swarmed with vnlearned and vnnurtured chaplains. To whō nothyng was greater pleasure, then to cause all men to speake slander and reproch of Bucer. There were dyuers yet left among them, that spake agaynst their demaunds. But they (because, as it commonly commeth to passe, that might ouercommeth right) could nothing auaile. For this is a common custome in all such matters & ordināces, that looke what the greater number decreeth, is published in y^e name of all: and that which the better part disallowed, semeth as though no man at all disallowed it.

*The next day beyng the 14. of Ianuary, all the Uisitors (onely Christopherson elect of Chichester excepted) came to the Kings Colledge. Where first goyng into the Church, and there makynge their prayers at the gresings, they so proceeded into the stalles, there sitting all the masse tyme, the company standyng in their copes, and singing a solemne Respond in honour of the Uisitors. After the respond done, the Prouost in the best Cope made to them his protestation, vnto whom the B. of Chester made aunswer also in Latine, declaryng that he could not perceyue to what purpose his protestation was, notwithstanding they would accept it and beare with him. Then went they to Masse, which ended, the Catholike Uisitors approched vp to the aulter, & tooke downe the Sacrament, & searched the pixe, but first the two Bishops sensed the Sacrament.

Then they went to the reuestry, and opened the Chalices, corporas cases, and crismatory, and viewed all those thyngs. And so re•urnyng into the Prouosts chamber, deuided themselues in examination of the Prouost, Uiceprouost, and the rest of the company. The same day D. Bacon M. of Gonwell hall, bad the Uicechauncellor, D. Young, D. Haruy, Swineborne, Maptide with others home to dinner.* These men immediately after diner, caused the cōmon seale of the Uniuersitie to bee put to the foresayd instrument of condemnation, accordyng as was determined the day before by the generall consent of the Graduates of the Uniuersitie. And by and by after, they caried the same to the Commissioners to their lodgyng. The which when they had receiued,* forasmuch as after more diligent perusing thereof, it liked them not in all points, some thynges they rased out, some they enterlined, other some they changed: so that in fine, they were faine to take the payne to engrosse it new agayne.

To the signing wherof, a congregation was eftsoones called of all the Graduates of the Uniuersitie agaynst the next day,* which there beyng red ouer, a new grace againe was asked and granted for setting to the seale. Thē were the Graduates dismissed, with commaundement to resort forthwith to S. Mary Church,* whether the Commissioners also repayed. When they had taken their places, D. Harny presented to them before all the company, a newe commission to make enquest vpon heresie then newly sent from the Cardinall, which was red immediately by Uincent of Noally, Ormanets Clarke. This done, D. Perne (who as ye heard, was factor for the Uniuersitie, exhibited to the cōmissioners in the name of y^e Uniuersitie y^e sentence of the foresayd condemnation.* The copy and tenour whereof, hereafter (God willyng) shall follow. This cōdemnation beyng openly red, then D. Perne aforesaid desired to send out processe to cite Bucer and Phagius to appeare, or any other that would take vpon them to pleade their cause, & to stand to the order of the court agaynst the next Monday: to the intent that when they had exhibited themselues, the Courte might the better determine what ought to be done to them by order of law.

The commissioners condescended to hys request, and the next day processe went out to cite the offenders.* This citation Uincent of Noally their common Notarie, hauyng first red it ouer before certayne witnesses appointed for the same purpose, caused to bee fixed vp in places conuenient, to witte, vpon S. Mary church doore, the doore of the common Schooles, and the crosse in the market steade of the same towne. In this was specified, that whosoouer woulde maintayne Bucer and Phagius, or stande in defence of their doctrine, should at the xvij. day of the same moneth, stand foorth before the L. Commissioners, in S. Mary Church, which was appoynted the place of iudgement, and there euery man should be sufficientlye heard what he could say. This Commaundement was set out with many wordes.

Shortly after, the matter drewe toward Iudgement. Therefore the next day before the day limited, which was the xvij. of January, the Uicechauncellor called to hym to Peterhouse (whereof he was M.) D. Young, D. Segiswike, & with them Bullocke, Taylor, Parker, and Redman, Whitlocke, Mitch, & certaine others. These men cast their heds together how they might beare witnes against Bucer & Phagius, to conuince them of heresie. For seying the matter was brought in face of open court, & because it might so come to passe, that some Patrones of their cause would come out, they thought it needfull to haue witnesses to depose of their doctrine. What came of this their cōsultation, it is not perfectly known.

The xvij. day the Uicechauncellor goyng to the Inquisitors sittynge at the Kyngs Colledge,* did put them in remembrance, that the same was the day in which by their processe sent forth the xvj. day before, they had commanded to appeare in S. Mary Church, such as would take vpon them to defend Bucer and Phagius by the law. He desired therefore that they would vouchsafe to sitte there, if perchaunce any man would try the aduenture of the law. They lightly condescended thereunto. When the Uicechauncellor had brought them thether, hee exhibited vnto them the processe of the Citation which he had receyued of them to publish a little before, saying, that he had diligently executed whatsoeuer the contents of the same required. After that they had taken their places, and that no mā put forth hymself to answer for the offenders, the Iudges called aside D. Yong, D. Segiswike, Bullock, Tailor, Maptide, Hunter, Parker, Redman, aboue mentioned.* Also Browne, Gogman, Rud, Iohnson, Mitch, Rauens and Carre, who had before written out the buriall of Bucer, with a singular commendation of hym, and sent it to Sir Iohn Cheeke Knight. These men takyng first their othe vpon a booke, were commanded to beare witnes agaynst the heresies and doctrine of Bucer and Phagius. The 22. day of the same month was limited to this Iurie to bryng in their verdict.

In the meane while, Ormanet and Doctor Watson abode at home in their lodgyng to take the depositions of them whom we shewed you before to haue bene called to Peterhouse, & to haue communicated with the Uicechancellor as concernyng that matter, whose depositions (as I told you) neuer came to light. The B. of Chester and D. Cole this day visited them of Katherine Hall, where, as farre as could bee learned, nothyng was done worthy of rehersall.

As Ormanet the Popes Datary was sittynge at Trinitie Colledge,* Iohn Dale one of the Queenes Colledge came to hym, whom he had commanded before to bryng with hym the pixe, wherein the Bish. of Romes God of bread is woont to be enclosed. For Ormanet told them he had a precious iewell: the same was a linnen cloute that the Pope had consecrated with his owne hands, which he promised to bestow vpon them for a gift. But Dale misvnderstandyng Ormanet, in steade of the pixe brought a chalice and a singyng cake called the hoste, the whiche hee had wrapped vp and put in hys bosome. When hee was come, Ormanet demanded if he had brought him y^e thyng he sent hym for. To whom he aunswered, he had brought it. Then geue it me (quoth he.) Dale pulled out the chalice and the singyng cake. When Ormanet sawe that,* hee stepped somewhat backe as it had bene in a wonder, callyng hym blockhed, and little better then a mad man, demaundyng what he ment by those thyngs, saying: he willed hym to bryng none of that geare, and that he was vnworthy to enioy so high a benefite: yet notwithstanding, forasmuch as hee had promised before to geue it them, hee would performe his promise. Whereupon with great reuerence & ceremony, he pulled out the linnen cloth & layd it in the chalice, and the bread with it, commandyng them both for the holynes of the thyng, & also for the author of it, to keepe it among them with such due reuerence as belonged to so holy a relique.

About the same tyme the Commissioners had geuen commandement to the maisters of the Colledges,* that euery man should put in writyng what books he had, with the authors names. And to the intent that euery mā shuld execute it without deceit, they tooke a corporal oth of them. This commandemēt some executed exactly and diligently other some, for as much as they deemed it wrongfull, executed it slacke enough.

We declared before that the xvij. day was limited for the day of iudgement. Whē the day came▪ and that neither Bucer nor Phagius would appeare at their call in y^e court nor that any put forth hymself to defend them: yet the curteous Commissioner would not proceede to iudgement, which neuerthelesse,* for their con•umacy in absenting thēselues, they might haue done, consideryng how that daye Page 1961 was peremptory. But these men beyng bent altogether to equity and mercy, had rather shew some fauour, then to do the vttermost they might by the law. Whereupon Uincent published the second processe, and set it vp in the same places, as in maner before. The meanyng thereof varied not much from the first, but that it put of the iudgement day vnto the 26. of the same month. Uppon the which day the Uicechauncellor was sent for to their lodgyng, with whome they agreed concernyng the order of publishing the sentence. And because there should want no solemnitie in the matter, they commaunded him further to warne the Maior of the Towne to be there at the day appointed with all hys Burgesses, which the Uicechauncellour dyd speed with all readinesse.

This day (as I sayd) was the 26. of Ianuary, which beyng now come,* first all degrees of the mother Uniuersitie were assembled. And to fil vp this Pageant, thither came also the Maior and hys townesmen, and all met together in S. Mary Church to behold what there shoulde be determined vpon these men. After long attendaunce, at length the Commissioners came forth and went vppe to a scaffold that was somewhat higher then the residue, prepared for the same purpose.* When they had takē their places, D. Perne the Uicechauncellor, the player of this Enterlude, fashionyng hys countenance with great grauitie, reached to them the processe that was lastly published, to cite thē, saying these wordes: I bring forth againe (quoth he) to you right reuerend father and Commissioners, of the most reuerend my L. Cardinall Poole (payntyng out the rest of his stile) this Citation executed according to the purport and effect of the same: omittynge nothyng for his part that might make to the commendation of this matter. When he had thus finished his tale, by and by the B. of Chester after he had a little viewed the people, beganne in maner as followeth.

¶The Oration of D. Scot B. of Chester, before the condemnation of Bucer and Phagius.

YE see ({quod} he) how sore the Vniuersitie presseth vpon vs, how earnest intercession it maketh vnto vs, not only to denounce Bucer and Phagius, which these certayne yeares past haue spread most pernicious doctrine among you, to be heretickes (as they be in deede) but also that we will commaund their dead carcasses, which vnto this day haue obtayned honourable buriall among you, to be digged vp, and as it is excellently ordained by the Canon law to be cast into fire, or whatsoeuer is more grieuous then fire, if any can bee. For the degrees of the Vniuersitie deale not slightly nor slackly with vs in this case, but do so presse vpon vs, and follow the sute so earnestly, that they scarce geue vs any respite of delay. And I assure you, albeit this case of it selfe be such, as that euen the vnworthinesse of those persons, though there were no further cause,* ought to induce vs to the doyng thereof, much the rather mooued with these so wholesome petitions, it is meete and conuenient we should graunt it. For howe soeuer we of our selues are enclined to mercye in our heartes, (then the which wee protest there is nothyng vnder the Sunne to vs more deare and acceptable) yet notwithstanding, the very law riseth vp to reuengement,* so that the common saluation of you all, which the law prouideth for, must bee preferred before the priuate charitie of our mynds. Neither ought any such negligence to ouertake vs for our partes, that we beyng scarce yet escaped out of the shipwracke of our former calamitie, shoulde now suffer this vnexpiable mischiefe, to disquiet any longer the consciences of the weake.

*Moreouer, it is but reason that we should doe somewhat at so earnest intreatance and sute of the Vniuersitie. It needeth not me to speake much of our selues. For if we had bene desirous to enterprise this matter, it had bene lawfull after the first Citation, to haue proceeded to iudgement: but for because we were willyng that their defendours should be heard, and that the matter should be denounced and tried by law, we sent out the seconde processe.

If we had desired reuengement, we myght haue shewed crueltye vpon them that are alyue:* of the which (alas the more pitie) there are too many that embrace this doctrine. If we thirsted for bloud, it was not to be sought in withered carcasses and drie bones. Therefore ye may well perceiue, it was no part of our wils that we now came hether,* but partly induced at the intreatie of the Vniuersitie, partly mooued with the vnworthinesse of the case it selfe, but especially for the care and regard we haue of your health and saluation, which we couet by all means to preserue.

For you your selues are the cause of this busines: you gaue occasion of this confession, among whom this day ought to be a notable example, to remayne as a memoriall to them that shall come after, as in that which ye may learne not onely to shake of the filth which ye haue taken of these persons, but also to beware hereafter that ye fall no more so shamefully as ye haue done. But I trust God will defend you, and geue you myndes to kepe your selues from it.

As concernyng the parties themselues,* whose case now hāgeth in lawe, they bare about the name of the Gospell, where as in deede they wrought nothyng els than the euery and deceite. And so much the wickedder were they, in that they sought to couer so shameful actes, with the cloke of so faire and holy a name. Wherefore it is not to be doubted, but that God will punish this despite of it selfe wicked, to you pernicious, by the authors therof shamefull and abhominable.

But if God, as he is slow to wrath and vengeance, wil winke at it for a tyme, yet notwithstanding, if we vppon whome the charge of the Lordes flocke leaneth, should permit so execrable crimes to escape vnpunished, we should not lyue in quiete one hower.

When he had thus spoken, hee recited the sentence out of a scroll, and condemned Bucer and Phagius of heresie: the form and tenour of which sentence, framed after y^e barbarous rude stile of that church, thus followeth.

The sentence of condemnation against M. Bucer, and Paulus Phagius.

After the sentence thus read, the Byshop commaunded their bodies to be digged out of their graues, and beyng disgraded from holy orders, deliuered them into the handes of the secular power. For it was not lawfull for such innocent persons as they were, abhorryng from all bloudshed, and detestyng all desire of murder, to put any man to death.

¶The effect of Doctor Pernes Sermon against M. Bucer.

*OVer and besides this oration & sentence of D. Scot, came in also D. Perne Vicechancellour, with his sermon tendyng to the same effect, to the deprauyng of Maister Bucer, taking for his theame the place of the 132. Psalme: Behold how good & pleasant a thyng it is. &c.

Where beginning first with the commendation of concord, and of the mutual knittyng together of the myndes, he alledged, that it was not possible to hold together, vnlesse the concorde were deriued out of the hed, the which he made to be the B. of Rome, and that it also rested in the same.

After he had made a long protestatiō hereof, he passed forth to Bucer, vpon whom he made a shamefull railyng, saying: that his doctrine gaue occasion of diuision in the common wealth, & that there was not so grieuous a mischiefe, which by his meanes had not bene brought into the realme.

Although all men myght perceyue by the bookes hee had compiled, what manner of Doctrine it was: yet notwithstanstyng (he sayde) he knewe it more perfectly hymselfe, then any dyd, and that hee had learned it aparte at the Authours hande hymselfe.

For at such tyme as they had communication secretly amōg themselves,*Bucer (sayd he) would oftentymes wishe he myght be called by some other name, then by the name he had: for this purpose, as though knowyng hymselfe guiltie of so grieuous a crime, he might by this meanes escape vnknown to the worlde, and auoyd the talke that went among men of hym.

Moreouer, among other thyngs he told how Bucer held opinion (which thyng he should confesse to hym his own selfe) that God was the author and welspring,*not onely of good, but also of euill: and that whatsoeuer was of that sort, flowed from him, as from the headspring and maker therof. The which doctrine he vpheld to be sincere: howbeit, for offending diuers mens consciences, he durst not put it into mens heads.

Many other thyngs hee patched together of lyke purport and effect,* as of the supremacie of the Bish. of Rome, of the mariage of Priests, of diuorcements, and of shamefull vsurie also, as though he had deemed the same lawfull to be vsed among christen people, with diuers other of the lyke sort.

In all which his allegations, considering how lewdly without all shame he lied vpō Bucer (as his writyngs evidently declare) he dyd not so much hinder hys name with railyng vpon hym, as win vnto hymselfe an inexpressible infamy, by forging so shameful leesings vpon so worthy a man.

But what needeth wnesse to prooue hym a lyer? hys owne conscience shall make as much agaynst hym, as a number of men.

It was reported for a truth, and that by his owne familiar friends testified, that the said D. Perne himselfe, eiter immediately after hys Sermon, or els somewhat before he went to it, strikyng hymselfe on the brest,* and in a maner weepyng, wished at home at his house with all his heart, that God would graunt his soule might euen then presently depart and remaine with Bucers. For he knewe well enough that his life was such, that if any mans soule were worthy of heauen, he thought his in especially to bee most worthy.

Whiles he was thus talking to the people, in y^e meane tyme the leaues of the Church doores were couered ouer with verses:* in the which the yong men to shew their folly, which scarce knew hym by sight, blased Bucers name with most reprochfull Poetrie.

These thynges beyng dispatched, Perne (as thoughe he had sped his matter maruelously well) was for hys labour, of curtesie bidden to dinner to Trinitie Colledge by the Commissioners. Where, after the Table was takē vp they caused the sentence of condemnation to be copied out with all speed:* which beyng signed with the B. of Chesters seale, the next day followyng was for a triumph sent to London, with diuers of those verses and slaunderous Libels.

Besides this, they sent also their owne letters, wherein they both aduertised the Cardinall how farre they had proceeded in that matter, and also desired hys Grace that he would cause to be sent out of hand to Smith the Maior of the Towne, the Commaundement, commonly called a Writte for the burnyng of Heretikes.* For vnlesse hee had the Queenes warrant to saue hym harmelesse, hee would not haue to do in the matter: and that which remained to be done in that case, could not be dispatched till that Warrant came.

Whiles this pursiuant went on his iourney, they willed to be brought vnto them the bookes that they commāded before to be serched out. For they determined to throw them into the fire with Bucer and Phagius.

About the same tyme D. Watson takyng occasion vppon the day, because it was a high feast, in the which was woont to bee celebrated the memoriall of the Purification of the blessed Uirgin,* made a Sermon to the people vpon that Psalme: We haue receyued thy mercye (O Lord) in the midst of thy Temple, &c. In the which Sermon he spake much reproche of Bucer and Phagius, and of their doctrine.

He sayd, that these men, & all the heretikes of our time that were of the same opinion (the which for the most part he said, were budded out of Germany) amōg other things which they had perniciously put into mens heds, taughte to cast away all Ceremonies. Whereas notwithstanding the Apostle hymselfe commanded all thyngs to be done in due order.

And vpon that deed of the blessed Uirgin and Ioseph which was done by them as vpon that day, it was manifestly apparant, that they with our Sauour beyng then a little babe, obserued these rites and ceremonies for catholike men to teach. For he sayd,* that they came to the Temple the same tyme with waxe Candles in their hands, after the maner of procession (as they terme it) in good order with much reuerence and deuotion, and yet we were not ashamed to laugh and mocke at these things with the heretikes and schismatikes.

As he was tellyng his tale of Christ, Mary, and Ioseph, one of them that heard hym, a pleasaunt & mery conceited fellow, turnyng himselfe to him that stood next him, and if it be true (quoth he) that this man preacheth, which of them I pray you (if a man might spurre him a question) bare the crosse before them? * for that might not be missing in such solemne ceremonies. Not onely this man iested at the Preachers folly, but diuers other also laughed at his manifest vnshamefastnes, in preaching these so vain and foolish superstitions.

While hee was thus talkyng to hys audience,* Iohn Christopherson elected B. of Chichester, beyng strikē with a sodaine sicknes, fel downe in a sound among the prease, & with much adoe, beyng scarce able a good whyle to come to hymself againe, in the meane tyme babled many things vnaduisedly, and as though he had bene out of his wittes. Some thought it came vpon this occasion, because he had bene greatly accused before the Commissioners for mispēdyng & misordering the goods of the Colledge, & therefore was griued with the matter, knowyng that they had ben offended with hym, by that that Ormanet had canceled before his face a Lease of his, by the which hee had let to ferme to his brother in lawe a certaine Manor of that colledge, because the couenants seemed vnreasonable.

Page 1963By this tyme was returned agayne the Pursiuaunt, who (as we before tolde) was sent to London wyth the Commissioners letters, and brought with him a warrant for the burning of these men.

*Upon the receit wherof, they appoynted the vj. day of Febr. for the accomplishment of the matter. For it had hāged already a great while in hand.

Therefore when the sayd day was come, the Commissioners sent for the Uicechancellor, demandyng of hym in what case things stood, whether all things were in a readines for the accomplishment of this busines, or no. Understandyng by hym that all thyngs were redy, they commanded the matter to be broched out of hand.

*The Uicechancellor therefore taking with hym Marshall the common Notary, went first to Saint Michaels church where Phagius was buried. There he called forth Andrew Smith, Henry Sawyer, and Henry Adams, mē of the same parish, and bound them with an oth, to dig vp Phagius bones, and to bryng them to the place of execution. Marshall tooke their othes, receiuyng the like of Roger Smith and W. Hasell the Towne Sergeants, & of I. Capper, Warden of the same Church, for doyng the lyke with Bucer. Smith the Maior of the town, which should be their executioner, (for it was not lawfull for them to intermeddle in cases of bloude) commaunded certayne of hys Townesmen to wayte vpon hym in harnesse, by whō the dead bodies were garded, and beyng bound w^t ropes, and layd vppon mens shoulders (for they were enclosed in Chestes, Bucer in the same that hee was buried, and Phagius in a newe) they were borne into the middest of the Market steade, with a great trayne of people followyng them.

This place was prepared before, and a great Poste was set fast in the grounde to bynde the Carcasses to,* and a great heape of Woode was layed readye to burne them withall.

When they came thither, the Chestes were set vp on ende with the dead bodies in them, and fastened on both sides with stakes, and bound to the Post with a long iron Chayne, as if they had bene alyue. Fire beyng forthwith put too, as soone as it began to flame round about, a great sort of bookes that were condemned with them, were cast into the same.

*There was that day gathered into the towne, a great multitude of countreyfolke (for it was market day) who seying men borne to execution, and learnyng by inquirie that they were dead before, partly detested and abhorred the extreme crueltie of the commissioners toward the rotten carcasses, and partly laughed at their folly in makyng suche preparature. For what needeth any weapon, sayde they? As though they were afrayed that the deade bodies which felte them not, woulde doe them some harme? Or to what purpose serueth that Chayne wherewith they are tyed, sithence they might bee burnt loose wythout peryll? for it was not to bee feared that they woulde runne away.

Thus euery body that stode by, found faulte with the cruelnesse of the deed, either sharply, or els lightly, as euery mans mynde gaue hym. There were very few that liked their doyng therein.

¶The purpose of D. Watsons Sermon against Martin Bucer.

IN the meane tyme that they were a rostyng in the fire, Watson went into the Pulpit in S. Mary Church,* and there before his audience rayled vppon their doctrine, as wicked and erroneous, saying: that it was the ground of all mischief that had happened of a long tyme in the common weale. For beholde (sayd he) as well the prosperitie as the aduersitie of these yeares that haue ensued, and ye shall find that all thyngs haue chanced vnluckely to them that haue followed this new found fayth:* as contrary all thynges haue happened fortunately to them that haue eschewed it. What robberyng and pollyng (quoth hee) haue we seene in this Realme, as long as Religion was defaced with sects, the common treasure (gathered for y^e maintenance of the whole publike weale) and the goodes of the Realme shamefully spent in waste for the maintenance of a few folkes lustes, all good order broken, all discipline cast aside, holydayes appointed to the solemnising of ceremonies neglected: and that more is, the places themselues beaten downe, flesh and other kynde of prohibited sustenance eaten euery where vpon dayes forbidden, without remorse of conscience, the priests had in derision, the masse rayled vpon, no honour done to the Sacramentes of the church: all estates and degrees geuen to such a licentious liberty without checke, that all things may seeme to draw to their vtter ruine and decay.

And yet in the meane time the name of the gospel was pretended outwardly,* as though that for it men ought of duetie to geue credite to their erroneous opinions: where as in deed there is nothing more discrepant, or more to the slaunder of Gods worde then the same. For what other thyng taught they to remayne in that most blessed & mysticall Sacrament of the body of our Lorde, then bare vnleauened bread? And what els doe the remnaunt of them teach vnto this day? Whereas Christ by expresse wordes doth assure it to be his very body. Howe perillous a doctrine is that which concerneth the fatall and absolute necessitie of Predestination? And yet they set it out in suche wyse, that they haue left no choise at all in things. As who should say, it skilled not what a man purposed of any matter, sithens he had not the power to determine otherwyse then the matter should come to passe. The which was the peculiar opinion of them, that made God the authour of euill, bringyng men thorough this perswasion into such a carelesse securitie of the euerlastyng eternitie, that in the meane season it made no matter eyther toward saluation, or toward damnation, what a man did in this lyfe. These errors (whiche were not euen among the Heathen men) were defended by them with great stoutnesse.

These and many such other thyngs he slanderously & falsly alledged against Bucer,* whose doctrine (in such sort as he himselfe taught it) eyther he would not vnderstand, or els he was mynded to slaunder. And yet he was not ignoraunt, that Bucer taught none other thynges then the very same whereunto both he and Scotte in the raigne of K. Edward the vj. had willingly assented by subscribyng thereto with their owne handes. While hee talked in this wyse before the people, many of them that had writtē verses before, did set vp other new, in the which lyke a sort of waterfrogges, they spued out their venomous malice agaynst Bucer and Phagius. This was the last act of this Enterlude, and yet there remained a few thynges to bee done, among the which was the reconciling of two churches, of our Lady, & of S. Michaell, which we declared to haue bene enterdicted before.

This was done the next day followyng, by the aforesayd B. of Chester, with as much ceremoniall solemnitie as the law required. But that impanate God, whom Bucers carcasse had chased from thence, was not yet returned thether agayne: neither was it lawfull for hym to come there any more, but if he were brought thether with great solemnitie. As I suppose, duryng all the tyme of hys absence,* he was entertained by the Commissioners at Trinitie Colledge, and there continued as a Sojourner. For thither came al the Graduates of the Uniuersitie, the 8. of February, of gentlenes and curtesie, to bryng hym home agayne. Amongst the which number, the Bish. of Chester (worthy for hys estate to come nearest to hym, because hee was a B.) tooke and caried hym cladde in a long Rochet, and a large Tippet of Sarcenet about hys necke, wherein he wrapped his Idoll also. Ormanet Datarie had geuen the same a little before to the Uniuersitie, for that and such lyke purposes.

When this Idoll should returne home, hee wente not the straightest and nearest way as other folkes are woont to go, but he fetched a compasse about the most part of the towne, and romed through so many of the streetes, that it was a large houre and more, ere he could find the way into his Church agayne. I beleue the auncient Romaines obserued a custome not much vnlike this in their process•on, when they made supplications at the shrines of al their Gods. The order of which procession was this: the maisters Regents went before singyng with a lowde voyce:Salue festa dies. &c.* Next then followed the B. of Chester, about hym went Ormanet and his fellowe Commissioners, with the maisters of the colledges, bearing euery mā a long Taper light in hys hand. After whom a little space of, followed other degrees of the Uniuersitie. Last behind came the Maior and hys Townesmen. Before them all went the Bedles, crying to such as they mette, that they should bowe themselues humbly before the hoste. If any refused so to doe, they threatned to send hym forthwith to the Tolboth. Their God beyng ledde with this pompe, and pacified with great sacrificed Hostes of Bucer & Phagius, at length settled hymselfe agayne in his accustomed rounge.

Scot of Chester prayed with many wordes, that that day might be luckie and fortunate to hymselfe, and to all that were present, and that from that day forward (nowe that Gods wrath was appeased, and all other thyngs set in good order) al men would make themselues conformable to peace & quietnes, namely, in matters appertainyng Page 1964 to Religion. After this they bestowed a few dayes in punishing and amercyng such as they thought had deserued it. Some they suspended from geuyng voyces eyther to their owne preferment, or to the preferment of any other. Some they forbade to haue the charge of pupils,* least they should infect the tender youth (being pliable to take what print soeuer should be layd vpon them) with corrupt doctrine and heresie, others they chastised wrongfully without any desert, and many a one they punished, contrary to all right and reason.

Last of all they set forth certayne statutes, by y^e which they would haue the vniuersitie hereafter ordered. Wherin they enacted many thynges as concernyng the election of their Officers of the Uniuersitie, of keepyng and administryng the goods of the Uniuersitie,* and of many other thyngs. But especially they handled the matter very circumspectly for religion. In the which they were so scrupulous, that they replenished all thyngs, eyther with opē blasphemy, or with ridiculous superstition. For they prescribed at how many Masses euery man should be day by day, and how many Pater nosters and Auies euery manne should say when he should enter into the Church, and in his entrance, after what sort he should bow hymself to the aultar, and how to the maister of the house, what he shuld do there, and how long he should tary, how many, & what praiers he should say, what, and how he should sing, what meditations other shoulde vse while the Priest is in hys Memento, mumbling secretly to himselfe, what time of the Masse a man should stand, and when he should sit down, when he should make curtesie, when exclusiue, when inclusiue, and many other superstitious toyes they decreed that it was a sport then to behold their superstitions, and were tedious now to recite them.

Moreouer, these maisters of good order, for fashions sake, ordained that euery man should put on a surples, not torne nor worne, but cleane, forbidding them in any wyse to wipe their noses thereon.

These thyngs thus set at a stay, when the Commissioners were now ready to goe their wayes, the Uniuersitie for so great benefits (which she should not suffer to fal out of remembraunce many yeares after) couetyng to shewe some token of curtesie towards them agayne,* dignified Ormanet and Cole with the degree of Doctorship for all the residue, sauyn Christopherson, who now, by reason he was elected Bishop, preuentynge that degree, had receyued that order before. Thus at length were sent away these peacemakers that came to pacifie strifes and quarels, who through prouokynge euery mā to accuse one another left such gaps and breaches in mens harts at their departure, that to this day they could neuer be closed nor ioyned together agayne.

These Commissioners, before they departed out of the Uniuersitie,* gaue commaundement, that the Maisters of euery house should copy out their Statutes, the which beside common Ordinaunces, contained in them certayne Rules of priuate Order, for euerye House particularly. Swinborne (who as I sayd, was M. of Clarehall) being demaunded whether he would haue those thyngs engrossed in parchment or in paper,* aunswered that it made no matter wherein they were written: For the Paper, or a sleighter thing that were of lesse continuance then Paper, would serue the turne well enough: For he sayd, a slenderer thyng then that, would last a great deale longer then those dercees should stand in force. Neither was the man deceiued in his coniecture: For within two yeares after, God beholdynge vs with mercy, called Queene Mary out of this life, the 17. day of Nouember, an. 1558. After whom her sister ELIZABETH succedynge in y^e kingdome, raised to life agayne the true religion. Whereupon as the church of Christ began by little & little to florish. So the memory of Bucer and Phagius (although their bones were burnt by Cardinall Poole) was restored agayne by this godlye Queene ELIZABETH, who gaue then in Commission to Math. Parker then Archbishop of Canterbury, and to Edmund Grindall then Bishop of London, to Maister Gualter Haddon and others: For the performaunce of whiche Commission, the sayd Reuerend Bishoppes addressed their Letters to the Uicechancellor, &c.

☛ The Oration of M. Acworth, Oratour of the Vniuersitie, at the restitution of Martin Bucer, and Paulus Phagius.

I Am in doubt whether I may entreate of the prayse and commendation of so great a Clarke (for the celebratyng whereof,* this assembly and concourse of yours is made this day) or of the vices and calamities, out of the whiche we bee newly deliuered, or of them both, considering the one cannot be mentioned without the other. In the which tymes ye felt so much anguish and sorrow (my right dere brethren) that if I should repeat them and bryng them to remembraunce agayne, I feare me, I should not so much worke a iust hatred in vs towards them, for the iniuries receyued in them, as renew our olde sorrow and heuines. Agayne, men must needes account me vnadvised and foolish in my doynge, if I should thinke my selfe able to make him which hath lyued before our eyes in prayse and estimation, more famous and notable by my Oration, which he by his liuyng and conuersation hath oftentimes polished. But the wickednes of the tymes which endeouored to wipe cleane out of remembrance of men the name that was so famous and renoumed in euery mans mouth, did much profite hym. In so much, that both in his life tyme all thyng redounded to hys continuall renowme, and in especially, after hys decease nothing could be deuised more honourable, then w^t so solemn furniture & ceremonies, to haue gone about to haue hurt y^e memorial of such a worthy man, & yet could not bryng to passe the thyng that was so sore coueted, but rather broght that thing to passe, which was chiefly sought to be auoyded. For the desire that men haue of the dead, hath purchased to many men euerlasting fame, and hath not taken away immortalitie, but rather amplified and increased the same. By meanes whereof it commeth to passe, that he y^t wil intreat of those things that pertaine to the prayse of Bucer after hys death, can not chuse but speake of the crabbednesse of the tymes past, vpō the which riseth a great encrease and augmentation of his prayse. But his lyfe so excellently set foorth, not onelye by the writyngs of the learned Clarkes, Cheeke and Carre, and by the liuely voyce of the right famous D. Haddon, vttered in this place to the great admiration of all the hearers, when his body should be layd into his graue to bee buried, and after his buriall by the godly and most holye preachings of the right Reuerend father in Christ y^e Archbishop of Caunterbury that now is, and of D. Redman, the which for the worthinesse and excellencie of thē, ought to stick longer in our myndes vnwrittē, then many things that are penned and put in print, but also by the great assembly of all the degrees of the Uniuersitie the same daye, in bringyng hym to his graue, and the nexte day after by the industry of euery man that was endued w^t any knowledge in the Greeke or Latine tonges: of the which, there was no man but set vp some Uerses as witnesses of hys iust and vnfeined sorrow, vpon the wals of the Church: that neither at that tyme any reuerence or duety which is due to the dead departyng out of this lyfe, was then ouerslipped, or now remayneth vndone that may seeme to pertaine either to the celebratyng of the memoriall of so holy or famous a person, or to the consecrating of hym to euerlastyng memory. We at that tyme saw with our eyes this Uniuersitie flourishing by his institutions, the loue of sincere religion, not onely engendred, but also confirmed and strengthened through his continuall and daily preachyng. In so much that at such tyme as hee was sodainly taken from vs, there was scarce any man that for sorrow could find in his hart to beare with the present state of this life, but y^t either he wished with al his hart to depart out of this lyfe w^t Bucer into another, & by dieng to follow hym into immortality, or els endeouored hymselfe with weepyng and sighyng to call hym agayne, beyng dispatched of all troubles into the prison of this body, out of y^e whiche he is escaped, lest he shuld leaue vs as it were standyng in battaile ray without a Captayne, and he hymselfe as one casshed, depart with hys wages, or as one discharged out of the Campe, withdraw hymselfe to the euerlasting quietnesse and tranquillitie of the soule. Therefore all men euidently declared at that tyme, both how sore they tooke hys death to hart, and also, how hardly they could away with the misture of such a man. As long as the ardēt loue of his religion (wherewith we were inflamed) florished, it wrought in our hartes an incredible desire of hys presence among vs. But after the tyme that the godly man ceased to be any more in our sight, and in our eies, that ardent and burnyng loue of religion by little and little waxed cold in our myndes, and according to the times y^t came after (which were both miserable and to our vtter vndoing) Page 1965 it began not by little and little to be darkened,* but it altogether vanished away, and turned into nothing. For we tell agayne into the troublesomnesse of the popish doctrine: the old rites & customs of the Romish church, were restored agayne, not to the garnishment & beautifieng of the christian Religion (as they surmised) but to the vtter defacing, violating, & defiling of the same. Death was set before the eyes of such as perseuered in the christē doctrine that they had learned before. They were banished y^e realm that could not apply themselues to the tyme, & do as other mē did: such as remained, were enforced either to dissēble, or to hide themselues and creepe into corners, or els as it were by drinking of the charmed cup of Circes, to bee turned and altered, not only from the nature of man into the nature of brute beasts, but (that far worse and much more monstrous is) from the likenes of God & his Angels, into the likenes of deuils. And all England was infected w^t this malady. But I would to God the corruption of those tymes which ouerwhelmed all the whole realme, had not at least wise yet pierced euery part & member thereof. Of the which there was not one but that (besides the grieffe y^t it felt, with the residue of the body, by reason of the sicknes & contagion spred into the whole) had some sorrow & calamitie peculiarly by it selfe. And to omit the rest (of the which to entreat, this place is not appointed, nor the time requireth ought to be spoken) this dwelling place of the Muses (which we call the Uniuersitie) may be a sufficient witnes what we may iudge of all the rest of the body. For certes my brethren, the thing is not to be dissembled, that cannot be hidden. We applieng our selues to those most fil^tthy tymes, haue most shamefully yelded like faint harted Cowards, which had not the stomackes to sustaine y^e aduersities of pouerty, banishment, and death. Which in our liuyng and conuersatiō kept neither the constancy taught vs by philosophy, nor yet the patience taught vs by holye scripture, which haue done all things at the commaundement of others. And therefore that which the Poete (although in another sence) hath trimly spoken, may well be thought to haue bene truly prophesied vpon vs.

The tymes and seasons changed be:

And changed in the same are we.

Diuers of them that were of a pure and sincere iudgement as conceruyng religion, beyng driuen from hence & distroubled, the rest that remained tasted and felt of the inhumanity of them in whose hands the authoritie of doing things here consisted: although to say the truth. I haue vsed a gentler terme then behooued. For it is not to bee accompted inhumanitie, but rather immanitie & beastly cruelty, the which, when they had spent all kynds of tormēts and punishments vpon the quicke, when they had cruelly taken from such as constantly perseuered, life, from others riches, honors, and all hope of promotion, yet they coulde not be so satisfied, but that incensed and stirred with a greter fury, it began to outrage euen agaynst the dead. Therfore where as in euery singuler place was executed a singular kynd of cruelty, in so much, that there was no kynd of cruelnes that could be deuised, but it was put in vre in one place or other, this was proper or peculiar to Cambridge, to exercise the cruelty vppon the dead, which in other places was extended but to the quicke. Oxford burnt vp the right reuerend fathers, Cranmer, Ridley, and Latymer, the noble witnesses of the cleare light of the Gospell. Moreouer, at London perished these two lanternes of light, Rogers and Bradford: In whome it is hard to say whether there were more force of eloquence and vtterance in preaching, or more holynes of lyfe and conuersation. Many other without number both here and in other places were consumed to ashes for bearyng record of the truth. For what City is there that hath not flamed, I saye not with burning of houses and buildings, but with burnyng of holy bodies? But Cambridge, after there were no more left alyue vpon whom they might spue out their bitter poyson, played the mad Bedlem against the dead. The dead men, whose liuyng no man was able to finde faulte with, whose doctrine no man was able to reprocue, were by false and slanderous accusers indited, contrary to the lawes of God and man sued in the law, condemned, their sepulchres violated and broken vp, their carcasses pulled out and burnt with fire. A thyng surely incredible if wee had not seene it with our eyes, and a thing that hath not lightly bene heard of. But the haynousnes of this wicked act, was spred abroad as a common talke in euery mans mouth, and was blowen and dispersed through all Christendome. Bucer by the excellency of hys wit and doctrine knowen to all men, of our countrey men in maner craued, of many others intreated & sent for, to the intent he might instruct our Cambridge men in the sincere doctrine of the christen religion, beyng spent with age, and hys strength vtterly decayed, forsooke his owne countrey, refused not the tediousnesse of the long iourney, was not afrayd to aduenture hymselfe vpon the sea, but had more regard of the dilatyng and amplifieng of the Church of Christ, than of all other thyngs. So in conclusion he came, euery man receyued and welcommed hym: afterward he liued in such wyse, as it might appeare he came not hither for his owne sake, but for ours. For he sought not to driue away y^e sicknesse that he had taken by the troublesome trauaile of his long iourney: and albeit his strength were weakened & appalled, yet he regarded not the recouery of hys health, but put hymselfe to immoderate labour and intollerable payne, onely to teach and instruct vs. And yet toward this so noble and worthy a person while he lyued, were shewed all the tokens of humanitie and gentlenesse, reuerence and curtesy that could be, and when he was dead, the most horrible crueltie and spight that might be imagined. For what can be so commendable, as to grant vnto the liuyng house, and a bidyng place, and to the dead burial? Or what is he that will find in his heart to geue entertainment, & to cherish that person in his house with all kynde of gentlenes that he can deuise, vpon whom he could not vouchsafe to bestow buriall when he is dead? Agayne, what an inconstancy is it, with great solemnity, and with much aduauncement and commendation of his vertues, to bury a man honourably, and anone after to breake vp his tomb, and pull him out spitefully, and wrongfully to slander him beyng deade, who duryng his lyfe tyme alway deserued prayse? All these things haue happened vnto Bucer, who whilest hee lyued, had free accesse into the most gorgeous buildyngs and stately pallaces of the greatest Princes, & when he was dead, could not be suffred to enioy so much as his poore graue. Who beyng layd in the ground, nobly to his eternall fame, was afterward to hys vtter defacing spightfully taken vp and burned. The which thynges albeit they did no harme to the dead (for the deade carcasses feelee no payne, neyther doth the fame of godly persons depend vpon the report of vulgar people, and the lyght rumours of men, but vpon the rightfull censure & iust iudgement of God) yet it reprooueth an extreme cruelnesse and vnsatiabie desire of reuengemēt, in them which offer such vtter wrong to the dead. These persons therefore whome they haue pulled out of their graues and burned, I beleue (if they had bene alyue) they would haue cast out of house and home, they would haue driuen out of all mens company, and in the ende with most cruell tormentes haue torne them in peeces, beyng neuerthelesse Alientes, beyng Straungers, and beyng also fetched hether by vs oute of such a countrey, where they not onely needed not to feare any punishment, but contrary wise were alwayes had in much reputation, as well among the noble and honourable, as also among the vulgare and common people. But yet how much more gentle then these men, was Byshop Gardiner, otherwyse an earnest defender of the Popishe doctrine. Who agaynst his owne countrey men, let passe no crueltie wherby he might extinguish with f•re & sword the light of the Gospell: and yet he spared Forreiners, because the right of them is so holye, that there was neuer nation so barbarous, that would violate the same. For when he had in his power the renowned Clarke Peter Martyr then teachyng at Oxford, he would not kepe hym to punish hym, but (as I haue heard reported) when hee should go his way, he gaue hym wherewith to beare hys charges. So that the thyng which he thought he might of right do to his owne countrey men, he iudged vnlawfull to do to strangers. And whom the law of God coulde not withhold from the wicked murdering of his owne countrey men, hym did the lawe of man bridle from killyng of straungers, the whiche hath euer appeased all barbarous beastlynnesse, and mitigated all cruelty. For it is a poynt of humanitie for man and man to meete together, and one to come to an other, though they be neuer so far separated & set asunder, both by sea & by land, without the which accesse, there can be no entercourse of merchādise, there cā be no conference of wits, which first of all engendred lerning nor any commoditie of societie long to continue. To repulse them that come to vs, and to prohibite thē our countries, is a poynt of inhumanitie. Now to entreat them euill that by our sufferance dwel among vs, and haue encrease of household and household stuffe, it is a poynte of wickednesse. Wherefore this crueltie hath farre surmounted the cruelty of all others, the which to satisfie the vnsatiable greedinesse thereof, drewe to execution, not onelye straungers, brought hether at our entreataunce and sending for, but euen the withered and rotten carcasses digged out of their graues: to the intent that the immeasurable Page 1966 thirst which coulde not be quenched with shedding the bloud of them that were aliue,* might at the least be satisfied in burning of dead mens bones. These (my bretheren) these I say, are the iust causes which haue so sore prouoked the wrath of God agaynst vs, because that in doing extreme iniury to the dead, we haue bene prone and ready: but in putting the same away, we haue bene slow and slacke. For verely I beleue (if I may haue liberty to saye freely what I thinke) ye shall beare with me (if I chaunce to cast forth any thing vnadvisedly in the heat and hasty discourse of my Oration) that euen this place, in the whiche we haue so often times assembled, being defiled with that new kinde of wickednesse, such as man neuer heard of before, is a let and hindraunce vnto vs, when we call for the helpe of God, by meanes whereof, our prayers are not accepted, which we make to appease the Godhead, & to win him to be sauorable vnto vs agayne.

The bloud of Abell shed by Cain, calleth and crieth frō the earth that sucked it vp: likewise, the vnderdeserued burning of these bodyes, calleth vpon God almighty to punish vs, and cryeth, that not onely the Authours of so greates a wickednesse, but also the Ministers thereof are vnpure, the places defiled, in which these thinges were perpetrated, the ayre infected which we take into our bodyes, to the intent that by sundry diseases and sickenneses we may receiue punishment for so execrable wickednesse. Looke well about ye (my deare brethrē) and consider with your selues the euils that are past: & ye shall see how they tooke theyr beginning at Bucers death, following one in anothers necke euen vnto this day. First and formost whē we were euen in the chieftest of our mourning and scarcely yet recomforted of our sorrow for his death, the sweating sicknesse lighted vpon vs, the whiche passed swiftly thorow all Englande, and as it were in haste dispatched an innumerable company of men: Secondly, the vntimely death of our most noble king Edward the sixt (whose life in vertue surmounted the opinion of all men, and seemed worthy of immortality) happened contrary to mens expectation in that age, in which vnlesse violence be vsed, fewe do dye. The conuersion of Religion, or rather the euersion and turning therof into papistry. The incursiō and domination of straungers, vnder whose yoke our neckes were almost subdued. The importunate cruelty of the Byshops agaynst the Christians, which executed that wickednesse, for making satisfaction whereof, we are gathered together this daye. These are the thinges that ensued after his death: but after his burning ensued yet greeuouser thinges. Namely newe kinde of plagues, and contagious diseases, vnknowne to the very Phisitians, whereby eyther euery mans health was appayred, or els they were brought to theyr graues, or elles very hardly recouered: bloody battel•es without victory, whereof the profite redounded to the enemy, and to vs the slaughter with great losse. The which thinges doe euidently declare, that God is turned from vs, and angry with vs, and that he geueth no eare to our prayers, and that he is not moued with our cries and sighes, but that he looketh, that this our meeting and assembly shoulde be to this end, that for as muche as we haue violated theyr coarces, we should doe them right agayne: so that the memoriall of these most holy men, may be commended to posteritye vnhurted and vndefamed. Wherefore amende yet at length (my brethren) which hytherto by reason of the variablenesse and vnconstancy of the times, haue beene wauering and vnstedfast in your hartes: shew your selues chearefull and forward in making satisfaction for the iniury you haue done to the dead, whome with so greate wickednesse of late ye endamaged and defiled: not by censing them with the perfumes of those odours and spices now worne out of vre, and put to flight, but with a true and vnfained repētance of the hart, and with prayer: to the intent that the heauenly Godhead, prouoked by our doinges to be our enemy may be our hūble submission be entreated to be fauorable and agreable to all our other requestes.

When Acworth had made an ende of his Oration, M. Iames Pilkinton the Queenes reader of the diuinity lecture,* going vp into the Pulpite, made a Sermon vpon the 111. Psalme, the beginning whereof is. Blessed is the mā that feareth the Lord.

Where intending to prooue that the remembraunce of the iust man shall not perishe, and that Bucer is blessed, & that the vngodly shall fret at the sight therof, but yet that all theyr attemptes shall bee to no purpose, to the entent this saying may be verified: I will curse your blessings, and blesse your curssinges, he tooke his beginning of hys owne person, that albeit he were both ready and willyng to take that matter in hande, partly for the worthinesse of the matter it selfe, and inesppecially for certayne singuler vertues, of those persons, for whome that Congregation was called, yet notwithstanding he sayde he was nothing meet to take that charge vpon him.

For it were more reason that he which before had done Bucer wrong, should now make him amendes for the displeasure. As for his owne part, he was so farre from working any euill agaynst Bucer, eyther in worde or deede that for theyr singular knowledge almost in al kind of lear'ning, he embraced both him and Phagius with all hys harte. But yet hee somewhat more fauoured Bucer, as with whom he had more familiarity and acquayntaunce. In consideration whereof, although that it was scarce conuenient, that he at that time should speake, yet notw^tstanding he was contented for frendshippe and curtesye sake, not to fayle them in this theyr businesse. Hauyng made this Preface, he entered into the pith of the matter, wherein he blamed greatly the barbarous crueltye of the Court of Rome, so fiercely extended agaynst the dead. He sayd it was a more heynous matter then was to be borne with, to haue shewed such extreme cruelnesse to them that were aliue: but for any manne to misbehaue himselfe in such wise towarde the deade, was such a thing as hadde not lightly bene heard of. Sauing that he affirmed this custome of excommunicating and curssing of deade folke, to haue come first from Rome. For Euagrius reporteth in his wrytinges, that Eutichius was of the same opinion, induced by the example of Iosias, who slew the Priestes of Baall, and burnt vppe the boanes of them that were deade, euen vppon the Aultars. Whereas, before the time of Eutichius this kinde of punishment was welneare vnknowne, neither afterwarde vsurped of any manne (that euer he heard of) vntill a nine hundreth yeares after Christ. In the latter times (the whiche howe muche the further they were from that golden age of the Apostles, so much the more they were corrupted) this kinde of cruelnesse beganne to creepe further. For it is manifestlye knowne, that Stephen the sixt Pope of Rome, digged vp Formosus, his last Predecessour in that Sea, and spoyling him of hys Popes apparell, buried him agayne in lay mans apparell (as the call it) hauing first cut off and throwne into Tyber his two fingers, with which, according to theyr accustomed maner, he was woont to blesse and consecrate. The whiche his vnspeakeably tyrannye vsed against Formosus, within sixe yeares after, Sergius the third encreased also agaynst the same Formosus. For taking vp his dead body and setting it in a Popes chayre, hee caused his heade to be smitten of, and his other three fingers to be cut from his hand, and his body to be cast into the ryuer of Tyber, abrogating and disanulling all his decrees, which thinge was neuer done by any man before that daye. The cause why so great crueltie was exercised (by the reporte of Nauclerus) was this: because that Formosus had beene an aduersarye to Stephen and Sergius when they sued to be made Bishops.

This kinde of crueltie vnharde of before, the Popes a while exercised one agaynst an other. But nowe, or euer they had sufficiently felte the smarte thereof themselues, they had turned the same vpon our neckes. Wherefore it was to be wished, that seeing it began among thē it might haue remayned still with the Authors thereof, & not haue bene spread ouer thence vnto vs. But such was the nature of all euill, that it quickly passeth into example, for others to do the like. For about the yeare of our Lord 1400. Iohn Wicklyfe was in lyke maner digged vp, and burnte into ashes, & throwen into a brooke that runneth by the towne where he was buried. Of the which selfe same sauce tasted also William Traye of Gloucester, a man of a worshipfull house, because he had written in his laste will that he shoulde be saued onely by fayth in Iesus Christe, and that there needed not the helpe of any manne thereto, whether he were in heauen or in earth, and therefore bequethed no legacye to that purpose as all other men were accustomed to doe. This deede was done sithens we may remember, aboute the 22. yeare of the raigne of Henry the 8. in the yeare of our Lord. 1530.

Now seeing they extended suche crueltie to the dead, he sayde it was an easie matter to coniecture what they would doe to the liuing. Whereof we had sufficient tryall by the examples of our owne men, these fewe yeares past. And if we woulde take the paynes to peruse thinges done somewhat lenger ago, we might find notable matters out of our owne Chronicles. Howbeit, it was sufficient for y^e manifest demonstration of that matter, to declare the beastly butchery of the Frenche King executed vppon the Waldenses, at Cabryer, and the places nere thereabout, by his captayne Miner, aboute the yeare of our Lorde. 1545. Page 1967 then the which there was neuer thing read of more cruelty done,* no not euen of the barbarous Paganes. And yet for all that when diuers had shewed theyr vttermost cruelty both agaynste these and many others, they were so farre from theyr purpose in extinguishing the light of the Gospell, which they endeouored to suppress, that it increased dayly more and more. The which thing Charles the 5. (then whom all christendome had not a more prudēt Prince, nor the Church of Christ almost a sorer enemy) easily perceiued, and therefore when he had in his hand Luther dead, and Melancthon and Pomeran, with certayne other Preachers of the Gospell aliue, he not onely determined not any thing extreamely agaynst them nor violated theyr graues, but also entreating them gently sent thē away, not so much as once forbidding them to publish openly the doctrine that they professed. For it is the nature of Christes Church, that the more that Tyrauntes spurne agaynst it, the more it encreaseth and florisheth. A notable prooffe assuredly of the prouidence and pleasure of God in sowing the Gospell, was that comming of the Bohemians vnto vs, to the intent to heare Wickliffe, of whom we spake before, who at that time read openly at Oxford: and also the goyng of our men to the sayde Bohemians, when persecution was rayased agaynste vs.

But much more notable was it, that we had seene come to passe in these our dayes: that the Spanyardes sent for into this Realme of purpose to suppress the Gospell, as soone as they were returned home, replenished many partes of their Countrey with the same trueth of Religion, to the which before they were utter enemyes. By the which examples it might evidently be perceiued, that the Princes of this world labour in vayne to ouerthrowe it, considering how the mercy of GOD hath sowne it abroad, not onely in those Countreies that wee spake of, but also in Fraunce, Poole, Scotland, and almoste all the rest of Europe. For it is sayd, that some partes of Italy, (although it be vnder the Popes nose) yet do they of late encline to the knowledge of the heauenly trueth: Wherefore sufficient argument and prooffe mighte be taken by the successe and encrease therof, to make vs beleue that this doctrine is sent vs from heauen, vnlesse we will wilfully be blinded. And if there were any that desired to be perswaded more at large in the matter, hee might aduisedlye consider the voyage that the Emperour and the Pope with both their powers together, made ioyntly agaynst the Bohemians. In the which the Emperour tooke suche an vnworthy repulse of so small a handfull of his enemyes, that he neuer almost in all his life tooke the like dishonour in any place. Hereof also might bee an especiall example that death of Henry Kyng of Fraunce, who the same day that he had purposed to persecute the Church of Christe, and to haue burned certayne of his Garde, whome he had in prison for Religion, at whose execution he had promised to haue bene himselfe in proper person, in the middes of his triumph at a tourney, was wounded so sore in the head with a Speare by one of his owne Subiectes, that ere it was long after he dyed. In the which behalfe, the dreadfull iudgementes of GOD were no lesse approued in our owne Countreymen▪ For one that was a notable slaughterman of Christes Sayntes rotted alieue,* and ere euer he dyed, such a rancke sauour stemed from all his bodye, that none of his frendes were able to come at hym, but that they were ready to vomit. Another being in vtter dispayre well nighe of all health, howled out miserably. The third ranne out of his wittes. And diuers other that were enemyes to the Church perished miserablye in the end. All the which thinges were most certayne tokens of the fauour and defence of the diuine Maiesty towades his Church, and of his wrath and vengeance towades the Tyrauntes. And for as much as he had made mention of the Bohemians, he sayd it was a most apte example that was reported of their Capitayne Zisca: who when hee should dye, willed his body to be slayne, and of his skin to make a parchment to couer the head of a drumme. For it should come to passe, that when his enemies hearde the sound of it, they should not be able to stand agaynst them. The like counsell (he sayd) he himselfe nowe gaue them as concerning Bucer. That like as the Bohemians dyd with the skinne of Zisca, the same should they doe with the Argumentes and doctrine of Bucer. For as soone as the Papistes shoulde heare the noyse of hym, their Gewgawes would forthwith decay. For sauing that they vsed violence to such as withstoode them, their doctrine conteyned nothing that might seeme to any man (hauing but meane vnderstanding in holy Scripture) to be grounded vpon any reason. As for those thinges that were done by them agaynst such as could not play the madmen as well as they some of them sauoured of open force, and some of ridiculous foolishnes. For what was this first of all? was it not friuolous, that by the space of three yeares together, Masse shoulde be songe in those places where Bucer and Phagius rested in the Lord without any offence at al? and assoone as they tooke it to be an offence, straight waye to be an offence if any were heard there? or that it should not be as good then as it was before? as if that then vpon the soddeyne it had bene a haynous matter to celebrate it in that place, and that the fault that was past, should be counted the greuouser because it was done of lenger time before. Moreouer, this was a matter of none effect, that Bucer and Phagius onely should be digged vppe as who shoulde say,* that he alonely had embraced the Religion which they call heresy. It was well knowne howe one of the Burgesses of the Towne had bene minded towarde the Popish Religion. Who when he shoulde dye, willed neither ringing of Belles, Diriges, nor any other such kinde of trifles to be done for him in his anniuersary, as they terme it, but rather that they should go with Instruments of Musicke before the Maior and counsell of the Citty, to celebrate his memoriall, and also that yearely a Sermon shoulde bee made to the people, bequeathing a piece of money to the Preacher for his labour. Neither might he omit in that place to speak of Ward the paynter, who albeit he wer a man of no reputation, yet was he not to be despised for the religion sake which he diligently folowed. Neyther were diuers other moe to be passed ouer with silence, who were knowne of a certaynety to haue continued in the same sect, and to rest in other Churchyardes in Cambridge, and rather through the whole realme, and yet defiled not theyr Masses at all. All the which persons (for as much as they were all of one opinion) ought all to haue bene taken vppe, or els all to haue bene let lye with the same Religion: vnlesse a man would graūt, that it lyeth in theyr power to make what they list lawfull and vnlawfull at theyr owne pleasure. In the condemnation of Bucer and Phagius (to saye the trueth) they vsed to much cruelty, and to much violence. For howsoeuer it went with the doctrine of Bucer, certaynely they coulde finde nothing wherof to accuse Phagius, in as much as he wrote nothing that came abroad sauing a few things that he had translated out of the Hebrew and Chaldy touniges, into Latine. After his comming into the Realme, he neuer read, he neuer disputed, he neuer preached, he neuer taught. For he deceased so soone after, that he coulde in that time geue no occasion for his aduersaries to take hold on, whereby to accuse him whome they neuer hearde speake. In that they hated Bucer so deadly, for the allowable maryage of the Cleargy, it was theyr owne malice conceiued agaynste him, and a verye slaunder raysed by themselues. For he had for his defence in that matter, (ouer and besides other helpes) the Testimony of the Pope Pius the second, who in a certayne place sayth that vppon waighty considerations Priestes wiues were taken from them, but for more weighty causes were to be restored agayne. And also the statute of the Emperour, they call it the Interim, by the which it is enacted that such of the cleargye as were maryed shoulde not bee diuorced from theyr wiues.

Thus turning his stile from this matter to the Uniuersity, he reprooued in fewe wordes theyr vnfaithfulnes towardes these men. For if the Lord suffered not the bones of the King of Edome, being a wicked man, to bee taken vppe and burnt without reuengement (as sayth Amos) let vs assure our selues he will not suffer so notable a wrong done to his godly Preachers, vnreuenged. Afterward, when he came to the condemnation (whiche we tolde you in the former action was pronounced by Perne the Uicechauncellour, in the name of them all) being somewhat more moued at the matter, he admonished thē how much it stode them in hand, to vse great circumspectnes, what they decreed vpon any man by theyr voyces, in admitting or reiecting any man to the promotions and degrees of the Uniuersity. For that which should take hys authority from them, should be a great preiudice to all the other multitude, which (for the opinion that it had of theyr doctrine, iudgement, allowance, and knowledge) didde thinke nothing but well of them. For it would come to passe, that if they would bestow theyr promotions vpon none but meet persons, & let the vnmeet go as they come, both the common wealth should receiue much commodity and profite by them, and besides that they should highly please God. But if they persisted to be negligent in doing thereof, they should grievously endommage the common weale, and worthely worke theyr owne shame and reproch. Ouer and besides that the should greatly offend the maiesty of God, whose commaundement (not to beare false witness) they should in so doing breake and violate. Page 1968 In the meane while that he was speaking these and many other things before his audience,* many of the vniuersity, to set out and defend Bucer withall, beset the walles of the Church and Church porche on both sides with verses, some in Latine, some in Greeke, and some in English, in the which they made a manifest declaration howe they were minded both toward Bucer and Phagius. Finally, when his Sermon was ended, they made common Supplication and prayers. After thanks rendred to God for many other thinges, but in especially for restoring of the true and sincere religion, euery man departed his way.

For as muche as mention hath beene made of the death of the worthy and famous Clerke, Martin Bucer, & of the burning of his boanes after his death, it shall not be vnfruitful, as the place here serueth, to induce the testimony or Epitaph of Doctor Redman which came not yet in print, vpon the decease of that man.

¶The Epitaph or funerall verse of D. Redman, vpon the death of Mayster Bucer.

ET tu liuor edax procul hinc abscede maligna,

☞ The despightfull handling and madnesse of the papistes toward Peter Martyrs wife at Oxford, taken vp frō her graue at the commaundement of Cardinall Poole, and after buried in a dunghill.

ANd because the one Uniuersity shoulde not mocke the other,* like crueltye was also declared vpon the deade body of Peter Martyrs wife at Oxford, an honest, graue, and sober matrone, while she liued, and of poore people alwayes a great helper, as many that be dwelling there, can right well testify. In the yeare of our Lord. 1552. she departed this life, w^t great sorow of al those needy persōs, whose necessities many times & often she had liberally eased and relieued. Now, when Brokes Bishop of Glocester, Nicholas O•maner Datary, Robert Morwen President of Corpus Christi Colledge, Cole and Wright Doctors of the Ciuill Law, came thither as the Cardinals visitours, they among other thinges had in Commission to take vp this good woman agayne out of her graue, and to consume her carkas with fire, not doubting but that she was of y^e same religion that her husband had professed before, whē he read the Kinges lecture there. And to make a shewe that they would do nothing disorderly, they called al those before thē that had any acquayntance with her or her husband.* They ministred an othe vnto them that they should not conceale whatsoever was demaunded. In fine, theyr answere was that they knewe not what religion she was of, by reason they vnderstood not her language.

To be shorte, after these visitours had sped theyr busines they came for, they 〈◇〉 them to the Cardinall agayne, certifying him that vpon due inquisition made, they could learne nothing, vpon which by the law they might burne her. Notwithstanding the cardinall did not leaue the matter so,* but wrote downe his Letters a good while after to Marshall, then Deane of Frideswides that he should dyg her vp, and lay her out of christian buriall, because she was interred nigh vnto S. Frideswides relicks, sometime had in great reuerence in that Colledge. Doct. Marshal like a prety man calling his Spades and mattockes together in the euening,* when he was well whittled caused her to be taken vp, and buried in a dunghill.

Howbeit, when it pleased God vnder good Queene Elizabeth, to geue quietnes to his Church, long time persecuted with prison and death, then Doctour Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, Edmund Grindall Bishop of Lōdon, Richard Goodricke, with diuers other her Maiesties high Commissioners in matters Religion (nothing ignoraunt howe farre the aduersaries of the trueth had transgressed the boūdes of all humanity, in violating the sepulchre or graue of that good and vertuous woman) wylled certayne of that Colledge, in the whiche this vncurteous touch was attempted and done, to take her out of that vncleane & dishonest place where she laye, & solemnely in the face of the whole towne, to bury her agayne in a more decent & honest monumēt. For though of the body being once dead, no great estimatiō were to be had,* how or where the bones were layde: yet was some reuerence to be vsed toward her for sexe and womanhood sake. Besides, to saye the truth, it was great shame, that he which had trauelled so farre at king Edwardes request, from the place wherin he dwelt quietly, and had takē so earnest paynes, beyng an old man, in reading and setting forth the truth al he could, with learning to teach and instruct, and so wel deserued of that Uniuersity: * should with so vngentle a recompence of ingratitude be rewarded agayne, as to haue his wife, that was a godly woman, a straūger, good to many, especially to the poore, and hurtfull to none, either in word or deede, without iust deseruing, & beside theyr owne law, not proceeding against her according to the order therof, spitefully to be layd in a stincking dunghill.

To all good natures the fact seemed odious, & of suche as be indued with humanity, vtterly to be abhorred. Wherfore M. Calfield, then Subdeane of the Colledge, * diligētly prouided, that from Marshalls dunghill she was restored and translated to her proper place agayne, yea & withall coupled her with Frideswides boanes, * that in case any Cardinall wil be so mad hereafter to remoue this womā's bones agayne, it shall be hard for thē to discerne the bones of her from the other. And because to the intent the same might be notified to the mindes of men the better, the next day after, which was sonday, M. Rogerson preached vnto the people, in whiche Sermon by the way he declared the rough dealing of the aduersaries, which were not contented to practise their cruelty against the liuing, but that they must also rage agaynst one that was dead, and had lien 2. yeares in her graue. God graunt thē once to see their own wickednes. Amen.

And thus much touching the noble actes and straungenes of this worthy Cardinal in both y^e vniuersities: whervnto it shall not be impertinent, here also consequently to adioyne and set forth to the eyes of the worlde, the blinde and bloudy articles set out by Cardinal Poole, to be inquired vpō within his dioces of Canterbury, whereby it may the better appeare what yokes and snares of fond & fruitles traditions were layd vpon the poore flock of Christ, to entangle and oppresse them with losse of life and libertye. By the which wise mē haue to see what godly fruits proceeded from that catholicke Church and See of Rome. In which albeit thou seest (good Reader) some good Articles insparsed withall, let that nothing moue thee: for els how could such poysō be ministred, but it must haue some hony to relish the readers taste.

¶A History of tenne Martyrs condemned and burned within the Dioces of Caunterbury, for the testimony of Iesus Christ, and trueth of his Gospell.

*MEntion was made a little before of the persecution in Kent, pag. 1860. Where we declared, that fiftene were in the Castle of Canterbury imprisoned and cōdemned for Gods word. Of the which fiftene moreouer we shewed & declared fiue to be famished vnto death within the said castle, and buried by the high waye, about the beginning of Nouember. The other tenne, in the first month of the next yeare folowing, which was the yeare of our Lord. 1557. were committed vnto the fire, and there cōsumed to ashes, by Thornton, called Bishop or Suffragane of Douer, otherwise called Dicke of Douer, and by Nicholas Harsfield the Archdeacon of the sayd Prouince.

The names of these tenne godly and Christian Martyrs be these:

- Iohn Philpot of Tēterden.
- *W. Waterer of Bedingden.
- Stephen Kempe of Norgate.
- W. Haye Hythe.
- Thomas Hudsonne of Salenge.
- Mat. Bradbridge of Tenterden.
- Thomas Stephens of Bedingden.
- Nich. Finall of Tenterden.
- W. Lowicke of Crābroke.
- W. Prowting of Thornhā.

What the ordinarye articles were commonly obiected to them of Canterbury Dioces,* is before rehearsed, Pag. 1672. saue onely that to some of these, as to them that folowed after, as the time of theyr persecution did growe, so theyr articles withall did encrease to the number of two & twenty conteining such like matter as serued to the mainteinaunce of the Romish See.

To these articles what theyr answeres were, likewise, needed here no great rehearsall, seeing they all agreed together,* though not in the same fourme of woordes, yet in much like effecte of purposes: first graunting the Church of Christ, and denying the Church of Rome, denying the seuen Sacramentes, refusing the Masse, and the hearing of Latine Seruice, praying to Saynctes, iustification of works. &c, And though they did not al answere vniformely in some smaller thinges, as theyr learning serued them, yet in the most principall and chieftest matters they did not greatly discord. &c.

Of these tenne Godly Martyrs of Christe, sixe were burned at Canterbury, about the fiftene of Ianuary, that is. Kempe, Waterer, Prowting, Lowike, Hudson, and Haye. Other two, that is, Stephēs, and Philpot, at Wye, about the same moneth. Other two, which were Finall & Bradbrige, were burned both together at Ashford, the xvj. of the same.

The next moneth folowing, whiche was Februarye, came out an other bloody Commission from the king and Queene, to kindle vp the fire of persecution,* as though it were not hoate enough already: the contentes of whiche Commission I thought here not to pretermit: not for lack of matter, whereof I haue too much: but that the Reader may vnderstand how kinges & princes of this world, like as in the first persecutions of the primitiue Church vnder Ualerianus, Decius, Maximian, Dioclesian, Licinius. &c. so now also in these latter perillous dayes, haue set out all theyr maine force and power, with lawes, policy, & authorit to the vttermost they coulde deuise agaynst Christe and his blessed gospel. And yet notwithstanding al these lawes, constitutions, Iniunctions, and terrible proclamations prouided agaynst Christ and his Gospell, Christ yet styll continueth, his gospel florisheth, & truth preuaileth: kings and Emperors in their owne purposes ouerthrown, their deuises dissolued, theyr counselles confounded: as exāples both of this & of all times & ages do make manifest. But now let vs heare the intent of this Commission, in tenor as foloweth.

¶A bloody Commission geuen forth by King Philip and Queene Mary, to persecute the poore members of Christ.

PHilip and Mary by the grace of God king & Queene of England.* &c. To the right reuerend Father in God our right trusty & welbeloued Counsellour Thomas B. Elye, and to our right trusty & welbeloued Williā Windsore knight, L. Winsore, Edw. North knight, L. North, and to our trusty & welbeloued Counsellours, Io. Bourn knight, one of our chiefe Secretaries, Iohn Mordaunt knight, Frances Englefield knight, maister of our Wards and Liueries, Edward Walgraue knight, Mayster of our great Wardrobe, Nicholas Hare knight,* master of y^e Rolles, and our high Court of Chauncery, & to our trusty and welbeloued Tho. Pope knight, Roger Cholmley knight, Richard Rede knight, Rowlād Hil knight, William Rastall Sergeant at law, Hēry Cole Clerke, Deane of Paules, William Roper, & Rafe Cholmley, Esquiers, Williā Cooke, Thomas Martin, Iohn Story, & Iohn Uaughan Doctours of Law, greeting.

For as muche as diuers deuillishe and sclaunderous persons, hauing not onely inuented, bruted, and sette forth diuers false rumors, tales, and sedicious sclauēders against vs, but also haue sowne diuers heresies, and heretical opinions,* and sette forth diuers seditious bookes within thys our Realme of England, meaning thereby to styrrē vp diuision, strife, contention, & sedition, not onely amongst our louing subiectes, but also betwixt vs & our sayd subiectes, w^t diuers others outrageous misdemeanors, enormities, contemptes, and offences, dayly committed and done, to y^e disquieting of vs and our people, we minding the due punishment of such offenders, & the repressing of such like offences, enormities, and misbehauours from hencefoorth, hauing speciall truste and confidence in your fidelities, wisdomes, and discretions, haue authorised appoynted & assigned you to be our Commissioners, and by these presentes do geue full power & authority vnto you, and three of you, to enquire as well by the othes of twelue good and lawfull men, as by witnesses and all other meanes & politick wayes you can deuise, of all & singuler heretical opinions, Lollardies, heretical & seditious bookes cōcealemēts, contemptes, conspiracies, and all false rumors, tales, seditious and sclaunderous wordes or sayinges, raysed, published, bruted, inuented, or set forth against vs,* or either of vs or agaynst the quiet gouernance & rule of our peoples, & subiects, by bookes, lies, tales, or otherwise, in any Coūtie, Key, bowing, or other place or places, within this our realme of England or els where, in any place or places beyond the Seas, & of the bringing in, vtterers, buyers, sellers, readers, kepers, or cōueyers of any such letter, books, rumor, and tale, and of all and euery theyr coadiutors, cōsellers, comforters, procurers, abettors, and mainteiners, geuing vnto you and three of you, full power & authoritye by vertue hereof, to search out and take into your hands & possessiōs, all maner of hereticall and sedicious bookes, letters & writinges, wheresoeuer they or any of them shalbe foūd, as well in Printers houses and shops, as elsewhere, willing you and euery of you to searche for the same in all Page 1971 places,* according to your discretions.

And also to enquire, heare, and determine all and singular enormities, disturbances, misbehauours, and negligences committed in any Church, Chappell, or other halowed place within this Realme,* and also for and concerning the taking away or withholding any landes, tenementes, goodes, ornamentes, stockes of money, or other thinges belonging to euery of the same Churches & Chapels, and all accountes and reckoninges concernyng the same.

And also to enquire and search out all such persons as obstinately do refuse to receiue the blessed sacrament of the aultar, to heare masse, or come to their parish Churches, or other conuenient places appoynted for diuine seruice, and all such as refuse to go on Procession,* to take holy bread, or holy water, or otherwise doe misuse themselues in any church or other halowed place, wheresoeuer any of the same offences haue bene, or hereafter shalbe committed within this our sayd Realme.

Neuertheles our will and pleasure is, that when, and as oftē as any person or persons, hereafter being called or conuented before you, do obstinately persist or stand in any maner of heresy,* or hereticall opinion, that then ye or three of you do immediately take order, that the same person or persons, so standing or persisting, be deliuered & committed to his Ordinary, there to be vsed according to the spirituall and ecclesiasticall lawes.

And also we geue vnto you, or three of you, full power and authority,* to enquire and search out all vacabondes, and maysterles men, Baretours, quarrellers, and suspect persons, abiding within our City of London, & ten myles compasse of the same, and all assaultes and affrayes done & committed within the same city and compasse.

And further to search out all waste, decayes, and ruins of Churches,* Chauncelles, Chappelles, Parsonages and Uicarages in the Dioces of the same, being within thys Realme, geuing you and euery of you full power and authority by vertue hereof to heare and determine the same, and all other offences and matters aboue specified and rehearsed, according to your wisdomes, consciences, and discretions, willing and commaūding you or three of you, from time to time, to vse and devise all such politick waies and meanes, for the triall & searching out of the premises, as by you or three of you shal be thought most expedient & necessary: and vpon inquiry and due prooffe had, knowne, perceiued and tried out, by the confession of the parties, or by sufficient witnesses before you, or three of you, concerning y^e premises or any part thereof, or by any other waies or meanes requisite, to geue and award such punishment to the offenders, by fine, imprisonment, or otherwise, & to take such order for redresse and reformatiō of the premises, as to your wisdomes, or three of you shalbe thought meet and conuenient.

Further willing and commaundyng you and euerye three of you, in case you shall finde any person or persons, obstinate or disobedient, either in theyr appearance before you or three of you, at your calling or assignment, or els in not accomplishing or not obeying your Decrees,* Orders, and commaundementes in any thing or thinges, touching the premises or any part thereof, to commit the same person or persons so offending, to Ward, there to remaine, till by you or three of you he be discharged or deliuered. &c. And so forth with other such like matter, as foloweth, see in our first edition, pag. 1563.

The apprehension of two and twenty prisoners sent vp together for Gods word, to London, from Colchester.

AFTER this bloudye Proclamation or Commission thus geuen out at London, which was Februarye 8. the thyrde and fourth yeares of the Kynge and Queenes raighe, these new Inquisitours, especially some of them beganne to ruffle and to take vpon them no^t a little: so that all quarters were full of persecution and prisons almost full of prisoners, namely in the Dioces of Canterbury, wherof (by the leaue of Christ) we will say more anon.

In the meane time, about the Towne of Colchester, the wind of persecution beganne fiercely to rise: insomuch that three and twenty together, men and women were apprehended at one clap,* of the which xxiiij. one escaped. The other xxij. were driuen vp like a flock of Christen lambes, to London, with two or three leaders with them at most, ready to geue theyr skinnes to be pluckt of for the Gospels sake.* Notwithstanding the Bishops, afrayd belike of the nūber, to put so many at once to death, sought meanes to deliuer them, and so they did, drawing out a very easy submission for them, or rather suffering them to draw it out thēselues: notwithstanding diuers of thē afterward were takē againe & suffered, as hereafter ye shall heare (God willing) declared. Such as met them by the way cōming vp, saw them in the fieldes scattering in such sort, as that they might haue easily escaped away. And when they entred into the townes, their keepers called them againe into aray,* to go two & two together, hauing a band or line going betweene them, they holding the same in theyr handes, hauing another corde euery one about his arme, as though they were tied. And so were these fourteene men & eight women caried vp to London, the people by the way praying to God for them, to geue them strength. At the entring into London, they were pinioned, & so came into the city, as the Picture here shortly after folowing w^t their names also subscribed, doth describe. But first let vs declare concerning their taking and their attachers, contained in the Commissaryes letter, written to Boner: then, the Indenture made betwene the commissioners and the popish cōmissary. The letter of the Commissary is this.

¶The Letter of the Commissary, called Iohn Kingston, written to Bishop Boner.

AFTER my duety done in receiuing and accōplishing your honorable and most louing letters, dated the 7. of August: Be it knowne vnto your Lordship, that the 28. of August, the Lorde of Oxenford, Lord Darcy, H. Tyril, A. Brown, W. Bendlowes, E. Tyrill, Ric. Weston, Roger Apleton, published their cōmissiō to selfe landes and tenements & goodes of the fugitiues, so that the owners should haue neither vse nor commodity thereof, but by Inuētory remaine in safe keeping, vntill the cause were determined.

And also there was likewise proclaimed the queenes graces warrant, for the restitution of the Church goods within Colchester, & the hundredes thereabout, to the vse of Gods seruice. And then were called the parishes particularly, & the hereticks partly cōmitted to my examination. And that diuers persons should certify me of theyr ornamentes of theyr Churches, betwixt this and the Iustices next appearaunce, which shalbe on Michaelmas euen nexte. And that parish which had presented at two seuerall times, to haue all ornamentes, with other thinges in good order, were exonerated for euer, til they were warned againe, & others to make theyr appearaunce from time to time. And those names blotted in the Indenture, were indited for treason, fugit•ues, or disobedients, and were put forth by M. Brownes commaundement. And before the sealing, my Lord Da•cy said vnto me apart, and M. Bendlowes, that I should haue sufficient time to send vnto your Lordship, yea, if need were, the heretickes to remayne in'durance till I had an answeere from you: yea to the Lord Legates graces Commissioners come into the Country.

And mayster Browne came into my Lord Darcyes house & parlour belonging vnto M. Barnaby, before my sayd Lord and all the Iustices, and laid his hand of my shoulder, with a smiling cōūtenaunce, and desired me to make his harty commēdations vnto your good Lordship, and asked me if I would, and I said. Yea, with a good will. Wherefore I was glad, and thought that I should not haue bene charged with so sodeine carriage. But after dinner, the Iustices counselled with the Bayliffes, and with the Gaolers, and then after tooke me vnto them, and made collation of the Indentures, and sealed; and then Mayster Browne commaunded me this after noone, being the 30. of August, to go and receyue my prisoners by and by. And then I sayd, it is an vnreasonable commaundemēt, for that I haue attended of you here these three dayes, and this Sondag early I haue sent home my men. Wherefore I desire you to haue a conuenient time appoynted, wherein I may know whether it will please my Lord my maister to sende his Commissioners hither, or that I shall make carriage of them vnto his Lordship. Then M. Browne: We are certified, that the Councell hath written vnto your mayster, to make speed,* and to rid these prisoners out of hand: therefore go receiue your prisoners in haste. Then I: Sir, I shall receiue them within these tenne dayes. Then M. Browne: The limitation lyeth in vs, and not in you, wherfore get you hence.

Syr, ye haue indited and deliuered me by this Indenture, whose fayth or opinions I know not, trusting that ye will graūt me a time to examine them, least I should punish the Catholicks. Well sayd Maister Browne, for that cause ye shall haue time betwixt this and Wednesday. And I say vnto you maister Bailiffes, if he do not receiue them at your handes on Wednesday, set open your doore, and let them go.

Then I: My Lord and maisters all, I promise to discharge the towne and countrey of these heretickes, within ten dayes. Then my Lord Darcy sayd: Cōmissary, we do and must all agree in one Wherefore do you receiue them on, or before Wednesday.

Then I: My Lord, the last I carryed, I was goyng betwixte the Castell and Sayncte Katherines Chappell, two howres and an halfe, and in great preasse and daunger: Wherefore th^s Page 1972 may be to desire your Lordship,* to geue in commaundement vnto my Mayster Sayer, Bayliffe, here present, for to ayd me thorough his liberties, not onely with men and weapons, but that the Towne clarke may bee ready there with his booke to write the names of the most busie persons,* and this vpon three houres warning, all whiche both my Lorde and M. Browne commaunded.

And the 31. of August, William Goodwin of Muchburch husbandman, this brynger, and Thomas Alsey of Copforde youre Lordships Apparitour of your Consistory in Colchester, couenāted with me, that they shoulde hyre two other men at the leaste, whereof one should be a Bowman, to come to me the next day about two of the clocke at after noone, so that I might recite this bargayne before M. Archdeacon, and pay the money, that is, 46. shillings 8. pence. Wherefore they should then go foorth wyth me vnto Colchester, & on Wednesday before three of the clock in the morning receiue there at my hand within the Castell, and Motehall, fourteen men, and eight women, ready bound wyth giues and hempe, and driue, cary, or lead and feede with meat & drinke, as heretickes ought to be found continually, vnto suche time that the sayd William and Thomas, shall cause the sayde 22. persones for to be deliuered vnto my Lord of Londons Officers and within the safe keeping of my sayd Lorde, and then to bring vnto me againe the sayd Giues, with a perfect token, of, or from my sayd Lord, and then this couenant is voyde, or els. &c.

Maister Bendlowes sayde vnto mee in my Lorde of Oxenfordes Chamber at the kinges head, after I had sayd Masse before the Lordes, that on the morow after Holy Roode day, when wee shall meete at Chelmesford for the deuision of these landes, I thinke Mayster Archdeacon, you, and Mayster Smith shalbe fayn to ride with certaine of the Iury to those porcions and manours in your part of Essex, and in like case deuide our selues, to tread and view the ground with the Quest, or els I thinke the Quest will not labour their matter, and so doe you saye vnto Mayster Archdeacon.

Alice the wyfe of William Walleys of Colchester, hath submitted herselfe,* abiured her erroneous opinions, asked absolution, promised to do her solemne penance in her Parish Church at Saint Peters on Sondag next, and to continue a Catholicke & a faythfull woman, as long as GOD shall send her lyfe. And for these couenauntes, her husband standeth bounde in fiue pounce. Which Alice is one of the nine women of this your Indenture: and that shee is bigge with childe. Wherefore she remayneth at home, and this done in the presence of the Bayliffes, Aldermen, & towneclarke. And for that Maister Browne was certyfied, there was no Curate at Lexdon, he inquired who was the Farmer. The aunswere was made, Syr Fraunces Iobson. Who is the Parson? They of the Questmen answered, Syr Roger Chostlow. When was he with you? *

Not this fourtene yeares. How is your Cure serued? Now and then. Who is the Patron? My Lord of Arundell. And within shorte tyme after Syr Fraunces Iobson came with great curtesy vnto my Lord Darcies place. And of all Gentlemē about vs, I saw no more come in Sir Robert Smith Priest, sometime Chanon of Bridlington: now Curate of Appledote, in the wild of Kent, came to Colchester the 28. day of Aug. with his wife bigge with childe, of late diuorced, taken on suspition, examined of the Lordes, and M Browne tolde me that they haue receiued letters from the counsell, for the attachment of certayn persons, and e•pecialllye of one Priest, whose name is Pullen (but hys right name is Smith) doubting this Priest to be he the sayd Pullen, although neither he nor his wife would confesse the same.

Wherefore he lyeth stil in prison, but surely this is not Pullē. If it please your Lordshippe to haue in remembraunce, that the housholders might be compelled to bring euerye man his owne wife to her owne seate in the Churche in time of Diuine seruice it would profite much. And also there be yet standing Hospitals and other of like foundation about Colchester, whiche I haue not knowne to appeare at any visitation, as the Maister and Lazars of Mary Magdalene in Colchester, the Proctour of saynct Katherines Chappell in Colchester, the hospitall or Beadhouse of the foundation of Lord H. Marney, in Laremary, the Hospital and Beadman of little Horksley. Thus presuming of youre Lordships goodnes, I more then bold euer to trouble you, with thys worldly busines, beseeching almighty God to send your honorable Lordship a condigne reward.

From Eastthorp this present xxx. of August.

We found a letter touching the Maryage of Priestes in the handes of the foresayd Syr Robert Smith.* Also I desired Mayster Browne the doer of all thinges, to require the audience to bring in theyr vnlawfull writings and bookes. Who asked me if I had proclaymed the Proclamation. I sayd, yea. Then he sayd openly on the Benche, that they shoulde be proclaimed euerye quarter once And then take the Constables and Officers, and they alone •ake and punish the offenders, accordingly.

By your poore Beadman, Iohn Kingston, Priest.

These xxii. aforesayd prisoners thus sēt from Colchester to London, were brought at length to B. Boner. As touching the order and maner of their comming & brynging, the sayd Boner himselfe writeth to Cardinall Poole, as you shall heare.

A letter of B. Boner to Cardinall Poole.

MAY it please your good grace with my most humble obedience, reuerence and duetie,* to vnderstand that going to London vpon Thursday last, and thinking to be troubled with M. Germaines matter onely, and such other common matters as are accustomed, enough to wery a right strong body, I had the day following to comfort my stomacke withall letters from Colchester, that either that day, or the daye following I should haue sent thence 22. heretickes, indited before the Commissioners, & in dede so I had, & compelled to beare theyr charges as I did of the other, which both stode me aboue 20. nobles a summe of money that I thought full euill bestowed. And these heretickes, notwithstanding they had honest Catholicke keepers to conduct and bring them vp to me, and in all the way frō Colchester to Stratford of the Bow, did goe quietly, and obediently yet comming to Stratford, they began to take hart of grace and to doe as pleased themselves, for there they beganne to haue theyr garde, which generally increased till they came to Algate where they were lodged Friday night.

And albeit I tooke order that the sayde heretickes shoulde be with me very early on saterday mornyng, to the intent they mighte quietely come and bee examined by me, yet it was Page 1973

¶The Picture of xxij. godly and faythfull Christians, apprehended about Colchester, prisoned together in one band, and so with three leaders at the most, brought vp to London.

* betweene x. and a xi. of the clocke before they would come, and no waye woulde they take, but through Cheapside, so that they were brought to my house with about a thousande Persons. Which thing I tooke very strange and spake to sir Iohn Gressam then being with me, to tell the Mayor and the Sheriffes that thys thing was not well suffered in the City. These naughty hereticks all the way they came through Cheapside both exhorted the people to their part, and had much comfort à promiscua plebe, and being entred into my house and talked withall, they shewed themselves desperate and very obstinate, yet I vsed al the honest meanes I could both by my self and other to haue wonne them, causing diuers learned men to talke with them: and finding nothing in them but pride and wilfulnes, I thought to haue had them all hether to Fulham, and here to geue sentence agaynst them. Neuerthelesse perceiuing by my last doing that your grace was offended, I thought it my duetie before I any thing further proceded herein, to aduertise first your grace hereof, and knowe your good pleasure, whiche I beseeche your grace I may doe by thys trusty bearer. And thus most humblye I take my leaue of youre good grace, beseeching almighty God alwayes to preserue the same, At Fulllam, postridie Natiui .1556.

Your graces most bounden Bedesman and seruaunt, Edmond Boner.

By this letter of Bishop Boner to the Cardinall, is to be vnderstand, what good will was in this Bish. to haue the bloud of these men, and to haue past w^t sentence of condemnation agaynst them, had not the Cardinal somewhat (as it seemed) haue stayed his feruent headlines.* Concerning the which Cardinal, although it cannot be denied by his Actes and writings, but that he was a professed enemy, and no otherwise to be reputed but for a papist: yet agayne it is to be supposed, that he was none of the bloody & cruell sort of papistes,* as may appeare not only by staying the rage of this Byshop: but also by his solicitous wri^ting, and long letters written to Cranmer, also by y^e complaintes of certayne papistes, accusing him to the Pope to bee a bearer with the heretickes, & by the popes letters sent to him vpon the same, calling him vp to Rome, & setting Fryer Peto in his place, had not Q. Mary by special entreaty haue kept him out of the popes danger. All whiche letters I haue (if neede be) to shewe: besides also that it is thought of him that toward his latter end a little before his comming from Rome to England, he begā somewhat to sauour the doctrine of Luther, and was no lesse suspected at Rome:* Yea & furthermore did there at Rome conuert a certayne learned Spanyarde from papisme to Luthers side: notwithstanding the pompe and glory of the world afterward caryed him away to play the papist thus as he did. But of this Cardinall enough.

To returne now to this godly company agayne, first how they were brought vp in bandes to London, ye haue heard: Also how Boner was about to haue red the Sentence of death vpon them, & how he was stayed by y^e Cardinall ye vnderstand. As touching their confession, which they articulated vp in writing, it were tedious to recite the whole at length. Briefly touching the article of the Lords Supper (for the whiche they were chiefly troubled) thus they wrote, as here followeth.

The supper of the Lord.

W^heras Christ at his last supper, took bread, & whē he had geuē thanks he brake it & gaue it to hys disciples and sayd: take, eate, this is my body: * & likewise tooke the cup and thanked. &c. We do vnderstand it to be a figuratiue speache, as the most maner of his language was in parrables & darke sentences, that they which are carnally minded, should see with their eyes, and not perceiue, and heare with their eares & not vnderstand, signifying this, that as he did breake the breade among them, being but one loafe, & they al were partakers thereof, so we through his body, in that it was broken, and offered vpon y^e crosse for vs, are all partakers thereof, and his blood clenseth vs from our sinnes, & hath pacified Gods wrath towards vs and made the attonement betwene God & vs, if we walke henceforth in the light euen as he is the true light.

And in that he sayd further, do this in the remembrance of me, it is a memoriall and token of the suffering & death of Iesu Christ: and he commaunded it for this cause, * that y^e congregatiō of Christ should come together to shew his death, and to thanke and laud him for all his benefites, & magnifye his holy name, & so to breake the bread & drinke the wine, in remembrance that Christ had geuen his body and shed his blood for vs.

Thus you may well perceiue, though Christe called y^e bread his body, & the wine his blood, yet it followeth not, that the substaunce of his body shoulde be in the bread and wine: as diuers places in Scripture are spoken by Christ and the Apostles in lyke phrase of speech, as in Iohn. 15. I am the true vine, also in Iohn the .10. I am the doore, and as Page 1974 it is written in the 9. to the Hebrues, * and in Exodus 24. how Moyses tooke the blood of the Calues and sprinkled both the booke and all the people, saying: This is the blood of the couenant or Testament. And also in the 5. chapter of Ezechiell, how the Lord said vnto him concerning y^e third parte of his heare, saying: This is Hierusalem. &c.

Thus we see the Scriptures how they are spoken in figures,  and ought to be spiritually examined, and not as they would haue vs to say, that the bodily presēce of christ is in the bread, which is a blasphemous vnderstanding of the godly word, and is contrary to all holy scriptures. Also we do see that great Idolatry is sprong out of y^e carnall vnderstanding of the word of Christ:  This is my body, & yet dayly springeth, to the great dishonour of God, so that men worship a peece of bread for God, yea and hold that to be their maker.

After this confession of their fayth and doctrine, being written and exhibited, they also deuised a letter withall, in maner of a short supplication, or rather an admonition to the Iudges and Commissioners, requiring that Iustice and Iudgement, after the rule of Gods worde might be ministred vnto them. The cōpye of whiche theyr letter I thought here also to shew vnto the reader in forme as followeth.

A letter or supplication of the prisoners to the Iudges.

TO the right honourable audience before whome these oure simple writinges and the confession of our fayth shall come to be read or seene, we poore prisoners being fast in bandes vpon the tryall of our faythe,* whiche wee offer to bee tryed by the scriptures, pray most hartily, that for asmuch as God hath geuen you power, and strength ouer vs, as concerning our bodyes, vnder whom we submit our selues as obedient subiects in al things due, ye being officers and rulers of the people, may execute true iudgement, keepe the lawes of righteousness, gouerne the people according to right, and to heare the poore and helplesse in truth, and to defend their cause.

God for his sonne Iesus Christes sake, geue you the wisdom and vnderstanding of Salomon, Daud, Ezechias, Moyses, wyth diuers others most vertuous rulers, by whose wisdom & most godly vnderstanding, the people were iustly ruled, and gouerned in the feare of God, all wickednesse was by them ouerthrowne and beaten downe, and all godlinesse and vertue did flourish and spring. O God whiche art the most hyghest, the creator & maker of all thinges, and of all men both great and small, and carest for all alike, which doest try all mens workes and imaginations, before whose iudgement seate shal come both high and low, rich and poore, we most humbly beseeche thee to put into our rulers heartes the pure loue and feare of thy name, that euen as they thēselues would be iudged, and as they shall make aunswere before thee, so to heare our causes, to iudge with mercy, and to read ouer these our requestes and confessions of our fayth, with deliberation, and a godly iudgement.

And if any thing here seemeth to your honourable audience to be erroneous or disagreeing to the scripture, if it shall please your Lordship to heare vs patiently, whiche doe offer our selues to the scriptures, thereby to make aunswere, and to be tryed, in so doyng wee poore subiectes being in much captiuitie & bondage are most bound to pray for your noble estate and long preservation.

The request of these men being so iust, and theyr doctrine so sound, yet all this could not preuaile with the Bishop and other Iudges, but that Sentence shoulde haue proceeded agaynst them incontinent, had not the goodnes of the Lord better provided for his seruantes, then the Bishoppe had intended. For as they were now vnder the edge of the axe, ready to be condemned by sentence it was thought otherwise by the Cardinall, and some other wiser heades, fearing belike, leas by the death of so many together, some disturbance might rise. peraduenture among the people, and so was decreed among themselues, that rather they shuld make some submission or confessiō, such as they would themselues, and so to be sent home agayne, as they were in deed: howbeit diuers of them afterward, wer apprehended and put to deathe. But in the meane space as touching their submission which they made, this it was, as in forme here followeth.

¶The submission or confession of these aforesayd prisoners.

*BEcause our sauour Christ at his last supper took bread and when he had geuen thanks, he brake it, and gaue it vnto his Disciples and sayde: Take, eate, this is my bodye whiche is geuen for you, this doe in the remembraunce of me: Therefore according to the wordes of our sauoure Iesus Christ, we do beleue in the sacrament to be Christes body. And likewise he tooke the cup, gaue thanks, and gaue it to his Disciples and sayd: This is my bloud of the newe Testament which is shed for many.

Therefore likewise we do beleue that it is the bloud of Christ, according as Christes Church dothe minister the same. Unto the whiche Catholicke Church of Christe, we do in this, like as in all other matters submit oure selues promising therein to liue as it becommeth good chrystian men, and here in this realme to vse our selues, as it becommeth faythfull subiectes vnto our most gracious king and Queene, and to all other superiours bothe spirituall and temporall, according to our bounden dueties.

The names of them which subscribed to this submissi^on were these, Iohn Atkine, Alyn Symson, Richard George. Thomas Firefanne, William Munt, Richard Ioly Richard Gratwicke, Thomas Winsley, Richard Rothe, Richard Clerke, Stephen Glouer, Robert Colman, T. Merse, William Bongeor, Robert Bercocke, Margaret Hide, Elyn Euryng, Christian Pepper, Margaret feld, Alyce Munt, Ioane Winesley, Cysly Warren, Rose Alyn Anne Whitelocke, George Barker, Iohn Saxebye, Thomas Locker, Alyce Locker.

Who being, some, by the Lord Riche, some by other Iustices of peace, and Constables (their own neighbours) at the first accused, and apprehended for not comming to their parish Churches, were in the end sent vnto Boner Bish. of London,* and by hys commaundement the 27. day of Ianuary, were examined before Doctour Darbyshyre, then Chauncellour to the sayd Bishop, vppon the former generall Articles mentioned, pag. 1672.

Aunsweres to the Articles.

WHose aunsweres thereunto were, that as they confessed there was one true & Catholick church wherof they steadfastly beleueed,* and thought the Church of Rome to be no part or member: so in the same Church they beleueed there were but two sacraments,* that is to say Baptisme, and the supper of the Lorde. Howbeit some of them attributed the title and honour of a sacrament, to the holy estate of Matrimony, which vndoubtedly was done rather of simple ignoraunce then of anye wilfull opinion, and are thereof to be adiudged as before is admonished.

Moreouer, they acknowledged themselues to be Baptised into the fayth of that true Church, as in the thyrd article is specified. And here in reading, as wel of these Articles, as also of the rest, marke I beseech you, the crafty subteltie of these Catholicke Champions, who intermitting certayne poyntes of faith, and of the true Church, with the Idolatrous and superstitious mametry of theyr romyshe Sinagogue, cause the poore and simple people, for lacke of knowledge, oftentimes to fall into their crafty nettes.

For after they haue made them graunt a true Church with the Sacraments of the same, though not in such nūber as they would haue them, and also that they were christened into the fayth thereof, that is, * in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, they craftily now in the other their obiections, descending as it were from the fayth of the Trinitie, vnto theyr Idolatrous Masse & other superstitious ceremonyes, would make them grant that now in denying thereof, they haue seuered thēselues from the fayth of the true Church, whereunto they were Baptised, whiche is most false. For though the true lyght of Gods Gospel & holy word, was marueilously darkned and in a maner vtterly extinguished: yet the true fayth of the Trinitie, by the mercifull prouidence of God, was still preserued, and into the fayth therof were we baptised, and not into the beliefe and profession of their horrible Idolatry and vayne ceremonies.

These things not throughly wayed by these poore, yet faythfull, and true members of Christ, caused some of them ignorauntly to graunt, that when they came to the yeares Page 1975 of discretion, * and vnderstood the light of the Gospell, they did seperate themselues from the fayth of the Church, mea'ning none other but only to separate themselues from the admitting or allowing of such their popishe and erroneous trash as they now had defiled y^e church of christ w^tall & not from their fayth receiued in baptisme, * which in expres words in their aunsweres to y^e other articles they constātly affirmed, declaring the Masse and sacrament of the aultar, to be most wicked blasphemy agaynst Christ Iesus, & contrary to the truth of his Gospell, and therefore vtterly they refused to assent and to be reconciled againe therunto.

These aunsweres in effect, of them thus taken by the sayd Chauncellour, they were for that time dismissed: but the Bishop taking the matter into his owne handes, the vi. day of Marche, propounded vnto them certayne other new articles, the copy wherof followeth.

¶Other articles objected by Boner Bi. of London agaynst Tho. Loseby, Henry Ramsey, Thomas Thyrtell, Margaret Hide, and Agnes Stanley, the vi. day of March, being the second tyme of theyr examination.

*1. Firſt, that thou hast thought, beleued, and spoken, w^t in some part of the citie and Dioces of London, that the fayth, Religion, and Ecclesiasticall seruice here obserued and kept, as it is in the Realme of England, is not a true and a laudable fayth, Religion, and seruice, especially concerning the Masse, * and the 7. sacramentes, nor is agreable to Gods worde & testament, & that thou canst not finde in thy heart without murmuring, grudging, or scruple to receaue and vse it, & to conforme thy selfe vnto it, as other subiectes of this realme customably haue done and doe. *

2. Item, that thou hast thought. &c. that the english seruice set forth in the time of kinge Edward the vi. here in thys Realme of England, was and is good and godly, & Catholicke in all poynts, and that it alone ought here in this realme to be receiued, vsed, and practised, & none other.

*3. Item, likewise thou hast thought. &c. that thou art not bound to come to thy Parishe Church, & there to be present, and heare Mattins, Masse, Euensong and other Diuine seruice, song or sayd there.

4. Item, thou hast thought. &c. that thou art not bound to come to procession to the Church vpon dayes and tymes appointed, and to go in the same with others of the parish singing or saying then the accustomed prayers vsed in the Church,* nor to beare a taper or candel on Candelmas day nor take Ashes vpon Ashwednesday, nor beare Palmes vpon Palme sonday, not to creep to the crosse vpon daies accustomed, nor to receiue and kisse the paxe at Masse time nor to receiue holy water or holy bread, or to accept and al'lowe the ceremonies and vsages of the Church, after the maner and fashion as they are vsed in this realme.

5. Item, thou hast thought. &c. that thou art not bound at any time to confesse thy sinnes to any priest,* and to receiue absolution at his hands, as Gods Minister, not to receiue at any time the blessed sacrament of the aultar, especialllye as it is vsed in this Church of England.

6. Item, thou hast thought &c. that in matters of religion and fayth, thou must follow and beleue thine own conscience onely, and not to geue credite to the determination & common order of y^e Catholicke Church, & the sea of Rome nor to any member therof.

*7. Item, thou hast thought. &c. that all thinges do chance of an absolute and precise meere necessitie, so that whether man do wel or euil, he could not chuse but do so, and y^t ther'fore no man hath any free will at all.

*8. Item, thou hast thought &c. that the fashiō and maner of Christening of infantes, is not agreable to Gods word and that none can be effectually Baptised, and thereby saued except he haue yeares of discretion to beleue himself, & so willingly accept or refuse Baptisme at his pleasure.

9. Item, thou hast thought &c. That Prayers to Saints or Prayers for the dead,* are not auaylable and not allowable by Gods word, or profitable in any wise, and that the soules departed do straightwayes go to heauen or to hell, or els do sleep till the day of dome, so that there is no place of purgation at all.

10. Itē, thou hast thought &c. that all such as in the tyme of king Hen. the viii. or in time of Queene Mary of England, haue bene burned as heretickes, were no heretickes at all: but faythfull and good Christian people, especially Barnes, Garret, Ierome, Frith, Rogers, Hooper, Cardmaker, Latimer, Taylor, Bradford, Philpot, Cranmer,* Ridley, and such like, and that thou diddest and doest allowe, like, and approue all their opinions, & doest mislike their condemnations and burnings.

11. Item, thou hast thought &c. that fasting and prayers vsed in this Church of England, and the appoynting of dayes for fasting, and the abstayning from flesh vpon fasting dayes, and especially in the tyme of Lent, is not laudable or allowable by Gods word, but is hipocrisie & foolishnes: and that men ought to haue libertie to eate at all tymes all kindes of meate.

12. Item, * thou hast thought &c. that the sacrament of the aultar is an idoll, and to reserue and keepe it, or to honor it, is playne idolatry and superstition: and likewise of the masse and the eleuation of the sacrament.

13. Item, thou hast thought. &c. that thou or any els, conuented before an Ecclesiasticall iudge concerning matters of beliefe and fayth, art not, * nor is bound to make answer at all, especially vnder an othe vpon a booke.

¶ Their aunsweres to the Articles before obiected.

Their aunsweres to these obiections were, * that as touching the first, second, thyrd, fourth, fift, ninth, tenth, & twelfth, they generally graunted vnto, sauing that they de'nyed the soules of the departed to sleepe til y^e day of iudgement, as is mentioned in the ix. article.

And as concerning the sixt obiection, they thought thē selues bound to beleue the true Catholicke Church, so far forth as the same doth instructe them according to Gods holy word, but not to follow the determinations of the erroneous and Babilonicall Church of Rome.

As for the seuenth, eight, and thirteenth, they vtterly denyed, that euer they were of any such absurde opinions as are contayned therein, but they graunted that man of him selfe without the helpe and assistance of Gods spirite, hath no power to do any good thing acceptable in Gods sight.

To the eleuenth they sayd, * that true fasting and prayer vsed according to Gods word, are allowable and auaylable in his sight, and that by the same word euery faythfull man may eate all meates at all times, with thankesgeuing to God for the same.

After this y^e first day of Aprill, were they agayne conuented before the Bishop in his palace at London, where little appeareth to be done, excepte it were to know whether they would stand to their aunsweres, & whether they would recant or no. But when they refused to recant and deny the receiued and infallible truthe, the Byshop caused them to be brought into the open Consistory, the third day of the same moneth of Aprill in the forenone, where firste vnderstanding by them their immutable constauncye and stedfastnes, he demaunded particularly of euery one what they had to say, why he should not pronounce y^e Sentence of condemnation.

To whom Tho. Loseby firste aunswered: God geue me grace and strength to stand agaynst you, * & your Sentence, & also agaynst your law, which is a deuouring law, for it deuoureth the flocke of Christe. And I perceiue there is no way with me but death, except I would consent to your deuouring law, and beleue in that Idoll the Masse.

Next vnto him answered Thomas Thirtell, saying: my Lorde, I say thus, if you make me an hereticke, then you make Christ and all the 12. Apostles heretickes, * for I am in the true fayth and right beliefe, & I will stand in it, for I know full well I shall haue eternall lyfe therefore.

The Byshoppe then asked the lyke question of Henry Ramsey. Who sayd agayne: my Lord, will you haue me to go from the truth that I am in? * I say vnto you that my opinions be the very truth, which I will stand vnto, and not go from them: & I say vnto you farther, that there are two Churches vpon the earth, and we (meaning himselfe & other true Martyrs and professours of Christ) be of the true Church, and ye be not.*

Unto this question next aunswered Margaret Hide, saying: my Lord, you haue no cause to giue Sentence agaynst me, for I am in the true fayth and opinion, & will neuer forsake it: & I do wishe that I were more stronger in it then I am.*

Last of all aunswered Agnes Stanley, & sayd: I had rather euery heare of my head were burned, if it were neuer so much worth, then that I will forsake my fayth and opinion which is the true fayth.

The tyme being now spent, they were commaunded to appeare agayne at afternoone in the same place, which commaundement being obeyed, y^e Bishop firste called for Loseby,* & after his accustomed maner willed his Articles & answeres to be read: in reading thereof, when mention was made of the Sacrament of the Aultar, the Bishoppe with his Colleagues put of their cappes. Whereat Loseby sayd: my Lord, seing you put of your cappe, I will put on my cappe, & there withall did put on his cappe. And after, Page 1976 the Bishop continuing in his accustomed perswasions,* Loseby agayn sayd vnto him: my Lorde, I trust I haue y^e spirite of truth, which you detest and abhorre, for the wisdom of God is foolishnes vnto you. Whereupon the Byshop pronounced the sentence of condemnation agaynst him. And deliuering him vnto the Sheriffe, called for Margaret Hide, w^t whō he vsed y^e like order of exhortatōs

*To whom notwithstanding she sayd: I will not depart from my sayinges till I bee burned: and my Lorde (quoth she) I would see you instruct me with some parte of Gods word, & not to geue me instructiōs of holybread and holy water, for it is no part of the scripture. But he be'ing neither himselfe, nor any of his, able rightly to accomplish her request, to make short worke, vsed his final reason of conuincement, which was of the sentence of condēnation. And therefore leauing her off, called for an other, videl. Agnes Stanley, who vpon the Bishoppes like perswasions made this aunswere.

My Lord, wher you say I am an heretick, I am none: neither yet will I beleue you, nor any man y^t is wyse will beleue as you do. And as for these that ye say bee burnt for heresie, I beleue are true martyrs before God: therefore I will not go from my opinion and fayth,* as long as I liue.

Her talk thus ended, she receaued the like reward that the other had. And the bishop then turning his tale & maner of inticement vnto Thomas Thyrtel, receiued of him likewise this finall aunswere: My Lord, I will not holde with youre Idolatrous wayes, as you do: for I saye the Masse is Idolatry, and will sticke to my fayth and beliefe so long as the breath is in my body. Upon which wordes he was also condemned as an hereticke.

Last of all, was Henry Rāsey demanded if he would (as the rest) stand vnto his aunsweres, or els recanting y^e same, come home agayn, and be a member of their church. Whereunto he aunswered: I will not go from my religiō and belief as long as I liue: and my Lord (quoth he) your doctrine is naught, for it is not agreeable to Gods worde.

After these wordes, the Bishop (to conclude) pronouncing the sentence of condemnation agaynst him and y^e rest: (as ye haue heard) charged y^e Sheriffes of London w^t thē: who being therunto commaunded, the xii. day of the same * month of Aprill, brought them into Smithfield, where altogether in one fire, most ioyfully & constantly they ended their temporall liues, reciuing therefore the life eternal.

The cruell burning of 5. Martyrs in Smithfield.

Three burned in Saint Georges field in Southwarke.*

AfTer these, moreouer in the month of May followed 3. other that suffered in S. Georges field in Southwark William Morant, Stephen Gratwicke, with one king.

Among other histories after the persecuted and condemned saintes of God, I find the condemnation of none more straunge nor vnlawfull, thē of this Stephen Gratwicke. Who first was condemned by the byshopp of Wynchester and the byshop of Rochester, which where not hys Ordinaries.*

Secondly when he did appeale from those incompetēt Iudges to hys right Ordinary, his appeale coulde not be admitted.

Thirdly, when they had no other shifte to colour theyr inordinate proceedings with all, they suborned one of the priestes to come in for a counterfayt and a false Ordinary and sit vpon him.

Fourthly being openly conuincd and ouerturned in his own argumentes, yet the sayd Byshop of Winchester D. White, neyther would yeald to the force of trueth, nor suffer any of the audience assistant, once to say, God strengthen him.

Fiftly, as they brought in a false Ordinarye to sit vpon him: so they pretended false articles agaynst him, whiche were no part of his examinations, but of their deuising, to haue his blood.

Sixtly and lastly, hauing no other groūd nor iust matters agaynst him, but onely for saying these wordes: that which I sayd, I haue sayde, they red the sentence of death vpon him.

And this was the dealing of these men, whiche needes will be reputed for Catholicke fathers of y^e spirituality succeders of the Apostles, disciples of Christ, pillars of the holy Church, and leaders of the people. Of whose doynges and proceedinges, howe agreable they are to the example of Christ and his Apostles, I leaue to discusse, referryng y^e iudgement hereof to them, which know the institution of Christes religion and doctrine.

Now least peraduenture the disordered misrule of these Christmas Lodes, will not be credited vppon the simple narration of the story, yee shall heare the whole discourse of this processe registred by the hand of the Martyr hymselfe, who as he could tell best what was done: * so I am sure would not testifie otherwise, then trueth was, according as you shall heare by his owne declaration here following.

¶The declaration of Steuen Gratwicke concerning his owne story and condemnation.

Vpon the xxv. day of May, in y^e yeare of our Lord, 1557. I. Stephen Gratwick came before y^e Bishop of Winchester, D. White,* into S. Georges Church in Southwarke at eight of the clocke in the morning and then hee called me before him, and sayd vnto me.

B. Winchester.

Stephen Gradwick, how standeth the matter with thee now? Art thou contented to reuoke thy heresies, the which thou hast mayntayned and defended here within my Dioces, oftentimes before me and also vppon Sondag last, ye stooode vp in the face of the whole Church mayntayning your heresies, so that you haue offended w^t in the libertie of my Dioces, and now I being your Ordinary you must aunswere to me directly, whether you will reuoke them or not: the which I haue here in writing, and if so be, that you wil not reuoke them, then I will excommunicate you: and therefore note well what you doe, for now I read here the Articles agaynst you.

And so whē he had ended, he bad me answer vnto them.

Grat.

My Lord, these articles whiche you haue here obiected agaynst me, are not mine but of youe owne making. For I neuer had any of mine examinations written at any time, and therefore these be the obiections that you laye agaynst me as a snare to get my bloud.

Wherefore I desyer your lawfull fauour, to allow my lawfull appeale vnto myne Ordinary,* for I haue nothing to do with you. And whereas you do burden me, that I haue offended within your Dioces, it is nothing so, for I haue not interprised neyther to preache nor teache within your Dioces, but was apprehended by mine own Bishop & sent prisoner into your Dioces, by the consent of y^e Coūsell & mine own Ordinary, & therefore I so being in your Dioces, you haue no cause to let my lawfull appeale.

And with that there came the Bishop of Rochester, & was receaued at the B. of Winchesters hands with much gladnes, according to their determinate purpose,* before inuented. And so followed the Archdeacon of Canterbury And then the Bishop agayne start vp as a man halfe rauished of his wittes for ioye, embracing him with many gētle wordes, and sayd, y^t he was very glad of his comming,* making himselfe ignorant thereof, as he thought it should appeare to me. Then sayd Winchester.

B. Win.

Syr I am very glad of your cōming. For here I haue one before me, who hath appealed vnto you being his Ordinary. Then sayd the Archdeacon of Canterbury.

Arch. Cant.

I know this man very well. He hath bene di'uers Page 1977 times before me.* And then I aunswered and sayd.

Gratw.

My Lorde, I am not of his Dioces, not by fiue miles: for his Dioces reacheth on that parties but to the Cliffes of Lewes, & I dwelled at Bright Hempson, fiue miles beyond, in the Dioces of the Bishop of Chichester, and therefore I am not of his Dioces.

Then the the Bishop of Winchester, the B. of Rochester,* and the Archdeacon of Canterbury, cast their heades together, & laughed: and thē they sayd my Ordinary wold be here by and by, & so they sent forth for a counterfayte in steede of mine Ordinary and then I saw them laugh, and I spake vnto them, and sayd:

Grat.

Why do ye laugh? are ye confederate together for my bloud,* and therein triumph? you haue more cause to looke waightely vpon the matter: For I stand here before you vpon life and death. But you declare youre selues what you are, for you are lapped in Lambes apparell, but I would to God ye had coates according to your assemblie here, which is scarlet gownes, for I do here perceiue you are bent to haue my bloud.

And then came rushing in their counterfayted Bishop who was the hyred seruaunt to deliuer me into the hands of y^e high Priest:* & the Bishop hearyng him come, w^t haste enquired of his man, who was there, and he sayd, my lord of Chichester. Then the Bish. with hast rose vp and sayd.

Wint.

Ye are most hartily welcome, and required him to sit downe: and then sayd the Bishop of Winchester to me: Loe here is your Ordinary. What haue you nowe to saye vnto him?

Grat.

I haue nothing to say vnto him. If he haue nothing to say vnto me. I pray you let me depart. Then aunswered my Counterfeyt Ordinary, and sayd.

Counterf.

Here you stand before my Lords and me in triall of your fayth, and if you bring the trueth, wee shall by compulsion geue place vnto you, as it is to be proued by y^e word, and your doctrine to be heard and placed for a truth.

Grat.

Then I demaunded of him whether hee meant by authoritie, or by the iudgement of the spirite of GOD in his members.

And he aunswere me, by authoritie as well as by the spirite.

Grat.

Then I sayd: Nowe will I turne your own Argument vpon you: * for Christ came before the high priests Scribes and Phariseis, bringing the truth with him, beyng the very truth hymselfe, which truth cannot lye, yet both he and his truth was condemned, and took no place with them. And also the Apostles, and all the Martyrs y^t dyed since Christ: therefore I turne your owne argument vpon you, aunswere it if you can.

Counterf.

Then he with a great hast of coller, sayd vnto y^e Bishop of Winchester: object some Articles agaynst hym, for he is obstinate, and would fayne get out of our handes therefore holde him to some particular: so that other aunswere could I not haue of his argument.

Wint.

Then the Bishop of Winchester began to reade hys obiections of his owne making agaynst me, * and bad me aunswere vnto them. And I sayd:

Grat.

No, except you would set the law apart, because I see you are mindfull of my bloud.

Wint.

Now you may see hee will not aunswere to these, but as he hath aforesayd. Then spake the Counterfeit Ordinary agayne, and sayd:

Counterf.

My Lord, aske him what he sayth to the Sacrament of the aultar. Then the Byshop asked me, as my Counterfeit Ordinary required him.

Grat.

*My Lord, I doe beleue that in the sacrament of the Supper of the Lord truely ministred in both kinds according to the institution of Christ, vnto the worthy receauer, he eateth mistically by fayth the body and bloud of Chryst. Then I asked him if it were not the truth. And hee sayde yes. Then sayd I, beare witnesse of the truth.

Winchester.

Then the Bishop of Winchester, whose head being subtilest to gather vpon my wordes,* sayd:
My Lord see you not how he creepeth away with his heresies, and couereth them priuely? Note how hee here separateth the Sacrament of the aulter, from the supper of y^e Lord meaning it not to be y^e true sacrament, & also how he condemneth our ministration in one kinde, and alloweth that the vnworthy receauer doth not eate and drinke the body and bloud of Christ:* which be sore matters truely wayed, being couered very craftely with his subtile shiftes of sophistry, but he shall aunswere directly or euer he depart.

Grat.

My Lord, this is but your gathering of my wordes for you before confessed the same sayinges to be the truth, & this you catch at me, and fayne woulde haue a vauntage for my bloud: but seeing you iudge me not to meane y^e sacramēt, of y^e aultar, nowe come to y^e probatiō of y^e same sacrament, and proue it to be the true sacrament, and I am with you: or els if you can proue your Church to be y^e true Church, I am also with you.

But then he called to memory the last probation of the Church and sacramentes, howe hee before was driuen to forsake the scriptures,* and to shew me by good reason how they might minister the sacrament in one kinde: & his reason was this: Like as a man or woman dyeth on a sodayn and so when we haue geuen him the body of Christ, in the meane time the partie dyeth, and so he eateth the body of Christ, & not drinketh his bloud. And this was his simple shift in the prouing of their Sacramentes: so that he was now halfe abashed to begin that matter agayne.

But yet a little subtile shift he brought in, and sayd.

Winc.

What sayest thou by the administration of y^e priests euery day for them selues, and they minister in bothe kindes?

To that I aunswered, you haue two administrations for I am sure at Easter you minister but in one kinde, and therefore it is not according to the institution of Christ, but after your owne imaginations.

Winc.

Why, then what sayest thou to these wordes: Take, eate this is my body. These are the wordes of Christe. Wilt thou deny them?

Grat.

My Lord, they are the words of scripture, I affirme them, and not deny them.

Rochest.

Why, then thou doest confesse in the sacrament of the aulter to be a reall presence, the selfe same body y^t was borne of the Uirgine Mary, and is ascended vp into heauen.

Grat.

My Lord, what do you now meane? do you not also meane a visible body? for it cannot be, but of necessitie, if it be a reall presence, and a materiall body, it must be a visible body also.

Winc.

Nay, I say vnto thee, it is a reall presence, and a materiall body, and an inuisible body to.

Grat.

My Lord,* then it must needes be a phantastical body, for if it shoulde bee materiall and inuisible as you affirme, then it must needes be a phantasticall body, for it is aparaunt that Christes humayne body was visible, and seene.

Winc.

Then the Bishop brake out and said, when diddest thou see him? I pray thee tell me.

Grat.

To that I aunswered and sayd: a simple argument it is. Because our corporall eyes cannot comprehend christ doth that proue or follow, that he is inuisible, because wee cannot see him?

Winc.

And with that the Bishop began to waxe weary of his argument, and remoued his talke to Iudas in eatyng y^e sacrament, & said: he eat him wholly, as the Apostles did.

Grat.

And then I asked him, if he meant Christes flesh and bloud the which he speaketh of in the 6. of Iohn, and saith: he that eateth my flesh and drinketh my bloud, hath eternall lyfe in me.

Winc.

To that he aunswered, and sayd, yea.

Grat.

Then sayd I, of necessitie Iudas must needes be saued, because hee eate the fleshe,* and dranke the bloude of Christ as you haue affirmed, and also all the vngodly that dye without repentance, because they haue eaten your sacrament, which you say is the flesh & bloud of Christ: therfore of necessitie they shall receiue the benefite thereof, y^t is, eternall life. Which is a great absurditie to graunt, & then of necessitie, it must follow, that all that eate not, & drynke not of your sacrament, shall finally pearish and bee damned: for Christ sayth, except you eate my fleshe and drinke my bloud, you can haue no life in me. And you haue afore sayd, y^t your sacrament, which you say is the same flesh & bloud that Christ speaketh of, and here I proue, that all children then, that dye vnder age to receaue the sacrament, by your owne argument, they must be damned, whiche is horrible blasphemy to speake. Nowe here I turne your owne argument vpon you, aunswere it if you can.

Winc.

My Lord, do you not see what deceitful arguments he bringeth in here agaynst vs, mingled with sophistry, & keepeth himselfe in vauntage, so that we can get no holde vpon him. But I say vnto thee, thou peruerse hereticke, I see now, thou art a peruerse fellowe. I had a better opinion of thee, but now I see we lose our time about thee, yet I aunswere thee, S. Paule doth open the sixte of Iohn, playne, if thou wilt see, for he sayth: they eate Christes body and drinke his bloud vnworthely, and that was the cause of their damnation.*

Grat.

My Lord, take heede ye doe not adde vnto the texte for he that addeth vnto the text, is accursed of God, and I am sure here you haue brought more then Paule hath spoken, for he sayth not, because they haue eaten his body and dronke his bloud vnworthily, but S. Paule sayth: Who so euer shall eate of this bread, and drinke of the Cuppe vnworthely, shall be gilty of the body and bloud of Christ.

Page 1978*Note my lord, he saith not as you haue affirmed, but clene contrary. And with that they were all in a great rage.

Winch.

And the bish. of Winchester said, I belied the text.

Grat.

And then I called for the text.

Winch.

And he said, I asked thee euen now if thou vnderstoodest Latine, and thou saidest, whether I can or no, the people shall beare witnesse in English.

Grat.

And so I called againe for the Testament, whether it were Latin or English for the triall of the text.

Winch.

And then when the bish. of Winchester sawe that I cared not, whether of the Translations I had, he stode vp, thinking to beguile some simple man that had a booke there, & bad him that had an English Testament to bring it in, that he might get some hold at him that should bring a testament,* but God disappointed him therof, & so he flue away from his matter, and began to raile vpon me, & said my subtile Arguments shuld not serue, for if I would not answer directly, I should neuerthelesse be excommunicated: for (sayd he) I see a madde •oy in thine head: thou gloriest muche in thy talke, and thinkest nowe the people are come about thee, that thou shalt encourage them with thy constant heretical opinion.* For y^e last day when thou wast before me vpon Sunday in s. Mary Oueries church, thou there reprobuedst my sermon, & haddest a thousand by thee at the lest, to bid God strengthen thee: but now let me see him here that dare open his mouth to bid God strēgthen thee: he shall die the death that thou shalt die.

Grat.

*To that I answered: my Lord I know your crueltie doth extend more largelier then your pity. Good experience so I haue to say, for you kepe men in prison • yeare or two, taking their bookes from them, permitting thē not so muche as a Testament to looke vpon for theyr soules comfort, the which all men oughte to haue: and so you entreat them more like brute beastes then Christen men.

Winch.

No, syr we will vse you as we will vse the childe, for if the childe will hurte himselfe with the knife, we will kepe the knife from him.* So because you wil damne your soule with the woord, therefore you shall not haue it.

Grat.

My lord, a simple argument you bring for to maintaine and couer your fault. Are you not ashamed to make the woord the cause of our damnation? I neuer knew any man but only you that did not affirm our sinnes to be the cause of our damnation,* and not the word, as you say: and therefore if your Argument be good, then this is good also: Because that some men do abuse drinke, therefore the benefite of drinke should be taken from al men, or any other such like good gift.

Winch.

My lordes, here we lose much time, for this felow is peruerse, speaking nothing but sophistrie and peruerse questions: so that we can get no aduantage vpon him.

Then spake my Counterfait Ordinarie, as one halfe a sleepe al this while: yet somewhat with hast, when he was awaked he began to tell his tale, and sayde.

Counterf.

Read these articles against him once more, and if he wil not answer them, take him vpon his first words: That which I said, that I haue said.

Winch.

Then the Bishop of Winchester began to reade them againe.

Grat.

But I sayd vnto him, I would not aunswere them, because they were none of mine examinations, but obiections of their owne making, because they would haue my bloud. But yet I said, if they would set the lawe a part, I would talke my conscience freely to them.

Counterf.

Then my counterfet Ordinarie began to speake againe, charging mee with the saying of S. Peter, that I should render account of such hope as was in me.

Grat.

*So can I do, and yet shal I not please you, for here I now render my hope as S. Peter willeth me: I beleue only in Iesus Christ, to haue my saluatiō in him, by him, and through him: but I perceiue you would haue me rēder my faith in such sorte, as you may haue my bloud, and therfore you bring good Scriptures and euil apply them.

Win.

Why, this felow is peruerted, & we shal get no more at his hands then we haue already: therfore lette vs pronounce sentence against him, for we do but lose our time.

Grat.

Nay good my lordes, seeing you wil nedes haue my bloud, let me say a little more for my selfe.

*Upon sonday last, whē I was before you, you preached this, which was a truth, & agreeable to the doctrine of the apostle s. Iames, and said: If any mā thinke himself a religious man, & in the meane time seduce his tounge or hys heart, y^e same mans religion is a vain religion: and so my lord you stāding there in y^e pulpit, * in y^e mean time seduced your tōg to slander vs pore prisoners being there present in yron bondes, burdening vs w^t the sect of Arrians, and w^t the sect of Herodiās, and w^t the sect of Anabaptists, and w^t the sect of sacramentaries, & with the secte of Pelagiās.

And when we stoode vp to purge our selues therof, you saide you would cut out our tonges, & cause vs to be pulled out of the church by violēce. But there you gaue your selfe a shrewde blow,* for your toungue in the meane time slandered your neighbor. For I my Lord wil geue my life against all these heresies, the which you ther burdened vs withall, euen as I will geue my life against that wherein I now stand before you. And with that he was raging angry, and caught my condemnation and said.

Win.

Thou wilt graunt here no more, but this word: that I haue said, I haue said: and here I gather mater enough to condemne thee, for this is a confirmation of all y^t thou hast heretofore said.

Grat.

Then I answered: If you can proue that euer any of mine examinatiōs were written, it were inough: but you haue nothīg agaīst me, but obiectiōs of your own makīg.

Win.

Haue at thee now. If thou wil not yelde,* I wil pronounce sentence against thee, and so he proceded forth onward apace, curssing and banning in Latin: so that I told him: If the people might heare it in English, they would thinke you an vncharitable bishop.

Grat.

And then I said, stay my Lorde and note what you doe,* for you haue neither temporall law nor spiritual here against me in any cause.

Then stepped foorth a gentleman & said vnto my Lord: take hede what you do, for he doth hear say that you haue no title nor cause why you should condemne him.

Then the bish. looked about him againe, and asked me if I would recant.

I asked him whereof I should recant?

Then saide the bish. are you there? nay then I knowe what I haue to do, and so he proceded forth in reading my condemnation. And there was an other gentlemā which began to snap and snatch at me: and then said I, I would God I had knowen this or euer I had come from home: I would surely haue put on breeche, and not had my skin thus torne. And all this while the Bishop red fourth still.

At last his chaplains cried, stop, stop my Lord, for now he will recant, and then the bishop asked me againe.

And I answered & sayd: my lord, my faith is grounded more stedfastly, then to change in a momēt,* it is no proces of time can alter me, vnles my faith were as the waues of the sea: and so the B. made an end, & deliuered me into the hands of the sheriff, to be caried prisoner to the Marshalsey againe. And when I was condemned, I desired God with a loud voice that he would not lay my blood to their charges, if it were his good will,* & so then they refused my praier and sent me away. Then I beganne to talke as I went, and they cried, cut out his tounge, or stop his mouth, and so I was broughte to the Malshalsey, and lapped in yron bandes. Therefore I pray vnto God that they vnto whom this present wryting shal come, may take example by my death and souldiour fare. So be it. By me Steuen Gratwicke, condemned for Gods euerlasting truth.

HEere for want of time I haue left out many matters, because the Lord hath hastened the time,*so that I haue wrytten but the briefnes of the matter in probation of faith, and the reward of faith, the which the bish of Roch. & I debated vpon: the whych matter I wold haue ben very glad to haue set down in wryting.

Also much more talke there was, that the B. of Winch. and I had concerning my worldly frendes & personable estate: for he plaied sathan with me, hee caried me vp to the mountaines,*and there told me, my learning was good and my eloquēce, and also my knowledge, saue that I did abuse it (saide he): and then he fell to praising of my person, that it was comely & worthy to serue a Prince. Thus Sathan flattered with me to make me aunsweare vnto such obiections as he would lay against me, that I mighte fall into his Diocesse.

Thus Steuen Gratwicke this Christian Martyr, being wrongfully condemned by the bish. of Winchester (as ye haue heard) was burned with William Moraunt, and one King, in s. Georges field, about y^e latter end of May.

Seuen godlye Martyrs, v. women and ij. men, burned at Maidstone for the word of truth, and professing of sincere religion of Christ.

I Shewed a litle before, how after the vnmerciful proclamation was sent & set forth by the K. and Quene, in the month of Febr. last,* the storme of persecution began in all places to rise (whereof some part also is declared before:) but yet in no place more thē in y^e country & dioces of Cāt. by reason of certaine the aforesaid inquisitors, being now armed w^t authority, but especially by reasō of Ric. Thornton Suffragan of Douer, and the Archd. of Cant. who of their owne nature were so furious and fierye against the harmles flocke of Christ,* y^t there was no nede of any proclamation to stir vp the coles of their burning crueltie: by reason wherof many a godly Saint lieth slaine vnder the altare: as in diuers places of this booke wel may appeare.

Page 1979 And now to returne to the said dioces of Cant. againe, in the next moneth following, being y^e month of Iune, the 18. day of the same, were 7. Christian & true faithfull martirs of christ burned at Maidst. whose names here folow.

Ioane Bradbridge of Stapleherst. Walter Appelbie of Maidstone.*Petronil his wife. Edmund Alen of Fritenden. Katherine his wife. Ioane Mannings wyfe of Maidstone. Elizabeth a blinde Maiden.

As concerning the generall Articles commonly objected to them in the publicke Consistory, & the order of their cōdemnation, it differeth not much from the vsuall maner expressed before, pag. 1585. neither did their aunswares in effect much differre from the other that suffered vnder the same Ordinarie in the foresaid dioces of Canterburie.

Now as touching their accusers, and maner of apprehension, and their priuate cōflicts with the aduersaries, I finde no great matter comming to my hands, saue only of Edmund Alen some intimation is geuē men, how his troubles came, what was his cause and aunsweres before the Iustices, as here consequently ye shall vnderstand.

The examination of Edmund Alen.

THIS Allen was a milner of the parish of Frytenden in Kent, and in a deare yere, when as many poore people were like to starue, he fed them, and solde his corne better cheape by halfe then others did:, and did not that only, but also fedde them with the foode of life, reading to them the scriptures, and interpreting them. This being known to the popish priests there abouts dwelling, by the procurement of them, namely of Iohn Tailor parson of Fritenden, and Thomas Henden parson of Stapleherst, he was eftsones cōplained off to the Iustices, and brought before syr Iohn Baker Knight, who first sending for them, committed both him and his wife to Ward: but not long after they were let out, I know not how, & so went ouer vnto Calice. Whereafter that he had continued a certaine space, he began to be troubled in conscience, & there meeting w^t one Iohn Web of the same parish of Fritēden, (who was likewise fled from the tirāny of sir Iohn Baker, and parson Tailor) said vnto him, y^t he could not be in quiet there, what soeuer the cause was: for God (saide he) hadde some thing to do for him in Englād: & thus shortly he returned home again to the parish of Fritenden. Where was a cruel Priest,* there Parson, called Iohn Tailor.

This parson Tailor being infourmed by his brother Sertan, that Edmund Allen the Miluer & his wife, were returned, and were not at masse time in the churche: as he was the same time in the midst of his masse, vpon a Sondag, a little before the eleuation (as they terme it) euen almost at y^e lifting vp of his Romish God, he turned him to the people in a great rage, and commanded them with all spede,* to go vnto their house, and apprehend them, and he wold come to them w^t as much hast as might be possible. Which promise he well performed. For he had not so soone made an end of Ite missa est, and the vestments of his back, but by and by he was at the house, and there laying hande of the said Alen, caused him againe to be brought to sir Ih. Baker, with a greuous complaint of his exhorting & reading the scriptures to the people, and so was he & his wife sent to Maidstone prison. Witnessed by Richard Fletcher Uicare of Crambroke, and Iohn Webbe of Fritenden.

They were not so soone in prisone, but maister Baker immediately sent vnto their house, certaine of his mē, Ih. Doue, Thomas Best, Thomas Linley, Perciuall Barbel, with the foresaide Iohn Tailor parson of Fritenden, and Thomas Henden Parson of Stapleherst, to take an inuentorie of all the goodes that were in the house. Where they found in y^e bedstraw a casket locked with a padlocke, & so cutting the wist therof, opened it, and founde therein a sackecloth bagge of money, containing the summe of 13. or 14. pound, partly in gold, & partly in siluer. Which money after they had told and putte in the bagge againe, like good caruers for themselues, they caried away with them.

Besides also they found there certaine bookes, as Psalters, Bibles, and other wrytings. All which bookes, with the money, were deliuered to the foresaid Priest Thomas Henden, parson of Stapleherst, and after in the raigne of this Queene,*an. 5. Reg. Elisab. was by right law recouered from him againe, as in Recordes remaineth to be seene.

Thus good Edmund Allen and his wife, being maliciously accused, wrōgfully imprisoned, & cruelly spoiled and robbed of al their goods, were brought (as is aforesaid) be'fore sir Iohn Baker the iustice, to be examined: who taūting and reuiling him w^tout all mercy and pity, asked him if those were y^e fruits of his gospell, to haue cōuenticles to gather people together, to make conspiracies, to sow sedition and rebellion: and thus he began w^t him to reason.

The talke or reasoning betwene Sir Iohn Baker, Colins his chaplaine, and Edmund Allen.

Baker

Who gaue thee authority to preache & interprete?*_ Art thou a priest? art thou admitted thereunto? Let me see thy licence. Mart. Collins, sir Ihon Bakers scholemaster said, surely he is an arrāt heretike & worthy to be burned.

Alen.

And it may plesse your honor to geue me leaue to answer in the cause of my faith, I am persuaded y^t God hath geuē me this authority as he hath geuē to al other christiās.* Why are we called christians if we do not folow Christ▪ if we do not read his law, if we do not interpret it to others y^t haue not so much vnderstāding? Is not Christ our Father? shal not y^e son folowe the fathers steps? is not Christ our master? and shal y^e scholer be inhibited to lern & preach his precepts? Is not Christ our redemer? and shal not we praise his name, & serue him y^t hath redemed vs from sin & dānation? Did not christ being but 12. yeres of age dispute w^t the doctors, & interprete y^e prophet Esay, and notw^tstāding hee was neither of the tribe of Leuie,* whiche were Priestes, but of the royal tribe of Iuda, neither had taken any outward priesthode? wherefore if we be christians, we must do the same.

Col.

And it shal like your honor, what a knaue is this, y^t cōpareth himself w^t Christ.

Baker

Let him alone, he wil pump out anon an infinite heap of heresies. Hast thou any more to say for thy self?

Alen.

Yea y^t I haue. Adam was licēced of God, & Abraham was cōmanded to teach his children & posteritye, & so Daudid teacheth in diuers psalmes: and Salomon also preached to y^e people, as y^e boke of the precher proueth very wel, where he teacheth y^t there is no immortal felicity in this life, but in the next. And Noe taught them y^t were disobediēt in his daies, and therfore is called the 8. Preacher of righteousness in the 2. epistle of Peter. Also in y^e 11. of Numb. where Moses had chosen 52. elders to helpe him to teach & rule the rest, Eldad & Medad preached in y^e tents, wherefore Iosua being offended, cōplained to Moses y^e Eldad & Medad did preach w^tout licēce.* To whō Moses answered & wished y^t al y^e people could do y^e like. What shuld I be long? most of y^e priests were not of the tribe of Leuy & Aaron.

Col.

These are authorities of y^e olde testament, & therefore abrogated, but y^e art a foole, & knowest no schoole poynts. Is not y^e law deuided into the lawe ceremonial, moral, & iudicial?

Allen.

I graunt y^t the ceremonies ceased when Christ came, as S. Paul proueth to the Heb. & to the Col. where he saith: Let no man iudge you in any part of a sabboth day, new moone, or other ceremonies which are figures of things to come,*for Christ is the body.

Collins.

And are not the iudicials abrogated by Christ?

Allin.

They are confirmed both by Christ in the 5. of Mathew, and by Paule in the 1. Epistle to Timothe 4. The law saith he is not set foorth for the vertuous & godly, but for men slayers, periured, aduouterers & such like.

Collins.

*Thou art an hereticke. Wilt thou call the Iudicials of Moses againe? wilt thou haue adultery punished with death? disobedient children to their parēts to be stoned? wilt thou haue Legem talionis? But thou arte an Asse. Why shoulde I speake Latine to thee thou erroneous rebell? shall we now smite out eye for eye, toothe for toothe? thou art worthy to haue thy teeth and tonge plucked out.

Allin.

If we had that law, we should neither haue disobedient children, neither adulterers, neither false witnesse bearers, neither ruffians.

Baker.

Master Collins, lette vs returne to our first matter. Why diddest thou teach y^e people, whom thou saidst thou didst fede both bodely and spiritually, being no Priest?

Allin.

Because y^t we are al kings to rule our affections, preests to preach out the vertues & woorde of God, as Peter wryteth: & liuely stones, to geue light to other. For as out of flint stones commeth foorth that, that is able to set al the world on fire, so out of Christians shoulde springe the beames of the Gospell, whiche should inflame al the world. If we must geue a reckening of our faith to euery man, and now to you demanding it, then must we study the Scriptures & practise them? What auaieth it a man to haue meate and will eate none, and apparell and will weare none, or to haue an occupation, and to teach none, or to be a lawyer and vtter none? Shall euery artificer be suffered, yea and commended to practise his facultie and science, and the Christian forbidden to exercise his: Doth not euery lawyer practise his law? Is not euery christiā a folower of Christ? Shall ignorance which is condēned in al sciences be practised of christians? Doth not s. Paul forbid any mās spirit to be quenched? Doth he prohibite any man y^t hath any of these giftes, which he repeateth. 1. Cor. 14. to practise the same? Only he forbiddeth womē, but no man. The Iewes neuer forbad any. Read the Acts of y^e apostles. And y^e restraint was made by Gre. y^e 9. pope of that name, as I hard one, a learned mā preach in K. Ed. daies.

Col.

This villen (& it like your honor) is madde. By my Priesthoode, I beleue that her wil saye, a Priest hath no more authoritie then an other man. Doth not a Priest binde and loose?

Allin.

No, my sinne bindeth me, and my repētance loseth. God forgiueth sin only, and no priest. For euery Christian when he sinneth, bindeth himselfe, and when he repēteth, loseth him self.* And if any other be losed from his sinne by my exhortation, I am saide to lose him: and if he perseuere in sin, notw^tstanding my exhortation, I am saide to binde him, althoughe it is God that bindeth and loseth, and geueth the increase: Therefore saith Christ. Mat. 18. Wheresoeuer 2. or 3. are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them, & whosoever sinnes they forgeue, they are forgeuen: and whosoever they retaine, they are retained. Neither hath the Pope any keies, saue the keies of error: for y^e key that openeth the locke to Gods mysteries and to saluation, is the key of faith and repentāce. And as I haue heard learned men reason, S. Austine and Origen, with others are of this opinion. Then they reuiled him and laide hym in the stockes all the night. Wherewith certaine that were better minded, being offended with such extremity, willed Allin to keepe his cōscience to him selfe, and to folow Baruckes counsel in the 6. chap. Wherefore when ye see the multitude of people worshipping thē,* behinde and before, say ye in your harts, O Lord it is thou that ought only to be worshipped.

Wherewith he was perswaded to goe to heare Masse the next day, and sodenly before the sacring went out, and considered in the Churchyard with him selfe, that suche a litle cake betwene the priests fingers could not be Christ, nor a materiall body, neither to haue soule, life, sinnewes, bones, flesh, legs, head, armes nor brest, and lamēted that he was seduced by the place of Barucke,* which his conscience gaue him to be no Scripture, or els to haue an other meaning, and after this he was brought againe before syr Iohn Baker, who asked why he did refuse to worship the blessed Sacrament of the aultar.

Allin.

It is an Idol.

Collins.

It is Gods body.

Allin.

It is not.*

Collins.

By the Masse it is.

Allin.

It is bread.

Collins.

How proouest thou that?

Allin.

When Christ sate at his last supper, and gaue them bread to eate.

Col.

Bread knaue?

Allin.

Yea bread, which you cal Christes body. Sate he stil at the table, or was he both in their mouthes, & at the table? If he were both in their mouthes & at the table, then had he two bodies, or els had a fantastick body: which is an absurditie to say it.*

Sir Iohn Baker.

Christes body was glorified, and might be in mo places then one.

Allin.

Then had he more bodies thē one, by your own placing of him.

Collins.

Thou ignorāt Asse, the schoole men say, that a glorified body may be euery where.

Allin.

If his body was not glorified til it rose againe, then was it not glorified at his last supper, and therefore was not at the table, and in their mouthes, by your owne reason.

Collins.

A glorified body occupieth no place.*

Allin.

That which occupieth no place, is neither God, nor any thing els: but Christes body say you, occupieth no place: therefore it is neither God nor any thing els. If it be nothing, then is your religion nothing. If it be God, then haue we iiij. in one Trinitie, which is the persone of the father, the person of the sonne, the person of the holy ghost, the humane nature of Christ. If Christ be nothing, which you must needes confesse if he occupie no place, then is our study in vaine, our faith prostrate, and our hope without reward.

Collins.

This rebel wil beleue nothing but scripture. How knowest thou that it is the scripture but by the church? and so sayeth S. Austin.

Allin.

I cannot tell what Austine sayth, but I am perswaded, that it is Scripture, by diuers arguments.

*First, y^t the law worketh in me my condemnation. The law telleth me y^t of my selfe I am dāned: and this damnatiō, M. Collins, you must find in your self, or els you shal neuer come to repētaunce. For as this grief & sorow of cōscience, w^tout faith, is desperation, so is a glorious & Romish faith w^tout the lamentatiōs of a mās sins presūption.

The second is the gospel, which is the power & spirit of God. This spirite (sayth S. Paule) certifieth my spirite that I am the sonne of God, and that these are the Scriptures.

The thirde, are the wonderfull woorkes of God, which cause me to beleue that there is a God though we glorifie him not as God.* Rom. 1. The sunne, the moone, y^e starres and other his workes (as Dauid discourseth in the xix. Psalme) declareth that there is a God, and that these are y^e scriptures, because that they teach nothing els but God and his power, maiestie and might: and because the scripture teacheth nothing dissonant from this prescription of nature. And fourthly, because that the woord of God gaue authoritye to y^e church in paradise, saying that the seede of the woman should brast down the Serpents head. This sede is the gospel: this is al the scriptures, and by this we are assured of eternall life, and these words: The seede of the woman shall braste the serpent's heade, gaue authoritie to the church, and not the church to the worde.

Baker.

I hearde say that you spake against priests and bishops.

Allin.

I spake for thē, for now they haue so much liuing,* & especially bishops, archdeacons, and deanes, that they neyther can nor wil teach Gods woord. If they had a 100. pounds a peece, then would they apply their studie: now they can not for other affaires.

Col.

Who wil then set his children to schoole.

Allin.

Where there is now one set to schoole for that end, there would be 40. because that one Bishops liuing deuided into 30. or 40. partes, would finde so manye as wel learned men as the bishops be now, who haue all this liuing, neither had Peter or Paul any such reuenew.

Baker.

Let vs dispatch him: he wil mar all.

Collins.

If euery man had a 100. pounds, as he saith it wold make mo learned men.

Baker.

But our bishops would be angrie if that they knew it.

Allin.

It were for a common wealth to haue such bishoppricks deuided for the further increase of learning.

Baker.

What sayest thou to the Sacrament?

Allin.

As I sayde before.

Baker.

Away w^t him. And thus was he caried to prison, and afterward burned. And thus much touching the particular storie of Edm. Allin and his wife. Who with the v. other martyrs aboue named,* being vij. to wit, v. women, and ij. men were altogether burned at Maidstone, the yere and moneth afore mentioned, and the 18. day of the same moneth.

An other storie of like crueltie, shewed vpon other 7. Martyrs burnt at Cant. 3. men and 4. women.

AMong suche infinite seas of troubles in these most dāgerous daies,* who can withhold himselfe from bitter teares, to see the madding rage of these presented Catholickes, who being neuer satisfied with blood to maintaine their carnall kingdome, presume so highly to violate the precise law of Gods commandements in slaying the simple pore Lambes of the glorious congregation of Iesus Christ, and that for the true testimonie of a good cōscience, in confessing the immaculate gospell of their saluatiō. What heart wil not lamēt the murdering mischief of these men,* who for wāt of worke, do so wreke their tine on seely pore women, whose weake imbecillitie the more strēgh it lacketh by natural imperfection, the more it ought to be helped, or at least pitied, and not oppressed of men y^t be stronger, and especially of Priests that should be charitable.

But blessed be the Lord omnipotent, who supernaturally, hath indued from aboue such weake creatures with such manly stomacke and fortitude, so constantly to withstād the vttermost extremitie of these pitillesse persecutors: as he did before strengthen the mother of the 7. sonnes in the Machabees, & as he hath done since with diuers & son|dry other godly womē in these our later daies, partly before mentioned, & partly to be mētioned hereafter, & heere presently may appeare by the martyrdome of these 7. here vnder folowing, of the which were 4. women and 3. men, burnt together at Canterb. the 31. day of the sayde moneth of Iune, in the yere aforesaid, whose names are these.

As it were too tedious exactly and particularly to prosecute the seuerall storie of euery one of these godly Martyrs: so I can not passe ouer vntouched the cruel and vnchristian handling of Alice Benden during her imprisonment,* according as I haue receiued by the faithfull relation of them which best were acquainted with her, & partly also some doers in the matter, beinge her owne naturall brethren. The storie is thus.

¶The order of the imprisonment and tragicall handling of Alice Benden, wife of Edw. Benden of the parish of Stapleherst in the Countie of Kent, for the testimonye of Christes Gospell.

First Alice Bēden was broght before one M. Roberts of Crābroke in the said Countie,* the 14. day of Oct. in the yere of our lord 1556. of whom she was demāded, why she wold not go to the church. And she answered, that she could not so do w^t a good and cleare cōscience, because there was much idolatrie committed against the glory of God. For the which, with many mocks and taūts she was sent to prison, where she lay 14. daies. For on y^e 20. day of October her husband required his neighbors the welthy mē of Stapleherst to wryte to the Bishop of Douer, who had the chiefe gouernment of the tyrannical sword in Kent for those daies, which they did, desiring him to sēd her home.

Wherefore the B. called her before him, & asked her if she would go home & go to the church. Whereunto she answered: If I would haue so done I nede not to haue come hither. Then wilt thou go home, and be shriuen of y^e parish Priest? And she sayd, no, that would she not.

Well, said he, go thy waies home, and go to the Church when thou wilt. Whereunto she answered nothing. But a Page 1981 Priest that stoode by,* sayd: shee sayeth, shee will my Lord. Wherefore he let her goe, and shee came foorthwith home.

On the Saterdag following, her husbände willed her to goe to the Churche: which she both then and else when refused to do. Wherefore on the Sondag 14. daies after, he going to the church,* came into the companie of diuers inhabitaunts of the same parish, among whome thoroughe his fonde talke and behauior, he procured her to be sent to Syr Iohn Gilforde, who commaunded her to prisone againe, yea and the more to vtter his owne shame, th• said her husband tooke money of the Constable to carry her to prisone, the p•ice of his wiues bloud, meaning in deede to carry her to prison him selfe. But she hauing muche more care of his honest and good report, then he had regard (as it is easie to see) of his owne infamie, and no lesse ashamed of his so rude and vnnatural doings, chose rather to commit her selfe willingly into the hands of her enemies, then that the world shoulde witnesse against her husband, of so facinorous a fact. Wherefore she went to the Constable, desiring him to go with her. But he answered that he could not so doe, but graunted her his boy to go with her: with whom she went to prison, namely, the castle of Canterburie, according to the commaundement geuen.

*Where this one thing is woorthy to be noted, y• while she was in this prison, she practised with a prison fellowe of hers, the wife of one Potkin, to liue bothe of them w^t ij. pence halfpenie a day, to trie therby how well they coulde sustaine penurie & hunger, before they were put to it. For they had heard that when they should be remooued from thence to the Bishops prison, their liuings should be but iij. farthings a peece a day, and did in dede both so liue for xiiij. daies ere shee were from thence remooued.

The 22. day of Ianuarie folowing, her husband went againe to the bishop, desiring hym to deliuer his wife out of prison: but he saide shee was an obstinate hereticke and would not be reformed, and therefore sayde that he could not deliuer her.

*Then said he: my Lord, she hath a brother whose name is Roger Hal, that resorteth vnto her. If your Lordship could keepe him from her, she would turne: for he comforteth her, geueth her money, and perswadeth her not to returne or relent.

This occasion was not so soone geuen, but it was as quickly taken,* and as cruelly put in execution. For y^e Bishop commaunding her vppon the same to a prison called Mondaies hole, there also he gaue strait charge, y^t if at any time her brother came, he should be taken & apprehended.

This prison was w^tin a Court where the Prebendes chambers were,* being a valt beneath the ground, & being before the window, inclosed with a pale of height, by estimation 4. foote & a halfe, and distant from the same 3. foote, so y^t she looking from beneath, might only see such as stood at the pale. After this her Brother sought often for her, w^t no les danger of life, then diligence. But for the vnknown situation of y^e place, it being also, but rarely vsed for a prison, and the matter as closely kept as it was secretly dou, he could neuer come to vnderstād of her being there, vntil through Gods merciful wil and vnsearchable prouidēce, he cōming thether very rathe in a morning,* her keper being then gone to the church to ring (for he was a bell ringer) chaunced to heare her voyce, as she powred out vnto God her sorrowful complaints, saying y^e Psalmes of Dauid: and there could he none otherwise relieue her, but by putting money in a loaf of bread, and sticking the same on a pole, and so reached it vnto her: for neither w^t meate nor drinke he could sustaine her. And this was 5. wekes after her comming thether. Al the which time no creature was knowen to come at her, more then her keeper.

Their lying in that prison was onely vpon a litle short straw, betwene a paire of stockes & a stone wall: being allowed iij. farthings a day, that is, a halfe penye bread, and a farthing drinke: neither could she gette any more for her mony.* Wherefore she desired to haue her whole allowance in bread, and vsed water for her drinke. Thus did shee lye 9. weekes. During all which time she neuer changed her apparel: wherby she became at the last a most pitious and lothsome creature to beholde.

At her first comming into this place, she did greuously bewaile with great sorrowe & lamentation, and reasoned with her selfe: why her Lorde God did with his so heauy iustice suffer her to be sequestred from her louing fellowes into so extreeme miserie.

In these dolorous mournings did shee continue til on a night as shee was in her sorrowful supplications in rehearsing thys verse of the Psalme:*Why arte thou so heauie O my soule? And againe: The right hande of the most highest can chaunge all: shee receiued comforte in the midst of her miseries: And after that continued very ioyfull vntill her deliuerie from the same.

About the 25. day of March,* in the yeare of our Lorde 1557. shee was called before the Bishop: who demaunded of her, whether shee would nowe goe home, and go to the church or no, promising her great fauour if she would be reformed and doe as they did.

To whom she answered: I am throughly perswaded by the great extremitie that you haue already shewed me, that you are not of God, neither can your doings be godly, and I see (sayeth she) y^t you seeke my vtter destruction, shewing how lame she then was, of cold taken, & for lacke of foode, while she lay in that painful prison: whereby shee was not able to mooue her selfe without great paine.

Then did the bish. deliuer her frō that filthy hole, and sent her to Westgate, whereas after she had bene changed,* and for a while ben cleane kept, her skin did wholly so pill & scale off, as if she had bene w^t some mortal venome poysoned. Heere she continued till the latter end of Aprill. At which time they called her before them, and with others condemned her, committing her then to the prisone called the Castle. Where shee continued till the slaughter daye, which was the 19. day of Iune, when by terrible fire they tooke away her life.

When she was at the stake,* she cast her handkerchiefe vnto one Iohn Bankes, requiring him to kepe the same in y^e memorie of her, and from about her middle she tooke a white lace which she gaue to the keeper, desiring him to geue the same to her brother Roger Hall, and to tell hym that it was the last band that she was bound with, except the chaine. A shilling also of Phillip and Mary shee tooke forth, which her father had bowed and sent her when shee was first sent to prison, desiring y^t her said brother should with obedient salutations render the same to her father againe, & shew him that it was the first peece of mony that he sent her after her troubles begon, which (as shee protested) she had kept & now sent him to do him to vnderstand that shee neuer lacked money while shee was in prison.

With this Alice Benden were burned also the residue of the other blessed Martyrs aboue named, being seuen in number. Who being brought to y^e place where they shuld suffer for the Lordes cause at Canterbury, vndressed them selues ioyfully to the fire, and being ready thereto: they all (like the communion of Saints) kneled downe and made their humble praiers vnto the Lorde, with such zeale and affection, as euen y^e enemies of the Crosse of Christ coulde not but like it. When they had made inuocation together, they roase and went to the stake, where being compassed with horrible flames of fire, they yeelded their soules and liues gloriously into the handes of the Lord.

This Bradbeges wife, when shee was condemned of the Bishop to be burned, had ij. children, named Pacience & Charitie. Who then said to the bishop, that if he woulde needes burne her, yet she trusted, that he woulde take and

*The troubles and examinations of Mathew Plase.

VNto these holy martyrs of Kent aboue specified, wher of seuen suffered at Maidstone, and seuen at Canterb. I thought not vnmeete heere also to be adioyned the examination of Mathew

Plase,* a Weauer of the same Countie of Kent, and a faithful christian. Who being apprehended and imprisoned likewise for the testimonie of a good conscience, in the Castell of Canterbury, was brought to examination before the Bishop of Douer, and Harpsfield the Archdeacon, as here is to be red and seene.

The examination and answeres of Mathewe Plase Weauer, of the Parish of Stone in the Countie of Kent, before Thornton Bishop of Douer, Harpesfield Archdeacon, Collins Commissarie, & other Inquisitours. An. 1557.

First when I came before the bishop, he asked me whether I were not of that Dioces, and where I dwelt, for that was my first Article.*

Ans.

I aunsweared, I was of the Parishe of Stone in Kent, and subiect vnto the King & Queene of England.

Bish.

Then he sayd, I was indicted by xij. men, at Ashford at the Sessions, for heresie.

Auns.

I sayd, that was sooner sayd then prooued.

Bish.

Then he sayde, it was the truthe that he had spoken to me, for he had whereby to prooue it.

Auns.

Then I desired him to let me heare it, and I would answere to it.

Bish.

But he sayd he would not so do, but I should aunsweare to my Article, yea or nay.

Auns.

I said, he could not: for I was not at Ashforde, and therefore he had nothing to lay to my charge. But nowe I perceiue you goe about to lay a net to haue my bloud.

Arch.

After many woordes betwixt the bishop and me, the Archdeacon said: peace, peace, we do not desire thy bloud, but we are glad to heare that thou art no hereticke, wyth many flattering woordes, and said: yet I was suspected of heresie, and if I woulde be content to confesse howe I did beleeeue as concerning those Articles, they woulde gladly teache me.

Auns.

But I sayd, I did not so thinke, for I talked wyth one of your doctors, and after long talke, he would nedes know how I did beleeeue in the Sacrament, and I recited vnto him the text, and because I would not make him an exposition, he would teach me nothing: yet I praied hym for my learning to wryte his minde, & if it were the truth, I would beleeeue him: and this I did desire him for y^e loue of God, but it would not be.

Arch.

Then sayd he, it was not so, he durst sweare vpon a booke.

Auns.

I sayd, it would be so prooued.

Arch.

Then he stooode vp with a long processe, and sayd: he would tell me the truth, and was sure that the same Doctour did beleeeue as he did.

Auns.

I asked him how he knew that, seing S. Paul doth say, that no man knoweth what is in man but the spirite which dwelleth in him: but if you wist what Christ meant by these words,*I require mercy and not sacrifice, you wold not kill innocents.

Bishop.

The Bishop began with me againe, and charged me in the king and Queenes name, and the Lord Cardinals, to answere yea or nay, to the Articles that followed.

Auns.

Then I commanded him in his name that should come in flaming fire with his mighty Aungels to render vengeance to the disobedient, and to all those that beleued not the gospell of our Lord Iesus Christ, which should be punished with euerlasting damnation, y^t he should speake nothing but the truth grounded vpon Christ and hys Apostles, and then I would answer him, or els not.

Bish.

Then he was very angry, and sayd: if I would not answer he would condemne me in dede: vnlesse I would answer euery Article.

Auns.

Wel said I, if you do, you shalbe gilty of my bloud, and prooue your selfe a murtherer.

Arch.

Then the archdeacon tooke the articles in his hand, & red the seconde Article, which was, that I was a Christian man,* and did beleue in theyr mother the Catholicke church, and the determination thereof.

Auns.

I sayd, I was a Christian man in deede, and therefore they had nothing against me.

Arch.

Thē said he, what saiest thou to y^e catholicke church, which hath so long cōtinued, except it were 9. or 10. yeres, that this heresie hath sprong vp here in this realme.

Auns.

I sayde, no man can accuse me of any thing spoken against the catholicke church of Christ.

Bish.

Then saide y^e bish. doest thou not beleue the Creede?

Ans.

Yes verely I beleue my Creede,* & all that is written in the Testamēt of Christ, with the rest of the Scriptures.

Bish.

Then sayth he: thou doest confesse that there is a Catholicke church, I am glad of that: but tell me, is the King and Queene of that Church or not?

Ans.

Wel said I, now I perceiue, you go about to be both mine accuser, & also my iudge, contrary to all right.* I confesse Christ hath a Church vpon earth, which is built vpon the Apostles & Prophets, Christ being the head therof, and as touching the King and Quene, I answere, I haue nothing to do with no mā's faith but with my owne: neither came I hether to iudge, for I iudge not my selfe, but the Lord must iudge me.

Bishop.

Then sayd he: Is there no part of that church here in England?

Auns.

Well I perceiue, you would faine haue some thing to lay to my charge. I will tell you where. Christ sayeth, whereas two or three be gathered together in his name, there is he in the midst among them.

Then the archdeacon stode vp with his mockes,* to put me out of comfort, & said to the people: that I had no wit, but y^t I thought all they were deceiued so long time, and that halfe a dosen of vs should haue the truth in a corner, & that al they should be deceiued, with such like taunts and mockes: but would not suffer me to speake one woord.

Arch.

Then he red the Article of the Sacrament, and said, I did denie the reall presence to be in the Sacrament after it was once consecrated, and that I sayde, Christes body was in heauen & no where els, and that the bread was nothing but a signe, token, or remembrance.

Ans.

Then I said: you haue to shew where and what my woordes were: and heereof we talked a great while.

Bish.

At the last the bishop was so angrie, that he charged me in the Kinges, Queenes, and Cardinals name before the Maior and his brethren, taking them to witnesse, if I did not say yea or nay, he would condemne me.

Ans.

Then I saide: seeing you haue nothing to accuse me of, wherefore should I so answer?

Arch.

Then the archd. said, I was guilty: and sayd I was like a thefe at the barre, which would not cōfesse his fault because his accusers were not present: with a great many wordes, & would not let me open my mouth against him.

Ans.

Then I sawe where about they went, graunting to answere them by the woorde, or els I thinke they woulde haue cōdemned me for holding of my peace: and this was my beginning: I beleue that Christ tooke bread,* and when he had geuen thanks, he brake it, and gaue it to his disciples, and sayde: Take, eate, this is my body which is geuen for you, this doe in remembrance of me.

Arch.

Doest thou beleuee y^t Christ meant euen as he sayd?

Ans.

I said, Christ was no dissembler, but he spake the very truthe.

Arch.

Thou hast very well sayd: we will make the best of thy words. Then he praised me with many words, going about to prooue it his body reall and substantiall, and said: Christ called himself bread: and this to proue, when Christ saide. This is my body: the breade was his body, saide he, in dede, real & substantial, not so long & so big as it hong on y^e Crosse, as the Capernaïtes did thinke: but we eate it, as mā's weake nature can eate Christ. Therfore when he had sayd: This is my body, the bread was his body in very dede.*

Ans.

Then I asked him, what Christ meant by these wordes. Which is geuen for you?

Arch.

He saide: Christ spake that by the bread also, but it was not written in Mathew, but Luke had those words.

Ans.

Then I asked him, if Christes bodye were made of bread, that was geuē for our redemption, or whether the bread was crucified for vs, or not?

Arch.

Then he sayd: no by saint Mary, I say not so.

Ans.

You haue said the truth in dede, & euen as I beleue.

Arch.

Then he stooode vp with a great many of words,* and sayd: that I did think it but bare bread stil, as other bread is: but he was sure Christe called it his body, and then it was his body in deede, for he would beleeeue Christ.

Ans.

When he had spoken his pleasure by me, thinking to haue condēned me by their law, I said: he had not iudged right of mee, for I hadde not so spoken, but did beleue the wordes of Christ as well as he, and as much as he coulde prooue by the woorde.

Arch.

Then he would heare what I did say it was.

Ans.

I said, I did beleeeue it was that he gaue them.

Arch.

Then he asked me, what it was that he gaue them.

Auns.

I sayd, that which he brake.

Page 1983

Arch.

*Then he asked me, what was that he brake?

Auns.

I sayd, that he tooke.

Arch

What was it that he did take?

Auns.

I sayd the text sayth, he tooke bread.

Arch.

Wel, then thou sayest it was but bread that his Disciples did eate, by thy reason.

Auns.

Thus much I say: looke what hee gaue them, they did eate in deede.

Arch

Why, then was not that his body that they did eate?

Auns.

It was that which he brake.

Arch.

Well sayd he, I perceiue thy meaning well inough, for thou doest thinke it is but breade still, and that hee was not able to make it his body.

Auns.

That is your exposition vpon my minde.

Arch.

Then saide he, what diddest thou receiue when thou diddest receiue last?

Auns.

I sayde, I doe beleue, that I did eate Christes flesh, and drinke his bloud. For he saith: My flesh is meat in deede, and my bloud is drinke in deede.

Arch

Then he sayd, I had well aunsweared, thinking to haue had some aduauntage at my hand, and praied me to tell him, how I did eate his flesh and drinke his bloud.

Auns.

Then I sayde, I must aunsweare you by the woorde, Christ sayeth: He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my bloude, dwelleth in me, and I in him.

Arch▪

Then he faced out the matter with Sophistrie, and sayde, I did eate Christe, as that Church was in his eye, with many such like mockes, but woulde not let me aunswere one woorde.

Commis.

Then the Commissarie did aske mee, if I did not remember S. Paule, which did rebuke the Corinthes for theyr euill behauior, and because they made no difference of the Lordes body, and brought in to prooue hys matter, howe he called him selfe bread in the 6. of Iohn. So Paul sayth: *So oft as ye eate of this breade (meaning Christes body) vnwoorthely, ye eate and drinke your owne damnation, because ye make no difference of the Lordes body. For thus sayeth Christ: The bread that I will geue you is my flesh. Now, it is no bread, but it is his flesh. And thus he alledged euery Scripture false to make vp the matter.

Auns.

Then I sayde, I did beleue the woordes of Paule very wel, euen as he had spoken them. For thus he sayeth: He that eateth and drinketh vnwoorthely, eateth and drynketh hys owne damnation, because hee maketh no difference of the Lordes body.

Commis.

What is the cause that he eateth his owne damnation?

Auns.

I sayd, Saint Paule declareth it plainly wyth these woordes: If ye had iudged your selues, ye should not haue bene iudged of the Lord.

Arch.

Then the Archdeacon sayde, he marueiled whye I would not say, * that he called the breade hys bodye, seeing Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer with many other, sayd he called it his bodye.

Auns.

I saide, you haue condemned them as heretickes, and you wold haue me say with them, because you wold kill me.

Arch.

Then he saide: In that they said it was his bodye, they did say the truth.

Auns.

I asked wherefore they were killed, seeing they sayd the truth?

Bishop.

Then sayde the Byshop, that he had all theyr aunsweres, and that they did not beleue as they said. For they sayd, Christ called it his body, but it was not his naturall body: but thou shall answere me by and by, whether it be his body or not, or els I will anger thee.

Auns.

Then I sayd: I had answered him by the word already, and did beleue it also: therefore if he did condemne me for that, my life was not deare vnto me, & I was sure he should not scape vnpunished: for God wil be reuenged vpon such murtherers.

Arch.

Then the Archdeacon intreated mee to be ruled by him, & take mercy while it was offered: for if I were condemned, I must needes be burned. Yet he would not say but my soule might be saued: with many moe wordes, and desired me that I would beleue hym, for he would speake the truth, beginning how Christ fed fiue thousande wyth foure loaues, and how he turned y^e water into wine: euen so Christ tooke breade and blest it, and when he had done, he brake it, and sayd: This is my body, and then he commāded them to eat it, and therfore it must nedes be his body.

Auns.

Then I desired him to speake the text right, or els I would not beleue him.

Arch.

Then he stode vp and put off his cap, and thanked me for teaching of him, and sayde: I was a stubberne fellow, and tooke scorne to be taught.

Auns.

I sayd, I ought to holde him accursed, if he taught doctrine contrary to Christ and his Apostles.

Arch.

Then he asked me, whether I did beleue that Christ did geue that he tooke, or not?

Auns.

I said, I do beleue as much as can be proued by the Scripture, and more I will not beleue.

Arch.

Then he began with Moyses rod, howe God commanded him to lay it down, and it was turned into a serpent. Seing that this was by Moyses being but a man, how much more Christ being both God & man tooke one thing, and gaue to his Disciples an other? *

Ans.

I said, his comparison was nothing like, for Moyses rod when it was laid downe, he saw that it was tourned into a verye Serpent in deede, but in this Sacrament no mā can see neither qualitie nor yet quantitie to be chāged.

Bish.

Then sayd the Bishop, that mine opinion and Faith was like vnto the Capernaïtes.

Ans.

I sayd, theirs was more like theyr opiniō then mine.

Arch.

The Archdeacon asked me, whether Christe tooke not one thing, and gaue an other?

Auns.

I sayde, Looke what he brake, hee gaue vnto them, and had them eate: and other answere I will make none, contrary to the woorde.

Arch.

Then he sayd, he marueiled why I woulde not beleue them, seeing this learning had continued this fiftene hundred yeares: neither yet did saye, as other had before, howe Christ did call it his bodye.

Auns.

Then I sayde, when Cranmer whyche was heere Byshop, was in authoritie, he sayde, that he did holde the truth, and commaunded vs to beleue him, and hee hathe geuen his life for his opinion, and would you haue me to beleue you, because you say, that you holde the truth? and that which makes me beleue chiefly, is y^e scripture, which I am sure is the truth in deede.

Bish.

The Bishop sayd, he hath spoken the truthe, & that I would not beleue him.

Auns.

I sayde, if he did not nowe speake the truthe, I was sure he had spoken the truthe, for hee had preached before, doctrine cleane contrary vnto this.

Then were the rest of my articles read: which I aunswered, and in euery article, we had vp this breaden god. And they sent for a candle light, & I thought they woulde haue condemned me, but God would not suffer their cruel hearts to haue theyr pleasure at that time: blessed he hys name for euermore. Amen.

Arch.

Then the Archdeacon was angry, & began to chide with me, because I woulde not desire a day of the byshop, and said: I was a noughty stubberne felowe, and sayde, it had bene my duety to haue desired him to haue bene good to me, that I might haue a day.

Auns.

Then I sayde: I haue spoken the truth, and therefore I would aske him no day, except he would geue me a day of his owne minde.

Commis.

Then sayde the Commissarie: Doest thou not thinke that thou maiest be deceiued, seeing hee may be deceiued that hath gone to study all the daies of his life?

Auns.

I saide, Yes, I mighte be deceiued in that I was a man: but I was sure Gods woord could not be deceiued.

Com.

Then hee praied me to be content, and confesse that I might learne, and said, they would be glad to teach me.

Auns.

And I sayde, I would be as glad to learne as any man. And thus they roase vp and went away, saying nothing.

What became of this Mathewe Plaise after, whether he died in prison, or was executed, or deliuered, I haue as yet no certaine knowledge.

The hystorie of ten true godly Disciples, and Martyrs of Christ, burnt together in one fire at Lewes. An. 1557. Iune 22.

IN the towne of Lewes were ten faithfull seruauntes of God put in one fire, the xxij. day of Iune, whose names followe.

- 1 Rich. Woodman.
- 2 George Steuens.
- 3 W. Mainard.
- 4 Alexander Hosman his seruaunt.
- 5 Tomasin a Wood, Mainards maide.*
- 6. Margerie Moris.
- 7. Iames Moris her sonne.
- 8. Denys Burgis.
- 9. Ashdons wife.
- 10. Groues wife.

Of the which noubner Richarde Woodman was the firste. Concerninge whose apprehension firste by hys enemies, and of hys deliuerance oute of Byshoppe Bouers handes, then of hys second taking againe by the procurement of hys father, brother, kinsfolkes and frendes, also of hys sundrye examinations and couragious aunsweres before the Bishoppes, and lastly of his condemnation, and of his letters sent to his faithfull friendes,* heere foloweth to be declared by his owne woords, and relation reported. Which Rich. Woodman, by his occupation was Page 1984 an Ironmaker,* dwelling in the Parish of Warbleton, in the Countie of Sussex, & Dioces of Chichester, of the age of 30. yeres, and somewhat more. The occasion of his first apprehension was this.

There was one Fairebanke, who somtimes had bene a married priest,* and serued the Cure of Warbleton, where he had often perswaded the people not to credite any other doctrine, but that which he then preached, taught, and set forth in K. Edwards dayes. And afterward in the beginnyng of Q. Maries raigne, the sayd Fayrebanke turnyng hed to taile, preached cleane contrary to that which he had before taught.

Whereupon Richard Woodman hearyng hym in the Church of Warbleton so to preache contrary to hymselfe, admonished hym of hys inconstancie, how before tyme he had taught them one thing,* and now another, and desired hym to teach them the truth. For the which words he was apprehended and brought before M. Iohn Ashbornham, M. Toston, M. Culpeper, and M. Robertes, Iustices of Peace in the Countie of Sussex, and by them committed to the Kyngs Bench, where he continued from Iune, the space almost of a yeaere and a halfe: and from thence was transferred by D. Story into Boners Colehouse, where he remayned the space of a moneth before he came to examination.

At length, the same day when M. Philpot was burned,* which was the 18. of December, he with 4. other prisoners was deliuered and set at libertie by Boner himself. Notwithstandyng, shortly after he was sought for again, and at last found out and taken by meanes of hys father, brother, and certaine other his acquainted friendes, and so was sent vp agayne to London to B. Boner, where he remayned in the Colehouse 8. weekes. He was there sixe tymes examined, and 26. tymes before, so that his examinations in all, were 32. from his first apprehension, to his condemnation. Touching the whole discourse wherof, for so much as the matter is something strange, and will peraduenture scarce find credit vpon my narration, with thē which deny all thynges, that lyke them not to beleue, ye shall heare himselfe speake, and testify both of the maner of his troubles, and also his owne examinations by himselfe recorded, in order as followeth.

✞ A true Certificate written by Richard Woodman, of his taking, & how he was brought to the Shiriffes the xv. of March, 1556. and how long he was in prison, and how he was there vsed, till he was broughte before the Bishoppe of Chichester at blacke Friers in London, with the order of his examinations followyng after the same.

Gentle Reader, here you shall perceiue how the scriptures bee partly fulfilled on me, beyng one of the least of his poore Lambes. First, you shall vnderstād that since I was deliuered out of the Bishop of Londons hands, which was in the yeare of our Lord, 1555. and the same day that M. Philpot was burned, (which was the 18. of December) I lay in his Colehouse 8. weeks lacking but one day. And before that, I was a yeare and a halfe almost, in the Kings Bench after my first apprehension, for reproouyng a Preacher in the pulpit, in the parish of Warbleton where I dwelt. Wherefore I was at two Sessions before I was sent to prison, and caried to two more Sessions whyle I was in pryson, twyse before the B. of Chichester, and fiue tymes before the Commissioners, & then sent to Londons Colehouse, & many tymes called before him, as it appeareth by my examinations which I wrote, the which examinations, the B. of Chichester now hath, for they were found in my house when I was takē, wherein is contened all the talke, which I had before them aforenamed. Also there be in London that had copies of the same of me, when I was in the Colehouse.

*And it pleased God to deliuer me, with foure or more, out of the butchers handes, requiring nothing els of vs but that we shuld be honest men, and members of the true Catholike Church that was builded vpon the Prophetes and Apostles, Christ beyng the head of the true Church, the which all we affirmed that we were members of the true Church, and purposed by Gods helpe therein to dye. And hereupon we were deliuered, but he willed vs many tymes to speake good of hym. And no doubt he was worthy to be praysed, because he had bene so faithfull an ayd in his maister the deuils businesse. For he had burnt good M. Philpot the same mornyng, in whose bloud his hart was so drunken (as I supposed) that he could not tell what he did, as it appeared to vs, both before & after. For but two dayes before he promised vs that we should bee condemned that same day that we were deliuered: yea & the morow after that he had deliuered vs, hee sought for some of vs agayne, yea and that earnestly. He waxed dry after his great dronkennes, wherefore he is lyke to haue bloude to drink in hel as he is worthy, if he repent it not with speed. The Lord turne all their harts if it be his will.

This haue I written, chiefly to certifie all people how we were deliuered,* because many carnall Gospellers and Papists haue sayd, that it was prescribed that we should be so deliuered, because they thinke that God is subiect to man, and not man to God. For if they did, they would not blaspheme hym as they doe, or if they thought they should geue account for it. Haue not many of them red, how God deliuered Israel out of Egypt? Daniel out of the Lyons denne? Sydrach, Misaach, and Abednago out of the burnyng ouen? with diuers other such like exāples, yea God is the same God that he was then. He is no older, nor lesse in power, as some count hym in wondring at his works. Now to the matter.

After I was deliuered,* the Papists sayd that I hadde consented to them, whereof they made themselves glad: the which was the least part of my thought (I praise God therefore) as they well perceiued, and knew the contrarye within a while. For I went from parish to parish, & talked with them, to the number of 13. or 14. and that of the chieftest in all the Countrey: and I angered them so,* y^t they with the Commissioners complayned on me to my Lord Chamberlaine that was then to the Queene, Sir Iohn Gage shewyng him that I baptised children, and married folks, with many such lyes, to bryng me into their hands agayne. Then the Commissioners sent out certaine Citations to bring me to the Court.* My L. Chamberlain had directed out 4. or 5. Warrantes for me, that if I had come there, I should haue bene attached and sent to prisō strait way. Which was not Gods will: for I had warnyng of their laying await for me, and came not there, but sent my deputie, & he brought me word that the Bailifs waited for me there, but they mist of their pray for that tyme, wherevpon they were displeased.

Then within 3. dayes after,* my L. sent 3. of his men to take me, whose names were Deane, Ieffrey, and Frāces. I beyng at plough with my folkes, right in the waye as they were commyng to my house, least mistrusting thē of all other, came to them and spake to them, asking thē how they did. And they sayd,* they arested me in the Kyng and Queenes name, and that I must goe with them to their Maister the L. Chamberlaine. Which wordes made my flesh to tremble and quake because of that sodayne. But I answered them that I would go with them.* Yet I desired them that they would go to my house with me, y^t I might breake my fast, and put on some other geare, and they said I should. Then I remembred my selfe, saying in my hart: Why am I thus afraid? they can lay no euill to my charge. If they kill me for well doynge,* I may thinke my self happy. I remembred how I was contented gladly before to dye in that quarell, and so had continued euer since: and should I now feare to dye? God forbid that I should, for then were all my labour in vayne.

So by and by I was perswaded, I praise God, considering it was but the frailty of my flesh, which was loth to forgo my wife & childrē and goods: for I saw nothing but present death before mine eyes. And as soone as I was perswaded in my mynd to die, I had no regard of nothing in this worlde, but was as mery and glad and ioyfull, I prayse GOD, as euer I was. This battaile lasted not a quarter of an houre, but it was sharper then death it selfe for the tyme, I dare say.

So when I had my breakfast, I desired them to shew me their warrant, thinkyng thereby I should haue seene wherfore I was arested,* to the intent I might y^e better answer for my self whē I came before their maister. And one of them answered, they had not their warrāt there. Which words made me astonied, and it was put in my mynde by God, that I neede not to goe with them,* vnlesse they had their warrant. Then said I to them, that is meruaile that you will come to take a man without a warrant. It seemeth to me that you come of your owne mind to get thāke of your maister, for in deed I heard say (sayd I) that there was 4. or 5. warrants out for me, but they were called in agayne,* because I had certified my L. and the Commissary by a letter that I sent to the Commissaries court, that I was not faulty in that they layd to my charge, which was for baptising of children, and marying of folks: the which I neuer did, for I was neuer minister appointed to do any such thyng: wherfore set your hartes at rest, I will not Page 1985 go with you (said I) vnlesse you will cary me by force, and if you will do so, at your owne aduentures. And so I rose from the boord and stepped into my chamber, meanyng to goe from them if I could possible, seeyng God had made the way so open for me.* I ment to play Peters part with them, but God would not it should be so, but sent a feare amongst them, that as soone as I was gone into my chāber, ere euer I could come out againe, they were gone out of my house.

When I saw that, I knew it was Gods doying to set me at liberty once againe.* Yet I was compelled to speake to them, and said: If you haue a warrant, I desire you for Gods sake to shew it me, and I wil go with you, with all my hart: if not, I desire you to depart in Gods peace and the kings: for surely I will not go with you without the order of the law: for I haue bene too simple in such things already. For before I was sent to prison first, I went to the Iustices to two Sessions, without any warrant or cōmandement, but had word by one of their men, & I went gently to them, & they sent me to prison, and kept me there almost a yere and thre quarters, without all right or equitie, as it is openly known, not hearing my cause iustly debated. And it semeth to me that I should be thus euil hādled, and therefore I will not go to none of them all henceforth without the extremitie of the law.

Then one of them answered me, and said: we haue not the warrant here, but it is at home at my house: the worst is you can but make vs fetch it. Then I said: Fetch it, if you wil, but if you come in my house before you haue it, at your owne aduenture.* So I shut my doore, and went my way out of the other doore. So they got helpe to watch my house, while one of them fet the Constable and many moe, thinking to haue had me in my house, and to haue takē me in my house, & caried me away with a licence: but I was gone before as god would haue it.* Notwithstanding they sought euery corner of my house, but could not preuaile, I mistrusted they would search it again that night, and kept me abroad, and in deed there came seuen of his men & the Constable, and searched my house.

And when they sawe that they could not meete w^t me, they were redy to rent their coats, that I had scaped them so, knowing they should haue such a checke of their maister. When I heard that they had sought so for me againe, I perceiuyng that they were greedy of their pray, came home, and my wyfe told me all thyngs.

Then I supposed that they would lay all the countrey for me, and the sea coast, because I should not go ouer, and thē I thought that they would not mistrust that I would dare bee nigh home. So I tolde my wyfe that I woulde make my lodgyng in a woode not past a flight shotte from my house, as I did in deede, euen vnder a tree, and there had my Bible, my penne and myne inke, and other necessities,* and there continued a sixe or seuen weekes, my wife bringing me meate daily as I had neede. Yea I thought my selfe blessed of God, that I was counted worthy to lye in the woodes for the name of Christ. Then there came word into the countrey, that I was seene and spoken too in Flaunders:* whereupon they left laying awaite for me for they had layd all the Countrey for me, and the sea coast from Portesmouth to Douer, euē as God put in my mind they would.

So when all was husht, I went abroad among our friends & brethren, and at length I went beyond the Sea both into Flanders and in Fraunce: but I thought euery day seuen yere or euer I were at home agayne. So I came home again as soone as it was possible. I was there but three weeks, but as soone as I was come home, and it once knowen among Baals priests, they could not abide it, but procured out warrantes agaynst me, causing my house to bee searched sometymes twice in a weeke. This continued from Saint Iames tide to the first Sunday in Lent. Otherwhile I went priuilly, otherwhile openly, otherwhile I went from home a fortnight or three weeks, otherwhile I was at home a month or fiue weekes together, liuing there most commonly and openly, doing such woorkes as I had to doe: and yet all mine enemies coulde lay no hands on me,* till the houre was ful come: and then by the voice of the country, and by manifest proofes, mine owne brother as concerning the flesh, deliuered mee into theyr hands, by that he knew that I was at home.

For my father & he had as much of my goodes in theyr hands,* as I might haue 56. pound for by the yeare cleare, and therunto praied. It was a Lordship and a honor, and halfe a honor that I had deliuered into their hands, to pay my debts, and the rest to remaine to my wife and childrē. But they had reported that it woulde not pay my debtes: which grieved me sore. For it was two hundred pounds better then the debts came to. Which caused me to speake to some of my frendes, that they would speake to them to come to some reckening with me, and to take all such money againe of me, as they were charged with, and to deliuer me such wrytings and wryts, as they had of mine, againe, or to whom I would appoynt them.

So it was agreed betwixt my Father and mee, that I should haue it againe, and the day was apoynted, that the reckening shoulde be made and sent to me that same daye that I was taken, my brother supposing that I shoulde haue put him out of most of al his occupying, that he was in: for it was all mine in a manner that he occupied▪ as all the countrey can and doe well knowe. Whereon (as it is reported) he told one Gradillar my next neighbor, and he told some of M. Gages men, or to M. Gage himselfe: and so he sent to his brother,* and hys brother sent 12. o• his mē (he being Sheriffe) in the night before I was taken, and laye in the bushes not farre from my house, till about 9. of the clocke, euen the houre that was appoynted amongst themselves: for about the same time they thought to haue had me within my house.

They had taken a man of mine and two of my childrē that were abroad in the land: and kept them with them til theyr houre was appoynted to come in, & then a litle girle one of my children, saw them come together, & came running in, & cried: mother, mother, yonder cōmeth 2. men. I sitting in my bedde and making of shoe thonge▪▪ heard the woordes, and suspecting straight way that I was betrayed, I stirred out of my bed & whipt on my hol▪▪ thinking to haue gone out of the doores or euer they had bene come. My wife being amased at the childes words,* looked out at the doore, and they were hard by. Then she clapped to the doore and barred it fast, euen as I came oute of my chamber into the Hall, and so barred the other: So the house was beset round straightway, and they badde open the doores, or els they would breake them in peces. Then I had no shift, but either I must shew my selfe openly, or make some other remedy.

So there was a place in my house y^t was neuer found which was at the lest, I dare say 20. times,* and somtimes almost of 20. men searched at once, both by night & by day. Into which place I went: And assoone as I was in, my wife opened the doore: wherby incontinent they came,* and asked for me: and she sayd I was not at home. Then they asked her wherefore shee shutte the dore, if I were not at home. Shee sayd, because shee had bene made afrayde diuers times, with such as came to search vs, and therefore shee shut the doore. For it is reported (sayth she) that who soeuer can take my husband, shall hang him or burne him strait way: and therefore I doubt they will serue me or my children so: for I thinke they may doe so vnto vs as well as to him, shee sayd. Well, sayd they, we know he is in the house, and we must searche it, for we be the sheriffes men: let vs haue a candle. It is tolde vs, there be many secrete places in your house. So shee lighted a candle, & they sought vp and downe in euery corner that they coulde finde, and had geuen ouer, and many of them were gone out of my house into the churchyard, and were talking with my father, and with some that he had brought with him.

Now when they could not find me,* one of them went to him y^t gaue them word that I was at home, and sayde, we can not finde him. Then hee asked them whether they had soughte ouer a windowe that was in the Hall (as it was knowen afterwarde) for that same place I had tolde hym of my selfe. For many times when I came home, I would send for him to beare me company: yet as it chanced I had not tolde him the way into it. Then they began to searche a newe. One looked vp ouer the windowe, and spied a little loft, with three or foure chestes, and the waye went in betwixt two of the chestes, but there could no mā perceiue it. Then hee asked my wife which was the way into it. Here is a place that we haue not sought yet. Then she thought they wold see it by one meanes or other. She sayde, the way was into it out of a chamber they were in euen now. So shee sent them vp, and cried, Away, away. Then I knewe there was no remedye, but make the best shift for my selfe that I could. The place was boarded ouer and fast nailed, and if I had come out that way that I went in, I must needes come amongst them al in the hall. Then I had no shift,* but set my shoulders to the boardes that were nailed to the rafters to keepe out the raine, and brake them in peeces, which made a great noyse, and they that were in the other chamber, seeking for the way into it, heard the noise, and looked out of a window, and spyed me, and made an outcry. But yet I gotte oute, and leaped downe, hauing no shoes on.

So I tooke downe a lane that was ful of sharpe synders, and they came running after, with a great crie, with theyr swordes drawne, crying, Strike him, strike hym. Page 1986 Which woordes made me looke backe, and there was neuer a one nigh me by a 100. fote: and that was but one, for all the rest were a great way behinde. And I tourned about hastily to goe my way, and stepped vppon a sharpe Sinder with one foote, & sauing of it, I stepped in a great miery hole,* and fell downe withall, and ere euer I coulde arise and get away, he was come in with mee. His name is Parker the wilde, as he is counted in all Sussex. But if I had had on my shooes, they had bene like to haue gone away arrandlesse, if there had beene 500. more, if I hadde caught the plaine grounde once, to the which I had not a stones cast: But it was not Gods will: for if it hadde, I shoulde haue scaped from them all, if there had bene tenne thousand of them.

Then they tooke me and led me home again to put on my shooes and suche geare as I had neede off. Then sayde Iohn Fancouer:* Nowe your maister hath deceiued you. You sayd, you were an Angel, and if you had bene an Angell, whye did you not flee away from vs? Then sayde I, what be they that euer heard me say that I was an Aungel? It is not the first lie by a thousande y^e they haue made of mee. Angels were neuer begotten of men, nor borne of women: but if they had saide, that they had heard me saye, that I doe trust I am a Saint, they hadde not said amisse. What, do you thinke to be a Saint? Yea that I do, and am already in Gods sight,* I trust in God: for he that is not a Saint in Gods sight already, is a deuil. Therefore he that thinketh scorne to be a Saint, let him be a deuil. And with y^e woord they had brought me to mine owne doore: where met w^t me my father, and willed me to remember my self.

To whom I answered: I praise God, I am wel remembred wherabout I go. This way was appoynted of God for me to be deliuered into the handes of mine ennemies, but woe vnto him by whom I am betraied. It had bene good for that man, that he had neuer ben borne, if he repent not with speede. The Scriptures are nowē fulfilled on me: *For the father shall be against the sonne, and the brother shall deliuer the brother to death, as it is this daye come to passe. Then sayd one: He doth accuse his Father: a good childe in deede. I accuse him not, but say my minde: for there was no man knewe me at home, but my father, my brother, and one more, the which I dare saye, woulde not hurt me for all the good in this towne.

*There was one George Bechinge that marryed one of my sisters, & he thoughte that I had meant him, that he had betraied me: and he said: Brother, I would you shuld not thinke that I was the cause of your taking. To whō I answered, that I ment him not: I meant one that was nearer of my bloud then he was. Then said one of Lause, that had bene a gospeller, & stood from them, when I was brought to a sessions to Lause, and he said, I thought you would haue ben an honest man when you were at Lause, and I offered Hussey the sheriffe to be bound for you, that you shuld go home to your wife, and come to him againe. Then I remembred what he was, * and saide: Be you the Peauterer? And he saide, Yea. Then saide I: It is happened to you according to the true Prouerbe, as sayeth S. Peter: The dogge is tourned to his vomit againe, and the sowe that is washed, to wallow in the mire, and the ende of all suche will be worse then the beginning. Then his mouth was stopped so, that he had nothing to say.

*All this while I stoode at my doore without: for they would not let me goe in. So I put on my shooes and my cloathes, and then they putte on an harnesse aboute mine armes made of a dogs slip, which reioyced my heart, that I was counted woorthy to be boūd for the name of God. So I tooke my leaue of my wife and children, my father & other of my friendes, neuer thinking to see them more in this world. For it was so thought of all the country, that I should not liue 6. daies after my taking: for they had so reported. But yet I knew it was not as they would, vnlesse God wold graunt it. I know what God can do: but what he wil do, I know not: but I am sure he wil worke al things for the best, for them that loue and feare him. So we dranke and went our way, and came to Firle about 3. of the clocke. And thus much touching the causes & effecte of the troubles of Rich. Woodman. Nowe let vs see his examinations, which follow in this order.

The first examination of Rich. Woodman, before Doctor Christopherson Bishop of Chichester, Doctor Story, Doctor Cooke, and other.

First you shal vnderstād, that I was sent from the sheriffes to London, the 12. day of Aprill, in the yere of our Lord. 1557. and afterwarde vpon the 14. daye of the same moneth I was brought before the Bishop of Chichester, and doctor Story, and doctor Cooke. So the sheriffs man deliuered my warrant and me to the bishop. * Then the bishop asked me what my name was. My name (quoth I) is Richard Woodman.

Chichester.

I am sory for you, and so are all the worshipfull men of your Countrey. For it hath bene reported to me, that you haue bene a man of good estimation in all the Countrey, amongst the poore and riche, till nowē of late. Wherefore looke wel vpon your selfe, your wife, and children, your Father, and other of your frends, and be ruled. Thinke not your selfe wiser then all the Realme. Be enfourmed, and you shal haue theyr fauors all, as muche as euer you had.

Wood.

You haue charged me with many things, wherin I haue neuer offended, and if you will geue mee leaue, I will shewe you.

Chichester.

Yes, I pray you, say your minde.

Wood.

If it please you, you haue charged me as thoughe I made my selfe wiser then all the Realme: God doeth knowe, I stande to learne of euerye man that will or can teache me the truthe. And where as you say, I haue beene wel esteemed both of the poore and riche, God doth know, I knowe not that I haue geuen any iust offence, either to rich or poore. And as for my wife and children.* God doeth know how I loue them in him, and my life also. My life, my wife, and my children are all in Gods handes, and I haue them all as I had them not, I trust, according to S. Paules woords. But if I had x.M. pound of gold, I had rather forgoe it all, then them, if I might be in choice, and not displease God.

Chichester.

The sheriffe tooke paine to come to me of loue, he sayd which he bare to you, as to himselfe: and sayd, you were desirous to speake with me.

Wood.

I thought it mete to appeale to my Ordinarie. For they goe about to shed my bloud vnrighteously.* For they haue laid many vniust things to my charge. Wherefore I thoughte it meete to appeale to you, that if you can finde any fault in me, meete to be reformed by Gods woorde, I stād to be reformed: and likewise, if my bloud shalbe shed vnrighteously, that it mighte be required at your handes, because you haue taken vpon you to be the Phisition of our countrey.

Story.

Is not this a peruerse felow, to lay to your charge, that his bloude shalbe required at your hands?*_ Thinkest thou that thou shalt be put to death vniustly, y^t thy bloude should be required? No, if he should condemne a hundred such heretickes as thou art, I helped to ridde a good sort of you. And I promise thee I will helpe to ridde thee too, the best that I can.

Wood.

Then I would haue answered him, but the Bishop desired vs both to geue him place.

Chichest.

Well, neighbour Woodman: I call you neyghbour, because you be one of my Diocesse: and you are sent to me that I should geue you spirituall counsell: for I am your spiritual Pastour. Therefore heare what I shall say to you.

Wood.

First I desire you to heare me a few woordes. You haue said, you wil geue me spiritual counsell. Be you sure that you haue the spirite of God?

Chichest.

No, I am not sure of that?

Wood.

No, be you not sure of that?*

Chich.

So by S. Mary, I dare not be so bold to say so: I doubt of that.

Wood.

Then you be like the waues of the sea, as saith S. Iames, that be tossed about with the wind, and be vnstable in all your wayes, and can looke for no good thyng at the Lordes hand: Yea, yee are neither hote nor colde, and therefore God will spew you out of his mouth, as sayeth S. Iohn. Then they were in a great furie, especially doc. Storie, saying:

Storie.

What a peruerse fellow is this? he hath the Deuil within him, and is madde. Hee is woorse then the Deuill.* Nowe I perceiue that it is true that is reported by thee, and it is the pride of all suche heretickes, to boaste themselues.

Chich.

Yea surely, hee is sent to mee to learne, and taketh vpon him to teache me.

Wood.

I seeing their blindnesse and blasphemie, it made my heart melt, and mine eies gush oute with teares, saying: The Iewes saide to Christ, he hadde the Deuill, and was madde, as you haue said heere by me. But I knowe, the seruante is not aboue his maister. And God forbid that I should learne of him that confessest that he hath not the Spirite of God.

Chich.

Why, doe you thinke that you haue the Spirite of God?*

Wood.

I beleeeue verely that I haue the spirite of God.

Chich.

You boast more then euer Paul did, or any of the apostles, the which is great presumption.

Page 1987

Wood.

*I boast not in my selfe but in the gift of God, as Paule did: for he sayd, he beleued verily that he had y^e spirit of God, makyng thereof no doubt, in the 1. to the Cor. the 7. chap.

Chich.

*It is not so, you belye the text.

Wood.

If it be not so, let me be burned to morow.

Story.

Thou shalt not be burned to morow, but thou shalt be burned within these 6. dayes, I promise thee.

Chich

If it be so, it is wrong translated, as it is in a thousand places more.

Wood.

*Then one looked in a Latine Testament, and another in a Greeke Testament, and they said, it was in them both, that Paul supposed that he had the spirit of God, but he was not sure.

Chich.

Euen so I hope and suppose that I haue the spirite of God, but I am not sure.

Wood.

If that place be wrong trāslated, and so many places of the Bible as you say, then I may say with Christ, it cannot be auoyded, but offences must be geuen: But woe vnto them by whom they come. I may say woe vnto false Translators. For cursed are they that adde or take away. But take you heed that you belie not the Translators. I beleeeue they had the feare of God more before their eies then you report of them. And yet if that place bee wrong translated, I can prooue places enough that Paule had the spirit of God, as I my selfe and all Gods elect haue.

Chich.

How prooue you that?

Wood.

No man can beleeeue that Iesus is the Lorde, but by the holy Ghost.* First to the Corrinth. the 7. chap. I do beleeeue that Iesus Christ is my redeemer, and that I shall bee saued from all my sinnes, by his death and bloudshedding, as Paule and all the Apostles did, and as all faithfull people ought to do, which no man can doe without the spirite of God. And there is no damnation to thē that are in Christ Iesus: so is there no saluation to them y^t are not in Christ Iesu.* For he that hath not the spirit of Christ, is none of his, but is a cast away as he saith in the same text. And againe: We haue not receyued the spirite of bondage,* to feare any more, but we haue receyued the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba father. The same spirit certifieth our spirites that we are the sons of God. Here are proofes enough, that Paule was sure that he had the spirite of God.* Also S. Iohn sayth: He that beleeueth not that Christ is come in the flesh, is an Antichrist, & denieth both the Father and the sonne: which is sinne against the holy Ghost, which shall neuer bee forgeuen in this world, nor in the world to come. Besides all this, Hee that beleeueth in God, dwelleth in God, and God in hym. So is it impossible to beleue in God, vnlesse God dwell in vs. Oh good God, what more iniurie can be done vnto thee, then to mistrust that we haue receyued thy holy spirite by thy gift? Thus may all men see their blindnes, and whose seruants they be, as they do declare themselues both by their words and deeds.

Story.

Oh my Lord, what an heretike is this same? Why heare you hym? Sende hym to prison to his fellowes in the Marshalsee, and they shall bee dispatched within these xij. dayes.

Wood.

When I heard hym say so, I reioyced greatly in my hart, desiring God if it were his will, to keepe hym in that mynd. For I looked surely to haue gone to the B. of Londons colehouse, or to Lollards tower: yea I thought my selfe happy if I might haue gone to Lollardes tower: but it pleased God to put in the hartes of them to send me to the Marshalsee amongst our brethren and my olde prison fellowes:* So mercifully hath God delt with mee in casing of my burden, that I looked for. So when they perceiued that I feared not imprisonment, but rather reioyced as they well perceiued. Then said the B. Me thinkes he is not afraid of the prison.

Wood.

No, I praise the liuyng God.

Story

This is an heretike in deed. He hath the right terms of all heretikes: * the liuing God, I pray you be there dead Gods, that you say, the liuyng God?

Wood.

Be you angry with me because I speak the words which are written in the Bible?

Story.

*Bibble babble, bibble babble. What speakest thou of the Bible? There is no such worde written in all the Bible.

Wood.

Then I am much to blame if it bee not so written: Behold, for the offences that you haue done, you shall bee caried away captiue by Nabuchodonoser to Babylon, * and there ye shall be seuen generations: and when you be there▪ you shall see gods of gold, of siluer, of wood, and of stone borne before you & behynd you vpon mens shoulders, to cast out a feare among the Heathen. When you shall see all these abominations, then say in your heart: * It is the liuyng God that ought to bee worshipped. Here I prooue my saying true, both that there is a liuyng God, and that there be dead Gods. Also Daurid sayth in his Psalmes: * My soule hath a desire and longyng to enter into the courtes of the Lord: My heart and my flesh reioyce in the liuing God: with diuers other places that I coulede recite. Wherefore I meruaile that you rebuke me for speaking the truth.

Chich.

I doe not deny but it is written, and is the truth, * and I know it as well as you, but such is the speach of all heretikes.

Story.

My Lord, I will tell you how you shall knowe an heretike by his words, because I haue bene more vsed to them then you haue bene: that is, they will say (the Lord) and (we prayse God) and (the liuyng GOD.) By these words you shall know an heretike.

Wood.

All these wordes are written for our learnyng, and we are commanded of the Prophets to vse them daily, as this: The Lordes name be prayسد frō the rising vp of the sunne vnto the goyng downe of the same. Also, As many as feare the Lord, say alwayes, the Lord be prayسد.

Story.

My Lord, send hym to prison, you shall do no good with hym. I will go to church and leaue you here. This is an old heretike. Wast thou neuer before me ere now?

Wood.

Yes forsooth, that I haue.

Story.

Yea, I trowe so: and I sent thee to the B. of London, and he released thee, and thou promisedst him to be an honest man, and that thou wouldst be of the true Catholike church, which thou hast not fulfilled.

Wood.

I promised him nothing but I haue fulfilled it. No man shall be able to prooue the contrary.

Story.

Well, it will be tried well enough. My Lorde, I will take my leaue. I feare me you shall doe this man no good.

Chich.

I would not haue you to vse such speach as you do, as the Lord be prayسد, and the liuing God,^{*} with such like words. Can you not say as wel, our Lord, or our God, as otherwyse?

Wood.

I meruaile why you should reprooue me therefore, seeing it is the words of God? I do not refuse to saye our God, or our Lorde, when I talke the Scriptures where it is written. If I should, it must follow that I denied the wordes of God, and must needs be an heretike: but I do not. Wherefore I meruaile what you meane to finde fault therein. It seemeth to me, that you mistrust that I beleue not as you do.

Chich.

Yea, that is my meanyng in deed.

Woodman.

I beleue in the liuyng God, if you doe not so, then our beliefes be not alike in deede. But if it please you to examine me vpon any perticular matter, now, or at any other tyme, I will make you answer thereto by Gods helpe.

Chich.

Though you beleue in God, I can prooue you beleue not as you ought to do, as I can shew you by your hand writing. You haue denied y^e catholike church, Wherefore he that erreth from the church, it cannot be sayde that his faith is good. Wherefore be ruled by the Church, from the whiche ye haue erred.* I canne shewe you perillous things of your writing, if it should be known, but ye shall not be hurt for me, if you will come to any good order. But I promise you I would not for three thousand poūd some had so much against me, as I cā shew against you of your owne hand writing, which you cannot deny.

Wood.

I will not deny my hand by Gods helpe. For I know well, I haue written nothing at any tyme but the truth. There may be things written against me, reporting it to be myne, and yet be not: but my hand cannot well be counterfeited, there be enow that know my hand.

Chich.

Do you know it your selfe if you see it?

Wood.

Yea, that I do. Then he arose and fet a great bundle of writings, and opened them, and bade me come see. I looked on them, and it was my hand in deed.

Chich.

How say you, is it not your owne writing?

Wood.

Yes surely it is.

Chich.

How say you to this, is not this your hand also?

Wood.

I looked, and it was. And I said, Yes verily is it.

Chich.

Well, you know what it meaneth, I dare say.*

Wood.

Yea, I know it very well: here is a great deale, the which I had thought had bene in my house, but I thanke God that it is here, for in this you shall try whether it be true or not. For in this is contained all the talke that was betwixt the Commissioners and me, when I was before them fiue tymes, and also before the Bishop of London diuers tymes: and I am sure, you nor they shall finde no words false therein written:* and I thinke the shirifs mē when they searched my house for me, when I was taken, found this, and caried it with them, but I neuer knew it before now. But I am not sory for it, but am rather glad. For herein you may see all the wrong that I receyued at their hands, & how long I was in prisō, and how I was tossed vp and down, and how I was deliuered at length▪ Page 1988 and by this you may try whether it be so or not.* I dare say they that found it, & they that brought it to you, had thoght it would haue turned me to displeasure: but in very deed all things worke for the best to them that feare God.

Chic.

In deed I find no great fault in this: but here is perillous geare, here is sedition. This was set vp vpon the church dore, you know it well enough.

Wood.

*In deed I wrote it to the Priest and to other that tooke vpon them to fetch my childe out of my house without my leaue, and vsed it at their plesure, when they knew it was baptised already, as they were wel certified before. Wherefore my conscience compelled me to shew them my mynd in writing, wherein is contained nothyng but the scriptures of God, rebuking them for their folly.

Chichest.

Yea, but it is terribly ment, and vncharitably. It is such geare coupled together I promise you, as I neuer see the lyke. But I promise you, I will make the best of it. And I protest before God, I would you should doe as well as myne owne soule and body. Be contented to be enformed. God hath done his part on you. Cast not your selfe away. Remember your wife and children, & the poore that lacke your occupying. Meane to follow your vocation.* Remember you are not called to bee a teacher nor a preacher. S. Paul saith: Let euery man walke wherein he is called, and therein abide. Remember you are called to another vocation, for Gods sake walke therin. It is not your office to do as you haue done. You might do as much good by the report of worshipfull men, as any man might do in all the Countrey by your example, and if you would follow the lawes of the catholike church, it would be an occasion to bring a great many into the true church, that are out as you are.

Wood

I would not that you should say, that I am out of the church of God,* for I am not, but do allow the Church of God accordyng to his word. Yea, if I were abroad, if I could winne any into the true Church that be out, by any meanes that I could vse, I would be very glad. For God knoweth I loue all people as my self. And where you say I haue bene a preacher, it is not so. I neuer tooke any such thyng vpon me,* as it is well known. But as for teaching I cannot deny: for it becommeth euery man to teach and instruct his houshold in the feare of God, and all other (as far as he can) that desire it of him. And where as you haue blamed me for reading the Scripture, and leauing my vocation (as you say) I le•• not my vocation in reading the Scripture. For I trust I followed my vocation the better therefore. And the greatest cause that I was compelled to read the Scriptures, was, because the preachers and teachers was so changeable.

Chic.

No? did you not preach at a Fayre?

Woodman.

No surely, but it was so reported. I was at a Fayre in deede. Whilest I was in prison, I had leaue of the Counsaile to goe home to pay my debtes, and then I went to a Faire to sell cattayle, and there mette with mee diuers poore men that I had set a worke, and of loue asked me howe I dyd, and how I coulde away with imprisonment. And I shewed them howe GOD had delte with mee, and howe he woulde deale with all them that putte their trust in hym:* and this they called preachyng. And since that it hath bene reported that I haue baptised children, and married folkes, the which I neuer dyd: for I was neuer Minister. Wherefore if I had so done, I had done contrary to the order of the Apostles, as God forbid I should.

Chich.

I am well apaid, if you be faultles in those thyngs, for I haue heard say the contrary.

Wood.

I haue shewed you the truth, and that no man liuyng shal be able to prooue the contrary.

Chich.

You sayd you doe not disallow the true Catholike Church.

Wood.

No, that I do not.

Chich.

*Why do you not then go to the Church? You come not there, it is enformed me.

Wood.

I trust I am in the true church euery day. But to tell you truth, I come not at the Church where the most do resort. For if I should, I should offend, and be offēded. For at the last tyme that I was there, I offended many, & was offended my selfe. Wherefore for conscience sake I would not come there. For I was sent to prison for my commyng there, & now I am sent to you for biding thēce. So they will not bee pleased any way with mee, for they seeke my lyfe. Wherefore looke you to it, for I am now in your hands, and you ought to be a house of defēce against myne enemies. For if you suffer them to kill me, my bloud shall be required at your hands. If you can finde any iust cause in me worthy of death by Gods word,* you may cōdemne me your self, and not offend god: wherfore looke to it, the matter is weighty, deliuer me not into their hands, and thinke so to be discharged.

Chich.

I tell you truth, I can doe little in the matter. For I haue not full authoritie as yet of myne office: but I wil send for you and talke with you, if I wis• I should do you any good.

Wood.

I would be glad to talk with you and to shew you my mind in any thing that you shall demaund of me, now or at any other tyme.

Chich.

So then he desired the shiriffes men to tary dinner with hym: that this man (said he) may dine with me also:* for it is possible that hee may haue no great store of meate whither he shall go.

Wood.

So we taried dinner with him,* and had no further talke, neither how to prooue where the true church of God is, nor of the Sacraments, nor of any other thing pertaining to meward, not for the space of two houres or more: but he entred in talke with me, how I vnderstoode many scriptures, & for bishops and priests mariages, & whether Paul had a wyfe or not. To whom I answered: It is a thyng that I haue little to do with, as concernyng mariages: but I am very well content to talke with you in the matter, as far as my poore learning will serue.* So when he had talked with me of diuers Scriptures, he liked my talke well. He asked me how I said by S. Paul, whether he were married or not. To whom I answered: I prooue by the scriptures, that he was neuer married.

Chich,

How prooue you that?

Wood.

I will prooue it well enough by Gods helpe. But yet I will prooue that Paul might haue had a wife, as well as the other Apostles had.

Chich.

Why, had the Apostles wyues?

Wood.

Yea, all, sauing Paul and Barnabas, as I vnderstand it.* For these are Paules wordes in the 1. to the Cor. 9. chap. Am I not an Apostle? am I not free? haue I not seene Iesus Christ? Are not ye my worke in the Lord? And if I be not an Apostle to other, yet to you I am an Apostle For you are the seale of my Apostleship in the Lord. Myne aunswer to them that aske me, is this: Haue we not power to eate and to drinke? eyther haue we not power to lead about a sister to wyfe, as well as the other Apostles haue, and as the brethren of the Lord? Eyther haue not Barnabas and I power thus to doe? So this text prooueth, that Paul & Barnabas were vnmarried. But Paule declareth that the rest had wiues, & that they had power likewise so to haue, but they found no neede thereof. But Paul declareth in the 7. chap. of the 1. epistle to the Corin. that he that hath no power ouer his owne flesh, may marrie: For it is better to marrie then to burne. Wherefore, to auoyd fornication (saieth he) let euery man haue his wyfe.* Hee sayth, Let euery man haue his wyfe, and euery woman her husband. By this place of scripture I vnderstād,* that bishops & priestes may haue wyues, because they are men, rather then burne, or to commit fornication. But I thinke verily, he that can abstaine, hauing power of his owne wyll, doth best: but if he marrie, he sinneth not.

So then hee debated the Scriptures with me dyuers wayes, that a bishop nor a priest ought not to haue a wife: but I prooued by diuers Scriptures both in the old Law & in the new,* that women were at first made for the helpe of men, the which was spoken generally to al men. Wherefore (said I) euery man may haue a woman and sinne not in honest matrimony, as well bishops & Deacons, as other men, which you call priests, if they be true Ministers of Iesus Christ, & of that order that Bishops & Deacons were in Paules tyme.* For Paul declareth to Tim. 1. and the 3. That a Bishop should be the husband of one wyfe, & how they should be honestly apparelled, and how they should bring vp their children, and likewise the Deacons. This (sayd I) prooueth more plainly, that both bishops & Deacons had wyues in the Apostles tyme, the which he could not deny. But then he alleaged that no bishop nor Priest might take a wife, after he had taken vpon him that office, but if he had a wife before he tooke the office tryed meet for the purpose, for his lyfe and for his learnyng, hee might keepe his wyfe, and bryng vp his children according to s. Paules meadyng to Timothie, or els might they haue no wyues.

Then sayd I, I thinke Paules meanyng in that place was, that a man that hath had two wiues, might not bee made a bishop nor a Deacon, if he had neuer so much learnyng. But that place maketh not that a bishop or a Deacō may not marry after they be made bishops and Deacons. For I am sure that Paul was in the state of a bishop, whē he sayd: He had power to lead about a sister to wyfe, as well as the other Apostles had. Here Paul declareth,* that it was in his power to haue a wyfe, after he had the office of a Bishop, which was not in his power, if he had bene forbidden of God.

Page 1989 Thus haue I shewed you my mind in this behalf, both of Paul, and also for the mariages of bishops and priests, as I vnderstand the scriptures. Howbeit, it is a thing the which I haue litle to doe withall: but as you required me to say my minde in that matter, so I haue done.

Chich.

Marye I am glad that you haue sayd as you haue done. Many doe affirme boldly that Paul had a wife, and yet can not prooue whether he had or had not, by y^e scriptures: but you haue said very wel. I am glad that yee are contented to be ruled by Gods woord. And if you will be contented likewise in other matters, no dout you shall do well: therefore gentle goodman Woodman be ruled. God hath geuē you a good wit.* I protest before God, I would you should do as well as mine owne soule and body, and so would (I dare say) all the worshipfull men in the coūtre, as they haue reported to me.

Wood.

Why, my Lord, I take God to recorde (whome I trust to serue) that I woulde be as glad to liue in rest and peace, as any man in all y^e world, if I might. And I stand to learne, & am contented to be reformed of any thing that I hold, if it can be prooued that it be not agreable to gods woorde. And the truthe is so, I haue talked with a dosen Priests at the least, since I was deliuered out of prison, of certaine matters, and they haue not ben able to certify me in any thing that I haue asked them: and therefore haue they complained on me to the Sheriffe and Iustices, making tales and lies on me, to tourne me to displeasure, as much as in them lieth. I promise you, there be as many vnlearned Priests in your dioces, as in any one dioces in England I thinke: the more it is to be lamented.

Chich.

I promise you, I do much lament it my selfe: for I heare say no lesse: but it is true that you say. I woulde I could remedy it, but I can not: but I wil doe the best that I can, when I come into the cuntry, and I wil be glad to talke with you some other time, when I am somewhat better at ease. You see I am very tender now, as I haue bene this halfe yeare and more. Come to dinner: our dinner is ready. I caused not you to tarie for any great chere that you shall haue, nor I would you should not thincke that I goe about to winne you with my meate. But you be welcome with all my heart. Come, sit downe.

Wood.

I thanked him, and wēt to dinner: and there dined with him a Marchant man, one of the sheriffes men, and I,* and no mo, & we had good chere, God be praised therefore. We had no talke of the scriptures all y^e dinner while: but when dinner was done, the bishop saide.

Chich.

Now cal M. Stories man. For the commissioners haue committed you to prison: but I wil sende for you or euer it be long, and I pray God I may doe you good. I would be very glad of it.

Wood.

If it please you to send for me, I woulde be verye glad to talk with you, for I like your talke wel. And then if it please your Lordship to examine me vpon any particular matter, I will shew you my minde therein, by gods grace,* without dissimulation. But I pray you let me haue nothing to doe wyth M. Storie, for he is a man wythout reason, me thinke.

Chich.

Wel, or euer you goe, how say you to the vij. Sacraments? Let me heare what you say to them, y^t I maye be the willinger to send for you againe.

Wood.

*I know not vij. Sacraments.

Chich.

Then what shall I talke with you? Howe many doe you know?

Wood.

I knowe but two: one the sacrament of baptisme, and the other the supper of the Lorde.* But if you can iustly prooue by Gods woord, that there be more then two, I stand to be reformed.

Chich.

If I prooue not vij. by Gods woord, then beleue me not: and so he bade me farewell.

Then the Sheriffes two men, and one of doc. Stories men, caried me to doc. Cookes house, which doctor Cooke commaunded them to carie me to the Sheriffes prisone in Southwarke: saying, he shall be called before vs agayne shortly and all his fellowes, and we shal dispatch them for troubling the countrey any more.

And so I was brought to the Marshalsea: where I now am mery (God be praised therfore) loking for iudgement of my flesh: for they intende to dispatch me shortly, if God will geue them leaue: but God hath theyr hearts in his hāds, and they can do nothing to me, but as God wil geue them leaue. Wherefore I commit my cause to God onely, and I am sure there shall not one haire of my head pearish without my heauenly fathers wil, although I bide neuer so much trouble. Iob pearished not for all his trouble, although God gaue the deuil leaue to trouble and try him diuers & many waies, as God hath suffered his mem^bers to trouble and trie mee diuers and many waies, I praise God. They shall as little preuaile against my faith) I haue no mistrust) as y^e deuil preuailed not against Iob,* whatsoeuer they doe with my goodes, life or body. For he that kept Iob in al his trouble, neither slombreth nor slepeth, but keepeth me & all his electe, that whether we liue or die, it shall be to the praise and glory of God. For if we liue, we liue at the Lordes wil, and if we die, we die to the Lordes will: so, whether we liue or die, we are y^e Lordes, blessed be his name therefore.

Wherefore, dere brethren and sisters, to whom this my wryting shall come, be of good cheare and feare not what man can do vnto you. For they can but kill the body: * but feare him that hath power to kill both body and soul. And yet once againe I bid you be of good cheare. For the Sheriffe with diuers other Gentlemen and Priests, whilst I was at the Sheriffes house, said to me that all y^e heretikes in the couñtrei hong on me, as the people did in times past vpon S. Augustine, or S. Ambrose, or such like. Wherefore said they, looke well on it, you haue a great thing to aunswer for. To the which I answered: I pray God lay nothing more to my charge, then he will doe for heresie, as I am sure he will not. For he hath set my sinnes as far from me, as it is from the East to the West: * So that I am sure they shall neuer come neare to mee anye more. Yea, & that they call heresie, wee serue God withall. * And I am sure there is no man nor woman that hangeth on me, but on God. But yet that is their imaginations and thoughtes, that if they might winne me to them, they should winne a great many likewise: and thinking to kill mee, if they can not win me, as I trust in God, and am sure they shall neuer by Gods grace, if it were possible to kill me x. times: for I am so linked to Christ in a chaine by Faith, * that it is vnpossible for men to loose vs a sunder, neither for life nor death. I praise my Lord God therfore. And no dout their full intent and purpose is to kill me, thinking thereby to make other afraide. Which death of my body were best of al for me, if God were so pleased. But if I may liue for the comfort of other, his name be praised therefore. I knowe what he can doe: but what he will do, I know not. But if death be offred me, so that I can not refuse it, without displeasing of God, I trust in God I shal not offēd my brethren in receiuing of death, but shall be rather an occasion of the strengthening of their faith, by chusing & receiuing of it, and that with ioy. For as Christ hath geuen hys life for vs, * so ought we to geue our liues for the defence of the gospel, and comfort of our brethren. And whereas the byshop sayeth, he will prooue vij. sacraments, be you oute of doubt he shal neuer be able to doe it, no more then he hath prooued other arguments with me already.

Thus fare ye well frō the Marshalsey, where I now am, as a sheepe appoynted to be slaine, God be praised therefore.

The second examination of Richard Woodman, before the bishop of Chichester, two of his Chapleines: and D. Story at the last came to vs, the xxvij. day of Aprill.

First, I was sent for to the Marshalsey by Doctor Storie, * and was caried to his house besides S. Nicholas Shambles: and when I had spoken to him, he sent me to the bishop of Chichester, and sayde, he would come to him his selfe straight way: and when we were in the Bishops Hall, we had not taried long, but the Bishop sent for me: and when I came before him, I did my duetie to him as much as I could.

Chich.

Then said the Bishop: You be welcome: howe doe you nowe?

Wood.

Well, I praise God, thanking your Lordship for the gentle talke that you hadde with me at my last departing from you.

Chich.

Well, goodman Woodman, I haue sent for you of loue & good wil that I bare to you, to talke with you: and I would haue you to tel me your minde in few woordes. For in dede the last time that I talked with you, our talke was so long, that I fell into a great drieth thereby, & haue bene the worse in my body euer since. Wherefore I praye you shew me your minde briefly, in those particular matters that I shall demaunde of you, according to your promise that you made when you were with me the last time. How say you, will you?

Wood.

Yea forsooth: I wil answere to any thing that you shall demaund of me (by Gods helpe) as wel as I can.

Chich.

Howe say you by the vij. Sacramentes? for there we leaft off, and there we will begin againe. You sayde then there were but two. How say you now to it? wil you denie all sauing two?

Wood.

I say now, as I sayd then. You sayd, there be vij. sacraments, and I said, I knew but two: * but if you could Page 1990 approue seuen by Gods word, when I came before you again, I must needes graunt thē. And you said, if you could not proue them by Gods word, I should not beleue thē: & now I am come to see how well you can proue thē. Herewit• he was moued and all his Chapleines.

Chich.

By GOD and my troth, I weene he thinketh I can not proue them. How say you to the sacrament of Matrimony?

Wood.

Why, my Lorde, Saynt Paule sayeth to Timothy: * A bishop should be faultles: and you vse much swearing, which is a greate fault in a Byshop, of all other, that should be an example to the flocke. Then he and his Prelates were in a great rage w^t me, because I reproued hym for his swearing.

Chich.

What, I perceiue this man is worse then he was the last day: what, he taketh vpō him to teach me to speak, as though I could not tell what I had to do.

Priest.

So me thinketh, my Lorde, he is a stout fellowe in deed, as we haue seene.

Wood.

Yea, I am stout, because I do that I am commaūded. I dare not for my life holde my peace, for I shoulde beare your sinne,* the which I will not doe for none of you all, I tell you playnely.

Chich.

Where finde you that you are commaunded to reprove me?

Wood.

If thou see thy Brother sinne, reprove hym: if hee repent, thou hast won thy Brother. But you repent it not, me thinketh, but rather goe about to mainteine the same. Christ sayth: He that breaketh one of the least of my commaundementes, and teacheth men so, shall be called least in the kingdome of heauen: and you goe about to teach men so, as farre as I see.

Priest.

Why my Lord, this man is past cure. I see no hope in him.

Chich.

*No, so me thinketh. I will neuer talke wyth hym more, Go cal M. Story: let him do with him what he wil. He hath bene with his felowes in the Marshalsea, & now he is worse then he was before. I had some hope in him y^e other day, but now I see none.

Wood.

No, I prayse God, my fayth hangeth vpon no mē, but vpon God.

Priest.

Nay, my Lord, I think he is not the worse for thē: bu• I feare me they be the worse for him. I know this mā of old, before mine old Lord.

Wood.

Well my Lord, looke well to it: will you deliuer me to other men▪ to shed my bloud, and so think to wash your hands of me, as Pilate did by Christ? Nay you can not be so discharged.

Chichest.

I haue nothing to doe with you: but of my gentlenes I haue sent for you, because you said, you would declare you mind in any particular matter that I would demaund of you.

Wood.

Why, I doe not deny but I will doe so, if you doe demaūd it of me. But you go about to deliuer me to other to kill me? and I know that there is none that hath to do with me but you.

Chich.

*I am not consecrated yet: wherefore my Lord Cardinal may examine you, and condemne you, or my Lord of London, for you are now in his Dioces.

Wood.

Yea my Lord, is the matter euen so? Then I perceiue wherabout you go. Nay, I will talke no more wyth you then, if you be at that poynt. Aske me what you will: but I will shew you nothing of my mind. I promise you, I will not aunswere in particuler matters, and so you to accuse me to other, and they to kill me.

Chich.

I goe not about to kill you, but woulde be glad to heare your minde in the sacramēts, that if you vnderstand them not aright, I would be glad with al my hart to shew you my mind how I vnderstand them. For I would you should do as well as mine owne selfe.

Wood.

If you woulde talke with me to doe me good, I would be content to heare you, and shew you my mind: otherwise I would be loth.

Chich.

Nay, I will promise you, if I can do you no good, I will do you no harme: for if I meant to doe you harme, I could lay your owne hande writing against you, but I will not: * wherefore be in no doubt of me. How say you to y^e sacrament of Matrimony? Is it a sacrament or no? How thinke you by it?

Wood.

I thinke it is a holy institution ordeined of God in Paradise, and so to continue to the worldes end.

Chich.

Lo, now you shall see how you be deceiued in that, as you be in all the rest. Come hither. You can read Latin I am sure.

Wood.

Yea, I can read latin, but I vnderstand very litle.

Chich.

Come to me, you shall see that Paule calleth it a holy Sacrament. For these be the wordes: For this cause shall a man leaue father and mother,* and shall be ioyned to his wife: and two shall be made one flesh: This is a great Sacrament.*

Wood

I remember such a saying: but S. Paule calleth it not a sacrament. But he sayth: It is a great mystery.

Chich.

Where sayth he so?

Wood.

I am not sure in what Texte it is, but I am sure these be S. Paules wordes, and that he calleth it not a sacrament in all his writinges.

Chichest.

What, the last daye ye were full of Scriptures: here it is written and there it is written. What, wee can rehearse the Scriptures, as well as you. Wherefore, if we be sure it bee written, it is no greater matter for the place. Come hither, I will shew you the place, I thinke, that you meane.

Wood.

I looked, and it was writtē Sacramentum.* I know it is a great mistery in the English translation.

Chich.

I permit it be a mistery. What is a mistery?

Wood.

A mystery is (I take it) vnseene: for he sayth, he speaketh betwixt Christ & the congregation. So the great mystery that he speaketh of, I take to be the fayth of them that be married, which is hid in christ, the which we see not, but Christe. But the deede which is in the congregation, which is the outward mariage we see, but the inward mariage of y^e hart we see not. Wherefore Paul calleth it a mystery. And therefore, if it be a sacramēt, it is inuisible to vs: It is not seene, as other sacraments be.

Chichest.

Nay, I tell you it is a visible Sacrament, seene as the other be: for is not the mariage seen? is not the man and woman seene?

Wood.

My Lord▪ I pray you what is a sacrament?

Chich.

It is the signe of a holy thing.

Wood.

Me thinkes you haue certified mee verye well. There neede not be a signe of a holy thing, where the holy thing is it selfe. Then hys Chapleynes woulde haue interrupted me, but I desired my Lorde I might say out my minde in the matter. So with much adoe he bade me saye what I could.

There neede not to be a signe of a thing, where the thing is it self.* Matrimony is a holy thing it selfe and is ended outwardly, and neede no more signes but themselues: Wherefore it canne not be a Sacrament as other bee.

Chich.

Loe, how much you speake agaynste your selfe.* And as for an example? I come by a Hosier, and there hangeth a payre of Hose, the which be Hose, and be a signe of hose that be to •ell within.

Priest.

How say you to this? Now my Lord hath hit you home in deed.

Wood.

He hath hit me perillously, I tell you with sophistry to blinde mine eyes withall. I maruell you be not all ashamed of it. I can answere that, to all your shames, if I might be iustly heard, I tell you playnely.

Priest.

What, you be angry me thinkes.

Wood.

I am not angrye, but I am earnest, I tell you, to see your blindnes and folly.* I talked of the Scriptures that be written, and it is Gods worde, to prooue my matter true by, and you wil proue your matter true by a paire of hose. And as well can you proue it by that, as by Gods word.

Priest

Why, is there nothinge true, but that is written in the Bible?

Wood.

S. Paule saith to the Galathians the first chapter: If an Aungell come from heauen, and preach any other doctrine then may be proued by Gods word, hold him accursed: & so doe I, I tell you playnely.

Priest.

Here is a Testament in my hand: if I hurle him in the fire and burne him, haue I burned gods word, or not?* I will buy a new for xvj. pence.

Wood.

I saye, you haue burned Gods worde, and I beleue, he that will burne a testament willingly, would burn God him selfe, if he were here, if he could: for he and hys word are all one.

Then they made a great laughing at it,

Wood.

Laugh on (quoth I) Your laughing will be turned to weeping, and all such ioy will be turned to mourning. if you repent it not with speed.

Chich.

Then the bishop begon to helpe to cloake the Priestes folly, saying: why, if my Counting house were full of bookes, and if my house should be on fire by chaūce, and so be burned, were Gods word burned?

Wood.

No, my Lord, because they were burned against your will: but yet if you shoulde burne them willingly, or think it well, & not being sorry for it, you burn Gods word as well as he. For he that is not sorry for a shrewd turne, doth allow it to be good.

Page 1991

Chich.

Folow your vocation: you haue a little learning. We haue an aultar, whereof you may not eate. What meane•h S. Paule thereby?

Wood.

*There is no manne so foolishe, to eate stones, I trowe.

Chichest.

What Mockers and Scorners be you, to saye no manne will be so foolishe, to eate stones? it is a playne mocke.

Wood.

Why, my Lorde, you sayde I had no learnyng, nor knowledge, nor vnderstanding. Wherefore it becommeth you to make things more plaine to me, & not to aske me such darcke questions, and yet blame me too: me thinke it is too much.

Chic.

I dare say you know what it meaneth wel enough. The most foole in my house will vnderstand my meaning better then you do.

Wood.

There stooode some of his menne not farre of, talking together beside a window. He called one of them by his name.

Chich.

Come hither. I say to thee, thou shalt not eate of this table. What do I meane therby?

The man.

*Forsoothe, my Lorde, you woulde not haue mee eate of this table, laying his hand thereuppon. With this answere he made all them in the house to fall on laughing, and I could not holde it in, but burste out with laughter, and sayd.

Wood.

Hee hath expounded the matter almoste as well as I.

Chich.

He meaneth well enough, if you woulde vnderstand him.

Aunswere me agayne, to make it more playne. I saye to thee, thou shalt not eate of this Table. What meane I thereby?

The man.

Forsoothe you woulde not haue mee eate thys Table.

Wood

These wordes made them al laugh. Wherwith the bishop was almost angry, because the answere proued no better, and sayd.

Chich,

He meaneth that I would not haue him eate anye of the meat that is set vpon this Table. How sayest thou, doest thou not meane so?

The man.

*Yes forsooth my Lorde, that was my meanyng in deede.

Wood.

Yea, my Lorde, nowe you haue tolde him what you meane, he can say so too: and so could I haue done (as litle witte as I haue) if you had sayd Paule meant that no man might eat of that which was offered vpon the aultar, but the priestes.

Chich.

Yea, I perceiue you vnderstande the meaning of Paule well enough, but that you list to cauell with me.

Wood.

Why, my Lord, doe you thinke I vnderstand such darcke places of the scripture, without learning? you sayd euen now, I had no knowledge nor learning, wherefore I aunswered you, as you iudged of me.

Chich.

*Well, let this matter passe, and let vs turne to the principall agayne. Howe say you by the Sacrament of the Aultar?

Wood.

You meane the sacrament of the body and bloud of Iesus Christ.

Chic.

I meane the sacrament of the aultar, and so I say.

Wood.

You meane Christ to be the aultar, do you not?

Chich.

I mean the sacrament of the aultare in the church. What, is it so straunge to you?

Wood.

It is straunge to me in deede, if you meane the aultar of stone.*

Chich.

It is that aultar that I meane.

Wood.

I vnderstand not the aultar so.

Chich.

No, I thinke so in deede: and that is the cause that you be deceiued. I pray you, how doe you vnderstand the aultar then?

Wood.

If you will geue me leaue till I haue done, I will shew you how I vnderstand the aultar, and where it is.

Chich.

Yes, you shall haue leaue to say your minde, as much as you will.

Wood.

It is written. Mat. 18. That wheresoeuer two or three be gathered together in Christes name,*there is he in the midst among them: and whatsoeuer they aske the father vpon earth, it shalbe graunted them in heauen, agreeing to the 5. of Math. saying: When thou comest to offer thy gift at the aultar, and there remēbrest that thy brother hath ought agaynst thee,*leaue there thy offering, and go first and be reconciled to thy brother, and then offer thy gift. The priests would haue interrupted me: but the bishop bad them let me alone.

Chich.

You shall heare a prety conclusion anone.

Wood.

I pray you let me make an end, and then find fault with me if you can. Now to the matter. In these two places of scripture,* I proue that Christ is y^e true aultar, wher on euery christian man & woman ought to come and offer their giftes. First wheresoeuer the people are gathered together in Christes name, there is he in the midst: & where he is, there is the aultar, so that we may be bold to come & offer our gift, if we be in loue and charity: if we be not, we must leaue there our offering, and go first and be reconciled to our brother, & agree with him quickly, and so forth, and then come and offer thy gift. Some will say, how shal I agree with my aduersary,* when he is not nigh by a hūdred miles? may I not pray till I haue spoken with him? To al such I answere: if thou presume to pray among the faithful, wyshing any euil to any mā, womā or child, thou askest vengeaunce vpon thy selfe. For no such asketh any thing els of the Lord in his prayer. Wherefore agree with thy aduersary: y^t is, make thy life agreable to Gods word. Saye in thy harte without dissimulation, that thou askest God and all the world forgeuenes from the bottom of thy hart, entending neuer to offēd thē any more. Thē all such may be bold to come & offer their gifte, their prayer on the aultar, where y^e people of god be gathered together. Thus haue I shewed you my mind, both of y^e aultar, & of the offering, as I vnderstand it.

Chich.

Doe you vnderstand the offering and the aultar so? I neuer heard any man vnderstand it so, no not Luther y^e great hereticke, that was condēned by a generall Coūcell, and his picture burned.

Wood.

If he were an heretick, I thinke he vnderstoode it not so in deed: but I am sure all Christians ought to vnderstand it so.

Chich.

O what vayne glory is in you, as though you vnderstood all thing, & other men nothing. Heare me: I will shew you the true vnderstanding, both of the aultar, & the offering on the aultar. We haue an aultar (sayd Paul) that ye may not eate of▪* meaning thereby that no man might eat of that which was offered on the aultar, but the Priest. For in Paules time all the liuing that the Priest had, the people came & offered it on the aultar, mony or other thinges: and when the people came to offer it, and then remēbred that they had any thing agaynst their brother, thē they left their offering vpon the aultar, and went & were reconciled to theyr brother: and they came agayne and offred their gift, and the Priest had it. This is the true vnderstanding of the place that you haue rehersed: wherefore you be deceiued.

Wood.

My Lord, that was the vse in the olde law. Christ was the ende of that. But in deede I perceiue by Paules wordes, the sacrifice was offered in Paules time: yet that maketh not that it was wel done, but he rebuked it. Wher^lfore, it seemeth to me that you be deceiued.

Chich.

Who shall be iudges betwixt vs in this matter?*

Wood.

The xij. of Iohn declareth who shall be iudge in y^e last day.

Chich.

You meane the word shall iudge the word: Howe can that be?

Wood.

Saynct Peter sayth: The Scripture hath no priuate interpretation▪ but one scripture must be vnderstand by an other.

Chich.

And you will vnderstande it one way, and I wyll vnderstand it an other way: and who shalbe Iudges betwixt vs then?

Wood.

The true church of God is able to discusse al doubttes: to whom I referre it.

Chich.

I am glad you say so, if you will say so in deed.*

Wood.

My Lord, I neuer meant otherwise.

Chich.

The Church of God doth allow the Sacrament of the aaltar.

Wood.

What do you offer now vpon the aaltar?

Chich.

We offer vp in the blessed Sacramente of the Aaltar the body of Christ,* to pacifye the wrath of God the Father: and therewith they put off their cappes all, to that abominable Idoll.

Wood.

Saynt Paule sayth to the Hebrues, in the x. chap. We are sanctified by the offering of the body of Iesus Christ vpon the crosse once for all: and euery Priest is dayly ministring & oftentimes offereth one maner of offering, which can neuer take away sinnes: and that is the offering that you vse to offer. As farre as I can see, you be priestes after the order of Aaron, that offered vp Sacrifice for their own sinnes, and the sinnes of the people.

Chichest.

Nay, Aarons sacrifice was with bloud, whiche signifieth the death of Christe, the whiche was ended vpon the Crosse by his bloudshedding: but we are Priestes after the order of Melchisedech,* the whiche offered breade to the king in remembraunce, and signified the geuing of Christes body in bread & wine at his last supper, the whiche he gaue to his disciples, & commaunded it to be vsed to the end of the world. This is the sacrifice that we offer, according to his word.

Woodman.

Me thinke you haue made the matter verye Page 1992 playne to me, that as Christ was the ende of all Sacrifices, so was he the beginning of the Sacramentes, willing them to be vsed in the remembraunce of him, to the worldes end.

Chichest.

What, in remembraunce of hym, and not hym selfe,* as his worde sayth: Take, eate, this is my body? It is not the signe onely, but the thing it selfe. How say you? is it not his body, after the words be spoken by the priest? How say you? goe briefly to worke, for I can not long tary with you.

Wood.

My Lord, if you will answere me to one sacramēt, I will answere you to another.

Chich.

Yes, I am very well contented with that.

Wood.

If you say the words of baptisme ouer the water, & there be no childe there, is there true baptisme?

Chich.

No, there must be the water, the worde, and the child, and then it is baptisme.

Wood.

Uerye well. Then if a childe bee Baptised in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, it is not truely baptised.

Chich.

No the childe muste bee baptised in the name of the father, & of the sonne, & the holy ghost, or els it is not truly baptised.

Wood.

Then there may be nothing added, nor takē away from the Sacraments: may there?

Chich.

No, sayd the Bishop.

Wood.

Now, my Lord, I will answere to you, if it please you.

Chich.

Well, how say you. Take, eat, this is my body: is it not Christes body, as soone as the wordes be sayd?

Wood.

My Lorde, I will aunswere you by your owne wordes,* that you aunswered me, whi•h is true: the water, the word, and the childe, all these together make baptisme: the bread, wine, and the word make the Sacrament: & the eater, eating in true fayth, maketh it his body. Here I proue it is not Christes body, but to the faythfull receiuer. For he sayd: Take, eat, this is my body.

He called it not his body before eating, but after eating. And Saynt Augustine sayth: Crede, & manducasti: Beleue, and thou hast eaten And Saynt Iohn sayth: He that beleueth in God, dwelleth in God, and God in him: wherfore it is vnpossible to dwell in God, and to eat his body, without a true fayth.

Priest.

*Then the fayth of the receiuer maketh it his body, & not his word, by your saying. I pray you, what did Iudas eate?

Wood.

Iudas did eat the sacrament of Christ, and the deuill withall.

Priest.

He eat the body of Christ vnworthely, as S. Paule sayth.

Wood.

Nay, S. Paule sayth no such thing. He speaketh not of eating of his body vnworthely, but of the sacrament vnworthely. For he sayth: Who soeuer eateth of this bread, & drinketh of this cup vnworthely, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, because he maketh no difference of the Lordes body: and not because he eateth the Lordes body. If Iudas had eat Christes body,* it must needes folow that Iudas is saued. For Christ sayth in the sixt of Iohn: Who so euer eateth my flesh, and drinketh my bloud, hath eternall life, and I will raise him vp agayne at the last day.

Priest.

My Lord, this man is an interpreter after his own minde.

Chich.

I see it is but folly to talke with you: it is but lost labour. How say you? Doe you not beleue, that after the wordes be sayd,* there remayneth neither bread nor wyne, but the very body of Christ really? make me a playne aunswere, for I will talke no more with you.

Wood.

I will make you no directe aunswere, howe I beleue of the true Sacrament. I doe beleue, that if I come to receiue the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ, truely ministred,* beleuing that Christ was borne for mee, and that he suffered death for me, and that I shall be sau'd from my sinnes by his bloudshedding, & so receiuing the Sacrament in that remembraunce, then I beleue I do receiue wholly Christ, God and mā, mistically by fayth: this is my beliefe.

Chich.

Why then it is no body without fayth. Gods word is of no force, as you count it.

Wood.

My Lorde, I haue tolde you my minde without dissimulation, & more you get not of me, without you will talke with me by the Scriptures: and if you will do so, I will beginne anew with you, & proue it more plainly thre or foure maner of wayes, that you shall not say nay to that I haue sayd, your selfe.

Then they made a great laughing, and sayd: Thys is an Hereticke in deede, it is time he were burned: Which wordes moued my spirite, and I sayde to them: Iudge not least you be iudged. For as you iudge me, you shall be iudged your selues. For that you call heresy, I serue God truely with, as you all shall well know, when you shalbe in hell, and haue bloud to drinke, and shalbe compelled to say for payne: This was the mā that we iested on, & whose talke we thought foolishnes, and his end to be without honour:* but now we may see how he is counted among the Sayntes of GOD, and we are punished. These wordes shall you say, being in hell, if you repent not with speed, if you consent to the shedding of my bloud: wherefore looke to it, I geue you counsell.

Priest.

What, you be angry, me thinkes. Now I will saye more to you, then I thought to haue done. You were at Baxill a twelue moneth agone, & sent for the Parson & talked with him in the Churchyard, and would not goe into the church: for you sayd: it was the Idols temple. Yea I was with mine olde Lorde, when he came to the Kinges Bench to you, and you sayd many stout wordes to him.

Wood.

That I sayde, I sayde: and where you sayde, I was angrie, I take God to my recorde, I am not, but am zelous in the truth,* & speake out of the spirite of God with chearefulness.

Priest.

The spirite of God? hough, hough, hough: thinke you that you haue the spirit of God?

Wood.

I beleue surely that I haue the spirite of GOD, I praise God therfore: and you be deceiuers, mockers, and scornors before God, and be the childrē of hel, all the sort of you, as farre as I can see. And therewith came in D. Story, poynting at me with his finger, speaking to the bishop in Latin, saying at length.

Story,

I can say nothing to him, but he is an hereticke.* I haue heard you talke this houre and a halfe, and can heare no reasonablenes in him.

Wood.

Iudge not, lest you be iudged: for as you iudge, you shalbe iudged your selfe.

Story.

What be you a preaching? you shal preach at a stake shortly with your felowes. My Lord, trouble your self no more with him.

With these wordes, one brought woorde that the Abbot of Westminster was come to dyne with the Byshop, and many other gentlemen and women. Then there was rushing away with speed to meet him. Then sayd Doctor Story to my keeper.

Story.

Cary him to the Marshalsee againe,* and let him be kept close, and let no body come to speake with him.

Wood.

And so they departed. Then one of the priestes begon to flatter with me, and sayd: for Gods sake remember your selfe. God hath geuen you a good wit: you haue read the scriptures well, & haue borne them wel in memory: It were great pity you should do amisse.

Wood.

What a flatterer be you, to say my wit is good, and that I haue red the scriptures well: & but euen now you said I was an heretike & despised me. If I be an heretike I can haue no good wit as you haue cōfessed. But I think your owne consciēce doth accuse you. God geue you grace to repent, if it be his will.

Priest.

I cal it a good wit, because you are expert in all questions.

Wood.

You may call it a wicked wit if it agree not with gods word. Then one cried: Away, away, here commeth strangers. So we departed, & I came againe to the Marshalsee with my Keeper.

¶The third examination of Richard Woodman (copied with his owne hand) before D. Langdall parson of Buxted in Sussex, and Chaplaine to my Lord Montague, and M. James Gage, at my Lord Montagues house beside S. Mary Oueries in Southwarke, the 12. day of May, Anno. 1557.

The 1^o. day of May the Marshal came to the Marshalsee & sent for me to speake with him.* When I came before him, & had done my dutie, he asked my name, & what countrey man I was, I shewed him both. Then he asked me when I was abroad in the city. To whom I answered, if it shal please your maistership, I was abroad in the citie on Monday was seuennight.

Marshall.

What made you abroad?

Wood.

The B. o^o Chichester sent for me to talke with mee at home at his house beside S. Nicholas shambles.

Mar.

Were you abroad no otherwise then so?

Wood.

No forsooth: I was neuer abroad since I was sent hither, but then. For I haue nothing to do abroad, vnlesse they send for me.

Mar.

This is a marueilous matter. I promise you I was not so rebuked these 7. yeares,* as I was for you within these 3. dayes. It is reported that you were abroad in the citie at certaine Tauernes, & spake seditious wordes both in the Tauernes and Streetes as you went.

Wood.

Syr, the trueth is, I was in neuer a house or Tauerne, whiles I was abroad, but in the bishops house, as my keeper can, & will (I am sure) testify: nor I neuer talked with any man in the streetes as I came, but with my keeper, sauing with one man in deede, of the Parishe of Framfield in Sussex, where M. Iames Gage dwelleth. His name is Rob. Smith, being one of my most enemies: who stood in a waine as we came by, and was vnloading of Cheese (me thought) but a litle way from the Marshalsee. In deede I bade him God speede, and asked him howe he did: and he sayd, well, he thanked me: and he asked me how I did, and I sayd, well, I prayse God: & that was all the talke that we had: & these wordes were spoken as I came by him. I promise you sir, I stooode not still while I spake thē, as my keeper can tell: and I thinke these words were no seditious wordes, but might be spoken well enough (I thinke) or els it were very strayt.

Marshall.

*Then it is to bee thought, that that man reported otherwise then it was. I am gladde it is as you say. Well make you ready, for you must go forth straight way, where you shall be examined of that and of other thinges, where you shal aunswere for your selfe. Go make hast: for I will •ary till you be ready.

Wood.

So I departed from him, & went to my prison felowes, & took my leaue of them desiring thē to pray for me, for I thought verely to come no more to them. For I supposed I should haue gone before the Counsell, because the Marshall sayd he would tary for me himselfe: and especially because he sayd it was reported that I had spoken seditious words, it made me to think it is possible that there may be some false things imagined vpon me, to bring me to my end. I remembred that Christ sayd: The seruant is not aboue his Lord. Seyng the Iewes brought false witnes agaynst Christ, I thought they would do much more, or at the least doe so to me, •• God would suffer thē: which made me cast the worste. But I was and am sure (I prayse my Lord God) that all the world is not able to accuse me iustly of any such thing. Which thing considered, made me mery and ioyfull: and I was surely certified that they coulde do no more against me, then God would geue them leaue: And so I bad my prison fellowes farewell, and went into the Porters Lodge to the Marshall, and he deliuered me to one of his owne men, and to one of my Lord Mountagues men, and bade me go with them: and they caryed me to my Lord Mountagues place in Southwarke not farre from S. Mary Oueries, and brought me into a chamber in my Lord Mountagues house: and there was one Doc. Langdale, chapleine to my Lord. My keepers sayd to the Docto•: this is the man that we went for.

Lang.

Is your name Woodman?

Wood.

Yea forsooth, that is my name.

Lang.

Then hee beganne with a greate Circumstaunce, and sayd: I am sorry for you, that you will not be ruled, but stand so much in your owne conceite, displeasing your father and other, iudging that all the Realme doth euil, saue a few that doe as you do: with many such wordes, whiche be too long to rehearse: but I will declare the substaunce of them.

Lang.

What think you of them that died long agoe, your Graundfather,* with theyr fathers before them? You iudge them to be damned, & all other that vse the same that they did, throughout all Christendome, vnlesse it be in Germany and here in England a few yeares, and in Denmark: & yet they are returned againe. Thus we are sure this is the truth, and I would you should do well. Your father is an honest man and one of my parish, and hath wept to me diuers times, because you would not be ruled: and he loueth you well, & so doth all the country, both rich and poore, if it were not for those euill opiniōs that you hold with many such like tales of Robin Hood.

Wood.

I pray you geue me leaue to speake a fewe wordes to you.

Lang.

Yes, say your mind.

Wood.

You haue told a great tale and a long, as it were agaynst me (as you thinke) saying, I hold this and that: I iudge my Father and my Graundfather, and almost al the world, without it be a few that be of our sect. But I iudge no manne. But the xij. of Iohn declareth, who it is that iudgeth, and shall iudge in the last day. The father shal not beare the sonnes offences, nor the sonne the fathers offences: but that soule that sinneth shall dye, as sayth the Prophet. And agayne,* we may not folow a multitude to do euill, as sayth the Prophet: For the most goe the wrong way. And Christ sayth in the xij. of Luke, that his flock is a litle flock. Here be places enough to discharge me, although I do not as the most doe. But can any man say, that I do not as I ought to do? where be my accusers?

Lang.

What, you be full of scripture me thinke, and call for your accusers, as though you were afraid to vtter your mind to me. But I woulde haue you not to be afraid to talk with me: For I meane no more hurt to you then I do to my selfe, I take God to my record.

Wood.

I cannot tell. It is hard trusting of fayre wordes, when a man cannot trust his father nor brother,* nor other that haue bene his familiar frendes, but they deceiue him. A man may lawfully follow the example of Christ towards them that he neuer saw before, saying: Be as wise as Serpentes, and as innocent as doves. Beware of men, for they goe about to betray you. And it maketh me suspect you much, because you blame me for answering with the scriptures. It maketh me to doubt that you would take vantage of me, if I should speake mine owne wordes. Wherefore I will take as good heede as I can, because I haue bene deceiued already by them I trusted most. Wherefore blame me not though I aunswere circumspectly. It shall not be sayd, by Gods helpe, that I will run wilfully into mine enemyes handes, and yet, I prayse God, my life is not deare to my selfe, but it is deare with God: Wherefore I will do the vttermost that I can to keepe it.

Lang.

You be afayrd where no feare is,* for I was desired of Mayster Sheriffe and his brother, and of other of your frendes, to talke with you, and they told me thot you were desirous to talke with me, and now ye make the matter as though you had nothing to doe with me, & as though you were sent to prison for nothing: for you call for your accusers, as though there were no man to accuse you. But if there were no man to accuse you, your own hand writing did accuse you enough, that you set vpon the Church doore (if you be remembred) and other letters that you let fall abroad, some at one place, and some at an other. Wherefore you need not to cal for your accusers. Your own hand wil accuse you enough, I warrant you: it is kept safe enough. I would not for two hundred pounce there were so much agaynst me.

Wood.

I will not deny mine owne hand, by Gods helpe. For it cannot be lightly counterfayted. I doe not deny but I wrote a letter to the priest and other of the parish, declaring to them theyr folly and presumption, to come into my house without my loue or leaue and fet out my childe, and vse it at their pleasure.* Which moued me to write my mind to them: and because I coulde not tell how to conuey it to them, I set it on the Church doore. Which letter my Lorde of Chichester hath: for he shewed it me whē I was before him: wherein is contained nothing but the very scriptures, to theyr reproch. Let it be layde before me when you or hee will: I will answere to it by the helpe of God, to all theyr shames that I wrote it to. And as for any other letters, I wrote none, as you say I did, neither had I wrote that, if they had done like honest neighbours. Wherefore if they be offended with me, for that I wil aunswere thē with Christes wordes, in the 18. of Math. woe vnto themselves, because they gaue me the occasion.

And whereas you sayd, I was desirous to speak with you, and that Maister Sheriffe and his brother, and other of my frendes willed me to talke with you, and that I fare nowe as though I had nothing to doe with you, and as though I were sent to prison for nothing: the truth is, I know no more wherefore I am sent to prison, thē the least child in this towne knoweth. And as for me, I desired not M. Sheriffe to speake with you: but in deede he desired me that I would speake with you, & to vtter my fayth to you.* For he supposed that I did not beleue well: & he reported you to bee learned. But I refused to talke with you at the first. For I remēbred not that you were the parsō of Buxted: wherefore I sayd to him, I would not vtter my faith to any but to the bishop. I sayd, he is mine Ordinary: wherefore I appeale vnto him. I am commaunded by S. Peter in the first Epistle the thyrd chap. to render account of my hope that I haue in god, to him that hath authority: wherefore I will talke with none in that matter, but with hym. Wherefore send me to him, if you will, or els there shall no man know my fayth, I tell you playnely.

These wordes then made the Sheriffe angry, and he went his way: and when he was gone from me, I remēbred that it was you that he would haue me to talke with, and then I remembered that I had made a promise to my father, and goodman Day of Uefield, not past a fournight before I was taken,* that when so euer you came into the country, I would speak with you by Gods helpe, because they praysed you so much, that yee were learned, and they would fayne here vs talke.

So al these thinges called to remēbrance, I desired my keeper, which was the Sheriffes man to shew his maister that I would fayne speake with him: for I had remēbred things that were not in my mind before, when I spake to him. So he went to his maister, & shewed him the matter, Page 1994 and he came to me: and then I told him my mind, & what promise I had made: and he said, he would send for you on the morow, as he did, and the messēger brought word you could not come: you preached before the Queene, he sayde. Whereupon the Sheriffe came vp himselfe, and spake to the Bishop that he should come downe, but he was sicke. So when he came home agayne, he sent me to the Bishop, and I haue talked with him twice already,* and I am sure he can find no fault in me, if he say iustly: and yet I know not wherefore I was sent to prison: For I was not guilty of that whiche was layde to my charge, that I had baptised children, the which I neuer did, as God knoweth: wherefore I haue wrong to be thus handled.

D. Lang.

In deed it hath bene reported that you haue christened children, & that you christened your owne child: but since I heard say you would not haue the child christened, which is a damnable way, if you deny baptisme: and they sayd, your child was not christened in a fournight or three weekes after it was borne, and the chieftest of the Parishe were fayne to fetch it out of your house agaynst your wyll. Wherefore you wrote rayling wordes agaynst the Prieste and them for theyr good will:* the which declareth that you allowe not baptising of children. And if the childe had dyed, it had bene damned, because it was not Christened, and you shoulde haue bene damned, because you were the lette thereof.

Wood.

What abhominable lies haue you told? Be you not ashamed to speake such wordes as you haue done? Fyrste you say, I christened mine owne childe, and by and by you sayd, I denyed baptising of childrē, and that my child was a fortnight or three weekes old ere it was baptised. What abhominable lyes be these? I neither baptised my child my selfe, neither held agaynst the baptising of it, but did moste gladlye allowe it: for it was baptised as soone as it was borne, and I was glad therof: therfore you be to blame to report so of me.

Lang.

*I pray you, who baptised it? some vnthrift of your prouiding.

Wood.

Nay surely the Midwife baptised it.

Lang.

But it was your mind that it should be so.

Wood.

Nay sure, I was not me home by almost xx. miles nor heard that my wife was brought to bed four dayes after the child was christened. For it was not like to liue: & therefore the Midwife baptised it.

Lang.

Would you haue had it to church to haue bene christened,* if it had not bene christened?

Wood.

That is no matter what I woulde haue yone. I am sure you can not denye but it is sufficiently done, if the Midwife do it, and I hold not agaynst the doing of it, neither did I it my selfe, as you sayd I did.

Lang.

Wherefore were you displeased with them that fet it to Church?

Wood.

First tell me whether the child were not truely baptised by the Midwife?

Langd.

Yes, it was truely Baptised, if shee Baptised it in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holye Ghost.

Wood.

Yes that I am sure shee did, and you graunte that was sufficient: and the cause that I blamed them for, was because they did more to it then neede was,* by your owne saying. Yea, they fet it out of my house without my leaue: the which was not well done.

Lang.

They had it to Church to confirme that was done.

Wood.

Yea, but th^{••} was more then needs. But God forgeue them, if it be his will. But let that matter passe. But I would you should not say that I hold agaynst baptising of children, for I doe not, I take God to recorde: but doe allowe it to be most necessary, if it be truely vsed. But me thought you spake wordes euen now that were vncomely to be spoken: if a childe die, & be not baptised, it is damned. How thinke you? be all damned that receiue not the outward signe of baptisme?

Lang.

Yea that they be.

Wood.

How proue you that?

Lang.

*Goe, sayth Christ, and baptise in the name of the father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost, and he that beleueth, and is baptised, shalbe saued: and he that beleueth not shalbe damned. These be the wordes of Christ, which are my warrant.

Wood.

Then by your saying, baptisme bringeth fayth, and all that be Baptised in the water, shall be saued: shall they? how say you?

Lang.

Yea, that they shall: if they die before they come to discretiō, * they shalbe saued euery one of them, and all that be not baptised shall be damned euery one of them.

Wood.

Then my spirite was moued with him to reprocue him sharply, because I had manifest scriptures fresh in my mind agaynst his saying. Then sayd I.

O Lord God, how dare you speake suche blasphemye agaynst God and his word, as you doe? howe dare you for your life to take vpon you to preache, & teach the people, & vnderstand not what you say? * For I protest before GOD you vnderstande not the scriptures, but as far as naturall reason can comprehēd. For if you did, you would be ashamed to speake as you do.

Lang.

Wherein haue I spoken amisse? take heede, you haue a toy in your head wil make you dispayre. I dare say you can not tell what you say. Wherefore reprove you me as you do?

Wood.

Because you blaspheme GOD: and as for dispayring, take heed to your selfe. For I can not see but you be out of your wit alreadye· and as for me, I prayse God, I can tell what I say, and what you haue sayd: the whiche shall turne to your shame, if you wil talke the Scriptures with me.

So, when hee perceiued that I spake earnestlye, and challenged hym to talke by the woorde, his colour began to chaunge, and his fleshe beganne to tremble and quake. And I sayd.

Proue your sayinges true, if you can: for I will proue them false, by Gods helpe. You sayd. All children, or other that be not baptised with water, all shall be damned. I dare not say so, for all the good in the worlde. And you brought in the saying of Christ for your warrant. In the xvi. of Marke it is written: Who so beleueth, and is baptised, shalbe sauēd: which words be very true: and who so beleueth not, shalbe damned. Which words be very true also. He sayeth: He that beleueth not, shalbe damned. Yea S. Iohn sayeth: He that beleueth not, is condemned already, because he beleueth not. But neither of these two scriptures, nor no other scriptures in all the newe Testament sayth, that he that is not baptised, shalbe damned, or is damned already. But if he beleue not, he shalbe damned, and is damned already, as is aforesayd. Then he woulde haue interrupted me, & would haue layd to my charge, that I was an Anabaptist. But I wold geue him no place to speake, but sayd:

Let me make an end, and then say what you can. You shall haue as much to doe, by Gods helpe, with this matter, as euer you had to aunswere thing in your life. You knowe (I am sure) it is no maner to plucke a tale out of a mans mouth, nor it is not the order of reasoning, as you know that better then I can tell you. Then Doctor Langdale bade me say on.

Wood.

My saying was, that they that beleue not,* shall be damned, and be dāned already. But I dare not say, for all the goods vnder heauen, that all they that receiue no materiall baptisme by the water, shall be damned, as you haue sayd: yet I would you should not gather of these wordes, that I denye Baptisme, as you were aboute to laye to my charge, or euer I had halfe told my tale. But I would not haue you, nor no man so rash in iudgement, to cōdemn the thing y^t they are not able to proue by the worde, & to make it seme to the simple, that the outward washing of the water were the cause of fayth.

Langd.

Why, is it not so? will you denye it? Howe say you? Will you denye it? I say, the childe hath no fayth before it is baptised: and therefore the baptising bringeth the fayth. How say you to it? Make me a playne answer to this question.

Wood.

Nowe I perceiue you goe about nothing els, but to take vauntage of my wordes. But by Gods helpe, I will aunswere you so,* that you shall well see your sayings vntrue. And yet I will not speak mine owne wordes, but the wordes of the holy Ghost, out of the mouth of the prophets and Apostles: and then aske them whether they wil deny it.

You sayd, that fayth commeth by Baptisme, had by the vse of material water.* I must be so bold to aske you where Iacob was baptised before he had fayth. S. Paule sayth in the ninth chapter to the Romanes: Or euer the childrē were borne, or euer they had done eyther good or bad, that the purpose of God which is by election, might stand, not by the reason of workes, but by the grace of the caller, the elder shall serue the younger. Iacob I haue loued, and Esau I hated. How think you, had this childe fayth or euer he were borne, or no? answere to this, if you can.

Lang.

What, you speake of the olde Lawe, Iacob was not christened, but circumcised. I speake of Baptisme and you are gone from baptising to the time of Circumcision: answere me to the baptising. And me thinke by your talk, you deny originall sinne and free will,* by the wordes that you brought in of S. Paule.

For if children can bee saued without baptisme, then it must needes follow, that children haue no originall sinne, the which is put away in the baptising. But I thinke you know not what originall sinne is, nor free will neyther Page 1995 me thinke by your talke.

Wood.

Yes, I prayse God (I thinke) I can tell them all better then you can, me thinke euē by your words. First I pray you what free will hath man to doe good of himselfe? Tell me this first, & then I will answere to all your other questions that you haue obiected agaynst me.

Lang.

I say that all men haue as much free will nowe, as Adam had before his fall.*

Wood.

I pray you how proue you that?

Lang.

Thus I prooue it, that as sinne entred into the world, & by the meanes of one that sinned, all men became sinners, the whiche was by Adam, so by the obedience of man,* righteousnesse came vpon all men that had sinned, & sette them as free as they were before theyr fall, the whiche was by Iesus Christ. Rom. v.

Wood.

Oh Lorde, what an ouerthrowe haue you geuen your selfe here in originall sinne, and yet can not see it? For in prouing that we haue free wil, you haue denied quite original sinne. For here you haue declared that we be set as free by the death of Christ, as Adam was before his fall, & I am sure Adam had no originall sinne before his fall. If we be as free nowe as he was then, I maruell wherefore Paul complayned thrise to God, to take away the sting of it, God making him aunswere, and saying: My grace is sufficient for thee.

These wordes with diuers other, approueth originall sinne in vs: but not that it shall hurt Gods electe people, but that his grace is sufficient for all his.* But you saye in one place, it is not without baptisme: and in an other place you put it away quite by the death of Christ: and in verye deed you haue spokē truer in the matter thē you be aware of. For all that beleue in Christ, are baptised in the bloude of Christ that he shed on the Crosse, & in the water that he swet for payne & putting away of our sinnes at his death. And yet I say with Daudid in the 51. Psalme: In sinne was I borne, and in sinne hath my mother conceiued me: but in no suche sinne that shall bee imputed, because I am borne of God by fayth, as Sayncte Iohn sayth. Therefore I am blessed,* as sayth the Prophet: Because the Lorde imputeth not my sinne, and not because I haue no sinne: but because God hath not imputed my sinnes. Not of our owne deseruing, but of his free mercy he hath saued vs. Where is now your free will become that you spake of? If we haue free will, then our saluation commeth of our owne selfe, & not of God: the which is a great blasphemy agaynst God and his word.

*For Saynt Iames sayth: Euery good gift, and euery perfect gift commeth from aboue, from the father of light, with whō is no variablenes, neither is he chaunged into darcknesse. Of his owne will he begate vs. For the winde bloweth where it lusteth, and we heare the soūd therof, as sayth S. Iohn: But we cannot tell from whence it commeth,*neither whether it goeth: Euen so is it with euery one that is borne of God. For S. Paule sayth: It is God that woorketh in vs the will and also the deed,euen of good will. Seing then that euery good and perfect gift commeth from aboue, & lighteth vpon whom it pleaseth God, and that he worketh in vs both the will and the deede: me thinke all the reste of our owne will is little worthe, or nought at all, vnles it be to wickednes. So me think here be places enough to proue that a man hath no free will to doe good of himselfe: with a hundred places moe, that I could recite if time did serue. And as for originall sinne, I thinke I haue declared my mind therin, how it remaineth in man: whiche you can not deny, vnlesse you deny the word of God. Now, if you will suffer me, I will proue my saying of Iacob and Esau, that I brought in, to proue that faith was before baptisme, and you refused it, because (you sayd) Iacob was not baptised.* If you will geue me leaue, you shall see what I can say therin: for me think you think my talke long. This I sayd, because I saw he was sore offended at my sayinges.

Lang.

Saye what you canne, For it auayleth me to saye nothing to you.* For I was desired to sende for you, to teache you, and there will no wordes of mine take place in you: but you goe about to reprove me. Saye what you will for me.

Wood.

I take not vpon me to teach you, but to aunswere to such thinges as you lay vnto my charge: and I speake not mine owne minde, but the minde of the holy Ghoste, written by the Prophetes and Apostles. Wyll you geue me leaue to aunswere briefly in that matter, that you may report to other what I holde? And he sayd, he was contēted. But I thinke it was for nothing, but to haue caughte vauntage of my wordes.

Wood.

*First, if you be remembred, you said, that if my child had dyed without baptisme, if I had bene the cause that it had not bene baptised, the child should haue bene damned, and I too. How say you?

Lang.

Yea that you should.

Wood.

That is moste vntrue. For the Prophete sayeth: The father shall not beare the chilles offences, nor the childe the fathers offences: but the soule that sinneth shall dye.* What could the child haue done withal, if it had died without baptism? the childe coulde not do withall. How say you vnto this? And I am sure: that which I brought in in the olde Law, to proue that fayth is before baptisme, is not disagreeable vnto the word. For Circūcision was a figure of baptisme. And that I may bring to proue baptisme by, as wel as S. Peter did: for he brought in Noes sloude,* whiche was a long time before Iacob & Esau, to proue baptisme, saying: While the Arke was a preparing,* wherein few (that is to saye) eight soules were saued by water, like as Baptisme also nowe saueth vs, not in putting away of the filth of the flesh, but there is • good conscience consenting to God.

Here Peter proueth, that the water had not saued Noe and the other seuen, no more then it saued all the rest, if it had not bene for theyr fayth, which fayth now saueth vs: not in putting away of the filthy sinne of the fleshe, by the washing of the water, but by a good conscience consenting vnto God.

But you sayd: If they be baptised with the water, if they dye before they come to yeares of discretion, they be al saued: the which S. Peter is cleane agaynste, vnlesse you graunt that children haue fayth before they be baptised.

Nowe I aske you what consent of conscience the children haue, being infantes. For you say they beleue not, before they bee Baptised: Ergo, then they consent not to be Baptised, because they beleue not. And by this it followeth that none shalbe saued, although they be baptised. I would fayne see how you can aunswere to this.

Lang.

You are the most peruerse man that euer I knewe. You wote not what you say. The children are baptised in theyr * Godfathers and Godmothers fayth, and that is the good conscience that S. Peter speaketh of: and the Christening is the keeping of the law, that S. Paule speaketh of, saying: neither is Circumcision any thing worth, nor vncircūcision any thing worth, but keping of the lawe is altogether. Like as the Circumcision was the keping of the old law, so is baptisme the keeping of the new law.

Wood.

Ah, me thought if you would talke with me, you should be fayne to bring in the old law, to mainteine your sayinges by (for all that you refused it) when I brought it in. But yet it serueth not for your purpose, so muche as you think for. For here you haue confessed that neither circumcision auayleth, nor vncircūcision: the which you your selfe haue coupled with Baptisme, prouing that none of them both preuaileth, but keping of the law is altogether: the which law is kept (you say) by the outward signes: the which is nothing so, for Abrahā beleued God, & that was counted to him for righteousnes: And this was before he was Circumcised.* So the children beleue before they be either Circumcised, or Baptised, according to my first saying of Iacob and Esau: Iacob I loued, but Esau I hated.

These wordes declared that Iacob hadde fayth in hys mothers wombe: also Iohn Baptist was sanctified in his mothers wombe, and therefore it was counted to them for righteousness: and I am sure, if they had dyed before, they had eyther receiued Circumcision or Baptisme as concerning the outward deed, they should haue bene saued. For Gods giftes and callinges are such, that he cannot repent him of them. But by your saying he doth both repent and chaūge. For you say, keeping of the outwarde law is altogether. But a bad excuse is as good as none at all.

And where you sayd, the children be Baptised in their Godfathers and Godmothers fayth, they being all vnbeleuers, in what fayth is that childe baptised then? in none at all, by your owne saying. Whiche woordes made him stampe and stare.

Lang.

What? then you woulde count that there were very few beleueurs, if there be not one of three that beleueeth. You enter into Iudgement agaynst the people. Belike you thinke there be none that beleue well vnlesse they be of your minde. In deed then Christes flocke were a very litle flocke.

Wood.

In deede these bee Christes woordes, in the 12. of Luke, the which we may see to be very true. Yea you sayd, if there were not one amongst three, that were very few. But there is not one amongst three hundred, for any thing that I can see. For if there were, there would not be so many that would seeke their neighbors goodes & lyues as there be.

Lang.

Is the flocke of Christ such a litle flock as you speak of? you may call it a great flock. How many be there of thē: Can you tell me?

Wood.

A prety question, I promise you, it is that you aske me: as though I did make my selfe equall with God.

Page 1996No, no, you shal catch no such vauntage of my words nor I know not how many there be. But I will tell you as nigh as I can. For therefore you looke, I am sure, that I should enter into Iudgement.

Lang.

*Yea, I pray you tell me as much as you can, seing you be so cunning.

Wood.

You shall see my iudgement in it by and by. First the Prophet: Follow not a multitude to do euill, for they must go the wrong way. For the most go the wrong way. There is one poynt to know them.

Thē christ sayth in the 7. of Mat. Broad is the way & wide is the gate that leadeth into destruction, and many there be that go in thereat: and straye is the gate, and narrow is the waye that leadeth vnto life, and few there be that finde it. And in the xii. of Luke, it is written (which words were spoken of Christ) Come you little flocke, it is my fathers will to geue you a kyngdome. The third poynt is this. In the thyrd of Mark and second of Mathewe: You (saythe Christe) shall knowe the tree by the frutes.A good tree bringeth forth good frutes, and a badde tree bringeth forth bad frutes: So by frutes I know them. For euery tree that bringeth not forth good frutes, must be hewn downe and cast into y^e fire (into hell I thinke Christ meant) and your frutes declare that you be one of them. Thus haue I proued foure wayes that the people that shalbe saued, is but a small companie in comparison of the rest. But if that be not enough, for the prooffe thereof, I haue twenty wayes more to proue it by, and you were neuer the nere of your purpose.

Lang.

What a naughty man are you? you would make the patientest mā in the world angry with you. I thinke your talke is nothing but pryde and vayneglorye, w^t frumpes, and mockes, and dispising & iudging of men. It was time such a fellow were taken in deede. Suche a one is enough to trouble a whole country. I thinke he is blest of GOD that tooke you: for you are not meete to be in a common wealth.

Wood.

With diuers other such like wordes that I cannot recite, they came out so thicke, with stamping and staryng and chasing as though he had bene out of his witt. I held my peace, vntil he had made an end of his tormētors talk and then I spake.

Wherein haue I sayd amisse? or haue I not answered you vnto euery question that you haue demaunded of me? What fault can you finde in one word that I haue sayd? I dare say you can finde none. I maruayle why you take on thus agaynst me, hauing no cause so to doe.

Lang.

No, no, you haue not aunswered me to original sin, you deny originall sinne.

Wood.

With these wordes came in at the dore M. Iames Gage: And I thinke hee stoode at the dore a good whyle before he came in, and that Doctour Langdall sawe hym: For his face was to the dore ward,* and my face was from it.

Gage.

Ah Woodman, me thinke mayster Doctor and you cannot agree.

Wood.

Yes sir me thinke we agree very well.

Lang.

Without doubte sir he is the naughtiest man that euer I talked with in all my life: for he will haue his owne way in all thinges.

Gage.

Woodman, leaue that pride. Do not trust so muche to your own wit. Harken to this man. This is a learned man, I tell you. He is knowne to be learned. For els hee shuld not be allowed to preach before the Queenes maiesty: and I dare say he will tell thee nothing, nor will thee to doe nothing, but that he will do himselfe: and I dare say he will not go to the Deuill to bring the thether: How say you M. Doc.? Thou mightest think vs mad, if we would hurt our selues to hurte thee. No I promise thee, my brother, neither I, nor no gentleman in the Country, I think of my conscience, but would thou shouldst doe as well as their owne bodyes and soules, as a great many of them haue sayd to thy face whilest thou wast at my brothers, the which thou canst not deny.

Wood.

Sir, I can saye none otherwise but I was gently entreated at your brothers, both with meate and drynke & gentle wordes, both of you and him, and diuers other gētlemen: and I am sure you nor they can say, that you fouūd me vnreasonable at any time. For I sayde I was contented to learne of them that were able to teache me, and so I am, as God knoweth: and here M. Doctour (I think) can say no otherwise: for I dare say he can find no fault in the talke that we haue had.*

Lang.

No mary, I can finde nothing els in you, I promise you mayster Gage, if you had bene here, you woulde haue sayd so your selfe. He tooke me vp in deede, and sayd he maruailed how I durst preach. For he sayde, I vnderstoode not the scripture, but as farre as naturall reason comprehended? as though he vnderstoode all, and I nothing. With diuers other such like words he made a great complaint to him on me, & sayd to mayster Iames Gage, he would make you beleue that I could finde no faulte in in him. Yes iwis: he denieth originall sinne.

Gage.

Yea? doth he so? by S. Mary that is a great matter, Woodman: leaue y^t pride. That pride wil come to naught. Can ye liue without sinne?

Wood.

Sir, now I perceiue he will soone lye on me behinde my backe, when hee will not sticke to lye before my face.

He sayth I denied originall sinne: and it was he hymselfe, as I will let you be iudge in the matter. For as hee went about to proue that man hath free will, he sayd wee were set as free by the death of christ,* as Adam was before his fall: which wordes proue playnely that we haue no original sin: And I tooke him withall, & sayd: had Adam originall sinne before hys fall? and then hee coulde not tell what to say but cauilled with wordes, and sayd he meant not so: and therefore I maruell he is not ashamed to make such lies to my face, These wordes made them both astonyed.

Gage.

M. Doctour he sayd euen now you coulde finde no fault in all his talke. I will bid you aske him a question, that I will warrant you shall finde faulte enough, I pray you aske hym howe he beleueueth in the Sacramente of the Aultar. I thinke hee will make but a bad accompte thereof.

Wood.

Yes, I wil make accompt good enough of that, by Gods helpe.

Lang.

Well, how say you to the sacrament of the aultar?

Wood.

I say I know no such sacrament, vnlesse Chryst be the aultar that you meane.

Gage.

Lo, I told you, you should soone finde fault in him if you came to that poynt with him. You shuld haue begun with that first, and neuer haue talked with him about other thinges. What? * know ye not the sacrament of the aultar?

Wood.

No sure, I know no such, vnlesse christ be the aultar that you meane: for Christ is the aultar of al goodnes. And if you meane Christ to be the aultar of the sacrament you speake of, you shall soone heare my minde and beliefe therein.

Lang.

Well, we meane Christe to be the aultar. Say your minde, and go briefly to worke: for I thinke it almost dinner. *

Gage.

I pray you go roundly to worke, y^t you may make an end before dinner.

Woodman.

Yes, you shall soone heare my minde therin by Gods helpe. I doe beleue that whensoever I come to receaue the sacrament of the body and bloud of Iesus Christ being truely ministred according to Christes Institution I beleuing that Christ was borne of the virgine Mary, & that he was crucified on the crosse, and shed his bloude for the remission of my sinnes, and so take and eate the sacrament of bread and wine in that remembraunce, that then I doe receiue wholly Christ, God and manne, mistically by fayth. This is my beliefe of the sacrament, the whiche no man is able to disproue.

Gage.

By S. Mary I can finde no fault in this. * How say you Maister Doctour?

Lang.

Sir, you see not so much in it as I do. For he goeth craftely to worke: I tell you, as I haue heard. For though he haue graunted that the faythfull receauer receaueth the body of Christe, God and man, yet hee hath not graunted that it is the body of Christe before it bee receaued, as you shall see by and by I warrant you, by hys owne wordes. * How say you? is it the body of Christ as soone as y^e words be spoken by the Prieste or not? for these wordes will try hym more then all the rest.

Wood.

Doth the worde say that it is his body before it is receiued? if it do, I will say so to.

Gage.

Why? then you shall agree well inough, if you wyll be tryed by the word.

Wood.

Yes forsooth, that I will: God forbid els.

Gage.

Why? the worde sayth it is his body before it is eaten.

Wood.

Those words would I fayne heare: * but I am sure they be not in the Bible.

Lang.

No, that you shall see by and by (M. Gage quoth he) & turned to the xxii. of Luke, & there he read, Whē supper was done, Christ tooke bread, gaue thanks, and brake it, * and gaue to his Disciples, and sayd: take, eate, this is my body. Then they spake both at once: Here he saith it is his body.

Wood.

M. Gage, I doe not deny but he called it his body but not before eating, as I saide before. Wherefore I pray you marke the wordes. Christ sayd, Take, eate, I pray you Sir marke these wordes that he sayd, Take and eate, * and thē he said, it was his body. So you see, eating goeth before. Page 1997 For he sayd: eate, this is my body. So according to the verye worde, I doe beleue it is his bodye. Whiche wordes made them both astonied.

Lang.

Why, then by your saying, Iudas eate not the body of Christ. How say you? did he not?

Wood.

Nay, I ask you. Did he?

Lang

I aske you.

Wood.

And I aske you.

Lang.

And I aske you.

Woodman.

Mary and I aske you. And I bid you answer if you dare for your life. For what soeuer you aunswere: vnlesse you say as I haue sayd, you will damne your own soule. For M. Gage, I protest before God, I would you should do as well as myne owne owne soule and body: & it lamenteth my hart to see how you be deceaued with thē: they be deceauers all the sorte of them. He cannot answer to this, but either he must proue Iudas to be saued, or els he must proue that it is no bodye before it bee receiued in fayth, as dou shall well perceiue by Gods helpe, if he dare to aunswere the question.

Gage.

Yes, I dare say he dareth. What? you neede not to threaten him so.

Wood.

Then let him aunswere if he can.

Then he sayd he knew what I woulde saye to him: therefore he was much in doubt to aunswere the question.

Lang.

Mayster Gage, I will tell you in your eare what words he will aunswere me, or euer I speake to him.

Wood.

Then he told M. Gage, a tale in his eare, & sayde:

Lang.

*I haue told M. Gage what you will say.

Gage.

Yea, and I will tell the truth for both parties.

Wood.

Well, how say you? did Iudas eate y^e body of christ or not?

Lang

Yea, I say Iudas did eate the body of Christ.

Wood.

Then it must needes f•llowe, That Iudas hath euerlasting life.* For Christ sayth in the 6. of Iohn: Who so eateth my fleshe and drinketh my bloud: hath eternall lyfe, and I will rayse him vp at the last day. If Iudas did eate Chrystes body, I am sure you cannot deny but that he did both eat hys flesh, and drynke his bloud, and then is Iudas saued by Christes owne wordes. Therefore now you are compelled to say that it was not christes body, or els that Iudas is saued.

Gage.

Surely these be the verye wordes that M.D. tolde me in mine eare, that you would say to hym.

Wood.

Well, let vs see, how well he can auoyd this argument.

Lang.

Iudas is damned, and yet he eate the body of christ: but he eate it vnworthely, and therefore he is damned:

Wood.

Where finde you that Iudas did eate the bodye of Christ vnworthely?

Lang.

*They be S. Paules wordes. i. Corinth xi. chap.

Wood.

M. Gage, I desire you for gods sake marke my wordes well what I saye. If S. Paule speake anye suche wordes there or in anye other place, if there be anye suche wordes written in al the whole Bible,* that euer any man eate the bodye of Christ vnworthely, then say that I am the falsest man that euer you heard speake with tongue. But in deede these be the wordes of S. Paule: Who so eateth of this bread, and drinketh of this cuppe vnworthely, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation;*because hee maketh no difference of the Lordes body: that is, because hee presumeth to eat the sacrament of the Lordes body without sayth, making no difference betwixt the sacrament and other bread and drynke: And that is S. Paules meaning, and not that any man doth or can eate the body of Christ * vnworthely. For who soeuer eateth the body of christ, hath euerlasting life, as is aforesayd in the 6. of Iohn. With which wordes one came from them to come to dinner in all the hast.

Gage.

I am sorry. I woulde fayne heare more of this talke but we shall haue an other day wel inough.

Lang.

Nay M. Gage, I will neuer talke with him more: for he is the vnreasonablest man that euer I talked wyth in all my life.

Wood.

Then M. Gage put of hys capp and desired hym y^t he would not refuse to talk w^t me, and that it might not bee greuous to hym. For he sayde: wee wyll seeke al the meanes possible to make him an honest man, and to keepe him from burning, if we coulde. For if my brother and I had not bene, he had bene burned ere this tyme. Thē there was great curtisie betwixt them.

Lang.

Sir, for your sake, & for my mayster your brothers sakes and for his fathers sake,* and other of his fryendes sakes, that haue spoken to me many tymes with weeping teares, I will doe the best to hym that I can: but for no loue nor fauour that I beare to him. I tell you truth.

Gage.

Woodman, you heare what M.D. sayth. When wyl you come agayne?

Wood.

Euen when you will send for me. For I am a prysoner, and cannot come when I woulde. Or if I shoulde desire to come, it will cost me money, and I haue none to geue: but if you send for me, it shall cost me none.

Gage.

Well, I will send for you on Friday or Saterdaye, at the farthest: for to morow I must ride forth of towne & I would fayne heare your talke.

Wood.

Sir I would be very glad you should heare oure talke alway, and I trust in God you shall heare me say no thing, but the word of God shall be my warrant. So M. Gage tooke his leaue and went his way to his lodgyng, which was right in my way as I went vnto prisonward agayne: and when hee came without my Lorde Mountagues gates: there we met with one Hode of Buxted, a Smith. Then sayd M. Gage.

Gage.

Woodman, I had forgot one thing, that Hode hath brought me in remembraunce of as soone as I saw hym, for hee heard when the tale was tolde me.

Gage.

Hode, did not you heare when Smith of Framfield tolde me that hee sawe Woodman abroad in the Cittie at libertie?

Hoode.

Yea forsooth, that I did.

Gage.

Yea surely, and I was very glad, for I had wel hoped you had bene conformable. But I heard otherwise af^terward agayne, that you had leaue of the keeper to go abroad and speake openly in the streetes, as you went vpp and downe.

Wood.

In deede so the Marshall told me to day.* But in deed I was neuer abroad since I came to prison, but whē I was sent for, and in deede the same time I was abroad with my keeper, comming from the Bysh. and as I was comming, euen not farre from y^e Marshalsey, I saw goodman Smith, stād in a Wayne vnlading of Cheese & I asked him how he did, euen as I went by and neuer stayed for the matter, and therupon it did rise. So I departed frō them, with my keeper to the Marshalsea agayne, where I now am mery I prayse God therefore, as a sheepe appoynted to be slayne.

The fourthe examination of Richard Woodman, had before the Byshop of Winchester, the Byshop of Rochester, and a certayn Doctour, with diuers other Priests and Gentlemen, the xxv. day of May. Anno. 1557.

Woodman.

I Was fet from the Marshalsea to the sayd Byshops and Priestes,* sitting in S. Georges Church in Southwark by one of the Marshals men and one of the Sheriffes mē, When I came before them, and had done my duty to them as nigh as I could, then sayd the Bishop of Winchester.

Winchester.

What is your name?

Wood.

My name is Richard Woodman forsooth?

Winchester.

Ah Woodman, you were taken and apprehended for heresie about a three yeares ago,* and were sente to prison in the kinges Bench, and there remayned a long time. Mine olde Lorde of Chichester, being a learned famous man well knowne in this realme of England, and almost throughout all Christendome. I think came to prison to you, and there, and at other places, called you before him diuers times, trauayling and perswading with you many wayes (because hee was your Ordinary) to plucke you from your heresies that you held, but he coulde by no meanes aduertise you.

Wherupon you were deliuered to the Commissioners and they could do no good with you neyther.* Then they sent you vnto my Lord of Lond. My Lorde of Lond. calling you before him diuers times, labour was made vnto him of your frendes, that you might be released. My Lord hauing a good hope in you, that you woulde become an honest man, because he had heard so of you in tymes past, yea & you your selfe promising him y^t you would go home and recant your heresies that you held, deliuered you: sending also a letter of your recantation to the Commissary y^t he should see it done.* But as soone as you were out of his hands, you were as bad as euer you were, & would neuer fulfill your promise, but haue hid your selfe in the woodes Bushes, Dennes & Caues, and thus haue continued euer since, til it was now of late. Thē y^e Sheriffe of that Shyre (being a worshipfull man) hearing thereof, sent certayn of his mē, & took you in a wood, & so caried you to his house. I cannot tell his name. What is your Sheriffes name?

Wood.

Forsooth his name is sir Edward Gage.

Winc.

Well, you were apprehended for heresie,* and beyng at M. Gages three weekes or more, yee were gentlye entreated there, he and other Gentlemen perswading wyth you diuers tymes, little preuayled.

Then you appealed to the Bishop of Chichester that now is▪ The Sheriffe like a worshipfull man sent you to Page 1998 him, and he hath trauelled with you, and other also, & can do no good with you, whereupon we haue sent for you.

Wood.

Then I spake to him. For I thought he would be long, before hee woulde make an end. I thought hee was a yeare in telling of those lyes y^t he had told there agaynst me already. Yea I kept silence from good wordes: but it was great payne and grieffe vnto me (as Dauid sayd).

At length the fire was so kindled within my hart, that I could not chuse but speake with my tongue: for I feared least any of the company shoulde haue departed or euer I had answered to his lyes, and so the Gospell to haue bene sclaundered by my long silence keeping. So I spake I prayse God therefore, and sayd: my Lorde, I pray you let me now answere for my selfe, for it is time.

Winchest.

I permit you to answere to these things that I haue sayd.

Wood.

I thanke God therfore. And I thinke my self happy (as Paule sayd when hee was brought before king Agrippa) y^t I may this day aunswere for my selfe. My Lord I promise you there is neuer a worde of youre sayinges true that you haue alledged agaynst me.

Winch.

I can not tell, but thus it is reported of you. As for me, I neuer did see you before this day: but I am sure it is not all lyes that I haue sayd,* as you report:

Wood.

Yes my Lord, there is neuer a true worde of that you sayd. And •urther, where you sayd you neuer sawe me before this day, you haue both heard me, and seene me, I dare say, before this day.

Winchester.

I thinke I heard you in deede on Sondaye where you playd the malapart •ellow: but I cannot tell y^t I sawe you. But I pray you, were you not taken in the woodes by the Sheriffes men?

Wood.

No sure, I was taken besides my house, I beyng in my house when they came, wherefore that is not true,

Winchester.

Were not you at the Sheriffes 3. weekes.

Wood.

Yes that I was, a moneth iust, and was gently en^ttreated of him, I can say no otherwise: for I had meat and drinke inough, and fayre wordes.

Winch.

Ah. I am well appayd: it is not all lyes then, as it chaunced. For I spake, but of three weekes, and you confesse a moneth your selfe.

Woodman.

Yet your tale is neuer the truer for that. For you sayd I was there three weekes for heresie, the whiche is not so. For I was not apprehended for heresie at y^e first, neither did mine olde Lorde of Chichester trauayle wyth me to pull me from heresie, as you sayde: for I helde none then, neyther do I now, as God knoweth neither was I sent to the Commissioners nor to the Bishop of London for heresie, neyther was I deliuered to him for anye suche thing, nor promised him to recant, as you sayd I dyd. Wherefore I maruaile you be not ashamed to tel so many lyes, beyng a Byshoppe that should be an ensample to other.

Winch.

Lo, what an arrogant hereticke this same is. He will deny God: * for he that denyeth his owne hand denieth God.

Wood.

My Lord, iudge not least you be iudged yourselfe. For as you haue iudged me, you shalbe iudged, if you repent not. And if I haue set my hand to anye recantation, let it be seene to my shame, before this audience: For I wil neuer deny myne owne hand, by Gods helpe.

Win.

It is not here now, but I thinke it will be had wel enough: but if it cannot be found, by whom will you bee tryed.

Wood.

Euen by my Lord of London: for he delt like a good man with me in that matter that I was sente to pryson for.

For it was vppon the breache of a Statute, as Mayster Sheriffe here can tell.* For he was Sheriffe then, as hee is now, & can tell you how I was tossed vp and downe, frō Sessions to Sessions: and because I would not consent y^t I had offended therein, they sent me to prison agayn.

Then my Lorde of Chichester being myne Ordinary, and I being his tenaunt: came to me, to perswade wyth me that I should haue consented,* to them, and to finde my selfe in fault, where I was in none. To y^e which I would not agree, but I desired him that he would see me released of my wrong but he said he could not, but willed me or my frendes to speake to the Commissioners for me, because it was a temporall matter:* and when I came before them, they sent me to my Lord of London, and my Lord of London was certified by the handes of almost thirty mē, both Esquiers, Gentlemen, and Yeomen, the chieftest in all the country where I dwelt, that I had not offended in y^t matter that I was sent to prison for. Whereupon he deliuered me, not willing me to recant heresies, for I helde none (as God knoweth) neither do I now: nor I knowe not wherefore I was sent to prison, no more then anye man here knoweth: for I was taken away from my worke.*

Winch.

No? wherefore appealed you then to my Lorde of Chichester, if it were not for heresie?

Wood.

Because there was layde to my charge that I had Baptised children, and married folkes, the whiche I neuer did, for I was no where Minister. Wherefore I appealed to mine Ordinarye, to purge my selfe thereof as I haue. Wherefore if any man haue any thing agaynst me, let them speake, for I came not hither to accuse my selfe, neyther will I.

Winch.

Mayster Sheriffe, can you tell vpon what breache of Statute he was sent to prison first?

The Sheriffe.

Yea forsooth my Lord that I can.

Wood.

My Lord, if you will geue me leaue, I will shewe you the whole matter.

Winch.

Nay, M. Sheriffe, I pray you tell the matter, seeing you know it.

The Sheriffe.

My Lord it was for speaking to a Curate in the Pulpit, as I remember.

Winc.

Ah, like enough, that he would not sticke to reprove a Curate.* For did you not see how he fashioned himselfe to speake to me in the Pulpit on Sondag? You played y^e maliperte fellowe with me, and therefore it was no great maruell though he played that part with an other.

Woodman.

Why, you will not blame me for that, I am sure. For we spake for no other cause, but to purge oure selues of those heresies that you layd to our charge. For these were your wordes: Good people, these men that bee brought before vs, being here, deny Christ to be God,* and the holy Ghost to be GOD (poynting to vs with youre left hand) the whiche might seeme to the whole audience, that you ment vs all. Wherefore to cleare our selues therof, we spake, and sayd we held no such thing. And you sayd you would cut out our tongues. But I am sure you haue no such law.

Win.

Yes, that we haue, if you blaspheme, and as it chaunced, I found such amongst you.

Wood.

In deede, after we spake, you declared who they were, but not before, for you spake generally. Wherefore we blasphemed not, but purged ourselues.

Winch.

But I pray you, how can you purge your selfe for speaking to the Curate that it is not heresie?*

Wood.

Forsooth these be the wordes of the Statute: Who soeuer doth interrupt anye preacher or preachers, lawfully authorised by the Queenes Maiestie, or by any other lawfull Ordinary, that all such shall suffer three monthes imprisonment,* and furthermore be brought to the quarter Sessions, there (being sory for the same) to be released vpon his goodabering one whole yeare. But I had not so offended as it was well proued. For hee that I spake too, was not lawfully authorised, nor hadde not put away his wife. Wherefore it was not lawfull for him to preache by your owne lawe, and therefore I brake not the Statute, though I spake to him.

Winch.

I am glad. I perceave thys man speaketh against Priestes Maryages, hee is not contented with Pryestes that haue wiues. He is honestest man,* then I tooke hym for, M. Sheriffe, haue him away. I am glad he loueth not Priestes Mariages.

Wood.

Then I would haue aunswere to hys sayinges, but he would in no wise heare me, but bad y^e Sheriffe haue me away. So the Sheriffe took me by the hand, & plucked me away, and would not let me speake, but goyng out of the Chauncell dore, I sayd: I would shew him the whole matter, if he would haue geuen me leaue, but seeing he wil not, if he will let me go so, they shall see whether I wyll not goe home to my wife and children, and keepe them as my bounden duety is, by the helpe of God. So I was sent to the Marshalsea agayne, where I now am mery, I prayse God therefore, as a sheepe appoynted to be slayne.

Moreouer, I was credibly enformed by one of oure brethren that heard our talke, that the Byshop sayd when I was gone, y^t they would take me whilst I was somewhat good. Which wordes seemed to many of the people that were there, that I spake agaynst priestes Maryages, but I did not, but did not onely aunswere to suche questyons as he asked me, as you shall perceave wel by y^e words if you marke them, which wordes were these.

How can you purge your self from heresie, for talking to the Curate in the Pulpit, and not offende the Statute, sayd the Bishops? meaning thereby I thinke to haue taken vauntage of my wordes: but it was not Gods will y^t he should at that tyme. For I aunswere hym by y^e words of the Statute, which wordes bee as hereafter followeth (that is): whosoeuer doth interrupt any preacher, or preachers lawfully authorised by the Queenes Maiestie, or by any other lawfull Ordinary, that all such shall suffer three monthes imprisonment. But I proued that this mā was Page 1999 not lawfully authorised to preach (by their owne law) because he had not put away his wife. For their law is, that no Priest may say Masse, nor preach with the Masse, but he must first be separated from his wife. That is because honest Maryages be good and commendable,* and theyrs nought and abhominable, therefore they cannot dwell together.

Now, I geue you al to vnderstand, that I did not reprove this Priest he cause he had a wife, but because hee taught false doctrine, which greeued my soule, because hee had bene a feruent Preacher agaynst the Masse and all the Idolatry therof seuen yeares before, and then came & held with it agayne: for the which cause I reprovde him in the Pulpit. And the words that I spake to him are written in diuers of my examinations of my first imprisonment for that same.* But in very deede, I knew not of the Statute when I reprovde him. But because I was sent to prison vpon the breache of it, I bought a Statute booke, & when I had perused it, I perceiue I had not offended by theyr owne lawe: and therefore still when I was called to aunswere, I aunswere them with their owne lawe. But yet they kept me in prison a yeare and almost three quarters or euer I was released. I was at mine aunswere for that eighteen times. If any thinke I doe not allow Bishoppes and priestes mariages, let them looke in my first examination before the Bishop of Chichester that nowe is, duryng this my imprisonment, and there they shall finde what I haue found in the matter. The truth is, I looked to be cōdemned with my brother that same day. But we may also see that they can do nothing but as God will permit them to do. But when the time is full come, I trust in God, I shall runne that ioyfull race that my brethren haue done. Thus I commit you all into the handes of God, who is y^e preseruer, defender, and keeper of all his electe for euermore. Amen.

The fift examination of Richard Woodman, had before the Bishop of Winchester, the Archdeacon of Cant. Doct. Langdale, with a fat headed Priest and other whose names I know not, with certain also of the Cōmissioners, at S. Maryes Oueries church in Southwarke, in the presence, of three C. people at the least, the xv. day of Iune. An. 1557.

Winchester.

*Woodman, you were before vs the last day and would not be acknowne in any wise that you were sent to prison for heresie, and called for your accusers and stode stoutly in defending of your selfe, and in youre departing I had thought you had spoken agaynst priestes Mariages, thinking by youre wordes wee shoulde haue found you an honest man, and conformable when we had called you before vs agayne. You tolde such a fayre tale for your selfe, as though you had bene free from all that was layd to your charge. For you sayde it was all lyes that I tolde agaynst you: but since I haue proued the contrarye, as here is your owne hand to shew. By the which I haue proued that you reprobued not the priest for lacking of authoritie, and because he had not put away his wife, but because you liked not hys preaching. For in deede I tooke it that you reprobued him for because hee was not lawfully authorised, but I haue proued the contrary since.

Wood.

I told you not that I did either reproue hym for lacke of authoritie, or because I liked not his preachynge, but I told you wherefore I was first sent to prison. For you sayd I was sēt to prison for heresie, & made a long tale agaynst me. And in deede I told you that there was neuer a word of your saynges true, but was all lyes, as it was in deed. For I neuer was sent to prison for heresie, neither held I any then, nor do now. I take heauen and earthe to witnesse, but I tolde you I was sent to prison vppon the breach of a Statute, which was for speaking to a Priest in the Pulpit, and for that cause the Iustices of that country had thought I had offended the Statute, and called me be'fore them, and would haue had me to haue bene bound to my good abearing, and because I refused it, they sent me to prisō. And these be y^e wordes of the Statute, as I told you y^e last day. If any man do interrupt any preacher or preachers, lawfully authorised by the Queenes Maiestie, or by any other lawfull Ordinary;*that then euery partie that so offendeth, shall suffer three monthes imprisonment, and furthermore be brought to the quarter Sessions, and there being sorye for the the same, aad also bound for his good abearing, one whole yeare, to be released, or els to remayne to prison agayne.

And when I was in prison, I bought a Statute book which when I had perused ouer,* I founde by the wordes therof that I had not offēded, because he was not lawfully authorised, as the Bishop of London was certified by the handes almost of xxx. men: both Esquiers, Gentlemen and Yeomen, the chieftest in all that Countrey. For he had not put away his wife, and therefore the Statute took no place on me, as I told you the other daye. Wherefore my Lord of London seeing me hauing so muche wrong, dyd like a good man to me in that matter, & released me. Now when I had tolde you this matter, you bad the Sheriffe haue me away: You sayd you were glad I h•lde agaynst Priestes Mariages, because I aunswered to the question you asked me.

The fat Priest.

My Lord, do you not heare what he sayth by my Lord of London? ^{*} He sayth he is a good man in that he released him, but he meaneth that hee is good in nothyng els.

Wood.

What? can you tell what I meane? let euerye man say as he findeth: he did iustly to me in that matter. I saye if he be not good in any thing els, as you say, he shal aunswere for it, and not I: for I haue nothing to doe wyth others mens matters.

Winc.

Well, how say you? howe liked you his preaching? I pray you tell vs.

Wood.

That is no matter how I liked it. How soeuer I liked it, I offended not the Statute. ^{*} Wherefore you haue nothing to say to me for that I am sure.

Winc.

Well, how like you this then? Here is youre owne hand writing: I am sure you will not denye it. Will you looke on it?

Wood.

It is mine owne handy worke in deede, the which by Gods helpe I will neuer denye, nor neuer did yet, I prayse God therefore.

Winchester.

And heare is good geare I tell you. I praye you harken wel to it: these be the wordes, before the Commissioners. How say you? Doe you not beleue, as soone as the wordes be spoken by the Priest, that there remayneth neyther bread nor wyne, but onely the verye bodye of Christ, both flesh and bloud as he was borne of the virgine Mary? these were the wordes of the Commissioners.

And then thou saydest: thou durst not saye otherwise then the scripture sayth. ^{*} I cannot finde (sayde you) that it is the body of Christ before it is receaued by fayth, bringing in the xxii. of Luke, saying: Christ sayde, take, eate, this is my body: so I cannot proue that it is his bodye before it is eaten. Then sayd the Commissioners: did not Iudas eate Christes body? And if you can proue that Iud^s is saued (sayd you) I must graunt that he eate his body. For christ sayth in the sixt of Iohn: Who so eateth my fleshe and drynketh my bloud, hath eternall lyfe, and I will rayse hym vp at the last day: which words prooue (said you) that if Iudas eate the body of Christ, he must needes be saued. How say you now? did Iudas eate the body of Christ, or no?

Wood.

Then I perceiued they went about nothyng but to catch words of me in his Dioces, to condemn me with.* Though I should confound him neuer so much, I perceiued that he was fully bent thereto. To whom I answered and sayd:

I will answer you to no such thing, for I am none of your Dioces: Wherefore I will not answer to you.

Winchester.

Thou art within my Diocesse, and thou hast offended within my Dioces: and therefore I will haue to do with thee.

Wood.

Haue to do with me and you will:* but I wil haue nothing to do with you. I tell you plainly: For though I be now in your Dioces, I haue not offended in your dioces: if I haue, shew me wherein.

Winc.

Mary here is thine owne hand writyng, the which thou affirmedst in my Dioces.

Wood.

I do not deny, but it is myne owne hand writing: but that prooueth neuer the more that I haue offended in your Diocesse: for that doth but declare what talke there was betwixt the Commissioners and me, the which you haue nothing to do withall.

Winchest.

No? hold hym a booke, and thou shalt sweare, whether thou holdest it now or not, & whether thou wrotest it not in my Dioces, as I thinke thou didst: Lay thy hand on the booke.

Wood.

I wil not be sworne for you:* for I am not of your Dioces, and therefore you haue nothyng to doe with mee. And as for the writing of that same, I neuer wrote worde of it in your Dioces.

Lang.

No? did you not? my Lord let me see: I wyll finde where you wrote it.

Wood.

Then he tooke it & looked on it, and anone he found that I was sent for out of the Kings bench, to come before the Commissioners.

Lang.

My Lord, here you may see it was in the Kinges Bench, the which is in your Dioces.

Wood.

Although I were fet out of the Kings Bench, that Page 2000 prooueth not that I wrote it there, nor I did not, I promise you truly.

The fat Priest.

Where wrote you it then?

Wood.

Nay, I owe you not so much seruice to tell you: find it out as well as you can: For I perceiue you go about to shed my bloud.

Winchester.

It is no great matter where it was written: it is here, and he denyeth not but he wrote it. You shall heare more of it. Here the Commissioners asked you whether Iudas did eate any more thē bare bread, and you answered, that he eate more then bare bread.

Whereupon they sent you away backe to the Kynges Bench agayne, and asked you not what more, for y^e whiche cause (as you haue written here) you had a hell burnyng in your conscience.* For you had thought they would haue sent a discharge to the Kinges Benche, and so let me goe (sayd you) and Register my name in their bookes, that I had graunted that Iudas did eate the body of Christe, and so the Gospell should haue bene slaundered by me. For the which cause I was in such case, I could scantly eat, drink, or sleepe for that space, as all my prison fellowes can testifie. If al you (I say) that go to the Church of Sathan, and there heare the detestable doctrine, that they spit, and spue out in their Churches, and Pulpits to the great dishonor of God, if all you (I say) that come there, hadde such a hell burning in your conscience for the time, as I hadde till I came before thē agayne & had vttered my conscience, more playnely. I dare saye you would come there no more. All this is your writing is it not? how say you?

Woodman.

I do not deny, but it was mine owne deed.

Winch.

And I pray you, where is there such spitting and spuing out of false doctrine as you speake of?

Wood.

In the sinagogue of Sathan, where God is dishonoured with false doctrine.

Winc.

And I pray you, where is one of them?

Wood.

Nay, that iudge your selfe: I came not hether to be a iudge.

Winc.

Wel, here you haue affirmed that Iudas (your M.) eate more then bread: but yet he eate not the body of Christ as you haue declared by your wordes. For you had a hell burning in your conscience, because you were in doubt, y^t the commissioners vnderstoode by your wordes y^t Iudas had eaten the body of Chryst, because you sayd, he eat more then bread. Therefore thou haddest a great sorte of Deuils in thee, for in hell he many Deuils: and therefore y^e Deuil, and Iudas is thy mayster, by thyne owne wordes.

Wood.

Nay, I defie Iudas, and the Deuill, and his seruauntes: for they bee youre maysters and you serue them, for any thing that I can see, I tell you truth.

Winchest.

Nay, they bee thy maysters.* For y^e deuill is mayster wher hell is, and thou saydest thou hadst a hell burning in thee. I pray thee tell me howe thou canst auoyde it but that the Deuill was in thee by thine owne saying.

Wood.

The hell that I hadde, was the louing correction of GOD toward me, to call me to repentance that I should not offend God and his people in leauing thinges so darke, as I left that. For y^e whiche cause, my consciēce bare me record I had not done wel, as at al times I haue felte the sting of it when I haue broken the commaundemēts of God by any meanes, as al gods people do, I dare say, and it is the louing kindnes of god towards them, to driue them to repentaunce. But it is to be thought that your conscience is neuer troubled, how wickedly soeuer you do. For if it were, it shoulde not be so straunge to you as you make it, which declareth playnely whose seruaunt you be.

Winch.

What a naughty fellow is this? This is such a per'uerse villayne as I neuer talked with in all my lyfe. Hold him a booke, I will make him sweare, to aunswere dyrectly to such thinges, as I will demaund of him: and if he will not aunswere, I will condemne him.

Wood.

*Call you me a fellow? I am suche a fellowe, I tell you, that will driue you all to hell if you consent to the shedding of my bloud, and you shall haue bloud to drynke as sayd S. Iohn in his Reuelation the ix. chapter and being in hell, you shall be compelled to say for payne of conscience: this is the man that we had in derision, & thought his life madnes, and his ende to be without honour, but now we may see how he is counted among the sayntes of God, and wee are punished. This shall you see in hell, if you repent it not, if you do condemne me. This you shall finde in the fift chapter of the booke of wisdom, & therefore take heede what you doe, I geue you counsell.

Winchester.

Wisdom? What speakest thou of wisdom? thou neuer haddest it: for thou art as very a •oole as •uer I heard speake.

Wood.

Do you not know that the foolish things of this world must confound the wise things? * Wherefore it greeueth me not to be called a foole at your hand.

Winchest.

Nay thou art none of those fooles: thou art an obstinate foole, and an heretike. Lay hand on the booke, and aunswere to suche thynges as I wyll laye agaynst thee.

Woodman.

I will not laye hand on the booke for none of you all, You be not my Byshop, and therefore I wil haue nothing to do with you.

Winch.

I wyll haue to doe with you. * This man is with out law, he careth not for the king nor Queene, I dare say for he will not obey theyr lawes. Let me see the Kynges Commission. I will see whether hee will obey that or not.

Wood.

I would you loued the king and Queenes Maiesty, no worse then I do, if it pleased God: You would not do as you doe then.

Winch.

Holde him a booke, he is a ranke hereticke. Thou shalt aunswere to suche thynges as I wyll demaund of thee.

Wood.

I take heauen and earth to recorde I am no hereticke, neither can I tell wherfore I am brought to prison, no more then any man can here tel, and therwith I looked round about on the people, and sayde to the Bishoppe: If you haue any iust cause agaynst me, worthy of death •ay it agaynst me, and let me haue it: for I refuse not to dye (I praise God) for the truthe sake, if I hadde x. liues. If you haue no cause let me goe home (I pray you) to my wife & children to see them kept, and other poore folk y^t I would set a worke by the helpe of God. I haue set a worke a hundreth persons ere this, all the yeare together, and was vniustly taken from them: but God forgeue them that dyd it if it be his will.

Winchester.

Do you not see how he looketh about for help: But I would see any man shewe thee a cheerefull countenance, and especially you that be of my Dioces.* If any of you bid God strengthen him, or take him by the hand, or embrace him, or shew hym a chearefull countenance, you shall be excommunicated, and shall not bee receaued in agayne, till you haue done open penance, and therefore beware of it.

Wood.

I looke for no helpe of men, for God is on my side I prayse him therefore, and therefore I neede not not care who be agaynst me, neither do I care.

Then they cryed: away with him, and bring vs an other. So I was caryed agayne to y^e Marshalsea, where I am now mery (I prayse God therfore) as a sheep appointed to be slayne. But for lack of time, I haue left out much of our talke, but this is the chieftest of it.

¶The 6. and last examinations of Richard Woodman written and copyed with his owne hand.

BE it knowne vnto all men by this present writing that I Richard Woodman, sometime of the parishe of Warbelton, in the County of Sussex: was condemned for gods euerlasting truth an. 1557. Iuly. 16^a by the byshop of Winchester, in the churche of S. Mary Oueries in Southwarke, there sitting with him the same time the byshop of Chichester, the Archdeacon of Caunterbury

Doctor Langdale, M. Roper with a fatte headed Priest, I cannot tell his name All these consented to the shedding of my bloud, vpon this occasion, as here after followeth.

I affirmed that Iudas receaued the sacrament with a sop and the Deuill withall, and because I would not bee sworne vppon a booke to aunswere directly to suche Articles as hee would declare to me: and because I would not beleue that there remained neither bread nor wine after the words of consecration and that the body of Christ could not be receaued of any but of the faithfull. For these Articles I was condemned, as hereafter shal follow more at large, by the help of God.

First, the Bishop sayd when I came before him.

Win.

You were before vs on Monday last past: * & there you affirmed certayne heresies. Howe say you now? Doe you hold them still, or will you reuoke them?

Wood.

I held no heresy then, neyther do I now, as the Lord knoweth.

Win.

No? did you not affirme, that Iudas receiued bread? which is no heresy, vnlesse you tell what more then bread.

Wood.

Is it heresy to say that Iudas receiued more then bread? I sayd he receaued more then bare bread: for he receiued Page 2001 the Sacrament, that was prepared to shewe foorth the Lordes death: and because he presumed to eat without sayth, he eat the deuill withall, as the wordes of Christ declare: after he eate the soppe, the Deuill entred into hym, as you cannot deny.

Winc.

Hold him a booke. I will haue you aunswere dyrectly whether Iudas did eate the body of Christ, or no.

Wood.

*I will answere no more: for I am not of your Dioces: wherfore I will haue nothing to do with you.

Winc.

No, you be in my Dioces, and you be of my Dioces because you haue offended in my Dioces.

Wood.

I am not of your Dioces, although I am in your Dioces: and I was brought into your Dioces against my will: and I haue not offended in your Dioces: if I haue, tell me wherein.

Winchester.

Here is your owne hand writing, the whiche is heresie.* These be the wordes. I cannot find (say you) y^t it is the body of christ to any, before it be receiued in faith. How say you? is not this your owne hand writing?

Wood.

Yea, I do not deny but it is mine owne hand wryting: but when, or where was it written, or where wer the wo•des spoken?

Before the Commissioners: and here is one of them: Maister Roper,* the words were spoken before you. Were they not?

Roper.

Yes in deed, that they were Woodman. I am sure you will not deny them: for you haue written the wordes euen as you spake them.

Wood.

No sir, in deed I will not deny but that I spake thē and I am glad that you haue seene it. For you may see by that whether I lye or not.

Roper.

*In deede the wordes be written word by word as we spake them.

Winchest.

Well, here you affirme y^t it is your owne deede. How say you now? Will you be sorie for it, and become an honest man?

Wood.

My Lord, I trust no man can say, but that I am an honest manne: and as for that, I maruell that you wil lay it to my charge, knowing that my Lorde of London dyscharged me of all matters that were layde agaynst me, when I was released of him.

Winc.

You were released▪ and it might fortune, it was not layd to your charge then: * therefore we lay it to your charge now because you be suspected to be an hereticke: and wee may call you before vs, and examine you vpon your faith vpon suspicion.

Wood.

In deede S. Peter willeth me to render account of my hope that I haue in God, and I am contented so to do, if it please my Bishop to heare me.

Chichester.

Yes I pray you let vs heare it.

Wood.

I do beleue in God the father almighty, maker of heauē & of earth, and of al things visible & inuisible, and in one Lord Iesus christ, my sauour very God and man. I beleue in God the holy Ghost, the comforter of al Gods elect people, and that he is equall with the father, and the sonne I beleue the true Catholicke church, and all the sacraments that belongeth thereto. Thus I haue rendered accompt of my hope that I haue of my saluation.

Winch.

And how beleue you in the blessed sacrament of the aulter? * And with that word they all put of their cappes to that abhominable Idoll.

Wood.

I pray you be contented: for I will not aunswere to any mo questions: for I perceauē you go about to shed my bloud.

Winch.

No, hold him a booke. If he refuse to sweare, he is an Anabaptist, * and shall be excommunicated.

Wood.

I will not sweare for you, excommunicate me if you will. For you be not meete to take an oth, for you laid heresies to my charge in yonder pulpite, the whiche you are not able to proue: wherfore you bee not meete to take an othe of any man. And as for me, I am not of your Dyoces, nor will haue any thing to doe with you.

Winchester.

I will haue to do with thee: and I saye thou art a strong hereticke.

Wood.

Yea, all trueth is heresie with you: but I am content to shew you my minde,* how I beleue on the sacramēt of y^e body and bloud of Iesus Christe, without flattering. For that you looke for, I am sure. But I will meddle no •urther: But what I holde my selfe of it. I will not meddle of any other mans beliefe on it.

N Harp.

Why? I am sure al mens fayth ought to be alike.

Wood

Yea, I graunt you so, that all true Christians faith ought to be alike. But I will aunswere for my selfe.

N. Harp.

Well, let vs heare what you say to it.

Wood.

I do beleue that when I come to receaue the Sacrament of y^e body and bloud of Iesus Christ, if it be truly ministred according to Christes institutiō,* I comming in fayth, as I truste in God I will, whensoever I come to receiue it, I beleuing that Christ was borne for me: & that he suffered death for the remission of my sinnes, and that I shalbe saued by his death and bloud shedding, and so receaue the Sacramente of bread and wine in that remembraunce, that then I doe receiue whole Christ, God and man, mystically, by fayth. This is my beliefe on the sacrament.

Then they spake all at once, saying:* mystically by faythe The fat prieste. What a foole art thou? mystically by faythe thou canst not tell what mystically is?

Wood

If I be a foole, so take me:* But God hathe chosen such fooles of this world to confound such wife things as you are.

The fat priest.

I pray thee what is mystically?*

Wood.

I take mystically to be the fayth that is in vs, that the world seeth not, but God onely.

Winch.

He cannot tell what he sayth. Aunswere to the Sacrament of the aulter, whether it be not the body of Christ before it bee receaued, and whether it be not the bodye of Christ to whom soeuer receaueth it. Tell me, or els I will excommunicate thee.

Wood.

I haue sayd as much as I will say: excommunicate me if you will.* I am none of your Dioces The Bishop of Chichester is mine Ordinary. Let him do it, if you will needs haue my bloud, that it may be required at his hāds.

Chichest.

I am not consecrated yet, I tolde you when you were with me.

Wood.

No in deede, your kine bringe foorth nothing but Cow calues, as it chaunceth now: Meaning thereby that he had not his Bulles from Rome.

Then they were al in a great rage with me, and called me al to nought, and sayd I was out of my w•t, because I spake feruently to euey mans question: all the whiche I cannot remember: but I sayd:

So Festus sayd to Paule when he spake the words of sobernes and truth out of the spirite of God, as I do. But as ye haue iudged me, you be your selues. You will go to hell all the sorte of you, if you condemne me, if you repent i• not with speede.

Wood.

Then my keeper and the Sheriffes deputie Fuller, rebuked me, because I spake so sharpely to them.* And I sayde: I praye you let me alone: I aunswere for my life.

Then there was mucche adoe, that I shoulde keepe silence, and so I held my peace. Then spake the Bishop of Winchester and the Archdeacon of Caunterbury, saying: we go not about to condemne thee, but goe aboute to saue thy soule, if thou wilt be ruled ane doe as we would haue thee.

Wood.

To saue my soule? nay you can not saue my soule. My soule is saued already, I praise God therefore. There can no man saue my soule, but Iesus Christ: and hee it is that hath saued my soule before the foundation of y^t would was layd.

The fat Priest.

What an heresie is that my Lorde? * here is an heresie. He sayth hys soule was saued before the foundations we•e layd. Thou canst not tell what thou saiest. Was thy soule saued before it was?

Wood.

Yes I prayse God, I can tell what I say, & I say y^e truth. Looke in the first of the Ephesians, and there you shall finde it, where Paule sayth: Blessed be God the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ * whiche hath bless•d vs with all maner of spirituall blessings in heauenly thinges by Christ, according as hee hath chosen vs in himselfe before the foundation of the earth was layd, that we shuld be holy and without blame before him, through loue, and thereto were wee pred•stinated. * These be the wordes of Paule, and I beleue they be moste true. And therefore it is my fayth, in and by Iesus Christe that saueth, and not you or any man els.

The fat priest.

What? fayth without workes? Saint Iames sayth: faythe without workes is dead, and wee haue free will to do good workes.

Wood.

I would not that any of you should think that I do disallow good workes. * For a good fayth cannot be w^tout good works. Yet not of our selues, but it is the gift of God, as sayth S. Paule to the Phillippians, the 2. Chapt. It is God that worketh in vs both the wil and also the deed, euen of good will.

Winchester.

Make an ende: aunswere to me. Here is your Ordinary, the Archdeacon of Caunterbury: * hee is made your Ordinary by my Lord Cardinall: and he hath autho'ritie to examine you of your fayth vppon a booke, to aunswere to such Articles as he will laye to you. And I praye you refuse it not: for the daunger is great if you do. Wherefore we desire you shew your selfe a subiect in this matter.

Then they spake al, and said: loe, my Lord desireth you gently to aunswere to him, and so we do all. For if you refuse to take an othe, hee may excommunicate you. For my Page 2002 Lord Cardinall may put whom he wil in the Bishops office, vntill he is consecrated.

Wood.

I know not so much. If you will geue me time to learne the trueth of it (if I can proue it be as you saye) I will tell you my mind in any thing that he shall demaūd of me, without any flattering.

Priest.

My Lord and all we tell thee it is true: & therefore aunswere to him.

Wood.

I will beleue none of you all, for you be turne coates,* & chaungelinges, & be wauering minded, as sayth S. Iames: you be neither hoate nor colde, as sayth S. Iohn, therfore God will spue you out of his mouth. Wherefore I can beleue none of you all, I tell you truth.

Winchest.

What? be we turne coates and chaungelinges? what meanest thou by that?

Wood.

I meane that in king Edwardes time you taught the doctrine that was set forth then, euery one of you, and now you teach the contrary: and therfore I call you turne coates, and chaungelinges, as I may well enough. Which wordes made the most part of them to quake.

Winc.

Nay, not all, as it chaunced.

Wood

No? I pray you where were you then?

Winch.

I was in the Tower, as the Lieutenaunt wyll beare me record.

Wood.

If you were in the Tower, it was not therefore, I dare say: it was for some other matter.

Thē they tooke all hart of grace, and sayd: my Lord, he cōmeth to examine you, we think: if he will not answere to the Articles, you were best to excommunicate him.

Winch.

He is the naughtiest verlet hereticke, that euer I knew. I will read the sentence agaynst him.

Wood.

*Then they spake all at once: and I answered then as fast as I could. But I can not remember it all, the wordes came out so thicke, & that I spared them not (I prayse God therfore) for I spake freely.

Then they that stood by, rebuked me, & sayd: you cā not tell to whom you speake I thinke.

Wood.

No? thinke you so? they be but men, I am sure I haue spoken to as good as they bee, and better then they will euer be, for any thing that I can see, if they repent not with speed.

Winc.

*Geue eare: for I will read sentence agaynst you.

Wood.

Will you so? wherefore will you? you haue no iuste cause to excommunicate me: and therefore if you doe condemne me you wilbe condemned in hell, if you repent not: and I prayse God. I am not afrayd to dye for Gods sake, if I had a hundred liues.

Winch.

For Gods sake? nay for the Deuilles sake. Thou sayest thou art not afrayde to dye: No more was Iudas that hanged himselfe, as thou wilt kill thy selfe wilfully, be'cause thou wilt not be ruled.

Wood.

Nay, I defye the deuill, Iudas and all their members. And Iudas flesh was not afrayd, but his spirite and conscience was afrayde, and therefore despayred, and hong himselfe. But I prayse God, I feele no lothsomnes in my flesh to dye, but a ioyfull conscience and a willing mynde thereto. Wherefore my flesh is subdued to it, I prayse God: and therefore I am not afrayd of death.

Chichester.

Woodman, for Gods sake be ruled. You know what you sayd to me at my house. I coulde say more if I would.

Wood.

*Say what you can: the most fault that you founde in me was, because I praysed the liuing God, and because I sayd, I prayse God, and the Lorde: which you ought to be ashamed of, if you haue any grace, for I told you where the wordes were written.

Winc.

Well: how say you? will you confesse that Iudas receiued the body of Christ vnworthely? tell me playnely.

Wood.

*My Lord, if you, or any of you all can proue before all this audience, in all the bible, that any man euer eat the body of Christ vnworthely, then I will be with you in all thinges that you will demaund of me: of the which matter I desire all this people to be witnes.

Priest.

Will you so? then we shall agree well enough, S. Paule sayth so.

Woodman.

I pray you where sayeth he so? rehearse the wordes.

Priest▪

In the xi. of the first to the Corinthians, he sayeth: Who so eateth of this bread, and drinketh of this cup vnworthely, *eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, because he maketh no difference of the Lordes body.

Wood.

Doth these wordes proue that Iudas eat the body of Christ vnworthely? I pray you let me see them. They were contēted. Then said I: these be the wordes euen that you sayd. * Good people, harken well to them: Who so eateth of this bread, & drinketh of this cup vnworthely: He sayth not, who so eateth of this body vnworthely, or drinketh of this bloude vnworthely. But hee sayeth: Who so eateth of this bread, *and drinketh of this cuppe vnworthely (which is the sacrament) eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, because he maketh no difference of the sacrament which representeth the Lordes body, and other bread and drinke. Here good people, you may all see they are not able to proue their sayinges true. Wherefore I can not beleue them in any thing that they do.

Winc.

Thou art a rancke hereticke in deed. Art thou an expounder? Now I will read sentence agaynst thee.

Wood.

Iudge not leaste you be iudged. For as you haue iudged me, you be your selfe. Then he read the Sentence.* Why, sayd I? Will you read the Sentence agaynst me, and can not tell wherfore.?

Winc.

Thou art an hereticke, and therefore thou shalt be excommunicated.

Wood.

I am no heretick, I take heauē & earth to witnes, I defie all heretickes: and if you condemne me, you wilbe damned, if you repēt it not. But God geue you grace to re'pent all if it be his will:* and so he read forth the sentence in latin, but what he said, God knoweth, and not I. God be iudge betwene thē & me. Whē he had done, I would haue talked my mind to thē, but they cried away, away w^t hym. So I was caried to y^e Marshalsea againe, where I am, & shalbe as long as it shall please God: & I prayse god most hartely, y^t euer he hath elected, & predestinated me to come to so high dignity, as to beare rebuke for his names sake: his name be praysted therfore, for euer and euer. Amen.

And thus haue you the Examinations of thys blessed Woodman, or rather Goodman: wherein may appeare as well the great grace and wisdom of God in that man, as also the grosse ignorance and barbarous cruelty of his aduersaries, especially of Doct. White bishop of Winchester. Now foloweth likewise the effect of his Letter.

A godly Letter of Richard Woodman written to a Christian woman Mistres Robertes of Hawkhurst.

GRace, mercy, and peace from God the father, and from hys sonne our alone Sauour Iesus Christe, by the operation and working of the holy Ghost, be multiplied plenteously vpon you (deare sister Robertes) that you may the more ioyfully beare the crosse of Christ that ye are vnder, vnto the end, to your onely, cōfort and consolation, and to all our brethren and sisters that are round about you, both now and euer. Amen.

In my most humble wise I commend me vnto you, and to al our brethren and sisters in those parties, that loue our Lorde vnfaynedly, certifying you that I and all my brethren with me,* are mery and ioyfull, we prayse God therfore, looking daily to be dissolued frō these our mortall bodyes, according to the good pleasure of our heauenly father: praying God also for your cōstancy, and gentle beneuolence,* that you haue shewed vnto Gods electe people, in this troublesome time of persecution: which may be a sure pledge and token of Gods good will and fauour towardes you, and to all other that heare thereof. For blessed are the mercifull, for they shall obtaine mercy.* Wherfore the fruites declare alway what the tree is. For a good man or woman, out of the good treasure of theyr hartes bring forth good thinges.

Wherfore deare Sister, it is not as many affirme in these dayes (the more it is to be lamented) that say God asketh,* but a mās hart: which is the greatest iniury that can be deuised agaynst god and his word. For S. Iames sayth: Shew me thy faith by the deeds, and I will shew thee my fayth by my deedes, saying: the deuilles haue fayth, and tremble for feare, & yet shalbe but deuils still, because theyr minds were neuer to do good.* Let vs not therfore be like them, but let our fayth be made manifest to the whole world by our deedes: and in the midst of a crooked and peruerse nation, as S. Paule sayth, let your light shine as in a darcke place.

Oh deare hartes, nowe is the Gospell of God ouerwhelmed with many blacke and troublesome cloudes of persecution, for the which cause very few go about to haue their eies made clere by the true light of the Gospell, for feare of loosing of their treasures of this world which are but vayne, and shall perish.

Let not vs therfore be like vnto them which light their candle and put it vnder a bushell: but let vs set our candle vpon a cādlesticke, that it may geue light vnto all thē that are in the house:* that is to saye, let all the people of the housholde of God see our good workes, in suffering all thinges patiently that shalbe layde vpon vs for the Gospels sake, if it be death it selfe. For Christ dyed for vs, leauing vs an example, that we should follow his steps, and as he hath geuen his life for vs, so ought we to geue our liues for the defence of the Gospell, to the comfort of our brethren.

How is it then that some will say, that theyr fayth is good, & yet they do all the deedes of Antichrist the deuill,* and be not ashamed to alledge certayne Scriptures to mayntaine their wickednesse? Saynt Paule sayth: To beleue with the hart iustifieth, & to confesse with the mouth maketh a man safe. Oh good GOD: here maye all menne see that no man or woman can haue a true Page 2003 faith,* vnlesse they haue deedes also: and he that doubteth, is like the waues of the Sea tossed about of the winde, and can looke for no good thing at the Lordes handes. Maye not a man iudge all such to be like those whiche Saynt Iohn speaketh of, that be neyther hoate nor colde,* and therfore God will (he sayth) spue them out of his mouth? If we iudge euill of such, haue not they geuen vs occasion? Had it not bene better for them to haue had a myll stone tyed about theyr necks, and to haue bene cast into the Sea, then they should geue such offences to Gods elect people in cōdemning them as they doe,* in going to the sinagogue of Sathan, and there to receiue the marke of the beast, in that they see and heare God blasphemed there, and hold their peace? Doth not that declare to the whole world, that they allow theyr doinges to be good? and these do not only defile themselues, but also be an occasion to confirme the Papistes in theyr Papistry, and so be an occasion of our weake brothers falling, the which will be all required at theyr handes: which will be to heauy a burden for them to beare,* if they repent it not with speed. For they that know theyr Maysters will & doe it not, shalbe beaten with many stripes Oh, do not we perceiue that now is the acceptable time that Christe speaketh of yea euen now is the axe put to the roots of the trees, so that euery tree that bringeth not forth good fruites now,* must be hewed downe and cast into the fire.

Now is the Lord come with his fanne in his hand, to trie the wheate from the chaffe. The wheat he will gather into his barne, and the chaffe hee will burne as is aforesayde. Nowe is the time come,* that we muste goe meete the bridgrome with oyle in our Lampes. We are also bidden to the feast: let vs make no excuses. Yea, our Maister hath deliuered his talentes vnto vs: God geue vs grace to occupy them well, that at his comming he may receiue his owne with vauntage. Yea nowe is the Lorde come to see if there be any fruit vpon his trees, so that if the Lord come & find none, he will serue vs as he did the wilde figge trees, that is, neuer fruit shall grow on him more.* Also, if we goe to meete the bridegrome without oyle in our lāpes, & should go to buy: the doubt is, we should be serued as was the foolishe virgins: that was, God sayd to thē depart,* I know you not. Or if we should make excuses to come to the feast, other shalbe biddē in our roomes. If we occupy not our talentes wel,* they shalbe taken away from vs & geuen to other, and all such vnprofitable seruantes shalbe cast into prison in hell, whe•e shalbe weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Oh good God what a sort of feareful sayinges are here contened? what christian hart will not harken diligently hereto? Oh, may not all people well perceiue now that this is the time that our Mayster Christ speaketh of,* that the father should be agaynst the sonne, and the sonne agaynst the father, and one brother agaynst another: that the brother shal deliuer the brother to death: yea and that the wicked shall say all maner of wicked sayinges agaynst vs for his names sake?& the which I haue well found by experience I prayse God therefore, that hath geuen mee strength to beare it. For I thinke there canne no euill bee deuised but it hath bene imagined agaynst me, & that of my familiar frendes, as Dauid said: but I prayse my Lord God, they are not able to proue any of their sayinges true, but that they go about to finde fault in thē that God hath chosen, because they thēselues list not to take vp their crosse and folow Christ, & therfore they spake euil of the thing that they know not: the which shall geue account for it before him that is ready to iudge both the quicke and the dead.

But my trust is, that al the people of God wilbe ruled by the counsell of S. Iohn, saying: My sheepe will heare my voyce, straūgers the will not heare: meaning thereby that ye shoulde not beleue straungers, counting them straungers that go about to subuert the Gospell. Wherefore marke well what they be, and try thē well or euer you geue credite to thē, according to S. Iohns couſell in his Epistle, saying: Beleue not euery spirit, but trie the spirites whether they be of God or not: meaning thereby that they that be not of God, wil speake good of none but of them that be as they be. Wherefore (deare sister) be of good cheare, & geue no credite to such people, what so euer ye heare them say. For I haue no mistrust, by Gods help, but that all the world shal see & know that my bloud shal not be deare in mine owne sight, whensoever it shall please God to geue my aduersaries leaue to shedde it. I doe earnestly beleue that God which hath begon this good worke in me, will performe it to the end, as he hath geuen me grace & wil alway, to beare this easy yoke and light burden: the which I haue alwayes found, I prayse my Lord God.

For when I haue bene in prison, wearing other while boltes other while shackles,* other while lying on the bare groūd, some time sitting in the stockes, sometime bound with cordes, that al my bodye hath bene swollen, much like to bee ouercome for the payne that hath bene in my flesh, sometime fayne to lye without in the woodes & fieldes, wandring to and fro, few I say, that durst to keepe my company for feare of the rulers, sometime brought before the Iustices, Shiriffes, Lordes, Doctours, and Bishoppes sometime called dogge, sometime deuill, hereticke, whoremonger, traytor, theefe, deceiuer with diuers other such like: yea & euen they that did eat of my bread, that should haue bene most my f•endes by nature, haue betrayed me. Yet for all this I prayse my Lord God that hath separated me from my mothers wombe,* all this that hath happened to me hath bene easy, light and most delectable & ioyful of any treasure that euer I possessed: for I praise God they are not able to proue one iote or tittle of their sayinges true. But that way that they call heresy, I serue my Lord God, and at all times before whomesoeuer I haue bene brought, God hath geuen me mouth and wisdom, where agaynst all my aduersaries haue not bene able to resist, I prayse God therefore.

Wherefore deare sister, be of good cōfort, with all your bre'thren and sisters, and take no thought what you shall saye,* for it shall be geuen you the same houre, according to the promises, as I haue alwayes found, and as you and all other of Gods elect shall well finde when the time is full come And whereas I and manye other haue hoped, that this persecution woulde haue bene at an end ere this time: now I perceiue, God will haue a further triall to roote out all dissēblers, that no man should reioice in himselfe: but he that reioyceth, shall reioyce of God.

Wherefore if prophecy should fayle, and touns should cease, yet loue must endure. For feare hath paynefulnesse, but a perfecte loue casteth out all feare: which loue I haue no mistrust but God hath poured it vpō you so aboūdantly, that nothing in the world shalbe able to seprate you from God. Neither high nor low, riche nor poore, life nor death, shalbe able to put you from Christ: but by him I trust you shall enter into new Hierusalem, there to liue for euer, beholding the glory of God with the same eyes that you now haue, and all other faythfull people that cōtinue to the end. Geue all honour and glory to God the father, God the sonne, & God the holy Ghost, three persons and one God, to be honoured now and euer. Amen.

After these examinations thus had and commensed be'twene Richard Woodman and y^e Bishops, he was (as is afore told) iudged by sentence of cōdēnation, and so depriued of his life: with whom also was burned 9. other, to wit, fiue men and foure women, which were takē not past two or three dayes before theyr iudgement. The names of all which being also before expressed, here agayne folow in this order. Richard Woodman, George Steuēs, William Maynard, Alexander Hosman his seruant, Thomasine a Wood his mayde, Margerye Moris, Iames Moris her sonne, Denis Burgis, Ashdownes wife, Groues wife.

These persons here aboue named, and blessed martyrs, were put to death at Lewes, the xxij. of Iune▪

¶The burning of x. Martyrs at Lewes.

Of the which number the viij. last were apprehend (as is sayd) either the same daye, or the second or third day before, and so with the sayd Woodman and Steuēs were together committed to the fire:* in which space no writ could come downe from London to the Iustices, for theyr burning. Wherefore what is to be said to such Iustices, or what reckoning they wil make to God and to the lawes of this Realme, I referre that to them that haue to do in the matter. The like whereof is to be found also of other Iustices, who without any lawfull writte of discharge, or order of law, haue vnlawfully and disorderly burnt the seruantes Page 2004 of Christ (whhose bloud the lawe both may and also ought to reuenge:*) especially at Salisbury, and also at Canterbury, and Garnesey. But concerning these matters though mans law do wincke, or rather sleep at them, yet they shall be sure Gods law wil find such murderers out at length. I pray God the doers may repent betime.

¶One Ambrose dyed in Maydstone prison.

AFTER these x. aboue named burnt at Lewes, aboute the same time and moneth,* one Ambrose dyed in Maydstone prison, who els should haue bene burned in the like cause and quarell, as the other were.

The condemnation and Martyrdome of Richard Lush.

IN the Registers of Gilbert Bishop of Bathe & Welles, I finde a certificate made to K. Philip and Q. Mary of one Richard Lush,* there condemned & geuen to the secular power to be burned for the cause of heresy, whose affirmations in the sayde certificate he expressed in tenour and effect, as foloweth.

First, for denying the verity of the body & bloud of christ in the Sacrament of the Aultar.*

2 Item, for denying auricular confessiō to be made to the Priest.

3 Item, for affirming onely to be three sacramēts, to wit, of baptisme, of the supper, and of matrimony.

4 Item, for refusing to call the Lordes Supper by the name of the Sacrament of the aulter.

5 Item, for denying Purgatory, and that prayer & almes profite not the dead.

6 Item, that Images are not to be suffered in the church and that all that kneele to Images at the Church, be Idolators.

7 Item, that they which were burnt of late for religiō, died Gods seruants and good Martyrs.

8 Item, for condemning the single life of Priestes, and other votaries.

9. Item, for denying the vniuersall and catholicke church (meaning belike the Church of Rome.)

*For these assertions, as there are expressed, he was cōdemned, and committed to the Sheriffes, and also a certificat directed by the Bishop aforesayd, to the king and Q. Whereby we haue apparantly to vnderstand, that the said Richard Lush, thus condemned by Bishop Borne, was there burnt and executed, vnlesse peraduenture in y^e mean season he dyed or was made away in the prison: wherof I haue no certeinty to expresse.

A note of Iohn Hullier Minister and Martyr burned at Cambridge.

CONCERNING the story of Iohn Hullier, Martyr, partly mentioned before pag. 1864. for the more ful declaratiō of the death and martirdome of that good man,* because the story is but rawly and imperfectly touched before for the more perfitting thereof, I thought thereunto to adde that which since hath come to my hand, as foloweth.

First Iohn Hullier was brought vp at Eaton colledge and after, according to the fōundation of that house, for that he was ripe for the vniuersitye, he was elected scholer in y^e kinges colledge where also not taryng full the 3. yeares of probation, before he was fellow of the Colledge, he after a litle season was one of the x. Conductes in the kinges colledge, which was an. 1539. Then at length in processe of time, he came to be Curate of Babrame 3. miles from Cābridge, and so went afterward to Linne: where he hauing diuers conflictes with the papistes, was from thence caried to Ely, to D. Thuriby then bishop there: who after diuers examinations, sent him to Cambridge Castle, where he remayned but a while.

From thence he was conueyed to the town prison cōmonly called the Tolboth, lying there almost a quarter of a yere, while at lēgth he was cited to appeare at great S. Maries on Palmsonday euē, before diuers Doctors, both Diuines & Lawyers, amongst whō was chiefest Doctor Shaxton, also Doct. Young, D. Sedgewike, Doct. Scot, Mitch, and others. Where after examination had, for that he would not recant, he was first condemned, the sentence being read by D. Fuller.

Then consequētly he was disgraded after their popish maner with scraping crowne and handes. When they had disgraded him,* he sayd cherefully: this is the ioyfullest day that euer I saw, and I thank ye all, that ye haue deliuered and lightened me of all this paltry.

In the meane time whilest it was doying, one standing by, asked Hullier what book he had in his hand. Who aunswered a testamēt. Wherat this man in a rage tooke it and threw it violently frō him.* Thē was he geuen ouer to the secular powers, Brasey being Maior, who carying him to prison, agayne, took from him all his bookes, writings, & papers.

On Maundy Thursday comming to the stake, he exhorted the people to pray for him, & after holding his peace and praying to himselfe, one spake to him saying,* the Lord strenthē thee. Wherat a Sergeant named Brisley, stayed & bad him hold his tounge or els he should repent it.

Neuerthelesse Hullier answered and sayd (either thus or very like the effect was all one) frende I truste that as God hath hitherto begon, so also he will strengthen me,* & finish his work vpō me. I am bidden to a Maundy, whether I trust to goe, & there to be shortly. God hath layd the foundation, and I by his ayd will end it.

Then goyng to a stoole (prepared for hym to sit on) to haue his hosen plucked of, he desired the people to pray for him agayne, and also to beare witnesse that he dyed in the right faith, and that he would seale it with his bloud certifying them that he dyed in a iust cause, and for the testimony of the verity and truth,* & that there was no other rocke but Iesus Christ to builde vpon, vnder whose banner he fought, and whose souldiour he was: and yet speaking, he turned himselfe about towards the East, and exhorted the people there likewise.

Now it chaunced on a bancke to stande three Archpapistes George Boyes, Henry Barley, & Gray,* all three of Trinity Colledge. This Boyes was one of the Proctors of the Uniuersity that yere. To whome Mayster Graye spake, saying: heare ye not maister Proctor, what blasphemy this fellow vttereth? surely it is euil done to suffer him.

At whose words, this Boyes spake with a loud voice: M. Maior, what meane ye? if ye suffer him thus to talke at liberty, I tell ye the Counsell shall heare of it,* and we take you not to be the Queenes frend. He is a pernicious person, and may do more harme then ye wote of. Wherat simple Hullier as meeke as a Lambe, taking the matter very patiently, made no answere, but made him ready vttering his prayer. Which done, he went meekely himselfe to the stake, and with chaines being bound, was beset with reed & wood, stāding in a pitchbarrell, & the fire being set to,* not marking the winde, it blew the flame to his backe. Thē he feeling it, began earnestly to call vpon God. Neuertheles his frendes perceiuing the fire to be ill kindled, caused the Sergeantes to turne it and fire it in that place where the winde might blow it to his face.

That done, there was a cōpany of bookes which were cast into the fire, and by chaunce a Communion booke fell betwene his handes, who receyuing it ioyfully, opened it,* & read so long as the force of the flame & smoke caused him that he could see no more: and then he fell agayne to prayer holding his handes vp to heauen, & the booke betwixte his armes next his hart, thanking God for sending him it: and at that time the day being a very fayre day & a whote, yet the winde was somewhat vp, and it caused the fier to be the fiercer,* and when al the people thought he had bene dead, he sodenly vttered these wordes: Lord Iesu receaue my spirit, dying very meekely

The place where he was burned is called Iesus grene, not farre from Iesus Colledge. Seager gaue him certeine gunpouder, but little to y^e purpose: for he was dead before it took fire. All the people praied for him, and many a teare was shed for him. Which the Papistes seing, cried, he was not to be prayed for, & being but a dāned man,* it could profit him nothing: neuertheles they cōtinued praying. Wher|at the Papistes fell in such a rage that they manaced them with terrible threatninges to ward. His flesh beyng cōsumed, his bones stood vpright euē as if they had bene aliue. Of the people some took as they could get of him, as pieces of bones. One had his hart•, the which was distributed so farre as it would go: one took the scalpe and looked for the tounge, but it was consumed except the very roote.

One rōuded him in the eare and desired him to be constaunt to the end, at which he spake nothing, but shewed a ioyful countenaunce, and so continued both constaunt and ioyfull to the end.

A Note of Thomas Rede.

THo. Rede who was burned at Lewes, as it appeareth aboue pag. 1807. before he was in prison,* determined w^t himselfe to go to church. The night following, he sawe in a vision, a company of talle young men in white, very pleasant to behold: to whō he would haue ioyned himself, Page 2005 but it would not be.*

Then he looked on himselfe and he was full of spottes, & therewith waked & tooke hold and stood to the truth: god be thanked therefore, and so constantly was burned wyth his felowes, as is aboue specified. pag. 2095.

¶Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper burnt at Norwich.

IN the Moneth of Iulye nexte ensued the Martyrdome of Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper. This Simon dwelling then in the Towne of Linne, a Godly and zealous man in the knowledge of the Lord and of his trueth, detesting and abhorring the contrary enforced Religiō thē set forth, came from Linne to Norwich, where he standing in the prease and hearing of the people, comming out the same time from their popish seruice ended in the Church, began to aske them comming out of the Church, where he might go to haue the communiō. At which wordes diuers much maruelling to heare & see his boldnes, one that was an euill disposed Papist, hearing y^e same, said: y^t if he would needs go to a communion, he would go bring him thither where he should be sped of his purpose. Wherupō shortly after hee was brought to the Chauncellour of Norwiche (whose name was Dunning:) who after a few wordes & small talk passed with this examine, committed him to Warde.

In the meane while as he was in examination, he had in his shoo his confession written in a certein paper,* wherof a peece appearing aboue his shoo, was spyed and taken out. The Chauncellour asking if he would stand to the cōfession of the same fayth therin contened, he constantly affirmed the same. Wherupō as is sayd, he was committed. Thus the sayd Simon being in the Bishops house vnder custody of the keper there called M. Felow, how it happened it is not certayne, whether by gentlenesse of the keper (who was somewhat gentle that wayes) or by leaue geuē of the Bishop: or els whether he had cōdescended of a purpose to theyr articles,* he was dismissed and went home to his house at Linne. Where hee continued a certayne space, while he had disposed and set there all things in order.

That done, he returned againe to the bishops house to his prison and keeper, till the time at length he cōstantly abiding in his professed purpose, & defence of Gods trueth, was by the sayd byshop and his Chauncellour cōdemned and committed to the fire about the xiiij. day of Iuly.

¶Elizabeth Cooper Martyr.

With this Simon Miller also was burnt one Elizabeth Cooper (as is aforesayde) a Pewterers Wife,* dwelling in Saynt Andrewes parish in Norwich, where she had before recanted, and beyng vnquyet for the same, and greatlye troubled inwardlye, at the last came into the sayd Saynt Andrewes Church, the people beyng at theyr popish seruice, and there standing in the same, sayde she reuoked her recantation before made in that place, and was hartely sorye that euer she did it,* willing the people not to bee deceiued, neither to take her doynge before for an example. &c. These or suche like woordes shee spake in the Church.

Then cryed one Bacon of the sayd Parish, laying hys armes abroad, saying: Mayster Shiriffe, will you suffer this? and repeating the same, vrge hym to goe from the church to her house, at whose knocking she came downe, & was taken and sent to prison.

*This Shiriffe (named M. Thomas Sutterton) & she had bene seruantes together before in one house, & for the frendship he bare vnto her, & the more for the gospels sake he was very loth to do it, but that he was inforced by those other persons (before specified) much against his owne cōscience, which he now earnestly repenteth.

This good woman being condemned, and at the stake with Simon Miller to be burnt, when the fire came vnto her, she a little shronke thereat, with a voyce crying once, ha. When the sayd Simon Miller hearde the same, he put his hand behinde him towarde her, and willed her to bee strong, and of good cheare: For good sister (said he) we shall haue a ioyfull and a sweete supper. Whereat she beyng, as it seemed thereby strengthened, stode as still and as quiet as one moste glad to finish that good worke whiche before most happely shee had begonne.* So in fine she ended her life with her companion ioyfully, committing her soule into the handes of almighty God.

¶The Martyrdome of x. faythfull and blessed Martyrs, fiue men and fiue women, burnt at Colchester, fiue in the forenoone, and fiue in the afternoone, for the testimony and wnesse of Christ Iesus and his glorious Gospel.

AS it is no n•w thing in those whom we call Prelates and Priestes of the Church,* to be raysers vp of persecution agaynst Christ and his poore flocke: so is it much to be maruelled or rather lamented, that noble persons, and mē of honor, and worship, would be made such Ministers to serue the affections of these tyrauntes, as commonly, as well in all y^e sorowful dayes of the late Queene Mary, as namely in this present story is to be marked.

And first thou remembrest (gentle Reader) how mention was made a litle before pag. 1863. of xxij. which were sent vp prisoners together from Colchester to London by the Earle of Oxforde, the Lord Darcy, Maister Tyrrell of Saynt Osithes, and other Commissioners & Iustices. &c. The which xxij. (as is aforesayd) through a gentle submission put vnto them, were afterward released & deliuered.

In the number of these foresayd xxij. was one William Mount of Muchbently in Essex, husbandman,* with Alice his wife, and Kose Allin mayd, the daughter of the said Alice Mount: whiche comming home agayne to their house at Muchbently aforesayde, refrayned themselues from the vnsauery seruice of the Popish Church, and frequēted the company of good men and women which gaue themselues diligently to reading, inuocating, & calling vpon the name of God through Christ: wherby they so fretted the wicked Priest of the towne called Syr Thomas Tye,* & other like vnto him, that casting theyr heades together, they made a pestilent Supplication to the Lord Darcy, in the name of the whole Parish, the tenour whereof hereafter foloweth.

¶The maner of a Supplication to the Lord Darcy, and by him deliuered to Syr Iohn Kingstone Priest and Commissary.

PLEaseth it your honorable Lordship to be aduertised y^t we confesse,* whilst your good Lordship laye here in the country, the people were stayed in good order, to our great comfort: but since your Lordshippes departure, they haue made digression from good order in some places, & namely in the Parish of Muchbently, by reason of three seditious persons, William Mount and his wife, & Rose her daughter, who by theyr colourable submission (as it doth appere) were dismiss and sent nowne from the Bishop of London, and since theyr comming home thei haue not onely in their owne persons shewed manifest signes and tokens of disobedience, in not comming to the Church, nor yet obseruing other good orders: but also most maliciously and seditiously haue seduced many from comming to the Church, and frō obeying all other good orders, mocking also those that frequent the Church, and calling thē Church Owles, and blasphemously calling the blessed Sacrament of the aultar a blind God, with diuers such like blasphemies. In consideration whereof, may it please your honour (for the loue of God, and for the tender zeale your good Lorshippe beareth to Iustice, and common peace and quietnes of the king and Queenes Maiesties louing subiectes) to award out your warrant for the sayd William Mount, his wife, & Rose her daughter, that they being attached & brought before your good Lordshippe, we trust the rest will feare to offend (their ring leaders of sedition being apprehēded) to the quietnes of theyr obedient subiectes.

Your dayly Orators the Parishioners of Muchbentley, Thomas Tye Priest, Iohn Carter,*Thomas Candeler, Iohn Barker, Richarde Mere, Iohn Paynter, William Harrys, Iohn Richard, with other.

This being done, the said sir Thomas Tye bethought with himselfe where the persecuted did resorte.* For in the beginning of Queene Maries reign, for a xij. moneth and more, he came not to the Church, but frequented the cōpanye of Godlye men and women, which abstained from the same, and as they thought, he laboured to keepe a good cōscience, but the sequele shewed him to be a false brother.

Now (as I said) he partly knowing y^e places of refuge for honest mē, did further enquire of other about y^e same, & being therof sufficiently (as he thought) instructed to hys purpose, immediatly about y^e time the supplication aboue specified was exhibited to y^e sayd L. Darcy, wrote secretly a letter to Boner B. of Londō, wherein he maketh his accoūt how he had bestowed his time, & cōplayned of diuers honest mē, among the which was the sayd W. Mount & hys company. The tenour of which letter herafter foloweth.

A Letter sent to Boner Byshop of London, from Syr Thomas Tye Priest.

*Right honourable Lord, after my bounden duety done in most humble wise, these shall be to signify vnto your Lordship the state of our parties concerning religion. And first since the comming downe, of the 24. rancke hereticks dismissed from you, the detestable sort of Schismaticks were neuer so bold since the king and Queenes Maiesties reignes as they are now at this present. In Muc•bently where your Lordship is Patrone of the Churche, since Williā Mount, & Alice his wife, with Rose Allin her daughter came home, they doe not onely absent themselues from the church, and seruice of God but do dayly allure many other away from the same, which before did outwardly shew signes & tokens of obedience.

They assemble together vpon the Sabbaoth day in the time of diuine seruice, sometimes in one house, sometime in an other, and there ke•pe theyr priuy conuenticles and scholes of heresy. The Iurates sayth, the Lordes Commission is out, & they are discharged of theyr othe. The Quest men in your Archdeacons visitation alleadged that forasmuch as they were once presented & now sent home they haue no more to do with them nor none other Your Officers sayth, namely Mayster Boswell, that the Coūsell sent them not home without a great consideration. I praye God some of your Officers proue not fauorers of hereticks. The rebels are stout in the Towne of Colchester.

The ministers of the Church are hemd at in the open streets, and called knaues. The blessed Sacrament of the aultar is blasphemed and rayled vpon in euery Alehouse and Tauerne. Prayer and fasting is not regarded. Seditious talkes and newes are rife, both in towne and countrey, in as ample and large manner, as though there had no honorable Lords and Commissioners bene sent for reformation thereof. The occasion riseth partly by reason of Iohn Lone of Colchester H•e•h (a peruerse place) which Iohn Lone was twice indicted of heresye, and thereupon fled with his wife and householde, and h•s goodes seased within the Towne of Colchester, to the King and Queenes Maiesties vse. Neuerthelesse the sayd Iohn is come home agayne, and nothing sayde or done to him. Whereupon the heretickes are wonderfully encouraged, to the no litle discomfort of good and Catholicke people, which dayly prayeth to God for the profite, vnity, and restauration of his Church agayne, whiche thing shall come the sooner to passe, through the trauell and paynes of su•h honourable Lordes and reuerend fathers, as your good Lordshippe is, vnto whome I wish long life and continuaunce, with encrease of much honour.

From Colchester the xvij. of December.

Your humble Bedes man Thomas Tye Priest.

When Iudasly this wicked Prieste had thus wrought his malice agaynst the people of god, within a while after, the stormes began to arise agaynst those poore persecuted William Mount and his company, wherby they were enforced to hide themselues from the heat thereof. And continuing so a litle space at last, the vij. day of March. an. 1557. being the first Sondag in Lent, and by 2. of the clock in the morning, one Maister Edmund Tyrrell (who came of the house of that Tyrrels which murdered king Edward the v. and his brother) tooke with him the Bailiffe of the hundred called William Simuell, dwelling in Colchester, and the two Cōstables of Muchbently aforesayd named Iohn Baker & William Harries with diuers other,* a great nūber: & besetting the house of the said William Mount roūd about, called to them at length to open the doore, which being done M. Tyrrell with certein of his cōpany, went into the chamber where the sayd father Mount and his wife lay, willing them to rise:* for (sayd he) ye must goe wyth vs to Colchester Castle. Mother Mount hearing that, beyng very sicke, desired that her daughter might first fetch her some drinke: for she was (she sayd) very ill at ease.

Then he gaue her leaue & bad her go. So her daughter the forenamed Rose Allin, mayde, tooke a stone pot in one hand, & a candle in the other, & went to draw drink for her mother: & as she came back again through the house, Tyrrel met her, & willed to geue her father & mother good coūsell, and to aduertise them to be better Catholicke people.

Rose.

Syr, they haue a better instructour then I. For the holy Ghost doth teach them I hope, which I trust wil not suffer them to erre.

Tyrrell.

Why, sayd Mayster Tyrrell, art thou still in that minde, thou noughty houswife? Mary it is time to look vpon such heretickes in deed.

Rose.

Syr, with that which you call heresy,* do I worship my Lord God. I tell you troth.

Tyrrell.

Then I perceiue you will burne, gossip, with the rest, for companies sake.

Rose.

No syr, not for companies sake, but for my Christes sake, if so I be compelled, and I hope in his mercies, if he call me to it, he will enable me to beare it.

Tyrrell.

So he turning to his companye, sayde: Syrs thys gossip wil burne: do ye not thinke it? Mary sir, quoth one, proue her, and you shall see what she will do by and by.

[illustration]

 The burning of Rose Allins hand, by Edmund Tyrrell, as she was going to fetch drinke for her Mother, lying sicke in her bedde.

Page 2007 Then that cruell Tyrrell taking the candell from her, held her wrest, and the burning candell vnder her hande, burning crosse wise ouer the backe thereof, so long till the very smowes crackt a sūder. Witnes hereof Williā Kandler then dwelling in Muchbently,* which was there presēt and saw it. Also Mistres Bright of Romford, with Anne Starky her mayd, to whom Rose Allin both declared the same, and the sayd Mistres Bright also ministred salue for the curing therof, as she lay in her house at Romforde going vp towards London with other prisoners.

In which time of his tyranny, he sayd oftē to her: why whore wilt thou not cry? Thou young whoore, wilt thou not cry? &c. Unto which alwayes she aunswered, that she had no cause, she thanked God, but rather to reioyce. Hee had, she sayd more cause to weepe then she, if he considered the matter well. In the ende, when the sinnowes (as I sayd) brake that all the house heard them, he then thrust her from him violētly, and sayd: ha strong whore, thou shamelesse beast, thou beastly whore. &c. with such like vile wordes. But she quietly suffering his rage for the time, at the last,* said: Syr, haue ye done what ye will doe? And he sayd, yea, and if thou thinke it be not well, then mend it.

Rose.

Mend it? nay, the Lord mend you, and geue you repentance, if it be his will. And now if ye thinke it good begin at the feet,* and burne the head also. For he that set you a worke, shall pay you your wages one daye I warrant you: and so she went and caryed her mother drinke as shee was commaūded. Furthermore, after the searching of the house for more company, at the last they found one Iohn Thurston and Margaret his wife there also, whome they caried with the rest to Colchester Castle immediatly.

And this sayd Rose Allin being prisoner, tolde a frend of hers this cruell act of the sayd Tirrell, and shewing him the maner therof▪ she sayd: while my one hand (quoth she) was a burning, I hauing a pot in my other hand, might haue laid him on y^e face with it,* if I had would? for no mā held my hand to let me therin. But I thanke God (quoth she) with all my hart, I did it not.

Also being asked of another howe she could abyde the paynefull burning of her hand, she said, at first it was some griefe to her, but afterward, the longer she burned the lesse she felt, or well neare none at all.

And because Mayster Tyrrell shall not goe alone in this kinde of cruelty, you shall heare another like example of a blynde Harpers hand burnt by Bishop Boner, as is testified by the relation of Ualentine Dyngley sometime gentleman to the sayd Bishop: who declared before credible witnes, as followeth: how the sayd Bishop Boner hauing this blind Harper before him, spake thus vnto him: that such blinde abiectes whiche folow a sorte of hereticall Preachers, when they come to the feeling of the fire, wyll be the first that will flye from it.

To whō the blind man sayd: that if euery ioynt of hym were burnt, yet he trusted in the Lord not to flye. Then Boner signifying priuily to certeine of his men about him what the should do, they brought to him a burning coale. Which coale being put into the poore mans hand, they closed it fast again, and so was his hand piteously burned. Amongest the doers wherof was the said maister Ualentine Dyngley witnes and reporter hereof, as is afore declared.

We read in the story of Titus Liuius of king Porsēna: who after the burning of the righte hande of M. Scaeuola, which came purposely to kill him, beyng onely contented therewith, sent him home to Rome agayne. But thus to burne the handes of poore men and women whiche neuer meant any harme vnto them, and yet not contented with that, but also to consume theyr whole bodyes without any iust cause, we find no example of such barbarous tyranny, neither in Titus Liuius, neither in any other story amongst the heathen.

But to returne to our Colchester Martirs againe, as touching William Munt & his Wyfe, and burning of their daughter Rose Allins hand, sufficient hath bene declared. With the sayd William Munt and his family, was ioyned also in the same prison at Colchester, another faithfull brother named Iohn Iohnson, alias Alikier, of Thorpe, in the County of Essex labourer, of the age of xxxiiij. yeares, hauing no wife aliue, but three yong children, who also was with them indicted of heresy, and so all these foure laye together in Colchester Castle.

The other sixe prisoners lay in Mote Hall in the sayde towne of Colchester, whose names were:

First, William Bongeor, of the parish of S. Nicholas in Colchester, Glasier, of the age of lx. yeares.

2. Tho. Benold of Colchester, Talow Chaundler.

3. W. Purcas of Bocking in the County of Essex, Fuller, a yong man, of the age of xx. yeares.

4. Agnes Syluerside, alias Smith, dwelling in Colchester, widow of the age of lx. yeares.

5. Helene Ewring, the wi•e of Iohn Ewring, Myller,* dwelling in Colchester, of the age of fiue and forty yeares or thereabouts, who was one of the two and twenty prisoners mentioned before. pag. 1863. sent vp in bandes frō Colchester to London, and after being deliuered with the rest, repayred home to Colchester agayne to her husbande, where notwithstanding she enioyed her liberty not verye long: for shortly after her returne, met with her one Rob. Maynard then Bayliffe of Colchester,* a speciall enemy to Gods Gospell, who spying her, came to her, & kissed her, & bade her welcome home from London. Unto whome she considerately aunswered agayne, and sayd, that it was but a Iudas kisse. For in the end (quoth she) I know you will betray me: As in deed it came to passe, for immediately after that talke she was apprehended by him againe, & there lodged with the rest in the towne prison (as is aforesayde) called the Mote hall.

6. The sixt of this company was Elizabeth Folkes, a yong mayd, and seruaunt in Colchester, of the age of twēty yeares.

These sixe were imprisoned in the town prison of Colchester, called Mote Hall, as the other soure aboue specified, were in the Castle.

Diuers examinations these good men had at sundrye times before diuers Iustices, Priestes, and Officers, as M. Roper, Iohn Kingstone Commissary, Iohn Boswell Priest and Boners Scribe, and others moe, whereof the sayd Boswell made relation to Bishop Boner, certifying him of their depositions, as is to be read in our first book of Actes and Monumentes. pag. 1607. Last of all they were examined again in Mote hall the xxiiij. day of Iune, by doctour Chadsey, Iohn Kingstone Commissary, with other Priestes, & Boswell the Scribe, in the presence of the two Bailiffes of Colchester, Robert Browne & Robert Maynard, with diuers other Iustices both of the town & country, and other Gentlemen a great sort: at which tyme and place, and before the said persons, they had sentence of condemnation read agaynst thē, chiefly for not affirming the reall presence of the Sacrament in theyr Aultar. The effect of theyr wordes therein, was this, or such like, as here foloweth.

¶First the Lordes faythfull prisoners in Mote Hall.

Williā Bongeor,* of the parish of S. Nicolas in Colchester, Glasier, sayd: that the sacramēt of the aultar was bread, is bread, & so remayneth bread, & for the consecration it is not the holyer, but rather the worse. To thys he did stand, as also agaynst all the rest of their Papisticall doctrine: and so had sentence read agaynst him.

Thomas Benold of Colchester, Talow Chaundler, affirmed the like in effect that the sayd Williā Bongeor dyd:* and so had sentence also read against him.

W. Purcas of Bocking said,* that when he receiued the sacrament, he receiued bread in an holy vse, that preacheth the remembrance that Christ died for him. To this he stood and against other theyr popish matters: and so also had sētence read agaynst him.

Agnes Syluerside, alias Smith, sayd: that she loued no Consecration.* For the breade and wine is rather worse then better therby, she sayd. This good olde woman aunswered them with such sound iudgement and boldnesse, to euery thing they asked her, that it reioyced the heartes of many, and especially to see the pacience of such a reuerende olde age, agaynst the tauntes and checkes of her enemies. To this she also stood, and had sentence read agaynst her in like maner.

Helene Ewring aunswered the like in effect as y^e other did, clearely denying all the lawes set forth by the Pope,* w^t her whole hart. This good woman was somewhat thicke of hearing, but yet quick in vnderstanding the Lords matters (his name therfore be prayesd.) Agaynst her also there was sentence read.

Elizabeth Folkes the young mayden, being examined whether she beleued the presence of Christes body to be in the Sacrament substantially and really, or no: answered,* that she beleued that it was a substantiall lye, and a reall lye. At which wordes the Priestes and others chafed very much, and asked her agayne,* whether after the Consecration there remayned not the bodye of Christ in the Sacrament. And she aunswered, that before Consecration and after, it is but bread, and that man blesseth without Gods word, is cursed & abhominable by the word. &c. Then they examined her of confession to the Priest, of going to church to heare Masse, of the authority of the Bishoppe of Rome. &c. Unto all which she answered, that she woulde neyther Page 2008 vse nor frequent none of them all, by the grace of God, but vtterly detest and and abhorre them from the bottome of our hart, and all such trumpery.

Then read they the sentence of condemnation against her.* In which time Doct. Chadsey wept, that the teares trickled downe his cheekes. So the sentence being read, she kneeled downe on both her knees, lifting vp her hāds & eyes vnto heauen, with seruent praier in audible voyce praying God that euer shee was borne, to see that moste blessed and happy day,* that y^e Lord would count her worthy to suffer for the testimony of Christ: and Lord, sayd she (if it be thy will) forgeue them that this haue done against me, for they know not what they doe. Then rising vp, she exhorted al those on the Benche, to repentaunce, especially those who brought her to prison, as Robert Maynard the Bayliffe, and such like: which Maynard commonly when he sate in iudgment vpon life and death, would sit sleeping on the Bench many times: so careful was his mind on his Office.

Further shee willed halting Gospellers to beware of bloud, for that would cry for vengeance, &c. And in y^e end she told them all, laying her hand on the Barre, if they d^d not repent their wicked doynges therin, that vndoubtedly the very barre should be a witnes agaynst them at y^e day of iudgement, that they had there that day shed innocente bloud.

This Elizabeth Folkes, the day before she was condemned, was examined onely vpon this article, whether she beleued that there was a Catholicke Church of Christ or no. Unto which she answered, Yea. Then was she immediately (by Bowsels meanes the Scribe) deliuered vnto her vncl^e Holt^r of the same towne of Colchester, to keep who caried her home vnto hys house: & shee being there, might haue departed thence many tymes, if she had wold: for there was meanes offered to conuey her awaye. But she hearyng that some doubted that shee hadde yealded to the Pope (although it was most vntrue) would in no wise content her selfe,* but wept, and was in suche anguishe of minde and terroure of conscience, that (no remedye) shee woulde to the Papistes agayne, for any perswasions that could bee, and commyng before them at Cosins house at the white Harte in Colchester, she was at vtter defiaunce with them and their doctrine: and so had, as ye haue heard in the end, a papisticall reward, as the rest of her brethren had.

¶The Lordes faythfull prisoners in Colchester Castle.

*William Munt of Muchbentley in Essex, of the age of 61. yeares, sayde: that the sacrament of the Aultar was an abhominable Idoll, and that if he should obserue any part of their popish proceedinges, he should dysplease God, and bring his curse vpon him, and therfore for feare of his vengeāce he durst not doe it. This good father was examined of many thinges, but God be thanked, he stode to the truth and in the end therfore had sentence of condemⁿation read agaynst hym.

Iohn Iohnson of Thorpe in Essex, wydower of y^e age of xxxiiii. yeares, was examined as the rest, and made answeare in suche sorte,* as the Papistes counted them none of theirs, and therefore condemned him with theyr bloudye sentēce, as they had done the rest before. This Ioh. Iohnson affirmed, that in the receauing of the sacrament, accordyng to Christes institution, he receiueth the body of christ spiritually. &c.

Alice Munt, the wife of the sayde William Munt, of y^e age of xli. yeares,* being also examined as the rest, sayd and confirmed the same in effect as her husband dyd, and was therefore also condemned by their bloody sentence in lyke maner.

Rose Allyn mayd, the daughter of the sayd Alice Munt of the age of twenty yeares,* being examined of auricular confession, goyng to the church to heare Masse, of the Popish seuen sacramentes &c. answered stoutlye that they stanke in the face of God, and she durst not haue to do with them for her life,* neyther was she (she sayde) anye member of theirs: for they were the members of Antichriste, and so shuld haue (if they repented not) the reward of Antichrist. Being asked further, what she could saye of the Sea of the Bishop of Rome, whethere she would obey hys authoritie or no: she aunswered boldly, that she was none of hys. As for hys See (quoth she) it is for Crowes,* kytes, owles and Rauens to swimme in, such as you be, for by y^e grace of God I shall not swimme in that See, while I lyue, nei^ther will I haue any thing to doe therewith. Then read they the sentence of condemnation agaynst her, and so sent her vnto prison agayne vnto the rest, where she song with great ioy, to the wonder of many.

Thus these poore condemned Lambes, beyng deliuered into the handes of the secular power, were committed agayn euery one vnto y^e Prison from whence they came, where they remayned w^t much ioy & great comfort (in con^tinuall reading, and inuocating the name of God) euer loo^king and expecting the happy day of their dissolution. In which time the cruell Papistes left not their mischieuous attemptes agaynst them (although they would seeme now to haue no more to doe with thē) for bloody Boner, whose throte neuer cryed ho, shortly a[•]ter got a writ for the burning of the foresayd ten good creatures, and to shewe the more dilligence in the cause, he sent hys owne trusty man downe with it, named Edward Cosin, and with hym also his letter for the furtheraunce of the matter, the thirty day of Iuly, the next month after the condemnation.

The writ being thus receiued of the sayde Bayliffes, & they hauing then no leysure thereaboutes, appoynted the day of y^e executiō therof, to be y^e second day of August next following. And because the faythfull soules were in two seuerall Prisons, as the Castle was for the Countrey and Mote Hall for the Townte, therefore it was agreed among them, that they in Mote Hall should be burnt in the forenoone and those at the Castle, by the Sheriffe of y^e Shyre, in the after noone, as here thou mayest see it more playne how it came to passe accordingly.

The second day of August. 1557. betwixt sixe and seuen of y^e clock in y^e morning, was brought from Mote Hal vnto a plat of ground hard by the towne wall of Colchester on the outward side, William Bongeor, William Purcas Thomas Benold, Agnes Siluerside aliās Smith. Helene Euring & Elizab. Folkes aforenamed, which being there, & al things prepared for theyr martyrdome at the last these said constant martyrs kneeled downe and made theyr hūble prayers to God, but not in such sorte as they woulde: for the cruel tyrants would not suffer them: especially one Mayster Clere among the rest (who sometyme had bene a Gospeller) shewed hymselfe very extreme vnto them: the Lord geue him repentaunce (if it be hys good will) & grace to be a better man. Whē they had made their prayers, they rose, & made them ready to the fire. And Elizabeth Folkes when she had pluckt off her Peticote, woulde haue geuen it to her mother, (which came and kist her at the stake, and exhorted her to be strong in the Lord) but the wicked there attending, woulde not suffer her to geue it. Therefore taking the sayd peticote in her hand, she threw it away from her saying: Farewell all the world farewell fayth, farewell hope: and so taking the stake in her hand, sayde: Welcome loue &c. Now she being at the stake, and one of the Officers nayling the chayne about her, in the striking of y^e staple, he mist the place and strake her with a great stroke of the hammer on the shoulder bone: wherat she sodenly turned her head lifting vp her eyes to the Lorde, and prayed

¶The martyrdome of three men and three women at Colchester, burned in the forenoone, besides 4 other burned at after noone.

When all sixe were also nayled likewise at their stakes and the fire about them, they clapped their handes for ioy in the fire, that the standers by (which were by estimation thousandes) cryed generally all almost: The Lord strengthē them, the Lord comfort them, the Lord poure his mercies vpon them, with such like wordes, as was wonderfull to heare.

Thus yealded they vp theyr soules and bodyes into y^e Lordes handes, for the true testimony of his trueth. The Lord graunt we may imitate the same in the like quarrell (if hee so vouche vs worthe) for hys mercies sake. Amen.

In like manner, the sayde day in the afternoone, was brought forth into the Castle yard, to a place appoynted for the same, * W. Munt. Iohn Iohnson, Alice Munt, and Rose Allyn aforesayd, which godly constant persons, after they had made theyr praiers, and were ioyfully •yed to the stakes, calling vpon the name of God, and exhorting the people earnestly to flee from Idolatry, suffered their martyrdome with such triumphe and ioye, that the people did no lesse showte therat to see it, then at the other that were burnt the same day in the morning.

Thus ended all these glorious x. soules that day, their happy liues vnto the Lord,* whose ages all did growe to y^e summe of 406. yeares or thereaboutes. The Lord graunt we may well spend our yeares and dayes likewise to his glory. Amen.

¶Iohn Thurston dyed in Colchester Castle.

BEfore you haue heard of y^e taking of one I. Thurston at Muchbentley,* in the house of one William Munt of the same towne: which sayd Iohn Thurston afterwarde, about the moneth of Maye, in the yeare aforesayde, dyed in Colchester Castle, a constaunt confessor of Iesus Christ.

¶The story and death of George Eagles, otherwise termed Trudgeouer, a most paynfull trauayler in Christes Gospell, who for the same Gospell most cruelly was martyred by the cruell papistes.

AMong other Martirs of singular vertue and constancie,* one George Eagles deserueth not the least admyration, but is so much the more to be commended, for that he hauing little learning or none, most manfully serued & fought vnder the banner of Christes Church. For oftentimes the will and pleasure of God is to beautifie & adorn his kingdome w^t the weake & simple instruments of this world: such as in the old Testament Amos was, who w^t many other of obscure and vnknowne names, were called from the hearde and soldes to the honour of Prophetes: as likewise we read of the Apostles that were called from fishermens craft, and put into churches. Wherefore thys George Eagles is not to be neglected for his base occupation, whome Christ called thence to set forth and declare abroad his Gospell. Rather we ought to glorifie GOD the more thereby in his holinesse, whiche in so blinde a time inspired him with the gift of preaching, and constancie of suffering: who after a certayne time hee had vsed the occupation of a Taylor, being eloquent and of good vtterance, gaue and applyed himselfe to the profite of christes Church.

Which man, as before in those moste bright and cleare dayes of king Edw. the 6. he had not vnfruitfully shewed and preached the power & force of y^e Lorde: so afterward in the tempestious time and fall of the church (at what tyme the confessours of Christ and hys Gospell were turmoyled, diuers of thē murdered, parte banished, & other some constrained for feare not to shew their heades) he expressed and vttered his manly stomacke. For he wandring abroad into diuers and farre Countryes,* where he could finde any of his brethren, he did there moste earnestly encourage & comfort them, not taryng in this town, and sometyme abiding in that certayn mōthes together, as occasion serued, lodgyng sometyme in the Countrey & sometime for feare liuing in fieldes & woods, who for his immoderate & vnreasonable goyng abroad, was called Trudgeouer. Oftentimes he did lye abroad in the night without couert spending the most part thereof in deuout and earnest pray^rer.

His dyet was so aboue measure spare and sclender, that for the space of three yeares, he vsed for the moste parte, to drinke nothing but very water, whereunto he was compelled through necessitie of the time of persecution: & after whē he perceaued that his body by Gods prouidence proued well enough with this dyet, he thought best to inure himselfe therewithall agaynst all necessities.

Now when he had profited Christes Church in thys sort, by going about and preaching the Gospell a yere or two, and especially in Colchester and the quarters therabout, that priue enemy which enuieth alwayes the saluation and blessed estate of the good, lurketh & layeth wait by all meanes possible for hym, so that there were diuers espies sent out, who had in commaundement, where soeuer they found him, to bring him eyther quicke or dead.

But when this their attempt could not preuayle, but al was in vayne (the sayd Eagles with his brethren keping in close, and hiding themselues in out and darke places, as in barnes, thickets, holes, and priuy closets) hys aduersaries wēt about an other way to compasse this theyr enterprise of taking him. For in the Queenes name a greuous Edicte was proclaymed throughout foure Shyres Essex, Suffolke, Kent, and Northfolke, promising y^e party that tooke him, twenty pound for his paynes: doubtles a worthy hyre to entice any Iew to treachery. For being inflamed with greedy desire of the mony, deuised and inuēted al waies and reasons they could possible to be enriched with the hurt and destruction of this sely man.

At length it came to passe, that this George being seene by chaunce at Colchester vpō Mary Magdalens day, at which tyme they kept a Fayre in the Towne, should haue foorthw^t ben deliuered to hys aduersaries, if he perceiuing the same (as God would haue it) had not conueyed hymselfe away as fast as he could, a great multitude pursuing after, and seeking dilligently for him. Who first hid hymselfe in a Groue, and then from thence he stole into a corne field there by, and so laye secretly couched from the vyolence of his enemies, in so muche as they were all, sayng one, past hope of taking him, and therefore readye to depart their way.

This one hauing more subtilly and wicked craft in his head then the rest, woulde not depart thence with his fellowes, but climed vp into a high tree, there to view & espy if he might see Eagles any where stir or moue. The poore man thinking al sure enough, by reason that hee heard no noyse abroad, rose vp vpon his knees, and lifting vpp his hands, prayed vnto God.* And whether it were for y^t hys head was aboue the corne, or because his voice was heard the lurker perceiuing hys desired pray that hee hunted after, forthwith came downe, and sodaynly laying hands on him, brought him as prisoner to Colchester. Notwithstan'ding the greedy and Iudas knaue which had so much promised him, was faine to be contented with a very smal reward, and glad to take that too, least he shoulde haue had nothing at all.

This George, not without great lamentation of dyuers good men: and great lacke vnto the Church of God (of whiche to his power hee was a worthy instrument) was committed to prison there, and from thence wythin 4. dayes after conueyed to Chelmsford, where he abode all that night in deuout prayer, and would not sleepe, neither would eat or drinke, but bread and water. The next day he was caryed to London to the Bishop or the Counsayle, and there remayned a certayne time, & then was brought downe to Chelmsford to the Sessions, and there was indited and accused of treason, because hee had assembled cōpanyes together, contrary to the lawes and statutes of the Realme in that case prouided. For so it was ordayned a litle before, to auoyd sedition, that if men shoulde flocke secretly together, aboue the number of six, they shoulde be attached of treason: which strayte lawe was the casting away of the good Duke of Somerset before mentioned.

And albeit it was well known that poore Eagles did neuer any thing seditiously against y^e Queene, yet to cloke an honest matter withall, and to cause hym to be the more hated of the people, they turned religion into a ciuill offence and crime, and though he defended his cause stoutly and boldly, making a full declaration of his religion or fayth before the Iudges: yet could he not bryng to passe by any meanes, but that hee must needes be indicted (as is sayd) of treason, whose inditement did runne muche after this fashion.

George Eagles, thou art indicted by y^e name of George Eagles, otherwise Trudgeouer the worlde, for that thou didst such a day make thy prayer, that God shoulde turne Queene Maryes hart, or els take her away.*

He denyed that he prayed that God should take her away, but he confessed that he prayed that God would turn her hart in his prayer. Well, notwithstanding he was condemned for a traytor, although the meaning thereof was for Religion.

Page 2010 This thing done, he was caryed to the new Inne, called the signe of the Crowne in Chelmsforde, by the beastly Bayliffes, which some of them were they that before dyd the best to take him, and being in the Inne, one Richard Potto the elder,* an Inholder, dwelling at the signe of the Cocke in the same towne, did muche trouble him in perswading him to cōfesse he had offended the Queene in his prayer which he was condemned for, and to aske her forgeuenes.

To whome he sayd hee had not offended her Grace in that behalfe. So in processe of time he was layd vppon a Sled with an Hurdle on it, and drawne to the place of execution being fast bounde, hauing in his hand a Psalme booke, of the whiche he read very deuoutly all the way w^t a loud voyce till he came there: and being on the Ladder, this foresayd Potto did much trouble him w^t the matter aforesayd, when he would haue vttered other thinges, tyll such time as the Sheriffe commaunded Potto to hold his peace and trouble him no more.

So he made his confession and stood very constant stil then he was turned of the ladder. With him were cast certayn theeues also, and y^e next day when they wer brought out to be executed with him, there happened a thing that did much set forth and declare the innocency and godlines of this man. For being ledde betweene two theeues to the place where he should suffer, when as hee exhorted bothe them & all other, to stand steadfastly to the truth, one of these turned the counsel he gaue, into a iesting matter, and made but a floute of it.

Why should we doubt to obtayne heauen, sayth he, for as much as this holy man shal go before vs, as captayne and leader vnto vs in the way. We shall flee thether strait as soone as he hath once made vs the entry.

In this, George Eagles and that other did greatly re'proue him, who on y^e other side gaue good heed to Georges exhortation, earnestly be wayling his owne wickednes, & calling to Christ for mercy. But the more that the first was bid to be still and to leaue off his scoffing, the more peruerse did he continue in hys foolishnes and his wicked be'hauour. At length he came to the Gallowes, where they shoulde bee hanged, but George was caryed to an other place there by to suffer. Betweene the two it was y^e godlyers chaunce to go the foremost, who beyng vpon y^e ladder, after he had exhorted the people to beware and take heede to thēselues, how they did transgresse y^e commaundementes of God, and then hadde committed his soule in to Gods handes, he ended his life after a godly and quyet maner.

The mockers turn commeth next, which would haue sayd likewise somewhat, but his tongue did so fumble and falter in his head,* that hee was not able to speake a word. Fayne would he haue vttered his mind, but he coulde not bring it out. Then did the vnder Sheriffe bid him say the Lordes prayer, which he coulde not say neyther, but stutteringly, as a man would saye, one word to day, and an other to morowe. Then one did begin to say it, and so bad him say after.

Such as were there and saw it, were very much astonyed: especially those that did beholde the iust punishment of God, agaynst him that had mocked so earnest a matter. George Eagles in the meane tyme, after hee had hanged a small time, hauing a great check with the halter, immediately one of the Bayliffes cut the halter a sunder, & hee fell to the ground being still aliue, although much amased w^t the checke he had of the ladder.

*The one William Swallow of Chelmsford a Bayliffe did draw him to the Sledde, y^t he was drawn thether on, and layd his necke thereon, and with a Cleauer, such as is occupied in many mens kitchins, and blunt, did hackle off his head, and sometime hit his necke, and sometye his chinne, and did fowly māgle him, and so opened him. Notwithstanding this blessed Martyr of Christe abode steadfast and constant in the very midst of his tormentes, till such time as this tormentor William Swallowe dyd plucke the hart out of his body. The bodye being deuided in foure partes, and his bowels burnt, was brought to y^e foresayd Swallowes dore, and there layd vppon the fishe stalles before his dore, till they had made ready a horse to cary his quarters, one to Colchester, and the reste to Harwich, Chelmsford and S. Rouses.

His head was set vpp at Chelmsforde on the Market Crosse on a long pole,* and there stode till the winde dyd blowe it downe, and lying certayne dayes in the streete tumbled about, one caused it to be buried in the Churchyarde in the night. Also a wonderfull work of God was it that he shewed on this wicked Bayliffe Swallow, who within short space after this was so punished, that all the heare went welnere of his head, hys eyes were as it were closed vp and could scant see, the nayles of his fingers and toes went cleane off. He was in such case of his bodye, as though he had bene a leper,* and now in his last age almost a very begger, and his wife which he a little after married God hath punished with the falling sickenes, or a disease like vnto that: which may be a warning or glasse for al mē and women to look in, that be enemies to Gods true seruantes.*

No lesse token of his marueilous iudgement did God shewe vppon the foresayde Richard Potto, whiche did so much trouble this George Eagles in the Inne, and at the place of execution, as is aboue specified. He liued til the be|ginning of Queene Elizabethes raygne, al which time he little ioyed, & on a time being in a great chaufe wyth two or three of his neighbors in his own house, feeling himself not well, he said to one of hys seruantes: Goe with me in to the chamber & when hee came there, he fell downe on a low bed, as heauy as it had bene lead, & laye there fomyng at the mouth, & coulde neuer speake after, neyther yet vnderstand what was sayd to him, as by al meanes was tried by his neighbors with signes to him made, but laye as senceles as it had bene a very dumb beast, and within three or foure dayes dyed. God graunt that this token sente of God, with many moe like, may bee a warning to vs euer hereafter, while we shall liue vnto the worlds end.

Besides this, God hathe wonderfully shewed hys worke. For at a time when they layd great wayte for thys George Eagles: so that it was thought that it was vnpos[sible but that he should be taken being so beset, his frends did put him in a Prentice apparill, that is to say, watche• hose, as their maner is, and an old cloke, and set him on a packe of woll, as though he had ridden to carry woll to y^e spinners, so he rode amongst the midst of his aduersaries and escaped them al for that time. An other troubler of the sayd George Eagles was also Iustice Browne, who enioyed not his cruelty many yeares after. &c.

Also when hee was at the Sessions at Chelmsforde, there was a rumor raysed that hee had accused diuers honest men that dyd keepe him in theyr houses, and was conuersaunt with him, and all to discredite him, which rumor was very false and vtterly vntrue. Witnes one Reynold, with diuers other dwelling in Chelmsford.

¶The martirdome and examination of Richard Crashfield of Wymoundham, condemned to death for the testimonye of Iesus Christ.

ABout this time suffered at Norwiche,* a godly man & a constant martyr of Christ, called Richard Crashfield whose examination before the Chauncellor, named Dunnynge, as he penned them with hys owne hand, so haue we faythfully recorded the same.

How say you Syrha, sayd the Chancellor,* to the ceremonyes of the Church?

Then sayd I: what ceremonies?

He sayd vnto me: Do you not beleue that all the ceremonies of the church were good and godly?

My aunswere was: I do beleue so many as are groüded in the testament of Iesus Christ.

Tush, sayd he,* do you beleeeue in the Sacrament of the aultar?

I sayd, I knew not what it was.

Then sayd he: Do you not beleeeue that Christe tooke bread, gaue thankes, brake it, and sayde: Take, eate, thys is my body.

Yes verily, sayd I, and euen as Christ did speake, so did he performe the worke.

Tush, sayd he, doe you not beleeeue this, that after the wordes be spoken by the prieste, there is the substaunce of Christes body, flesh, and bloud? How say you, doe you not beleue this? Speake man.

I doe beleue that Christes body was broken for me vppon the Crosse, and his bloud shed for my redemption, wherof the bread and the wyne is a perpetuall memory, y^e pledge of hys mercy, the ring and seale of hys promise, and a perpetuall memory for the faythfull, vnto the ende of the world. So then I was commaunded into prison vntil the next day.

¶An other examination of Richard Crashfield.

The daye following I was brought foorth. Then the Chauncellor sayd vnto me: Richard, how say you? Are you otherwise minded then you were yesterdaye? Hee rehearsing all the wordes that we hadde afore, sayde: are not Page 2011 these your wordes? Whereto I aunswered, Yes.

Then sayd he: how say you, can you not finde in your hart, when you come to the Church, to kneele downe before the Roode, and make your prayer?

*I aunswered and sayd, No: rehearsing the commaundement of God forbidding the same.

He sayd: haue you not read or heard, that God commaunded an Image to be made?

I answered, what Image?

He sayd, the brasen serpent.

I sayd, Yes, I haue heard it read, how that God dyd commaunde it to bee made, and lykewise to bee broken downe.

Then D. Briggs sayd: Wherfore did God command the Seraphins and Cherubins to be made?

I sayd, I could not tell: I would fayne learne.

Then sayd the Chauncellor: But how say you to this? can you finde in your hart to fall downe before the picture of Christ, which is the Roode?

I sayd, No, I feare the curse of God: for it is wrytten that God curseth the handes that make them, yea, and the handes that make the tooles wherewith they are carued.

Then D. Briggs raged, and sayd: List now what a peece of scripture he hath here gotten to serue hys purpose for he will not allow but where he listeth.*

Then sayd the Chauncellor: How say you to Confession to the priest? when were you confessed?

I sayd, I confesse my selfe dayly vnto the eternal God whom I most greuously offend.

Then the Chauncellor sayd: You do not then take con'fession to the priest to be good?

I aunswered, No, but rather wicked.

Then the Chauncellor sayd, How say you by yonder geare,* yonder singing, and yonder playing at y^e Organs? is it not good and godly?

I sayd, I could perceauue no godlines in it.

Then he sayde: why, is it not written in the Psalmes: that we should prayse God with hymmes and spirituall songes?

I sayd, Yes, spirituall songes must be had: but yonder is of the flesh: & of the spirite of error. For to you it is pleasaunt and glorious, but to y^e Lord it is bitter and odious.

Then sayd the Chauncellor: why, is it not written: My house is an house of prayer?*

I sayd, Yes. It is written also: That you haue made my house of prayer a denne of theeues.

With that, the Chancellor looked, and sayd: Haue we?

I aunswered and sayde, Christ sayde so. Then was I commaunded to ward.

The thursday next following, was D. Briggess sent to me for to examine me of my fayth.* And he sayd: Countreyman, my Lord Bishop (for loue he would haue you saued) hath sent me vnto you, because to morow is your day appointed: therfore my Lord hath thought it meete, that you should declare vnto me your fayth: For to morow my lord will not haue much adoe with you.

I aunswered & said: Hath my Lord sent you? It is not you to whom I am disposed to shew my minde.

Then he sayd to me: I pray you shew me your minde concerning the sacrament of the altar.

I aunswered: Are you ignoraunt what I haue sayd?

He said▪ No: for it was wel writtē. Except you beleue, sayth he, as the Church hath taught, you are damned both body and soule.

I answered and sayd: Iudge not, least yee bee iudged: condemne not, least ye be condemned.

And he sayd: Loe: we shall haue a traytour as well as an hereticke: for hee will disallowe the kinges iudgement.

I sayd, No: I do not disallow the kinges iudgement but yours I do disallowe. For I praye you tell me, howe came you by this iudgement?

He answered and sayd: By the Church: for the Church hath power to saue and condemne, for if you bee condemned by the church, he ye sure, that you be damned both body and soule.

*Then I aunswered: If you haue this power, I am sore deceiued. For I beleue that Christ shall be our Iudge. But now I perceiue you will do much for him, that you will not put him to the payne.

Then he sayd: stand nearer countryman: why stand ye so farre off?

I sayd, I am neare enough, and a little to neare.

Then he sayd: Did not Christ say: Is not my flesh meate and my bloud drinke in deede?

I sayd: To whome spake Christ those wordes?

He sayd: To his Disciples.

I (intending to rehearse the texte) sayde: whereat did Christes disciples murmure inwardly?

He sayd: No, they did not murmure, but they were the Infidels (saith he:) for the Disciples were satisfied w^t those wordes

I sayd: Did not Christ say thus, as hee taught at Capernaum? whereas his Disciples murmured, saying▪ This is an hard saying. Who can abide the hearyng of it? Iesus percei'uing their thoughtes: sayd: Doth this offend you?

Then he raged and sayd: Oh, thou wrastest the text for thine owne purpose. For the disciples did neuer murmure but the vnbeleuers, as thou art.*

I sayd: Yes, but I perceiue you know not the text.

Then sayd he with much raging, I will laye my head thereon, it is not so.

Then sayd I: I haue done with you.

Then sayd he: What shall I tell my Lord of you?

If you haue nothing to tell him, youre errand shalbe the sooner done, sayd I. And so we departed.

Then on Friday I was brought forth to receiue iudge'ment. Then the Chauncellor said vnto me:* Are you a new man, or are you not?

I aunswered and sayd: I trust I am a new man born of God.

God geue grace you be so, sayd he. So he rehearsed all my examination, & sayd: How say you, are not these your wordes?

I sayd, Yes: I will not deny them.

Then he sayd to Doctour Pore, standing by: I praye you talke with him. Then he alledging to me many fayre flattering wordes, sayd: Take, eate, this is my body. How say you to this? Do you not beleue that it is Christes bodye? speake.

I sayd: Haue you not my minde? Why do you trouble me?

He sayd: What did Christ geue you? was it breade, or was it not?

I sayd: Christ tooke bread and gaue thanks, and gaue it, and they tooke bread, and did eate. And Saincte Paule maketh it more manifest, where he sayth: So oft as yee shall eate of this bread, and drinke of this cuppe, yee shall shew forth the Lordes death vntill hee come.* Saincte Paule sayth not here, as you say: for he sayth: So ofte as you shall eate of thys bread. He doth not saye, body. So they intendinge that I should go no further in the text, sayd: Tush, you goe about the bush. Aunswere me to the first question. Let vs make an end of that.

What say you to the bread that Christe gaue? Let mee haue your mind in that.

I aunswered: I haue sayd my mind in it.

Then the Chancellor sayde: No, wee will haue youre mind in that.

I aunswered: I haue sayd my minde in it.

Then the Chancellor: No, we will haue your mynde more playnly: For wee intend not to haue many wordes with you.

I said: My faith is fully groundd and stablished, that Christ Iesus the Easter Lamb hath offered his blessed body a sacrifice to God the father, the price of my redemptiō. For by that onely sacrifice are all faythfull sanctified, & he is our onely aduocate and mediatour, and hee hath made perfect our redemption. This hath hee done alone, wythout any of your dayly oblations.

Then Doctour Brigges starte vp, and sayd: Truthe, your wordes are true in deede. You take well the litterall sense: but this you must vnderstand, that like as you sayd that Christ offered his body vpon the Crosse, whiche was a bloody sacrifice, and a visible sacrifice: so likewise wee dayly offer the selfe same body that was offered vpon the crosse, but not bloody and visible, but inuisible,* vnto God the father.

Doe you offer Christes body, I sayd? Why then chrystes sacrifice was not perfect. But Christ is true, when all men shalbe lyers.

Then he sayd: Thou shalt not feare him that hath power to kill the body: but thou shall feare hym that hath power to kill both body and soule.

I aunswered & sayd: It is not so But the text is thus: Thou shalt not feare them that haue power to kill the body, and then haue done what they can. But thou shalt feare him that hath power to kill both body and soule, and cast them both into hel fire, and not them.

He answered and sayd: Yes, for it is the Church.

I answered and sayd: Why, Christ sayth: I geue my lyfe for the redemption of the worlde. No manne taketh my lyfe from me (saythe hee) but I geue it of myne owne power, and so I haue power to take it agayne. Therefore Christ y^e sonne of god did offer his blessed body once for al. Page 2012 And if you wil presume to offer his body dayly, then your power is aboue Christes power. With that he chafed, and sayd: What, shal wee haue doctrine? Ye are not hereto appointed.

Then the Chauncellor stooode vp, and sayde: will yee turne from this wicked error, and be an example of goodnes, as you haue bene an example of euill (for by youre wicked reading you haue perswaded simple women to be in this error) and ye shall haue mercy.

And I said: it is of God that I do craue mercy, whom I haue offended, and not of you.

Then sayde the Chauncellor: When were you at youre parishe Churche? These two yeares and more you haue stand excommunicate. Wherefore you are condemned. And so I was condemned.

*Thus hast thou, gentle Reader, the examinations of this godly young man, set forth and written with hys own hand, who not long after his condēnation was by y^e Sheriffes and Officers there, brought to the stake, where with much pacience and constancie he entered his blessed Martirdome. At the burning of whiche Christian Martyr one Thomas Carman the same tyme was apprehended, by what occasion, it is not yet to vs fully certayne, whether it was for words, or for praying with him, or for pled'ging him at his burning, concerning which Thom. Carman, his story hereafter followeth in his order and place, further to be seene.

¶One Fryer and a certayne godly woman burned at Rochester, who was the sister of George Eagles.

ABout the same time and month, one named Fryer, w^t a woman accompanying him, who was the sister of George Eagles in the like cause of righteousness, suffered the like martyrdome by the vnrighteous papistes, whose tyranny the Lord of his mercy abate & cut shorte, turning that wicked generation, if it be his will, to a better minde.

The apprehension and death of Maistres Ioyce Lewes, the wife to Thomas Lewes, of Manceter, most constantly suffering for Gods word at Lichfield.

*MAistresse Ioyce Lewes, a gentlewoman borne, was delicately brought vp in the pleasures of y^e world hauing delight in gay apparell & such like foolishnes, with y^e which follyes, the most part of the Gentlefolkes of England were then and are yet infected, who was married first to one called Appelby, afterwarde to Thomas Lewes of Manceter. In the beginninge of Queene Maryes tyme she went to the Church and heard masse as others did, but when she heard of the burning of that moste godly & learned M. Laurence Saunders, who suffered in Couentry, she began to take more heede to the matter, and enquired earnestly of such as she knew feared God, y^e cause of hys death: and when she perceaued it was because hee refused to receaue the Masse, she began to be troubled in consciēce & waxed very vnquiet, & because her house was euen hard by M. Iohn. Glouers house, of whome mention was made before. pag. 1614. and 1620. a man of blessed memory and of a singular example of his vnfayned godlines and manifold troubles whiche he suffered for the Gospell) shee did oftentimes resort to him, and desired him to tel her the faultes that were in the Masse, and other thinges that at that time were vrged as necessary to saluation.

Now he perceiuing both her vnquiet minde, & also the desire she had to know the truth, dyd most dilligently instruct her in y^e wayes of the Lord, approuing vnto her out of Gods holy word, that the Masse, with all other papisticall inuentions, was odious in Gods sight: and besides this, reprobued her, for that she delighted in the vanities of this world so much. By the which godly counsell geuē by him, it happened that she began to waxe weery of y^e world throughly sorrowfull for her sinnes, being inflamed with the loue of God, desirous to serue him accordyng to hys word, purposing also to flee from those thinges the whiche did displease the Lord her God. And because she had learned y^e masse to be euil & abhominable, she began to hate it. And when at a time she was compelled by the furiousnes of her husband to come to the Church, at the same tyme when the holy water was cast, shee turned her backe towards it, and shewed her selfe to be displeased with their blasphemous holy water, iniurious to the bloud of christ: Whereupon she was accused before the Bishop, for the despising of theyr sacramentals.

Immediately a Citation was sent for her to her husbandes house, to appeare before the bishop incontinently. The Sumner y^t brought the Citation deliuered it to her husband, who looking vpō it, & perceauing what it was, was moued w^t anger, willing the sumner to take the Cita^tion w^t him agayne (or els he woulde make him to eate it. The Sumner refused to take it agayne, for he thought no man durst haue bene so bold to trouble him. But in y^e ende Lewes compelled the sayd sumner to eate the Citation in^deed, by setting a daggar to his hart: & when hee had eaten it, he caused him to drinke to it, & so sent him away. But im^mediately after, the sayd Lewes with his wife were commaunded to appeare before the B. where the sayd Lewes by & by submitted himself, & desired the Bish. to be good to him, excusing himselfe after y^e best fashion he could. Whereupon the B. was content to receiue his submission, w^t condition that his wife shoulde submit her selfe also. But shee stoutly told the byshop, that by refusing of the holy water she had neither offended God nor any part of hys lawes. At the which words the bish. being greeuously offended, & because she was a Gentlewomā, he would not take her at y^e worst (as he sayd) he gaue her one monthes respite binding her husband in an hundred pound to bring her again vnto him at y^e monthes end, and so they were both let go.

When they came to their owne house, the sayde Maystresse Ioyce Lewes gaue her selfe to most dilligent praier and inuocating of the name of God,* resorting continually to the aboue named man of God, Maister Iohn Glouer who did most dilligently instruct her with Gods worde, willing her in any wise not to meddle with that matter in respect of vayne glory, or to get her selfe a name, shewyng her the great daungers shee was like to cast her selfe in, if shee shoulde meddle in Gods matters otherwyse then Christ doth teach.

When the moneth was nowe almost expired, and the time at hand that shee shoulde be brought before the Bishop, her husband being aduertised by the sayde Mayster Iohn Glouer and others, not to carry her to the Byshop, but to seeke some wayes to saue her, or if the worst should come, to be content to forfeit so much money, rather then to cast his own wife into y^e fire: He answered, hee woulde not loose or forfeit anye thinge for her sake: and so lyke a murtherer of his owne wife, caryed her to the bloudye B. where she was examined, and found more stout then shee was before death was threatned. And to begin withal,* she was sent to such a stincking prison, that a certayn mayde which was appoynted to keep her companye, did sownd in the same prison.

Being thus kept in prison, and oftentimes examined and euer founde stoute, at the length shee was brought in iudgement, & pronounced an hereticke, worthy to be burned. When the Bishop reasoned with her, why she would not come to the masse, and receiue the sacramentes and sacramentals of holy Church, she answered: Because I find not these thinges in Gods worde, which you so vrge and magnifie, as thinges moste needefull for mens saluation. If these thinges were in the same word of God commended: I would with all my hart receiue, esteeme, and beleue them. The Bishoppe aunswered: if thou wilt beleue no more then is in the scripture, concerning matters of religion: thou art in a damnable case. At the whiche wordes she was wonderfully amased, and being moued by y^e spirite of God, tolde the Bishop, that hys wordes were vngodly and wicked.

After her condemnation, she cōtinued a whole twelue moneth in prison, because she was committed to the Sheriffe that was of late chosen, who coulde not be compelled to put her to death in his tyme, as he affirmed: for y^e which thing after her death, he was sore troubled and in daunger of his life. All that time shee was in prison,* her behaiour was such both in wordes and deedes, that al they that had any sparke of godlines or ciuile honesty, did greatly lamēt her case, that she should be put to death.

Now when the tyme did drawe neare the which God had appoynted for her deliuerance, the writte De comburendo, (as they terme it) beyng brought down from London, she desired certaine of her frends to come to her, with whom when they came, shee consulted how shee might be haue her self, that her death might be more glorious to the name of God, cōfortable to his people, and also most discomfortable vnto the enemies of God. As for death, sayd shee, I do not greatly passe: when I behold the amyable countenance of Christ my deare Sauour, y^e vglesome face of death doth not greatly trouble me. In y^e which time also shee reasoned most comfortably out of Gods worde, of Gods election and reprobation.

In the euenyng, before y^e daye of her suffering, two of the priests of the close of Lichfield, came to the vnder Sheriffes house where shee laye, and sent worde to her by the Page 2013 Sheriffe,* that they were come to heare her confession: for they would be sory shee shoulde dye without it. She sente them word agayne, shee had made her confession to Christ her sauour, at whose hands she was sure to haue forgeuenes of her sinnes.* As concerning the cause for the whiche she should dye, she had no cause to confesse that, but rather geue vnto God most humble prayse that he did make her worthy to suffer deathe for his worde: And as concerning that absolution that they were able to geue vnto her, being authorised by y^e pope, she did defie the same, euen from the bottome of her hart. The which thing when the priests heard, they said to the Sheriffe: Well, to morow her stoutnes will be proued and tryed. For although perhaps shee hath now some friendes that whisper her in her eares, to morow will we see who dare be so hardy as to come neare her: and so they went theyr wayes with anger, that theyr confession and absolution was nought set by.

All that night she was wonderfully chearefull & mery with a certaine grauitie, in so much that the maiestie of the spirit of God did manifestly appeare in her, who did expel the feare of deathe out of her heart, spending the tyme in prayer, reading, & talking with them that were purposely come vnto her for to comfort her with the word of God.

About three of the clocke in the morning, Satan (who neuer sleepeth especially when death is at hand) began to stirre himselfe busily,* shooting at her that fierye darte the whiche he is wont to doe agaynst all that are at defiaunce with him, questioning with her, how shee coulde tell that she was chosen to eternal life, and that Christ dyed for her. I graunt that he dyed, but that he dyed for thee howe canst thou tell? with this suggestion when shee was troubled, they that were about her, did counsell her to follow the ex'ample of Paule, Galathians, 2. where he sayth: Which hath loued me, and geuen hymselfe for me. Also, that her vocation and calling to the knowledge of Gods word, was a manifest token of Gods loue towards her, especially that same holy spirite of God working in her hart that loue and desire towards God to please him, and to bee iustified by him through Christ &c. By these and like perswasions & especially by the comfortable promises of Christ,* brought out of the scripture, Satan was put to flight, and she comforted in Christ.

About eight of the clocke, maister Sheriffe came to her into her chamber, saying these wordes: Maistres Lewes, I am come to bring you tidings of the Queenes pleasure the whiche is, that you shall liue no longer but one houre in this world: therefore prepare your selfe therunto: 〈◇〉 stādeth you in hand. At which wordes being so grosely vttered and so sodaynly by such an officer as he was, she was somewhat abashed. Wherefore one of her friendes and acquayntaunce standing by, sayde these words: Maistresse Lewes, you haue great cause to prayse GOD, who wyll vouchsafe so speedily to take you out of this worlde, and make you worthy to be a witnesse to his truth, & to beare record vnto Christ that he is the onely sauour.

After the which words spoken thus, she sayde: maister Sheriffe, your message is welcome to me, and I thanke my God that he will make me worthy to aduenture my life in his quarrell. And thus maister Sheriffe departed: and within the space of one houre, he came agayn, cum gladiis & fustibus: and when he came vp into the chamber, one of her friendes desired him to geue him leaue to goe with her to the stake, & to comfort her, the whiche the Sheriffe graunted at that time, but afterwarde he was sore troubled for the same when she was dead.

Nowe when shee was brought throughe the towne with a number of bill menne,* a great multitude of people being present, she being led by two of her frends (whiche were M. Michael Reniger and M. Augustine Bernher) she was brought to the place of execution: and because the place was farre off, and the throng of the people great, and she not acquaynted with the fresh ayre (being so long in prison) one of her frendes sent a messenger to the Sheriffes house for some drinke: and after she had prayed three seuerall times, in the whiche prayer she desired God most instantly to abolish the idolatrous Masse, and to delyuer this realme from Papistry (at the end of the whiche prayers the most parte of the people cryed Amen, yea, euen the Sheriffe that stode harde by her,* readye to cast her in the fire for not allowing the Masse, at this her prayers sayde with the rest of the people, Amen) when she had thus pray'ed, she tooke the cup into her handes saying: I drynke to all them that vnfaynedly loue the Gospell of Iesus Christ and wish for the abolishment of Papistry. When she had dronken,* they that were her frends dranke also.

After that a great number, specially the women of the towne dyd drynke wyth her: which afterward were put to open penaunce in the Churche by the cruel Papistes, for drinking with her.

When she was tyed to the stake with the chayne, shee shewed such a cheerefulnes, that it passed mans reason, be^yng so well coloured in her face, and being so patient, that the most part of them that had honest hartes did lament, and euen with teares bewayle the tyranny of y^e Papistes.*
When the fire was sette vppon her, she neither struggled nor sturred, but onely lifted vp her handes towards heauen, being dead very speedely: for the vnder Sheriffes at the request of her friendes had prouided such stuffe, by the whiche shee was sodenly dispatched out of this miserable worlde.

This amongst other thinges may not bee forgotten, that the Papistes had appoynted some to rayle vppon her openly, and to reuile her, both as shee went to the place of Execution, and also when she came at the stake. Amongst others there was an olde Prieste, whiche hadde a payre of writing tables to note bothe the names of the women that dranke of her cuppe (as before you heard) and also described her friendes by their apparell: for presentlye hee could not learne their names, and afterwarde enquired for their names, and so immediately after processe was sente out for them, bothe to Couentrye and other places: but God, whose prouidence sleepeeth not, did defende them from the handes of these cruell tyrauntes. Unto y^e whiche God, with the sonne▪ and the holy Ghost bee honour and glory for euer, Amen.

The Martyrdome of Rafe Allerton, Iames Austo, Margery Awstoo, and Richard Roth burned at Islington.

IN searching out the certayne number of the faythfull Martyrs of God y^t suffered within the tyme & raygne of Queene Mary:* I finde that about the 17. day of September, wer burned at Islington, nigh vnto London, these 4. constant professours of christ, Rafe Allerton, Iames Awstoo, Margery Austoo, his wife, and Richard Roth. Amongst the which: it first appeareth that this Rafe Allerton was more then a yeare before his condemnation, apprehended and brought before the Lorde Darcy of Chich. and was there accused, aswell for that he woulde not consent and come vnto the idolatrye and superstition whiche then was vsed, as also that he had by preaching entised oothers to do the like.

Being then hereupon examined, he confessed that hee comming into hys parishe Churche of Bentley, and seing the people sitting there, either gasing about, or els talking together, exhorted them that they would fall vnto prayer and meditation of Gods most holy worde, and not •it styll idly. Whereunto they willingly consented. Then after prayer ended, he read vnto them a chapter of the New testament, and so departed.

In which exercise he continued vntill Candlemas, & then being enformed that he might not so doe by the lawe (for that he was no priest or minister) he lefte of and kepte himselfe close in his house vntill Easter then nexte after.* At what time, certayne sworne men for the inquiry of such matters, came vnto hys house and attached him for reading in the Parish of Welley.

But when they vnderstood that he had red but once, & that it was of obedience (whereunto hee earnestly moued the people) they let hym for that tyme depart. Notwithstanding for feare of their cruelty hee was not longe after constrayned to forsake his owne house, and keepe himselfe in woodes, barnes, and other solitary places, vntill y^e time of his apprehension.

After this examination, the Lord Darcy sent him vp to the Counsell: but they (not minding to trouble them selues with him) sent him vnto Boner. Who by threateninges and other subtyll meanes, so abused the simple and fearfull hart of thys man (as yet not thoroughly stayed vpon the ayd and helpe of God) that within shorte tyme hee won him vnto his most wicked will, and made him opely at Paules crosse to reuoke and recante his former profession, and thereupon set him at libertie of body. Whiche yet brought such a bondage and terrour of soule and conscience, and so cast him downe, that except the Lord (whose mercies are immeasurable) had supported and lifted hym vp agayne, he had perished for euer.

But the Lord, who neuer suffereth his elect Children vtterly to fall, castinge his pittifull eyes vppon this loste sheepe, with his mercifull and fatherly chastisement, dyd (w^t Peter) rayse hym vp agayne, geuing vnto him not only harty and vnfayned repentaunce, but also a moste constant boldnes to professe agayne (euen vnto the death) hys Page 2014 most holy name and glorious gospel. Wherefore at y^e procurement of one Thomas Tie priest: sometime an earnest professor of Christ, but now a fierce persecutour of y^e same, (as appeareth more at large before in the history of William Munt and his wife, * page 1979) he was againe apprehended, and sent vp againe vnto Boner, before whome he was the 8. day of Aprill, and sondry other times else examined. The report of which examination, wrytten by his owne hand with bloud for lacke of other incke, heereafter followeth.

The examination of Rafe Allerton at his seconde apprehension, appearing before the Bishop of London at Fulham, the 8. day of Aprill. An. 1557. wrytten by him selfe, wyth his owne bloud.

Boner.

Ah syrrha, howe chaunceth it that you are come hether againe on this fashion? * I dare say thou art accused wrongfully.

Rafe.

Yea my Lord, so I am. For if I were guilty of such things as I am accused off, then I would be very sorie.

Boner.

By saint Marie that is no• wel done. But let me heare: Art thou an honest man? for if I can proue no heresie by thee, then shall thine accusers doe thee no harme at all. Goe too, lette me heare thee: For I did not beleeeue the tale to be true.

Rafe.

My Lorde, who doeth accuse me? I pray you let me know, and what is mine accusation, that I may answere thereunto.

Boner.

Ah, wilt thou so? Before God, if thou hast not dissembled, then thou needest not to be afraide, nor ashamed to aunswer for thy selfe. But tell me in faith, hast thou not dissembled.

Rafe.

If I cannot haue mine accusers to accuse me before you, my conscience doth constrain me to accuse my self before you: For I confesse that I haue grievously offended God in my dissimulatiō at my last being before your lordship, for the which I am right sorrie, as God knoweth.

Boner.

Wherein I pray thee, diddest thou dissemble, when thou wast before me?

Rafe.

Forsooth my Lord, if your lordsh. remēber, I did set my hand vnto a certain writing, the contents wherof (as I remember) were, y^t I did beleue in all things as the catholike church teacheth. &c. In y^e which I did not disclose my minde, but shamefully dissembled, because I made no difference betwene the true church and the vntrue church.

Bon.

Nay, but I pray thee let me heare more of this gear. For I fear me y^u wilt smel of an hereticke anone. Which is the true church, as thou saiest? Dost thou not call the heretikes church y^e true church, or y^e catholike church of Christ? Now which of these 2. are the true church, saiest thou? Go too: for in faith I will know of thee ere I leaue thee.

Rafe.

As concerning the church of heretikes, I vtterly abhorre y^e same, as detestable and abominable before God, with all their enormities and heresies: and the church catholicke is it that I onely embrace, whose doctrine is sincere, pure and true.

Boner.

By s. Augustine, but that is wel said of thee. For by God almighty, if thou haddest allowed the church of heretikes, I would haue burned thee with fire for thy labour.

Morton.

Then said one Morton a Priest: My Lorde, you know not yet what church it is that he calleth catholicke. I warrant you he meaneth naughtely enough.

Boner.

Thinke you so? Now by our blessed Lady, if it be so, he might haue deceiued me. How say you syrrha, which is the catholicke church.

Rafe.

Euen that which hath receiued the wholesome sound, spoken of Esay, Daudid, Malachie, and Paule, with many other moe. The which sounde, as it is wrytten, hath gone throughout all the earthe in euery place, & vnto the endes of the worlde.

Boner.

Yea, thou sayest true before God. For this is the sound that hath gone throughout all Christendom, and he that beleeueth not the sound of the holy church, as S. Cyprian saith, doth erre. For he saieth, that whosoever is out of the Church, is like vnto them that were out of Noes ship when the flud came vpon al the whole world: so that the Arke of Noe is likened vnto the church: and therefore thou hast wel said in thy confession. For the church is not alone in Germanie, nor was here in England in the time of the late schismes, as the heretikes doe affirme. For if the church should be there alone, then were Christe a lier. For he promised that the holy Ghost should come to vs, leade vs into all truth, yea, and remaine with vs vnto the ende of the world. So now if we wil take Christ for a true saye, then must we needes affirme, that the waye whyche is taught in Fraunce, Spaine, Italie, Flanders, Denmark, Scotland, and all Christendome ouer, must needes be the true catholicke church.

Rafe.

My Lord, if you remember, I spake of al the world, as it is wrytten, and not of all Christendome only, as me thinke your Lordship taketh it, the whiche kinde of speaking you doe not finde in al the Bible. For sure I am that the Gospel hath bene both preached and persecuted in all lands: First in Iewrie by the Scribes and Phariseis, and since that time by Nero, Dioclesian and such like, & nowe here in these our daies by, your Lordship knoweth whō.* For truth it is that the church which you call Catholicke, is none otherwise Catholike then was figured in Caine, obserued of Ieroboam, Ahab, Iezabell, Nabuchadonozor, Antiochus, Herode, wyth innumerable more of the like: and as both Daniell and Esdras maketh mention of these last daies by a plaine prophecie, and now fulfilled as appeareth, and affirmed by our Sauour Christe, and hys Apostles, saying: There shall come greuous wolues to deuour the flocke.

Boner.

Nowe, by the blessed Sacrament of the Aultar, M. Morton, he is the rankest hereticke that euer came before me. How say you? haue you heard the like.

Morton.

I thought what he was my Lord, at the first, I.

Boner.

Now by all Halowes thou shalt be brent with •ire for thy lying, thou horeson verlette and prickelouse th••. Dost thou finde a prophecie in Dan. of vs: nay you knaue it is of you that he speaketh off, and of your false preten••d holinesse. Go too, lette me heare what is the saying of Esdras, and take heede ye make not a lie, I aduise you.

Rafe.

The saying of Esdras is this: the heat of a great multitude is kindled ouer you,*and they shall take away certaine of you, and feede the Idols with you, and hee that consenteth vnto them, shall be had in derision, laughed to scorne, and troden vnder foote: yea they shall be like mad men, for they shall spare no man: they shall spoile and wast such as feare the Lord &c.

Boner.

And haue you taken thys thinge to make youre market good? Ah syrrha, wilt thou so? by my Faith a 〈◇〉 instruction, and a necessary thing to be taught among the people. By my trouth I thinke there be no more of thys opinion. I pray thee tell me? Is there any that vnderstādeth this scripture on this fashion? Before God, I thinke there be none in all England, but thou.

Rafe.

Yes my Lord, there are in England three religions.*

Boner.

Saist thou so? which be those three?

Rafe.

The first is that whiche you holde: the seconde is cleane contrary to the same: and the thirde is an Neuter, being indifferent, that is to say, obseruing all things that are commaunded, outwardly, as though he were of your part, his heart being set wholly against the same.

Boner.

And of these three which art thou? for nowe thou must needes be of one of them.

Rafe.

Yea my Lord, I am of one of them: and that which I am of, is euen that which is contrary to that which you teach to be beleueed vnder paine of death.

Boner.

Ah syr, you were here with me at Fulham, and had good cheare, yea and mony in your purse when you went away, and by my faith I had a fauour vnto thee, but now I see thou wilt be a naughtie knaue. Why, wilt thou take vpon thee to read the Scripture, and canst not vnderstād neuer a woorde? For thou hast brought a text of scripture, the which maketh cleane against thee. For Esdras speaketh of y^e multitude of you heretickes, declaring your hate against the catholicke Church, making the simple or idle people that beleue that all is idolatrie that we do, and so intise them away vntill you haue ouercome them.

Rafe.

Nay not so my Lord. For he maketh it more plaine, and sayth on this wise: They shall take away their goodes,* and put them oute of their houses, and then shall it be knowen who are my chosen (sayth the Lord) for they shal be tried, as the siluer or gold is in the fire. And we see it so come to passe, euen as he hath sayd. For who is not now driuen from house & home, yea and his goodes taken vp for other menne that neuer swette for them, if hee doe not obserue as you command and set foorth? Or els, if he be taken, then must he either deny the truth, as I did, in dissembling, or els he shal be sure to be tried, as Esdras sayeth, euen as the golde is tried in the fire. Whereby all the worlde may knowe that you are the bloody church, figured in Caine the tyraunte, neither yet are ye able to auoide it.

Morton.

I promise you my Lorde, I like hym better nowe then euer I did, when he was heere before you the other time. For then hee did but dissemble, as I perceiued well inough: but nowe me thinke he speaketh plainly.

Bon

Mary syr, as you say in dede, he is plaine. For he is a plaine heretike and shalbe burned. Haue y^e knaue away. Let him be caried to little ease at London, vntil I come.

Rafe.

And so was I caried to London vnto Little case, and there remained that night, and on the next morrowe I appeared before him againe, the Deane of Paules and Page 2015 the Chauncellour of London being present.* Then were brought foorth certaine wrytings that I had set my hand vnto.

Boner.

Come on your wayes, syrha. Is not thys youre hand,* and this, and this?

Rafe.

Yea, they are my hande all of them: I confesse the same, neither yet will I denie any thing that I haue sette my hand vnto. But if I haue sette my hand to anye thing that is not lawfull, therefore am I sorie. Neuerthelesse, my hand I will not deny to be my doing.

Boner.

Well sayde. Nowe yee must tell mee: Were you neuer at the Church since you went from mee, at Masse and Mattens? &c.

Rafe.

No my Lorde, not at Masse, Mattens, nor none other straunge woorshipping of God.

Boner.

Yea, sayest thou so? Wast thou neither at thyne owne parish church, nor at none other? And doest thou also say, that it is a straunge worshipping? Why I praye thee, wilt thou not beleue the Scripture to be true?

Rafe.

Yes my Lorde, I beleue the Scripture to be true, and in the defence of the same I entend to geue my life, rather then I will deny any part thereof, God willing.

Deane.

My Lorde, this fellow will be an honest man, I heare by him. He will not stand in his opinion: for he sheweth himselfe gentle and pacient in his talke.

Boner.

Oh, he is a glorious knaue. His painted termes shall no more deceiue me. Ah horeson Prickelouse, doeth not Christ say: This is my body? And howe darest thou deny these woordes, for to say as I haue a wryting to shew, and thine owne hand at the same? Lette me see, wilt thou deny this? Is not this thine owne hande?

Rafe.

Yes my Lord, it is mine owne hand, neyther am I ashamed thereof, because my confession therein is agreeable to Gods woorde. And where as you doe laye vnto my charge that I shoulde denye the woordes of our Sauour Iesus Christ: Oh good Lord, from whence commeth this rash, hastie, and vntrue iudgement? Forsooth not from the spirite of truthe: for he leadeth men into all truthe, and is not the father of liers. Whereupon should your Lordship gather or say of me so diffamously? Wherefore I beseeche you, if I denie the Scriptures Canonically, or anye parte thereof, then let me die.

Tie the Priest.

*My Lord, he is a very sedicious fellow, and perswadeth other men to doe as he himselfe doth, contrary to the order appoynted by the Queenes highnesse and the Clergie of this Realme. For a great sorte of the parish will be gathered one day to one place, and an other day to an other place to heare him: so that very fewe commeth to the Church to heare diuine seruice: and this was not onely before that he was taken and brought vnto the Councell, but also since his retourne home againe, he hath done much harme. For where both men and women were honestly disposed before, by Saint Anne, now are they as ill as he almoste. And furthermore, hee was not ashamed to withstande me before all the Parish, saying that we were of the malignant church of Antichrist, and not of the true Church of Christ, alledging a great manye of Scriptures to serue for his purpose, saying: Good people, take heede, and beware of these bloudthirsty dogges. &c. And then I commaunded the Constable to apprehend hym, and so he did. Neuerthelesse after thys apprehension, the Constable let him goe about his businesse all the next day, so that wythout putting in of suerties, he lette him go into Suffolke and other places, for no goodnesse, I warrante you my Lorde: It were almes to teache suche Officers theyr duetie, howe they should let such rebels go at their owne libertie, after that they be apprehended and taken, but to keepe them fast in the stockes vntill they bring them before a Iustice.

Rafe.

As I sayde before, so say I nowe againe: thou arte not of the Church of Christe, and that will I prooue, if I may be suffered. And where you said, that you commaunded the Constable to apprehende mee, you did so in deede contrary to the Lawes of this Realme, * hauing neither to lay vnto my charge, Treason, Fellonie, nor murther: no neither had you Precept, Processe, nor Warrante to serue on me, and therefore I say, without a law was I apprehended. And whereas you seeke to trouble the Constable, because he kept mee not in the stockes three dayes & three nightes, it doth shewe a parte what you are. And my going into Suffolke was not for any euill, but only to buye halfe a bushell of corne for bread, for my poore wife & children, knowing that I had no longer time to tarrye wyth them. But if I had runne away, then you woulde surely haue laid somewhat to his charge.

Boner.

Goe to, thou art a Marchant in deede. Ah syrrha, before God thou shalt be burnt with fire. Thou knowest Richard Roth, doest thou not? Is hee of the same minde that thou art off or no? canst thou tell.

Rafe.

He is of age to answer: let him speake for himselfe: for I heare say that he is in your house.

Boner.

Loe what a knaue heere is. Goe Clunie, fetch me Roth hither. By my trouth he is a false knaue: * but yet thou art woorse then he. Ah Syrrha, did not you sette your hand to a wryting, the tenoure whereof was, that if thou shoulde any time say or doe heretically, then it shoulde be lawfull for mee to take thee as a Relaps, and to proceede in sentence against thee?

Rafe.

Yea, that is so. But heere is to be asked whether it be sufficient, that my hād or name wryting be able to geue authoritie to you or to any other to kill mee. For if I, by wryting canne doe so muche, then must my authoritye be greater then yours. Neuerthelesse, I haue neither sayde nor done heretically, but like a true Christian man haue I behaued my selfe. And so I was committed into prison againe, and the 24. day of the same month, I was brought before the Bishop, the Lord North, D. Story and others, and after a long talke in Latine amongst themselues (vnto the which I gaue no answer, because they spake not to mee, although they spake of me) at the last the Byshoppe sayde.

Boner.

How say you syrrha? tell me briefly at one woord, wilt thou be contented to goe to Fulham with me, & there to kneele thee downe at masse, shewing thy self outwardly as though thou didst it with a good wil? Go to, speake.

Rafe.

I will not say so.

Boner.

Away with him, away with him.

The 2. day of May I was brought before the byshop, and three noble men of the counsell,* whose names I doe not remember.

Boner.

Lo my Lordes, the same is this fellowe that was sent vnto me from the Counsell, and did submit himselfe, so that I had halfe a hope of him: but by S. Anne I was alwayes in doubt of him. Neuerthelesse he was with me, and fared well, and when I deliuered him, I gaue hym money in his purse. How sayest thou? was it not so, as I tell my Lordes heere?

Rafe.

In deede my Lorde, I hadde meate and drynke enough: but I neuer came in bed all the while. And at my departing you gaue mee xij.d. howe be it I neuer asked none, nor would haue done.

A Lorde.

Be good to him my Lorde. Hee will be an honest man.

Boner.

Before God, howe should I trust him? He hathe once deceiued me already. But ye shall heare what he wil say to the blessed Sacrament of the altare. Howe say you sirha? after the woordes of consecration be spoken by the priest, there remaineth no bread, but the very bodye of our sauour Iesus Christ, God and man, and none other substance, vnder the forme of bread?

Rafe.

Where finde you that, my Lord, wrytten?

Boner.

Lo Syr. Why? Doeth not Christ saye: This is my body? Howe sayest thou? Wilt thou denye these woordes of our Sauour Christ? Or els, was he a dissembler, speaking one thing, and meaning an other? Goe to, nowe I haue taken you.

Rafe.

Yea my Lord, you haue taken me in dede, and will kepe me vntill you kill me. How be it my Lord,* I maruel why you leaue out the beginning of the institution of the supper of our Lord? For Christ sayde: Take yee, and eate yee, this is my bodye. And if it will please you to ioyn the former woordes to the latter, then shall I make you an aunswer. For sure I am that Christe was no dissembler, neyther did he say one thing, and meane an other.

Boner.

Why? Then must thou needes saye, that it is hys body: for he sayeth it him selfe, and thou confessest that he will not lie.

Rafe.

No my Lorde: he is true, and all menne are lyers. Notwithstanding, I vtterly refuse to take the woordes of our Sauour, so fantastically as you teach vs to take them: for then should we conspire with certaine heretickes, called the Nestorians: for they denie that Christ hadde a true naturall body, and so me thinke you doe, my Lord. If you wil affirm his body to be there, as you say he is, then must you needes also affirme, that it is a fantastical bodye, and therefore looke to it for Gods sake, and let these wordes go before: Take yee, and eate ye, without which wordes the rest are sufficient: but when the worthy receiuers do take and eat, euen then is fulfilled the words of our Sauour, vnto him, or euery of them, that so receiueth.

Boner.

Ah,* I see well thou canste not vnderstand these woordes: I will shewe thee a Parable. If I should set a peece of beefe before thee, and say, eate: is it no beefe? And then take part of it away, & send it to my cooke, and he shal change the fashion thereof, and make it looke like breade. What wouldest thou saye that it were no Beefe, because Page 2016 it hath not the fashion of beefe?

Rafe.

Let me vnderstand a little further my Lorde: shall the Cooke adde nothing therunto, nor take nothing there from?

Boner.

What is that to the matter, whether he do or no, so long as the shape is changed into an other likenesse?

Rafe.

Ah, will you so my Lord? your Sophistrie will not serue: the truth wil haue the victorie, neuerthelesse, as Esay sayth: * He that restraineth himselfe from euill, must be spoyled. * And Amos hath suche like woordes also. For the wise must be faine to holde their peace: so wicked a time it is, sayth he. Neuertheles he that can speake the truth, and will not, shall geue a strait accounts for the same.

A Doctor.

By my Lords leaue, here me thinks thou speakest like a foole. Wilt thou be a iudge of the scripture. Nay thou must stand to learne, and not to teache: for the whole congregation hath determined the matter long agoe.

A priest

No by your leaue, we haue a Church, and not a cong•egation. You mistake that worde, master Doctor.

Rafe.

Then sayd I to my fellowe prisoners standing by: My brethren, doe yee not heare howe these men helpe one an other? Let vs doe so also. But we neuer came all in together after that time, but seuerallye one after an other. Then was I caried away for that time. The xix. daye of May I was brought before the Bishop of Rochester, and Chichester with others.

B Rochest.

Were you a companion of George Eagles, otherwise called Trudgeouer? My Lord of London telleth me that you were his fellow companion.

Rafe.

I know him very well, my Lord.

Rochest.

By my faith I had him once, and then hee was as dronke as an Ape, for he stonke so of drinke, y^t I coulde not abide him, and so sent him away.

Rafe.

My Lorde, I dare saye you tooke your markes amisse. It was either your selfe or some of your own companie: for he did neither drinke Wine, Ale, nor Beere in a quarter of a yeare before that time, and therefore it was not he forsooth.

The rest of mine examinations you shal haue when I am condemned, if I can haue any time after my comming into Newgate, the which I trust shall touch the matter a great deale more plainly: for y^e pithie matters are yet vnwrytten. Thus fare you well good frendes all. Yea I say, farewell for euer in this present world. Greete yee one an other, and be ioyfull in the Lord. Salute y^e good widowes among you, with all the rest of the congregation in Barfold, & Dedham, and Colchester.

This promise of hys, being either not perfourmed, for y^t he might not thereto be permitted, or els if he did wryte the same not comming to my hands, I am faine in the rest of his examinations to follow the only report of the Register: who witnesseth that the 15. day of May. An. 1557. in the Byshops palace at London, he was examined vppon certaine interrogatories, the contents wherof be these.

First, that he was of the parish of Muchbentley, and so of the Diocesse of London.*

Secondly, that the 10. daye of Ianuarie then last past, M. Iohn Morant preaching at Paules, the said Rafe Allerton did there openly submit himselfe vnto the Church of Rome, with the rites and Ceremonies thereof.

Thirdly, that he did consent and subscribe aswell vnto the same submission, as also to one other bil, in y^e which he graunted, that if he should at any time turn againe vnto his former opinions, it shoulde be then lawfull for the Bishop immediately to denounce and adiudge hym as an hereticke.

Fourthly, that he had subscribed to a bill, wherein hee affirmed, that in the sacrament, after the woordes of consecration be spok•n by the Priest, there remaineth still materiall bread and materiall wine: and that he beleueth that the bread is the breade of thankesgeuing, and the memoriall of Christes death: and that when he receiueth it, he receiueth the body of Christ spiritually in his soule, but materiall bread in substaunce.

Fiftly, that he had openly affirmed, and also aduisedly spoken that which is contained in the sayde former fourth article last before specified.

Sixthly, that hee hadde spoken against the Bishop of Rome, wyth the Church and Sea of the same, and also against the seuen Sacraments and other Ceremonies and ordinaunces of the same Church, vsed then wythin thys Realme.

Seuenthly, that hee had allowed and commended the opinions and faith of M. Cranmer, Ridley, Latimer, and others of late burned within this Realme, and beleueed that theyr opinions were good and godly.

Eightly, that he hadde diuers times affirmed that the religion vsed within this realme at the time of his apprehension, was neither good nor agreeable to Gods woord, and that he coulde not conforme himselfe thereunto.

Ninthly, that he had affirmed, that the booke of Common prayer sette foorth in the raigne of king Edward the vj. was in all partes good and godly: and y^t the sayd Rafe and his company prisoners, did daily vse amongst themselues in prison some part of the booke.

Tenthly, that hee had affirmed, that if hee were out of prison, he would not come to Masse, Mattins, nor Euensong, nor beare Taper, Candle, or Palme, nor goe in procession, nor would receiue holy water, holy breade, ashes, or paxe, or any other ceremonie of the Church then vsed within this Realme.

Eleuenthly, that he had affirmed, that if he were at libertie, he would not confesse his sinnes to any Priest, nor receiue absolution of him: nor yet would receiue the Sacrament of the altar, as it was then vsed.

Twelfly, that he had affirmed, that praying to saints, and prayers for the deade, were neither good nor profitable, and that a man is not bounde to fast and praye, but at his owne wil and pleasure, neither that it is lawful to reserue the Sacrament, or to woorship it.

Thirtenthly, that the sayd Allerton hath, according to these his affirmations, abstained & refused to come vnto his parishe Church euer sithens the 10. day of Ianuarie last, or to vse, receiue or allow any ceremonies, sacramēts, or other rites then vsed in the church.

To all these Articles he answered affirmatiuely, denieng precisely none of them: sauing to this clause contained in the 12. article, that a man is not bounde to fast and pray but at his owne will & pleasure, he sayde that he had affirmed no such thing, but he confessed that he had not fasted nor prayed so oft as he was bounde to doe. And vnto this answer he also subscribed in this sorte.

Except it be prooued otherwise by the holy Scripture, I doe affirme these articles to be true. By me Rafe Allerton.

The next examination was the fourth daye of Iulie. The actes whereof, because they do appeare more amply in hys other examination, had the 10. daye of September, I doe heere omit, geuing you farther to vnderstande, that vppon the seuenth daye of the same moneth of Iulie, hee was brought before Doctor Darbishiere in the Byshops Palace, who examined him againe vppon the former Articles, and after perswaded him to recant, threatening hym that otherwise he should be burned. To whome he boldly answered: I woulde I mighte be condemned euen to morrowe: for I perceiue my Lord (meaning Boner) doth nothing but seeke mennes blood. Uppon whiche sayinge Darbishire committed him againe to prisone, and the 10. day of September, the Bishop caused him (with the other thre aboue named) to be brought vnto Fulham, and there in his priuate

Chappell wythin his house, hee iudiciallye propounded vnto him certaine other newe Articles: of the whyche, the tenours of the first, fifte, sixte, and seuenth are already mentioned in the seconde, thirde, and fourthe former obiections: as for the rest, the contentes thereof here followeth.

Thou Rafe Allerton canst not denie, but that the Information geuen against thee, and remaining now in the Actes of this court of thine Ordinarie, Edmund Bishop of London, was and is a true information.

This information was geuen by Tho. Tie,* Curate of Bentley (of whome yee haue already heard) and certaine other of the same parishe and affinitie: as namelye Iohn Painter, William Harris, Iohn Barker, Iohn Carter, Thomas Candeler, Jeffrey Bestwoode, Iohn Richarde, Richard Meere.

The effect whereof was, that one Laurence Edwards of Bentley aforesayde, had a child that was vnchristened,* and being demaunded by the sayde Tye, whye hys childe was not Baptised, he made aunswere it should be when he coulde finde one of his religion (meaning a true professour of Christes gospell) Whereat the Curate sayd: Ah, ye haue hadde some instructor that hathe schooled yo^r of late. Yea (quoth the sayd Edwardes) that I haue: and if youre doctrine be better then his, then I will beleeeue you: and therewithall fondly offered to fetch him.

Wherupon the Cōstable going with him, they brought before the said curate the said Rafe Allerton: of whome in this information they make this reporte that he was a seditious person, who sithens his comming down from the bish. had set vpon the Constables doore certaine seditious Letters, moouing and perswading thereby the people to folow his malicious disobedience: and that these his perswasions Page 2017 had taken effecte in manye: And farther, that the saide Rafe Allerton (y^e Curate asking him whether he had instructed thys Laurence Edwardes that it was agaynst Gods commandement to enter into the church) casting abroad his hands, should say. Oh good people, now is fulfilled the saying of the godly Priest and Prophet Esdras, who sayeth: The fire of a multitude is kindled against a fewe: they haue taken away their houses,* & spoiled their goods. &c. Which of you all haue not seen this day, who is he here amongst you, that seeth not all these things done vpon vs this day. The church which they call vs vnto, is y^e church of Antichrist, a persecuting church, and the church malignant. With these and many mo words (said they most maliciously and falsly alledged out of the Scriptures, he thus perswaded a great multitude there present (as much as in him lay) vnto disobedience. For the which cause y^e constables did then apprehend him.

3. Item, thou Rafe Allerton canst not denie, but that the letter sent vnto me by my Lorde Darcie, beginning wyth these woordes (pleaseth it your Lordship. &c.) was thine owne letter, and was subscribed by thine owne hand.

The contents of the letter mentioned in this Article, and wrytten by Allerton, vnto the Lorde Darcie, was a confession of his demeanor before his first apprehension: the effect and purport whereof because it appeareth in the beginning of this his Historie, I doe heere omit.

4. Item, thou Rafe Allerton canst not deny, but that the other letter, sent also to me from my said Lord Darcy, beginning thus (pleaseth it youre Lordship. &c.) and ending with these woordes (whensoever it be) is thine owne very letter, and subscribed with thine owne hand.

This was also an other letter wrytten by hym vnto the Lorde Darcie, the contents whereof were, that where the said Lorde had commaunded him to declare where he had bene euer sithens Whitsontide last before hys first apprehension, this was to certifie his Lordship, that he was not able so to do, otherwise then as he had already shewed him by his former letters. And moreouer, where as hee charged him to haue read vnto the people abroad in the woodes, he certified him that he did neuer read any thyng abroad, sauing once whē he was in the cōpany of George Eagles and others, Richarde Roth tooke a wryting out of his bosome, and desired the saide Rafe to read it, which request heethen accomplished: and demaunding of hym whose doing the same was, the said Roth told that it was maister Cranmers, late Archbishop of Canterburie: and farther he could not shew him. Neuertheles he was ready, and willing to suffer such punishment as his lordship should thinke meete, desiring yet that the same myghte be with fauour and mercye, although hee feared neither punishment nor death, praying the Lord, that it might be in his feare, when soeuer it should be.

8. Item, thou Rafe Allerton canst not denie, but that the letters wrytten with bloud, beginning with these words (Grace, mercy and peace. &c. and ending thus.) Farewell in God) remaining nowe Registred in the Actes of thys Court, were wrytten voluntarily with thine owne hand.

He wrote this letter in the prison with bloud for lacke of other inke, and did meane to send the same vnto Agnes Smith, alias Siluerside, at that time imprisoned, and afterwarde burned at Colchester for the testimonie of the Gospell of Christe, as before is mencioned. The Copie of which letter heere ensueth.

A letter wrytten by Rafe Allerton, vnto Agnes Smith, Widowe.

GRace, mercy, and peace from God the father, and from our Lord Iesus Christ,* with the assistance of Gods holy spirite, and the abundant health both of soule and body, I wish vnto you, as to mine owne soule, as GOD knoweth, who is the searcher of all secretes.

Forasmuch as it hath pleased almighty God of his infinite mercy, to call me to the state of grace, to suffer Martyrdom for Iesus Christes sake, although heretofore I haue most negligētly dalied therewith, and therefore farre vnwoorthy I am of suche an high benefite, to be crowned with the moste ioyfull crowne of Martyrdom: neuertheles it hath pleased God not so to leaue me, but hath raised mee vp againe according to his promyse, which sayeth: Although he fall, yet shall he not be hurt: For the Lord vpholdeth him with his hand.* Wherby we perceiue Gods election to be most sure: for vndoubtedly hee will preserue all those that are appoynted to die. And as he hath begonne thys worke in me: euen so do I beleue that he wil finish the same, to his great glory, and to my wealth, through Iesus Christ. So beit.

Dearly beloued sister (I am cōstrained so to cal you because of your constante faith and loue vnfained) consider, that if we be the true seruants of Christ, then maye not we in any wise make agreement with his enemye Antichrist. For there is no cōcorde nor agreement betweene them sayth the Scriptures, and a man can not serue two maisters, sayeth Christ. And also, it is prefigured vnto vs in the olde lawe, whereas the people of God were most straitly commaunded that they shoulde not mingle themselues with the vngodly heathen, and were also forbiddē to eate, drinke, or to marrye with them. For as often as they did either marrye vnto their sonnes, or take their daughters vnto them, or to their sonnes, euen so oft came the great and heauye wrath of God vpon his owne people, to ouerthrow both them and all their Cities, with the holy Sāctuarie of God: & brought in straunge Princes to raigne ouer them, and wicked rulers to gouerne them, so that they were sure of hunger, sworde, pestilence, and wilde beastes to deuour them. Which plagues neuer ceased, vntill the good people of God were cleane separated frō the wicked idolatrous people.

Oh dearely beloued, this was wrytten for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might haue hope. And is it not in like case happened now in this Realme of England? For now are the people of god had in derision, & troden vnder foote, and the Cities, Townes, and houses wher they dwelt, are inhabited with them that haue no right therunto, & the true owners are spoiled of their labours: yea, and the holye sanctuarie of Gods most blessed word, is laid desolate and wast, so that the very Foxes run ouer it. &c. yet is it the foode of oure soules, the lanterne of our feete, and the lighte vnto our pathes: and where it is not preached, the people perish. But the Prophet sayeth: hee that refraineth himselfe from euill, must be spoyled.*
Why should we then be abashed to be spoiled, seeing that it is tolde vs before, that it must so happen vnto them that refrayne from euill? And thus I bid you farewell in God.

R. A.

Item, thou Rafe Allerton canst not denie, but that the letters wrytten with bloud, beginning with these woords in the ouer part thereof. (The angell of God. &c.) and ending thus (be with you, Amen) and hauing also this postscript (do ye suppose that our brethrē. &c.) remaining now registred in the actes of this Court, are thine owne hande wryting.

9. For the better vnderstanding of this Article, I haue also here inserted the Copie of the Letter mentioned in the same: which letter he wrote (by his owne confession) vnto Richard Roth, then in danger of the subtill snares of that bloody wolfe Boner.

A Letter wrytten by Rafe Allerton vnto Richard Roth, his fellowe Martyr.

ThE Angell of God pitch his tent about vs, and defend vs in all our waies. Amen. Amen.*

O deare brother, I pray for you, for I heare say that you haue ben diuers times before my Lorde in examination. Wherefore take heede for Gods sake what the wise man teacheth you, and shrink not away when you are entised to confesse an vntruthe, for hope of life, but be ready alwaies to geue an answere of the hope that is in you. For whosoeuer confesseth Christe before men, him will Christ also confesse before his father. But hee that is ashamed to confesse him before men, shall haue his rewarde with them that doe deny him. And therefore deare brother goe forward: ye haue a ready way, so fair as euer had any of the Prophets or Apostles, or the rest of our brethren, the holy Martyrs of God. Therefore couet to go hence with the multitude while the way is full. Also deare brother vnderstande that I haue seene your letter, and although I cannot read it perfectly, yet I partly perceiue your meaning therein, and very gladly I woulde copie it out, with certaine comfortable additions therunto annexed. The which as yet will not be brought to passe for lacke of paper, vntil my Lord be gone from hence, and then your request shalbe accomplished, God willing without delay. Thus fare ye well in God. Our deare brother and fellowe in tribulation, Robert Allen saluteth you, and the fellowship of the holye ghost be wyth you, Amen.

Rafe Allerton.

Doe ye suppose that our brethren and sisterne are not yet dispatched out of this world? * I thinke that eyther they are dead, or shalbe within these two daies.

And for the other Obiection yet remaining, and not specified, if it were not more somewhat to shewe the follie of those bloudy tyrants (which of so small trifles take occasions to quarel with the Sainctes of God) then for any weighty thing therein contained: I woulde neither trouble you with y^e reading therof, nor yet my selfe with wryting. But that yee may iudge of them as their doings doe geue occasion, I will now proceede in the matter.

Page 2018* Item thou Rafe Allerton canst not deny, but confessest, that the wryting of letters in a little peece of paper on both sides of it, with this sentence on the one side following (looke at the foote of the stockes for a knife) and wyth this sentence following vpō the otherside (looke betwene the poste an• the wall for two bookes and two Epistles, leaue them here when ye goe) remaining now in the Reg••••ie and Acts of this courte is voluntarily wrytten by the• Rafe Allerton with thine owne hand.

Item, thou Rafe Allerton canst not denie, but that thou arte priuie to a certaine wryting, remaining nowe in the Registrie & acts of this Court, the beginning wherof is with these woordes (I would haue men wise. &c.) and ending thus (from house to house.)

Item, thou Rafe Allerton, canste not denie, but that thou art priuie and of consent and maintenaunce of a certaine great Woodknife, a long cord, a hooke, a stone, and of a trencher wrytten vpon with chalk, hauing this sentence (All is gon and lost, because of your follie:) of two bordes wrytten vpon with chalke, the one hauing this sentence (•nder the stone looke) and the other hauing thys sentēce, (whereas you •id mee take heede, I thanke you, I trust in God that I shall be at peace with him shortly) remaining now registred in the actes of this Court.

For answer vnto al these articles, he graunted that the first •x. were true, * as the Register recordeth. Howbeit, I finde noted in the backside of the information, specified in the 2. article (although crossed out againe) that he denied such things as were there in the same informed against him. Wherefore it is not likely that hee did simply graunt vnto the contents of the 2. article, but rather that he onely affirmed that such an information was geuē against him, and not that the same was true.

Thus much I thought to warne the reader of, lest that in mistaking his answers, it might seeme, that he graunted himselfe to be a sedicious and a rebellious persone: of which facte he was most cleare & innocent. And being farther demanded vpon the contentes of the 8. article, where he had the bloud he wrote that letter withall: he sayd that Richard Roth, sometime his prison fellow, did make his nose blede, and thereby he got the bloud wherwith he did then wryte. The bish. again asked him, to whom he wold haue sent the same. He answered, vnto one Agnes Smith alias Siluerside of Colchester. Why (quoth the bish.) Agnes Smith was an Hereticke, and is burned for Heresie. Nay, said Allerton, shee is in better case, then either I my selfe, or any of vs all. Then being againe demanded (vpon the 9. obiection) to whom he would haue sent the letter mentioned in the same: he answered, that he ment to haue sent it vnto Richard Roth, at that present separated from him. Whereupon the bish. farther enquired, what he ment by these wordes (brethren and sistern) specified in the sayd letter? he answered that he ment therby, such as wer lately condemned at Colchester, and were like (at y^e wryting therof) shortly to be burned. Now, as for the contents of the 10. and 11. articles he vtterlye denied them. But to y^e 12. he confessed, that he wryt vpon the said trencher and other bordes, the woordes mentioned in the sayd Article, & that he did leaue the same in the prison house, to the entent that Richard Rothe shoulde read them. Boner also bringing out the wooden sword, mencioned in the saide article, asked him who made it, and for what purpose. Whereunto he answered, that he was the maker thereof, howbeit for no euil purpose. But being idle in the prison, and finding there an old board, he thought y^e time better spent in making thereof, then to sit still and do nothing at all.

The forenoone being now spent, the rest of this tragedie was deferred vntil the afternoone. Wherin was ministred vnto him yet certaine other obiections, the tenoure whereof was.

*First, that hee hadde misliked the Masse, callyng vppon Saints, and caryinge the crosse in procession, wyth other theyr ceremonies, calling them Idolatrie, & also had dissuaded them there from.

1. Item, that he was muche desirous to haue the people beleue as he did, and therefore being in prisone with hys fellowes, did sing Psalmes and other songes againste the Sacrament of the Aultare, and other ordinaunces of the church, so loud, that the people abroad might heare them and delight in them.

2. Item, that he had diuers times conspired against hys keeper, and hadde prouided thinges to kill him, and so to breake the prison and escape awaye.

Item, that he had raised against the B. being his ordinarie, calling him a bloody butcher, tyrant and rauening wolfe, and also against his officers, especially Clunie hys sumner, calling him butchers cur, with other such names.

4. Item, that he had murmured, grudged, disdained, and misliked that the bishop had proceeded against certaine of his Diocesse, and had condemned them as Hereticke: or that he should proceede nowe against him and others yet remaining in errours, notwithstanding that hee and hys chaplaines had charitably admonished and exhorted them from the same.

5. Item, that he ought faithfully to beleue, that there is one catholicke church, without the which there is no saluation: of the which church Iesus Christ is the very priest & sacrifice, whose body and bloud is really and truly contained in the sacrament of the altare vnder the formes of breade and wine: the breade and wine being by the diuine power transubstanciati into his body and bloude.

6. Item, that he had kept himself, and also distributed to others certaine hereticall and corrupt bookes, condemned and reprooued by the lawes of this realme.

7. Item, that he had contrary to the orders and statutes of this realme, kept company with that seditious heretike and traitor, George Eagles, commonly called Tru•gedner, and had heard him read in woodes and other places, yet not accusing, but allowing and praising him.

8. Unto which articles, because they were for the moste part, so foolish and full of lies, he would in a maner make no answer, sauing he graunted that he did misselike theyr masse and other ceremonies, because they were wicked & naught. And moreouer he told the bishop, that he and his complices, did nothing but seeke how to kill innocents.

The bishop then asked him, whether he would beleue in all poyntes touching the Sacrament of the altar, as is contained in the generall councell holden and kept vnder Innocentius 3. and therewithall he did read the decree of the sayd Counsel touching the Sacrament.

Wherunto Allerton againe made answer and sayd: I beleue nothing contained in the same Councell, neyther haue I any thing to doe therewith: and it were also very necessary that no man els should haue to do therewith.

Then (quoth Boner) thou arte of the opinion that the heretikes lately burned at Colchester were of.

Yea (said he) I am of their opinion, and I beleue that they be Saints in heauen.

This done, the Bish. perceiuing that he would not recant, demaunded what he had to say, whye he shoulde not pronounce the sentence of condemnation against him. To whom he answered: yee ought not to condemne me as an heretike, for I am a good christian. But now go to, doe as you haue already determined: For I see right well, that right and truth be suppressed, and cannot appeare vppon the earth.

These woordes ended, the bish. pronounced the Sentence of condemnation, & so deliuered hym vnto the temporall officers: Who reserued him in their custodie vntill the 17. day of September, at which time, bothe he and the other 3. before mencioned were all burned, as ye haue already heard. Of which other 3. because as yet litle is sayd, I wil therfore now procede to declare suche cause of theyr cruel deathes, as in the Registrie is recorded.

James Austoo and Margerie his wife

TOuching the first apprehension of these ij. persones, I finde neither occasion whye, neither time,* nor manner howe. Howbeit as the daies then serued, it was no harde or strange matter to fall into the hāds of such as with cruelty persecuted the true professors of Gods gospell, especially hauing so many promoters, and vnneighborly neigh|bors to help them forwards. By which kinde of people, it is not vnlike these two godly yokefellowes were accused and taken: and being once deliuered into the pitiles hādling of Boner: their examinations (ye may be sure) were not long deferred. For the 16. day of Iuly 1557. they were brought before him into hys palace at London. Wher first he demāded of the said Iames Austoo (amongst other questions) where he had bene confessed in Lent, and whether he receiued the sacrament of the altare at Easter or not.

To whom he answered that in dede he had ben confessed of the curate of A•halowes Barking, •e to the tower of London, but y^t he had not receiued the sacrament of the altar, for he defied it from the bottome of his heart.

Why, quoth the Bishop, doest thou not beleue that in the sacrament of the altare there is the true body & bloude of Christ.

No sayd Austoo, not in the Sacrament of the altar, but in the Supper of the Lorde, to the faithfull receiuer is the very body and bloud of Christ by faith.

Boner not well pleased with this talke, asked then the wife, how she did like the religion then vsed in this cour•h of England.

Page 2019*Shee answered that shee beleueed, that the same was not according to Gods word, but false and corrupted, and that they which did goe thereunto, did it more for feare of the law, then otherwise.

Then hee againe asked her if shee woulde goe to the Churche and heare Masse, and pray for the prosperous estate of the king, being then abroad in his affaires.

Whereunto she said that she defied the Masse with all her heart, and that she would not come into any Churche wherein were Idols.

After this the Bish. objected vnto them certaine articles, to the number of 18. The tenor whereof (because they touch only such common & trifling matters as are already mentioned in diuers & sondry places before) I do here for breuitie sake omit and passe ouer: geuing you yet this much to vnderstand, that in the maters of faith, they were as soūd, and answered as truly (God be therfore praised) as euer any did, especially the woman, to whom the Lord had geuen the greater knowledge and more feruentnes of spirit. Notwithstanding, according to y^e measure of grace that God gaue them, they both stood most firmly vnto the truthe. And therefore to conclude, the 10. day of Sept. they were (with Rafe Allerton, of whō ye haue heard) brought againe before the bishop within his chappell at Fulham, where he speaking vnto them, said first on this wise: Austoo, doest thou knowe where thou art nowe, and in what place, and before whom, and what thou hast to doe?

Yea (quoth Austoo) I knowe where I am: For I am in an idols temple.

After which wordes their articles being againe red, & their constancie in faith perceiued, Boner pronounced against either of them seuerally the sentence of cōdemnation, and deliuering them vnto the sheriff there present, did rid his hands (as he thought) of them: but the Lorde in the ende will iudge that: to whome I referre his cause.

It so happened vpon a night, that as this Margerie Austoo was in y^e bishops prisone (which prison I suppose was his dogge kennel,* for it was, as is reported, vnder a paire of staires) by y^e bishops procurement there was sent a stoute champion (as appeared) about 12. of the clocke at nighte, who suddenly opened the doore, and with a knife drawen or ready prepared, fell vppon her, to the intent to haue cut her throte. Which she by reason of the clearnes of the Moone perceiuing, and calling vnto God for helpe, he (but who it was she knewe not) geuing a grunt, and fearing (belike) to commit so cruel a dede, departed his waies without any more hurt doing.

The next night following, they caused a great rumbeling to be made ouer her head, which semed to her to haue bene some great thūder, which they did for to haue feared her out of her wittes, but yet thanks be to God, they missed of their purpose.

Richard Roth.

IN the godly felowship of the forenamed three Martyrs, was also this Rich. Roth,* as is alreadye specified. Who being apprehended and brought vp vnto the bish. of London, was by him examined y^e 4. day of Iuly: at what time the bish. did earnestly trauel to induce him to beleue that there were 7. sacraments in Christes church, and that in the sacrament of the altar (after the words of consecration duely spoken) there remained y^e very substance of Christes body and bloud and none other. Wherunto, (at y^e present) he made only this aunsweare: that if the scriptures did so teach him, and that he might be by the same so perswaded, he would so beleue, otherwise not. But at another examination (which was the 9. day of Sept.) he declared plainly, that in the said sacramēt of the altar (as it was then vsed) there was not the very body and bloud of Christ, but that it was a dead God, and that the Masse was detestable and contrary to Gods holy woorde and will, from the which faith and opinion he would not goe or decline.

The next daye being the 10. day of the same moneth of September, the Bishop at his house at Fulham (by waye of an article) laid and obiected against him: that he was a comforter and boldener of hereticks, and therefore hadde wrytten a letter to that effect vnto certaine that were burned at Colchester: the copie whereof ensueth.

A letter wrytten by Rich. Roth, vnto certaine brethren and sisters in Christ, condemned at Colchester, and ready to be burned for the testimonie of the truth.

O Deare brethren and sisters, how much haue you to reioyce in God,* that he hath geuen you such faith to ouercome thys bloud thirsty tyrants thus far: and no doubt he that hath begon that good worke in you, wil fulfil it vnto the end. O de•• 〈...〉 in Christ, what a crowne of glory shall ye receiue with Christe in the kingdom of God? Oh that it had bene the good will of God, that I had ben ready to haue gon with you For I lie in my 〈◇〉 little ease in the day, and in the night I lie in the Colehouse, frō Rafe Allerton, or any other: and we loke euery day whē we 〈◇〉 be condemned For he said that I shoulde be burned wythin 〈◇〉 daies before Easter: but I lie still at the pooles brinke, and euery man goeth in before mee: but we abide paciently the lordes l•isure, with many bandes, in setters and stockes: by the whiche we haue receiued great ioy in God. And nowe fare you well deare brethren and sisters, in this worlde: but I trust to see you in the heauens face to face.

Oh brother Munt, with your wife and my deare sister Rose, how blessed are you in the Lord, that God hath found you worthy to suffer for his sake: with all the rest of my deare brethren & sisters knowen & vnknowen. O be ioyful euen vnto death. Feare it not, saith Christ: for I haue ouercome death, saith he. Oh deare hearts, seeing that Iesus Christ will be our helpe, oh tary you the Lordes laisure. Be strong, let your hearts be of good comfort, & wait you stil for the Lord. He is at hand. Yea the angel of the lord pitcheth his tent rounde about them that feare him, and deliuereth them which way he seeth best. For our liues are in the lords hands: and they can doe nothing vnto vs before God suffer thē. Therefore geue all thanks to God.

Oh deare hearts, you shall be clothed with long white garments vpon the mount Sion, with the multitude of Saintes, and with Iesus Christ our Sauour, which will neuer forsake vs. Oh blessed virgins, ye haue plaied the wise virgines part, in that you haue taken oyle in your lamps, that ye may go in with the bride grom when he commeth into the euerlasting ioy wyth hym. But as for the folish they shalbe shut out, because they made not thēselues ready to suffer with Christe, neither goe about to take vp his crosse. O deare hearts, howe precious shall your death be in the sight of the Lord? for deare is the death of his saintes. O fare you well, and pray. The grace of our Lorde Iesus Christ be wyth you all, Amen, Amen. Pray, pray, pray.

By me Rich. Roth, wrytten with mine bloud.

This letter he confessed in dede (vpon the sayd examination) to haue wrytten with his bloude, & that he meant to haue sent the same vnto suche as were condempned at Colchester for the gospel of Iesus Christ, and were afterwarde burned there, as ye haue already heard.

The bish. then farther asked him,* what he thought hys prison fellow Rafe Allerton to be?

He aunswared that he thought hym to be one of the elect children of God: and that if at any time heereafter he happened to be put to death for his faith and religion, hee thought he shoulde die a true Martyr. And moreouer finding him selfe agreued with the Bishoppes priue and secrete condēning of Gods people, he said vnto him in this sort: My Lord, because the people should not see & behold your doings, ye cause me and others to be brought to our examinatiōs by night, being afraid (belike) to do it by day.

Fourē Marty•s burned at Islington.

Page 2020The Bishop not greatly caring for this talke,* proceeded to examine hym of other matters, amongst whiche this high and waighty thyng was one, videlicet, how he did lyke the order and rites of the Churche then vsed here in England.

To whome he said, that hee euer had, and yet then did abhorre the same with all his heart.

Then diuers of the Bishops complices entreated and perswaded him to recant, and aske mercy of the bishop.

*No (quoth Roth) I will not aske mercy of hym that cannot geue it. Wherupon he was (as the rest before mētioned) condemned, and deliuered vnto the Shiriffe, and the xvij. day of September, they all most ioyfully ended their lyues in one fire at Islington, for the testimonie of Christ, as before is declared.

¶Agnes Bongeor, and Margaret Thurston, two godly Christian women, burnt at Colchester for the sincere professing of Christes Gospell.

A Little before (gentle Reader) was mention made often that suffred Martyrdome at Colchester,* pag. 2007. at wh•ch tyme there were two other women also,* one called Margaret Thurston, and the other Agnes Bongeor, that should haue suffered with them, and were likewyse condemned at the same tyme and place that the other aboue named ten were, for the like cause, and aunswered also in their examinations the like in effect as the other did. But the one, namely Margaret Thurston, that 〈◇〉 she should suffer with those that went from the Castle, was for that tyme deferred. What the cause was, the testimonie of Io•e Cooke shal declare vnto vs.* Which Io•e Cooke, the wife now of Iohn Sparke, beyng then in the castle of Colchester for religion, did demaund of this widow Thurston, whose husband died in the prison being imprisoned for religion, wherefore the sayd Margaret beyng a condemned woman, should be reserued, when the other suffred in the Castle Baily. She aunswered, that it was not for any feare of death, but beyng prepared as the rest were that suffered the same day, she felte in her selfe a great shiuering and trembling of the flesh. Whereuppon forsaking the company, she went aside to pray. And whilst she was a praying, she thought that she was lifted vp with a mighty wynd that came round about her. Euen at that instant came in the Gaoler and company with hym, & whilst she turned her selfe to fetch her Psalter, they tooke the other prisoners and left her alone. Shortly after shee was remooued out of the Castle and put into the Towne prison, where she continued vntill Friday seuennight after her company were burnt. That day, not two howers before her death, she was brought to the Castell agayne, where shee declared thus much to the aforesayde Ioane Cooke.*

The other named Agnes Bongeor, who should haue suffred in like maner with the 6. that went out of Motchal was also kept backe at that tyme, but not in lyke sort, because her name was wrong written within the writte, as in the Bailiffes letters of Colchester, sent to Boner about the same, more plainely doth appeare in the booke of our first edition, pag. 1632.

The same morning, the 2. of August, that the sayd sixe in Motehall were called out to goe to their Martyrdome, was Agnes Bongeor also called with them,* by the name of Agnes Bowyer. Wherefore the Bailiffes vnderstāding her (as I sayd) to be wrong named within the writ, commanded the sayd Agnes Bongeor to prison agayne, as ye haue heard in the letter before named, and so from Motehall that day, sent her to the Castle, where shee remayned vntill her death.

But when she saw her selfe so separated from her sayd prison fellowes in that sort, Oh good Lord what piteous mone that good woman made, how bitterly shee wepte, what strange thoughts came into her mynde, how naked and desolate she esteemed her selfe, and into what plunge of dispayre and care her poore soule was brought, it was piteous and wonderful to see: which all came because she went not with them to geue her lyfe in the defence of her Christ: for of all thyngs in the world, lyfe was least looked for at her hands. For that morning in which she was kept backe from burnyng, had she put on a smocke that she had prepared onely for that purpose.* And also hauyng a child, a little yong Infant suckyng on her, whom she kept with her tenderly all the tyme she was in prison, agaynst y^e day likewyse did she send it away to another Nurse, and prepared her selfe presently to geue her selfe for the testimonie of the glorious Gospell of Iesus Christ. So little did shee looke for lyfe, and so greatly did Gods gifts worke in her aboue nature, that death seemed a great deale better welcome then lyfe. But this tooke not effect at that time as she thought it would, and therfore (as I sayd) was she not a little troubled.

Beyng in this great perplexitie of mynde, a friend of hers came to her and required to knowe whether Abrahams obedience was accepted before God for that hee did sacrifice his sonne Isaac, or in that he would haue offered hym. Unto which she answered thus.

I know (quoth she) that Abrahams will before God was allowed for the deede, in that he would haue done it, if the Aungell of the Lorde had not stayed him: but I (said she) am vnhappy, the Lorde thinketh me not worthye of this dignitie, and therfore Abrahams case and mine is not alyke.

Why (quoth her friend) would ye not willingly haue gone with your company, if God should so haue suffered it?

Yes (said she) with all my hart, and because I did not, it is now my chiefe and greatest grieve.

Then said her friend: My deare sister, I pray thee consider Abraham and thy self well, & thou shalt see thou doest nothing differ with him in will at all.

Alas (quoth she) there is a farre greater matter in Abraham then in me: for Abraham was tried with the offering of his owne childe, but so am not I, and therefore our cases are not lyke.

Good sister (quoth her friend) way the matter but indifferently. Abraham I graunt (sayd he) would haue offered his sonne: and haue not you done the lyke in your little suckyng babe? But consider further then this, my good sister (sayd he) where Abraham was commanded but to offer his sonne, you are heuy and griued because you offer not your selfe, which goeth somewhat more neere you then Abrahams obedience did, & therefore before God assuredly, is no lesse accepted & allowed in his holy presence: which further the preparing of your shroud also doth argue full well, &c. After which talke betweene them,* she began a little to stay her selfe, and gaue her whole exercise to readyng and prayer, wherein she found no little comfort.

In the tyme that these foresayd ij. good women were prisoners, one in the Castle, & the other in Motehall, God by a secret meane called the sayd Margaret Thurston vnto his truth agayne, who hauyng her eyes opened by the workyng of his spirit, did greatly sorrow and lament her backsliding before, and promised faithfully to the Lord, in hope of his mercies, neuer more while she liued to doe the like agayne, but that she would constantly stand to the cōfession of the same,* against all the aduersaries of the crosse of Christ. After which promise made, came in short tyme a writ from London for the burning of them, which accordyng to the effect thereof, was executed the 17. day of September, in the yeare aforesayd.

〈1 page missing〉

Page 2022 to Laxfield to bee burned, and on the next day mornynge was brought to the stake where was ready agaynst hys commynge, the foresayd Iustice M. Thurstō, one M. Waller then beyng vnder shiriffe, and M. Tho. Louell beyng high Constable,* as is before expressed, the which commanded men to make redy all things meete for that sinful purpose. Nowe the fire in most places of the streete was put out, sauynge a smoke was espied by the said Tho. Louell proceeding out from the top of a chimney, to which house the shiriffe and Grannow his man went, and brake open the dore and thereby got fire and brought the same to the place of execution. When Iohn Noyes came to the place of execution. When Iohn Noyes came to the place where he should be burned, he kneeled downe and sayde the 50. Psalme, with other prayers, and then they making haste bound hym to the stake, and beyng bounde, the sayd Iohn Noyes sayd: Feare not them that can kill the body, but feare hym that can kill both bodye and soule, and cast it into euerlastyng fire.

*When he saw his sister weeping and making mone for him, he bade her that she should not weepe for hym, but weepe for her sinnes.

Then one Nich. Cadman beyng Hastler, a valiaunt champion in the Popes affaires, brought a fagotte and set agaynst him: and the said Ioh. Noyes tooke vp the fagot and kissed it, and sayd: Blessed bee the tyme that euer I was borne to come to this.

Then he deliuered his Psalter to the vndershirife, desiring him to be good to his wyfe and children, & to deliuer to her that same booke: and the shiriffe promised hym that he would, notwithstanding, he neuer as yet performed his promise. Then the sayd Iohn Noyes sayd to the people: They say they can make God of a piece of bread, beleue them not.

*Then sayd he, good people beare witnes that I do beleue to be saued by the merites & passion of Iesus Christ, and not by myne owne deedes: and so the fire was kindled, and burned about him, and thē he sayd: Lord haue mercy vpon me, Christ haue mercy vpon me, Sonne of Dauid haue mercy vpon me.

¶The burnyng of Iohn Noyes, Martyr.

And so he yelded vp his lyfe, and when his body was burned, they made a pit to bury the coales and ashes, and amongst the same they found one of his feet that was vnburned, whole vp to the ankle, with the hose on, and that they buried with the rest.

Now while he was a burnyng, there stooode one Iohn Iaruis by, a mans seruante of the same towne, a plaine fellow,*which sayd: Good Lorde, how the sinewes of hys armes shrinke vp. And there stood behynd hym one Gran now and Benet beyng the shiriffes men, and they sayd to their maister, that Iohn Iaruis said, what villeine wretches are these. And their maister bade lay hand on hym, & then they tooke hym and piniond hym, and caried hym before the Iustice that same day, and the Iustice did examine hym of the words aforesayd, but he denied them, and aunswered, that he sayd nothing but this: Good Lorde howe the sinews of his armes shrinke vp. But for all this y^e Iustice did bynd his father and his maister in v. poundes a piece that he should be forth comyng at all tymes. And on the Wednesday next hee was broughte agayne before these Iustices, M. Thurston, and M. Kene, they sittying at Fresingfield in Hoxton hundred, and there they did appoint and commaund that the sayd Iohn Iaruis shoulde be set in the stockes the next market day, and whipt about the market naked. But his Maister one William Iaruis did after craue friendship of the Constables, and they dyd not set him in the stockes till Sonday morning, and in the after noone they did whip hym about the market wyth a dog whip hauyng three cords, and so they let hym go.

Some doe geue that Iohn Iaruis was whipped for saying that Nich. Cadman was Noyes Hastler, that is, such one as maketh and hasteth the fire.

The copy of a certaine letter that he sent to comforte his Wyfe at such tyme as he lay in prison.

Wife, you desired me that I would sende you some tokens that you might remember me.* As I did read in the newe Testament, I thought it good to write vnto you certayne places of the Scripture for a remembraunce. S. Peter sayth: Derely beloued, be not troubled with this heat that is nowe come among you to try you, as though some strange thyng had happened vnto you, but reioyce in so much as ye are partakers of Christes suffryngs, that whē hys glory appeareth, ye may be mery & glad. If ye be rayled on for the name of Christ, happy are ye, for the spirit of glory, and the spirit of God resteth vpon you.

It is better if the will of God be so,* that ye suffer for well doying, then for euill doying.

See that none of you suffer as a murtherer, or as a thiefe,* or an euill doer, or as a busie body in other mens matters: but if any man suffer as a Christian man, let hym not be ashamed, but let him glorifie God in this behalfe: for the tyme is come that iudgement must begin at the house of God. If it first begin at vs, what shal the end of them be that beleue not the gospel of God? Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit their soules to hym in well doying.

S Paule saieth: All that will lyue godly in Christ Iesu,* must suffer persecution.

S. Iohn saieth: See that ye loue not the worlde,* neither the thyngs that are in the world.

If any man loue the worlde, the loue of the father is not in him. For all that is in the world, as the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of lyfe, is not of the father, but is of the world, which vanisheth away and the lust therof, but he that fulfilleth the will of God, abideth for euer.

S. Paule saith: If ye bee risen againe with Christ,* seeke those things which are aboue, where Christ sitteth on the right hande of God. Set your affection on things that are aboue, and not on things which are on the earth.

Our Sauour Christ sayeth:* Whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that beleue in me, it were better for hym that a milstone were hanged about his necke, and that he were cast into the sea.

The Prophet Dauid sayth:* Great are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord deliuereth them out of all.

Feare the Lord ye his saintes, for they that feare hym lacke nothyng.

When the righteous crye, the Lorde heareth them and deliuereth them out of all theyr troubles: But misfortune shall slaye the vngodlye, and they that hate the righteous shall perish.

Heare oh my people. I assure thee O Israel, if thou wilt harken vnto me, there shall no strange God be in thee, neyther shalt thou worship any other God. Oh that my people would obey me, for if Israell would walke in my wayes, I should soone put downe their enemies, and turne my hande agaynst their aduersaries.

Our Sauour Christ sayth: The Disciple is not aboue hys maister, nor yet the seruant aboue his Lord. It is enough for the Disciple to be as his maister is, and that the seruant be as his Lord is. If they haue called the maister of the house Belzebub, howe much more shall they call them of his houshold so: feare not thē therefore.

S. Paule sayth: Set your selues therefore at large, and beare not a strangers yoke with the vnbeleuers:* for what fellowship hath righteousness with vnrighteousnesse? what company hath light with darkenes: either what part hath the beleuer with the Infidell? &c. Wherefore come out from among them, & separate your selues now (saith the Lord) and touch none vnclean thing: so will I receiue you, and I will be a father vnto you, & ye shall be my sonnes and daughters, sayth the Lord almighty.

Page 2023For neither eye hath seen, nor the eare hath heard, neither can it enter into the hart of man, what good thynges the Lord hath prepared for them that loue hym.

Ye are not bought neither with siluer nor gold, but with the precious blood of Christ.*

There is none other name geuen to men wherein wee must be saued.

So fare ye well wife and children, and leaue worldly care, and see that ye be diligent to pray.

*Take no thought (sayth Christ) saying: what shall we eate or what shall we drinke, or wherewith shall we be clothed: for after all these thynges seeke the Gentiles) for your heauenly father knoweth that ye haue need of all these thyngs, but seeke ye first the kingdom of heauen, and the rightousnesse thereof. And all these things shall be ministred vnto you.

¶The Martyrdome and sufferying of Cicelie Ormes, burnt at Norwich for the testimonie and wnesse of Christes Gospel.

About the 23. day of the sayd moneth of September, next after the other aboue mentioned, suffered at Norwich Cicelie Ormes, wyfe of Edmund Ormes Worstedweauer, dwelling in S. Laurence parish in Norwich, she beyng of the age of xxxij. yeares or more, was taken at y^e death of Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper aboue mēcioned, in a place called Lolardes pit without Bishoppes gate, at the sayd Norwich, for that shee sayde shee would pledge them of the same cup that they dranke on. For so saying, one Maister Corbet of Sprowson by Norwich, tooke her and sent her to the Chauncellor. When shee came before him, he asked her what she sayd to the Sacrament of Christes body.* And she sayd, she did beleue, that it was the Sacramente of the bodye of Christ. Yea saide the Chauncellor, but what is that that the priest holdeth ouer his head? Shee aunswered him and sayd, it is bread: and if you make it any better it is worse. At which words the Chauncellor sent her to the bishops Prison to the keeper called Fellow, with many threatning, & ho•e words as a man being in a great cha•e.

The xxij. day of Iuly shee was called before y^e Chaūcellor againe, who sat in iudgemēt with Master Bridges and others. The Chauncellor offred her if she would goe to the Church and keepe her tongue, shee should be at lybertie, and beleue as shee would. But she tolde him shee would not consent to his wicked desire therein, doe wyth her what he would: for if she should, she sayde GOD woulde surelye plague her. Then the Chauncellour tolde her, he had shewed more fauour to her, then euer he did to any, and that he was loth to condeme her, considering that shee was an ignoraunt, vnlearned, and foolysh woman. But she not weying his words, tolde him if he did, he should not be so desirous of her sinfull flesh, as she would (by Gods grace) be content to geue it in so good a quarell. Then rose he and red the bloody sentence of condemnation against her, and so deliuered her to the secular power of the shiriffes of the Citie, M. Thomas Sutherton, and M. Leonard Sutherton brethren, who immediately caried her to the Guildhall in Norwich, where shee remayned vntill her death.

This Cicelie Ormes was a very simple woman, but yet zelous in the Lordes cause, beyng borne in East Deram, and was there the daughter of one Thomas Haund Tailor. She was taken the v. day of Iuly, and dyd for a twelue month before she was taken, recant, but neuer after was she quiet in conscience, vntill she was vtterly driuen from all their Poperie. Betweene the tyme she recanted and that she was taken,* she had gotten a letter made, to geue to the Chancellor, to let hym know that she repēted her recantation from the bottome of her hart, & would neuer do the like again while she liued.* But before she exhibited her bil, she was taken & sent to prison, as is before sayd. She was burnt the 23. day of September, betweene 7. and 8. of the clocke in the morning,* the sayd two shirifes being there, and of people to the number of 200. When she came to the stake, she kneeled downe and made her prayers to God. That beyng done, she rose vp and sayde: good people, I beleue in God the father, God the sonne, and God the holy ghost, three persons and one God.

This do I not, nor will I recant, but I recant vtterly from the bottome of my hart, the doynge of the Pope of Rome, and all his popish priestes and shaelynges. I vtterly refuse and neuer will haue to do with them again by Gods grace. And good people, I would you shoulde not thinke of me that I beleue to be saued in that I offer my selfe here vnto the death for the Lordes cause, but I beleue to be saued by the death of Christes passion: and this my death is and shall be a witnesse of my fayth vnto you all here present. Good people, as many of you as beleue as I beleue, pray for me. Then she came to the stake and layd her hand on it, and sayd: welcome the Crosse of Christ. Which beyng done, she lookyng on her hand,* and seeyng it blacked with the stake, she wiped it vppon her smocke, for she was burnt at the same stake that Symon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper was burned at. Then after she had touched it with her hand, shee came and kissed it, and sayd welcome the sweete crosse of Christ, and so gaue her selfe to be bound thereto. After the tormentours had kindled the fire to her, she sayd:*My soule doth magnify the Lord, and my spirite reioyceth in God my Sauour, and in so * saying she set her hands together right against her brest, rasting her eyes and head vppward, and so stood, heauyng vp her hands by little and little, till the very sinewes of her armes brast asunder, and then they fell: but she yelded her lyfe vnto the Lord, as quietly as she had bene in a slumber, or as one feelyng no payne: So wonderfully did the Lord worke with her: his name therefore be praised for euermore, Amen.

After the death and Martyrdome of maistresse Ioyce Lewys, a little aboue specified, diuers good men and women in the same towne of Lichfield were vexed and in trouble before the Bishop and his Chauncellor, for kissing the sayd Ioyce Lewys,* and drinking with her about the tyme of her death, the names of which persones were these: Ioane Loue, Elizabeth Smith, Margaret Biddell, Helene Bouring, Margaret Cootesfote, Nich. Bird Ioh. Hurlstone and his wyfe, Agnes Glyn, Agnes Glouer, Agnes Penyfater. &c. These with other were produced to their examination before the Bishop & his Chācellor for the cause aboue named, and therefore adiudged for heretikes, for that they did pray and drinke with the sayd maistresse Lewys, but especially Agnes Penyfater sustained the most trouble, for that she accompanied the sayde Ioyce Lewys goyng to her death. Whiche Agnes beyng examined further of the sayd Bishop, what words she had spoken to two priestes of the church of Lichfield, called Iohn Adye and Iames Foxe, concernyng the sayd Ioyce Lewys after her burnyng, sayd as followeth: that she beyng asked by y^e said two priests beyng at her fathers house in the Citie of Lichfield, at such tyme as she came frō the burning of the sayd Ioyce Lewys,* wherefore shee the sayd Agnes did weep for such an heretike, meanyng Ioyce Lewys, whose soule sayd they was in hell: the sayd Agnes Penyfater to the demaund made this aunswer, that she thought the sayde blessed Martyr to bee in better case Page 2024 then the sayde two Priestes were.

With the which wordes she beyng charged, and willed to submit her selfe as the other had done aboue rehersed to such penaunce as they should inioyne vnto her, refused so to do, and therefore was commaunded to close prison, the shiriffes beyng charged with her vnder payne of one hundred poundes, that none should haue any accesse vnto her. At length at the perswasion of her friendes, shee was compelled to doe as the other had done before. And thus much concernyng thyngs done at Lichfield.

¶The Persecution and crueltie exercised by the Papistes in the Diocesse of Chichester.

*AND now from Lichfield to come to Chichester, although we haue but little to report thereof, for lacke of certaine relation and recordes of that countrey, yet it seemeth no little trouble and persecution there also to haue raged, as in other countreys. For what place was there almost in all the Realme, where the Popes ministers did not besturre them, murtheryng some or other, as in the Acts of this ecclesiastical history may sufficiently appeare. Wherefore as this plague of the popes tyranny was generall to all other people and countries of England, so likewise in the Diocesse of Chichester, diuers and many there were condemned and martyred for the true testimony of righteousnesse within the compasse of Queene Maries raigne. In the number of whom were these.

Martyrs.

- Iohn Foreman, of Estgrimsted.
- Iohn Warner of Berne.
- Christian Grouer of the Archdeaconry of Lewys.
- Thomas Athoth Priest.
- *Thomas Auyngton of Erdinglie.
- Dennis Burgis of Buxsted.
- Thomas Rauensdale of Rie.
- Iohn Milles of Hellingleghe.
- Nich Holden of Withiam.
- Iohn Hart of Withiam.
- Margery Morice of Hethfield.
- Anne Trie of Estgrenested.
- Iohn Oseward of Woodmancote.
- Thomas Harland of Woodmancote.
- Iames Morice of Hethfield.
- Tho. Dugate of Estgrenested.
- Iohn Ashedon of Ketherfield.

The greatest doers against these godly and true faithfull Martyrs and sitters vpon their condemnation,* were these: Christopherson the Bishop after Day, Rich. Brisley Doctour of Lawe, and Chauncellour of Chichester, Rob. Taylor Bachelor of Lawe his Deputy, Tho. Paccard Ciuilian, Anth. Clarke, Albane Langdale Bach. of Diuinitie, &c.

¶The examination of Thomas Spurdance one of Queene Maries seruaunts, before the Chauncellour of Norwich.

THE Bishops Chauncellour did aske me if I had bene with the priest,* and confessed my sinnes vnto him. And I sayd no, I had confessed my sinnes to God, and God sayeth: In what hower so euer a sinner doth repent and be sory for his sinnes, and aske hym forgeuenes, willyng no more so to doe, he will no more reckon his sinne vnto him, and that is sufficient for me.

Then sayd the Chancellor: Thou deniest the Sacrament of penance.

I said, I deny not penance, but I deny that I shoulde shew my sinnes vnto the priest.

Then sayd the Chancellor, that is a denyng of the sacrament of penance.

Write this Article.

Haue you receiued the blessed sacrament of the aulter (sayd he) at this tyme of Easter?

And I sayd, no.

And why haue ye not, sayth he?

I said, I dare not meddle with you in it, as you vse it.

Why? do not we vse it truly, sayd he.

I sayde, no, for the holy supper of the Lord serueth for the Christen congregation, and you are none of Christes members, & therefore I dare not meddle with you, least I be like vnto you.

Why, are wee none of Christes members sayde the Chancellor?

I sayd: because you teache lawes contrary to Gods lawe.

What lawes are those, sayd he?

I sayd, these 3. articles that you sweare the people vnto here, be false and vntrue, and you do euill to sweare the people vnto them.

Then sayd hee: Good people take no heede vnto hys words: for he is an heretike & teacheth you disobedience: and so he would no more speake of that matter.

Then said he, how beleuest thou in the blessed Sacrament of the aultar? doest thou not beleue that after it is consecrated, it is the very same body that was borne of the virgin Mary?

I sayd: no, not the same body in substance: for y^e same body hath a substance in flesh, bloud and bones, and was a bloody sacrifice, and this is a dry sacrifice.

And I sayd, is the Masse a sacrifice?

Unto which a D. answered that sate by him, it is a sacrifice both for the quicke and the dead.

Then sayd I, no, it is no sacrifice: for s. Paul saith, that Christ made one sacrifice once for all, and I doe beleue in none other sacrifice, but only in that one sacrifice that our Lord Iesus Christ made once for all.

Then sayd the D. that sacrifice that Christ made, was a wet sacrifice, and the Masse is a dry sacrifice.

Then sayde I: * that same drye sacrifice is a sacrifice of your own making, & it is your sacrifice, it is none of mine

Then sayd the Chancellor, he is an heretike, he denieth the sacrament of the aulter.

Then sayd I: will ye know how I beleue in the holy supper of our Lord?

And he sayd, yea.

Then sayd I: I beleue that if I come rightly & worthily as God hath commaunded me, to the holy supper of the Lorde, I receiue him by fayth, by beleeuynge in hym. But the bread beyng receiued, is not God, nor the bread y^t is yonder in the pixe is not God. God dwelleth not in tēples made with hands, neither will be worshipped wyth the works of mens hands. And therefore you do very euill to cause the people to kneele down and worship the bread: for God did neuer bid you hold it vp aboute your heades, neither had the Apostles such vse.

Then sayd the Chauncellour: he denyeth the presence in the sacrament. Write this Article also. He is a very heretike.

Then sayd I: the seruant is not greater then his maister. For your predecessors killed my maister Christ, the Prophets and Apostles, and holy vertuous men, & nowe you also kil the seruants of Christ, so that al the righteous bloud that hath bene shed, euen from righteous Abell, vntill this day, shall be required at your hands.

Well, said the Chancellor, haue him away.

Another examination of Spurdance, before the Bishop in his house.

THE B. sayd: sirrha, doest thou not beleue in the catholike fayth of holy Church? *

And I sayd: I beleue Christes catholike church.

Yea sayd he, in Christes church, of the which the Pope is the head? Doest thou not beleue that the Pope is supreme hed of the catholike church?

And I sayd, no. I beleue not that he should bee aboute the Apostles, if hee take them to be his predecessors. For when there came a thought among y^e Apostles, who shuld be the greatest when their maister was gone, Christ aunswered them vnto their thoughtes: *The Kinges of the earth beare domination aboute other, but ye shall not so doe, for hee that will be greatest among you, shall become seruaunte vnto you all. How is it then (sayde I) that hee will climbe so high aboute his fellowes? And also wee were sworne by my Maister King Henries tyme, that wee should to the vttermost of our power, neuer consent to hym again. And therefore as he hath nothyng to doe here in Englande, so neyther in his owne countrey more, then a Bishop hath in his Dioces.

Yea sayd the B. what of that? We were then in error & sinne, now we are in the right way agayne, and therefore thou must come home again with vs, and knowledge thy fault, and become a christian man, and be sworne vnto the Pope as our supreme head. *Wilt thou be sworne vnto the Pope? How sayst thou?

Then I sayd, no I warrant you by the grace of God, not as long as I liue. For you cannot prooue by the scripture, that the Pope is head of the church, and may do therein what him list.

No, sayde he? yes I trowe: For as the Belweather whiche weareth the Bell, is head of the flocke of sheepe, Page 2025 euen so is the Pope the head of the Church of Christ. * And as the Bees in the hiue haue a maister Bee when they are gone out, to bring them home againe to the hiue: euen so the Pope when we be gone astray and wandered from the fold, from the hiue, &c. then is ordeined our head by succession of Peter, to bring vs home againe to the true church: as thou now my good fellow hast wandred long out of the way like a scattered sheepe, &c. Heare therefore that Belwether, the maister bell, &c. & come home with vs to thy mother the true church againe.

Unto whom I aunswered: My Lord, all this is but naturall reason, & no scripture: but since ye cannot prooue the Pope to be authorised by scripture, ye aunswer not me as I thought ye would.

Ha, sayd he, I see well ye be stout, and will not be answered: therefore ye shall be compelled by law whether ye will or no.

*My Lord sayd I, so did your forefathers intreat Christ and his Apostles. They had a law, and by their lawe they put hym to death: and so likewyse, you haue a law which is tyrannie, & by that would ye inforce me to beleue as you doe. But the Lord I trust will assist me agaynst all your beggerly ceremonies, and make your foolishnesse knowen to all the world one day.

Then sayd he, when were ye at church & went in procession, and did the ceremonies of the church?

And I sayd, neuer since I was borne.

No sayd he? How old are you?

And I sayd, I thinke about xl.

Why said he, how did you vse your selfe at Church xx. yeres ago?

I sayd, as you do now.

And euen now, said he, you sayd you did not the Ceremonies since you were borne.

No more I did sayd I, since I was borne a newe: as Christ sayd vnto Nicodemus, except ye be borne a newe, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of heauen.

Then sayd a D. that sate by, he is a very Anabaptist: for that is their opinion playne.

No sir, you say falsely, sayd I, for I am no Anabaptist: for they denye Children to bee Baptised, and so doe not I.

Well sayd the B. why doest thou not go to the church, and do the ceremonies?

And I sayd: because they be contrary to Gods worde and lawes, as you your selfe haue taught: but nowe you say it is good agayne: and I thinke if there were a returne to morrow, you would say that is false again which you hold now. Therefore I may well say there is no truth in you.

Then sayd the B. thou art a stubborne fellow, and an heretike, and a Traitor.

No sayde I, I am no Traitour, for I haue done I thinke, better seruice to the crowne imperiall of England, then you.

If you had done so good seruice (said he) you would be obedient to the lawes of the Realme.

So I am, sayd I. There is no man alyue (I thanke God) to accuse me iustly that euer I was disobedient to any ciuill lawes.* But you must consider my Lord, that I haue a soule and a body, & my soule is none of y^e Queenes, but my body and my goods are the Queenes. And I must geue God my soule, and all that belongeth vnto it: that is, I must do the law and commandements of God, and whosoeuer commandeth lawes contrary to Gods laws, I may not do them for losing of my soule, but rather obey God then man.

And he sayd: why doest thou not these lawes thē? are they not agreeable to Gods law?

And I sayd, no, you cannot prooue them to bee Gods lawes.

Yes sayth he, that I can.

Then sayd I, if you can prooue me by the word of God that you should haue any grauen Images made to set in your churches for lay mens bookes, or to worship God by them, or that you should haue any Ceremonies in your church as you haue, prooue them by the word of God, and I will do them.

Then sayde hee, It is a good and decent order to furnishe the Church: ^{*} as when you shall goe to dinner, you haue a clothe vppon the table to furnish the Table before the meate shall come vppon it: so are these ceremonies a comely decent order to be in the Church among Christian people.

These sayd I are inuentions and imaginations out of your owne braine, without any worde of God to prooue them. For God sayth: looke what you thinke good in your owne eyes, if I commaund the contrary, it is abhominable in my sight. And these ceremonies are agaynst Gods lawes. For S. Paul sayth, they be weake and beggerly, & rebuketh the Galathians for doynge of them.

Well, sayd he: If you will not do them, seying they bee the lawes of the realme, you are an heretike and disobedient: and therefore come home agayne and confesse your fault with vs, that you haue bene in error, &c. Wyll you doe so?

And I sayd no, I haue bene in no error: for the spirituall lawes were neuer trulier set forth, then in my maister K, Edwards tyme, and I trust vnto God I shall neuer forsake them whiles I lyue.

Then came a Gentleman to me and sayd: are ye wiser then all men? and haue ye more knowledge then all men? will you cast away your soule willingly? my Lord and other men also, woulde fayne you woulde saue your selfe: therfore chuse some man where you will, eyther spirituall or temporall, and take a day: my Lord wyll geue it you.

Then sayd I, if I saue my lyfe, I shall loose it, and if I loose my lyfe for Christes sake, I shall finde it in lyfe euerlasting. And if I take a day, whē the day commeth, I must say then, euen as I do now, except I will lye, and therfore that needeth not.

Well, then haue him away sayd the Bishop.

This aboue named Thomas Spurdance was one of Queene Maries seruauntes, ^{*} and was taken by two of his fellowes, the sayd Queenes seruauntes named Iohn Haman, otherwise called Barker, and George Loos•n, both dwelling in Codman in the Countie of Suffolke, who caried hym to one maister Gosnall, dwellyng in the sayd Codnam, and by hym he was sent to Bury, where he remayned in prison, and afterward burned in the moneth of Nouember.

¶The story and Martyrdome of three constant witnesses of Christ.

NOt long after the Martyrdome of the two good women at Colchester, aboue named, ^{*} were three faythfull witnesses of the Lordes Testament, tormented and put to death in Smithfield at London, the 18. of Nouemb. in the yeare aforesayd, whose names hereafter follow.

- Iohn Hallyngdale.
- William Sparow.
- Richard Gybson.

Which three were produced before Boner B. of London, the v. day of Nouem. 1557. and had by hym and his Officers certaine Articles ministred, the summe whereof hereafter followeth.

Articles ministred by Boner vnto Iohn Hallingdale.

Ffirst, that the sayd Iohn Hallyngdale is of the Diocesse of London, and so subiect to the iurisdiction of the Bishop of London.*

Secondly, that the sayd Iohn before the tyme of the raigne of K. Edward the 6 late K. of England, was of the same fayth and religion that was then obserued, beleueed, taught, & set forth in the realme of England.

Thirdly, that duryng the raigne of the sayd K. Edward the 6. the said Iohn Hallingdale, vppon occasion of the preachyng of certaine ministers in that tyme, did not abide in his former fayth and religion, but did depart from it, and so did and doth continue till this present day, and so determineth to do (as he sayeth) tyll his lyues ende.

Fourthly, that the sayd Iohn Hallyngdale hath thought, beleueed and spoken diuers tymes, that the sayth, religion, and ecclesiasticall seruice receiued, obserued & vsed now in this realme of England, is not good and laudable, but agaynst Gods commādemēt and word, especially concernyng the Masse and the seuē Sacraments: and that he the sayd Iohn, wil not in any wyse conforme hymselfe to the same, but speake and thinke agaynst it duryng his naturall lyfe.

Fiftly, that the sayd Iohn absenteth himselfe continually frō his owne Parish church of S. Leonards, neyther hearing Mattins, Masse, nor Euensong, nor yet confessing his sinnes to the Priest, or receiuyng the Sacrament of the aultar at his hands, or in vsing other Ceremonies as they are nowe vsed in this Church and realme of England: and as he remembreth, he neuer came but once in the parish church of S. Leonard, and careth not (as hee sayth) if he neuer come there any more, the seruice beyng as it is there, and so many abuses being there, as he saith there are, especially Page 2026 the Masse,*the Sacraments, and the ceremonies and seruice set forth in Latine.

6. Sixtly, that the sayd Iohn, when his wife, called Alyce, was brought in bed of a man child, caused the said child to be christened in English, after the same maner and forme in all poyntes, as it was vsed in the time of the reigne of king Edward the 6. aforesayd, and caused it to be called Iosue, & would not haue the sayd child christened in Latin after the forme and maner as it is nowe vsed in the Church and Realme of Englande, nor will haue it by his will (as he sayth) to be confirmed by the Byshop.

Unto all whiche Articles the sayde Iohn Hallingdale made aunswere,* confessing them all, and euery part of thē to be true, and saying that he would not reuoke hys sayde aunsweres, but stand vnto them according as it was in euery Article aboue written.

Furthermore, the sayde Iohn Hallingdale, being demaunded by the sayde Boner, whether he did firmly beleue that in the sacrament commonly called the sacrament of the aultar,* there is really and truely the very body and bloud of our Sauour Christ, or nor made answere that he neither in the time of the sayd king Edward 6. nor at that present did beleue, that in the sayd Sacrament there is really the very body and bloud of Christ. For he sayd that if he had so beleued, he would (as other had done) haue receiued the same, which he did not because he had and then did beleue that the very body of Christ is onely in heauen, and no where els. And furthermore the sayd Ioh. Hallingdale sayd that Crāmer, Latimer, Ridley, Hooper, and generally all that of late haue bene burned for heretickes, were no heretickes at all, because they did preach truely the Gospell: vpon whose preaching, he grounded his fayth & conscience, as he sayde, according to the saying of S. Iohn in the xvij. chap. of his Reuelation, where he sayth, that the bloud of the Prophets and of the Sayntes, and of all that were slayne vppon earth, was founde in the Babilonick church by the which he said is vnderstād the church where the Pope is the head.

After which examination, the sayd Iohn was sent vnto prison agayne.* And the next day, being the vi. daye of the sayd moneth, he was called before the Bishop agayne, who perswading him with some wrested sentences of the Scripture, the sayd Iohn Hallingdale aunswered: Because I will not (sayth he) come to your Babilonick church, therefore (speaking vnto Boner) you goe about to condemne me. And being of Boner further demaunded, whether he would perseuer and stand in his opinions or no, he made aunswere that he would continue and persist in them vnto the death.* Then Boner read the bloody sentence of condemnation. At which time the sayd Iohn affirmed openly that (thanking God) he neuer came into the church since the abhomination came into it: and so he was sent to prison agayne.

Upon the same 6. day also, in the fornoone, was produced before the Byshop, the forenamed William Sparrow, and had layed vnto him certayne Articles, which hereafter foloweth.

Articles ministred by Boner vnto William Sparrow.

*First, that thou William Sparrow wast in times past detected & presented lawfully vnto thy Ordinary the Byshop of London, called Edmund, who also is now thine Ordinary of the sayd dioces: and thou wast presented and detected vnto him for heresye, errors, and vnlawfull opinions, whiche thou diddest beleue, set forth, and holde.

2. Secondly, that thou before the sayd Ordinary didst openly & iudicially confesse the sayde heresies, errorrs, and vnlawfull opinions, as appeareth playnly in the actes of the court, had & made before thy sayd Ordinary.

3. Thirdly, that thou after the premises, didst make thy submission in writing, and diddest exhibite and deliuer the same as thy deed, to thy sayd Ordinarye: openly confessing and recognising thy heresies, errorrs, vnlawfull opinions, and thine offences & transgressions in that behalfe.

4. Fourthly, that thou after the premisses, diddest promise vnto thy sayde Ordinary voluntarily and of thine owne minde, that alwayes after the sayd submission, thou wouldest in all poyntes conforme thy selfe vnto the common order of the Catholicke Church obserued and kept here in this Realme of Englande, and in no wise fall agayne to heresies, errorrs, or vnlawfull opinions.

5. Fiftly, that thou since thy sayd submission, hast willingly fallen into certayne heresies and errorrs, and hast holden and sette forth diuers vnlawfull opinions, to the right great hurt of thyne owne soule, and also to the great hinderaunce and losse of diuers others, especially agaynst the Sacrament of the Aultar, agaynste confession auricular, with other the Sacramentes of the Catholicke Church.

6. Sixtly, that thou since the sayd submissiō, hast willingly gone about diuers places within the dioces of London, and souldē diuers hereticall, erroneous, and blasphemous ballets about, and wast apprehended and taken with the sayd ballets about thee, & committed to prison.

Unto all which Articles the sayd William Sparrowe aunswered in effect as hereafter foloweth.

TO the first, second, third, and fourth articles he answered affirmatiuely, as thus: * that he was presented & detected to Boner, vnto whō he made his submission. &c. as in the articles.

To the fifth article, he aunswered, that if he had spoken agaynst thē, he had spokē but the truth: for they be nought, meaning the contentes of the sayd article.

To the sixte, he graunted to the article, adding that he did sell the sayd ballets then shewed and read before him, & that the same did contēne Gods word.

After which aunsweres the sayde William Sparrowe was sent vnto prison. And the same day in the afternoone, being produced before the Bishop agayne, and there charged with his said Submission, made the yeare before vnto the Byshop, he aunswered thus: I am sorry (sayd he) that euer I made it, and it was the worst deed that euer I did, adding further vnto them: Holde vp your abhomination so long as you can. Also being layd vnto him, and charged by the Byshoppe that he went to Church, and there was confessed and heard Masse, the sayde William Sparrow made answere and confessed, that he did so, but with a troubled conscience he sayde, God knoweth. And speaking further to the Byshoppe, he sayde: that which you call trueth, I doe beleue (sayd he) to be heresy. And also the Byshoppe charging him agayne with the contentes of the fifth article aboue named, he aunswered that he had so done, as is conteyned in the same article, and so will do agayne if he were at liberty. And being further demaunded of Boner, whether he woulde persist and continue in the same, or no: he made aunswere that he would not go from his opinions: and adding thereunto, he sayd: that which you call heresy (speaking to the Byshoppe) is good and Godly, and if euery hayre of my head were a manne (sayd he) I would burne them all, rathe then to goe from the truth.

Then being demaunded what ground of learning hee had to cleaue to his opinions, he made aunswere and sayd, that all the lawes now vsed (meaning the Ecclesiasticall lawes) are nought and abhominable. And further, therevnto he sayd: that the Masse is nought and abhominable. &c. Which wordes being spoken, * the Byshop immediately read the sentence of condemnation vpon him, and so deliuered him to the secular power, by whome he was sent to prison agayne.

Richard Gibson Martyr.

Wlth the other two aboue named, suffered also in the same fire, Richard Gibson, * who first was cast into the Counter in the Poultry (where he had bene prisoner by the space of two yeares for suretishippe in a matter of debt, & then stood vpon his deliuerance) then vpon suspition and euill will was accused to Boner, for that in the prison he was neuer confessed nor receiued at the Popishe aultar: by reason whereof he was called for, and susteined diuers & sundry conflictcs and examinations in the cause of his fayth and religion. But first he semed to make a certeine submission which also he exhibited with the other 28. mentioned aboue pag. 1865. but because it seemed something to differ in wordes from the other, it appeareth not to be receiued: or whether it was receiued or no, it is not fully certayne. This is certayne, that although his submission was in the bishops Register recorded, yet he was not deliuered out from imprisonment till the daye of his burning. The Articles first objected and ministred vnto hym by the Bishop, were these.

Articles objected and ministred to Richard Gibson by Boner Bishop of London.

First, that the sayd Richard Gibson prisoner in the Counter in the Pultry in the dioces of Lōdō,*hath otherwise thē became a faythfull Christian man and a good subiecte of this Realme of England, behaued himselfe in wordes and deedes in diuers conditions and poyntes, contrarye to the order, Religion, and fayth of Christes Catholicke church, and contrary to the order of this Realme, to the pernicious and euill example of the inhabitauntes Page 2027 of the City of London, and the prisoners of the prison of the sayd Counter in the Poultry, and greatly to the hurt & dammage of his owne soule, offending especially in the Artiles followyng. By reason whereof the sayde Richard Gibson was, and is of the iurisdiction of the sayde Byshoppe of London, and subiect to the sayd iurisdiction, to make aunsweare to his offences and transgression vnder written, according to the order of the law.

2. Secondly, that the sayd Richard Gibson hath vnreuerentlye spoken agaynste the Pope, and Sea and Churche of Rome, and likewise agaynst the whole Church of this Realme of Englande, and agaynst the seuen Sacramentes of the Catholicke and whole Churche of Christendome and agaynst the Articles of the Christian fayth here obserued in this Realme of England, and agaynst the commendable and laudable Ceremonies of the Catholicke Church.

3. Thirdly, that the sayd Richard Gibson hath commended, allowed, defended, and liked, both Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, and also all other heretickes here in this Realme of Englande, according to the Ecclesiasticall lawes condemned for heretickes, and also liked all their hereticall and erroneous, damnable, and wicked opinions, especially agaynst the Sacrament of the aultar, and the authority of the Pope and Sea of Rome, with the whole Religion therof.

4 Fourthly, that the sayd Richard Gibson hath cōforted, ayded, assisted and mainteined both by words and otherwise, hereticks and erroneous persons, or at the least suspected and infamed of heresies and errors condemned by the Catholicke Churche, to continue in their hereticall and erroneous opinions aforesayde, fauouring and counselling the same vnto his power.

5. Fifthly, that the sayd Gibson hath affirmed and sayde that the Religion and Fayth commonly obserued, kepte, and vsed now here in this Realme of Englande,*is not good and laudable nor in any wise agreable vnto Gods word and commaundement.

6. Sixtly, that the sayd Gibson hath affirmed that the English seruice, and the bookes commonly called the bookes of communion, or common prayer, here set forth in this Realme of Englande in the time of K Edwarde the sixt,*were in all partes and poyntes good and godlye, and that the same onely and no other ought to be obserued and kept in this Realme of England.

7. Seuenthly that the sayd Gibson hath affirmed, that if he may once be out of prison and at liberty, he will not come to any parish church,*or ecclesiasticall place to heare Mattins Masse▪ Euē|song, or any diuine seruice now vsed in this Realme of Englande, nor come to procession vpon times and dayes accustomed, nor beare at any time any Taper or Candle, nor receiue at any tyme Ashes, nor beare at anye time Palme, nor receiue Pax at Masse time, nor receiue holy water, nor holy bread, nor obserue the ceremonies or vsages of the Catholicke Church, here obserued or kept commonly in this realme of England.

8. Eightly, that the said Gibson hath affirmed that he is not boūd at any time, though he haue liberty, and the presence of a Priest conuenient and meete,*to confesse his sinnes to the sayd Prieste, nor to receiue absolution of his sinnes, at his handes, nor to receiue of him the sacrament commonly called the Sacramente of the aultar, after such forme as is now vsed within this Realme of England.

9. Ninthly, that the sayd Gibson hath affirmed, that prayer vnto Sayntes,*or prayers for the dead, are not laudable, auayleable, or profitable: and that no man is bound at any time, or in any place, to fast or pray, but onely at his owne will and pleasure, and that it is not lawful to reserue or keepe the sayd sacrament of the aultar, nor in any wise to adore and worship it.

The greatest matter whiche hee was charged withall, was for not comming to Confession, being thereunto required, for not receiuing of the sacramentes of the Popysh making, and for that he would not sweare to answere vnto theyr interrogatoryes layd agaynst him.

Notwithstanding after these his first examinations, he continued in the aforesayde Prison of the Counter a good space, from the moneth of May, vnto Nouember: at what time he was agayne produced vnto the finall examinatiō iudiciary.* Where is to bee noted, that M. Gibson being a very big and talle man, of a personable and heroycall stature, was sent for of Boner by a little and short person, a promoter, like Robin Papiste, called Robin Caley, if it were not he himselfe.

This Robin Caley hauing the conducting of the sayde Gentleman from the Pultry, would needes hale him thorow Chepeside, the gentleman desiring him to turne some other waye.* But the more the Gentleman entreated, the more fierce was the sely iack vpon him: and drawing and holding him by the arme, woold needes hale him through the high street, that the all world might see what he coulde do in his office. M. Gibsō desirous to be led without holding, willed and entreated him to let his arme loose: he would go quietly of his accord w^t him whether he would, onely crauing that he might go by him freely without noting of the people.

The saucy and impotent miser the Promoter hearing this, who was scarce able to reach vnto his shoulders: nay (sayth he) thou shalt not escape me so, come on thy wayes. Thou shalt not choose but come: & so reaching at his arme, would needes drag him vnto the Byshop. The Gentleman content to goe, yet loth to be notified in the streetes, gently requested agayne and agayne, that re•rayning hys hold, he would suffer him to goe of his owne free and volūtary will: he should not neede to feare him, for he would not start frō him. To whom the Caytiff, looking vp to his face: Come on thy way, sayth he, I wil hold thee fast, spite thy beard, and whether thou wilt or no.

Mayster Gibson seing and beholding the intollerable bragging of the wretched miser, and moued therwith not a little, could beare no longer, but sayd: Wilt thou sayd he? and addeth moreouer, bitterlye looking downe towards hym, that if he dyd not incontinentlye plucke away hys hand (and so stayed withall) he would immediatly wring his necke from his body. Whereupon Robin Papist the Promoter, was fayne to plucke away his holde, and so proceeded they vnto the Bishop, there to bee examined agayne before him.

After this,* an other day being assigned him to appeare agayne, muche talke past betweene him and Darbyshyre, then Chauncellour. But in fine, being required to sweare that he should aunswere vnto all they would demaund, he denyed to aunswere vnto all thinges the Bishops should commaund hym as Ordinary: for he is not (sayeth he) mine Ordinary, and so bidde him goe tell the Byshoppe. Before the which Byshoppe he being then commaunded to appeare the Friday next following, was brought vnto the Iustice Hall without Newgate, where he had the like conflictes with the foresayde Bishoppe and diuers other Iustices. At length he was assigned the Saterdaye folowing, to be present in the Bishops consistory Court, to heare his finall sentence. At whiche day and place, the sayd Examinee appearyng as he was commaunded, the Byshop after other matter of communication, asked hym if he knew any cause why the sentence should not be read agaynst hym. To whom the sayd Mayster Gibson aunswered, that the Bishoppe had nothing wherefor iustly to condemne him. The Bishops reason was agayne obiected to him, that men sayd he was an euil man. To whom Gibson replying agayne: yea, sayth he, and so may I saye of you also. To be short, after this and such other talke, the Bishop hasted vnto the sentence. Which being read, Gibson yet agayne admonished to remember himselfe and to saue his soule, sayd,* that he would not heare the Byshops babling, and sayde moreouer, boldly protesting and affirming that he was contrarye and an enemye to them all in his mind and opinion, although he had afore time kepte it secret in minde for feare of the law. And speaking to the bishop: blessed, sayd he, am I that am cursed at your handes. We haue no•hing now, but thus will I. For as the bishop sayth, so must it be. And now heresy is to turne the trueth of Gods word into lyes, and that do you, meaning the bishop and his felowes.

Thus this valiaunt souldiour fighting for the Gospel and sincere doctrine of Gods trueth and religion, agaynst falsehood and errour, was committed with his felowes to the secular power.

And so these three godly men, Iohn Hallingdale, William Sparrow, and Maister Gibson,* being thus appointed to the slaughter, were the xij. day after theyr condemnation (which was the xviij. day of the sayde Moneth of Nouember) burnt in Smithfielde in London. And beyng brought thyther to the stake, after theyr prayer made, they were bound thereunto with cheines, and wood sette vnto them, and after wood, fire, in the which being compassed about, and the fierye flames consuming theyr fleshe, at y^e last they yelded gloriously and ioyfully theyr soules and lyues into the holy bandes of the Lord, to whose tuition and gouernement, I commend thee good Reader. Amen.

¶It is a litle aboue declared in this story of Richarde Gibson, how Boner ministred vnto the layd Gibson certeyne Articles, to the nūber of nine. Now let vs see lykewise the Articles which the sayde Gibson ministred agayne to Boner, according to the same number of nine for him to aunswere vnto, as by the same here vnder written may appeare.

¶Articles proponed by Richard Gibson vnto Edmund Boner, Byshop of London, by him to be aunswered, be yea, or nay, or els to say he cannot tell

1. Whether the Scriptures of God, written by Moyses, & other holy Prophetes of God, through fayth that is in Christ Iesus,* is auayleable doctrine to make all men in all thinges vnto saluation learned without the helpe of anye other doctrine, or no.

2. What is authority and from whence it commeth, to whom it apperteineth, and to what end it tendeth.

3. Whether the holy word of God, as it is written, doth sufficiently teach all men, of what dignity, estate, or calling by office so euer he or they be, theyr full, true, and lawfull duety in theyr office: and whether euery man of what dignity, estate, or calling by office so euer he or they be, are bound vpon the payne of eternall damnation in all thinges to do as they are hereby taught & commaunded, and in no wise to leaue vndone any thing that is to be done, being taught and commaunded by the same.

4 Whether any man, the Lorde Iesu Christ God and man onely except, by the holye ordinaunce of God euer was, is, or shall be Lord ouer fayth, and by what lawfull authority any man, of what dignity, estate, or calling by office soeuer he or they be, may vse Lordship or power ouer any man for fayth sake or for the secrecy of his conscience.

5. By what lawfull authority or power any man, of what dignity, estate, or calling so euer he or they be, may be so bolde as to alter or chaunge the holy ordinaunces of God, or any of them, or any part of them.

6. By what euident tokens Antichrist in his Ministers may bee knowne, seing it is written that Sathan can chaunge himselfe in to the similitude of an Aungell of light, and his ministers fashion themselves as though they were the Ministers of righteousnesse, and how it may be knowne to him that is desirous thereof, when he is one of that number or in the daunger thereof, or when he is otherwise.

7. What the beast is, the which maketh warre with the Sayntes of God, and doth not onely kill them, but also will suffer none to buy nor sell, but such as worship his Image, or receiue his marke in theyr right handes, or in theyr foreheades, his name or the number of his name, or do worship his Image, which hy the iuste and terrible sentence of God already decreed, shalbe punished in fire and brimstone before the holy Angels and before the lambe: and they shall haue no rest day nor night, but the smoake of their torment shall ascend vp for euermore: Also what the gorgious & glittering whore is, the which sitteth vpon the beast with a Cup of gold in her hand, full of abominations, with whom the kings of the earth haue committed fornication, and the inhabitours of the earth and she her selfe also is dronken with the bloud of Sainctes, which is the wine of her fornication, whose flesh the hornes of the beast shall teare in pieces, and burne her with fire. For god hath put in their hartes to do his will.

8. Whether a king ouer all those people whiche are borne and inhabite within his owne dominions, regions, and countryes, or any part of them, of what dignity, estate, or calling by office soeuer they be, here vpon this earth immediately vnder Christ, by the holy ordinaunce of God, is lawfull, supreame, and chiefe Gouvernor or no: And whether a king ouer all those people within his dominions, regions and countryes, and euery part of them, by holy ordinaunce of God, lawfully may, and ought not otherwise to doe, nor suffer otherwise to be done, then in his owne name, power, and authority (the name of God onely except) as lawfull, supreame and chiefe heade in all thinges that belongeth to rule (without exception) to gouerne and rule: And whether all those people of what dignity, estate, or calling soeuer they be, are boūd by the holy ordinaunce of God, to owe theyr whole obedience and seruice in all thinges without exception (theyr duety to god onely excepted) to their king onely, as to theyr supreame and chiefe Gouvernour vpon earth immediately vnder Christ: And whether a king without offence agaynst GOD and his people, maye geue away, and not himselfe vse that his authoritye and power geuen him of God, or lawfully may without offence to God and his people (after knowledge thereof hadde) suffer himselfe by fraud or guile, or by any other vnlawfull meane, to be beguiled, defrauded, and spoyled thereof, and whether any subiect, of what dignity, estate, or calling soeuer he or they be, without offence to God and to his kinge, to the minishing or derogating of the supreme prerogatiue roial of his king or of any part therof, may do ought, or after knowledge therof, had without offence to God & to his king, may conceale the same.

9. Whether the holy written law of God be geuen of God vnto all men, of what dignity, estate, or calling by office soeuer they be,* aswell thereby to gouerne all theyr Dominions, Regions, and Countryes, and theyr people therin inhabiting, as themselues: and whether any law or lawes (the holy law of God onely excepted) not being made within any Dominion, Region, or Country whereas it or they be vsed, may be lawfully vsed before it or they be, as the lawfull law or lawes of the same Dominion, Region o• Countrey, by publicke and common order of the same Dominion, Region, or Countrey lawfully allowed: and whether any subiect without offence agaynst God and his king, within the Dominion of his king, may lawfully vse any such lawe or lawes not so allowed.

Emanuel,

¶Ascribe vnto the Lord, O ye mighty, ascribe vnto the Lord, worship and strength: geue the Lord the honor of his name,* and bow your selues to the holy maiesty of the Lord.

I will harken what the Lord God will say:* for he shall speake peace vnto his people, that they turne not themselues vnto foolishnes. This 6. of Aprill. 1557.

By me Richard Gibson.

¶The death and Martyrdome of Iohn Rough Minister, and Margaret Mearing burned at London the 22. of December.

IN this furious time of persecution, were also burned these two constant and faythfull Martyrs of Christ, Iohn Rough a Minister,* and Margaret Mearing.

This Rough was borne in Scotland, who (as himselfe confesseth in his aunsweres to Boners Articles) because some of his kinsfolke woulde haue kept hym frō his right of inheritaunce which he had to certaine landes, did at the age of xvij. yeares,* in despite (and the rather to displease his frendes) professe himselfe into the order of the blacke Friers at Sterling in Scotlande: where he remained the space of xvj. yeres, vntill such time as the Lord Hamulton, Earle of Arren, and gouernour of the Realme of Scotland aforesayde (casting a fauour vnto hym) did sue vnto the Archbishop of Saynt Andrewes, to haue him out of his professed order, that as a Seculare Prieste he might serue hym for his Chapleine. At which request the Archbischoppe caused the Prouincial of that house, hauing thereto authority, to dispence with hym for his habite and order.

This sute beyng thus by the Earle obtained, the sayde Rough remayned in his seruice one whole yeare:* duryng which time it pleased God to open his eyes, and to geue him some knowledge of his truth, and thereupon was by the sayd gouernour sent to preach in the freedome of Ayre, where he continued foure yeares, and then after the death of the Cardinall of Scotland, he was appoynted to abyde at S. Andrewes, and there had assigned vnto him a yearely pension of xx. pound from king Henry the eight Kyng of England. Howbeit, at last waying with himselfe hys owne daūger, and also abhorring the Idolatry and superstition of this countrey, and hearing of the freedome of the Gospell within this Realme of England, he determyned with himselfe not to tary any longer there: And therefore soone after the battel of Muscle bourough, he came first vnto Carliell, and from thence vnto the Duke of Somerset, then Lord Protectour of England,* and by his assignment had appoynted vnto him out of the Kinges treasurye xx. poundes of yearely stipend, and was sent (as a Preacher) to serue at Carliell, Barwicke, and Newcastell. From whence (after he had there, according to the lawes of God and also of this Realme, taken a countrey woman of hys to wife) he was called by the Archbyshoppe of Yorke that then was, vnto a benefice nighe in the Towne of Hull: where he continued vntill the death of that blessed & good king Edward the 6.

But in the beginning of the reigne of Queene Marye (perceyuyng the alteration of Religion, and the persecution that woulde thereupon arise, and feeling hys owne weakenes) he fled with his wife into Friseland,* & dwelte there at a place called Norden, labouring truely for his liuing, in knitting of Cappes, hose, and such like thinges, till about the end of the moneth of October last before hys death. At which tyme, lacking yeare and other suche necessary prouision for the mainteinaunce of his occupation, he came ouer againe into England, here to prouide for the same, and the x. daye of Nouember arriued at London. Where hearing of the secret society, and holy Congregation of Gods children there assembled, he ioyned himselfe vnto them,* and afterwarde being elected theyr Minister and Preacher, did continue moste vertuously exercised in that Godly felowshippe, teaching and confirming them in the trueth and Gospell of Christ. But in the ende (suche was the prouidence of God, who disposeth all thinges to the best, the xij. day of December, he with Cutbert Symson Page 2029 and others,* through the crafty and trayterous suggestion of a false Hipocrite and dissembling Brother called Roger Sergeaunt, a taylour, were apprehended by the Uicechamberlayne of the Queenes house, at the Saracēs head in Islington:* where the Congregation had thē purposed to assemble themselues to theyr Godly and accustomable exercises of prayer, and hearing the word of God: which pretence, for the safegarde of all the rest, they yet at theyr examinations, couered and excused by hearing of a playe that was then appoynted to be at that place. The Uicechamberlayne after he had apprehended them, caried •ough and Symson vnto the Counsell, who charged thē to haue assembled together to celebrate the Communion or Supper of the Lord, and therefore after sundry examinations and aunswares, they sent the sayd Rough vnto Newgate: but his examinations they sēt vnto the bishop of London, with a Letter signed with they handes, the copy wherof foloweth.

¶A Letter sent from the Queenes Councell vnto Boner, Bishop of London, touching the examination of Iohn Rough Minister.

*After our harty commendations to your good Lordship, we send you here inclosed the examination of a Scottish man, named Iohn Rough, who by the Queenes Maiesties commaundement is presentlye sent to Newgate, beyng of the chiefe of them that vpon Sunday last, vnder the colour of comming to see a Play at the Saracens head in Islington, had prepared a communion to be celebrated and receiued there among certayne other seditious and hereticall persons. And forasmuch as by the sayde Roughes examination, conteining the story and progresse of hys former life, it well appereth of what sort he is: the queenes highnes hath willed vs to remit him vnto your Lordship, to the ende that being called before you out of prison, as ofte as your Lordship shall think good, ye may proceed, both to his further examination, and otherwise ordering of him, according to the lawes, as the case shall require. And thus we bidde your Lordshippe hartely well to fare. From Saynt Iames the 15. day of December. 1557.

Boner nowe minding to make quicke dispatche, dyd wythin three dayes after the receipt of the Letter (the xviiij. day of December) send for this Rough out of Newgate, and in his Palace at London ministred vnto him 12. Articles: Many whereof because they conteine onely questions of the profession and Religion of that age, wherein both he and his Parentes were Christened (which in sūdry places are already mentioned) I doe here for breuity omitte: minding to touche suche onely, as perteyne to matters of fayth now in controuersy, and then chiefly obiected agaynst the Martyrs and Saynts of God, which in effect are these.

1. First, that thou Iohn Rough diddest directly speake agaynst the 7. Sacramentes,* vsed commonlye and reuerently, as thinges of estimation and great worthines in the catholick church: and also diddest reprove and condemne the substance of the sayd Sacramentes, but especially the Sacrament of the aultar, affirming that in that same is not really and truely the very body & bloud of Christ: and that confession to the priest, and absolution geuen by him (as the minister of Christ) for sinnes, is not necessary or auayleable in any wise.

2. Item, thou hast misliked and reprobued the religion and ecclesiasticall seruice, as it is now vsed in this realme, and hast allowed the religion and seruice vsed in the latter yeares of king Edward the 6. and so much as in thee hath leyne,* hast by word, writing, & deed, set forwardes, taught, and preached the same openly, and in sundry places, affirmed, that the sayde Englishe seruice and doctrine therein contained, is agreable in all poyntes to Gods word and vnto the truth, condemning vtterly the Latine seruice nowe vsed in the Queenes reigne, and inducing other by thine example to do the like

3. Item, thou hast in sundrye places within this Realme commended and approued the opinion & doctrine of Thomas Cranmer, late Archbishop of Canterbury. Nicholas Ridley, & Hugh Latimer, concerning the Sacrament of the altuar, affirming that in the Sacrament there remayneth after the wordes of consecration, materiall breade and materiall wine, without any transubstantiation.

4. Item, thou hast in sundrye places of this Realme, since the Queenes reigne, ministred and receiued the Communion as it was vsed in the late daies of king Edward the sixt,* and thou knowest, or credibly hast heard of diuers, that yet do keepe bookes of the sayd Communion, and vse the same in priuate houses ou• of the Church, and are of opinion agaynst the Sacrament of the altuar.

5. Item, that thou in sundry places of this realme hast spoken agaynst the Pope of Rome and his Apostolicke sea,* & hast plainly contemned & despised the authority of the same, misliking & not allowing the faith and doctrine therof, but directly speaking agaynst it, and by thine example hast induced other the subiects of this realme, to speake and do the like.

6. Item, thou doest knowe, and hast bene conuersaunt with all, or a great part of such English men as haue fledde out of this Realme for Religion, and hast consented and agreed with them in theyr opinions, and hast succoured, maynteyned, and holpen them, and hast bene a conueyer of theyr seditious Letters and bookes into this realme.

7. Item, that thou hast sayd, that thou hast bene at Rome, and taryed there about 30. dayes or more, and that thou hast sene litle good or none there, but very much euill.* Amongest the which thou sawest one great abomination, that is to say, a man (or the Pope) that shoulde goe on the ground, to bee carried vppon the shoulders of foure men, as though he had bene God and no mā: Also, a Cardinall to haue his harlot riding openly behinde hym: And thirdly a Popes Bull that gaue expresse licence to haue and vse the stewes, and to keepe open bawdry by the Popes approbation and authority.

8. Item, that thou sithens thy last comming into England out of the parties beyond the sea, hast perniciously allured and comforted diuers of the subiectes of this Realme, both young, olde men, and women, to haue and vse the booke of Communion, set forth in this Realme in the latter daies of king Edward the sixt, and hast also thy selfe read and sette forth the same, causing others to doe the like, and to leaue theyr comming to their parish churches to heare the Latine seruice now vsed.

9. Item, that thou the thirde sondaye of Aduent the xij. daye of this December. 1557. wast apprehended at the Saracens heade at Islington, in the county of Middlesexe and dioces of London, by the Queenes Vicechamberlayne, with one Cutbert a Taylour,* Hugh a hosier, and diuers other there assembled, vnder the colour of hearing a playe, to haue read the communion booke, and to haue vsed the accustomed fashion, as was in the latter dayes of king Edward the sixt.

The aunsweres of Iohn Rowgh to the foresayd Articles.

1. TO the first he said and confessed that he had spoken against the number of the sayde sacramentes,*being fully perswaded that there be but onely two Sacramentes: to wit, baptisme, and the supper of the Lord: and as for the other fiue, he denyed them to be sacramentes, and therefore hath spoken agaynste them. And as concerning the sacrament of the aultar (which he then called the supper of the Lord) he confessed that he had spoken and taught that in the sayde sacrament there is not really and substantially the very body and bloud of Christ, but that the substance of bread and wine doth remayne in the sayde Sacrament, withou any transubstantiation at all. Farther as touching confession of sinnes to the priest, he answered that he thought it necessary, if the offence were done vnto the priest: but if the offēce were done to another, then confession made to the priest is not necessary, but reconciliation onely to bee made to the partye so offended.

2. To the second, he aunswered that he then did and had before misliked the order of latine seruice then vsed: and also did allowe the seruice vsed in the latter time of King Edwardes reigne, for that the holy scripture doth the same, and therefore he graunted that he did teach and set forth the sayd Englishe seruice, as in the same article is obiected.

3. To the third, he graunted that he had approued the doctrine of the parties articulate as agreable to Gods word, and that they were godly learned men, and such as had perfect vnderstandyng in the contentes of the same article.

4. To the fourth, he aunswered that hee did well like the Communion vsed in Kyng Edwardes dayes, but sayde that he had not ministred or receyued the same here in England since the Queenes reygne, neyther yet knewe any that had the bookes thereof. But on the other side, he knew many that had those bookes, and that there also hee hadde receiued the Communion in sundrye places.

5. The contentes of the fift he graunted to be true.

6. To the sixt, he confessed that he had bene familiar with diuers Englishe menne and women being in Friseland, and agreed with them in opinion, as Maister Scory, Thomas Young, George Roo, and others, to the number of one hundreth persons, whiche fled thither for Religion, vsing there the order set forth in the reigne of king Edward, and otherwise he denyeth the contentes of thys Article.

7. The contentes of the seuenth hee graunted in euery poynt to be true.

Page 2030*8. To the eight he aunswered and confessed that sithens his last comming into England (which was aboue the x. day of Nouember) he had in sundry places in the suburbes of London prayed and read such prayers and seruice, as is appoynted in the booke of the communion, and hadde willed others to doe the like, both men and women, which he did know by sight, but not by name. Howbeit he didde neyther cause any to withdrawe themselues from the Latine seruice, but he sayed that it were better to pray in a tongue that they didde vnderstande, then in an vnknowne tongue.

9. To the ninth, he confessed that the time and place articulate he was present to heare and see a playe, and there was apprehended by the Queenes Maiesties Vicechamberleyne, with one Cutbert a taylour, and one Hugh a hosier, and diuers other both men and women, whose names he knewe not, and by him was brought before the Counsell, who sent him vnto Newgate, and from thence he was brought to the bishop. And othwise he denieth the contentes of this Article.

Upon these answeres he was dismissed, and the nexte day (being the xix. of December) he was agayne brought before the sayd Byshop and others.* Who, when they perceiued his constantnesse, determined the nexte day after to bring him openly into the Consistory, there to adiudge, & condemne him as an hereticke. Whiche purpose they accomplished. For the xx. day at afternoone, in the presence of the Byshops of London, and S. Dauides, with Fecknam Abbot of Westminster, and others he was there produced. Where, after mucche and many fayre perswasions, Boner read vnto him the articles, and aunsweres before mentioned, in the which they charged him to haue receyued the orders of the church, and therefore might not mary, and that he had refused to consent vnto the Latine seruice then vsed in the Church. Whereunto he then aunswered and sayde, that theyr orders were no thing at all, and that he being a Prieste might lawfully mary, and that hys children whiche he had by his wife, were lawfull. And as touching the seruice then vsed, he vtterly detested it, saying, that if he should liue as long as did Methusalach yet he would neuer come to the Church to heare the abhominable Masse and other seruice, being as it was then. Upō which wordes the Bishop proceeded to the actuall degradation of the sayde Rough,* exempting him from all the benefites and priuiledges of theyr Church, and after condemning him as an hereticke, committed his body to the secular power, who taking him into their charge and custody, caried him vnto Newgate.

Moreouer, as touching the sayde M. Rough, this is further to be noted,* that he being in the North country in the dayes of king Edward the sixt, was the meane to saue Doctor Watsons life (who in queene Maryes tyme was Byshop of Lincolne) for a Sermon that hee made there. The sayd Watson after that, in the sayde dayes of Queene Marye, being with Boner at the examination of the sayde M. Rough, to requite the good turne in sauving his life, de, tected him there to be a pernicious hereticke who did more hurt in the North partes, then an hundreth besides of hys opinions. Unto whom M. Rough sayd agayne. Why sir, is this the rewarde I haue for sauving your life, when you preached erroneous doctrine in the dayes of king Edward the sixt? This M. Rough sayd, he had liued thirty yeares, and yet had neuer bowed his knee to Baall: and being before Boner, among other talke, he affirmed that he hadde bene twice at Rome, and there had sene playnely with his eyes, whiche he had manye times heard of before, namelye that the pope was the very Antichrist, for there he saw him caried on mens shoulders, and the false named sacrament borne before him. Yet was there more reuerence geuen to him, then to that which they counted to be theyr GOD. Whē Boner heard this, rising vp, and making as though he would haue torne his garmentes: hast thou (sayd hee) bene at Rome, and sene our holy father the Pope, & doest thou blaspheme him after this sort, and with that flying vpon him he plucked of a piece of his beard: and after making speedy haste to his death, he burnt him half an houre before sixe of the clocke in the morning, because the day (belike) shoulde not be farre spent, before he had done a mischieuous deed.

Furthermore note that this Mayster Rough being at the burning of Austoo in Smithfield, and returning home ward agayne, met with one Mayster Farrar, a Marchant of Hallifaxe, who asked him where hee had beene. Unto whō he aunswered: I haue bene (saith he) where I would not for one of mine eyes, but I had bene. Where haue you bene, sayd M. Farrar? Forsoothe sayth hee to learne the way. And so he tolde hym hee had bene at the burning of Austoo, where shortly after he was burned hymselfe.

¶A letter written by Iohn Rough, vnto certeine of his godly frendes, confirming and strengthning them in the truth, which he had before taught.

The comfort of the holy Ghost make you able to geue consolation to others, in these daungerous dayes, when Sathan is let lose, but to the triall onely of the chosen, when it pleaseth our God to sift his wheat from the Chaffe. I haue not leysure & tyme to write the great tēptations I haue bene vnder. I speak to Gods glory: my care was to haue the senses of my soule open, to perceiue the voyce of God, saying: Who so euer denyeth me before men, him will I deny before my father and his aungels. And to saue the life corporall, is to lose the life eternall. And he that will not suffer with Christ, shall not reigne with him. Therefore most tender ones, I haue by Gods spirite geuen ouer the flesh, with the fight of my soule, and the spirite hath the victory. The fleshe shall now ere it be long, leaue of to sinne: the spirite shall reigne eternally. I haue chosē the death to confirme the truth by me taught. What can I do more? Consider with your selues, that I haue done it for the confirmation of Gods trueth. Pray that I may continue vnto the end. The greatest part of the assault is paste, I prayse my God. I haue in all my assaultes felt the present ayde of my God, I geue him most hartly thanks therefore. Looke not backe, nor be ye ashamed of Christes Gospell, nor of the bonds I haue suffered for the same: thereby ye may be assured it is the true word of God. The holy ones haue bene sealed with the same marke. It is no time for the losse of one man in the battell, for the campe to turne backe. Vp with mennes hartes, blowe downe the dawbed walles of heresies: Let one take the Banner, and the other the Trumpette, I meane not to make corporall resistance, but pray, and ye shall haue Elias defence, and Elizeus company to fight for you. The cause is the Lordes. Nowe my brethren I can write no more, time will not suffer, and my harte with panges of death is assaulted: but I am at home with my God yet aliue. Pray for me, & salute one another with the holy kisse. The peace of god rest with you all. Amen. From Newgate prison in haste, the day of my condemnation.

Iohn Rough.

An other letter of Iohn Rough written vnto the Congregation two dayes before he suffered.

The spirite of all consolation be with you, ayde you and make you strong to runne to the fight that is layde before you: wherewithall God in all ages hath tryed hys elect, and hath found them worthy of himselfe, by copling to theyr head Iesus Christ: in whome, who so desireth to liue

Godly, the same must needs suffer persecution. For it is geuen vnto them not onely to beleue, but also to suffer. And the Seruaunt or Scholer can not be greater then his Lord or Mayster: but by the same way the head is entered, the members must folow: no life is in the members which are cutte from the body, likewise we haue no life, but in Christ: for by him we liue, moue, and haue our being. My deare sonne, now departing this life to my great aduantage, I make chaūge of mortality with immortality, of corruption, to put on incorruption, to make my body like to the corne cast into the ground, which except it die first, it can bring forth no good fruite. Wherefore death is to my great vauntage, for therby the body ceaseth from sinne, and after turneth into the first originall: but after shall be chaunged, and made brighter, then the Sonne or Moone. What shall I write of this corporall death, seeing it is decreed of God, that all men shall once die: happy are they that die in the Lord, which is to dye in the fayth of Christ, professing and confessing the same before many witnesses. I prayse my God I haue passed the same iourney by manye temptations, the deuill is very busye to perswade, the world to entise with promises and fayre wordes, which I omitte to write, least some might thinke I did hunt after vayne glorye, whiche is farthest from my hart. Lastly the daunger of some false brethren who before the Byshop of London purposed to confesse an vntrueth to my face: yet the God that ruled Balaam, moued theyr hartes, where they thought to speake to my accusation, hee made them speake to my purgation. What a iourney (by Gods power) I haue made, these eight dayes before this date, it is aboue flesh and bloud to beare: but as Paule sayth, I may do all thinges in hym which worketh in me, Iesus Christ. My course brethrē haue I run, I haue fought a good fight, the crowne of righteousnes is layd vp for me, my daye to receiue it is not long too. Praye Brethren, for the enemye doth yet assaulte. Stande constaunt vnto the ende, then shall you possesse your Soules. Walke worthely in that vocation, wherein you are called. Comfort the Bretheren. Salute one another in my name. Be not ashamed of Page 2031 the Gospell of the Crosse,* by me preached, nor yet of my suffering: for with my bloud I affirme the same. I go before, I suffer first the bayting of the Butchers Dogges: yet I haue not done, what I should haue done: but my weaknes, I doubt not, is supplied in the strēgth of Iesus christ: and your wisdomes & learning will accept that small talent, which I haue distributed vnto you (as I trust) as a faythfull stewarde, and if what was vndone, impute that to my frayltye and ignoraunce, and with your loue couer that which is and was naked in me. God knoweth ye all are tender vnto me, my hart bursteth for the loue of you. Ye are not without your great pastor of your soule: who, so loueth you, that if men were not to bee sought out (as God be prayed, there is no want of men) he would cause stones to minister vnto you. Cast your care on that Rock, the wind of temptation shall not preuayle, fast and praye for the dayes are euill. Looke vp with your eyes of hope, for the redemption is not farre off, (but my wickednesse hath deserued that I shall not see it.) And also that which is behind of the bloud of our brethren, which shall also be layd vnder the aulter, shall crye for your reliefe. Time wil not now suffer me to write longer Letters. The spirite of God guid you in and out, rising & sitting, couer you with the shadow of his winges, defend you agaynst the tyrannye of the wicked, and bring you happely vnto the Porte of eternall felicitye, where all teares shall be wyped from your eyes, and you shall alwayes abyde wyth the Lambe.

Iohn Rough.

¶Margaret Mearing Martyr.

IT is declared, that in the companye of Iohn Roughe, was burned one Margaret Mearyng,* who, as the Register maketh mention, was at one time and day brought wyth the sayde Rough foorth to examination: where the Byshop hauynge no priuate matters to charge her withall, did the eighteenth daye of December objecte agaynste her those common and accustomable Articles mentioned before pag, 1585. To which she aunswered as followeth.

Ffirst, that there is here in earth a catholicke Churche and that there is the true fayth of Christ obserued,*and kept in the same Church.

2 Item, that there were onely two sacramentes in the Church, namely the sacrament of the bodye and bloud of Christ, and the sacrament of Baptisme.

3 Item, that she was baptised in the fayth, & beliefe of the sayd Church, renouncing there, by her Godfathers and Godmothers, the Deuill and all his workes. &c.

4 Item, that when she came to the age of fouretene yeares, shee did not knowe what her true beliefe was, because shee was not then of discretion to vnderstande the same, neyther yet was taught it.

5 Item, that she had not gone from the catholicke fayth at any time: but she sayde that the Masse was abhominable before the sight of God, and before the sight of all true Christian people, and that it is the playne Cup of fornication, and the whore of Babilon. And as concerning the Sacrament of the aultar, she sayd she beleued there was no such sacrament in the catholicke Church. Also she sayd, that she vtterly abhorred the authoritye of the Byshop of Rome, with all the Religion obserued in the same Antichristes Church.

6 Item, she aunswered to the sixt Article, as to the first, before specified.

7 Item, that she hath refused to come to her Parish Church, because the true Religion of Christ was not then vsed in the same: and farther sayd that she had not come vnto the Churche by the space of one yeare, and three quarters, then last paste, neither yet did meane any more to come vnto the same in these Idolatrous dayes.

*8 Item, as touching the maner of her apprehension she said that Cluney the Bishops Somner, did fetch her to the Bishop.

These aunsweres being then registered, they were agayne (with the sayd Articles), propounded agaynste her the xx. day of December, and there being demaunded if she would stand vnto those her aunsweres, she sayde: I wyll stand to them vnto the death: for the very Aungels of heauen do laugh you to scorne, to see your abomination that you vse in the Churche.* After the whiche wordes the Byshop pronounced the sentence of condemnation: and then deliuering her vnto the Sheriffes, she was wyth the forenamed Iohn Roughe caryed vnto Newgate. From whence they were both together led vnto Smithfield, the xxij. day of the same Moneth of December, and there most ioyfullye gaue theyr liues for the profession of Christes Gospell.

When the latter end of this history of Mayster Rough,* and Margarete Mearing was in finishing, there came to our hands one necessary thing of the said Margaret Mearyng, which wee thought not good to omit. The matter is this. Mayster Rough being chiefe Pastour to the congregation in the said time of Queene Mary, as before ye haue heard (of which companye this Margaret Mearyng was one) did not well like the sayd Margaret, but greatly suspected her, as many other of them did besides, because she would often times bring in straungers among them, and in her talke seemed (as they thought) somewhat •o busye. &c. Nowe, what they sawe or vnderstoode further in her, we know not, but this followed the euill suspition conceiued of her. Mayster Rough the Fridaye before hee was taken, in the open face of the Congregation, did excommunicate her out of the same company: and so seemed with the rest to exclude, and cut her of from theyr fellowship and society. Whereat she being mooued, did not well take it, nor in good part, but thought her selfe not indifferently handled amonge them. Whereupon to one of her frendes in a heate, she threatned to remoue them all. But the prouidence of God was otherwise. For the Sondaye after Mayster Rough being taken by the information of one Roger, Sergeaunt to the Bishop of London (as here after thou shalt heare) was layd prisoner in the Gatehouse at Westminster,* where none of his frendes coulde come to him to visite him. Then this sayd Margaret hearing therof, gotte her a basket, and a cleane shyrt in it, and went to Westminster, where she fayning her selfe to be his Sister, got into the prison to him, and did there to her power not a litle comfort him.

Then comming abroade agayne, shee vnderstandinge that the Congregation suspected the said Sergeaunt to be his Promoter, went to his house, and asked whether Iudas dwelt not there. Unto whom aunswere was made, there dwelt no such. No, sayd she? Dwelleth not Iudas here that betrayed Christ? His name is Sergeaunt. Whē she saw she could not speake with him, she went her way. So the Friday after, she standing at Marke lane ende in London, with an other woman, a frende of hers, sawe Cluney Boners Somner, commyng in the Streete towards her house. Whome when she sawe, she sayed to the other woman standyng with her: whether goeth yonder fine felowe sayde she? I thinke surely he goeth to my house: and in viewing him still, at the last she saw him enter in at her doore. So immediately she went home, and asked him whome hee sought.* Whereunto Cluney made answere and sayd, for you: you must go with me. Mary, quoth she, here I am: I will go with you, and comming to the Bishoppe, she was layde in prison, and the Wednesday after burnt with Mayster Rough in Smithfielde, as ye haue heard.

Anno. 1558.

¶The Suffering & cruell tormentes of Cutbert Symson, Deacon of the Christian Congregation in London, in Queene Maries dayes, most patiently abiding the cruell rage of the Papistes for Christes sake.

NExt after the Martyrdome of M. Rough Minister of the Congregation, aboue mentioned,* succeeded in like Martyrdome the Deacon also of that sayde Godly company or Congregation in London, named Cutbert Symson, being committed to the fire, the yeare of our Lord. 1558. the 28. day of March.

This Cutbert Symson was a manne of a faythfull, and zealous hart to Christ and his true flocke, in so much that he neuer ceased labouryng, and Studying most earnestly, not onely how to preserue them without corruption of the Popish religion, but also hys care was euer vigilant, how to keepe them together wythout peryll, or daunger of persecution. The paynes, trauayle, zeale, pacience, and fidelity of this man, in caryng, and prouiding for thys Congregation, as it is not lightly to be expressed▪ so is it wonderfull to beholde the prouidence of the Lord by vision, concerning the troubles of this faythfull minister, and godly Deacon,* as in this here folowyng may appeare.

The Fridaye at nighte before Maister Rough Minister of the congregation (of whom mētion is made before) was takē, being in his bed he dreamed, that he saw 2. of the Page 2032 Gard leading Cutbert Simson Deacon of the sayde congregation,* and that he had the booke about hym, wherein were written the names of all them which were of the Congregation. Whereupon being sore troubled, hee awaked, and called hys wife, saying: Kate strike lighte, For I am much troubled with my brother Cutbert thys nyght. When she hadde so done, he gaue himselfe to reade in his booke a while, and there feeling sleepe to come vpon him, he put out the candle, & so gaue himselfe agayn to rest. Being a sleepe, hee dreamed the like dreame agayn: & awaked therwith, hee sayde: O Kate, my brother Cutbert is gone. So they lighted a candle againe and rose. And as the •ayd M. Rough was making him ready to go to Cutbert to see how he did, in the meane time the sayd Cutbert came in with the book, conteining the names & accompts of the congregation. Whom when Maister Rough hadde seene, he sayd: brother Cutbert, ye are welcome, for I haue bene sore troubled with you this night, and so tolde hym his dreame. After he had so done, he willed him to lay the booke away from him, and to cary it no more about him. Unto which Cutbert aunswered, he would not so doe: for dreames he sayd, were but phantasies, and not to be credited. Then maister Rough straightly charged him in the name of the Lord to doe it. Whereupon the sayde Cutbert tooke suche notes out of the booke, as hee had willed hym to doe, and immediately left the booke with M. Roughes wife.

The next day following, in the night, the said Maister Rough had an other dreame in his sleepe, concerning hys owne trouble. The matter wherof was this. He thought in his dreame that he was caried himselfe forceably to the Bishop, and that the Bishop pluckt of his beard, and cast it into the fire, saying these wordes: Nowe I may saye I haue had a peece of an heretick burned in my house, and so according it came to passe.

Now to returne to Cutbert agayne, as we haue touched something co•cerning these visions, so nowe remayneth to story also of his paynes and sufferinges vpon the racke, and otherwise like a good Laurence for the congregations sake, as he wrote it with his owne hand.

¶A true report how I was vsed in the Tower of London, being sent thether by the Counsell the xiii. day of December.

ON the Thursday, after I was called vnto the warehouse, before the Constable of the Tower and y^e Recorder of Londer Maister Cholmley, they commaunded me to tell, whome I did will to come to the Englishe seruice. I aunswered I would declare nothing. Wherupon I was set in a racke of Iron, the space of three houres, as I iudged.

Then they asked me if I would tell them. I answered as before. Then was I losed, and caried to my lodging agayne. On the sonday after, I was brought into the same place agayne, before the Lieuetenaunt, and the Recorder of London, and they examined me. As before I had sayde, I answered. Then the Lieuetenaunt did sweare by god I shuld tell. Then did they binde my 2. forefingers together, and put a small arrowe betwixt them, and drewe it through so fast that the bloude followed, and the arrowe brake.

Then they racked me twice. Then was I caryed to my lodging agayne, and x. dayes after the Lieuetenant asked me if I would not confesse that, which before they had asked me. I sayd I had sayd as much as I would. Thē fiue weekes after, he sent me vnto the high Prieste, where I was greatly assaulted, and at whose hande I receiued the Popes curse, for bearing witnesse of the resurrection of Ie|sus Christ. And thus I commend you vnto God, and to the worde of his grace, with all them that vnfaynedly call vpon the name of Iesus, desiring God of his endles mercy, through the merites of hys deare sonne Iesus Christe to bringe vs all to hys euerlasting kingdome. Amen. I prayse God for his great mercy shewed vppon vs. Syng Osanna vnto the highest with me Cutbert Simson, God forgeue me my sinnes. I aske all the worlde forgeuenesse, and I doe forgeue all the worlde, and thus I leaue thys world, in hope of a ioyfull resurrection.

A note for Cutbert Simsons patience.

NOw as touching this Cutbert Simson,* this further is to be noted, that Boner in his Consistory speaking of Cutbert Simson, gaue this testimony of hym there to the people, saying, ye see this man (sayth he) what a personable man he is: and after hee had thus commended hys persone, added moreouer:*. And furthermore concerning his pacience, I say vnto you, that if hee were not an hereticke, hee is a manne of the greatest pacience that yet euer came before me. For I tell you, he hath bene thrise racked vppon one day in the Tower: Also in my house hee hathe felt some sorrowe, and yet I neuer see hys pacience broken. &c.

[illustration]

☞ A true description of the racking and cruell handeling of Cutbert Simson in the Tower.

Page 2033*It is thought and sayd of some, that that arrowe, whiche was grated betwixt his fingers, being tyed together, was not in the tower, but in the Bishops house.

The day before the blessed Deacon and Martyr of god Cutbert Simson, after his paynfull racking should go to his cōdēnation before Boner,* to be burned, being in the Bishops colehouse there in the stockes, he had a certayne vision or apparition very straunge which he himself with hys owne mouthe declared to the Godly learned man M. Austen, to his owne wi•e, and Thomas Simson, and to others besides, in the prison of Newgate a litle before his death. The relation whereof I stande in no little doubt, whether to reporte abroad or not, considering with my sel•e, the greate diuersitie of mennes iudgements in the reading of historyes, and varietie of affections. Some, I see, will not beleue it, some will deride the same, some also will be offended with setting forth things of that sorte incertayne, esteeming all thinges to bee incertayne and incredible, whatsoever is straunge from the common order of Nature.

Other will be perchaunce agreeued, thinking with thē selues, or els thus reasoning with me, that althoughe the matter were as is reported, yet for somuch as the common error of beleuing rash miracles, phantasied visions, dreames, and apparitions thereby may be confirmed, more expedient it were the same to be vnsetforth.

These and such lyke will be, I know, the sayinges of many. Whereunto brieflye I aunswere, grauntyng firste, and admyttyng wyth the woordes of Basill, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . That is, not euery dreame is strait waye a Prophecie. Agayne, neither am I ignoraunt that the Papistes in their bookes and legendes of saintes haue theyr prodigious visions, and apparitions of Aungelles of our Lady: of Christ, and other saynctes: which as I wil not admit to be beleueed for true, so will they aske me agayne, why should I then more require these to be credyted of them, then theirs of vs.

First I write not this, binding any manne precisely to beleue the same, so as they do theyrs, but onely reporte it as it hath bene heard of persons knowne, naming also y^e parties, who were the hearers thereof, leauing the iudgment therof notwithstanding free vnto the arbitrement of the reader.* A•beit, it is no good argument, proceeding from the singular or particular, to the vniuersall, to saye that visions be not true in some, ergo they be true in none. And if any shall muse, or object agayne, why should suche visions be geuen to him, or a few other singular persons, more then to all the rest, seeing the other were in the same cause and quarrell, and dyed also martyrs as well as hee? To thys I say, concerning the Lordes tymes and doings I haue not to meddle nor make, who may worke where and when it pleaseth him. And what if the Lorde thought chiefly aboute the other, with singular consolation to respecte him, who chiefly aboute the other, and singularly did suffer most exquisite tormentes for his sake? What greate maruell herein? but as I sayd, of the Lords secrete tymes I haue not to reason. This onely whiche hathe out of the mans owne mouth bene receiued, so as I receiued it of the parties, I thought here to communicate to the Reader, for him to iudge thereof as God shall rule hys mynd. The matter is this.

The day before thys Simson was condemned, he being in the stockes, Cloney his keeper commeth in with y^e keies, about 9. of the clocke at night (after his vsuall maner) to view hys prison, and see whether all were present, who when he espyed the sayd Cutbert to be there, departed agayne, locking the dores after him. Within two houres after, about eleuen of the clocke, towarde midnichte, the sayd Cutbert (whether being in a slumber, or beyng awake I cannot say) heard one comming in, first openyng the outwarde dore, then the seconde, after the thyrd dore, and so looking into the sayd Cutbert, hauing no Candell or Torche that he could see, but geuing a brightnesse, and light most comfortable and ioyfull to hys hart, saying: Ha vnto him, and departed agayne. Who it was hee coulde not tell, neither I dare define. This that he saw, he hymselfe declared foure or fiue tymes to the sayd Mayster Austen, and to other. At the sight whereof hee receiued suche ioyfull comfort, that he also expressed no little solace, in telling and declaring the same.

Articles seuerally ministred to Cutbert Simson the xix. of March, with his aunsweres also to the same annexed:

First, that thou Cutbert Simson, art at this present abidinge within the Cittie and Dioces of London,* and not out of the iurisdiction of the bishop of Rome.

Item, that thou within the Cittie and Diocesse of London hast vttered many times, and spoken deliberately these wordes and sentences following, videlicet: that though thy parentes, auncestours, kinsefolkes, and friendes, yea, and also thy selfe▪ before the time of the late schisme here in this realme of Englande haue thought and thoughtest, that the fayth and religion obserued in times past here in this Realme of Englande, was a true fayth and religion of Christ, in all poyntes and Articles, though in the Churche it was set foorth in the Latine tongue, and not in Englishe, yet thou beleuest and sayest, that the faythe and religion, now vsed commonly in the Realme, not in the Englysh but in the Latine tongue, is not the true faythe and religion of Christ, but contrary and expressly agaynst it.

Item, that thou within the sayde Cittie and Dioces of London, hast willingly, wittingly, and contemptuously done,* & spoken agaynst the Rites and the Ceremonyes, commonly vsed here throughe the whole realme, and obserued generally in the Church of England.

Item, that thou hast thought, and beleued certaynly,* and so within the Dioces of London, hast affirmed, and spoken delyberately, that there bee not in the Catholicke Church seven Sacramentes, nor of that vertue and efficacie, as is commonly beleued in the church of England them to be.

Item, thou hast likewise thought, and beleued,* yea and so within the Cittie and Dioces of London spoken, and deliberately affirmed, that in the sacrament of the aultar, there is not really, substantially, and truly, the very body and bloud of our sauour Iesus Christ

Item that thou hast beene, and to thy power arte at this present, a fauourer of all those, that eyther haue beene here in this Realme, heretofore called heretickes, or els conuented, & condemned by the Ecclesiasticall Iudges for heretickes,

Item that thou, contrary to the order of this Realme of Englande,* and contrary to the vsage of the holy Church of this Realme of England, hast at sundry tymes and places, within the Citye and Dioces of London, beene at assemblyes, and conuenticles, where there was a multitude of people gathered together, to h•are the Englishe seruice sayed, which was set forth in the late yeares of King Edward the sixte, and also to heare, and haue the Communion booke reade, and the Communion ministred, both to the sayd multitude, and also to thy selfe, and thou hast thought, and so thinkest, and hast spoken that the sayd Englishe seruice, and Communion booke, and all thinges conteyned in eyther of them was good and laudable, and for such thou diddest, and doest allowe, and approue eyther of them at this present.

The aunswere of the sayd Cutbert to the foresayd articles.

VNto all which articles the sayd Cutbert Simson aunswered thus, or the lyke in effecte.*

To the 1 2 3.4 5. and 6. article he confessed them to be true in euery parte thereof.

To the 7. article he sayd, that he was bounde to aunswere vnto it, as he beleeueth.

¶A letter of Cutbert Simson, written to his wyfe out of the Colehouse, DEarely beloued in the Lorde Iesus Christe,* I can not write as I doe wishe vnto you.

I beseeche you with my soule, committe your selfe vnder the mighty hande of our God, trusting in his mercye, and hee will surely helpe vs, as shall be moste vnto his glory, and oure euerlasting comforte, being sure of this, that hee wyll suffer nothing to come vnto vs, but that whiche shall bee moste profitable for vs.

For it is either a correction for our sinnes, or a tryall of oure faythe, or to set forthe his glorye, or for altogether, and therefore must needes be well done. For there is nothing that commeth vnto vs by fortune or chaunce, but by oure heauenlye Fathers prouidence, And therefore praye vnto oure heauenly Father that he will euer geue vs his grace for to consider it. Let vs geue hym moste hartye thanks, for these his fatherly corrections: for as many as hee loueth, hee correcteth. And I beseech you now bee of good cheare, and compte the Cross• of Chryste greater ryches, then all the vayne pleasures of Englande. I do not doubt (I prayse God for it) but that you haue supped wyth Chryste at his Maundie, I meane beleue in hym, for that is the effecte, and then muste you drynke of hys cuppe, I meane hys Crosse (for that doth the cuppe signifie vnto vs.) Take the Cuppe wyth a good stomacke, in the name of GOD and then shall you be sure to haue the good wyne Chrystes bloude to thy poore thirstie soule. And when you haue the wy•e you muste drinke it out of this cuppe. Learne this when you Page 2034 come to the Lordes supper, pray continually. In all thinges geue thanks.

In the name of Iesus shall euery knee bowe. Cutbert Simson.

Hugh Foxe.

Iohn Deuenishe.

*With Cutbert likewise was apprehended and also suffered (as is before mentioned) Hugh Foxe, and Iohn Deuenish. Who being brought into their examinations with the sayd Cutbert, before Boner Byshoppe of London, the xix. day of March, had articles and Interrogatories to them ministred by the sayd officer, albeit not al at one time. For first to the sayd Cutbert seuerall Articles were propounded, then other articles in generall wer ministred to them altogether. The order and maner of which articles, now ioyntly to them ministred here follow, with their aunsweres also to the same annexed, to be seene.

Articles generally ministred to them all three together, the sayd xix. day of March with theyr answeres to the same annexed.

AFTER these articles thus ministred and layd to Cutbert Simson,* w^t his aunsweres likewise vnto the same, the Bishop calling them altogether, obiected to them other po^sitions and articles, the same whiche before are mentioned in the story of Bartlet Greene. pag. 1736. onely the 8. Article out of the same omitted and excepted, which Articles because they are already expressed in the page aboue mentioned, we neede not here to make anye newe reporte thereof, but onely referre the Reader to the place assigned.

¶The aunsweres generall of Cutbert Simson, Hugh Foxe, and Iohn Deuinishe, to the Articles by the Bishop to them generally proposed.

*TO the first Article they all aunswered affirmatiuely: but Iohn Deuenishe added, that that Church is grounded vpon the Prophetes and Apostles, Christe being the head corner stone, and how in that Church there is the true fayth and religion of Christ.

To the second Article, they all confessed and beleueed, that in Christes Catholicke Church, there are but two Sacramentes, that is to witte, Baptisme, and the supper of the Lord: otherwise they do not beleue the contentes of this Article to be true in any part therof.

To the 3. Article they all aunswered affirmatiuely.

To the 4. Article they all aunswered affirmatiuely.

To the 5. Article they all aunswered affirmatiuely, that they do beleue, and haue and will speake agaynst the sacrifice of the Masse, the sacrament of the altar, and likewise agaynst the authoritie

¶Three godly Martirs burned in Smithfield.

* of the sea of Rome, and are nothing sorry for the same but will do it still while they liue.

To the sixt Article, they al answered, and denied to acknowledge the authoritie of the sea of Rome, to be lawfull and good, eyther yet his religion.

To the seuenth Article, they all aunswered affirmatiuely, that they haue, and will doe still while they liue: and Iohn Deuinishe adding thereto, sayde that the sacrament of the aultar as it is now vsed, is no sacrament at all.

To the 8. Article, they all confessed, and beleueed all thynges aboue by them acknowledged and declared, to be true, and that they be of the Dioces of London, and iurisdiction of the same.

These three aboue named persons, and blessed witnesses of Iesus Christ, Cutbert, Foxe, and Deuenish as they were altogether apprehended at Islington, as is aboue declared, so the same all three together suffered in Smithfield about the xxviii. day of March, in whose perfect constancie the same Lorde (in whose cause and quarrell they suffered) giuer of all grace, and gouernour of all thinges, be exalted for euer. Amen.

¶The suffering and Martyrdome of William Nichole, put to death by the wicked hands of the papistes at Herefordwest in Wales.

WE finde in al ages from the beginning, that Sathan hath not ceased at all times,* to molest the Church of Christ with one affliction or other, to the tryall of theyr fayth, but yet neuer so aparauntly at anye time to all the worlde, as when the Lorde hath permitted him power ouer the bodyes of hys saynctes, to the shedding of theyr bloud, and peruertering of religion: for then sleepeth he not I warrant you, from murdering of the same, vnlesse they will fall downe with Achab and Iesabell to worship him and so kill and poyson their owne soules eternally: as in

[illustration]

The burning of W. Nicole at Herefordwest in Wales.

* these miserable latter dayes of Queene Mary we haue felt heard and seene practised vppon Gods people.* Amonge whome wee finde recorded an honest good simple poore man, one William Nicole, who was apprehended by the Champions of the pope, for speaking certayne wordes agaynst the cruell kingdome of Antichriste, and the ninth day of Aprill. 1558. was butcherly burnt and tormented at Herefordwest in Wales, where he ended his life in a most happy and blessed state, and gloriously gaue his soule into the handes of the Lorde, whose goodnes bee prayed for euer, Amen.

This William Nicoll (as we are informed) was so simple a good soule, y^t many esteemed him half foolish. But what he was we know not, but this are we sure he died a good man, and in a good cause, what soeuer they iudge of hym. And the more simplicitie of feeblenes of wit appeared Page 2035 in him,* the more beastly and wretched dothe it declare their cruell & tyrannicall acte therin. The Lord geue them repentaunce therefore, if it bee his blessed will, Amen, Amen.

The Martyrdome of William Seaman, Thomas Carman, and Thomas Hudson, put to death by the persecuting papists at Norwich in the county of Norfolke.

*IMmediately after William Nicoll succeeded in that honourable and glorious vocation of Martyrdome three constaunt godly menne at Norwiche in Northfolk, who were cruelly and tyrannically put to death for the true testimony of Iesus Christ, the xix. of May. an. 1558. Whose names be these.

- William Seaman.
- Thomas Carman.
- Thomas Hudson..

The sayde William Seaman was an Husbandman, of the age of xxvi. yeares,* dwelling in Mendlesham in the county of Suffolke, who was sūdry sought for tymes by y^e commandement of Sir Iohn Tirrell knight, & at laste he himselfe in the night searched his house and other places for him:* notwithstanding hee somewhat mist of his purpose, God be thanked. Then he gaue charge to hys Seruauntes, Robert Baulding, and Iames Clarke wyth others,* to seek for him. Who hauing no officer, went in the euening to hys house, where he being at home, they took him and caryed him to theyr Mayster Syr Iohn Tirrell. This Baulding being Seamans nighe neighbour, and whome the sayde Seaman greatly trusted as a speciall friend,* notwithstanding to doe hys Mayster a pleasure, now became enemy to hys chiefe friend, and was one of the busiest in the taking of him. Now as they were goyng to cary hym to theyr Mayster Syr Iohn Tyrrell in the night, it is credibly reported that there fell a lyghte betweene them out of the element and parted them. Thys Baulding being in company with the rest when the light fell,* and albeit he was then in hys best age, yet after y^e time neuer enjoyed good daye, but pyned away euen vnto the death.

Well, for all that straunge sight (as I sayd) they caried him to theyr Mayster.* Who when he came, asked him why he would not goe to Masse, and to receaue the sacrament and so to worship it? Unto which William Seaman aunswered, denying it to bee a sacrament, but sayde it was an Idoll,* and therefore would not receaue it. After whiche wordes spoken, sir Iohn Tirrel shortly sent hym to Norwiche to Hopton then Bishop, and there after conference and examination had with him, the bishop read his bloody sentence of condemnation agaynst him: and afterward deliuered him to the secular power, who kepte him vnto the day of Martyrdome.

This sayd William Seaman left behynde him when he dyed, a wife, and three children very young: and wyth the sayd young children, hys wife was persecuted oute of the sayde towne also of Mendlesham, because that shee would not go to heare Masse, and all her corne and goods seased, and taken awaye by Mayster Christopher Coles officers, he being Lorde of the sayd towne.

Thomas Carman (who as is sayd, pledged Richarde Crashfield at hys burning,* and thereupon was apprehended) being prisoner in Norwiche, was about one time wyth the rest examined and brought before the sayde Byshop, who aunswered no lesse in his Maysters cause, then the other, and therfore had the like rewarde, that the other had,* which was the Byshops bloody blessing of condemnation, and deliuered also to the Seculare power, who kept him with the other, vntill the day of slaughter, which hasted on, and was not long after.

Thomas Hudson was of Ailesham in Norfolke, by his occupation a Glouer,* a very honest poore manne, hauing a wife, and three children, and laboured alwayes tru^ly and dilligently in hys vocation, being of thirtye yeares of age, and bearing so good a will to the Gospell, that he in the dayes of king Edward the 6. two yeares before Q. Maryes raygne, learned to read Englishe of Anthony & Thomas Norgate of the same Towne, wherin he greatly profited about the tyme of alteration of Religion.* For when Queene Mary came to raygne, and had chaunged y^e seruice in the Church, putting in for wheate draffe, and darnill, and for good preaching blasphemous crying out agaynst truthe, and godlinesse, he then auoyding all theyr ceremonies of superstition,* absented hymselfe from hys house and went into Suffolkl a longe tyme, and there remayned traueilling from one place to an other, as occasion was offered. At the last, hee returned backe agayne to Northfolke to his house at A[•]lesham, to comfort his wyfe and children, being heauy, and troubled with hys absence.

Nowe when he came home, and perceiued hys contynuanace there would be daungerous, he and hys wife deuise^d to make hym a place among hys fagottes, to hide him selfe in, where he remayned all the day (in steede of hys chamber) reading and praying continually, for the space of halfe a yeaere, and his wife lyke an honest woman being carefull for hym, vsed her selfe faythfullye, and dillygently towards him.

In the meane time came the Uicare of the Town, named Berry (who was one of the Byshoppes Commissaries,* a very euill manne) and inquired of this sayd Thomas Hudsons wife, for her husband. Unto whom he answered, as not knowing where hee was. Then the sayde Berry rated her, and threatned to burne her for that shee would not bewraye her husbände where hee was. After that, when Hudson vnderstoode it, hee waxed euerye day more zelous then other,* and continually read & sange Psalmes, to the wonder of many, the people openlye resorting to him, to heare hys exhortations, and vehement prayers.

At the last he walked abroad for certayne dayes, openly in the Towne, crying out continually agaynst y^e Masse and all theyr trumpery, and in the ende, commyng home in hys house, he sate him downe vpon hys knees, hauyng his book by hym, reading and singing Psalmes continually without ceassing, for three dayes and three nightes to'gether, refusing meate and other talke, to the great wonder of many.

Then one Iohn Crouch his next neighbour, went to the Constables Robert Marsham, and Robert Lawes in the night, to certifie them thereof: for Berry commanded openly to watche for hym, and the Constables vnderstanding the same, went cruelly to catche hym in the breake of the day, the xxii. of the moneth of Aprill. Anno. 1558.

Now when Hudson saw them come in, he sayd: Now myne houre is come. Welcome frendes welcome. You bee they that shall leade me to lyfe in Christ,* I thanke GOD therefore, and the Lorde ennable me thereto for hys mercyes sake. For his desire was, and euer he prayed (if it wer the Lordes will) that hee might suffer for the Gospell of Christ. Then they tooke him,* and lead him to Berry the Commissarye, whiche was Uicar of the towne, and the sayde Berrye asked him first: where hee kepte hys Church for foure yeaes before. To the whiche the sayde Hudson answered thus, where so euer he was, there was the church.

Doest thou not beleue, sayth Berry, in the sacramente of the aultar? What is it?

Hudson.

It is wormes meate: my beliefe (saythe hee) is in Christ crucified.*

Berry.

Doest thou not beleuee the Masse to putte awaye sinnes?

Hudson.

No, God forbidde: it is a patched monstre, and a disguised Puppet,* more longer a peeing then euer was Salomons Temple. At whiche wordes Berry stamped, fumed, and shewed himself as a mad man, and sayd: well thou villayn, thou: I wil write to the B. my good Lord, and trust vnto it, thou shalt be handled according to thy de'sertes. Oh sir, sayde Hudson: there is no Lorde but God, though there be many Lordes and many Gods. With that Berry thrust hym backe with hys hand. And one Richard Cliffar standing by, sayde: I pray you sir,* bee good to the poore man. At which wordes Berry was more mad then before, and woulde haue had Cliffer bound in a recognysaunce of 40. poundes for hys good abearyng, bothe in worde and deede: whiche his desire tooke no effecte. Then he asked the sayd Hudson whether he would recant or no. Unto whiche wordes Hudson sayde: the Lorde forbid: I had rather dye many deathes, then to do so.

Then after long talke, the sayde Berry seeing it booted not to perswade with him, tooke hys penne and inke, and wrote letters to the Bishop thereof, and sent this Hudson to Norwiche bound like a theefe to him, whiche was 8. miles from thence, who with ioy and singing chere wēt thether, as mery as euer he were at anye tyme before. In prison he was a month where hee dyd continually read & inuocate the name of God.

These three Christians and constaunt Martyrs,* William Seaman, Thomas Carman, and Thomas Hudson after they were (as ye haue heard) condemned, the xix. day of May. 1558. were caryed out of prison to the place where they should suffer, whyche was without Byshoppes gate Page 2036 at Norwich, called Lollards Pit. And being al there, they made their humble prayers vnto the Lorde. That beyng done, they rose and went to the stake, and standing al ther with their chaynes about them, immediately this sayde Thomas Hudson commeth foorth from them vnder the Chayne,* to the great wonder of many: whereby diuers feared and greatly doubted of hym. For some thought hee would haue recanted: other iudged rather that he went to aske a further day, and to desire conference, and some thought he came forth to aske some of hys parentes blessing. So some thought one thinge and some an other: but hys two companions at the stake cryed out to him to comforte him what they coulede, exhorting him in the bowelles of Christ to be of good cheare.* &c. But this sweete Hudson, felt more in hys heart, and conscience, then they could conceaue in him. For (alas good soule) hee was compassed (God knoweth) with great dolour and grieve of minde, not for hys death, but for lacke of feeling of his Christ, and therefore beyng verye carefull he humbly fell downe vppon his knees,* and prayed vehemently and earnestly vnto the Lord, who at the last according to hys olde mercies sent him comfort, and thē rose he with great ioy, as a man new chaunged euen from death to life, and sayd:

Now I thanke God I am strong, and passe not what man can do vnto me. So going to y^e stake to his fellowes agayne, in the end they all suffered most ioyfully, constātly, and manfully the deathe together, and were consumed in fire, to the terror of the wicked, the comforte of Gods Children, and the magnifyng of the Lordes name, who be prayسد therfore, for euer, Amen.

Three godly Martyrs burned at Norwich.

After this, the forenamed Commissarye Berry made great stirre about other which were suspected within the sayd towne of Aylsham, and caused two hundred to creep to the crosse at Penticost, besides other punishmentes which they sustayned.

*On a tyme this Berry gaue a poore man of his parish of Marsham, a blowe with the swingell of a flayle, for a worde speaking, that presently thereon he dyed, and the sayd Berry (as is sayd) held vpp his hande at the Barre therefore.

*Then, after that in his parishe of Aylesham also, ann. 1557. there was one Alice Oxes came to his house, and going into the Hall, hee meeting her (being before moued) smote her with his fist, whereby shee was fayne to be caryed home, and the next day was founde dead in her chamber.

To write how many concubines and whores he had, none would beleue it, but such as knew him in the countrey he dwelt in. He was riche and of great authoritie, a great s•earer, altogether geuen to women, and persecuting the Gospell, and compelling men to idolatry.

*One Iohn Norgate a man learned, godly, and zelous who would not goe to their trashe, but rather dye, being sore hunted by the sayd Berry, prayed hartely to God, and the Lorde shortly after in a consumption deliuered hym. Notwithstanding, the rage of this wicked manne waxed more fiercer and fiercer. Hee troubled sundry men, * burnt all good bookes that he could get, and diuorsed many men and women for religion.

When he heard say that Queene Mary was dead, * and the glory of theyr triumph quayled, the sonday alter, being the xix. of Nouember. an. 1558. he made a great feast, & had one of hys concubines there, with whome he was in his chamber after dinner vntill Euensong. Then went he to Church, where hee had ministred Baptisme, and in going from Church homeward, after euensong, betwene the churchyard and his house, * being but a little space (as it were a churchyarde bredth asunder) he fell downe sodainly to the ground with a heauy grone, and neuer stirred af'ter, neyther shewed any one token of repentaunce. Thys hapned his neighbors being by to the example of al other The Lord graunt we may obserue his iudgementes: * And those that had his great riches, since his death haue so con'sumed with them, that they be poorer now then they were before they had his goodes, such iudgement hath the Lord executed to the eyes of all men.

At that tyme one Dunning, Chauncellor of Lincolne (which in some part of Queene Maryes dayes was Chā|cellor of Norwiche, * and a very mercilesse tyrant as liued) died in Lincolnshyre of as sodayne a warning, as the sayd Berry dyed.

Thus haue I shewed thee (good reader) the constancie, boldnes, and glorious victory of these happy Martyrs as also the tyrannicall cruelty of that vnfortunate Commissary, and his terrible end. The Lorde graunt wee may all effectually honour the iudgementes of God, and feare to displease his holy Maiesty, Amen.

The persecution of mother Seman.

ABout this tyme, or somewhat before, was one Ioane Seman, mother to the foresayd William Seman, * being of the age of 66. yeares, persecuted of the sayde Syr Iohn Tyrrell also out of the towne of Mendlesham aforesayd, because she would not goe to masse, and receyue agaynst her conscience. Which good old woman being frō her house, was glad sometime to lye in bushes, groues, & fieldes, and sometyme in her neighbors house, when shee could. And her husband beyng at home, about the age of 80. yeares, fell sicke: and she hearing thereof, with speede returned home to her house agayn,* not regarding her life but considering her duetie, and shewed her dilligence to her husband most faythfully, vntill God tooke him away by death. Then by Gods prouidence she fell sicke also, and departed this lyfe within her owne house shortly after. And when one M. Simondes the Commissarye heard of it, dwelling thereby in a towne called Thorndon, he commaunded straitely that she shuld be buried in no Christian buriall (as they call it) where through her frendes wer compelled to lay her in a pit vnder a motes side.* Her husband and she kept a good house, and had a good report amongst theyr neighbours, willing alwayes to receiue straungers, and to comfort the poore and sicke, and lyued together in the holy estate of Matrimony very honestly a boue forty yeares, and shee departed thys life willingly & ioyfully, with a steadfast fayth and a good remembraunce of Gods promise in Christ Iesus.

The persecution of mother Benet.

IN the sayde time of Queene Mary, there dwelte in the towne of Wetherset by Mendlesham aforesayde,* a very honest woman called mother Bennet, a widowe whiche was persecuted out of the same towne because she woulde not goe to masse and other theyr beggarly ceremonies: but at the last shee returned home agayne secretly to her house, and there departed this lyfe ioyfully. But Syr I. Tyrrell & M. Simondes the Commissary,* would not let her be buried in the Churchyarde. So was she layde in a graue by the high way side.

The same good old woman mother Benet, in y^e tyme of persecution, met one of the sayd mother Semans neigh'bour, and asked her how the sayd mother Seman did, & she aunswered that she did very wel, God be thanked. Oh (sayd she) mother Seman hath slept a great sleepe before me: for she was neuer couetous that I could perceiue. Her husband in his mirth would say vnto her: O woman if thou were sparing,* thou mightest haue saued me an C. markes more then thou hast. To the whiche shee woulde aunswere agayne gently and saye: O man be content, and let vs be thankfull, for God hath geuen vs enough if we can see it. Alas good husband would shee saye, I tell you Page 2037 truth, I cannot irken vp my butter, and keep my cheese in the chamber, and wayte a great price, and let the poore want, and so displease God. But Husband, let vs be riche in good workes: so shal we please the Lord, & haue al good thinges geuen vs.* &c. This good woman of that vice of couetousnesse (of all that knew her) was iudged least to be spotted, of any infirmitie she had. The Lord roote it out of the hartes of them that be infected therewith, Amen.

¶The Martyrdome of three constant and godly persons burnt at Colchester for the defence and testimony of Christes Gospell.

THou hast heard (good Reader) of the forenamed three that were burnt at Norwich,* whose bloud quenched not the persecuting thirst of the Papistes. For immedy'ately after, euen the same month, vpon the xxvi. day was seene the like murther also at Colchester in Essex of two men and a woman, lying there in prison, appoynted ready to the slaughter: who were brought forth the sayde daye vnto a place prepared for them to suffer, and accordinglye gaue theyr liues for the testimonye of the trueth, whose names likewise hereafter followeth.

- William Harryes.
- Richard Day.

- *Christian George.

These three good soules were brought vnto the stake and there ioyfully and feruently had made theyr prayers vnto the Lord.* At the last being settled in theyr places, and chayned vnto theyr postes, with y^e fire flaming fiercely round about them, they like constaunt Christians triumphātly praysted God within the same, and offered vp their bodyes a liuely sacrifice vnto his holy Maiestie: in whose habitation they haue now theyr euerlasting tabernacles: his name therfore be praysted for euermore. Amen.

The sayd Christian Georges Husbande, had an other wife burnt before this Christian, whose name was Agnes George, which suffered (as you haue heard) with the thirteene at Stratford the Bow. And after the death of the sayde Christian, hee maryed an honest Godly woman agayne, and so they both, I meane y^e sayd Richard George and his last wife) in the end were taken also, and layde in prison,* where they remayned til y^e death of Queene Mary and at the last were deliuered by our most gracious soueraigne Lady Queene Elizabeth, whom the Lorde graunt long to raygne among vs, for hys mercies sake, Amen.

In the month of Iune came out a certayne proclamation, short but sharpe, from the king and the Queene agaynst wholesome and godly bookes, which vnder y^e false title of heresie and sedition, here in the sayd Proclamation were wrongfully condemned.

By the king and Queene.

WHereas diuers bookes, filled both with heresie, sedition, and treason, haue of late, and be dayly brought into thys Realme,* out of forreine cuntryes and places beyonde the seas, and some also couertly printed within this Realme, and cast abroad in sundry partes thereof, whereby not onely God is dishonored, but also an encouragemēt geuen to disobey lawfull princes and gouernours: The king and Queenes maiesties, for redres hereof, doth by this theyr present Proclamation, declare & publish to all theyr subiectes, that whosoouer shall after the proclayming hereof, be found to haue any of the sayde wicked and seditious bookes, or finding them, do not forthwith burne the same without shewing or reading the same to any other person, shall in that case be reputed and taken for a rebell, and shall wythout delay bee executed for that offence according to the order of Martiall law.

The order and occasion of taking certayn godly men and women praying together in the fieldes about Islington, of whom 13. were condemned by Boner, & after suffered in the fire for the truthe sake, as in the story here following may appeare.

SEcretly in a backe close in the felde by the Towne of Islington were collected and assembled together a certayne companye of Godly and innocent persons, to the number of forty, men and women. Who there sitting together at prayer, and vertuously occupied in the meditation of Gods holy worde, first commeth a certayne man to them vnknowne: who looking ouer vnto them, so stayed & saluted them, saying that they looked like men y^t meant no hurt. Then one of the sayd company asked the man, if he could tel whose close that was, and whether they might be so bold there to sit. Yes sayd he, for that yee seeme vnto me such persons as entende no harme, and so departed. Within a quarter of an houre after, commeth the constable of Islington, named king, warded with sixe or seuē other, accompanying him in the same busines, one wyth a bow, an other with a Bill, and other with theyr weapons likewise. The which sixe or seuen persons the sayde Constable left a little behinde hym in a close place, there to bee ready if need should be while he with one with him shuld go and view them before. Who so doynge, came throughe them, looking and viewing what they were doynge, and what bookes they had: and so going a little forward, and returning backe agayne, bad them deliuer theyr bookes. They vnderstanding that he was Constable, refused not so to do. With that cōmeth forth the residue of his fellowes aboue touched, who bad them stande and not to departe. They aunswered agayne, they would be obedient & ready to go whether so euer they would haue them: & so were they first caryed to a bruehouse but a little way of, whyle y^e some of the sayd souldiers ran to the Iustice next at hand. But the Iustice was not at home: Whereupon they were had to sir Roger Cholmley. In the meane tyme some of y^e women being of the same number of the foresayde xl. persons, escaped away from thē, some in y^e close, some before they came to the bruehouse. For so they were caryed .x. w^t one man, 8. with an other, and with some moe, with some lesse, in such sorte that it was not hard for thē to escape that would. In fine, they y^t were caryed to Sir Roger Cholmley,* were 27. which Sir Roger Cholmley & the Recorder taking their names in a Bill, & calling them one by one so many as answered to theyr names, they sēt to Newgate. In the whiche number of them that answered, and y^t were sent to Newgate, were 22.

These 22. were in the sayde prison of Newgate seuen weekes before they were examined, to whome word was sent by Alexander the keeper, that if they woulde heare a Masse, they should all be deliuered. Of these foresayd xxii. were burned 13. In Smithfield 7. at Braynford 6.

IN prison 2. dyed in Whitson weeke, the names of whō were Mathew Wythers, T. Taylar.

Seuen of them which remayned, escaped with theyr liues hardly, although not without much trouble, yet (as GOD woulde) without burning. Whose names were these.

- Iohn Milles.
- Thomas Hinshaw.
- R. Baily, wolpacker.
- Robert Willeys.
- Hudleys.*
- T. Coast, haberdash.
- Roger Sandey.

The first seuen were brought forth to examination before Boner, and so hauing their condēnation, were burnt (as is sayd) in Smithfield. The other 6. followed not long after, and suffered at Brayneford, whereof specially here followeth now in order of story to be seene.

The examination and condemnation of seuen godly and faythfull Martyrs of Christe, burnt in Smithfield.

Concerning the examination and condemnation of these abouesayd,* whiche were apprehended and taken at Is•ington, 7. first were produced before Boner the 14. of Iune, to make aunswere to suche articles and interrogatoryes, as by the sayd Byshop should be ministred vnto them. The names of these seuen were:

- Henry Ponde.
- Raynold Eastland.
- Robert Southam.
- Mathew Richarby
- Iohn Floyd.*
- Iohn Holydaye.
- Roger Holland.

To these 7. constant and godly Martyrs produced before Boner, certayne articles were ministred in this effect as followeth.

Articles.

First that ye being within the Cittye and Dyoces of London▪ haue not (according to the commō custome of the catholick Page 2038 church of this realme of Englande) come to your owne parishe church,* nor yet to the Cathedrall church of this citie and diocesse of London, to heare deuoutly and christianly the Matins, the Masse, the Euensong, song or sayd there in the Latine tounge, after the common vsage and maner of the church of this realme.*

2. Second, that ye haue not come to any of the said churches, to pray, to goe in procession, or to exercise your selues there in godly and laudable exercises.

3. Thirde, yee haue not conformed your selues duely to all the laudable customes, rites, and Ceremonies of anye the sayde churches.

4. Fourth, ye haue not bene confessed at due times and places to your owne curate, of your sinnes.

5. Fifth, yee haue not receiued at your sayd Curates handes (as of the minister of Christ) absolution of your sinnes.

6. Sixt, ye haue not at due times and places, of your Curate receiued reuerently and duely the sacrament of the altar.

7. Seuenth, yee haue not faithfully and truely beleueed, that in the said sacrament of the altar there is really and truely the very body and bloud of Christ.

8. Eight, yee haue not by your mouthe, nor otherwise by your deede expressed or declared in any wise, that ye without wauering or doubting doe thinke and beleue that the faith and religion now obserued in the church of England, is a true faith and religion in all poyntes.

9 Ninthe, yee haue not made any signification, that yee doe in deede approoue or allowe in any wise, the common seruice in Latine, heere obserued and kepte in the Church of this Realme of Englande.

10. Tenth, ye haue not beleueed, nor doe beleue at this present, that the seruice in Latine, commonly vsed and obserued in the Churche of this realme, is good and lawfull, and not against the woorde of God.

11. Eleuenth, yee haue in times past liked, allowed, and approued as good and godly and so do like, alow, and approue at this present, the seruice in English, the bookes of Common prayer, the bookes of Communion, the religion setforth and vsed in the time of king Edward the sixt, especially as it was set forth and vsed in the latter daies of the said king Edward.

12. Twelfth, ye haue in times past bene very desirous, and so are at this present, that the sayde English seruice, the sayde booke of common praier, the sayd booke of communion, and the sayd religion and faith so set foorth and vsed in King Edwardes time, might nowe againe be restored, set foorth, and vsed, and youre selfe freely at your libertie, without anye restraint, or lets to vse it: and also in all poyntes and things to doe therein, as ye did, especially in the latter daies of the said Edward the sixt.

13. Thirtene, yee haue of late bene charitably sent to from me the Bishop of London, and also by mouth exhorted, that where of late yee did leaue your Churches, and went in the time of diuine seruice into the fieldes and prophane places, to reade English Psalmes, and certaine English bookes, ye wold leaue of that, and being out of prisone, and at your libertie, come in to youre owne parish churches, there to heare Mattens, Masse, and Euensong, after the common order of the churches of this realme, & to make due confession of your sinnes to your owne curate, and receiue at his handes (as of the minister of Christ, hauing therein sufficient authoritie) absolution of your sinnes, heare Masse, receiue the Sacrament of the altare with a true faith, according to the beliefe of the catholicke church, and obserue all other the rites and customes of the saide catholicke churche vsed in thys realme of England, aswell in going in procession after the crosse, as also otherwise generally.

14. Fourtene, ye being so required, haue refused, and do refuse so to do, saying amongst other vaine and light wordes, that forasmuch as yee were imprisoned by the space of sixe weekes, not knowing wherewith you were charged, your petition should be and was, that yee might first aunswere to your former cause, and then ye would be ready to answere me the said bishop to al that by me should be laid to your charge.

Unto the which Articles, all the forenamed 7. (onely Reinold Eastland excepted) made answer in effect as here after followeth.

The aunsweres of the forenamed persons to the Articles aforesayde.*

1. TO the first article they aunswared affirmatiuely, Roger Holland adding that hee came not to their Latine seruice these two yeares before.

Mathewe Ricarby added that he came not to churche since Latine seruice was renewed, because it is against the woorde of God, and Idolatrie committed in creeping to the crosse.

Henry Pond added, if hee had licence then to goe to church, he woulde.

2. To the 2. Article, they all aunswared affirmatiuelye, Henrye Ponde adding as in the first Article. Iohn Floyd adde that the Latine seruice then vsed, was set vp by man, and not by God, & this he learned (he sayd) in king Edwardes daies, which he beleued to be true. Robert Southam added, that he refused to come to churche, because it is furnished with idoles, and because the sacrament of the altar he beleueed to be an idoll.

3. To the 3. Article they all aunswared affirmatiuely. For they sayd, that the customes, rites, and ceremonies of the church then vsed, are not agreeable to Gods woord.

4 5. To the 4 and 5. Articles, they all answeared affirmatiuely, adding that they beleueed no Priest hath power to remit sinne.

6. To the 6. Article Ihon Holiday, Henry Ponde, and Robert• Southam aunswared, that since the Queenes maiesties raigne, but Robert Southam added, not for 10. yeares before, he had receiued the Sacrament of the altar, either at their Curates hands or any other Priest. Ihon Floyde, Mathewe Ricarby, and Roger Holland answeared affirmatiuely, adding in effecte that the Sacrament of the altare is no Sacrament approued by the worde of God. &c.

7. To the 7. Article they all confessed the contentes thereof to be true in euery part: Henry Ponde adding that he knoweth not nor beleueeth any such Sacrament, called the Sacrament of the altare, but confesseth the Sacrament of the Lordes Supper, and beleueeth that to be approued. Iohn Floyde added that those that kneele and worship the Sacrament of the altare, committe idolatrie. &c.

8.9.10. To the 8 9.10. Articles, they all confessed the contentes of those Articles to be true. But Iohn Holiday, Henry Pond and Iohn Floyd added, that they do allow the Latine seruice for thē that vnderstandeth the same, so farre as it agreeth with Gods word. For some parte thereof is not agreeable to Gods woorde (they sayd:) but to such as do not vnderstand the sayd seruice in Latine, they doe not allowe it, for it doeth not profite them▪ Robert Southam added and sayd, that it was a fond question to aske a simple man, whether the Latine seruice be good and lawfull. Mathew Ricarby and Roger Hollande denied the seruice in Latine to be good.

11. To the 11. Article, they all confessed the same to be true in euery part, sauing Henry Pond, and Mathew Ricarby, who aunswared in effecte that they coulde not iudge thereof, but leaue them to be tried by the woorde of God.

12. To the 12. Article, they graunted and confessed the same to be true, and desired of God that the seruice were in the English againe.

13. To the 13. Article they all graunted and confessed the same to be true.

14. To the 14. Article they all graunted and confessed the same to be true in euery part.

Thus haue ye the aunsweres of these men to the foresayde Articles, saue that Reginald Eastlande required to aunswere therunto, refused so to do, alleaging y^t he know'eth that to ende a strife an othe is lawfull,* but to beginne a strife an othe is not lawfull, and therefore he nowe refuseth to take his othe in y^e beginning of this matter against him. Whereupon being charged by the Bishoppe, he said: for his not aunswearing to the Articles, he was contente to stande vnto the order of the lawe for his punishment, whatsoever it should be.

The 17. day after of the sayd moneth of Iune, the sayd Eastland appeared againe before the bishop,* who stāding firme in that he had sayd before, denied to make any aunswere in that case. &c. Whereupon the sayd Eastland wyth the other 6. his felow prisoners, were assigned by the Bishop to repaire againe to y^e same place at afternoone, who being there present in the foresaid consistorie as they were commaunded, and standing altogether before the said Bishop, he beginning thus with them, asked them, if hee had committed them to prisone. They sayde no, but Maister Cholmley and the Recorder of London committed them to Newgate.

Then being demaunded further by the Bishop, if hee had done any thing or acte to keepe them in prisone, or to hinder their libertie from prisone, to this they answered, they could not tel. Then the foresaid articles being againe recited to them, all they answered and knowledged them to be the articles, & that they would stād to their answers made to the same. Whereupon the bish. disseuering them a part one frō an other, proceeded with them seuerally, first beginning with Reginald Eastlande, who there declared y^t he had bene vncharitably handled and talked w^tal• since his first imprisonment in that behalfe. Then being required to reconcile him selfe againe to the catholike faith,* and go from his opinions, he sayd, that he knew nothing why he should recant, and therefore would not conforme hym selfe in that behalf. &c. and so the sentence was red against him, and he geuen to the secular power. &c.

After him was called in Iohn Holiday, who likewise being aduertised to renounce hys heresies (as they called them) & to returne to the vnitie of their church, sayde, that Page 2039 hee was no heretike, nor didde holde any heresie, neither any opinion contrary to the catholike faith, and so would offer him selfe to be iudged therein. Whereuppon hee likewise persisting in the same, the sentence was pronounced against him,* condemning him to be burnt.

Next to hym was condemned wyth the like sentence, Henry Pond, because he would not submit him self to the Romish church, saying to Boner, that he had done or spoken nothing wherof he was or would be sorie, but that he did holde the truth of God and no heresie. &c.

After whome next followed Iohn Floyde, who likewise denied to be of the popes church,* and saide his minde of the Latine seruice, that the prayers made to Saintes is idolatrie, and that the Seruice in Latine is profitable to none, but only to such as vnderstand the Latine. Moreouer, being charged by Boner of heresie, and sayinge, that what soeuer he and such other now a daies do, all is heresie: for this hee was condemned with the same butcherlye sentence, and so by the secular power was sent away.

*Then Robert Southam, after him Mathew Ricarby and last of all Roger Holland were seuerally produced.

Thus Roger Holland with his fellowes (as ye heard) standing to their answeres, and refusing to acknowledge the doctrine of the Romish church, who were alltogether condemned, the sentence being red against them, and so al vij. by secular magistrates being sent awaye to Newgate the 17. of Iune, not long after about the 27. day of the said moneth were hadde to Smithfield, and there ended theyr liues in the glorious cause of Christes gospel. Whose particular * examinations came not to our hands: sauing only the examinations of Roger Holland, whych here followe in order and maner as wee receiued them by the information of certaine, who were present at the same.

The examinations and condemnation of Roger Holland.

THis Roger Holland a marchant Taylor of London, was first prentise with one maister Kempton at the blacke boy in Watling streete,* where hee serued his prentiship w^t much trouble vnto his maister in breaking hym from his licencious libertie whych he had before ben trained and brought vp in, geuing himselfe to riote, as dauncing, fence, gaming, banketting, and wanton companie: and besides all this, being a stubborne & an obstinate papist, farre vnlike to come to any suche ende as God called him vnto: the which was as followeth.

His maister, notwithstanding this his leudnesse, putting him in trust w^t his accomptes, he had receiued for him certaine money, to the summe of 30. poundes, and falling into ill companie, lost the saide money euery grote at dice, being past all hope which way to answer it, and therefore he purposed to conuey him selfe away beyond the seas, either into Fraunce or into Flaunders.

Now hauing determind with himselfe thus to do, he called betimes in the morning to a seruaunt in the house, an auncient and discrete maide, whose name was Elizabeth, which professed the Gospel, with a life agreeing vnto the same, and at al times much rebuking the wilful and obstinate Papistrie, as also the licencious liuing of thys Roger Holland. To whome he sayd: Elizabeth I would I hadde followed thy gentle perswasions and frendly rebukes: which if I hadde done, I hadde neuer come to this shame and miserye which I am nowe fallen into: for this night haue I lost 30, pound of my masters mony, which to pay him and to make vp mine accomptes, I am not able. But thus muche I pray you desire my mistresse, that shee would intreat my master to take this bil of my hand, that I am thus much indebted vnto him, and if I be euer able, I wil see him paied, desiring him that y^e matter may passe with silēce, and that none of my kinred nor frendes neuer vnderstand this my leud part. For if it should come vnto my fathers eares, it woulde bring his graye heares ouer soone vnto his graue: and so was he departing.

The maide considering that it mighte be his vtter vndoing: stay said she, and hauing a peece of money lying by her, geuē vnto her by the death of a kinsman of hers, who (as it was thought,* was doctour Redman) shee brought vnto him 30. pounce, saying: Roger, heere is thus much money: I will let thee haue it, and I will keepe this Bill. But since I do thus much for thee, to helpe thee, & to saue thy honestie, thou shalt promise me to refuse all leude and wilde companie, al swearing and ribaldrie talke, and if euer I know thee to play one 12. pēce, at either dice or cardes, then I will shewe this thy bill vnto my maister. And furthermore thou shalt promise me to resort euery day to the lecture at Alhallowes, and the sermon at Pauls euery Sondaye, and to cast away all thy bookes of papistrie and vaine ballets, and get thee the Testament and the Booke of seruice, and read the scriptures with reuerēce and fear, calling vnto God still for his grace to directe thee in hys truth. And pray vnto God feruētly, desiring hym to pardon thy former offences, and not to remember the sinnes of thy youth: and euer be afraid to breake his lawes or offend his maiestie. Then shall God keepe thee and sende thee thy hearts desire.

After this time, w^hin one halfe yeare God had wrought such a change in this man,* that he was become an earnest professor of the truth, and detested al papistrie & euil company: so that he was in admiration to all them that hadde knowen him and seene his former life and wickednesse.

Then he repaired into Lankeshiere vnto hys Father, and brought diuers good bookes with him,* and bestowed them vppon his frendes, so that his father and others began to taste of the Gospell, and detest the Masse, idolatrie, and superstition: and in the ende his father gaue hym a stocke of money to begin the world withall, to the summe of fiftie pound.

Then he repaired to London againe, and came to the maide that lent him the money to pay his master withall,* and sayd vnto her: Elizabeth, here is thy money I borrowed of thee, and for the frendship, good will, and the good counsel I haue receiued at thy hands, to recompence thee I am not able, otherwise then to make thee my wife: and soone after they were married, which was in the first yeare of Queene Marie. And hauing a childe by her, hee caused maister Rose to baptise his said childe in his owne house. Notwithstanding he was bewrayed vnto the ennemies, and hee being gone into the countrey to conuey the childe away, that the papists shoulde not haue it in their anyoynting handes, Boner caused his goodes to be sea^ed vppon, and most cruelly vsed his wife.

After this he remained closely in the Citie, and in the Countrey in the congregations of the faithfull,* vntill the last yeare of Queene Marie. Then hee with the vj. other aforesaid, were taken in or not farre from s. Iohns wood, and so brought to Newgate vppon May day in the morning. An. 1558.

Then being called before the bishop, D. Chedsey, both the Harpsfieldes, & certaine other, after many other faire and craftie perswasions of doctor Chedsey, to allure hym to theyr Babylonicall church: thus the Bishop beganne with him.

Holland.

I for my part do wish well vnto thee, & the more for thy frendes sake. And as doctour Standish telleth me, you and he were both borne in one parish, & he knoweth your father to be a verie honest Catholicke Gentleman. And maister Doctour tolde me that he talked wyth you a yeare agoe, and founde you very wilfully addicte to your owne conceit. Diuers of the Citie also haue shewed me of you, that you haue bene a great procurer of mens seruāts to be of your religion, & to come to your congregations: Page 2040 but since you be now in the daunger of the law, I would wish you to playe a wise mannes parte: So shall you not want any fauoure I can doe or procure for you, bothe for your owne sake, and also for your friendes, which be men of worship and credite, and wish you well, & by my trooth Roger so doe I.

Then sayd M. Egleston, a gentleman of Lankeshire, and nere kinsman to Roger, being there present: I thank your good Lordship: your honour meaneth good vnto my cousin, I beseeche God he haue the grace to followe your counsaile.

Holland.

Syr, you craue of God you knowe not what. I beseech God open your eies to see the light of his worde.

Egleston▪

Roger, holde your peace, least you fare the worse at my Lordes handes.

Holland.

No, I shall fare as pleaseth God: for man can do no more then God doth permit him.

Then the bishop and the Doctors, with Iohnson the Register, casting their heades together, in the ende sayeth Iohnson: * Roger, how sayest thou? wilt thou submitte thy selfe vnto my Lorde, before thou be entred into the booke of contempt?

Holland.

I neuer meant but to submit my selfe vnto the Magistrate, as I learne of S. Paul to the Romaines, the 13. chap. and so he recited the text.

Chedsey

Then I see you are no Anabaptist.

Holland.

I meane not yet to be no Papist: for they and the Anabaptists agree in this poynt, not to submit thēselues to any other prince or magistrate, then those that must first •e sworne to maintaine them and their doings.

Chedsey.

Roger, remember what I haue said, & also what my Lorde hath promised, he will perfourme wyth further frendship. Take heede Roger, for your ripenesse of witte hath brought you into these errorrs.

Holland.

M. Doctor, I haue yet your words in memorie, though they are of no such force to preuail with me. Then they whispered together againe, and at the last saide Boner: Roger I perceiue y^u wilt be ruled by no good counsell for any thing y^t either I or your friēds or any other cā say.

Holland.

I may say to you my lorde, as Paul said to Felix & vnto the Iewes, as doth appeare in the 22. of the Actes, and in the 15. of the 1. Epistle to the Corinth.* It is not vnknown vnto my master whom I was prentise withall, y^t I was of this your blind religion that nowe is taught, and therein did obstinately & wilfully remaine, vntill the later end of K. Edward in maner, hauing y^e liberty vnder your auriculare Confession, that I made no conscience of sinne, but trusted in the Priests absolution, hee for money doing some penance also for me: which after I had geuen, I cared no further what offences I did, no more then hee passed after he had my mony, whether he fasted bread and water for me or no: so y^t lecherie, swearing & all other vices I accompted no offence of danger, so long as I could for money haue them absolved. So straitly did I obserue your rules of religion, that I woulde haue ashes vppon Ashwensday,* though I had vsed neuer so muche wickednes at night. And albeit I could not of conscience eat flesh vpon the friday, yet in swearing, drinking, or dising al the night long, I made no conscience at all. And thus was I brought vp, and herein haue I continued til now of late, that God hath opened the light of his word, and called me by his grace to repentaunce of my former idolatrie & wicked life: for in Lankeshire their blindnes and whoredom is ouermuch more, then may with chaste eares be hearde. Yet these my friends which are not cleare in these notable crimes,* thinke the Priest with his Masse can saue them, though they blaspheme God, & keepe concubines besides their wiues, as long as they liue. Yea I know some priestes, very deuout, my Lorde, yet suche as haue 6. or 7. children by 4. or 5. sundry women.

M. Doctor, now to your antiquitie, vnitie, & vniuersalitie (for these D. Chedsey alledged as notes and tokēs of theyr religion) I am vnlearned. I haue no sophistrie to shifte my reasons withall: but the truthe I trust I haue, which nedeth no painted colours to set her forth. The antiquitie of our church is not from pope Nicolas or Pope Ioane, but our church is from the beginning, euen from the time that God saide vnto Adam y^t the seede of the woman should breake the Serpents head: and so to faithfull Noe: to Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, to whō it was promised that their seede should multiply as the starres in the skie: and so to Moses, Dauid & all the holy fathers y^t were frō the beginning, vnto the birth of our sauior Christ. All they y^t beleueed these promises, were of the church, though y^e number were oftentimes but few & small, as in Helias daies whē he thought there was none but he that had not bowed their knees to Baal, whē God had reserued 7000. that neuer had bowed their knees to that idoll: as I trust ther be vij.C.M. more then I know of, that haue not bowed their knees to y^r idol your masse, and your god Ma•zim: the vpholding wherof is your bloody cruelty, whiles you daily persecute Helias & the seruants of God, forcing them (as Daniell was in his chamber) closely to serue the Lord their God: and euen as we by this your cruelty are forced in the fields to pray vnto God that his holy worde may be once againe truely preached amongst vs, and that he would mitigate and shorten these idolatrous & bloody daies, wherein all cruelty raigneth. Moreouer, our church haue ben the Apostles and Euangelists, the Martyrs and Confessors of Christ that haue at all times and in all ages bene persecuted for the testimonye of the woorde of God.* But for the vpholding of your church and religion, what antiquitie can you shew? Yea the Masse, that idol & chiefe pillar of your religion, is not yet iiij.C. yeres olde, & some of your masses are younger, as that masse of S. Thomas Becket the traitor,* wherein you pray that you may be saued by the bloude of S. Thomas. And as for your Latine seruice, what are we of the laitie the better for it? I thinke he that should hear your priests mumble vp their seruice, although he did well vnderstand latine, yet should he vnderstand few words therof: the priests do so champ them and chaw them, & posteth so fast, that neither they vnderstande what they say, nor they that heare them: and in the meane time the people when they should praye wyth the priest, are set to their beads to pray our ladies Psalter. So craf•ie is Sathan to deuise these his dreames (which you defend with fagot and fire) to quench the light of the word of God: which (as Dauid saieth) shoulde be a lanterne to our seete. And againe, wherein shall a yong man direct his waies, but by the woorde of God? and yet you will hide it from vs in a tounge vnknown. S. Paul had rather in the church to haue 5. wordes spoken with vnderstāding, then x.M. in an vnknown tounge: and yet wil you haue your Latin seruice and praying in a strange tounge, wherof the people are vtterly ignorant, to be of such antiquitie? The Greke church & a good part of Christendom besides, neuer receiued your seruice in an vnknown tounge,* but in theyr owne natural language which al the people vnderstand, neither yet your transubstantiation, your receiuing all alone, your purgatorie, your images. &c.

As for the vnitie which is in your church, what is it els but treason, murther, poysoning one an other, idolatrie, superstition, wickednesse? What vnitie was in youre church, when there was iij. Popes at once? Where was your head of vnitie when you had a woman Pope? Here he was interrupted and could not be suffered to proceede, but sayth the Bishop: Roger, these thy woordes are very blasphemie, and by the meanes of thy friendes thou haste bene suffered to speake, and art ouer malepert to reache any heere: Therefore keeper take him away.

The second examination of Roger Holland.

THE day that Henrye Ponde and the rest were brought foorth to be againe examined, D. Chedsey said: Roger,* I trust you haue nowe better considered of the Church then you did before.

Holland.

I cōsider this much: That out of the church there is no saluation, as diuers ancient Doctors say.

Boner.

That is wel sayd. M. Egleston I trust your kinsman wil be a good catholicke mā. But Roger, you meane, I trust, the church of Rome.

Holland.

I meane that church which hath Christ for her head: which also hath his word, and his Sacraments according to his woord and institution.

Chedsey.

Then Chedsey interrupted him, and said, is that a Testament you haue in your hand?

Holland.

Yea M. doctor, it is the new Testament. You wil finde no fault with the trāslation (I thinke.) It is of your owne translation: it is according to the great Bible.

Boner.

Howe saye you? Howe doe you knowe it is the Testament of Christ, but onely by the Church? For the Church of Rome hathe and doeth preserue it, and oute of the same hathe made Decrees, Ordinaunces, and true expositions.

No (saith Roger) the church of Rome hath and doeth suppress the reading of the Testament. And what a true exposition (I pray you) did the Pope make thereof, when he set his foote on the Emperours necke, and sayde: *Thou shalt walke vpon the Lion and the Aspe: the yong Lyon and the Dragon shalt thou tread vnder thy foote.

Then said the bishop: Such vnlearned wilde heads as thou and other, woulde be expositours of the Scripture. Woulde you then the auncient learned (as there be some heere aswell as I) should be taught of you?

Holland.

Youth delighteth in vanitie. My wildnesse hathe Page 2041 bene somewhat the more by your Doctrine, then euer I learned ou• of this booke of God. But my Lorde, I suppose, some of the old doctors say: If a poore lay man bring his reason and argument out of the woorde of God, he is to be credited afore the learned, though they be neuer so great doctors. For the gift of knowledge was taken from the learned doctors, and giuen to pore fishermen. Notw^tstand•ng I am ready to be instructed by the church.

Boner.

That is very well said Roger. But you must vnderstand y^t the church of Rome is the catholicke Church. Roger, for thy friendes sake (I promise thee) I wish thee well, and I meane to doe thee good. Keeper, see he wante nothing. Roger, if thou lacke any money to pleasure thee, I will see thou shalt not want. This hee spake vnto hym alone, his fellowes being aparte, with manye other faire promises, and so he was sent to prison againe.

The last examination of Roger Holland.

*The last examination of Roger Holland, was when he with his fellow prisoners were brought into the consistorie, & there excommunicated all sauing Roger, & redy to haue their sentēce of iudgement, geuen w^t many threatning words to feare them withall: the Lord Strange, syr Tho. Iarret, M. Eagleston Esquier, and diuers other of worship, both of Cheshire & Lankeshire, that were Rog. Hollands kinsmē and friends, being there present: which had beene earnest suters to the Bishop in hys fauour, hoping of his safetie of life. Nowe the Bishop hoping yet to winne him with his faire and flattering woordes, began after this maner.

Boner

Rog. I haue diuers times called thee before, home to my house, and haue conferred with thee, and being not learned in the latine tounge, it doth appeare vnto me thou art of a good memorie & of a very sensible talke, but something ouerhastie: which is a naturall disease to some men. And surely they are not the worst natured men. For I my selfe shall now and then be hastie, but mine anger is soone past. So Roger, surely I haue a good opinion of you, that you wil not with these lewd fellowes cast your selfe headlong from the church of your parents & your frendes that are here, very good catholikes (as it is reported vnto me.) And as I meane thee good,* so Roger play the wisemans part, and come home with the lost sonne and say: I haue runne into the church of schismatikes and heretikes, from the catholicke church of Rome, and you shall, I warrante you, not only finde fauor at Gods hands, but the Church that hath authoritie, shall absolue you and put newe garments vpon you, and kill the fatling to make thee good cheare withall: That is, in so doing, as meate doth refresh and chearish the minde, so shalt thou finde as much quietnesse of conscience in comming home to the church, as dyd the hungry sonne that had ben fed afore with the hogs, as you haue done with these heretikes that seuer them selues from the church. I giue them a homely name, but they be worse (putting his hand to his cap for reuerēce sake) then hogs: For they know the church and will not followe it. If I shoulde saye thus muche to a Turke, hee woulde (I thinke) beleue me. But Roger, if I did not beare thee and thy friendes good will, I woulde not haue sayde so muche as I haue done, but I would haue let mine Ordinarie alone with you.

At these wordes his frendes that were there, gaue the Bishop thanks for his good will and paines that he had taken in his and theyr behalfe.

Boner.

Wel Roger, how say you now? Do you not beleue that after the Priest hath spoken the words of consecration, there remaineth the body of Christ really & corporally vnder the formes of bread and wine: I meane y^t selfe same body that was borne of the virgine Mary, that was crucified vpon the crosse, that rose againe the third day.

Holland.

Your Lordship sayth, the same body which was borne of the virgin Marie, which was crucified vpon the Crosse, which rose againe the third day: but you leaue out which ascended into heauen:* and the Scripture sayeth, he shall there remaine vntil he come to iudge the quicke and the deade. Then he is not contained vnder the formes of bread and wine, by Hoc est corpus meum. &c.

Boner.

Roger, I perceiue my paines and good will, will not preuaile, and if I shoulde argue with thee, thou art so wil•ul (as all thy fellowes be, standing in thine owne singularitie & foolish conceit) that thou wouldest still talke to no purpose this 7. yere, if thou mightest be suffered. Aunswer whether thou wilt confesse the reall & corporall presence of Christes body in the Sacrament, or wilt not.

Holland.

My Lord, although that God by his sufferaunce hath nere placed you to set forth his truth and glory in vs his faithful seruantes: notwithstanding your meaning is farre from the zeale of Christ, and for all your words, you haue the same zeal that Annas and Caiphas had, trusting to their authoritie, traditions and ceremonies, more then to the woorde of God.

Boner.

If I should suffer hym, he would fall from reasoning to railing, as a franticke heretike.

Lord Straunge.

Roger (sayth the Lord Straunge) I perceiue my Lorde woulde haue you to tell him whether you will submit your selfe vnto him or no.

Boner

Yea, sayeth Boner, and confesse this presence that I haue spoken of.

With this, Roger turning him to the Lorde Strange and the rest of his kinsmen and frendes, very chearefully kneled downe vpon his knees and said: God by y^e mouth of his seruant S. Paul hath said: Let euery soule submit him selfe vnto the higher powers, and he that resisteth receiueth hys owne damnation: and as you are • Magistrate appoynted by the will of God, so do I submit my selfe vnto you, and to all such as are appoynted for Magistrates.

Boner.

That is well sayde: I see you are no Anabaptist. Howe saye you then to the presence of Chr•stes bodye and bloud in the Sacrament of the altare?

Holland.

I say, and I beseeche you all to marke and beare witnes with me (for so you shal doe before the iudgement seate of God) what I speake: for heere is the Conclusion:*. And ye my deare frendes (turning him to his kinsmen) I pray you shew my father what I doe say, that he may vnderstand I am a christian man: I say and beleue, and am therein fully persuaded by the scriptures, that the Sacrament of the Supper of oure Lorde ministred in the holye Communion according to Christes institution, I beinge penitent & sorie for my sinnes, and minding to amend and lead a new life, and so cōming worthely vnto Gods bord in perfect loue & charity, do there receiue by faith, the body & bloud of Christ. And though Christ in his humane person sitte at the right hand of his father, yet (by saith I say) his death, his passion, his merites are mine, and by faithe I dwell in him and he in me. And as for the Masse, transubstantiation, & the worshipping of the Sacrament, they are meere impietie and horrible idolatrie.

Boner.

I thought so much, sayth Boner (suffering him to speake no more) how he wold proue a very blasphemous hereticke as euer I heard. Howe vnreuerently doeth hee speake of the blessed Masse?*, and so read his bloody sentēce of condemnation, adiudging him to be burned.

All this while Roger was verye patient & quiet, and when he should depart. he sayd: my lord, I besech you suffer me to speake 2. words. The B. wold not hear him, but bad him away. Notw^tstanding, being requested by one of his frendes, he sayd: speake, what hast thou to say.

Holland

Euen now I told you that your authority was from God, and by his sufferance, and now I tel you, God hath heard the praier of his seruāts which hath ben powred forth with feares for his afflicted saintes,*, which daily you persecute, as now you do vs. But this I dare be bold in God to speake (which by his spirit I am moued to say) that God will shorten your hand of cruelty, that for a time you shal not molest his church: And this shal you in short time well perceiue, my deare brethrē, to be most true. For after this day, in this place shall there not be anye by hym put to the triall of fire and fagot: And after this daye there was neuer none that suffered in Smithfielde for the testimonie of the gspell, God be thanked.

After these woordes spoken, saith Boner: Roger,*, thou art I perceiue as madde in these thy heresies as euer was Ioan Butcher. In anger and fume thou woldest become a railing Prophet. Thoughe thou and all the sorte of you would see me hanged, yet I shall liue to burne, yea I wil burne all the sort of you that come in my handes, that wil not worship the blessed sacrament of the altare, for all thy pratling, and so he went his way.

Then Roger Holland began to exhort his frendes to repentance, and to thinke wel of them that suffered for the testimonie of the Gospel, and with that the B. came back, charging the keeper that no man shoulde speake to them without his licence, and if they did, they should be cōmitted to prison. In the meane season H. Pond and Roger spake stil vnto the people,*, exhorting them to stande in the truthe: adding moreouer, that God woulde shorten those cruel and euil daies for his elect sake.

The day they suffred, a proclamation was made, y^t none should be so bold to speake or talke any word vnto them, or receiue any thing of them,* or to touche them vpō payne of imprisonment, without either bale or mainprise: wyth diuers other cruell threatninge woordes, contained in the same Proclamation. Notwithstanding the people cryed out, desiring God to strengthen them: and they likewyse still praied for the people, and the restoring of his woorde. Page 2042 At length Roger embracing the stake,* and the reedes, said these woordes.

Lord, I most humbly thanke thy Maiestie, that thou hast called mee from the state of death, vnto the lighte of thy heauenlye worde, and nowe vnto the fellowship of thy Sainctes, that I may sing and say, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hoastes. And Lord into thy handes I commit my spirite. Lord blesse these thy people, and saue them from Idolatrie, and so ended his life, looking vp into heauen, praying and praising God, with the rest of his fellowe Sainctes. For whose ioyfull constancie the Lord be praised.

The Martyrdome of vj. which suffered at Brainforde for the true testimonie of Iesus Christ.

NOt long after the death of the fore named vij. godlye Martyrs that suffered in Smithfielde, were vj. other faithfull witnesses of the Lordes true Testament,* Martyred at Braynforde, vij. miles from London, the xiiij. day of Iuly 1558. which sayd sixe were of that companie that were apprehended in a close harde by Islington (as is aboue specified) and sent to prisone. Whose names and articles proponed to them, with their answers vnto y^e same, hereafter followeth.

- Robert Milles.
- Stephen Corton.
- Robert Dynes.
- Stephen Wight.
- Iohn Slade.
- William Pikes, or Pikers, a Tanner.*

These vj. forenamed Martyrs (gentle Reader) hadde their articles ministred to them by Thomas Darbishire, Boners Chancellor, at sundrye times, as Robert Mules the 20. day of Iune, Stephen Wight the 21. day of the said moneth, Ste. Cotton and Iohn Slade the 22. day, & Robert Dines and William Pikes the 23. day. At which said times, though they were seuerally examined, yet had they all one maner of articles ministred to them, yea & th• selfe same Articles that were ministred to Iohn Holiday, Hēry Pond, and their companie aforesayd. Which sayde articles I leaue the reader to looke for in page 1967. and think it not necessarye anye more to rehearse them, but onely to proceede with their aunsweres to the same, which briefly and in summe hereafter followeth.

The answers of the forenamed persons to the Articles aforesayd.

1 TO the first Article they all graunted the same, and added thereto for going to Church, that Robert Milles and Stephen Wight came not there for 3. quarters of a yere before,* and Iohn Slade & William Pikes not since the Queenes raigne, Stephen Cotten not for a twelue moneth before, and Rob. Dynes not for two yeaes before.

The 2.3.4.5▪ and 6, Articles they all answered in effecte, as the forenamed Iohn Holiday, Henry Ponde and their companye did, pag. 1931▪ sauing they added, that as their rites, customes & ceremonies are against the worde of God, so will they obserue and keepe no parte of the same. Stephen Wight added further, that he receiued not their Sacrament of the aultar for two yeres before, nor Iohn Slade and William Pikes since Queene Maries raigne, nor Stephen Cotton for a twelue moneth before, nor Robert Dines for three yeres before.

To the 7. article, they all graunted the same in euerye parte like vnto the aforenamed Henry Pond and his companye, page 1931 sauing Rob. Dines added that it was no part of his beliefe.

To the 8. Article they all graunted the same in euery part, as the forenamed William Holliday and his companye, page 193•. but Robert Milles added therto that he wil not come to church, nor allowe their religion, so long as the crosse is crepte too, and worshipped, and Images are in the Church Iohn Slade affirmed in effecte as Robert Milles did, adding further that there be not 7. Sacraments, but 2. Sacraments, which is Baptisme & the Supper of the Lord. Stephen Cotton woulde no further allowe the Popish religion, then it agreeth with Gods woorde: and Robert Dines affirmed in effect the like to Stephen Cotton also.

To the 9. and 10 articles, Robert Milles, Iohn Slade & Steuen Cotton answered that they do not allow the popish seruice then set foorth, because it is against the truthe, and in a straunge language which the common people vnderstand• not. Robert Dines and William Pikes, will neither allow nor disallowe the Latine seruice, because they vnderstād it not. And Steuen Wight would make no directe aunswer to the articles at all, and to the 11.12.13. and 14. articles we finde no answeres recorded of the said Steuen Wight, but of the rest of his fellowe prisoners wee finde answers to those articles which hereafter followe.

To the 11. article, Robert Milles, Iohn Slade and Steuen Cotton answered, that concernīg the bookes, faith and religion specified in this article, they doe allowe them so farre foorth as they agree with Gods word. &c. Robert Dines would make no answer thereto, because he thoughte himselfe vnmeete to iudge thereof: and William Pikes doeth not remember that hee hath misliked the seruice, and the faith, and religion set foorth in king Edward the sixt his time.

To the 12. they graunt, that if they might receiue the sacrament as they did in king Edward the sixt daies, they would with all their heart so doe.

To the 13. and 14. articles, they confesse and graunt the contents of them to be true in euery part.

When at the daies before specified, these good men were produced before Boners Chancellour, Thomas Darbshire, and had the foresaide articles ministred vnto them, and they (as ye haue heard) had made aunswere vnto the same, in the ende the Chauncellor commaunded them to appeare before them againe the 11. day of Iuly after in the sayde place at Paules. Where when they came,* he required of them, whether they woulde tourne from their opinions to y^e mother holy church: and if not, that then, whether there were anye cause to the contrarye, but that they might procede with the sentence of condemnation. Wherunto they all answered, that they would not go from the truthe, nor relent from any part of the same while they li•ed. Then he charged them to appeare before him againe the next daye in the afternoone, betweene one and two of the clocke, to heare the definitiue sentence redde agaynste them, according to the Ecclesiasticall lawes then in force. At which time, he sitting in iudgemēt, talking with these godly and vertuous men, at the last came into the sayde place syr Edward Hastings & sir Thomas Cornewales knights, two of Quene Maries officers of her house,* and being there, they sate them down ouer against the Chancellor, in whose presence the sayde Chancellor condemned those good poore Lambes, and deliuered them ouer to the secular power, who receiued and caried them to prisonne immediately, and there kept them in safetie till the daye of their deathe.

In the meane time this naughty Chancellor slept not, I warrant you, but that day in which they were condemned, he made certificate into the Lorde Chancellors office, from whence the next daye after was sent a writ to burne them at Brainforde aforesaid, which accordingly was accomplished in the same place, the said 14. daye of Iulye: Whereunto they being brought, made theyr humble praiers vnto the Lorde Iesus, vndressed themselues, wente ioyfully to the stake whereto they were bounde, and the fire flaming about them, they yelded their soules, bodies, and liues into the handes of the omnipotent Lorde, for whose cause they didde suffer, and to whose protection I commend thee gentle Reader. Amen.

The burning of sixe Martyrs at Brainforde.

Page 2043*Among these 6. was due William Pikes (as yee haue heard) who sometime dwelt in Ipswiche in Suffolke, by his occupation a Tanner, a very honest godly man, & of a vertuous disposition, a good keper of hospitalitie, and beneicial to the persecuted in Queene Maries daies. Thys saide William Pikes, in the 3. yeare of Queene Maries raigne, a little after Midsomer, being then at libertie, wēt into his Garden, and tooke wyth him a Bible of Rogers translation, where hee sitting wyth his face towardes the South, reading on the said Bible, sodenly fell downe vpon his booke betwene a 11. and 12. a clocke of the day, foure drops of fresh bloud, & he knew not from whence it came. Then he seeing the same, was sore astonished, & coulde by no meanes learne (as I sayd) from whence it should fall: and wiping out one of the droppes with his finger, called his wife, and said: In the vertue of God wife, what meaneth this? Wil y^e Lord haue 4. sacrifices? I see wel enough the Lorde will haue bloude: his wil be done, and geue me grace to abide the triall. Wife, let vs pray (sayde hee) for I feare the day draweth nigh. Afterwarde he daily looked to be apprehended of the papistes, and it came to passe accordingly, as yee haue heard. Thus much thought I good to wryte heereof, to stirre vp our dull senses in considering the Lordes woorkes, and reuerently to honour the same. His name therefore be praised for euermore, Amen.

Moreouer, concerning the sayd William Pikes, as he was in Newgate sore sicke and at the poynte of deathe, so that no man looked he should liue 6. houres, there declared to them that stode by, that he had bene twice in persecution before, and that now he desired the Lord, if it were his will, that he might glorifie his name at the stake, and so as he prayed, it came to passe at Brainford.

Ye hard before of those 22. taken at Islington, 13. were burned, and 6. escaped, albeit very hardly, & some of them not without scourging by the hands of the bishop. In the which number was Thomas Hinshaw & Ihon Milles, according to the expresse Picture here after purported.

The scourging of Thomas Hinshaw.

IN the godly number aboue mentioned, which were apprehended at Islington, there Congregated together

[illustration]

☛ The right Picture and true Counterfet of Boner, and his crueltie, in scourging of Gods Saintes, in his Orchard a Fulham.

Page 2044 for their exercise of prayer and readyng, was this Thomas Hinshaw aboue named, a yong man of the age of 19. or 20. yeares, prentise in Paules churchyard with one M. Pugson. Who with the rest was caried to the Constables of Islington, and there euery one of them serched, and led forthwith to the chiefe lustice M. Cholmley, dwellyng in the Old Baily in London, & by him thā the said Th. Hinshaw was sent to Newgate, & there remainyng prisoner w^tout conference with any, about eight weekes, at the last was sent for to Boner Bishop of London,* and by hym, Harpsfield and Cole examined. After which examination he was sent to Newgate againe, where hee remayned a three weekes followyng. Which tyme beyng ouerpassed, he was sent for agayne before the sayd bishop, the day beyng Saturday, and with hym had much talke to litle purpose. The next day after also, which was Sondag, they perswaded with him very much in like maner, and perceiuyng they could not bend hym vnto their bowe, in the afternoone, the B. goyng vnto Fulham, tooke hym wyth hym,* where immediately after his commyng, he was set in the stockes, remainyng there all the first nighte wyth bread and water.

The next mornyng the Bish. came and examined hym himselfe, and perceiuyng no yelding to his mynde, he sent M. Harpsfield to talke with him: who after long talke, in the end fell to raging words, callyng the sayd Thomas Hinshaw p[•]euish boy, and asked him whether he thought he went about to damne his soule, or no, &c. Unto whiche the sayd Tho. answered, that he was perswaded that they laboured to maintaine their darke and diuelish kingdom, and not for any loue to truth. Then Harpsfield beyng in a mighty rage, told the B. thereof. Whereat the B. fumed & fretted, that scant for anger beyng able to speake, he sayd: Doest thou answer my Archdeacon so, thou naughty boy? I shall handle thee well enough, be assured: so he sent for a couple of rods, and caused him to kneele agaynst a long bench in an arbor in his garden, where the sayd Thomas without any enforcement of his part, offered hymselfe to the beatyng,* & did abide the fury of the sayd Boner, so long as the fat panned B. could endure with breath, and til for werines he was fayne to cease, & geue place to his shamefull act. He had two willow rods, but he wasted but one, and so left of.

Now after this scourgyng, the sayd Thom. Hinshaw notwithstanding did sustaine diuers conflictes and examinations sundry tymes. At last beyng brought before the sayd Bishop in his chappell at Fulham, there hee had procured witnesses, and gathered Articles agaynst hym, which the yong man denied, and woulde not affirme, or consent to any interrogatory there and then ministred, do what they could.

¶The Articles were these.

COncernyng Palmes, Ashes, Holy bread, Holy water, Auricular confession,* receiuyng the Sacrament at Easter, hearyng deuine seruice then set forth, &c.

Whether he had receiued all these, or whether he would receiue them or no.

Item, what he thought of the seruice set forth in K. Edwards tyme, in his latter dayes, and in especiall, what he thought of the veritie of Christes body in the sacrament.

In which all his answers, the sayd Tho. Hinshaw kept an vpright conscience, and entangled himselfe with none of their ceremonies: so mercifull was the Lord vnto hym.

Not long after this his examination, about a fortnight or such a thyng,*the foresayd Examinee fell sicke of a burnyng ag••, wherby he was deliuered vpon entreatie vnto his maister Martin Pugson in Paules Churchyard aforesayd: for the bishop thought verily, he was more like to dye then to lyue. The whiche hys sicknesse endured a twelue month or more, so that in the meane tyme Queene Mary dyed. Then he shortly after recouered health, and escaped death, beyng at the wrytyng of this yet alyue, both witnesse and reporter of the same, the Lord therefore bee praysed, Amen.

The scourging of Iohn Milles by B. Boner.

BEsides the aboue named, was scourged also by y^e hāds of the sayd B. one Iohn Milles a Capper, a right faith full and true honest man in all his dealyngs and conditions. Who was brother to the foresayd R. Milles burned before at Brainford, as is aboue signified▪ pag. 1967. Who also was apprehended in the same number with them at Islington, as is mentioned also before, pag. 1969. and beyng brought before Boner and there examined, was commaunded to the Colehouse, with the foresayde Tho. Hinshaw, where they remained one night in the stocks. From thence he was sent to Fulham, where hee with the sayde Hinshaw, remayned 8. or 10. dayes in the stockes: during which tyme hee susteined diuers conflictes with the sayde Boner, who had hym oft tymes in Examination, vrgyng hym, and with a sticke which he had in his hand, oft times rapping him on the head, and flirting him vnder the chin & on the eares, saying he looked downe like a thiefe. Moreouer, after he had assaied all maner of wayes to cause him to recant and could not, at length hauyng him to his Orchard, there within a little arbor, with his owne handes beat hym first with a willowe rod, and that beyng worne well nigh to the stumps, he called for a birchin rod, which a lad brought out of his chamber. The cause why hee so beat him, was this: Boner asked hym when he had crept to the crosse. He answered, not since he came to the yeares of discretion, neither would to be torne with wyld horses. Then Boner bade him make a crosse in his forehead, which he refused to do. Whereupon he had him incontinently to his Orchard, and there callyng for rods,* sheweth his crueltie vpon hym, as he did vppon Tho. Hinshaw, as is aboue declared.

This done, he had hym immediately to the Parishe Church of Fulham with the sayd Tho. Hinshaw, & wyth Rob. Willis, to whom there beyng seuerally called before hym, he ministred certaine Articles,* asking if they would subscribe to the same. To the which the sayd Iohn Milles made his answer according to his conscience, denying thē all, except one article which was cōcernyng K. Edwards seruice in English. Shortly after this beating,* Boner sent to him in prison a certain old priest lately come frō Rome to coniure out the euill spirite from hym, who laying hys hand vpon his hed, began with certaine words pronounced ouer hym, to coniure as hee had bene woont before to do. Milles meruailing what the Priest was about to doe, sayd he trusted no euill spirit to be within hym, & laughed hym to scorne, &c.

As this Iohn Milles was diuers tymes and oft called before Boner, so much communication and talke passed betwene them, which to recite all, it were too long. And yet it were not vnpleasaunt for the Reader that lusteth to laugh, to see the blynd and vnsauorie reasones of that B. which he vsed to perswade the ignorant withall. As in the processe of his other talke with this Milles, Boner going about to perswade hym not to meddle with matters of the scripture, but rather to beleue other mens teachyng,* which had more skill in the same: first asked if he dyd beleue the scripture? Yea, sayd he, that I do. Then the Bish. Why (quoth he) S. Paul saith: if the man sleepe, the woman is at libertye to goe to another man. If thou were a sleepe hauing a wyfe, wouldst thou be content thy wyfe to take another man? And yet this is the scripture.

Item, if thou wilt beleue Luther, Zuinglius, and such, then thou canst not go right. But if thou wilt beleue me. &c thou canst not erre. And if thou shouldst erre, yet thou art in no peril, thy bloud should be required at our hands. As if thou shouldst go to a far country, & meete with a fatherly man as I am (for these were his termes) and aske the way to the head citie, and he should say, go this way,* and thou wilt not beleuee hym, but follow Luther and other heretikes of late dayes, and go a contrary way, how wi•te thou come to the place thou askest for? so if thou wilt not beleuee mee, but followe the leadyng of other heretickes, so shalt thou bee brought to destruction, and burne both body and soule.

As truly as thou seest the bodies of them in Smithfield burnt, so truly their soules doe burne in hell,* because they erre from the church.

Oft tymes speaking to the sayde Iohn Milles, hee would say: they call me bloody Boner. A vengeance on you all. I would faine •e rid of you, but you haue a de•ire in burnyng. But if I might haue my will,* I would sowe your mouthes▪ and put you in sacks, and drowne you.

Now somewhat to say concerning the deliuerance of the said Iohn Milles, the same day that he was deliuered, Boner came vnto the stocks where he lay, and asked him how he liked his lodging, and his fare.

Wel said Milles, if it would please God I might haue a little strawe to lye or sit vpon.

Then said Boner: thou wilt shew no token of a christian man. And vpon this his wife came in vnknowyng vnto him, beyng very great with child, and lookyng euery hower for her lying downe,* entreating the Bishop for her husband, & saying, that she would not go out of the house, but there would lay her belly in the bishops house, vnlesse she had her husband with her. How saist y^u (quoth Boner) thou heretike? If thy wife miscarie, or thy child, or children Page 2045 if she be with one,* or two, should perish, the bloud of them would be required at thy hands. Then to this agreement he came, that he should hue a bed in the towne of Fulham and her husband should go home with her the morow after,* vppon this condition, that his kinsman there present (one Rob. Rousie) should bring the sayd Milles vnto his house at Paules the next day.

Whereunto the sayd Milles sayd, he would not agree, except he might go home by and by. At length his wife beyng importunate for her husband, & seyng that she would go no further, but there remaine vnlesse she had her husband with her,* the bishop fearing belike the rumor which might come vpon his house thereby, bade the sayd Milles make a crosse and say: In nomine Patris & Filij, & Spiritus sancti. Amen.

Then the sayd Milles began to say: In the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy ghost, Amē. No, no, sayth Boner, say it me in Latine, In nomine Patris, & Filij, & Spiritus sancti, Amen. Milles vnderstanding the matter of that Latine to be but good, said the same, and so went home with his wyfe, his foresayde kinsman beyng charged to bring hym the next day vnto Paules, either els sayd Boner if thou doest not bring hym,* thou art an heretike as wel as he. Notwithstandyng, the charge beyng no greater, this kinsman didde not bring hym, but hee of his owne voluntarie accord came to the said B. within a fewe days after, where the B. put vnto him a certaine writing in Latin to subscribe vnto, conteyning as it semed to him no great matter, that he needed greatly to sticke at: albeit, what the bill was, he could not certainly tell. So subscribed he to the bill, and returned home. And thus much cōcernyng the 22. taken at Islington.

The history and cruell handlyng of Richard Yeoman, D. Taylors Curate at Hadley, constantly sufferying for the Gospels sake.

AFTER the story of these 22. taken at Islington, proceedyng now (the Lord willyng) we wil prosecute likewise the taking and cruell handlyng of Richard Yeoman minister.* Which Yeoman had bene before D. Tailors Curate, a godly deuout old man, of 70. yeres, which had many yeres dwelt in Hadley, well seene in the scriptures, & geuing godly exhortations to the people. With hym Doc. Tailor left his cure at his departure. But as soone as M. Newal had gotten the benefice, he droue away good Yeoman as is before said, & set in a popish Curate to maintain and continue their Romish religion whiche nowe they thought fully stablished. Then wandered he long time frō place to place, moouing & exhorting all men to stand faithfully to Gods worde, earnestly to geue themselues vnto prayer, with patience to beare the crosse now layed vpon them for their triall, with boldnes to confesse the truth before the aduersaries, & with an vndoubted hope to waite for the crowne and reward of eternall felicitie. But when hee perceiued his aduersaries to lye in waite for him,* hee went into Kent, & with a little packet of laces, pinnes and points, and such like things, he trauailed from Uillage to village, sellyng such things, & by y^e poore shyft gate hymself somewhat to the susteining of himselfe, his poore wife and children.

At the last, a Iustice of Kent called M. Moyle, tooke poore Yeoman and set him in the stocks a day and a night,* but hauyng no euident matter to charge hym with, he let hym go againe. So came he secretly againe to Hadley, and taried with his poore wife, who kept him secretly in a chāber of the Towne house, commonly called the Guild hall, more then a yere. All the which tyme, the good olde father abyde in a chamber locked vp all the day, & spent his tyme in deuout prayer and reading the Scriptures, and in carding of w•ol which his wyfe did spin. His wife also did go and beg bread and meat for herselfe and her children, and by such poore meanes sustained they themselues. Thus y^e saints of God sustained hunger and misery, while the prophets of Baal liued in iollitie, and were costly pampered at Iesabels table.

At the last, person Newal (I know not by what means) perceiued that Rich. Yeoman was so kept by hys poore wyfe,* and taking with him the Bailiffes deputies and seruants, came in the night tyme & brake vp fiue dores vpon Yeoman, whom he found in bed with his poore wyfe and children. Whom when he had so found, he irefull cried, saiying,* I thought I should find an harlot and a whore together. And he would haue plucked the clothes of from them. But Yeoman held fast the clothes, and said vnto his wyfe, wife, aryse and put on thy clothes. And vnto y^e person he sayd: Nay Person, no harlot, nor whore, but a married man and his wife, accordyng vnto Gods ordinance, and blessed be God for lawfull matrimony. I thank God for this great grace, and I defie the Pope & all his Poperie. Then led they Rich. Yeoman vnto the cage, & set hym in the stocks vntill it was day.

There was then also in the cage an olde man named Iohn Dale, who had sitten 3. or 4. dayes,* because wh• the sayd Person Newall with his Curate, executed y^r Romish seruice in the Church, he spake openly vnto him and said: O miserable & blind guides, will ye euer be blind, leaders of the blynd? will ye neuer amend? will ye neuer see the truth of Gods word? wil neither Gods threatnes nor promises enter into you harts? wil not the bloud of Martyrs nothing mollifie your stonie stomacks? Oh indurate hard harted, peruerse, & crooked generation. O damnable sorte, whom nothyng can do good vnto.

These and like words he spake in feruentnes of spirit against the superstitious religion of Rome. Wherefore per'son Newall caused hym forthwith to be attached, and set in the stockes in the cage. So was he there kept til sir Hēry Doile a Iustice, came to Hadley.

Now when poore Yeoman was taken, the person called earnestly vpon Sir Henry Doile to send them both to prison.* Sir Henry Doile earnestly laboured and entreated the person, to consider the age of the men, & their poore estate: they were persons of no reputation nor preachere: wherefore hee would desire him to let them be punished a day or two, and so to let them goe, at the least Iohn Dale who was no priest, and therfore seeyng he had so long sitten in the cage, he thought it punishment enough for hys tyme. When the person heard this, he was exceeding mad, and in a great rage called them pestilent heretikes,* vnfitte to lyue in the common wealth of Christians. Wherefore I beseech you Sir (quoth he) accordyng to your office defēd holy church, and helpe to suppressse these sectes of heresies, &c. which are false to God, and thus boldly set themselues to the euill example of other, against the Queenes gracious proceedyngs. Sir Henry Doyle seeyng he coulde do no good in the matter, & fearing also his perill if he should too much meddle in this matter, made out the Writte and caused the Constables to cary them foorth to Bury Gaole. For now were all the Iustices were they neuer so mightye, afrayde of euery shauen crowne, and stood in as much awe of them, as Pilate dyd stande in feare of Annas and Cayphas, and of the Pharisaicall broode, which cried Crucifie hym, Crucifie hym. If thou let hym goe,*thou art not Caesars friend.

Wherefore, whatsoeuer their consciences were, yet (if they would escape danger) they must needes bee the Popish Bishops slaues, and vassails. So they tooke Richard Yeoman and Iohn Dale, pinioned, and bound them lyke thieues, set them on horsebacke,* and bound their legs vnder the horses bellies, and so caried them to the Gaole at Bury, where they were tied in irons, and for that they cōtinually rebuked Popery, they were throwne into y^e lowest dungeon, where Iohn Dale through sicknesse of the Page 2046 prison, and euil keping, died in prison, whose body when hee was deade, was throwen oute and buried in the fieldes. Hee was a man of 46. yeares of age, a Weauer by his occupation, well learned in the holy scriptures, faithfull and honest in all his conuersation,* stedfast in confession of the true doctrine of Christ set forth in Kyng Edwards tyme: for the which he ioyfully suffred prison and chaines, and from this worldlye dungeon hee departed in Christ to eternall glory, and the blessed paradise of euerlasting felicitie.

After that Iohn Dale was dead, Rich. Yeoman was remooued to Norwich prison, where after strait and euill keeping, he was examined of his faith and religion. Then he boldly and constantly confessed himself to be of the faith and confession that was set forth by the late king of blessed memory, holy K. Edward the 6. and from that he would in n• wyse vary. Beyng required to submit himself to the holy father the Pope, I defie him (quoth he) & all hys detestable abominations: I will in no wise haue to doe w^t him, nor any thing that appertaineth to him. The chief articles objected to him were his mariage, & the masse sacrifice. Wherefore when he continued stedfast in confession of the truth, he was condemned, disgraced, & not only burnt but most cruelly tormented in the fire. So ended hee hys poore & miserable lyfe, and entred into the blessed bosom of Abraham, enioying with Lazarus the comfortable quietnes that God hath prepared for his elect saintes.

¶The story of Iohn Alcocke.

There was also in Hadley a yong man named Ioh. Alcocke, which came to Hadley seeking worke, for he was a Shereman by his occupation. This yong man after the Martyrdome of D. Tailor, & taking of Rich. Yeomā, vsed first in the church of Hadley to read the seruice in English, as partly is aboue touched. At length, after the comming of person Newal, he being in Hadley church vpon a sonday when the Person came by with procession, would not once mooue his cap, nor shew any signe of reuerence, but stood behind the font. Person Newal perceiuing this, whē he was almost out of the church dore, ran back again, and caught him, and called for the Constable.

Then came Rob. Rolfe, with whom this young man wrought, and asked: M. Person what hath he done, that ye are in such a rage with hym?

He is an heretike and a traitor (quoth the Person) and despiseth the Queens proceedings. Wherefore I command you in the Queenes name, haue hym to the stockes, & see he be forth commyng.

*Wel quoth Rolfe? he shal be forth comming, proceede you in your busines and be quiet. Haue him to the stockes (quoth the Person.)

I am Constable (quoth Rolfe) and may baile him, and will baile him: he shall not come in the stockes, but he shal be forth comming. So went the good Person forth wyth his holy procession, and so to Masse.

At after noone Rolfe said to this yong man: I am sorry for thee, for truly the person will seek thy destructiō, if thou take not good heed what thou answerest him.

The yong man aunswered: Sir, I am sorry that it is my lucke to be a trouble to you. As for my selfe I am not sorry, but I do commit my selfe into Gods handes, and I trust he will geue me mouth and wisdom to answer according to right.

Well (quoth Rolfe) yet beware of him. For hee is malicious, and a bloudsucker, & beareth an old hatred against me, and he wil handle you the more cruelly, because of displeasure against me.

I feare him not (quoth the yong man) He shall doe no more to me then God wil geue him leaue: and happy shal I be if God wil call me to die for his truths sake.

*After this talke, they then went to the person, who at the first asked hym: Fellow, what saiest thou to the sacrament of the aulter?

I say (quoth he) as ye vse the matter, ye make a shame full idoll of it, and ye are false idolatrous priests all the sort of you.

*I told you (quoth the person) he was a stout heretike.

So, after long talk the person committed him to ward and the next day rode he vp to London, and caried y^e yong man with him, and so came the yong man no more againe to Hadley, but after long imprisonment in Newgate, where after many examinations and troubles, for that he would not submit himselfe to aske forgeuenes of the Pope and to be reconciled to the Romish religion,* he was caste into the lower dungeon, where with euill keeping & sickenes of the house, he died in prison. Thus died he a Martyr of Christes veritie, which he hartily loued & constantly cōfessed, & receiued the garland of a well foughten battaile at the hand of the Lord. His body was cast out & buried in a dunghil.* For the Papists would in all things be like thēselues: Therfore would they not so much as suffer y^e dead bodies to haue honest and conuenient sepulture.

¶Thomas Benbrige Gentleman and Martyr, wrongfully condemned and put to death by the cruell Papists, for the defence of the Gospell of Christ Iesu.

THoms Benbrige a Gentleman, single and vnmarried,* in the Dioces of Winchester, although hee might haue liued a pleasaunt and a Gentlemans lyfe in the wealthy possessions of this world, yet to follow Christ, had rather enter into the strait gate of persecution, to the heauenlye possession of lyfe in the Lordes kingdome, then here to enioy pleasures present with vnquietnes of consciēce. Wherefore manfully standing against the Papists for the defence of the sincere doctrine of Christes Gospell, hee spared not hymselfe to confirme the doctrine of the Gospell. For the which cause he beyng apprehended for an aduersary of the Romish religion, was forthwith had to examination before D. White Bish. of Winchester,* where he susteined sundry conflictes for the truth agaynst the sayd Bishop & hys Colleagues. The Articles of the Bishoppe ministred to hym, with his aunswers to the same annexed, be here followyng.

¶Articles ministred to M. Benbrige, with his answers followyng the same.

First, we articulate against you, that the Church of God ministreth rightly,* according to the rite Apostolicall

To this he aunswereth, that Baptisme is not administred at this present, so as it was in the Apostles tyme, for that it is not ministred in the English tongue.

2. Item,* we articulate that the church of God doth beleue and hold, that in the sacrament of thankesgeuyng, after the words of consecration pronounced of the priest, the true and naturall body of Christ is present really.

He answereth,* that he beleueth not that in the sacrament is contained the body and bloud of our sauour Iesu Christ, saying: this is the marke that ye shoote at.

3. Item, we articulate, that the church holdeth and beleueth, that confirmation is a sacrament in the church,* and that by imposition of hands of a Bishop, commeth grace.

He aunswered,* that he knoweth not whether that confirmation be a Sacrament or not, and whether the Bishop geueth grace or not: hee knoweth not the order and fashion of ministration.

4. Item, we articulate, that penance is a Sacrament in the Church, and that by auricular confession and absolution pronounced by the priest, sinnes be forgeuen.

He answered negatiuely, denying sinnes to be forgeuen,* by absolution pronounced of a priest, and that it is not necessarye for a man to recite all his sinnes to a priest.

5. Item, we articulate agaynst thee, that the Church doth beleue and hold, the same authoritie to bee now in the Church which Christ gaue to his Apostles.

He answered negatiuely,* for that the Church hath not the same power and strength to worke.

6. Item, we articulate, that the Church beleueth and holdeth that the order of ministers now beyng in the church of Christ, is instituted of Christ himselfe.

He answered that he beleueth not the bishops to be the successors of the Apostles, for that they be not called as they were,* nor haue that grace.

7. Item, we articulate that the church beleueth and holdeth,* the Pope to be supreme head in the Church, and the Vicare of Christ in earth.

He answered, that it is not the Pope,* but it is the deuill that is supreme hed of the church which you speake of.

8. Item, we articulate, that the church doth hold and beleue that it is necessary to be baptised.

He denied not the same.

9. Item, we articulate, that the church doth hold and beleue,* that there is purgatory, and that the soules of the dead bee relieued with the almes and prayers of the liuyng.

He answereth and sayth, as touching purgatory, hee will not beleue as their church doth beleue.*

10. Item, we articulate, that the church holdeth and beleueth, that Matrimony is a sacrament of the Church.

He aunswered, that he will not say that Matrimony is a Sacrament, but to bee a sacrate order and signe of an holy thyng.* &c.

Moreouer, hapning into the mention of Martine Luther, he sayd:*that the sayd Martine Luther dyed a good Page 2047 christen man, whose doctrine and lyfe he did approue and allowe.

Thus haue ye the articles ministred by the Bishop, & also the answers of the sayd M. Benbrige vnto the same for the which he was then condemned,*and after brought to the place of Martyrdome, by the shiriffe called sir Rich. Pecksall, where as he stāding at the stake, began to vntie hsi pointes,*and to prepare himselfe. Then hee gaue hys gowne to the keeper, beyng belyke his fee. His Ierkin was laid on with gold lace faire and braue, which he gaue to Sir Richard Pecksall the high shiriffe. His cap of veluet he tooke of from his hed, and threw it away. Then lifting his mynd to the Lord, he made his prayers.

*That done, beyng now fastened to the stake, D. Seaton willed him to recant, and he should haue his pardon: but when he saw it preuailed not to speake, the said dreamyng and doltish Doct. willed the people not to pray for him vnlesse he would recant, no more then they would pray for a dog.

M. Benbrige standyng at the stake with his handes together in such maner, as the Priest holdeth hys handes in his memento, the sayd D. Seaton came to hym agayne, and exhorted hym to recant: vnto whome he sayde, away Babilonian, away.

Then sayd one that stooode by: Sir, cut out his tongue, & an other beyng a temporall man, rayled on hym worse, then Doct. Seaton did a great deale, who (as is thought) was set on by some other.

Then when they saw he would not yeld, they bade the tormenters to set to fire, and yet he was nothing like coue:red with fagottes. First the fire tooke away a piece of hys beard,*whereat hee nothing shranke at all. Then it came on the other side and tooke his legges, and the nether stockings of his hose being leather, made the fire to pierce the sharper, so that the intollerable heate thereof made him to cry: I recant, and sodenly therwith he thrust the fire from hym. And hauyng two or three of hys friends by, that wished his lyfe,*they stept to the fire and holpe to take it from him also: who for their labour were sent to prison. The shirife also of his own authoritie tooke hym from the stake and sent him to prison againe: for the which he was sente vnto the Fleete, and there lay a certaine tyme. But before he was taken from the stake, the sayd Seaton wrote articles to haue hym to subscribe vnto them as touchyng the Pope, the Sacrament, and such other trash. But the sayde M. Benbrige made much ado ere he would subscribe thē, in so much that D. Seaton willed thē to set to fire againe. Then with much paine and great grieve of heart,*hee subscribed to them vpon a mans backe. That beyng done, he had his gowne geuen hym agayne, and so was led to prison. Beyng in prison he wrote a letter to D. Seaton, and recanted those words he spake at the stake, vnto which he had subscribed: for he was grieved that euer hee dyd subscribe vnto them. Whereuppon expressyng his conscience, he was the same day seuēnight after burnt in deed, where the vile tormenters did rather broyle hym, then burne him. The Lord geue his enemies repentance.

The vniust execution and Martyrdome of foure burned at S. Edmunds Bury.

IN this yeare aforesaide, which was the last of Queene Maries raigne, D. Hopton beyng B. of Norwich,and D. Spenser bearing the roume of his Chauncellor, about S. Iames tyde, at S. Edmunds bury, were wrongfully put to death foure christian martyrs, to wit:

- Iohn Cooke a Sawyer.
- Rob. Myles aliâs Plummer, a Shereman.and
- Alexander Lane a Wheelewright.
- Iames Ashley, a Bachelor.

The examination of these forenamed persones, beyng seuerally called before the B. of Norwich, & Sir Edward Walgraue with others, was partly vpon these articles followyng.

First,and sir Edward Walgraue called Ioh. Cooke to him and said: How fortuneth it, that you go not to church?

Iohn Cooke sayd: I haue bene there.

Sir Edward said:and what is the cause that you goe not thither now in these dayes?

Iohn Cooke said, because the sacrament of the aultare is an abhominable Idol, and (saith he) the vengeance of God will come vpon all them that do maintaine it.

Sir Edward said: O thou ranke traitor, if I had as good commission to cut out thy tong, as I haue to sit here this day, thou shouldst be sure to haue it cut out. Then cōmanded he the Constable to haue him away, saying: hee was both a traitor and a rebell.

Then he called Rob. Myles, and said:and How fortuneth it that you go not to the church?

Rob. Myles answered, because I will follow no false Gods.

Then said the B. who told thee that it is a God?

Then said Myles: Euen you and such as you are.

Then the B. commaunded him aside, & to appeare before hym the next day.

Then he called Alexan. Lane before him,and asked him how it chanced that he would not go to the church?

He sayd that his conscience would not serue him so to doe.

Then sir Edward said: How doest thou beleeeue.

Then said Lane, euen as it is written in Gods booke.

Then sir Edward commanded him to say his beliefe.

Then the said Lane being somewhat abashed, said his beliefe to these words, which he missed vnwares: Borne of the virgin Mary.

Then sir Edward said: What, was he not born of the virgin Mary?

Yes, sayd Lane, I would haue said so.

Foure burned at S. Edmondsbury.

Page 2048Nay, said sir Edward, you are one of Cookes scholers and so commanded him away,* and to come before him the next day.

*After the lyke maner they passed also with Iames Ashley, whom they warned the next day likewyse to appeare before them againe. So in fine they appearing againe, had their condemnatiō. And thus these foure blessed Martyrs & seruants of Christ, innocently suffred together at s. Edmundsbury, as is aforesayd, about the beginnyng of August, not long before the sicknes of Queene Mary.

¶The Martyrdome of two godly persons sufferying at Ipswich for the Gospell of Christ and his euerlastyng testament, named Alexander Gouche, and Alice Driuer.

MAister Noone a iustice in Suffolk, dwelling in Martlesham,* huntynge after good men to apprehend them (as he was a bloudy tyraunt in the dayes of triall) at the length had vnderstanding of one Gouche of Woodbridge, & Driuers wyfe of Grosborough, to bee at Grosborough together, a little from his house, immediately tooke his mē with hym and went thether, and made diligent search for them, where the poore man and woman were compelled to step into an hay golph to hide themselues frō their cruelty. At the last they came to search the hay for them, and by gaging thereof with pitchforkes, at the last found them: so they tooke them & led them to Melton Gaole, where, they remainyng a tyme, at the length were caried to Bury, against the Assise at S. Iames tide, and beyng there examined of matters of fayth, did boldly stand to confesse Christ crucified, defyng the Pope with all his papisticall trashe. And among other thyngs Driuers wife likened Queene Mary in her persecution, to Iezabell, and so in that sense callyng her Iezabel, for that sir Clement Higham beyng chiefe Iudge there, adiudged her eares immediately to be cut off, which was accomplished accordingly, and she ioyfully yelded her selfe to the punishment, and thought her selfe happy that she was couēted worthy to suffer any thing for the name of Christ.

After the Assise at Bury, they were caried to Melton Gaole agayne, where they remained a tyme. This Alexāder Gouch was a man of the age of 36. yeares or thereabouts,* and by his occupation was a Weauer of shredding Couerlets, dwellyng at Woodbridge in Suffolke, & borne at Ufford in the same Countie. Driuers wife was a woman about the age of 30. yeares, & dwelt at Grosborough where they were taken, in Suffolke. Her husband did vse husbandry.* These two were caried from Melton Gaole to Ipswich, where they remayned & were examined. The which their examination, as it came to our hands, hereafter followeth.

The examination of Driuers wyfe, before Doct. Spenser the Chauncellor of Norwich.

First, she comming into the place where she should bee examined,* with a smiling countenance. Doct. Spenser said: Why woman, doest thou laugh vs to scorne?

Driuers wyfe.

Whether I do, or no, I might well enough, to see what fooles ye be.

Doct. Spenser.

Then the Chauncellour asked her wherfore she was brought before hym, and why she was layed in prison.

Dry.

Wherefore? I thinke I neede not to tell you: for ye know it better then I.

Spens.

No by my troth woman, I know not why.

Dry.

Then haue ye done me muche wrong (quoth shee) thus to imprison me, and know no cause why: for I know no euill that I haue done, I thank God, and I hope there is no man that can accuse me of any notorious fact that I haue done, iustly.

Spenser.

Woman, woman, what sayest thou to the blessed Sacrament of the aultar? Doest thou not beleeeue that it is very flesh and bloud, after the words be spoken of consecration?

Driuers wife at those words helde her peace, & made no answer. Then a great chuffeheaded priest that stood by, spake, and asked her why shee made not the Chauncellour an aunswere. With that, the sayd Driuers wyfe looked vpon hym austerely, and sayde: Why Priest, I come not to talke with thee, but I come to talke with thy Maister:* but if thou wilt I shall talke with thee, commaunde thy Maister to holde his peace. And with that the Priest put his nose in hys cappe, and spake neuer a worde more. Then the Chauncellor bade her make aunswere to that he demaunded of her.

Dry.

Sir (sayd she) pardon me though I make no aunswer, for I cannot tell what you meane thereby: for in all my lyfe I neuer heard nor read of any such Sacrament in all the Scripture.

Spens.

Why, what scriptures haue you read, I pray you.

Dry.

I haue (I thanke God) read Gods booke.

Spens.

Why, what maner of Booke is that you call Gods booke?

Dry.

It is the old and new Testament. What call you it?

Spens.

That is Gods booke in deed, I cannot deny.

Dry.

That same booke haue I read thoroughout,* but yet neuer could find any such sacrament there: & for that cause I cannot make you aunswer to that thing I knowe not. Notwithstanding, for all that, I will grant you a Sacrament, called the Lords supper: and therefore seyng I haue graunted you a Sacrament, I pray you shew me what a sacrament is.

Spens.

It is a signe. And one D. Gascoine beyng by, confirmed the same, that it was the signe of an holy thing.*

Dry.

You haue sayd the truth sir, sayd she. It is a signe in deede, I must needes graunt it: and therefore seyng it is a signe, it cannot be the thyng signified also. Thus farre we do agree: for I haue graunted your owne saying. Then stode vp the sayd Gascoine, and made an Oration wyth many fayre wordes, but little to purpose, both offensiue & odious to the myndes of the godly. In the ende of which long tale,* he asked her if shee did not beleeeue the omnipotencie of God, and that he was almighty, and able to performe that he spake. She answered, yes, and said: I do beleue that God is almighty, and able to performe that hee spake and promised.

Gasc.

Uery well. Then he sayd to his disciples: Take, eate, this is my body: Ergo, it was his body.* For he was able to performe that he spake, and God vseth not to lye.

Dry.

I pray you did he euer make any such promise to his disciples, that he would make the bread his body?

Gasc.

Those be the wordes. Can you deny it?

Dry.

No, they be the very wordes in deed, I cannot deny it: but I pray you, was it not breade that hee gaue vnto them?

Gasc.

No, it was his body.

Dry.

Then was it his body that they did eat ouer night.

Gasc.

Yea, it was his body.

Dry.

What body was it then that was crucified the nexte day?

Gasc.

It was Christes body.

Dry.

How could that be,* when his disciples had eaten him vp ouer night? except he had two bodies, as by your argument he had: one they did eate ouer night, and another was crucified the next day. Such a Doctor, such doctrine. Be you not ashamed to teach the people, that Christ had two bodies? In the 22. of Luke, He tooke bread, and brake it, and gaue it to his disciples, saying: Take, &c. and do this in the remembraunce of me. Saint Paule also sayeth, 1. Cor. 11. Do this in the remembraunce of me: for as often as ye shall eate this bread, and drinke this cup, ye shall shewe the Lordes death till he come: and therefore I meruaile ye blushe not before all this people, to lye so manifestly as ye doe. With that Gascoine held his peace, & made her no answer: for,* as it seemed, he was ashamed of his doyngs. Then the Chancellor lift vp his hed of from his cushion, and commanded the Gaoler to take her away.

Dry.

Now, sayd she, ye be not able to resist the truth, ye cōmaund me to prison agayne. Well,* the Lord in the end shal iudge our cause, and to hym I leaue it. Iwisse, iwisse, this geare will go for no payment then. So went she with the Gaoler away.

The second examination of Alice Dryuer.

THE next day she came before them agayne, & the Chancellor then asked her,* what she said to the blessed sacrament of the aulter.

Dry.

I will say nothing to it: for you will neither beleue me nor your selues. For yesterday I asked you what a sacrament was, and you sayde, it was a signe, and I agreed therto, & sayd, it was the truth, confirming it by the scriptures, so that I went not from your owne words: & now ye come and aske me agayne of such a sacrament as I told you I neuer red of in the scriptures.

Spens.

Thou lyeest naughty woman, we did not say that it was a signe.

Dry.

Why maisters be ye not the mē that you were yesterday? will ye eat your owne wordes? Are ye not ashamed to lie before all this multitude here present, who heard you speake the same?

Then stode vp D. Gascoine & said, she was deceyued: for there were three churches: the malignant church, the Page 2049 church militant, and the church triumphāt. So he would •ame haue made matter, but he could not tell which way.

Dry.

Sir, is there mention made of so many Churches in the scripture?

Gasc.

*Yea.

Dry.

I pray you where find you this word (Church) written in the scripture?

Gasc.

It is written in the new Testament.

Dry

I pray you sir shew the place where it is written.

Gasc.

I cannot tell the place, but there it is. With that she desired him to looke in his Testament. Then he fumbled & sought about him for one: but at that tyme he had none & that he knew well enough, though he seemed to search for it. At the last she said: Haue ye none here sir?

Gasc.

No.

D•y.

I thought so much in deede, that ye were little acquainted withall. Surely, you be a good Doctor. You say you sit here to iudge accordyng to the law,* and howe can you geue iudgement, & haue not the booke of the law with you? At which words Gascoine was out of countenance, and asked her if she had one.

Dry.

No, sayd she.

Gasc.

Then sayd he, I am as good a doctor as you.

Dry.

Well sir, I had one, but you tooke it from me (as you would take me from Christ, if you could) and since would ye not suffer me to haue any booke at all: so burnyng is your charitie.* But you may well know (I thanke God) that I haue exercised the same: Els could I not haue answered you (to Gods glory be it spokē) as I haue. Thus she put them all to silence, that one looked on another, and had not a word to speake.

Dry.

Haue you no more to say? God be honoured. You bee not able to resist the spirit of God in me a poore woman, I was an honest poore mans daughter, neuer brought vp in the vniuersitie as you haue bene,* but I haue driuen the plough before my father many a tyme (I thanke God:) yet notwithstanding in the defence of Gods truth, and in the cause of my maister Christ, by his grace I will set my foote against the foote of any of you all, in the maintenance and defence of the same, and if I had a thousand lyues, it would go for payment thereof.* So the Chancellour rose vp, and red the sentence in Latine of condemnation, and committed her to the secular power, & so went she to prison agayne, as ioyful as the bird of day, praysing and glorifyng the name of God.

¶Alexander Gouche, Martyr.

AT which tyme Alexander Gouch also was examined, who was taken with her, as before is said, whose examination here after followeth.

This Alexander Gouch was examined chiefly of the Sacrament & other ceremonies of the popish church.* And as for that his beliefe was, that Christ was ascended into heauen, and there remayneth, & that the Sacrament was the remembraunce of his death and passion, and for refusing the Masse, and the Pope to be supreme hed of Christs Church, for these causes was he condemned, & died with Alice Dryuer at Ipswich, the 4. of Nouember which was the Monday after All Saintes, 1558. D. Myles, Spenser beyng Chancellor, they both endyng their lyues with earnest zeale, nothing fearyng to speake their conscience whē they were commaunded to the contrary.

These two godly personnes beyng come to the place where the stake was set by 7. of the clocke in the morning,* notwithstanding they came the selfe same mornyng from Melton Gaole, which is vj. myles from Ipswich, beyng in their prayers, and singyng of Psalmes both of them together, Sir Henry Dowell then beyng Shiriffe, was very much offended with them, and wylled the Bailiffes of Ipswich to bidde them make an ende of their Prayers, they kneelyng vpon a broome fagot, one of the Bailiffes, whose name was Richard Smart, commaunded them to make an ende, saying: On, on, haue done, haue done: make an ende, nayle them to the stake, yet they continued in prayer.

Then sir Henry sent one of his men, whose name is Rich. Coue, that they should make an end.

*Then Gouch stood vp, and sayd vnto the Shiriffe: I pray you M. Shirife let vs pray a litle while, for we haue but a litle tyme to lyue here.

Then said the Bailife: Come of, haue them to the fire.

Then the sayd Gouch and Alice Driuer sayde: Why M. Shiriffe, and M. Bayliffe, wyll you not suffer vs to pray?

Away, said sir Henry, to the stake with them.

Gouch answered: Take heed M. shiriffe. If you forbid praier, the vengeance of God hangeth ouer your heds.

The Martyrdome of Alexander Gouch, and Driuers wyfe.

Then they beyng tied to the stake, and the iron chaine b•yng put about Alice Driuers necke: O (said she) here is a goodly neckerchiefe, blessed be God for it.

Then diuers came & tooke them by the handes as they were bound standing at the stake. The shiriffe cryed, laye hands on them, lay hands on them. With that a great nūber ran to the stake. The shirife seyng that, let them all alone, so that there was not one taken.

There was one Bate a Barbour, a busie doer about thē, who hauing thē a freese gowne vpon hym, sold it immediately: saying, it stunke of heretikes,* with other foule wordes moe. After this, within three or foure weekes, Gods hand was vpon hym, and so he dyed very miserably in Ipswich.

The Martyrdome of three which were burned at Bury, for the true testimony of Iesus Christ.

ALthough our history hasteth apace (the Lord be prayd) to the happy death of Queene Mary,* yet she died not so soone, but some there were burned before, and moe should haue bene burnt soone after them, if Gods prouision had not preuented her with death. In the number of them which suffred the same month when Queene Mary died, were three that were burned at Bury, whose names were these:

- Phillip Humfrey.
- Iohn Daid.
- Henry Daid, his brother.

Concernyng the burnyng of these three,* here is to bee noted, that sir Clement Higham about a fortnight before the Queen died, did sue out a writ for the burning of these three aforesayd godly and blessed Martyrs, notwithstanding that the Queene was then known to be past remedie of her sicknesse.

The trouble and Martyrdome of a godly poore woman which suffred at Exeter.

ALthough in such an innumerable company of godly Martyrs, which in sundry quarters of this Realme were put to torments of fire in Q. Maries time, it be hard so exactly to recite euery particular person that suffred, but that some escape vs eyther vnknown, or omitted: yet I Page 2050 can not passe ouer a certaine poore woman, and a sely creature, burned vnder the sayd queenes reigne, in the City of Exeter (whose name I haue not yet learned:) who dwelling sometime about Cornewall, hauing a husbände and childrē there,* much addicted to the superstitious sect of popery: was many times rebuked of thē, & driuē to go to the church, to their Idols and ceremonies, to shrift, to follow the Crosse in Procession, to geue thanks to God for restoryng Antichrist agayne into this Realme. &c. Which when her spirit could not abide to do, she made her prayer vnto God, calling for helpe and mercy, and so at length lying in her bed, about midnight, she thought there came to her a certaine motion and feeling of singuler comfort.* Whereupon in short space, she beganne to grow in contempt of her husband and children, and so taking nothing from them, but euen as she went, departed from them, seeking her lyuing by labor & spinning as well as she could, here & there for a time. In which time notwithstanding she neuer ceased to vtter her minde, as well as she durst: howbeit she at that time was brought home to her husband agayn. Wher at last she was accused by her neighbours, and so brought vp to Exeter, to be presented to the Bishop and his Clergy. The name of the Bishop which had her in examination, was Doctour Troubleuile. His Chauncellour (as I gather) was Blackstone. The chieftest matter whereupon she was charged and condemned, was for the Sacrament (which they call of the Aultar) and for speaking against Idols, as by the declaration of those which were present▪ I vnderstand, which report the talk betwene her and the bishop on this wise.

Bishop.

*Thou foolish woman (quoth the Byshop) I heare say that thou hast spoken certayne words of the most blessed Sacrament of the Aultar, the body of Christ. Fye for shame. Thou art an vnlearned person and a woman: wilt thou meddle with such highe matters, whiche all the Doctours of the worlde can not define? Wilt thou talke of so high misteryes? Keepe thy worke, & medle with that thou hast to do. It is no womans matters, at cardes and towe to be spoken of. And if it be as I am infourmed, thou art worthy to be burned.

Woman.

My Lord (sayde she) I trust your Lordship will heare me speake.

Bish.

Yea mary (quoth he) therefore I send for thee.

Woman.

I am a poore woman & do liue by my hands, getting a peny truely & of that I get I geue part to the poore.

Bish.

That is well done. Art thou not a mans wife?

And here the Bishop entred into talke of her husband.

To whom she answered againe, declaring that she had a husband and children: and had them not. So long as she was at liberty, she refused not, neyther husband, nor children.* But now standing here as I doe (sayd she) in y^e cause of Christ & his trueth, where I must either forsake Christ, or my husband, I am contēted to sticke onely to Christ my heauenly spouse, and renounce the other.

And here she making mention of the words of Christ: He that leaueth not father or mother, sister or brother, husband. &c. the Byshop inferred that Christ spake that of the holy martyrs, which dyed because they would not doe sacrifice to the false Gods.

Woman.

Sikerly syr, and I will rather dye then I will do any worship to that foule Idoll, whiche with your Masse you make a God.

Bish.

Yea, you callet, will you say that the sacrament of the aultar is a foule Idoll?

Wom.

*Yea truly, quoth she: there was neuer such an Idoll as your sacramēt is, made of your priestes, & cōmaūded to be worshipped of al mē, with many fōd phantasies, where Christ did commaund it to be eaten & drunken in remembraunce of his most blessed passion our redemption.

Bish.

See this pratling woman. Doest thou not heare, that Christ did say ouer the bread: This is my body, & ouer the cup: This is my blood?

Wom.

Yes forsooth, he sayd so, but he meant that it is hys body and blood not carnally, but sacramentally.

Bish.

Loe, she hath heard pratling among these new preachers, or heard some peeuish book. Alas poore womā, thou art deceiued.

Wom.

No, my Lorde, that I haue learned, was of Godly preachers,* & of godly books which I haue heard read. And if you will geue me leaue, I will declare a reason why I will not worship the sacrament.

Bish.

Mary say on, I am sure it will be goodly geare.

Woman.

Truely such geare as I will loose this poore life of mine for.

Bish.

Then you will be a martyr good wife.

Woman.

In deed if the denying to worshippe that bready God be my martyrdome, I will suffer it with all my hart.

Bish.

Say thy minde.

Wom.

You must beare with me a poore woman, quoth she.

Bish.

So I will, quoth he.

Woman.

I will demaunde of you, whether you can denye your creed, which doth say, that Christ perpetually doth sit at the right hand of his father both body & soule, vntill he come againe, or whether he be there in heauē our aduocate & do make prayer for vs vnto God his father. If it be so, he is not here in the earth in a piece of bread. If he be not here, & if he do not dwel in temples made with hands, but in heauen, what shall we seeke him here? if he did offer his body once for all, why make you a new offering? if w^t once offring he made al perfect, why do you with a false offring make al vnperfect? if he be to be worshipped in spirite and truth, why doe you worship a piece of bread? if he be eaten & drunkē in faith & truth, if his flesh be not profitable to be among vs, why do you say, you make his body and fleshe, and say it is profitable for body & soule?

Alas, I am a poore woman: but rather then I would do as you doe, I would liue no longer. I haue sayd syr.

Bish.

I promise you, you are a iolly protestant, I pray you in what schooles haue you bene brought vp?

Wom.

I haue vpon the sondayes visited the sermons, and there haue I learned suche thinges, as are so fixed in my brest that death shall not separate them.

Bish.

O foolish woman, who wil wast his breath vpō thee or such as thou art? But how chaunceth it that thou wentest away from thy husbände? if thou were an honest woman, thou wouldest not haue left thyne husband and children, and runne about the country like a fugitiue.

Wom.

Syr, I laboured for my liuing: And as my mayster Christ counselleth me, when I was persecuted in one city, I fled vnto another.

Bish.

Who persecuted thee?

Wom.

My husband and my children.* For when I woulde haue him to leaue Idolatry, and to worship God in heauen, he would not heare me, but he with his children rebuked me, and troubled me. I fled not for whoredom, nor for theft, but because I would be no partaker with him & his, of that foule Idoll the Masse. And whersoever I was, as oft as I could vpon sondayes and holy dayes I made excuses not to go to the popish church.

Bish.

Belike thē you are a good houswife, to flee from your husband, and also from the church.

Wom.

My houswifry is but small but God geue me grace to go to the true church.

Bish.

The true church: what doest thou meane?

Woman.

Not your Popish Church, full of Idolles and abominations, but where three or foure are gathered together in the name of God, to that Church wil I go as long as I liue.

Bish.

Belike then you haue a Church of your owne. Well, let this mad woman be put down to prison, vntil we send for her husband.

Wom.

No, I haue but one husband, which is here already in this city and in prison with me, from whom I will neuer depart: and so theyr communication for that day brake of. Blackstone and others perswaded the Bishop that she was a mazed creature, and not in her perfect wit (which is no new thing, for the wisdom of God to appere foolishnes to carnall men of this world) & therefore they consulted together, that she should haue liberty and go at large. So the keper of the bishops prison had her home to his house, where shee fell to spinning and carding, and did all other worke as a seruant in the said kepers house & went about the city, when and whither she would, and diuers had delight to talke with her. And euer shee continued talking of the sacrament of the aultar. Which, of all thing they coulde least abide. Then was her husband sent for, but she refused to go home with him, with the blemish of the cause and religion, in defence wherof she there stood before the Bishop and the priestes.

Then diuers of the Priestes had her in handling,* perswading her to leaue her wicked opinion about the sacrament of the aultar, the naturall body and bloud of our Sauour Christ. But she made them aunsweare, that it was nothing but very bread and wine, and that they might be ashamed to say, that a piece of bread should be turned by a man into the naturall body of Christ, which bread doth vinow, and Mice oftentimes do eate it, and it doth •ould & is burned: And (sayde she) Gods owne body wyll not be so handled, nor kept in prison, or boxes, or aumbries. Let it be your God: it shall not be mine: for my Sauour sitteth on the right hand of God, & doth pray for me. And to make that sacramētal or significatiue bread instituted for a remēbrance, the very bodye of Christ, and to worship it, it is very foolishnes and deuillish deceit.

Now truly (sayd they) the deuill hath deceiued thee.

No (sayd she) I trust the liuing God hath opened mine Page 2051 eyes, and caused me to vnderstand the right vse of the blessed sacrament, which the true church doth vse, but the false church doth abuse.

Then stept forth an old Frier, and asked what she said of the holy Pope.*

I (sayd she) say that he is Antichrist and the deuill.

Then they all laughed.

Nay (sayde she) you had more neede to weepe then to laugh, & to be sory that euer you were borne, to be the chapeines of that whore of Babilon. I defie him and all hys falshood: and get you away frō me: you do but trouble my conscience. You would haue me folow your doinges: I will first loose my life. I pray you depart.

Why, thou foolish woman (sayd they) we come to thee for thy profite and soules health.

O Lord God (sayd she) what profite riseth by you that teach nothing but lyes for trueth? how saue you Soules, when you preach nothing but damnable lyes, and destroy soules.

How prouest thou that (sayd they?)

Do you not damne soules (sayd she) when you teache the people to worship Idolles, Stockes, and Stones, the worke of mens handes? and to worship a false GOD of your owne making, of a piece of breade, and teach that the Pope is Gods Uicar, and hath power to forgeue sinnes? and that there is a Purgatory, when Gods sonne hath by his Passion purged all? and say, you make God and sacrifice him, when Christes bodye was a Sacrifice once for all? ^{*} Doe you not teach the people to number theyr sinnes in your eares, and say they be damned, if they confesse not all: when Gods word sayth: Who can number hys sinnes? Do you not promise them Trentals and Diriges, & masses for soules, and sell your prayers for money, and make them buy pardons, and trust to such foolish inuentions of your owne imaginations? Do you not altogether against God? Doe you not teache vs to pray vpon Beades, and to pray vnto Sayntes, and say they can pray for vs? Do you not make holy water and holy bread to fray Deuils? Doe you not a thousand more abhominatiōs? And yet you say, you come for my profite and to saue my soule. No, no, one hath saued me. Farewell you with your saluation. Muche other talke there was betwene her and them, which here were too tedious to be expressed.

In the meane time during this her monethes libertye graunted to her by the Byshop, which we spake of before, it happened that she entring in saynt Peters Church, beheld there a cunning Dutchman how he made new noses to certayne fine Images whiche were disfigured in Kyng Edwardes time: What a madde man art thou (sayde she) to make them new noses, which within a few dayes shall all lose theyr heades. The Dutchman accused her, & layde it hard to her charge. And she sayd vnto him: Thou art accursed, and so are thy Images. He called her Whoore. Nay (sayd she) thy Images are Whoores, and thou art a Whore hunter: for doth not GOD say: You go a whoryng after straunge Gods, figures of your owne making? and thou art one of them. Then was she sent for, and clapped fast: and from that time she had no more liberty.

Duringe the time of her imprisonment, diuers resorted to her, ^{*} to visit her, some sent of the byshop, some of their owne voluntary will: amongst whō was one Daniell a great doer and preacher sometimes of the Gospell, in the dayes of king Edward, in those parties of Cornewall and Deuonshyre, whom after that she perceiued by his owne confession, to haue reuolted from that whiche he preached before, through the grieuous imprisonmentes (as he sayd) and feare of persecution, whiche he had partly susteined by the cruell Iustices in those parties, earnestly she exhorted him to repent with Peter, and to be more constant in his profession.

Moreouer, there resorted to her a certeine worthy gentlewoman, the wife of one Walter Rauley, a womā of noble wit, and of a good & godly opinon, came to the prisō & talked with her: she sayd her creede to the gentlewoman, & when she came to the Article· He ascended: there she stayed, and bade the Gentlewoman to seeke his blessed bodye in heauen, not in earth, & told her playnly that God dwelleth not in temples made with handes, & that sacrament to be nothing els but a remembrance of his blessed passion, & yet (sayd she) as they now vse it, it is but an Idoll, & far wide from any remembrance of Christes body? which (sayd she) will not long continue, & so take it good maistres. So that as soone as she came home to her husband, she declared to him, that in her life, she neuer heard a woman (of such simplicity to see to) talk so godly, so perfectly, so sincerely, & so earnestly: in so much that if God were not with her, shee could not speak such things: to the which I am not able to answere her (sayd she) who can read, and she can not.

Also there came to her one William Kede,* and Iohn his brother, not onely brethren in the flesh, but also in the truth, and men in that Country of great credite, whose father Robert Kede, all his life suffered nothing but trouble for the Gospell. These two good and faythfull brethrē were present with her, both in the hall and also at the prison, & (as they reported) they neuer heard the like woman: of so godly talke, so faythfull, or so constant, & as godly exhortations she gaue them.

Thus this good matrone, the very seruant and handmayd of Christ,* was by many wayes tried both by harde prisonment, threatninges, tauntes, and scornes, called an Anabaptist, a madde woman, a drunkard, a whoore▪ a runnagate. She was prooued by liberty to goe whither she would: she was tryed by flattery, with many fayre promises: she was tryed with her husband, her goodes and childred, but nothing could preuayle: her hart was fixed, shee had cast her anker, vtterly contēning this wicked world: A rare ensample of constancy to all professors of Christes holy Gospell.

In the bill of my Information, it is so reported to me, that albeit shee was of suche simplicity and without learning, yet you could declare no place of Scripture, but she would tell you the Chapter: yea, she woulde recite to you the names of all the bookes of the Bible. For whiche cause one Gregory Basset a rancke Papist, sayd, she was out of her wit, and talked of the Scripture,* as a dogge rangeth farre of from his mayster whē he walketh in the fieldes, or as a stolen sheepe out of his maisters handes, she wist not wherat, as all heretickes do, with many other such tātes, which she vtterly defyed.* Whereby as almighty God is highly to be prayed, working so mightely in such a weake vessell: so men of stronger and stouter nature, haue also to take example how to stand in like case: whē as we see this poore woman, how manfully she went through with such constancy and pacience.

At the last, when they perceiued her to be past remedy, and had consumed all theyr threatninges, that by neyther prisonmēt nor liberty, by manaces nor flattery, they could bring her to sing any other song, nor win her to their vanities and superstitious doinges, then they cryed out, An Anabaptist, an Anabaptist. Then at a daye they brought her from the Bishops prison to the Guildhall,* & after that deliuered her to the tēporall power, according to their custome, where shee was by the Gentlemen of the countrey exhorted yet to call for grace, & to leaue her fond opinions: And go home to thy husband (sayd they:) thou art an vnlearned woman, thou art not able to answere to such high matters.

I am not, sayd she: yet with my death I am content to be a witnes of Christs death: and I pray you make no lōger delay with me: my hart is fixed, I will neuer otherwise say, nor turne to theyr superstitious doinges.

Then the bishop sayd, the deuill did lead her.

No my Lord (sayd she) it is the spirite of God whiche leadeth me, and which called me in my bed, & at midnight opened his truth to me. Thā was there a great shout and laughing among the priestes and other.

During the time that this good poore woman was thus vnder these priestes handes, amongst many other baytinges and sore conflictes whiche she susteyned by thē, here is moreouer not to be forgotten, howe that Mayster Blaxton aforesayd, being treasurer of the Church, had a concubine which sundry times resorted to him, with other of his gossips: so that alwayes when they came, this sayde good woman was called forth to his house, there to make his miniō with the rest of the company some myrth, he examining her with suche mocking & gyruing, deriding the truth, that it would haue vexed any christian hart to haue seene it. Then when he had long vsed his foolishnes in this sort, & had sported himselfe enough in deriding this christian martyr: in the end he sent her to prison agayne, and there kept her very miserablie, sauing that sometimes he would send for her, when his foresayd guest came to him, to vse with her his accustomed folly aforesaid. But in sine, these vile wretches (after many combates and scoffing per|swasions) whē they had played the part of the cat with the mouse, at length condemned her, and deliuered her ouer to the secular power.

Then the Indictment beyng geuen and read, whiche was, that she should go to the place whence she came,* and from thence to be led to the place of execution, then & there to bee burned with flames till shee shoulde bee consumed: shee lifted vppe her voyce and thanked GOD, saying: I thanke thee my Lord my God, this daye haue I founde that which I haue long sought. But such outcries as ther were agayne, and such mockings were neuer seene vpō a poore seely woman: Al which she most paciently took. And Page 2052 yet this fauour they pretended after her iudgement, that her life should be spared, if she would turne & recant. Nay, that will I not (sayd she:) God forbyd that I shoulde loose the life eternall for this carnall and shorte life. I wyll neuer turne from my heauenly husband, to my earthly husband: from the feloshippe of aungels, to mortall children: And if my husband and children be faythfull, then am I theirs. God is my father, God is my mother, God is my Sister, my Brother, my Kinsman, God is my frend moste faythfull.

Then was she deliuered to the Shiriffe, & innumerable people beholding her,* she was led by the officers to the place of executiō, without the walles of Exeter, called Sothenhey, where agayne these superstitious priestes assaulted her: and she prayed them to haue no more talke wyth her, but cryed still, God be merciful to me a sinner, God be mercifull to me a sinner. And so whiles they were tying her to the stake, thus still she cried, and would geue no answeere to thē, but with much pacience tooke her cruel death, and was with the flames and fire consumed: and so ended * this mortall life as cōstant a woman in the fayth of Christ, as euer was vpon the earth. She was as simple a womā to see to as any man might beholde: of a very little & short stature, somewhat thicke, about 54. yeares of age. She had a chearefull countenance, so liuely, as though she had bene prepared for that day of her mariage to meete the Lambe: most pacient of her wordes & answeres, sober in apparel, meat & drinke, and would neuer be idle: a great comfort to as many as would talke with her: good to the poore: and in her trouble, mony, she sayde, she woulde take none: for she sayd, I am going to a city wher mony beareth no maistry: whiles I am here, God hath promised to feede me. Thus was her mortall life ended. For whose constancie God be euerlastingly prayed. Amen.

¶The cruell burning of a woman at Exeter.

Touching the name of this woman (as I haue nowe learned) she was the wife of one called Prest, dwelling in the Dioces of Exeter, not farre from Launceston.

¶The Persecution and Martyrdome of three godly men burnt at Bristow, about the latter yeares of Queene Maries reigne.

IN writing of the blessed Sayntes, which suffered in the bloody dayes of queene Mary,* I had almost ouerpassed the names and story of three godly Martyrs, whiche with theyr bloud gaue testimony likewise to y^e gospell of Christ, being condemned and burnt in the town of Bristow. The names of whom were these:

- Richard Sharpe.
- Thomas Benion.
- *Thomas Hale.

First, Richarde Sharpe Weauer, of Bristowe,* was brought the 9. day of Marche. an. 1556. before M. Dalbye Chauncellour of the Towne or City of Bristow, and after examination concerning the sacrament of the aultar, was perswaded by the sayde Dalbye and others, to recant, and the 29. of the same moneth was enioyned to make his recantation before the Parishioners in his parish Church. Which whē he had done, he felt in his cōscience such a tormenting hell, that he was not able quietly to worke in his occupation, but decayed and chaunged, both in colour and liking of his body. Who shortly after vpon a sonday came into his parish Church, called Temple, & after high masse, came to the queere doore & sayd with a loud voyce: Neighbors, beare me recorde that yonder Idoll (and poynted to the aultar) is the greatest and most abhominable that euer was: and I am sory that euer I denied my Lord GOD. Then the Constables were commaunded to apprehende him, but none stepped forth, but suffered him to goe out of the Church. After by night he was apprehended and caried to Newgate, & shortly after, he was brought before the sayd Chauncellor,* denying the sacrament of the aultar to be the body & bloud of Christ, & sayd, it was an Idoll, and therfore was cōdemned to be burnt by the sayd Dalby, He was burnt the 7. of May. 1557. and dyed godly, patiently, and constantly, confessing the articles of our fayth.

¶Thomas Hale, Martyr.

THE Thursday in the night, before Easter .1557. came one M. Daudid Herris Alderman, & Iohn Stone,* to y^e house of one Thomas Hale, a Shoomaker, of Bristowe, & caused him to rise out of his bedde, & brought hym foorth of his dore. To whō y^e said Tho. Hale said: You haue sought my blood these two yeares, & now much good do it you w^t it. Who being committed to the watchmen, was caried to Newgate, the 24. of April, the yere aforesaid was brought before M. Dalby the Chancelor committed by him to prison, & after by him condemned to be burnt, for saying the sacrament of the altar to be an Idoll. He was burned the 7. of May, with the foresayd Rich. Sharpe, & godly, patiently, and constantly embracing the fire with his armes.

Richard Sharpe & Thomas Hale were burned both together in one fire, and bound backe to backe.

Thomas Benion.

THomas Benion a Weauer, at the commaundement of the Commissioners, was brought by a Constable,* the thirteenth daye of August. 1557. before Mayster Dalbye Chauncellour of Bristow, who committed him to pryson for saying there was nothing but bread in the Sacrament as they vsed it. Wherefore, the twenty day of the sayd August he was condemned to be burnt by the sayd Dalby, for denying fiue of theyr Sacramentes, and affirming two, Page 2053 that is: the Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, and the Sacrament of Baptisme. He was burnt the seuen and twenty of the sayd moneth and yere, and dyed godly,

¶The Martyrdome of fiue constant Christians, which suffered the last of all other in the time of Queene Mary.

*The last that suffred in Queene Maries time, were fiue at Caunterburye, burned about sixe dayes before the death of Queene Mary, whose names follow here vnder written.

- Iohn Corneford, of Wortham.
- Christopher Browne, of Maydstone.
- Iohn Herst, of Ashford.
- *Alice Snoth.
- Katherine Knight, otherwise called Katherine Tynley, an aged woman.

These fiue, to close vp the finall rage of queene Maries persecution,* for the testimony of that word, for whiche so many had died before, gaue vp theyr liues, meekly and patiently suffering the violent malice of the Papistes. Which Papists although they then might haue either well spared them, or els deferred theyr death, knowing of the sicknesse of Queene Mary: yet such was the implacable despite of that generation, that some there be that say, the Archdeacō of Canterbury the same time being at London, & vnderstanding the daunger of the Queene, incontinently made al post hast home to dispatch these, whom before he had thē in his cruell custody.

The matter why they were iudged to the fire, was for beleuing the body not to be in the sacrament of the aulter,* vnlesse it be receiued, saying moreouer that we receiue an other thing also beside Christes body, which we see, and is a temporall thing, according to S. Paule: The thinges that be sene, be temporall. &c.

Item, for confessing that an euill man doth not receiue Christes body: Because no man hath the sonne, except it be geuen him of the father.

Item, that it is Idolatry to creepe to the crosse and S. Iohn forbidding it, sayth, Beware of Images.

Itē, for confessing that we should not pray to our Lady and other Sayntes, because they be not omnipotent.

For these and such other articles of Christian doctrine, were these fiue committed to the fire. Agaynst whom whē the sentence shoulde be read, and they excommunicate, after the maner of the papistes,* one of them, Iohn Cornford by name, styrrred with a vehemēt spirit of the zeale of god, proceeding in a more true excōmunication agaynst the papistes, in the name of them all, pronounced sentēce against them, in these wordes as folow.

In the name of our Lord Iesus Christ the sonne of the most mighty God, and by the power of his holy spirite,* & the authority of his holy catholick & Apostolick church, we do geue here into th• handes of Satan, to be destroyed, the bodies of all those blasphemers & hereticks, that do mainteine any error agaynst his most holy word, or do cōdemne his most holy truth for heresy, to the mainteinaunce of any false Churche or fayned Religion, so that by this thy iuste iudgement, O most mighty God, against thy aduersaries, thy true religion may be knowne, to thy great glory, and our comfort, and to the edifying of al our natiō. Good Lord so be it. Amen.

This sentence of excommunication beyng the same time openly pronounced and registred, proceeding so, as it seemeth from an inwarde fayth and hartye zeale to Gods trueth and Religion, tooke such effect agaynst the enemye, that within sixe dayes after, Queene Mary dyed, and the tyranny of all Englishe Papistes with her. Albeit, notwithstanding the sicknes and death of that queene, wherof they were not ignorant, yet the Archdeacon, with other of Caunterbury,* thought to dispatch the Martyrdome of these men before.

[illustration]

¶The burning of fiue Martyrs at Caunterbury.

In the which fact, the tyranny of this Archdeacon seemeth to exceede the crueltye of Boner: who notwithstanding he had certayne the same time vnder his custodie, yet he was not so importune in haling them to the fire, as appeareth by father Liuing and his wife, and diuers other, who being the same time vnder the custody and daunger of Boner, deliuered by the death of Queene Mary, remayne yet some of them aliue.

These godly martirs in theyr prayers which they made before their martirdome, desired God y^t theyr bloud might be the last that should be shed, and so it was.

This Katherine Tynley was the mother of one Robert Tynley now dwelling in Maydstone, which Robert was in trouble all Queene Maryes time. To whom hys Mother comming to visite him, asked him how he tooke this place of Scripture (which she had seene, not by reading of the Scripture, for she had yet in maner no taste of Religion, but had found it by chaunce in a Booke of prayers: I will poure out my spirite vpon all flesh, and your sonnes and your daughters shall prophesy: your olde men shall dreame dreames, and your young men shall see visions.*And also vpon the seruantes, and vpon the maydes in those dayes will I poure my spirite. &c. Which place after that he had expounded to her, she began to take hold on the Gospell, growing more and more in zeale and loue thereof, and so continued vnto her Martyrdome.

Among such young women as were burned at Caunterbury, it is recorded of a certayne mayd, and supposed to be this Alice Snoth here in this story mentioned,* or els to be Agnes Snoth aboue storied, pag. 1751. (for they were Page 2054 both burned) that when she was brought to bee executed, she being at the stake, called for her godfather and godmothers. The Iustice hearing her, sent for thē, but they durste not come. Notwithstanding the Iustice willed the messēger to go agayne, and to shew them that they should incur no daunger therfore.

Then they hearing that, came to knowe the matter of theyr sending for.* When the maide saw them, she asked thē what they had promised for her: and so she immediatly rehearsed her fayth, and the commaundements of God, and required of them, if there were any more that they had promised in her behalfe: and they sayd no.

Then sayd shee: I dye a Christian woman: beare witnes of me, and so cruelly in fire was she consumed, & gaue ioyfully her life vp for the testimony of Christes Gospell, to the terrour of the wicked, and comfort of the godly, and also to the stopping of the sclauderous mouthes of suche, as falsly doe quarrell agaynst these faythfull Martyrs for going from that religion wherein by theyr Godfathers & Godmothers they were first baptised.

¶The story and condemnation of Iohn Hunt, and Richard White, ready to be burnt, but by the death of Queene Mary escaped the fire.

BESides these Martyrs aboue named, diuers there were in diuers other places of the Realme imprisoned,* whereof some were but newly taken and not yet examined, some begon to be examined but were not yet condemned, certayne both examined and condemned but for lacke of the writ escaped.

Other there were also, both condemned, and the writ also was brought downe for theyr burning, and yet by the death of the Chaūcellor, the bishop, and of Queene Mary happening together about one time, they most happely & maruellously were preserued and liued many yeres after. In the number of whom was one Iohn Hunt and Rich. White imprisoned at Salisbury. Touching which historie something here is to be shewed.

First these two good men and faythfull seruauntes of the Lord aboue named, to wit, Iohn Hunt, and Richarde White had remayned long time in prison at Salisbury, & other places therabout, the space of two yeaes and more. During which time, oft times they were called to examination, & manifold waies were impugned by the Bishop, and the Priestes. All whose examinations, as I thoughte not much needefull here to prosecute or to searche out, for the length of the volume: so neither agayne did I thinke it good to leaue no memorye at all of the same, but some part to expresse, namely of the examination of Richarde White before the Bishop of Salisbury, the Bishop of Glocester, with the Chauncellour and other Priestes, not vnworthy perchaunce to be rehearsed.

The examination of Richard White, before the Byshop of Salisbury in his chamber in Salisbury, the 26. day of Aprill. an. 1557.

*The Bishop of Salisbury at that time was Docor Capon. The Bishop of Glocester was Doctor Brookes. These with Doctour Geffrey the Chauncelour of Salisbury, and a great number of Priestes sitting in iudgemēt, Richarde White was brought before them. With whome first the Bishop of Glocester, which had the examination of him, beginneth thus.

Bishop Brookes.

Is this the prisoner?

The chauncellour.

Yea my Lord.

Brookes.

Frend, wherefore camest thou hether?

White.

My Lord I trust to know y^e cause, for y^e lawe saith: in the mouth of two or three witnesses things must stand.

Doctour Capon.

Did not I examine thee of thy fayth whē thou camest hether?

White.

No my Lord, you did not examine me, but cōmaūded me to the Lollardes Tower, and that no man should speake with me. And now I do require mine accuser.

*Then the Register said: the Maior of Marlborow did apprehend you for wordes that you spake there, & for that I commaunded you to be conueyed hither to prison.

White.

You had the examination of me in Marlborow. Say you what I haue sayd. And I will aunswere you.

Geffray.

Thou shalt confesse thy fayth ere thou depart, and therefore say thy minde freely, and be not ashamed so to do.

White.

I am not ashamed of the Gospell of Christ, because it is the power of God to saluation vnto all that beleue, & S. Peter sayth: If any man do aske thee a reasō of the hope that is in thee, make him a direct aunswere, and that with meekenes. Who shall haue the examination of me?

Chaunc.

My Lord of Glocester shall haue the examinatiō of thee.

White.

My Lorde, will you take the paynes to wet your coate in my bloud? be not guilty thereof: I warne you before hand.

Brookes.

I will do nothing to the contrary to our law.

White.

My Lorde, what is it that you doe request at my handes?

Brookes

I will appose thee vpon certayne articles, & principally vpon the sacramēt of y^e aultar? How doest thou beleue of the blessed Sacrament of the aultar? Beleuest thou not the reall, * and corporall presence of Christ in the same, euen the very same Christ that was borne of the virgine Mary, that was hanged on the Crosse, and that suffe'red for our sinnes? (and at these words they al put of their cappes and bowed theyr bodyes.)

White.

My Lord what is a Sacrament.

Brookes.

It is the thing it selfe the which it representeth.

White.

My Lord that can not be, for he that representeth a Prince can not be the Prince himselfe.

Brookes.

How many sacraments findest thou in the scriptures called by the name of Sacramentes?

White.

I finde 2. Sacraments in the Scriptures, but not called by the names of the sacramentes. But I thinke S. Augustine gaue them the first name of Sacramentes.

Brookes.

Then thou findest not that word sacramēt in the Scriptures.

White.

No my Lord.*

Brookes.

Did not Christ say: This is my body? and are not his words true?

White.

I am sure the wordes are true, but you play by me as the deuill did by Christ, for he sayd, If thou be. Mat. 4. For it is. &c. Psal. 91.* But the words that folowed after he clean left out, which are these: Thou shalt walke vpon the Lion and Aspe. &c. These woordes the Deuill lefte out because they were spoken agaynst hymselfe: and euen so doe you recite the Scriptures.

Brookes.

Declare thy fayth vpon the Sacrament.

White.

Christ and his Sacramentes are like,* because of the natures, for in Christ are 2. natures, a diuine and a humane nature: so likewise in the Sacrament of Cristes body and bloud, there be two natures: the which I deuide into 2. partes, that is, externall and internal. The external part is the element of bread and wine, according to the saying of S. Austine. The internal part is the inuisible grace which by the same is represented. So is there an externall receiuing of the same Sacrament, & an internall. The externall is with the hande, the eye, the mouth, and the eare.* The internall is the holy ghost in the hart, which worketh in me fayth. Wherby I apprehend all the merits of Christ, applying the same wholly vnto my saluation. If this bee truth beleue it, and if it be not, reprove it.

Doct. Hoskins.

This is Oecolampadius doctrine, & Hooper taught it to the people.

Brokes.

Doest thou not beleue that after the wordes of cōsecration there is the naturall presence of Christes body?

White.

My Lord, I will aunswere you, if you wyll aunswere me to one question. Is not this article of our beliefe true: He sitteth at the right hand of God the father almighty? if he be come from thence to iudgement, say so.

Brokes.

No. But if thou wilt beleue the Scriptures, I will proue to thee that Christe was both in heauen and in earth at one time.*

White.

As he is God, he is in all places: but as for hys manhood, he is but in one place.

Brokes.

S. Paule sayth. 1. Cor. 15. Last of all he was seene of me. &c. Here S. Paule sayth he sawe Christ, and S. Paule was not in heauen.

White.

S. Pauls chief purpose was by this place to proue the resurrection. But how do you proue that Christ when he appered to S. Paule, was not still in heauen: like as he was sene of Stephen, sitting at the right hand of God? S. Augustine sayth the head that was in heauen dyd crye for the body and members which were on the earth & said Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And was not Paule taken vp into the thyrd heauen where hee might see Christ▪ as he witnesseth. Cor. 15. For there he doth but onely saye that he saw Christ, but concerning the place, hee speaketh nothing. Wherefore this place of scripture proueth not that Christ was both in heauen and earth at one tyme.

Brokes.

I told you before he woulde not beleue. Here be three opinions, the Lutherans, the Oecolampadians, and we the Catholickes.* If you the Oecolampadians haue the truth: then the Lutherians & we the catholickes be out of the way. If the Lutherians haue the truth, then you the Oecolampadians and we the Catholickes be out of the way. But if we the catholicks haue the truth, as we Page 2055 haue in deede, then the Lutherians and you the Oecolampadians are out of the way: as ye are in deede, for the Lutherians do call you heretickes.

White.

My Lorde, ye haue troubled me greatly wyth the Scriptures.

Brokes.

Did I not tell you it was not possible to remoue him from his errorr? Away with him to the Lollardes Tower, and dispatch him as soone as ye can.

This was the effect of my first examination. More examinations I had after this, which I haue no tyme now to write out.

*Amongest many other examinatiōs of the foresaid Richard White, at diuers and sondry times susteined, it happened one time, that Doctour Blackston Chancellour of Exeter sa•e vpon him, with diuers other, who alledging certayne Doctors, as Chrysostom, Cyprian, Tertullian, agaynst the sayd Richard, and being reproued by hym for his false patching of the Doctors, fell in such a quaking, & shaking (his conscience belike remorsing him) that he was fayne, •lowping downe, to laye both his handes vpon his knees. to stay his body from trembling.

Then the sayd Iohn Hunt and Richard White, after many examinatiōs and long captiuity, at length were called for and brought before Doctour Geffrey the Byshops Chancellor,* there to be condemned, and so they were. The high Sheriffe at that present was one named Syr Anthony Hungerford, who being thē at the Sessions, was there charged with these two condēned persōs, with other, malefactours there condemned likewise the same time, to see the execution of death ministred vnto them.

In the meane tyme M. Clifforde of Boscon in Wiltshyre,* sonne in law to the sayd Syr Anthony Hungerford the Shiriffe, commeth to his father, exhorting him & counselling him earnestly in no case to medle with the death of these two innocent persons: and if the Chauncellour and Priestes would needes be instant vpon him, yet he should first require the writ to be sent downe De comburendo, for his discharge.

Syr Anthony Hungerford hearing this, and vnderstanding Iustice Browne to be in the town the same time, went to him to aske his aduise & coūsel in the matter: who told him that without the writ sent downe from the superiour powers, he could not be discharged: and if the writte were sent, then he must by the law do his charge.

The Sheriffe vnderstanding by Iustice Browne how farre he might go by the lawe,* and hauing at that time no writ for his warrant, let them alone, and the next daye after taking his horse departed.

The Chauncellor all this while maruelling what the Sheriffe ment, and yet disdayning to go vnto him but looking rather the other should haue come first to him, at last hearing that he was ridden, taketh his horse and rideth after him: who at length ouertaking the said Sheriffe, declareth vnto him, how he had committed certaine condemned prisoners to his hand, whose duty had bene to haue sene execution done vpon the same: which for that he had not done, the matter he sayd, was great, and therefore wyllled him to look well vnto it how he would aunswere the matter. And thus began he fiercely to lay to his charge.

Wherin note, gentle Reader, by the way, the close and couert hypocrisy of the Papistes in theyr dealinges.* Who in the forme and stile of their owne sentence cōdemnatory. pretend a petition vnto the seculer power, In visceribus Iesu Christi, vt iuris rigor mitigetur, atque vt parcatur vitae, That is, That the rigour of the law may be mitigated, and that their life may be spared. And how standeth this now with their owne doinges and dealinges,* when this Chauncellour (as ye see) is not onely contented to geue Sentence agaynst them, but also hunteth here after the Officer, not suffering him to spare them, although he would? What dissimulation is this of men, goyng and doying contrarye to their owne wordes and profession? But let vs returne to our matt•• agayne.

The Sheriffe hearing the Chaūcellours wordes, and seeing him so vrging vpon him, tolde him agayne that he was no babe, which nowe was to be taught of hym. If he had any writ to warrant and discharge him in burning those men, then he knew what he had to do. Why, saith the Chauncellour, did not I geue you a writ, with my hande and 8. moe of the Close set vnto the same? Well quoth the Sheriffe that is no sufficient discharge to me, and therefore as I told you, if ye haue a sufficient writ and warrant frō the superiour powers, I know then what I haue to do in my office: otherwise, if you haue no other writ but that, I tell you, I wil neither burne them for you nor none of you all. &c.

Where note agayne (good Reader) how by this it may be thought and supposed, that the other poore Saintes and Martyrs of God,* such as had bene burned at Salisbury before, were burned belike without any authorised or sufficient writ from the superiours, but onely vpon the information, of the Chauncellour and of the Close, through the vncircumspect negligence of the Sheriffes, which shoulde haue looked more substantially vpon the matter. But this I leaue and referre vnto the Magistrates. Let vs returne to the story agayne.

Doct. Geffrey

the Chauncellour thus sent away from the Sheriffe, went home, and there fel sicke vpon the same (for anger belike) as they signified vnto me, whiche were the partyes themselues, both godly and graue persons, who were then condemned, the one of them,* which is Richarde White being yet aliue.

The vnder Sheriffe to this Syr Anthony Hūgerford aboue named, was one M. Michell, likewise a right and a perfect godly man. So that not long after this came down the writ to burne the aboue named Rich. White,* & Iohn Hunt, but the vnder Sheriffe receiuing the said writ, sayd I will not be guilty (quoth he) of these mens blood, & immediately burnt the writing, and departed his way. With in 4. dayes after the Chauncellour dyed. Concerning whose death this cōmeth by the way to be noted, that the 2. foresaid Iohn Hunt and Richard White being the same time in a lowe and darcke Dungeon, being Saterdag, toward euening (according to theyr accustomed maner) fell to euening prayer. Who kneeling there together, as they should begin theyr prayer,* sodēly fel both to such a straūge weeping & tendernes of hart (but how they could not tell) that they could not pray one word, but so cōtinued a great space brusting out in teares. After that night was past, and the morning come, the first word they heard, was that the Chauncellour theyr great enemy was dead. The tyme of whose death they found to be the same houre, whē as they fell in such a sodeyne weeping. The Lord in all his holy workes be praysed. Amen. Thus mucche concerning the death of that wicked Chauncellour.

This Richard White, and the sayd Iohn Hunt, after the death of the Chauncellour, the Byshop also being dead a litle before, continued still in prison til the happy cōming in of Queene Elizabeth: and so were set at liberty.

The Martyrdome of a young lad of eight yeaes olde, scourged to death in Bishop Boners house in London.

IF bloody torm•ntes and cruell death of a poore innocent suffering for no cause of his owne,* but in the trueth of Christ and his Religion, do make a Martyr, no lesse deserueth the child of one Iohn Fetty, to be reputed in y^e Catalogue of holy Martirs, who in the house of Bishop Boner vnmercifully was scourged to death, as by the sequele of this story here folowing may appeare.

Amongest those that were persecuted & miserably imprisoned for the profession of Christes Gospell, & ye• mercifully deliuered by the prouidence of God, there was one Iohn Fetty, a simple and godly poore man dwelling in the parish of Clerkenwell, & was by vocation a Taylor, of the age of 42. yeres or therabout, who was accused and complained of, vnto one Brokenbury a priest & a parson of the same parish, by his own wife, for that he would not come vnto the church, & be partaker of theyr Idolatry & superstition: & therfore through y^e sayd priestes procurement, he was apprehēded by Rich. Tanner & his fellow, constables there, and one Martin the Hedborough.* Howbeit immediatly vpō his apprehēsiō, his wife (by the iust iudgemēt of God) was stricken mad, and distract of her wits: which declared a maruelous exāple of the iustice of God agaynst such vnfaythfull and most vnnaturall treachery. And although this example perhaps for lack of knowledge & instruction in such cases little moued the consciences of those simple poore mē• to surcease their persecutiō: yet natural pity towards that vngratefull woman, wrought so in theyr harts that for the preseruatiō & sustentatiō of her & her 2. children (like otherwise to perishe) they for that present let her husband alone and would not cary him to prison, but yet suffered him to remayne quietly in his own house. During whiche time, he as it were forgetting the wicked and vnkinde fact of his wife, did yet so cherish and prouide for her, that within the space of three weekes (through Gods mercifull prouidence) she was well amēded, and had recouered agayne some stay of her wits and senses.

But suche was the power of Sathan in the malicious hart of that wicked woman, that notwithstanding his gētle dealing with her, yet she so soone as she had recouered some health, did agayne accuse her husband: * whereupon he was the second time apprehended, and caryed vnto Syr Page 2056 Iohn Mordaunt Knight, one of the Queenes Commissioners, and he vppon examination sent him by Cluny the Bishops Sumner, vnto the Lollardes Tower: where he was (euen at the first) put into the paynefull stockes, and ha• a dish of water set by him, * with a stone put into it. To what purpose God knoweth, except it were to shew that he shuld look for litle other sustenance. Which is credible inough, if we consider their like practises vpon diuers before mentioned in this history, as amongst other (vppon Richard Smith, who dyed through theyr cruel imprisonmēt. Touching whom, when a godly woman came vnto Doct. Story to haue leaue y^t she might bury him, he asked her if he had any straw or bloud in his mouth: but what he ment therby, I leaue to the iudgement of y^e godly wise.

After the foresayd Fetty had thus layn in the prison by the space of xv. dayes, hanging in the stockes, sometye by the one legge and the one arme, sometime by the other, and otherwhiles by both, it happened that one of his children (a boy, of the age of eight or nine yeares) came vnto y^e Bishoppes house to see if he could get leaue to speak with his father. * At his comming thether, one of the Bishoppes Chaplaynes met with him and asked him what he lacked, and whome he would haue. The childe answered that hee came to see his father. The Chaplayne asked agayne, who was his father. The boy then tolde him and poynting towards Lollardes Tower, shewed him that his father was there in prison. Why (quoth the priest) thy father is an hereticke. The childe being of a bold and quicke spirit, and also godly brought vp and instructed by his father in the knowledge of God, answered & sayd: my father is no here'tick: but you are an heretick: For you haue Balams mark

*With that the Priest tooke the childe by the hand, & caried him into the Bishops house (whether to the Bishop, or not, I know not, but like enough he did) & there amōgest them they did most shamelesly and without all pitty, so whip and scourge, being naked, this tender childe, that he was all in a gore bloud, and then, in a ioly brag of their Catholicke tyranny, they caused Cluny, hauing his coate vpon his arme, to cary the childe in his shyrt vnto his father being in prison, y^e bloud rūning downe by his heeles.

At his comming vnto his father, the child fel down vp-his knees, * and asked him blessing. The poore man then beholding his childe, & seeing him so cruelly arrayed, cryed out for sorrow and sayd: Alas Wil, who hath done this to thee? The boy aunswered, that as he was seeking how to come to see his father, a priest with Baalams mark took him into the Bishops house, and there was he so handled. Cluny therwith violently plucked the childe away out of his fathers handes, and caryed him backe agayne into the Bishops house, where they kept him three dayes after.

And at the three dayes end, Boner (minding to make the matter whole, and somewhat to appease the poore mā, for this their horrible fact) determined to release him, and therefore caused him early in a morning to be brought out of Lollardes tower, * into his bedchamber, where he foūd the B. basting of himselfe against a great fire: & at his fyrst entring into the chamber, Fetty said, God be here & peace. God be here and peace (quoth Boner) that is neither God speede, nor good morrow. If yee kicke agaynst this peace (sayd Fetty) then this is not the place that I seek for.

A Chaplayne of the Bishops standing by, turned the poore mā about, & thinking to deface him, said in mocking wise: what haue we here? a plaier? whilst this Fetty was standing in the bishops chamber, he espied hanging about the Bishops bed a great payre of blacke beades: wherupon he said: * my Lord, I thinke the hangman is not far off: •o• the halter (pointing to the beades) is here already. At which wordes the Bishop was in a marueilous rage.

Then immediately after he espyed also, standing in the sayd Bishops chamber in the windowe, a little Crucifixe (before which belike Boner vsed to kneele in the tyme of his hipocriticall prayers. *) Then he asked the Bish. what it was: and he answered that it was Christ. Was he hādled so cruelly as he is here pictured, quoth Fetty?

Yea that he was, sayd the Bishop.

And euen so cruelly will you handle suche as come before you. * For you are vnto Gods people, as Cayphas was vnto Christ.

The Bishop being in a great fury, sayd: thou art a vile hereticke, and I will burne thee, or els I wil spend al that I haue vnto my gowne.

Nay my Lord, sayd Fetty, yee were better to geue it to some poore body, that he may pray for you. But yet Boner bethinking in himselfe of the daunger that the childe was in by theyr whipping, and what perill might ensue therupon, thought better to discharge him: whiche thing was accomplished.

Wherupon, after this and suche talke, the Bishop at last discharged him, willing him to go home and cary hys childe w^t him: whiche he so did, and that with a heauy hart to see hys poore boy in such extreme payne and grieve. * But within 14[▪] dayes after the childe dyed, whether thorough this cruell scourging, or any other infirmitie: I know not & therfore I referre y^e truth therof vnto y^e Lord, who knoweth al secretes, and also to the discreete iudgement of the wise reader. But howe soeuer it was, the Lorde yet vsed this theyr cruell & detestable fact, as a meanes of his prouidence for the deliury of this good poore man and faythfull Christian, his name be euer prayed therefore. Amen.

The cruell handling and burning of Nicholas Burton Englishman and Marchaunt in Spayne.

FORasmuch as in our former booke of Actes and Monuments mention was made of the Martyrdome of Nicholas Burton, * I thought here also not to omit the same the story being suche as is not vnworthy to be knowne, as wel for the profitable example of his singular constancie, as also for the noting of the extreme dealing and cruell reuenging of those Catholicke Inquisitours of Spayne, who vnder the pretensed visour of Religion, do nothyng but seeke theyr owne priuate gaine and commoditie, with crafty defending and spoyling of other mens goodes, as by the noting of this story may appeare.

The fift day of the moneth of Nouember, about the yeare of our Lord God .1560. this Nicholas Burton Citizen sometye of London and Marchaunt,* dwellyng in the Parishe of little Saint Barthelmew, peaceably and quietly followyng his traffike in the trade of Marchaundise, and beyng in the Citie of Cadix in the parties of Andolazia in Spayne, there came into his lodgyng a Iudas (or as they terme them) a Familiar of the Fathers of the Inquisition. Whom asking for the sayde Nicholas Burton, fayned that hee had a Letter to deliuer to his owne handes: by which meanes he spake with him immediatly And hauing no Letter to deliuer to him then the said Pro|moter or Familiar, at the motiō of the Deuill his maister, whose messenger he was, inuented an other lye, and sayde that he would take ladyng for London in such shippes as the said Nicholas Burton had fraited to lade, if he would let any: which was partly to know where he laded hys goods, that they might attache them, and chiefly to detract the tyme vntill the Alguisiel, or Sergeant of the sayd Inquisition might come and apprehende the body of the sayd Nicholas Burton: which they dyd incontinently.

Who then wel perceauyng y^t they were not able to bur'den nor charge him y^t he had written, spoken, or done any thyng there in that countrey against the Ecclesiasticall or Temporall lawes of the same Realme, boldly asked them what they had to lay to his charge that they did so Arrest hym and bad them to declare the cause and he would aunswere them. Notwithstanding, they aunswered nothing, but commaunded him with cruell threatnyng woordes to hold his peace, and not to speake one word to them.

And so they caryed hym to the cruell and filthy common prison of the same Town of Cadix,* where he remayned in yrons 14. dayes amongst theeues.

All which time he so instructed the poore prisoners in the word of God, according to the good talent which God had geuen hym in that behalfe and also in the Spanyshe tongue to vtter the same, that in short space he hadde wel reclaymed sundrye of these superstitious and ignoraunt Spanyardes to embrace the word of God, and to reiecte theyr popish traditions.

Which being knowne vnto the officers of the Inquisition,* they conueyed hym laden with yrons from thence to a citty called Siuill, into a more cruell and straighter prison called Triana, where the sayd fathers of the Inquisition proceeded agaynst him secretly according to theyr accustomable cruell tyranny, that neuer after he could be suf'fered to write or to speake to anye of his nation: so that to this day it is vnknowne who was hys accuser.

Afterward the the xx. day of December, in the foresayd yeare,* they brought the sayde Nicholas Burton with a great number of other prisoners, for professing the true Christian Religion, into the Cittye of Siuill, to a place where the sayde Inquisitours sate in iudgement, whiche they called the Awto, with a Canuas coate, wherupon diuers partes was paynted the figure of on huge Deuill, tormenting a soule in a flame of fire, & on his head a copping tanke of the same worke.

His tongue was forced out of hys mouthe with a clouen sticke fastened vpon it,* that hee shoulde not vtter hys conscience and fayth to the people, and so he was set with an other englishmā of Southampton, and diuers others condemned menne for Religion, as wel Frenche menne, Page 2037

☛The maner of the Popish Spaniardes, in caryng Nicholas Burton a blessed Martyr of Christ, after most spitefull sort, to the burning.

as Spanyardes, vpon a Scaffold ouer agaynst the sayde Inquisition, where their sentences and iudgementes wer read and pronounced agaynst them.*

And immediately after the sayd sentences geuen, they were all caryed from thence to the place of execution wyth out y^e citty, where they most cruelly burned him, for whose constant fayth God be prayسد.

This Nicholas Burton by the way, and in y^e flames of fire made so chearfull a countenaunce, embracing death with all pacience and gladnesse, that the tormentors and enemies which stode by, sayd that the Deuill hadde hys soule before he came to the fire, and therefore they sayd his senses of feeling were past him.

It happened that after the Arrest of thys Nicholas Burton aforesayd, immediately all the goodes and Marchaundise whiche he brought with him into Spayne by y^e way of trafficke, were according to their common vsage, seised, and taken into the Sequester: amonge the whiche they also rolled vp much that appertayned to an other En'glish Marchaunt, wherwith he was credited as Factour. Wherof so soone as newes was brought to the Marchant aswell of the imprisonment of hys Factoure,* as of the Arrest made vppon his goodes, hee sent his Attorney into Spayne with authoritie from hym, to make clayme to his goods, and to demaund them: whose name was I. Fronton Citizen of Bristow.

When his Attorney was landed at Siuill, and hadde shewed all hys Letters and writinges to the holye house, requiring them that such goodes might be deliuered into his possession, aunswere was made him that hee must sue by Bill, and retayne an Aduocate (but all was doubtlesse to delay him) and they forsoothe, of curtesie assigned hym one to frame his supplication for him, and other such bills of petition, as he had to exhibite into theyr holye Courte, demanding for eche Bill viii. Rials, albeit they stode him in no more stead, then if he had put vp none at al. And for the space of three or foure monthes this fellow missed not twise a day, attending euery morning and afternoone at the Inquisitours Palace, suing vnto them vppon hys knees for hys dispatche, but specially to the Byshoppe of Tarra•on, who was at that very time chiefe in the Inquis•tion at Siuill, that he of hys absolute authoritie woulde commaund restitution to be made thereof: but the bootie was so good and so great, that it was very hard to come by it agayne.

At the length, after hee had spent whole 4. monthes in sutes and requestes, and also to no purpose, hee receaued this aunswere from them, that he must shewe better euidence and bring more sufficient certificates out of Englād for prooffe of his matter, then those whiche he had already presented to the Courte.* Whereupon the party forthwith posted to London, and with all speede returned to Ciuill agayne with more ample and large letters testimonialles and certificates, according to theyr request, and exhibited them to the Court.

Notwithstanding, the Inquisitours still shifted hym off, excusing themselves by lacke of leysure, and for y^e they were occupied in greater and more weighty affayres, and with suche aunsweres delayed hym other foure monthes after.

At the last, when the party had wellnigh spent all hys money,* and therefore sued the more earnestly for hys dyspatch, they referred the matter wholly to the Byshop. Of whom, when he repayred vnto him, he had this aunswere that for himselfe he knew what he had to do: howbeit hee was but one man, and the determination of the matter appertayned vnto the other Commissioners as well as vnto him: and thus by posting & passing it from one to an other, the party could obtayn no end of his sute. Yet for his importunitie sake, they were resolved to dispatche hym, it was on this sort: One of the Inquisitours called Gasco a man very well experienced in these practises, willed the party to resort vnto hym after dinner.

The fellow being glad to heare these newes, and supposing that his goodes should be restored vnto hym, and that he was called in for that purpose to talk with y^e other that was in prison, to conferre with him about theyr accomptes, the rather through a little misunderstanding, hearing the Inquisitour cast out a word, that it shoulde be needeful for him to talk with the prisoner, and being therupon more then halfe perswaded, that at the lengthe they ment good fayth, did so, and repayred thether about the euening. Immediately vppon his comming, the Iayler was forthwith charged with him, to shut hym vp close in such a certayne prison, where they appoynted hym.

The party hoping at the first that he hadde bene called for about some other matter,* and seeing himselfe contrary to his expectation, cast into a darcke dungeon, perceyued at the length that the worlde went with hym farre otherwise then he supposed if would haue done.

But within two or three dayes after, he was brought forth into the Court, where he beganne to demaunde hys Page 2058 goodes:* and because it was a deuise that well serued their turne without any more circumstance they bad him saye his Aue Maria.* The party began & said it after this maner Aue Maria gratia plena Dominus te cum, benedicta tu in mulieribus & benedictus fructus ventris tui Iesus. Amen.

The same was written word by word as hee spake it: and without anye more talke of clayming his goodes because it was booteles, they commaunde him to prison agayne, and enter an action agaynst him as an hereticke, for asmuch as he did not say his Aue Maria after the romish fashion, but ended it very suspiciously, for he should haue added moreouer: Sancta Maria mater Dei ora pro nobis pecca toribus, by abbreviating whereof, it was euident enough (sayd they) that he did not allow the mediation of saintes.

Thus they picked a quarrell to deteine him in prison a longer season, and afterwarde brought him forth into their stage disguised after theyr manner: where sentence was geuen that he should loose all the goodes whiche he sued for, though they were not his own, and besides this suffer a yeares imprisonment.

¶The Martyrdome of an other Englishman in Spayne.

*AT what tyme this blessed Martyr of Christe suffered, which was the yeare of our Lord .1560. December. 22. there suffered also an other Englishman, with other xiii. one of them being a Nunne, an other a Fryer, both constant in the Lord. Of which xiii. read before, pag. 934.

*Iohn Baker and Willam Burgate Martyrs.

*IOhn Baker and William Burgate, bothe Englishmen in Cales, in the cuntry of Spayne, were apprehended and in the Citty of Siuill burned the second day of Nouember.

¶Marke Burges and William Hoker Martyrs.

*MARke Burges an Englishman, Mayster of an English ship called the Minion, was burned in Lushborn a citty in Portingale. an. 1560.

William Hoker a young manne, about the age of xvi. yeares,* being an Englishman, was stoned to death of cer'tayne young men there in the Citty of Siuill, for the confession of his fayth. an. 1560.

But of these and such other actes and matters paste in Spayne, because they fell not within the compasse of Q. Maryes raygne, but since her tyme, an other place shall serue hereafter (the Lord willing) to entreat more at large of the same, when we come to the yeares and raygne of the Queene that now is, where we haue more conueniently to inferre not onely of these matters of the Martyrs (wher'of somewhat also hath bene touched before, pag. 907. but al'so of the whole Inquisition of Spayne, and Plackarde of Flanders, w^t the tragical tumults & troubles happening w^tin y^e last memory of these our latter dayes, according as it shall please the mercy of the Lord to enable our endeour with grace and space to the accomplishment therof.

¶A chapter or treatise concerning such as were scourged and whipped by the Papistes in the true cause of Christes Gospel

AND thus through the mercifull assistaunce and fauourable ayd of Christ our Sauour, thou hast as in a generall Register (good Reader) the story collected, if not of all, yet of the most part, or at least, not many I trust omitted of such good Sayntes and Martyrs as haue lost theyr lyues, and geuen theyr bloud, or dyed in prison for the testimony of Christes true doctrine and sacramentes, from the time of the cruell Statute first geuen out by king Hēry the 4. Ex officio, pag. 523. vnto this present tyme, & especially vnder the raygne of Queene Mary.

Now after this bloody slaughter of GODS good sayntes and seruau•tes thus ended and discoursed, let vs proceede (by the good pleasure of the Lord) somewhat like wise to entreate of such as for the same cause of Religyon haue bene, although not put to death, yet whipped and scourged by the aduersaries of Gods worde, first begynning with Richard Wilmot and Thomas Farefaxe, who about the tyme of Anne Aschue, wer pittifully rent & tormented with scourges and stripes for theyr faythfull standing to christ, and to hys truth, as by the story and examination both of the sayde Rich. Wilmot, and of Thomas Farefaxe nowe following, may appeare.

The scourging of Richard Wilmot, and Thomas Fayrefaxe.

AFTER the first recantation of Doct. Crome for his Sermon which he made the fift Sondag in Lent at Saint Thomas Acons, being the mercers Chappell,* his Sermon was on the Epistle of the same day, written in the x. chap. to y^e Hebrues, wherein he proued very learnedly by the same place of Scripture and others, that Christ was y^e onely and sufficient Sacrifice vnto God the Father,* for the sinnes of the whole world, and that there was no more sacrifice to be offered for sinne by the Priestres, for as much as Christ had offered his body on the Crosse, and shed his blood for the sinnes of the people, & that once for all. For y^e which Sermon he was apprehended of Boner & brought before Stephen Gardynner & other of the Counsell, where he promised to recant his Doctrine at Paules Crosse, y^e second Sondag after Easter. And accordingly, he was there & Preached, Boner w^t all his Doctours sitting before him but he so Preached and handled his matter,* that he rather verified his former saying, then denyed any parte of that which he before had Preached. For the whiche the Protestantes praysed God, and hartely reioysed.

But Byshop Boner with his Champions, were not therewith pleased, but yet notwithstanding they had hym home w^t them, & so handled him amongst the woluish generation. that they made him come to the Crosse agayne y^e next Sondag.

And because the Magistrates shoulde now heare him, & be witnesses of this recantation which was moste blasphemous,* to deny Christes sacrifice to be sufficient for penitent sinners, & to say that the sacrifice of the Masse was good godly, and a holy sacrifice, propitiatorye and auayleable both for the quicke and the deade: Because (I saye) that they would haue y^e nobles to heare this blasphemous doctrine, the viperous generation procured all the chiefe of the Counsell to be there present.

Nowe to come to our matter at this tyme, the same weeke, betweene his first Sermon and the last,* and while Doct. Crome was in duraunce, one Rich. Wilmot being Prentise in Bow lane, being of y^e age of eightene yeares, and sytting at his worke in his Maysters shop the Tuesday, in y^e moneth of Iuly, One Lewes a Welchmā, being one of the Garde, came into the shoppe, hauing things to doe for himselfe.

One asked him what newes at the Court, and he answered that the old hereticke D. Crome had recanted now in deede, before the Counsell,* and that he should on Sondag nexte bee at Paules Crosse agayne and there declare it.

Then Wilmot sitting at his Maysters worke, & hearing hym speake these wordes and reioysing in the same began to speake vnto hym,* saying y^t he was sorry to heare these newes. For (sayd he) if Crome should say otherwise then he hath sayd, then is it contrary to the truth of Gods worde, and contrary to his owne conscience, which shall before God accuse hym.

Lewes

answered and sayd that he had Preached & taught heresy, and therefore it was meete that he should in such a place reuoke it.

Wilmot

tolde him that he would not so say, neyther did he heare hym Preach any doctrine contrary to Gods worde written, but that he proued his doctrine, and that sufficiently by the Scriptures.

Lewes

then asked him how he knew that.

Wilmot

Aunswered by the Scripture of God, wherein he shall find GODS will and pleasure, what he willeth all men to do and what not to do: and also by them he should prooue and trye all doctrines, and the false doctrine from the true.

Lewes

sayde: it was neuer mery since the Bible was in Englishe: and that he was doth an hereticke and a traitour that caused it to be translated into Englishe (meaning Cromwell) and therefore was rewarded according to his desertes.*
_

Wilmot

aunswered agayne: what his desertes and offences were to his Prince, a great many do not knowe, neyneyther doth it force whether they do or no: once he was sure that he lost his lyfe for offending his Prince, and the law did put it in execution: Adding moreouer concerning that man, that he thought it pleased GOD to rayse hym vp from a low estate, and to place him in hyghe authority, partly vnto this, that he should do that as all the Bishops in the Realme yet neuer dyd, in restoring agayne Gods holy worde, which being hyd long before from the people in a straunge tongue, & now comming abroad amongst vs, will bring our Byshops & Priestes, sayde he,* in lesse Page 2059 estimation among the people.

Lewes

asked why so?

Wilmot

sayde: because their doctrine and liuing was not according to his word.

*Then sayde Lewes: I neuer heard but that all men shoulde learne of the Byshops and Priestes, because they are learned men, and haue bene brought vp in learning all the dayes of their liues. Wherefore they must needes know the truth, and our fathers did beleue their doctrine and learning, and I thinke they did well: for the worlde was farre better then, then it is now.

Wilmot aunswered: I will not say so: For wee muste not beleue them beause they are Bishops, neyther because they are learned, neither because our forefathers did follow theyr doctrine. For I haue read in Gods booke how that Byshoppes and learned men haue taught the people false doctrine, and likewise the Priestes from time to time and in deede those people our forefathers beleued as they taught: and as they did thinke, so did the people thinke. But for al this,* Christ calleth thē false Prophetes, theeues and murtherers, blinde leaders of the blinde, willing the people to take heede of them, least they should both fal into the ditche.

Moreouer, we read that the Byshoppes, Priests, and learned men haue bene commonly resisters of the trueth, from time to time, and haue alwayes persecuted the Prophetes in the old lawe, as theyr successours did persecute our Sauour Christ and hys Disciples in the newe lawe.* We must take heed therefore, that we credite them no further then God will haue vs, neyther to followe them nor our forefathers, otherwise then he commaundeth vs. For almighty God hath geuen to all people, as well to kings and Princes, as Byshoppes, Priests, learned and vnlearned men, a commaundement and law, vnto the which he willet all men to be obedient. Therefore if any Bishop or Prieste, preache or teache, or Prince or Magistrate commaunde any thing contrary to his commaundement, we must take heede how we obey them. For it is better for vs to obey God then man.

Mary sir, quoth Lewes, you are a holy Doctoure in deede. By Gods bloud if you were my man, I woulde set you about your busines a little better, and not to look vpon bookes: and so woulde your Mayster if hee were wise. And with that in came his mayster and young man wyth hym, which was seruaunt with M. Daubny in Watling streete.

His mayster asked what the matter was.

Lewes sayd that he had a knauish boy here to his seruaunt,* and how that if he were his, he would rather hang him, then keepe him in his house.

Then his Mayster, being somewhat moued, asked his fellowes what the matter was.

They sayde: they began to talke about Doct. Crome.

Then hys Mayster asked hym what hee hadde sayde, swearyng a great othe, that he would make hym to tell hym.

He sayd that he trusted he had sayd nothing, whereby either he or M. Lewes may iustly be offended. I pray you (quoth Wilmot) aske him what I sayd.

Mary sir (sayd Lewes) thys he sayd, that Doct. Crome did preach and teach nothing but the truth, and howe that if he recant on Sondag next, he would be sory to heare it, & that if he do, he is made to doe it agaynst his conscience. And more he sayth, that we must not follow our Bishops doctrine and preaching: For sayth he, they be hinderers of Gods word, and persecutors of that: and how Cromwell dyd more good (that traytour) in setting foorth the Bible, then all our Byshops haue done these hundreth yeares: thus reporting the matter worse then he had sayd.

Then sayde Wilmot, that in many thinges hee made his tale worse then it was. His Maister hearyng of thys was in a great fury, and rated him, saying: that eyther he would be hanged or burned, swearing that he would take away all his bookes and burne them.

*The younge man (Mayster Dawbnies seruant) standing by, hearing this, beganne to speake on his part vnto Lewes: and his talke confirmed all the sayinges of other to be true.

This young man was learned: his name was Tho. Fayrefaxe. Lewes hearing this young mans talk, as wel as the others, went his way in a rage vnto the Court.

On the morowe they heard newes, so that the sayde Wilmot and Tho. Fayrefaxe were sent for, to come to the Lord Maior. The messenger was M. Smart, Swordbearer of London. They came before dinner to y^e Mayors house, and were commaunded to sit downe at dinner in y^e Hall, and when the dinner was done they were both called into a Parlour, where the Mayor and Syr Roger Cholmley was, who examined them seuerally, *y^t one not hearing the other.

The effect of their talke with them was this, Syr Roger Cholmley sayd vnto the foresayd Wilmot, y^t my Lorde Mayor and hee had receiued a commaundement from the Counsell, to send for hym and his companion, and to examine them of certayne thinges, which were layde vnto theyr charge.

Then sayd Mayster Cholmley to hym: Syrra, what Countreyman art thou? He aunswered that he was born in Cambridgeshyre, and in such a towne. Then he asked him how long he had bene in the City. He told him.

Then he asked what learning he had. He sayde: little learning, and small knowledge. Then (deridingly) he as^ked how long he had knowne Doct. Crome, he sayd: but a while about two yeares. He sayd that he was a lying boy, and said that he the sayd Wilmot was his sonne.

The other sayd vnto hym, that was vnlike, for that he neuer see his mother nor she him, Cholmley sayd he lyed, Wilmot sayd hee coulde prooue it to be true. Then hee asked him how he liked his sermon that he made at S. Thomas of Acres Chappel in Lent. He sayde that in deede hee heard him not. He sayd yes, and the other nay. Then says he, what say you to his sermon made at the Crosse the •ast day, heard you not that?

Wilmot.

Yes, and in that sermon he deceaued a great nūber of people.

Cholmley.

How so?

Wilmot.

For that they looked that he shoulde haue recanted his doctrine that he taught before, and did not, but rather confirmed it.

Cholmley.

Yea Syr, but how say you now to him? for hee hath recanted before the counsell: and hathe promised on Sunday next to be at the crosse agayne, how thinke ye in that?

Wilmot.

If hee so did, I am the more sory for to heare it: and sayd he thought he did it for feare and safegard of hys lyfe.

Cholmley.

But what say you? was hys first sermon heresie or not?

Wilmot.

No, I suppose it was no heresie. For if it were S. Paules Epistle to the Hebrewes was heresie,* & Paule an hereticke that preached such doctrine, but God forbyd that any Christian man should so thinke of the holy Apostle: neyther do I so thinke.

Cholmley.

Why how knowest thou that saynct Paul wrot those thinges that are in English now, to be true, wheras Paule neuer wrot english nor latine?

Wilmot.

I am certified that learned men of God, that dyd seeke to aduaunce hys word, did translate the same out of the Grecke and Hebrue, into Latine and english, and that they durst not to presume to altar the sense of the scripture of God, and last will and testament of Christ Iesus.

Then the Lorde Mayor being in a great furye, asked hym what he had to do to read such bookes, and sayd that it was pittie that his mayster did suffer him so to doe, and that he was not set better to worke: and in fyne sayd vnto him: that he had spoken euill of my Lord of Winchester & Boner, those reuerend & learned fathers & coũcellours of this Realme, for the which his fact he saw no other but he must suffer, as due to the same. And M. Cholmley sayd: yea my Lord, there are such a sort of heretickes & trayterly knaues taken now in Essex by my Lord Rich, that it is to wonderfull to heare. They shall be sent to the Byshoppe shortly, and shall be hanged and burned all.

Wilmot.

I am sory to heare that of my Lord Rich, for that he was my godfather, and gaue me my name at my Baptisme.

Cholmley

asked him when he spake with him.

He sayd not these xii. yeares.

Cholmley.

If he knew that he were such a one, he woulde do y^e like by him, and in so doying he should do God great seruice.

Wilmot.

I haue read the same saying in the Gospell, that Christ sayd to his Disciples: The tyme shal come (sayth he) that whosoever killeth you, shall think that he shal do God hygh seruice.

Well sir, sayd Cholmley, because yee are so full of youre Scripture, and so well learned, wee consider you lacke a quyet place to study in. Therefore you shall go to a place where you shall be most quiet, and I would wish you to study how you will answere to the Counsell of those thinges which they haue to charge you w^t, for els it is like to cost you your best ioynt. I know my lord of Win. wil hādle you wel enough whē he heareth thus much. Thē was the Officer called in, to haue him to the Counter in the Poultrye, and the other to the other Counter,* not one of them to see an other: and thus remayned they viii. dayes Page 2060 In the which time their Maisters made a great labor vnto the Lord Mayor, and to sir Roger Cholmley, to know their offences, and that they might be deliuered.

*At length they procured the Wardens of the company of Drapers to labour with them in theyr sute to the Mayor. The Mayor went with them to the Counsell: but at that time they could finde no grace at Winchester's hand & Sir Anthonie Brownes, but that they had deserued death and that they should haue the law.

At length through entreatance, he graunted thē thus much fauour, that they should not dye as they had deserued, but should be tyed to a cartes tayle, and be whipped three market dayes through the Cittye. Thus they came home that day, and went an other day, and the Mayor & the Wardens of the company kneeled before them to haue this open punishment released, for asmuche as they were seruantes of so worshipfull a companye, and that they might be punished in theyr own hall before the Wardens and certayne of the companye. At length it was graunted with condition, as some said as shalbe hereafter declared.

Then were they sent before the Maysters the next day to the hall, both theyr maysters being also present, & there were layd to theyr charges, the heynous offences by them committed,* how they were both heretickes and traytors, and haue deserued death for the same, and this was declared w^t a long processe by the Mayster of y^e company, whose name was M. Brooke, declaring what great labour and sute y^e Mayor & the Wardens had made for thē, to saue thē frō death, which they (as he said) had deserued, & from opē shame, which they shoulde haue had, being iudged by the Counsell to haue bene whipped iii. dayes through the city at a cartes tayle, and from these two daungers had they laboured to deliuer them, but not without great sute and also charge. For, saith he, the company hath promised vnto the Counsaile for this their mercy and fauour shewed towards them, being of such a worshipfull company, a C. poundes, notwithstanding we must see them punished in our Hall within our selues for those theyr offences. After these and many other wordes, hee commaunded them to addresse themselues to receiue their punishment.

Then were they put asunder, and stripped from the wast vpward one after an other,* and had into the hal, and in the middest of the hall, where they vse to make theyr fire there was a great ring of Iron, to the whiche there was a rope tyed fast, and one of theyr feete thereto fast tyed.

Then came two men down, disguised in Mommers apparell, with visors on theyr faces, and they beate them with great rods vntill y^e bloud did follow in their bodies. As concerning this Wilmot, he could not lye in his bead 6. nightes after, for Brooke played the tyraunt with them. So it was, that with the beating and the flight, and feare they were neuer in health since,* as the sayd Wilmot with hys owne mouth hath credibly ascertayned vs, and we cā no lesse but testifie the same.

Thus haue we briefly rehearsed this little tragedye, wherein ye may note the malice of the enemies at al times to those which professe Christ, and take hys parte, of what estate or degree so euer they bee, according to the Apostles saying, It is geuen vnto you not onely to beleue, but also to suffer with him. To whome be honor and glory. Amen.

Next after these two aboue specified, followeth y^e beating of one Thomas Greene, who in the time of Queene Mary, was caused likewise to be scourged and beaten by Doctor Story. What the cause was, here followeth in story and examination to be seene, whiche hee penned wyth his owne hand, as the thing it selfe will declare to the reader. The copy and wordes of the same as he wrote them, here follow. Wherein as thou mayst note (gentle reader) the simplicitie of the one, so I pray thee, marke the cruelty of the other part.

The scourging of Thomas Greene.

IN the reygne of Queene Mary, I Thomas Greene be'ing brought before D. Story,* by my M. whose name is Iohn Wayland a Printer, for a booke called Antichrist, the whiche had bene distributed to certayne honest menne he asked me where I had the booke, and sayde I was a traytour. I told him I had y^e booke of a Frenchman. Thē he asked me more questions, but I told him I would tell hym no more, nor could not. Then he sayd: it was no heresie but treason, and that I should be hanged, drawne, & quartered, and so he called for Cluny the keeper of y^e Lollardes tower, and bad him set me fast in the stockes.

*I was not in the Lollardes tower two houres, but Clauy came and tooke me out, and caryed me to y^e Colehouse, and there I found a frenchman lying in the stocks, and he tooke him out, and put on my right legge a bolte & a fetter, & on my left hand an other, and so hee set me crosse fettered in the stockes, and tooke the Frenchman away w^t him, and there I lay a day and a night.

On the morow after, he came and sayd: let vs shift your hand and legge, because you shall not be lame: and he made as though he pi^tied me, and sayde, tell me the trueth, and I will be youre frend.

And I sayd, I had tolde the truth and would tell no other. Then he put no more but my legge in the stockes, & so went his way, and there I remayned 6. dayes, & could come to no answeere.

Then Doctor Story sent for me, and asked whether I would tel him I truth, where I had the booke.* I sayd I had told him, of a frenchmā, he asked me wher I came ac^qainted w^t the Frenchman, & where he dwelt &, where he deliuered me the booke. I sayde, I came acquaynted w^t him in Newgate, I comming to my friendes which wer put in for Gods worde and truthes sake, and the Frenchman comming to his friendes also: there we did talke together and became acquaynted one with an other, and dyd eate and drinke together there with our friends in y^e feare of God.

Then Story scoffed at me and sayde: then there was brother in Christ, and brother in Christ,* and reuiled me & called me an hereticke, and asked me if I had the booke of him in Newgate. I sayd no, and I tolde him, as I went on my businesse in the streete I met him, and he asked me how I did, and I him also: so falling in communicatiō he shewed me that booke, and I desired him that hee woulde let me haue it.

In this examination Story sayd, it was a great booke and asked me whether I bought it, or had it geuen me. I tolde him I bought it. Then sayd he, I was a theefe, and had stollen my maysters money. And I sayd, a little mony serued, for I gaue hym but foure pence, but I promised him at our nexte meeting, I woulde geue twelue pence more. And he sayd: that was boldly done, for such a booke as spake both treason and heresie.

Then Story required me to bring him two sureties, & watche for him that I had the booke of, and I shuld haue no harme. I made him aunswere, I would bring no sureties, nor I could not tell where to finde them. Then said he: this is but a lye, and so called for Cluny, and bad hym lay me fast in the Colehouse, saying, he would make me tel an other tale at my next cōming: and so I lay in y^e stockes day and night, but onely when I eate my meate, & there remayned x. dayes before I was called for agayne.

Then Doctor Story sent for me agayne, and asked if I would yet tell him the truth. I sayd,* I could tell him no other truth then I had, nor would. And while I was ther standing, there were two brought, whiche I tooke to bee prisoners.

Then mistres Story fell in a rage, and sware a great othe,* that it were a good deede to put a hundred or two of these hereticke knaues in a house, & I my selfe (sayth she) would set it on fire. So I was cōmitted to prison agayn, where I remayned 14. dayes and came to no aunswere.

Then Story sent for me againe, and called me into the gardē, and there I found with him my Lord of Windsors Chaplayne, and two Gentlemen more,* and he told them all what they had sayd and done. They sayd, the book was a wonderous euill booke, and had both treason and heresie in it. Then they asked me what I said by the book. And I sayd: I know no euill by it.

At which wordes Story chafed, and sayd hee woulde hang me vp by the hands w^t a rope, and said also he would cut out my tonge, & mine eares also frō mine head. After this they alledged two or three thinges vnto me out of the book. And I aunswere, I had not read the book through out, and therefore I could geue no iudgement of the book.

Then my Lord of Windsors chaplayne and the other two Gentlemen tooke me aside, and entreated me verye gently, saying: tell vs where you had the booke, and of whō: wde will saue you harmelesse. I made them aunswere, I had told all that I could to Doct. Story, & began to tell it thē agayn: but they sayd, they knew y^t already: so they left that talke and went agayne to Story with me.

Then Story burdened me with my fayth▪ and sayd I was an hereticke.* Whereupon the Chaplayne asked me how I did beleue. Then I began to rehearse the articles of my beliefe, but he bad me let that alone. Then hee asked me how I beleued in Christe. I made him aunswere that I beleued in Christ which dyed and rose agayne the thyrd day, and sitteth on the right hand of God the father.

Whereupon Story asked me mockingly, what is the right hand of God? I made him aunswere,* I thought it was his glory. Then sayd he, so they say all. And he asked me whē he would •e wery of sitting there. Then inferred Page 2061 my Lord of Windsors Chaplayne, asking me what I said by the masse. I sayd: I neuer knew what it was, nor what it ment, for I vnderstoode it not, because I neuer learned any Latin, and since the time that I had any knowledge, I had bene brought vp in nothing but in reading of Eng^lish, and with such men as haue taught y^e same: with many moe questions, which I cannot rehearse.

Moreouer, he asked me if there were not the very body of Christ,* flesh, bloud and bone in the Masse, after the Priest had consecrated it. And I made him aunswere: as for the Masse I cannot vnderstand it, but in the new Testament I read, that as the Apostles stode looking after the Lord when he ascended vp into heauen, an Angel sayd to them: Euen as you see him ascend vp, so shal he come agayne. And I told them an other sentēce: where Christ saith: The poore shall you haue alwayes with you, but me shall you not haue alwayes.

Then M. Chaplaine put to me many questions more to the which I could make hym no aunswere. Among all other, he brought Chrisostome and S. Hierome for hys purpose. To whome I aunswere, that I neyther mynded nor was able to answere their Doctors, neither knew whether they alledged them right, or no: but to that whiche is written in the new Testament I would aunswere. Here they laughed me to scorne and called me foole, & sayd they would reason no more with me.

Then Doctor Storye called for Cluny, and bad hym take me away,* and set me fast, and let no man speak with me. So was I sent to the Colehouse: where I hadde not ben a week, but there came in xiiii. prisoners: but I was kept still alone without company, in a prison called the Salthouse, hauing vpon my legge a bolt and a fetter, and my handes manacled together with yrons,* and there continued x. dayes, hauing nothing to lye on, but bare stones or a boorde.

On a time whiles I lay there in prison, the Byshop of London comming downe a payre of stayres on the backside vntrust, in his hose and doublet, looked in at y^e grate, and asked wherfore I was put in, and who put me in.

I made him aunswere, y^t I was put in for a booke called Antichrist,* by Doctor Story And he sayde: you are not ashamed to declare wherfore you were put in, and said it was a very wicked booke, and bad me confesse the truth to Story. I sayd, I had told the truth to him already, & desired him to be good vnto me, and helpe me out of prison, for they had kept me there long. And he sayd, he could not medle with it: Story hath begon it: and he must end it.

*Then I was remoued out of the Salthouse to geue place to two women, and caryed to the Lollardes Tower and put in the stockes: and there I founde two prisoners, one called Lyon, a Frenchman, and an other with hym: and so I was kept in the stockes more then a month both day and night, and no man to come to me, or to speake w^t me, but onely my keeper which brought me meate.

Thus we three being together, Lyon the Frenchman song a Psalme in the Frenche tongue, and wee sang with him, so y^t we were heard down into the street, and the keeper comming vp in a greate rage,* sware that he would put vs all in the stockes, and so tooke the Frenchman and commaunded him to kneel downe vppon his knees, and put both his handes in the flockes, where hee remayned all that night till the next day

After this I beyng in the Lollardes Tower 7. dayes, at my last being with Story hee sware a great othe that he would racke me,* and make me tell the truth. Thē Story sending for me, commaunded me for to bee brought to Walbroke, wher he & the Cōmissioners dyned: and by the way my keeper told me y^t I should go to the Tower & be racked. So when they had dyned, Story called for me in, and so there I stode before thē, & some sayd I was worthy to be hanged for hauing such hereticall books. After I had stayde a little while before them, Story called for the keeper, and commaunded him to cary me to the Lollards Tower agayne, and sayde: I haue other matters of the Queenes to do with the Commissioners:* but I will finde an other time for him. Whilest I lay yet in the Lollardes Tower, the womā which brought the bookes ouer, being taken, and her bookes, was put in the Clinke in Southwarke by Hussy, one of the Arches: and I Tho. Greene testifie before God, now that I neyther descryed the man nor the woman, the whiche I had the bookes of.

Then I lying in the Lollardes Tower, being sent for before M. Hussy,* he required of me, wherfore I was put into the Lollardes Tower, and by whome. To whome I made aunswere, that I was put there by Doctor Story for a booke called Antichrist. Then he made as though hee would be my friend, and sayd he knewe my friendes, and my father and mother, and bad me tel him of whom I had the booke, and sayd: come on, tell me the truth, I told hym as I had told Doctor Story before.

Then he was very angry and sayd: I loue thee well & therfore I sent for thee, and looked for a further truth: but I would tell him no other: whereupon he sent me agayne to the Lollardes Tower. At my going away he called me backe agayn, and sayd that Dixon gaue me the books being an old man, dwelling in Birchin lane: and I sayde he knew the matter better then I. So he set me away to the Lollardes Tower, where I remayned vij. dayes & more.

Then M. Hussy sent for me agayne and required of me to tell him the truth. I told him I could tell him no other truth then I had told Doctor Story before.

Then hee began to tell me of Dixon of whome I had the bookes, the which had made the matter manifest afore: * and he told me of all thinges touching Dixon and y^e books more then I could my selfe, in so much y^t he told me howe many I had, and that he had a sacke full of the books in his house, and knew where the woman lay, better then I my selfe. Then I sawe the matter so open and manifest before my face, that it profited not me to stand in the matter. Hee asked me where I had done the books, and I told hym I had but one, & that Doct. Story had. He sayd I lyed, for I had three at one time, & hee required we to tell him of one.

Then I tolde hym of one that Iohn Beane had of me being prentise with Mayster Tottle. * So he promised me before and after, and as he shuld be saued before God, that he should haue no harme. And I kneeling downe vppon my knees, desired him to take my bloud, and not to hurt the young man. Then sayd he: because you haue bene so stubburne, the matter being made manifest by other and not by you, being so long in prison, tell me if you wil stand to my iudgement. I sayd yea, take my bloud, and hurt not the young man.

Then he made me answere, I should be whipped like a theefe and a vacabond: and so I thanked him, * and went my way with my keeper to the Lollardes tower: where I remayned two or three dayes, and so was brought by the keeper Cluny, by the commaundement of the Commissioners, to Christes hospitall, sometime the Gray Friars: and accordingly had there for the time the correction of theeues and vacabondes, and so was deliuered to Trinian the Porter, and put into a stincking dungeon.

Then after a fewe dayes I finding frendship▪ was let out of the dungeon, and lay in a bed in the night, & walked in a yarde by the dungeon in the day time, and so remayned prisoner a month and more.

Where at length Doctour Story came and two Gentlemē with hym, and called for me, * and so I was brought into a counting house before thē. Then he sayd to y^e gentlemen: here commeth this hereticke, of whom I had y^e book called Antichrist, and began to tell them how many times I had bene before him, and sayde: I haue intreated hym very gently, and he would neuer tell me the truth till y^t it was found out by other. Then sayd he: it wer a good deed to cut out thy tongue and thy eares of thy head, to make thee an example to all other hereticke knaues. And y^e gentlemen said: nay y^t were pittie. Then he asked if y^t I would not become an honest mā: & I sayd yes, for I haue offēded God many wayes. Whereupon he burdened me with my fayth. I told him I had made hym aunswere of my fayth before my Lord Windsors chaplaine, as much as I could.

So in the end he commaunded me to be stripped he standing by me, and called for two of the Beadels and the whippes to whippe me: * and the two Beadels came wyth a cord, and bound my handes together, and the one end of the corde to a stone pillar. Then one of my friendes, called Nicholas Priestman, hearing them call for whips, hurled in a bundell of rods, whiche seemed something to pacifie y^e minde of his crueltie: and so they scourged me with rods. But as they were whipping of me, Story asked me if I would go vnto my Mayster agayne, and I sayd nay. And he sayd: I perceiue now he wil be worse then euer he was before: but let me alone (quoth he): I will finde him out if he be in England. And so with many other things which I cannot rehearse, when they had done whipping of me, they bad me pay my fees and go my wayes.

¶Doctor Story commaunded that he should haue an hundred stripes, but the Gentlemen so intreated: that hee had not so many, Story saying: if I might haue my will, I would surely cut out his tongue.

Of the scourging of M. Bartlet Greene, also of Iohn Milles, & of Thomas Hinshaw, ye heard before. In like maner was ordered Ste. Cotton, burned before at Bramford, who testifieth himselfe to be twise beaten by Boner, in a letter of hys written to his brother, as by the same here following for the more euidence may appeare.

The Copie of Steuen Cottons letter, wrytten to his brother, declaring howe he was beaten of Bishop Boner.*

BRother, in the name of the Lord Iesus I cōmend me vnto you, and I doe heartely thancke you for your godly exhortation and counsell in your last letter declared to me. And albeit I doe perceiue by your letter, you are informed, that as we are diuers persons in number, so we are of contrary sectes, conditions, and opinions, contrary to that good opinion you had of vs at your last being with vs in Newgate: be you most assured good brother in the Lorde Iesus, we are all of one minde, one faith, one assured hope in the Lord Iesus, whome I trust we altogether with one spirite, one brotherly loue, doe daily call vpon for mercy & forgeuenesse of our sinnes, with earnest repentaunce of our former liues, and by whose precious bloudshedding wee trust to be saued onely, and by no other meanes. Wherefore good brother, in the name of the Lorde, seeing these impudente people, whose mindes are altogether bent to wickednesse, enuie, vncharitablenesse, euill speaking, doe goe about to slaunder vs with vntruth, beleeeue them not, neither let their wicked sayings once enter into your mind. And I trust one day to see you againe, although now I am in Gods prison, which is a ioyfull schoole to them that loue theyr Lord God, and to me being a simple scholer most ioyfull of all.

Good brother, once againe I doe in the name of oure Lorde Iesus, exhort you to pray for me, that I may fight stronglye in the Lordes battaile, to bee a good souldioure to my Captaine Iesus Christ our Lord, and desire my sister also to do the same: and doe not ye mourn or lament for me, but be ye glad and ioyful of this my trouble: For I trust to be loosed out of this dongeon shortly, and to go to euerlasting ioy, which neuer shal haue end. I heard how ye were with the Commissioners. I pray you sue no more for me, good brother. But one thing I shal desire you, to be at my departing out of this life, that you may bear witnes with me that I shal die, I trust in God, a true Christian, and (I hope) all my cōpanions in the Lord our God: and therefore beleue not these euil disposed people, who are the authors of all vntruthes.

I pray you prouide me a long shirt against the day of our deliuerance: for the shirt you gaue me last, I haue geuen to one of my companions who had more neede then I: And as for the money and meat you sent vs, the Bishops seruants deliuered none to vs, neither he whome you had so great trust in. Brother, there is none of them to trust to: for qualis Magister talis Seruus. I haue beene twice beaten and threatned to be beaten againe by the bishop himselfe.* I suppose we shall go into the Countrey to Fulham, to the bishops house, and there be arraigned. I woulde haue you to harken as much as you can. For when we shall goe, it shall be sodenly done. Thus fare ye well, from the Colehouse, this present Fridaye.

Your brother, Steuen Cotton.

The scourging of Iames Harris.

IN this societie of the scourged professors of Christ, was also one Iames Harris of Billerica in Essex, a stripling of the age of 17. yeares: who being apprehended and sent vp to Boner in the company of Margaret Ellis,* by Syr Iohn Mordant Knight, and Edmund Tyrel Iustices of peace (as appeareth by their owne letters before mentioned, pag. 2020.) was by Boner diuers times straitly examined. In the which examinatioⁿ he was charged not to haue come to his parish church by the space of one yeare or more.* Wherunto he graunted, confessing therewithal, that once for feare he had bene at the Church, and there had receiued the Popish sacrament of the aultare, for the whych he was hartely sorie, detesting the same with all his hart.

After this and such like answeares. Boner (the better to try him,) perswaded him to goe to shrift. The lad somewhat to fulfil his request,* consented to go, & did. But whē he came to the Priest, he stode stil and saide nothing. Why quoth the Priest, sayest thou nothing? what should I say, sayd Harris? Thou must confesse thy sins, sayd the priest. My sinnes (saith he) be so many, that they cānot be numbred. With that the Priest told Boner what he had sayde, and he of his accustomed deuotion, tooke the pore lad into his garden, and there with a rod gathered out of a Cherie tree, did most cruelly whip him.

The scourging of Rob. Williams a Smith.

OVer and besides these aboue mētioned, was one Roberte Williams, who being apprehended in the same cōpany, was so tormented after the like maner wyth rods in his arbour: who there subscribing and yelding himselfe by promise to obey the lawes,* after being let go, refused so to doe: whereupon he was earnestly sought for, but could not be found, for that he kept himselfe close, and went not abroad but by stelth: & now in the meane time of this persecution, this Robert Williams departed thys life, and so escaped the handes of his enemies. The Lord therefore be honoured for euer. Amen.

¶And for asmuch as I haue begon to wryte of Boners scourging, by the occasion therof commeth to minde to inferre by the way, his beating of other boyes and children, and drawing them naked through the nettels, in his iourney rowing toward Fulham. The storie although it touch no matter of Religion, yet because it toucheth some thyng the nature and disposition of that man, and maye refreshe the Reader, wearied percase with other dolefull stories, I thought not to omitte.

Boner causeth certaine Boyes to be beaten.

BOner passing from London to Fulham by Barge,* hauing Iohn Milles and Thomas Hinshaw aboue mētioned with him, both prisoners for Religion, by the way as he went by water, was saying Euensong with Harpsfield his chaplaine in the barge, and being about the middle of their deuout orisons, they espied a sort of yōg boyes swimming and washing themselues in the Thames ouer against Lambeth, or a little aboue: vnto whome hee went and gaue very gentle language, and faire speach,* vntill he had let his man a lande. That done, his men ran after the boyes to get them, as the Bishop commaunded them before, beating some with nettles, drawinge some throughe bushes of nettles naked, and some they made leape into the Thames to saue them selues, that it was maruell they were not drowned.

Now as the children for feare did crie, and as this skirmishing was betweene them, immediatly came a greater lad thither, to know what the matter ment that the boyes made suche a noise. Whome when the bishop espied, he asked him whether he wold maintain them in their doings or no. Unto whom the yong fellow made answer stoutly, yea. Then the B. commanded him to be taken also: but he ran away with spede, and there auoided the bishops blessing. Now when the B. sawe him to flee away, & an other man sitting vpon a rail in the way where he ran, he willed him likewise to stop the boy: and because he wold not, he commaunded his men to fet that man to him also: but he hearing that, ran away as fast as he coulde, and by leaping ouer the ditch, escaped the bishop in like maner.

Then the Bishop seeing the successe of his battaile to prooue no better, cried to a couple of fery boies to run and holde him that last ran away. And for that they sayde they could not (as in deede it was true) therefore he caused his men by and by to take and beat them. The boyes hearing that, lept into the water to saue themselues: notwithstanding they were caught, and in the water by the Byshops men were holden and beaten.

Now, after the ende of this great skirmish, the bishops men returned to their maister againe into the barge,* and he and Harpsfielde his chaplaine went to their Euensong a fresh where they left, and so forsooth the rest of their seruice, as cleane without malice, as an egge wythout meat. The Lorde geue him repentaunce (if it bee his will) and grace to become a new man. Amen.

The whipping of a begger at Salisburie,

VNto these aboue specified, is also to be added the miserable whipping of a certain pore starued seely begger, who because he would not receiue the sacramēt at Easter in the towne of Colingborow,* was brought to Salisbury with billes and gleiues to the Chancellor doctor Geffrey who cast him into the Dongeon, and after caused him miserably to be whipped of two catchpoles. The sight wher'of made all godly hearts to rew it, to see such tyrannye to be shewed vppon such a simple and seely wretche: for they which saw him haue reported, that they neuer saw a more simple creature: But what pitie can mooue the heartes of mercilesse Papists?

Besides these aboue named, diuers other also suffered the like scourgings and whippings in their bodies for the faithfull standing in the truth. Of whom it may be sayde, as it is wrytten of the holy Apostles in the Actes. Which departed from the counsel,* reioysing that they were counted woorthy to suffer for the name of Iesus.

¶An other treatise of suche as being pursued in Queene Maries time, were in great daunger, & yet through the good prouidence of God, mercifully were preserued.

ALthough the secreat purpose of almighty God, which disposeth all thinges, suffered a greate number of hys Page 2063 faithfull seruauntes both men and women, and that of all ages and degrees, to fall into the enemies handes, and to abide the brunt of this persecution, to be tried with rods, with whippes, with rackes, with fetters and famin, with burning of handes,* with plucking of beardes, wyth burning also both hand, beard, and body. &c.

Yet notwithstanding some there were againe, and that a great number, who myraculously by the mercifull prouidence of God, against all mannes expectation, in safetie were deliuered out of the fiery rage of this persecution, either by voydinge the Realme, or shiftinge of place, or the Lord so blinding the eyes of the persecutors, or disposing the oportunitie of time, or woorking some suche meanes or other for hys seruauntes, as not onely ought to stir them vp to perpetuall thanckes, but also may mooue all menne both to beholde and magnifie the wonderous woorkes of the almightie.

About what time it began to be knowen that Queene Mary was sicke, diuers good men were in hold in diuers quarters of the realme, some at Burie, some at Salisb. as Iohn Hunt and Richard White, of whome we haue storied before, and some at London, amongst whome was Wil. Liuing with hys wife, and Iohn Lithall, of whome something remaineth now compendiously to be touched.

The trouble and deliuerance of William Liuing with his wife, and of Iohn Lithall, Ministers.

ABout the time of the latter end of Queene Marie, she then beinge sicke,* came one Coxie a Promoter, to the house of William Liuing, about 6. of the clocke, accompanied with one Iohn Launce of the Graihound. They being not ready, they demaunded for buttons, sayinge they shoulde be as well payed for them, as euer was any: and he would come about 3. houres after againe for them.

*In the meane while he had gotten the Constable called maister Deane, and George Hancocke the Beadle of that Ward, and searching his bookes, founde a booke of Astronomie, called the worke of Ioannes de sacro busto de sphaera, with figures, some round, some triangle, some quadrate: which booke because it was gilted, seemed to him the chieftest booke there, and that he caried open in the streate, saying: I haue founde him at length. It is no maruaile the Queene be sicke, seeing there be suche coniurers in priuie corners: but now I trust he shall coniure no more, and so brought him and his wife from Shoe lane through Fleet streete into Paules Churchyarde, with the Constable, the Beadle, and 2. other following them, til they were entred into Darbishires house, who was bishop Boners Chancellour: And after the Constable and they had talked wyth Darbishire, he came foorth and walked in his yard, saying these woordes.

Darbishire.

What is your name?

Liuing.

William Liuing.

Darb.

*What are you? a Priest?

Liuing.

Yea.

Darb.

Is this your wife that is come with you?

Liuing.

That shee is.

Darb.

Where were you made Priest?

Liuing.

At Obourne.

Darb.

In what Bishops daies?

Liuing.

By the Bishop of Lincolne, that was king Henries ghostly father in Cardinall Wolsies time.

Darb.

You are a schismaticke and a traytor.

Liuing.

I would be sorie that were true. I am certaine I neuer was traitor, but alwais haue taught obedience, according to the tenour of Gods woord: and when tumults and Schismes haue beene stirred, I haue preached Gods word, and swaged them, as in the time of king Edwarde.

Darb.

What? you are a Schismaticke. You be not in the vnitie of the catholike church: for you pray not as y^e church of Rome doth: You pray in English.

Liuing.

We are certaine we be in the true church.

Darb.

There be that doubteth therof, for so much as there is but one true Church.

Well, you will learne against I talke with you againe, to know the church of Rome, and to be a member thereof.

Liuing

If the church of Rome be of that Churche whereof Christ is the head, then am I a member thereof: for I know no other Church but that.

Darb.

Wel Cluny, take him with thee to the Colehouse.

Then called he Cluny again, and spake secretly to him, what I know not.*

Then sayde Cluny: wilt thou not come: and so pluckt me away violently, and brought me to his owne house in Pater noster Rowe, where hee robbed mee of my pursse, my girdle, and my Psalter, and a new Testamēt of Geneua, and then broughte me to the Colehouse to put mee in the stockes, saying: put in both your legges and your handes also: and except you fine w^t me, I will put a collar about your necke. What is the fine, quoth I? Fortie shillinges quoth he, I am neuer able to pay it, sayd I.

Then said he: you haue friendes that be able.* I denyed it: and so he put both my legges into the stockes til supper time, whyche was 6. of the clocke, and then a cosine of my wiues brought me meat, who seeing me so sit there, sayd: I will geue you 40. pence and let him goe at libertie: and he tooke her mony, and presently let me forth in her sighte, to eate my supper. And at 7. of the clocke he put mee into the stockes againe, and so I remained till 2. of the clocke the next day, and so he let mee foorth till nighte. This woman aboue mentioned, was Griffins first wife, a brother dwelling then in Aldermanberie, and yet alieue in Chepeside.

The thursday following at afternoone was I called to the Lollardes tower, and there put in the stockes,* hauing the fauour to put my legge in that hole that Master Iohn Philpots legge was in, and so lay all that night, no body comming to me, either with meat or drinke.

At 11. of the clocke on the Fridaye, Clunie came to mee with meat, and let me forth, and about one of the clocke he brought me to Darbishires house, who drew forth a scroll of names, and asked me if I knew none of them, I said I know none of them, but Foster. And so I kneeled downe vpon my knees, and praied him that he wold not enquire thereof any farther.* And with that came foorth two godly women, which sayd: Master Darbshire, it is inough, and so became sureties for mee, and paied to Clunie xv. s. for my fees, and bad me goe with them.

And thus mucche concerning William Liuing. After this came his wife to examination, whose answeares to Darbshire the Chancellor, here likewise follow.

The examination of Iulian Liuing, wife to William Liuing.

DArbshire.

Ah syrha: I see by your gowne you be one of the Sisters.*

Iulian.

I weare not my gowne for Sisterhood, neither for nunnerie, but to keepe me warme.

Darb

Nunne? No I dare say you be none, Is that man your husband?

Iulian.

Yea.

Darb.

He is a Priest.

Iulian.

No, he sayeth no Masse.

Darb.

What then? He is a priest. How darest thou marry him.

Then he shewed me a rolle of certaine names of Citizens. To whom I answered, I knew none of them.

Then sayd he: you shall be made to know them.

Then said I: do no other but Iustice and right, for the day will come that you shall answer for it.

Iulian.

Why womā, thinkest thou not that I haue a soul.

Iulian.

Yes, I knowe you haue a soule: but whether it be to saluation or damnation, I can not tell.

Darb.

Ho Cluny haue her to the Lollardes tower.* And so he tooke me, and caryed me to his house, where was one Dale a Promoter, which sayde to me: Alas good woman, wherefore be you heere.

What is that to you sayd I?

You be not ashamed, quoth Dale, to tel wherfore you came hither.*

No quoth I, that I am not: for it is for Christes Testament.

Christes Testament, quoth hee? it is the Deuils Testament.

Oh Lorde, quoth I, God forbid that any man shoulde speake any such woorde.

Well, well quoth he, you shall be ordered wel enough. You care not for burning quoth he. By Gods bloud, there must be some other meanes founde for you.

What quoth I, will you find any worse then you haue founde?

Wel quoth he, you hope and you hope: but your hope shalbe a slope. For though the Queene faile, shee that you hope for, shall neuer come at it: For there is my lord Cardinals grace, and many more betweene her and it.

Then quoth I: my hope is in none but God.

Then saide Clunye: Come with me: and so went I to the Lollardes Tower.* On the next daye Darbshire sent for me againe, and enquired againe of those Citizens that he enquired of before.

I answered I knewe them not.

Where were you, quoth he, at the communion on sonday Page 2064 was fortnight?

And I sayd, in no place.

Then the Constable of S. Brides, beinge there, made sute for me.

And Darbishyre demaunded of him if hee would be bounde for me.

*He answered, yea. And so he was bounde for my appearance betwixt that and Christmasse.

Then Darbshire sayd: you be Constable, and should geue her good counsell.

So do I quoth he. For I bid her goe to Masse, and to say as you say. For by the Masse, if you say the Crowe is white, I will say so too.

And thus much concerning the examination of William Liuing and his wife, whom although thou seest heere deliuered through the request of women, *hys sureties, yet it was no doubt, but that the deadly sicknesse of Queene Marie abated and brided then the crueltie of those Papists, which otherwise would neuer haue let them goe.

The trouble and deliuerance of Iohn Lithall.

AT the taking of William Liuing, it happened that certaine of his Bookes were in the custodie of one Iohn Lithall, *whyche knowen, the Constable of the Warde of Southwarke, with other of the Queenes seruantes, were sent to his house, who breaking open his doores and chests, tooke away not onely the bookes of the sayde William Liuing, but also all his owne bookes, wrytings, and billes of debtes, which he neuer had againe. All this while Lithall was not at home.

The next Saterdaye after, as hee was returned, and knowen to be at home, Iohn Auales and certaine of the Queenes seruantes besette his house all the night, wyth such carefull watch, that as he in the morning issued out of his doores, thinking to escape their handes, Iohn Auales sodenly brusting out vpon him, cried, stop the traitor, stop the traitor. Whereat Lithall being amased, looked backe.

And so Iohn Auales came running to him, wyth other that were with him, saying: ha syrra: you are a prety traitorly fellow in deede: we haue had somewhat to do to get you. To whom he answered, that he was a truer man to the Queenes maiestie then he. For you (sayd he) are commaunded by God to kepe holy the Sabboth day, and you seeke to shed your neighbours bloud on the Sabboth day. Remember that you must answer therfore to God. But he said, come on you villaine, you must goe before y^e counsell. So was Lithal brought into Paules Churchyard to the bishops Chauncellour, *by Iohn Auales, saying, that he had there caught the Captaine of these fellowes, and so caused him to be called to examination before D. Darbshire, who entred with him talke in this wise.

Chaunc.

What countrey man are you?

Lithall.

I am an Englishman, borne in Staffordshire.

Chaunc.

*Where were you brought vp?

Lith.

In this our countrey of England.

Chaunc.

In what Uniuersitie?

Lith.

In no Uniuersitie, but in a free schoole.

Chaunc.

We haue had certaine bookes from your house & wrytings, wherein is both treason and heresie.

Lith.

Syr, there is neither treason nor heresie in them.

Chaunc.

Thē he asked for certain other men that I knew.

Lith.

If you haue ought to lay to my charge, I will aunswer it: but I wil haue no other mans bloud vpō my hed.

Chaunc.

Why come you not to the Churche? Of what Churche be you, that you come not to your owne Parish Church?

Lithall.

I am of the Church of Christ, the fountaine of all goodnesse.

Chanc.

Haue you no ministers of your church but Christ.

Lith.

We haue others.

Chanc.

Where be they?

Lith.

In the whole world disparsed, preaching and professing the Gospell and faith onely in our Sauior Iesus, as he commaunded them.

Chauncellour.

You boast muche euery one of you of your faith and beliefe: Lette me heare therefore the effecte howe you beleue.

Lith.

I beleue to be iustified freely by Christe Iesu, according to the saying of S. Paule to the Ephesians,* without either deedes or workes, or any thing that may be inuented by man.

Chaunc.

Faith can not saue without woorkes.

Lith.

That is contrary to the doctrine of the Apostles.

Chaunc.

Iohn Auales, you and the Keeper haue this fellow to prisone.

Clunie, and Iohn Auales.

Then Iohn Auales and Clunie the Keeper had me into Paules, and would haue had me to haue seene the apostles masse.

Lithall.

I knowe none the Apostles had, and therefore I will see none.

Clunie, and Iohn Auales.

Come kneele downe before the roode, and say a Pater noster and an Ave in the woorship of the fiue woundes.

Lith.

I am forbidden by Gods owne mouthe to kneele to any Idoll or Image: therefore I will not.

Then they pulled me with great extremitie, y^e one hauing me by one arme, and the other by the other, but God gaue me at that present time more strēgth then both these, his name be praised for it.

Then when they coulde not make me to kneele before the roode, neither to see their Masse,* there gathered a great company about vs, and all against me. Some spit on me, and sayd: Fie on thee hereticke, and other said it was pitie I was not burned already.

Then they caried me to Lollardes Tower, and hanged me in a great paire of stockes, in the which I lay three daies and three nightes, till I was so lame that I coulde neither sturre nor mooue.

Then I offered the Keeper certaine money and gold that I had about me, to release me out of the stockes, and he sayde I would not be ruled by him, neither to see masse nor to kneele before the Roode, and therefore I should lye there still. But I sayde I would neuer doe the thyng that shoulde be againste my conscience, and thoughe you haue lamed my body, yet my conscience is whole, I praise God for it. So shortly after he lette me out of the stockes, more for the loue of my money (as it maye be thought) then for any other affection, and within four or fiue daies my wife gotte leaue of maister Chauncelloure to come to mee, to bring me suche things as were needefull for me, and there I lay fiue weekes and odde dayes. In the which time diuers of my neighbours and friendes made sute to the Chauncellor for my deliuerance, the Bishop, as they sayd, at that time being at Fulham sicke. So my neighbors being there, aboute twentie of them, the Chauncellour sent for me out of the Lollardes Tower to his own house,* and sayde as followeth.

Chauncellour.

Lithall, heere be of thy neighbours whych haue bene with me to intreat for thee, and they haue informed me that thou hast bene a very honest & a quiet neighbor amongst them, and I thincke it be Gods will that I should deliuer thee before my Lorde come home. For if he come and thou go home againe, I will be burned for thee, for I knowe his minde already in that matter.

Lith.

I geue you hearty thanks for your gentlenesse, and my neighbours for their good report.

Chauncellour.

Lithall, if thy neighbours will be bounde for thy fourth comming whēsoeuer thou shalt be called for, and also thou wilt be an obedient subiect, I shalbe content to deliuer thee.

Neighbours.

If it please your woorship, we will be bounde for him both in body and goodes.

Chauncellour.

I will require no such bond of you, but that two of you will be bound in 20. pound a peece, that he shal come to aunswere when he shall be called.

Lithall.

Where finde you, maister Chancelloure in all the Scripture, that the Churche of God did binde any manne for the profession of his faithe? whiche profession you haue heard of me, that all oure iustification, righteousnesse, and saluation, commeth onely and freely by the merites of our Sauour Iesus Christe, and all the inuentions & workes of men, be they neuer so glorious, be all together vaine, as the wise man sayeth.

Chauncellour.

Loe, where he is now, I put no such matter to you: for in that I beleeeue as you doe: but yet S. Iames sayth that a man is iustified by woorkes.

Lithall.

Sainte Iames spake to those that boasted themselues of faithe, and shewed no woorkes of faith.* But O maister Chauncellour, remember I praye you, howe all the promises and Prophetes of the holy Scripture, euen from the firste promise that God made to Adam, and so euen to the latter ende to the Reuelation of Sainte Iohn, doe testifie that in the name of Iesus, and onely by hys merites, all that beleeeue shalbe saued from all their sinnes and offences. Esay sayeth:*I am founde of them that sought mee not, and am manifest to them that asked not after mee: but against Israel he sayeth:*All daye long haue I stretched oute my hande to a people that beleeeue not. And when the Iayler asked S. Paule what he shoulde doe to be saued, the Apostle sayde: Beleeeue in the Lorde Iesus, and thou shalt be saued and all thy housholde.

Againe, S. Iohn sayeth in the Reuelation, that there was none, neither in heauen, nor in earth, neither vnder y^e earth, that was able to open the booke nor y^e seales therof, but onely the Lambe Iesus our onely Sauour. And S. Page 2065 Paule sayth: With one offering hath he made perfecte for euer them that are sanctified.

Chaunc.

*With vaine glory you rehearse much Scripture, as al the sort of you do: but you haue no more vnderstanding then a many of sheepe. But to the purpose. Will you that your neighbors shall enter into bōds for you, or not?

Lith.

By my minde they shall not. Wherefore I desire you that you would not binde me, but let me serue God with my conscience freely.* For it is wrytten: They that leade into captiuitie shall goe into captiuitie, and they that strike wyth the sworde, shall pearish with the sworde.

Also it is wrytten in the Gospel of our Sauour Iesus Christ:*that who so doeth offend one of these little ones whych beleue in mee, it were better for him that a milstone were hanged about his necke, and that he were cast into the depth of the sea. Of the which I am assured by his holye spirite that I am one. Wherefore be you well assured that such mercy as you shew, vnto you shall be shewed the like.

Chaunc.

You are a mad man. I would not binde you, but that I must needes haue somewhat to shewe for your deliuerance. Then he called ij. of my neighbours, Thomas Daniel and Saunders Maybe, which offered themselues to be bounde, and called me before them, and sayd: I haue a letter of his own hand wryting with his name and seale at it, with a booke also againste the Regiment of women, for the which I coulde make him to be hanged, drawen, & quartered, but on my faith I will him no more hurt, then I meane to mine owne soule.

Lith.

I desire you that be my neighbours and frends, that you wil not enter into bondes for me: for you knowe not the danger therof, neither I my selfe: It goeth against my conscience that ye should so doe.

Chaunc.

Why I wil not binde you to do any thing against your conscience.

Neighbours.

*Then they made the bonde and sealed to it, and willed me y^t I shoulde seale to it also: and I saide that I would not, neither could I obserue the bond, and therefore I would not set too my hand.

Chaunc.

It is pitie that thou hast so much fauour shewed thee: yet for these honest mens sake I wil discharge thee.

Notwithstanding all these dissembling woords of maister Darbshire, pretending for fauoure of his sureties to set him at libertye, it was no suche thing, nor anye zeale of charitie y^t mooued him so to do, but onely feare of the time, vnderstanding the daungerous and vnrecoerable sicknesse of Queene Mary, which then began somewhat to asswage the cruel proceedings of thes^e persecutors, wherby they durst not do that they would: for els Lithall was not like to haue escaped so easily.

Edward Grew.

MOREouer, there was one Edward Grewe priest, and Appline his wife,* compelled to flie from theyr dwelling at a Towne called Broke: and the man being verye aged, trauailed abroad to keepe a good conscience.

At the last he was taken and laid in Colchester Castle, where he remained till Quene Elizabeth came to her regal seat, and by the alteration of Religion he was deliuered. His wife, good womā, was in great care for him, and to her power did what she could to succour him.

William Browne.

William Browne, Parson of Little Stanham, in the Countie of Suffolke,* made a Sermon in the sayde Towne, incontinently after the buriall of our good King Edward, and in his sermon he sayde: there goeth a report that our good king is buried with a Masse by the Bishop of Winchester, he hauing a miter vpon his head. But if it were so (sayeth hee) they are all traitours that so doe, because it is bothe againste the truthe and the lawes of thys realme, and it is greate Idolatrie and blasphemie, and against the glory of God: and they are no frends neither to God,* the king, nor yet vnto the realm that so do. For this his preaching, one Robert Blomefielde, an aduersarye to the truth, being then constable of the sayd towne, and bail•se vnto sir Iohn Ierningham knight (the chiefe lord of y^e towne) immediatly rode foorth,* & brought home w^t him one Edward Goulding, which was then vnder sheriffe, Syr Thomas Cornewalis being then high sheriffe.

So the sayd Golding and Blomfield sent for certaine men of the sayd Towne, and examined them for the Sermon. Wherunto they made but a small answer. Then the Sheriffe made a Bill, and so feared the men, that 2. or 3. of them set to their hands, and one of them neuer ioyed after but it was a griefe to him till he died.

Then did they take men with them vnto the Parsones house, and in the night they tooke him,* and wyth watchmē kept him vntill it was day. Then should he haue bene caried the next day to the Counsell: but y^e said Rob. Blomefield was taken so sicke, that hee was like to die: so that he could not carie him for his life.

Then the sayd sheriffe sent him to Ipswich againe, and there he was for a time. Then hee was sent to Burie prison, & from thence to the Councel, and then into the Flete: and so he lay in prisone from the beginning of haruest till it was nigh Christmasse, and he sayd God gaue him •uche answeres to make when he was examined, that hee was deliuered with quietnes of conscience.* And hauing his libertie, he came againe vnto the foresayd Towne: and because he would not goe to Masse, his liuing was taken away, and he & his wife were constrained to flie heere and there, for his life & conscience. In the last yeare of Queene Maries raigne, God did take him out of this life in peace.

Where moreouer is to be noted, y^t this Robert Blomfield aboue named, immediately after he had apprehended the saide Browne fell very sicke: * And though at that time he was a welthy man and of a great substance (beside his land, which was better then twentie pound a yeare) after thys time, God so plagued his housholde, that hys eldest sonne died, and his wife had a pining sicknesse till she departed this life also.

Then married he an other, a richer widow: but all wold not helpe, and nothing would prosper: For hee had a sore pining sicknesse, being full of botches and sores, whereby he wasted away both body and goodes, till he died.

So when he died, he was aboue ix. •core pounds in det, and it was neuer heard of any repentaunce he had. But a litle before his death, he bragged, & threatned a good man, one Symon Hariston, to putte him foorth to the Officers, because he did weare no Surplis when he sayd seruice.

Wherefore it is pitie suche baites of Poperie are lefte to the enemies to take Christians in. God take them away, or els from them: for God knoweth they be the cause of much blindnesse and strife amongst men.

Furthermore, out of the sayde Towe were constrayned to flye Robert Boele and Iohn Trapne, because they woulde not goe to Masse and receiue their Sacrament of the aultare.

Elizabeth Young.

YE heard before in the treatise of the scourging of Thomas Grene, how he was troubled and beaten by doctour Storie, for a certaine booke called Antichriste, which he receiued of a woman, because in no case he woulde detect her.

This woman was one Elizabeth Young, who comming from Emden to England, brought with her diuers bookes, and sparsed them abroad in London, for the which shee being at length espied and laied fast, was brought to examination 13. times before the Catholicke Inquisitours of heretical prauitie. O. the which her examinations, nine haue come to our handes.

Wherein how fiercely she was assaulted, how shamefully shee was reuiled, how miserably handled, and what answeres she made vnto the aduersaries in her owne defence, and finally after all this, how she escaped and passed through y^e pikes (being yet, as I heare say, aliue) I thought to geue the reader here to see and vnderstande.

The first examination of Elizabeth Young, before maister Hussie.

WHO examined her of many thinges: First where she was borne, and who was her father and mother. *

Elizabeth Young.

Syr, all this is but vaine talke, and very superfluous. It is to fil my head with fantasies, that I shoulde not be able to aunswere vnto suche thinges as I came for. Ye haue not (I thinke) put me in prison to know who is my father and mother. But I pray you goe to the matter that I came hether for.

M. Hussie.

Wherfore wentest thou out of the realme?

Elizabeth.

To keepe my conscience cleane.

Hussie.

When wast thou at Masse?

Eliz.

Not this three yeares.

Hussie.

Then wast thou not there iij. yeares before that.

Eliz.

No Syr, nor yet iij. yeares more before that, for and if I were, I had euill lucke.

Hussie.

How old art thou?

Eliz.

Fourty and vpwardes.

Hussie.

Twentie of those yeares thou wentest to Masse.

Eliz.

Yea, and twentie more I may and yet come home as wise as I went thether first, for I vnderstand it not.

Hussie.

Why wilt not thou go to the Masse?

Page 2066

Elizabeth.

Syr, my conscience will not suffer me: For I had rather that all the world should accuse me, then mine owne conscience.

Hussy.

*What and if a louse or a flea sticke vpon thy skinne, and bite thy flesh? thou must make a conscience in the taking her off: is there not a conscience in it?

Elizabeth.

That is but an easie Argument to displace the Scriptures, and especially in such a part as my saluation dependeth vpon: for it is but an easie conscience y^t a man can make.

Hussy.

But why wilte thou not sweare vpon the Euangelist before a Iudge?

Eliz.

*Because I know not what a booke oth is.

Hussy.

Then he began to teach her the booke oth.

Eliz.

Syr, I do not vnderstand it, and therefore I wil not learne it.

Hussy.

Then sayde hee: thou wilt not vnderstand it: and with that rose vp and went his way.

Her second examination before Doctour Martin.

Who sayd to her: Woman, thou art come from beyōd the sea,* and hast brought with thee bookes of heresie and treason, and thou must confesse to vs, who translated them, Printed them, and who sent them ouer (for once I knowe thee to be but a messenger:) and in so doyng the Queenes highnesse will be good to thee (for shee hath forgeuen greater things then this) & thou shalt find as much fauour as is possible.* But if thou be stubborne, and wilte not confesse, thou wilt be wondrous euill handled: for we know the truth already, but thus we do, only to see whether thou wilt be true of thy woord, or no.

Eliz.

Syr, ye haue my confession, and more then that I can not say.

Martin.

Thou must say more, and shalt say more. Doest thou thinke that we wil be full answered by this examination that thou hast made? Thou rebell whoore and traitorly heretike,* thou dost refuse to sweare vpon the Euangelist before a Iudge, I heare say. Thou shalt be racked inch meale, thou traitourly whoore and hereticke, but thou shalt sweare afore a Iudge before thou goe: yea, and thou shalt be made to confesse how many bookes thou hast sold, and to whom.

Eliz.

Syr I vnderstand not what an oth is, and therfore I will take no suche thing vppon me. And no man hath boughte any bookes of mee as yet, for those bookes that I had, you Commissioners haue them all.

Martin.

Thou traitorly whore, we knowe that thou haste sold a number of bookes, yea, and to whom: and how many times thou hast bene here, and where thou layest, and euery place that thou hast bene in. Doest thou thinke that thou hast fooles in hand?

Eliz.

No syr, you be too wise for me: for I can not tel howe manye places I haue bene in my selfe: but if I were in Turkey, I should haue meate and drinke and lodging for my money.

Mart.

Thou rebel whoore, thou hast spoken euil woordes by the Queene,* and thou dwellest amongst a sort of traitours and rebelles, that can not geue the Queene a good worde.

Eliz.

I am not able to accuse any man thereof, nor yet is there any man that can approoue anye such things by me, as ye lay vnto my charge. For I know by Gods woorde, & Gods booke hath taught me what is my duetie to God, and vnto my Queene, and therefore (as I sayd) I am assured that no man liuing vpon the earth, can approoue any such things by me.

Mart.

Thou rebell and traitourly whoore, thou shalt be so racked & handled, that thou shalt be an example to all such traitorly whoores and heretikes: And thou shalt be made to sweare by the holye Euangelist, and confesse to whome thou haste solde al and euery of these heretical bookes that thou haste solde: for wee knowe what number thou haste solde, and to whome: but thou shalt be made to confesse it in spite of thy bloud.

Eliz.

Here is my carkas: do with it what ye wil, and more then that ye can not haue. Master Martin, ye can haue no more but my bloude.

Then fared he as though hee had bene starke mad, and sayd: Martin? Why callest thou me Martin?

Eliz.

Sir, I knowe you well enough, for I haue bene before you ere now. Ye deliuered me once at Westminster.

Martin.

Where diddest thou dwell then?

Eliz.

I dwelled in the Minories.

Martin.

I deliuered thee and thy husband bothe: and I thought• then that thou wouldest haue done otherwyse then thou dost now. For if thou hadst bene before any Bishop in England, and said the woordes that thou didst before me, thou haddest fried a fagot: * and thoughe thou didst not burne then, thou art like to burne or hang now.

Eliz.

Syr, I promised you then, that I woulde neuer be fed with an vnknownen tongue, & no more I will not yet.

Martin.

I shall feede thee well enoughe. Thou shalte be fedde with that (I warrant thee) which shall be finally to thine ease.

Eliz.

Doe what God shall suffer you to doe: for more yee shall not. And then he arose, and so departed, and went to the keepers house, and sayd to the wife: Whom haste thou suffered to come to this vile traitourly whoore and heretike to speake wyth her? Then sayde the keepers wife, as God receiue my soule, here came neither mā, woman, nor childe to aske for her.

Mart.

If any man, woman, or childe come to aske for her,* I charge thee in paine of death, that they be layed fast, and geue her one day bread, and an other day water.

Eliz.

If ye take away my meat, I trust that God wil take away my hunger: and so he departed, and sayde, that was too good for her: and then was shee shutte vppe vnder two lockes in the Clincke, where shee was before.

The third examination before Doctour Martin againe.

Then was shee broughte before hym in his Chamber,* within my Lorde Chauncellours house. Who asked her, saying: Elizabeth, wilt thou confesse these thynges that thou hast bene examined vppon? For thou knowest that I haue bene thy frende: and in so doing,* I wil be thy frende againe: geuing her manye faire woordes, and then demaunding of her how many Gentlemen were beyond the Seas.

Eliz.

It is too much for me to tel you how many are on the other side.

Mart.

No, I meane but in Franckford & Emden, where thou hast bene.

Eliz.

Syr, I did neuer take accounte of them: it is a thing that I looke not for.

Martin.

When shall I heare a true woorde come out of thy mouth?

Eliz.

I haue tolde you the truth, but because that it soundeth not to your minde, therefore ye will not credite it.*

Martin.

Wilt thou yet confesse? and if thou wilt, that that I haue promised, I will doe: and if thou wilt not, I promise thee thou must goe euen hence to the racke, and therfore confesse.

Eliz.

I can say no more then I haue sayde.

Martin.

Well, for as muche as shee will confesse no more, haue her away to the Racke, and then shee will be marred. Then aunsweared a Priest that sate there, and sayde: Woman, take an othe and confesse. Wilt thou be hurte for other men?

Eliz.

I can confesse no more then I haue. Doe with my carkas what yee will.*

Martin.

Did yee euer heare the like of thys Heretique? What a stoute heretique is thys? We haue the truthe▪ and we knowe the truth, and yet looke whether shee will confesse. There is no remedie, but shee muste needes to the Racke, and therefore away with her, and so commaunded her out of the doore, and called her keeper vnto hym, and sayde to him: There is no remedie but this heretike must be racked: and talked with him more, but what it was she heard not.

Then he called her in againe, and sayde: Wilte thou not confesse, and keepe thee from the Racke? I aduise thee so to doe: for if thou wilt not, thou knowest not the payne yet, but thou shalt do.

Eliz.

Syr, I canne confesse no more. Do with my carkas what yee will.

Martin.

Keeper, away with her. Thou knowest what I sayde. Let her knowe the paine of the Racke. And so shee departed, thinking no lesse, but that she should haue gone to the Racke, till shee sawe the keeper tourne toward the Clincke againe.* And thus did God alienate their heartes and diminish their tyrānous power, vnto the time of further examination: for she was brought before the byshop, the Deane, and the Chauncellour, and other Commissioners, first and last thirteene times.

The fourth examination was before the Byshop of London, Syr Roger Cholmley, Doctour Cooke, the Recorder of London, Doctour Roper of Kent, and Doctour Martin, as concerning her faith. &c.

Firste, shee being presented by Doctour Martin, before the Bishop of London. Doctour Martin beganne to Page 2067 declare against her, saying: The Lord Chauncellour hath sent you heere a woman, which hath brought bookes ouer from Emden, where al these bookes of heresie and treason are printed, and hathe therewith filled all the lande wyth Treason and heresie:* neither yet will shee confesse, who translated them, nor who printed them, nor yet who sent them ouer. Wherefore my Lord Chācellor committeth her vnto my Lorde of London, he to doe with her as he shall thinke good.* For shee will confesse nothing, but that shee bought these said bookes in Hamsterdame, and so brought them ouer to sell for gaine.

D. Cooke.

Let her heade be trussed in a small line, & make her to confesse.

Martin.

The booke is called Antichrist, and so may it be wel called, for it speaketh against Iesus Christ & the Queene. And besides that, shee hathe a certaine sparke of the Anabaptists, for she refuseth to sweare vpon the iiij. Euangelistes before a Iudge: For I my selfe and M. Hussy haue had her before vs foure times, but we can not bring her to sweare. Wherefore my Lord Chauncellor would that shee should absteine & fast, for she hath not fasted a great while: For she hathe laine in the Clincke a good while, where she hath had too much her libertie.

Then said the bishop: why wilt thou not sweare before a Iudge? that is the right trade of the Anabaptists.

Eliz.

My Lord, I wil not sweare that this hand is mine.

No, sayd the bishop? and why?

Eliz.

*My Lorde, Christ sayeth, that what soeuer is more then yea, yea, or nay, nay, it commeth of euill. And moreouer, I know not what an oth is: and therefore I wil take no such thing vpon me.

Then saide Cholmley: xx. pounce, it is a man in a woman clothes: xx. pound it is a man.

Boner.

*Thinke you so my Lord?

Cholm.

Yea, my Lord. &c.

Eliz.

My Lord, I am a woman.

Bish.

Sweare her vpon a booke, seeing it is but a question asked.

Then said Cholmley: I will lay twentie pounce it is a man.

Then D. Cooke brought her a booke, commanding her to lay thereon her hande.

Eliz.

No, my Lorde, I will not sweare: for I knowe not what an oth is. But I say that I am a woman, and haue children.

Bish.

That know not we: wherefore sweare.

Cholmley.

Thou yll fauoured whore, lay thy hande vpon the booke: I will lay on myne, and so he laied his hande vpon the booke.

Eliz

So will not I mine.

Then the Bishop spake a woorde in Latine, out of S. Paule, as concerning swearing.

Elizab.

My Lorde, if you speake to mee of S. Paule, then speake English, for I vnderstand you not.

The bish.

I dare sweare that thou doest not.

Eliz.

My Lord: S. Paul saith, that fiue wordes spoken in a language that may be vnderstand, is better then manye in a foreine or strange tongue which is vnknown.

Doctor Cooke.

Sweare before vs whether thou be a man or a woman.

Eliz.

If ye wil not beleue me, then send for women into a secrete place, and I will be tried.

Cholm.

Thou art an ill fauored whore.

Then said the Bishop: How beleeuest thou in the Sacrament of the altar?*

Eliza.

My Lorde: if it will please you that I shall declare mine owne faith, I will.

The bish.

Tell me how thou beleeuest in the sacrament of the altar.

Eliza.

Will it please you that I shall declare my Faithe? And if it be not good, then teach me a better, and I wil beleue it.

D. Cooke

That is well sayd, declare thy faith.

Eliz.

I beleue in God the Father almighty, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost,* three persons and one God. I beleue all the Articles of my Crede. I beleue al things wrytten in the holy Scripture, and all thinges agreeable wyth the Scripture, geuen by the holy Ghoste into the Church of Christ, set forth and taught by y^e church of Christ. I beleue that Iesus Christ the only sonne of God, that immaculate Lamb, came into the world to saue sinners, & that in him, by him,* & throughe him I am made cleane frō my sinnes, and without him I coulde not. I beleeue that in the holy sacrament of Christes body and bloud, which he did institute and ordaine, and left among his Disciples the nyght before he was betraied, whē I do receiue his Sacrament in faith and spirite, I do receiue Christ.

Bish.

No more, I warrant you, but the sacramēt of Christes body and bloud, receiued but in spirit and faith, wyth those heretiques.

Cholm.

Ah whoore, spirite and faith, whoore?

Eliz.

This sacrament neuer man coulde or did make, but only he that did, which no man could do.*

Mart.

Then thou must allowe that grasse is a sacrament: for who could make grasse but he only?

Eliz.

Syr, he hathe suffered, and made a sufficient Sacrifice once for all, and so hath he made hys Sacrament sufficient once for all, for there was neuer man that could say: Take, eate, this is my body that is broken for you, but only Iesus Christ, who had his body broken for the sinnes of the world: which Sacrament he hath left here amongst vs for a testimonial of his death, euen to the worldes ende.

Mart.

Who taught thee this doctrine? did Scorie?

Eliz.

Yea, Bishop Scorie and other that I haue heard.

Bish.

Why, is Scory Bishop now?

Eliz.

If that doe offende you, call him Docteur Scorie, if yee will.

Roper.

I knew when he was but a poore Doctour.

Mart.

What doe ye call Scorie?

Eliz.

Our Superintendent.

Bish.

Loe, their Superindent.

Mart.

And what are ye called?

Eliz.

Christes congregation.

Bish.

Lo, Christes congregation, I warrant you.

Doctor Cooke.

What liuing hath Scorie?

Eliz.

Sir, as farre as I do know, he liueth by his owne, for I know no man that geueth him ought.

Recorder.

Yes, I warrant you, he hath enough sent hym out of England.

Eliz.

Syr, I know no such thing.

Cholm.

Harke whore, harke: harke how I do beleue.

Eliz.

My Lord, I haue tolde you my beliefe.

Cholmley.

Harke, thou yll fauoured whoore, howe I doe beleue.* When the Priest hath spoken the wordes of Consecration, I do beleue that there remaineth the very body that was borne of the virgine Marie, was hanged on the crosse, was deade and buried, and descended into hell, and rose againe on the thirde day, and ascended to heauen, and sitteth at the right hand of God. The same body when the priest hath spoken the woords, commeth down, and when the priest lifteth vp his body on this wise (he lifting vp his handes) sayd there it is.

Eliz.

I haue tolde you also how I do beleue.

Mart.

Away with her.

Cholmley.

Ah euill fauoured whore, nothing but spirit and faith whore?

Mart.

Away with her, we haue more to talke withall.

Then was shee caried into the Colehouse,* and searched for bookes, and then put into the stockhouse, and her knife girdle, and aporne taken from her.

The fifth examination before the Bishop of Londons Chancellour. &c.

Then was she brought out of the stockhouse & brought before the bishops Chauncellour,* who required of her what age shee was of.

Eliz.

Sir, fortie yeares and vpwardes.

The Chauncellour.

Why, thou art a woman of a faire yeares: what shouldest thou meddle with the Scriptures? it is necessary for thee to beleue, and that is inoughe. It is more sitte for thee to meddle with thy distaff, then to meddle with the Scriptures. What is thy beliefe? I woulde heare it: for it can not be good, in that thou art brought into prison.

Eliz.

Syr, if it will please you to heare it, * I will declare it vnto you. But I praye you that you will take your pen and wryte it, and then examine it: and if ye find any thing therein that is not fit for a Christian woman, then teache me better, and I will learne it.

Chaunc.

Wel said. But who shalbe Iudge betwene thee and me?

Elizab.

The Scripture.

Chaunc.

Wilt thou stand by that?

Eliz.

Yea sir.

Chaunc.

Wel, go thy way out at the doore a litle while, for I am busie, and I will call for thee anon againe.

Then he called me againe, and said: Nowe woman, the time is too long to wryte. Say thy minde, and I wil bear it in my head.

Then Elizabeth began, and declared her faith to him, as shee had done before the Bishop.

Chaunc.

Woman, spirit and faith I do allow, * but dost not thou beleue that thou doest receiue the body of Christ really, corporally, and substantially?

Eliz.

These wordes really and corporally, I vnderstond not: as for substantially, I take it, ye meane I should beleue that I should receiue his humane body (which is vpon the right hand of God, and can occupy no moe places at once) and that beleuee not I.*

Chanc.

Thou must beleuee this, or els thou art damned.

Eliz.

Sir, can ye geue me beliefe or fayth?

Chanc.

No, God must geue it thee.

Eliz.

God hath geuen me no such fayth or beliefe.

The Chauncellor then declared a text of S. Paule in Latine, and then in English, saying: I could make thee beleuee, but that thou hast a cankered heart, and wilt not beleuee. Who then can make thee to beleuee?

Eliz.

You sayd euen now, that fayth or beliefe commeth of God, and so beleuee I, and then may not I beleue an vntruth to be a truth.

Chanc.

Doest thou not beleuee that Christes flesh is flesh in thy flesh?

Eliz.

No sir, I beleuee not that, for my flesh shall putrifie and rot.

Chanc.

Christ sayd, my flesh is flesh in flesh.

Eliz.

Who so receiueth him fleshly, shall haue a fleshly resurrection.

Chanc.

Christ sayeth in the 6. of Iohn: My fleshe is meate in deed, and my bloud is drinke in deed.

Eliz.

*Christ preached to the Capernaits, saying: Except ye eate the flesh of the sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, ye shall not haue lyfe in you: and the Capernaïtes murmured at it. And his Disciples also murmured, saying among themselues: This is an hard saying, and who can abide it? Christe vnderstoode their meanyng, and sayde: Are ye also offended? Will ye also goe away? What and if ye shall see the sonne of man ascende vp to heauen from whence hee came? will that offende you? It is the spirite that quickeneth, the fleshe profiteth nothyng. I praye you Sir, what meaneth Christ by that?

Chanc.

O God forbid. Would ye haue me to interprete the Scriptures? We must leaue that for our olde auncient fathers, which haue studied scriptures a long tyme, & haue the holy ghost geuen vnto them.

Eliz.

Why sir, haue ye not the holy ghost geuen and reuealed vnto you?

Chanc.

No, God forbid that I should so beleeeue: but I hope, I hope: But ye say, ye are of the spirit. Will you say that ye haue no profit in Christes flesh?

Eliz.

Sir, we haue our profite in Christes flesh, but not as the Capernaïtes did vnderstand it: For they vnderstoode that they must eate his fleshe as they did eate Oxe fleshe and other, and drinke his bloud, as we drinke Wyne or Beere out of a Bole. But so we must not receyue it. But our profite that we haue by Christ, is to beleeeue that hys body was broken vpon the Crosse, and his bloude shedde for our sinnes: That is the very meanyng of Christ, that so we should eate his fleshe, and drinke hys bloude, when he sayde: My fleshe is meate in deede, and my bloud is drinke in deede.

Chanc.

How doth thy body lyue, if Christes flesh bee not flesh in thy flesh?

Eliz.

Sir, I was a body before I had a soule: which body God had created, & yet it could not lyue, til God had breathed lyfe into me, and by that lyfe doth my body lyue. And when it shall please God to dissolue my lyfe, my flesh will offer it selfe vnto the place from whence it came, & through the merites of Christ, my soule wil offer it selfe to the place from whence it came.

Chanc.

Yea, but if thou doe not beleeeue that Christes flesh is flesh in thy flesh, thou canst not be saued.

Eliz.

*Sir, I do not beleeeue that.

Chauncel.

Why, doth not Christ saye: My fleshe is meate in deede, and my bloude is drinke in deede? Canst thou denye that?

Eliz.

I denye not that: for Christes fleshe and bloude is meate and drinke for my soule, * the foode of my soule. For who so euer beleeueth that Iesus Christ the sonne of God hath dyed and shed his bloud for his sinnes, his soule feedeth thereon for euer.

Chauncel.

When thou receiuest the Sacrament of the aultar, doest thou not beleeeue that thou doest receiue Christes body?

Eliz.

Sir, when I do receiue the Sacrament which Christ did institute and ordaine the night before he was betraied, and left among hys Disciples, as often (I say) as I receiue it, I beleeeue that spiritually, and by fayth I receyue Christ. And of this Sacrament, I knowe Christ himselfe to be the author, and none but hee. And this same Sacrament is an establishment to my conscience, * & an augmenting to my fayth.

Chaunc.

Why did not Christ take bread and gaue thanks, and brake it, and gaue it to his Disciples, and sayde: Take, eate, this is my body that is geuen for you? Did he geue them his body, or no?

Elizabeth.

He also tooke the cuppe and gaue thanks to his Father, and gaue it vnto his Disciples, saying: Drynke ye all hereof: for this is the Cuppe of the newe Testament in my bloude which shall bee shedde for many. Nowe I praye you Sir, let me aske you one question: * Dyd he geue the cuppe the name of hys bloud, or els the wyne that was in the cuppe?

Then was he very angry and sayd: Doest thou think that thou hast an hedge priest in hand?

Eliz.

No sir, I take you not to bee an hedge priest. I take you for a Doctor.

Chauncel.

So me thinketh: Thou wilt take vpon thee to teach me.

Eliz.

No sir: But I let you know what I know: and by argument one shall know more.

Christ sayd: As oft as ye do this, *do it in the remembrance of me: but a remembrance is not of a thing present, but absent. Also S. Paule saith: So oft as ye shall eate of this bread, and drinke of this cup, ye shall shew forth the Lordes death till he come. Then we may not looke for hym here, vntill his cōmyng agayne at the latter day. Agayne, is not this article of our beliefe true: He sitteth at the right hand of God the father almighty: from thence he shall come to iudge the quicke and the dead? But if hee shall not come, * before hee come to iudgement, then how is he here present in your sacrament of the aultar? Wherefore I beleeeue that the humaine bodye of Christ occupieth no more but one place at once, for when he was here, he was not there.

¶The sixt examination before the sayd Chauncellor.

W^Ho sayd vnto her: Woman, the last tyme that thou wast before me, * our talke was concernyng the Sacrament.

Eliz.

Sir, true it is, and I trust that I sayd nothyng that ye can deny by the scriptures.

Chanc.

Yes thou wilt not beleeeue that Christes fleshe is flesh in thy flesh. *

Eliz.

No sir, God hath geuen me no such beliefe, for it can not be found by the scriptures.

Chanc.

Wilt thou beleue nothing but what is in the scripture? Why, how many Sacraments doest thou find in the Scripture?

Eliz.

The church of Christ doth set forth twaine.

Chanc.

I will as well finde seuen by the scripture, as thou shalt finde twaine.

Eliz.

Sir, I talke not to you thereof, but I saye that the church of Christ setteth out twaine,* & I haue bene taught no more.

Chanc.

What are those twaine?

Eliz.

The Sacrament of Christes body and bloud, and the sacrament of Baptise.

Chauncellour.

What sayest thou by the Sacramente of Wedlocke?*

Eliz.

I haue not heard it called a Sacrament, but the holy estate of matrimony, which ought to be kept of all mē that take it vpon them.

Chanc.

How sayest thou by Priestres?* Is it good that they should marrie? is it to be kept of them?

Eliz.

I come not hither to reason any such matters, for I am no Diuine, and also it is no part of my faith.

Chanc.

Can ye not tell? ye shall tell or euer you go.

Eliz.

Sir, then must ye keepe me a good while, for I haue not studied the scriptures for it.

Chaunc.

No? why, ye will not be ashamed to flee vnto the highest mysterie, euen to the Sacrament at the first dashe, and ye are not afrayd to argue with the best doctour in the lande.

Eliz.

Gods mysteries I will not meddle w^t, but all things that are written, are written for our edification.*

Chanc.

What say ye by prayer for the dead? is it not meete that if a mans friend be dead, his friend cōmend his soule vnto God?

Eliz.

There is no Christian man that will commend hys friend nor his foe, vnto the Deuill. And whether it be good for him, when he is dead or no, sure I am, that it is good when he is alyue.

Chaunc.

Then thou allowest not prayer to bee good for thē when they be dead, & lying in Purgatory.* Is it not meete that prayer be made vnto God for them?

Eliz.

Sir, I neuer heard in the Scriptures of Purgatory, but in the scripture I haue heard of heauen and hell.

Chaunc.

Why,* ye haue nothyng but the skimmyng of the Scriptures, Our auncient fathers could finde out in the Page 2069 bottome of the scriptures that there is a Purgatory. Yea, they could finde it in the new testament, that a Priest shall take the Sacrament and go to the aultar and make an oblation and offer it vp every day.

Eliz

Sir, that could neuer be found in the Bible nor Testament, as farre as euer I could heare.

Chanc.

Whome doest thou heare read either the Bible or Testament, but a sorte of chismatikes, bawdie Byshops, and hedge Priests (which haue brought into the Churche a stinkyng Communion,^{*} which was neuer heard of in any place in the world, but here in England) whiche haue deceyued the king and all the Nobilitie, and all the whole Realme.

Eliz.

Sir, it is a vile name that ye geue them all.

Chanc.

Where are all the hedge knaues become now, that they come not to their answer?

Eliz.

^{*}Aunswer Sir? why, they haue aunswered both with the Scriptures and also with their bloud, and then where were you that ye came not forth to answer in their times? I neuer knew none of you that were troubled, but twain and that was not for Gods worde, it was for their disobedience?

Chaunc.

No I pray you? did ye not knowe that we were killed, hanged, burned, and headed.

Eliz.

Sir, I neuer knew that any of you euer was eyther hanged, killed, burned or headed.

Chanc.

^{*}No? did ye neuer heare that the Byshop of Rochester lost hys head for the supremacie of the Bishoppes of Rome.

Eliz

Then he died not for Gods word.

Chaunc.

^{*}Well, thou wilt beleeeue nothyng but that which is written in Gods worde. Where canst thou finde the Saboth written in the Scripture, by the name of the Saboth? For the right Saboth day I will prooue to be Saterday. Or where canst thou finde the Articles of y^e Creede in the Scripture by the name of the Articles? Or where canst thou find in the Scripture that Christ went downe into hell.

Eliz.

What place or part in the scripture can ye finde for to disprooue any of these things?

Chaunc.

What priest hast thou lyen withall, that thou hast so much Scripture? Thou art some Priestes woman, I thinke, for thou wilt take vpon thee to reason and teach, the best Doctor in all the land, thou.

Eliz.

I was neuer yet Priests wyfe, nor yet Priests woman.

Chanc.

Haue I touched your conscience?

Eliz.

No Sir, ye haue not touched my conscience, but beware ye hurt not your owne.

Chanc.

Thou hast red a little in the Bible or Testament, & thou thinkest that thou art able to reason with a Doctor that hath gone to schoole thirtie yeares: * and before God, I thinke if I had talked thus much with a Iewe, as I haue done with thee, he would haue turned ere this time. But I may say by you as Christ sayd by Ierusalem, saying: O Ierusalem, Ierusalem, how ofte would I haue gathered thee together: euen as a henne gathereth her chickens, but thou wouldst not. And so would we gather you together in one fayth, but ye will not: and therfore your owne bloude bee vpon your own heds, for I can do no more but teach you. Thou art one of the rankest heretikes that euer I heard, for thou beleeuest nothyng but what is in the Scripture, and therfore thou art damned.

Eliz.

I do beleue all thinges written in the scripture, and all things agreeable with the scripture, geuen by the holy Ghost into the church of Christ, set forth and taught by the church of Christ, * and shall I be damned because I beleue the truth, and will not beleue an vntruth?

Then the Chancellor called the keper, saying: Clunie take her away, thou knowest what thou hast to doe with her. And so she departed and was brought agayne to the stockhouse, and there she lay certaine dayes and both her hands ma^aced in one iron: and afterward was remooued into the Lollards Tower, and there she remained w^t both her feete in the stockes and irons till the next tyme of examination.

¶The 7. examination before the Chancellor and the Bishops Scribe.

WHen she was brought before the sayd Chancellour and the Scribe,* the Chancellor sayd vnto her: Woman, thou hast bene twise before me, but thou & I coulde not agree: and here be certaine articles that my Lorde the B. of London would that thou shouldst make answer vnto, which are these. First, how many Sacramentes thou doest allow.

Eliz.

Sir, as many as Christes Church doth allowe, and that is twaine.

Then sayd the Scribe.* Thou wast taught 7. before K. Edwards dayes.

Chanc.

Which two Sacraments bee those that thou doest allow?

Eliz.

The sacrament of the body & bloud of Iesus Christ, and the sacrament of Baptisme.

Chaunc.

Doest thou not beleeeue that the Pope of Rome is the supreme head of the Church, immediately vnder God in earth?

Eliz.

No sir, no man can be the head of Christes Church: for Christ himselfe is the head,* and hys word is the gouernour of all that be of that Church, where so euer they bee scattred abroad.

Chanc.

Doest thou not beleeeue that the Byshop of Rome can forgeue thee all thy sinnes, hereticall, detestable, and damnable, that thou hast done from thine infancie vnto this day?

Eliz.

Sir, the Bishop of Rome is a sinner as I am, and no man can forgeue me my sinnes,* but hee onely that is without sinne, and that is Iesus Christ whiche dyed for my sinnes.

Chanc▪

Doest thou not know that the Pope sent ouer hys Iubilies, that all that euer would fast and pray, and go to the church, should haue their sinnes forgeuen them.

The Scribe.

Sir, I thinke that she was not in the Realme then.

Chanc.

Hast thou not desired God to defend thee from the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome,* and all his detestable enormities?

Eliz

Yes that I haue.

Chanc.

And art thou not sory for it?

Eliz.

No sir, not a whit.

Chanc.

Hast thou not sayd, that the Masse was wicked, & the sacrament of the aultar most abhominable?

Eliz

Yes that I haue.

Chanc.

And art thou not sory for it?

Eliz.

No sir, not a whit.

Chanc.

Art thou content for to go to the Church and heare Masse?

Eliz.

I will not goe to the church, either to Masse or Mattins, till I may heare it in a tong, that I can vnderstand: for I will be fed no longer in a strange language. And alwaies the Scribe did write euery of these articles, as they were demanded, and answered vnto.

Then the Scribe asked her from whence she came.

The Chauncellor sayd: this is she that brought ouer all these bookes of heresie and treason.

Then sayd the Scribe to her: Woman, where haddest thou all these bookes?

Eliz.

I bought them in Amsterdam, and brought them ouer to sell, thinking to gayne thereby.

Then sayd the Scribe, what is the name of the booke?

Eliz

I cannot tell.

The Scribe.

Why, wouldst thou buy bookes and knowe not their names?

Then sayd Cluny the keeper: Sir, my L. Bishop did sende for her by name that she should come to Masse, but she would not.

Chanc.

Yea, did my Lord send for her by name, and would she not go to masse?

Eliz.

No sir, I will neuer go to masse, till I do vnderstand it, by the leaue of God.*_

Chanc.

Understand it? why, who the deuill can make thee to vnderstand Latine, thou beyng so old?

Then the Scribe commaunded her to set to her hande to all these sayd thyngs.

Elizabeth sayd: sir, then let me heare it read first.

Then sayd the Scribe, M. Chauncellor, shal she heare it read?

Chanc.

Yea, let the heretike heare it read.*

Then she heard it read, and so she set to her hand.

¶The eight examination before the Bishop.

WHen she was brought before the B. he asked the keeper: is this the woman that hath the three children?*

And the keeper sayd: yea my Lord.

Bish.

Woman, here is a supplication put vnto my handes for thee. In lyke case there was another supplication put vp to me for thee afore this, in the which thou madest as though that I should keepe thy children.

Eliz.

My L. I did not know of this supplication, nor yet of the other.

Then said the Bish. M. Deane,* is this the womā that ye haue sued so earnestly for?

The Deane.

Yea, my Lord.

Page 2070

The Deane.

Woman, what remaineth in the sacrament of the aultar, when and after that the Priest hath spoken the words of consecration?

Eliz.

A piece of bread. But the Sacrament of Christes body and bloud, which he did institute and leaue amongst his disciples the night before he was betrayed, ministred according to his word, that sacrament I do beleeeue.

The Deane.

How doest thou beleeeue concernyng the bodye of Christ? where is his body, and how many bodies hath hee?

Eliz.

Sir, in heauen, he sitteth on the right hand of God.

The Deane.

From whence came his humane body?

Eliz.

He tooke it of the Uirgin Mary.

The Deane.

That is flesh, bloud, & bones, as mine is. But what shape hath his spirituall body? hath it face, handes, and feete?

Eliz.

I knowe no other body that he hath, but that bodye whereof he ment when he sayd: This is my body whiche is geuen for you: and this is my bloud which shall be shed for you. Whereby he plainly meaneth that body & no other, which he tooke of the virgin Mary, hauyng the perfect shape and proportion of a humane body.

Story.

*Then said Story: Ye haue a wise body, for ye must go to the stake.

The Deane.

Art thou content to beleue in the faith of Christes Church? But to aske of thee what Christes church is, or where it is, I let it passe.

Eliz.

Sir, to that church I haue ioyned my faith, and from it I purpose neuer to turne by Gods helpe.

The Deane.

Wouldst thou not be at home with thy children with a good will?

Eliz.

Sir, if it please God to geue me leaue.

The Deane

Art thou content to confesse thy selfe to bee an ignorant and a foolsh woman, and to beleeeue as our holy Father the Pope of Rome doth, and as the Lorde Cardinals grace doth, and as my Lord the Bishop of London thine Ordinary doth, and as the Kinges grace and the Queenes grace,* and all the Nobilitie of England do: yea, and the Emperors grace, and all the noble princes in christendome.

Eliz

Sir, I was neuer wise, but in fewe wordes I shall make you a briefe answer how I do beleeeue. I do beleeeue all thynges that are written in the Scriptures geuen by the holy Ghost vnto the Church of Christ, set foorth and taught by the church of Christ. Hereon I ground my faith and on no man.

Then said Story: and who shall be Iudge?

Eliz.

Sir, the scripture.

Story.

And who shall read it?

Elizabeth.

He vnto whom God hath geuen the vnderstandyng.

Bish.

Womā, be reformable, for I would thou were gone, and M. Deane heare hath earnestly sued for thee.

Deane.

Woman, I haue sued for thee in deede, and I promise thee if thou wilt be reformable, my Lord will be good vnto thee.

Elizabeth.

I haue bene before my Lord Bishop, and before Maister Chauncellour three times, and haue declared my fayth.

Deane.

And yet I know that M. Chancellor will say, that thou art a ranke heretike.

Story.

Away with her.

Bish.

*M. Deane, ye knowe that I may not tary, nor you neither. Let her keeper bryng her home to your own chāber soone at foure a clocke at after noone, and if that ye find her reasonable, then let her goe, for I would that she were gone.

Then sayd the Deane, with a good will, my Lord: and so she was sent vnto the place from whence she came, vntill it was 4. of the clocke at afternoone.

¶The ix. examination before the Deane, before whom it pleased God to deliuer her.

*When it was 4. of the clock at afternoone, as y^e houre was appointed, & the Deane was set, he asked her: Art thou a foole now as thou wast to day?

Eliz.

Sir, I haue learned but small wisdomes since.

Deane.

Doest thou thynke that I am better learned then thou? *

Eliz.

Yes sir, that I do.

Deane.

Thinkest thou that I can do thee good?

Eliz.

Yea sir, and if it please God that ye will.

Deane.

Then I wyll doe thee good in deede. What doest thou receyue when thou receyuest the Sacrament which Christ left among his Disciples the night before hee was betrayed?

Eliz.

Sir, that that his Disciples did receiue.

Deane.

What did they receyue?

Eliz.

Sir, that that Christ gaue them, they receyued.

Deane.

What aunswere is this? Was Christ there present?

Eliz.

Sir, he was there present, for he instituted his owne sacrament.

Deane.

He tooke bread, and he brake it, and gaue it to hys disciples, and sayd: Take, eate, this is my body which shall bee broken for you. When thou receiuest it, doest thou beleeeue that thou receiuest his body?

Eliz

Sir, when I receiue, I beleeeue that through faith I do receiue Christ.

Deane.

Doest thou beleeeue that Christ is there?

Eliz.

Sir, I beleeeue that he is there to me,*_ and by fayth I do receyue hym.

Deane.

He also tooke the cup and gaue thanks, and gaue it to his Disciples, and sayd: Drinke ye all hereof. This is the cup of the new Testament in my bloude, which is shed for many for the remission of sinnes. When thou doest receiue it after the institution that Christ ordained among his Disciples, the night before he was betrayed, doest thou beleeeue that Christ is there?

Eliz.

Sir, by faith I beleeeue that he is there, and by fayth I do beleeeue that I do receiue hym.

Deane.

Now thou hast answered me. Remēber that thou sayest, that when thou doest receiue according to the institution of Christ, thou doest receiue Christ.

Eliz.

Sir, I beleeeue Christ not to be absent from his owne sacrament.

Deane.

How long wilt thou continue in that beliefe?

Eliz.

Sir, as long as I do lyue by the help of God: for it is and hath bene my beliefe.

Deane.

Wilt thou say this, before my Lord?

Eliz.

Yea sir.

Deane.

Then I dare deliuer thee. Why, thou Calfe, why wouldst thou not say so to day?

Eliz.

Sir, ye asked me no such question.

Deane.

Then ye would stande in disputation how manye bodies Christ had.

Eliz.

Sir, in deed that question ye did aske me.

Deane.

Who shall bee thy Sureties that thou wylte appeare before my Lorde of London and me, vpon Friday nexte?

Eliz.

Sir, I haue no Sureties, nor knowe not where to haue.

Then spake the Deane vnto two women that stoode there, who had earnestly sued for her, saying: women,* wil ye be her sureties that she shall appeare before my Lord of London and me, vpon Friday next.

The Women.

Yea sir, and it please you.

Deane.

Take heede that I finde you no more a brabler in the Scripture.

Eliz.

Sir, I am no brabler in the Scripture, nor yet any man can burthen me therewith.

Deane.

Yes, I haue hearde of you well enough what ye are.

Then sayde hee to the two Women: what if a man should touch your conscience, do ye not smell a little of heresie also?

The women.

No sir.

Deane.

Yes, a litle of the frying pan, or els wherefore haue ye twaine so earnestly sued for her?

The one woman aunswered, because that her children were lyke to perish, and therefore God put me in mynd to sue for her.

Then sayd the other woman: And I gate her chyld a Nurse, and I am threatened to stande to the keepyng of her chylde, and therefore it standeth me in hand for to sue to haue her out.

Deane.

Woman, geue thanks vnto these honest women who haue so earnestly sued for thee,* and I promise thee so haue I. These great heretikes will receiue nothyng but in spirit and fayth, and so he rose and departed.

Eliz.

Sir, God be prayسد, & I thanke you for your goodnes and theirs also, and so he went away: & vpon the fridday next because she was acrased, her two sureties wente thither and were discharged.

¶Elizabeth Lawson.

IN the towne of Bedfield, and in the countie of Suffolk,* was dwellyng a godly auncient Matrone named Elizabeth Lawson, about the age of lx. yeares. This Elizabeth was apprehended as an heretike, by the Constables of the same towne, named Robert Kitrich,* and Thomas Elas, in the yeare of our Lorde, 1556. because she woulde not go to Church to heare Masse, and receyue the Sacrament, and beleeeue in it.

Page 2071First they layd her in a dungeon, and after that shee was caried vnto Norwich, and from thence to Bury Gaole, where at last she was condemned to be burnt. In y^e mean tyme sir Iohn Sylliard had her home vnty hys house, hee beyng high Shiriffe that yere,* where she was hardly kept and wrapped in irons, till at length when they by no wise could mooue her co recant, shee was sent to prison agayne with shamefull reuilings.

Thus she continued in prison the space of two yeares and three quarters. In the meane tyme there was burnt her sonne and many other, whereby she would often say: Good Lord,* what is the cause that I may not yet come to thee with thy children? well, good Lord, thy blessed will be done, & not myne.

Not long after this, (most happily) followed y^e death of Queene Mary, after whom succeeded our Queene that now is. At which tyme this Elizabeth Lawson remained yet still in Bury prison, till at last she was bayled vppon sureties, or els she could not be deliuered. For she beyng a condemned person, neither the temporalty, nor yet spirituall authoritie would discharge her without sureties.

Now she beyng abroad, and her sureties made afrayd by wicked men, sayd, they would cast her againe in prison, except she would see them discharged.

Then she got a supplication, to go vnto the Queenes maiestie,* and came to a friend of hers to haue his counsail therein: who willed her to stay a while, because she was old, the dayes short, and the expenses great, and Winter fowle (for it was a little before Christmas) & to tary vntill Sommer. In the meane tyme God brake the bond, & shortened her iourney: for hee tooke her home to hymselfe out of this lyfe in peace.

This good old woman, long before she went to prison had the fallynge sicknesse,* and told a friend of hers, one Symon Harlston, after she was apprehended, that she had it neuer more, but liued in good health & ioy of hart, through her Lord Christ.

She had a very vnkinde man to her husbnde, who while shee was in prison, solde away her raimente, and would not helpe her, and after she was out of prison, shee returned home vnto him, yet would he shew her no kindnesse, nor helpe her neither: and yet the house & land that he dwelt in, he had by her, wherfore as long as she lyued, she was found of the congregation.

The said Elizabeth Lawson also had a sister, wyfe to one Rob. Hollon of Mickfield in the same countie of Suffolk, which likewise was persecuted and driuen out from house to house, & a yong man her sonne with her, because they would not go to the church to heare masse, & receyue the sacrament of the aaltar.

¶Thomas Christenmasse and William Wattes.

IN this perillous rage of Queene Maries raigne, were two men persecuted,* one called Tho. Christenmas, the other Wil. Wats of Tunbridge in Kent. As these trauailed from place to place, not resting two nights together in one place, it happened them on a tyme to come to Rochester in Kent, where as they entryng into the Towne, euē at the Townes ende met with a little Damosell of eyght yeares of age, but whether she went, they knewe not. It was then night, and they wery, and fayne therfore would haue lyen in the same town, but could not tell where, they feared so the bloody Catholickes. At last they deuised to aske the Damosell whether there were any heretikes in the towne, or no? and she said, yea. They asked her where. She aunswered them.* At such an Inne, tellyng them the name, and where the Inne was. Shortly after, as they were gone from her, they bethought themselues better, and God so moouyng their hartes, they went to the childe agayne, and asked her how she knew that the Innekeper (of whome shee spake before) was an heretike. Marrie (quoth she) well enough, and his wyfe also. How knowest thou, prety mayden, said they? I pray thee tel vs. How know I, sayd she? Marrie because they go to the church: and those that will not holde vp their handes there, they will present them, and hee hymselfe goeth from house to house, to compel them to come to Church. When these two men heard this, they gaue God prayse, and auoyded that house, takyng the warnyng of that Mayde (of good bringyng vp, as it should seeme) to be Gods maruelous prouidence towards them.

¶Another escape of William Wats.

THis foresayd William Wats, dwelling in Queen Maries dayes at Seale in Kent, the last yere of her raigne saue one, was apprehended by his enemies,* and brought by the Constables before the Bish. and Iustices at Tunbridge, where the B. and Iustices would haue perswaded hym all they coulde, to turne from the truth: howbeit in vayne, for they could not remooue him, although they spēt all the forenoone therabouts, with many flattring words: so mercifull was the Lord vnto hym.

Now, when dinner tyme was come, as they shoulde rise, they committed the prisoner to the constables againe, and so rose vp to go to diner. The Constables tooke Wats and led him to a vitailing house, where after they had wel filled themselues, they fel a sleepe, supposing their prisoner to be sure enough vnder their handes. Wats wife beyng then in the house with her husband, and very carefull for his well doying, seyng the Constables thus fast a sleep, desired her husband to depart and go thence, for so much as the Lord had made such away for hym. Unto which her words he would not consent, although she perswaded him all that she could.

At the last,* (they replieng one against an other) a sträger heard them, and asked her what the matter was, that shee was so earnest with her husbände. The wyfe tolde hym. Then sayde the straunger vnto Wats these words: Father, goe thy wayes in Gods name, and tary no longer: the Lorde hath opened the way vnto thee. Wherevpon the sayde Wattes went hys way, and his wyfe departed from hym, and went home to her house at Seale, thinkyng her husband had gone another way. Nowe as she was goyng in at her dore tellyng her friendes of hys deliuerance, immediately came the sayd Wattes in also, and they all beyng amased thereat, willed hym in all haste to get hym away, for they thought there would bee search for hym immediately.

Then Wats sayd, he would eate meate first, and also pray: which he did, and afterward departed thence.* So soone as he was out of the dores, and had hid hymselfe in an holly bush, immediately came the said constables with thirtie persons into the sayd house to search for him, where they pierced the Fetherbeds, broke vp hys Chestes, and made such hauocke, that it was wonderfull:* and euer among as they were searchyng, the Constables cryed: I will haue Wats, I will haue Wats I tel thee, I wil haue Wattes: but (God be thanked) Wats could not be found. And when they saw it booted not to search for hym, in the ende they tooke his wyfe, and set her in a payre of stockes where she remayned two dayes,* and she was very bolde in the truth, and at the last deliuered thorough the prouidence of God: whose name be glorified in all his workes, Amen.

Iohn Glouer of Manceter, Gentleman.

W^Hat a fatherly and manifest prouidence of the Lord likewyse did appeare in the preseruynge of M. Iohn Glouer in the Diocesse of Couentry and Lichfield,* in the Towne of Manceter: first at the takyng of Robert hys brother. At which tyme although the Commission came downe for hym, yet so God ordered the matter, that hys brother beyng sicke was apprehended, and yet hee beyng whole escaped, wherof mention is made before, pag. 1709.

And agayne, another tyme how miraculously the mercifull prouidence of the Lorde wrought his escape oute of his enemies handes, they beyng at his chamber dore, and drawyng the latch to search for hym: and how hys wyfe the same tyme was taken and sent to Lichfelde, read before, pag. 1714.

¶One Dabney.

T^Here was at London a certaine honest godly person, a Painter, named Dabney,* whom Iohn Auales in the tyme of Queene Mary had brought before Boner to bee examined for his fayth. It happened the same tyme. as the sayde Dabney was there, that the Bishop was occupied with examination of other, so that hee was bidde to stand by, and to wayte the Bishops laysure. Uppon the same, or not long after, sodainely commeth worde to the Bishop to prepare hym in all speede, the generall procession taried for hym. The Bishop hearyng that, setting all businesse aparte, bustleth hymselfe with all speede possible to the Churche, there to furnishe Procession. By reason whereof Dabney, which newly came to the house, was there left alone, while euery man els was busied in preparing and setting themselves forward, accordyng as the case required.

To bee short, as the tyme called on, Boner with hys houshold maketh hast so fast as they can out of the dores to Page 2072 the procession. Dabney beyng left alone, commeth downe to the outward Court next the gate, there walkyng with hymselfe all heauy, lookyng for nothing lesse then to escape that daunger. The Porter who was onely left at home, seeyng the man to walke alone,* supposing hee had bene some Citizen there left behynde, and waityng for openyng of the Gate, went and opened the wicket, askyng if hee would goe out. Yea sayd he, with a good wyll, if ye wyll let me out. With all my hart quoth the porter, and I pray you so do.

And thus the sayd Dabney taking the occasion offered of god, being let out by the porter, escaped out of y^e wolues mouth. The procession beyng done, when the B. returned home, Dabney was gone and could not be found. Wherevpon much search was made, but especially Ioh. Auales sayd much priuily waite for hym: who after long searching, when he could not get hym, at length he receyued fiftene crownes of his wyfe to let hym alone when he should see him, and so that good man escaped.

¶Alexander Wimshurst.

ALike example of God almighties goodnes toward his afflicted seruaunts in that daungerous tyme of persecution may also appeare evidently in one Alexāder Wimshurst a Priest,* sometye of Magdalene Colledge in Oxford, and then the Popes owne Knight, but since an earnest enemy to Antichrist, and a man better instructed in the true feare of God. It happened that one had promoted hym to Boner for religion, vppon what occasion I do not vnderstand. Accordyng to the olde maner in such cases prouided, he sent forth Robin Caly, otherwyse called Robin Papist, one of his Whelpes to bring in the game, and to cause this silly poore man to appere before him. Litle Robin lyke a proper man bestirreth hym in hys busines,* and smelleth hym out, and when he had gotten hym, bringeth hym along by Chepeside, not sufferyng hym to talke with any of his acquaintance by the way, though there were of his olde friendes of Oxford that offered to speake vnto hym.

When they came into Paules, it happened this Alexander to espy D. Chadsey there walkyng vp and downe. To whom, because he was able in such a case to doe pleasure, and for that he had bene of his olde acquaintance in Oxforde, he was very desirous to speake to hym ere hee went through. Chadsey perceiuyng that Robin Caly dyd attend vpon hym, sayd that he durst not meddle in y^e matter.* Yes (sayth litle Robin) you may talke with hym if it please you M. Doctor. To bee short, Alexander openeth his case, and in the ende desireth for old acquaintance sake that he would finde meanes he myght be rather brought before Doctor Martine to bee examined, then any other. Nay sayth he (alleggyng the wordes of Christ vnto Peter in the last chapter of Saint Ioh.) You remember brother what is written in the Gospell:*When thou wast yong thou diddest girde thy selfe, and wentest whether thou wouldest: but beyng aged, other men shall girde thee and leade thee whether thou wouldest not. Thus abusing the Scripture to hys priuate meanynge, whereas notwithstanding hee might easily haue accomplished so small a request if it had liked hym.

Thence was he caried to Story and Cooke Commissioners, there to learne what should become of hym. Before them he did vse hymselfe boldly & stoutly, as they on the other side did vrge him with captious questions very cruelly. When they had baited the poore man their fill, they asked hym where his whore was. She is not my whore (sayd he) but my lawful wife. She is thy whore, said they. She is not my whore (said he againe) but my wife I tell you. So whē they perceiued that he would not geue place vnto them, nor attribute to them so much as they looked for at his hand, accordyng to the ordinary maner they cōmaunded him to prison. And nowe marke well the prouidence of God in his preser••tion.

He was brought into Clunies house at Pater noster row, thence to be caried to Lollards tower out of hande, but that Cluny (as it happened) his wyfe and his mayde were so earnestly occupied about present busines, that as then they had not laisure to locke vp their prisoner. In the hall where Alexander sate, was a strange woman, whose husband was then presently in trouble for religiō, which perceiued by some one occasion or other, that this mā was brought in for the lyke cause. Alacke good man sayth she: if you will you may escape the cruel hands of your enemies,* forasmuch as they be all away that should looke vnto you, God hath opened the way vnto you of deliuerance, and therefore loose not the oportunitie thereof, if you bee wise. With those and such lyke wordes beyng then perswaded, he gate out of the dores and went away without any hast making at all: so that if any had followed, he might haue bene easily recouered againe. But vndoubtedly,* it was Gods will that he should so escape the furie of his aduersaries, and be preserued from all daungers of death & imprisonment.

¶Bosomes wyfe.

AS the workes of the Lord are not to bee kept secrete,* whatsoeuer the persones be in whom it pleaseth hym to worke: •o commeth to remembraunce the story of ore Bosoms wyfe not vnworthy to be considered. This good woman beyng at Richmond with her mother, was great|ly called vpō, and vrged to come to church. At length thorough importunate crying and calling vpon, she granted vnto them, and came. Beyng in the church, & sitting with her mother in the pue,* contrary in al things to the doings of the Papistes shee behaued her selfe: to wit, when they kneeled, she stood, when they turned forward, shee turned backward, &c.

This being notorious in the church,* at length y^e Constable and Churchwarden named Sanders, attached her in the Queenes name, charging her with her Mother, the next day to appeare at Kingston. Who at their commaundement so did.

The next day according as they were assigned, they came to Kingston to appeare before the foresayd officers, who at the same tyme (as it chanced) were going ouer the Fery, & meeting them by the way,* saluted them by their names, but at that tyme had no further power to speake vnto them. Afterward, as they were in the boat goyng ouer, they knockt their hands, stamp and stared, same •yng that they had let them so passe their hands. This the Feryman declared vnto them, and what they sayd in the boat. Whereupon the good woman taking her iourney to London, escaped their cruelty, through the secret working (no doubt) of the Lord: who in all his workes and euermore be prayesd, Amen.

¶Lady Kneuet in Northfolke.

AMong the number of the godly that were kept vnder the prouidence of the Lord in those perillous dayes,* I may not forget an auncient good Lady of much worship, called Lady Anne Kneuet, who till her death dwelte in Norfolke, in a towne named Wimon•ham vj. miles from Norwich. Which sayd good Lady in Queen Maries days beyng iudged by the common people, more then an hundreth yeare of age, and by her owne estimation well towards a C. kept her selfe from their popish church, or hauyng any papisticall trash ministred in her house, but only the seruice that was vsed in the latter dayes of K. Edward the 6. which daily she had sayd before her, either by one M. Tollin who was then by Gods prouidence preserued in her house, or els by one of her Gentlewomen or houshold seruant that could serue the place in the sayd M. Tollins absence.

Now this worshipfull Lady continuing in this maner of true seruynge of God,* she and her familie were many tymes threatened by messengers, that the Bish. would visite her therfore. Unto which messengers she would always answer, that if his Lordship sent word before what day he would come, he should thereafter be entertained at her hand. But God, whose prouidence ruleth the ragyng seas, neuer suffred them al that toyling tyme to molest her. Although oftentimes whē she had seruice before her, there were very great enemies to the truth and of much authoritie, that came in, and kneled to prayer among them, and yet had no power to trouble her therfore.

This good Lady (gentle Reader) kept good hospitalitie▪ as any in that countrey, of her liuyng. She also succored many persecuted that came to her house in the said M. Maries dayes. Were they neuer so simple, they were esteined of her as the frends of y^e gospel, and departed not frō her without money and meat.* Borne she was long before K. Edward the 4. dyed, and ended her life in the Lord Iesus peace, about the beginning of the 2. yeare of our most soueraigne Lady Queene Elizabeths raigne, as one falllyng into a most sweete sleepe.

Unto whom not vnworthely may bee compared the Lady Elizabeth Uane,* who likewyse beyng a great harborer and supporter of the afflicted Martyrs and Confessors of Christ, was in great •assards & daungers of the enemies, and yet notwithstanding, thorough the mercifull prouidence of the Lord, remained still vntouched. Of this Lady Uane thou shalt read before.

¶Iohn Daus, of the age of twelue yeares and vnder.

AN Dom. 1546. and the last yeare of King Henry the 8. Iohn Daus,* a child of xij. yeares & vnder, who dwellyng in the house of M. Iohnson Apothecarie, in y^e toune of Worcester, his vncle, vsing sometymes to read of the testament and other good English bookes, was complained of by Alice Iohnson his maistresse, which Alice beyng an obstinate person, consulted with one Tho. Parton, & one Alice, wyfe to Nich. Brooke Organemaker, with certaine of the Canons, and M. Iohnson Chancellor to D. Heath their Bish. The meanes wherby he was entrapped, was wrought by the foresayd Alice Brooke, who procured Olyuer her sonne, schoolefellow with the sayd Iohn Daus, to faine friendship with hym, and vnder pretence to be instructed, to see his English bookes, and especially to gette some thyng of his writyng against the vj. Articles. Which beyng had, was soone brought to the Canons of y^e church, and the Chauncellor. Wherupon, Tho. Parton, whether beyng sent, or of his owne mynd, came to apprehend him, and his Uncle was forced agaynst his will, to bynde the poore boyes armes behynd him: and so hee was brought to the Officers of the towne, where he lay from the 14. of August, till the last of September. Then was he commāded to the Free mans prison, where one Rich. Howborough commyng to perswade him from burnyng, willed hym to prooue first with a candle, who then holdyng hys finger, and the other the candle vnder it a good space, yet (as the partie hymselfe to me assureth) felte no burnyng therof, neither would the other that held the candle beleue hym a great while, til he had looked, and saw no skorching of the candle at all appeared.

Then was the child remooued from thence to an inner prison called Peepehole, where the lowe Bailiffe called Rob. Yould, layd vpon hym a paire of bolts, so y^t he could not lift vp his small legs, but leanyng on a staffe, slipt thē forward vpon the ground, the coldnesse of which irons, he feeleth yet in his ankles, and shall so long as he lyueth, with these bolts, his lying was vpon the cold ground, hauyng not one locke of strawe, nor cloth to couer him, saue onely two sheepe skins, neither durst father nor mother, or any of his friends come at hym. Besides this and many great threatates of the papists, there was a mad man put to hym in the prison, with a knife about hym, wherewyth he oft tymes in his frantike rage, profered to thrust hym in.

After this came to him one Iolyfe, and N. Yewer, two Canons, which had his writings against the sixe Articles, and his Ballet called Come downe for all your shauen crowne: to see whether he would stād to that he had writen. Which done, with many great raging wordes, not long after sate M. Iohnson the Chancellour in the Guild hall vpon the poore lad. Where first were brought in hys accusers and sworne, then were sworn also 24. men which went on his Quest, and found hym guiltie, but hee neuer came before the Chancellor. Upon this he was sent to the common Gaole among thieues and murtherers, there to tary the commyng of the iudges, and so to be had straight to execution. But the mighty mercy of the Lord, who helpeth the desolate & miserable when all other helpe is past, so prouided for this silly condemned lad, that the purpose of all his hard harted enemies was disappointed. For before the Iudges came, God tooke away Henry the 8. out of this lyfe. By reason whereof, the force of the lawe was then staied, howbeit, he was neuerthelesse arraigned, beyng holden vp in a mans armes at the Barre before the Iudges, who were Portman and Maruen. Which when they perceiued that they could not burne him, would haue hym presently whipped. But M. Iohn Bourne Esquire declared to the Iudges how hee had whipping enough. After that hee had lyen a weeke more in prison, had hym home to hys house, his wyfe annoynted his legs her selfe with ointment, which then were stiffe and nummed with irons, till at length when M. Bourne and his wyfe sawe they could not winne hym to the beliefe of their Sacrament, they put him away, least he should infect their sonne Anthony as they thought with heresie.

Thus Iohn Daus of the age aforesayde, in what damage he was for the Gospell ye see, and howe the Lorde preserued hym, ye vnderstand. He endured in prisone from the 14. day of August, till within seuen dayes of Easter, who is yet alyue, and a profitable Minister this day in the Church of England: Blessed bee the Lord, qui facit mirabilia solus.

¶Maistresse Roberts.*

FUrthermore to both these may also be associate another Gentlewoman to make the third, named maistres Robertes, yet liuyng and dwellyng (as I vnderstand) in the towne of Haukehurst in Sussex. She beyng earnestly addicted to the truth of Christes Gospell, and no lesse constaunt in that whiche shee had learned therein, so kepte her selfe duryng all the brunte of Queene Maries tyme, that she neuer came to their popish seruice, nor would pollute her conscience with hearyng their Idolatrous masse. There dwelt the same tyme not farre of, a Iustice called sir Iohn Gilford, who beyng as feruent on the contrary side, to set forward the proceedyngs of Q. Mary, thought to prooue masteries with this Gentlewoman, in forcyng her to the Church. And first sendyng his wyfe, he attempted her by faire wordes and gentle perswasions to conforme herselfe to the Princes lawes, and to come as other christian people did, to the Church. Notwithstanding, she constantly persisting in the sinceritie of the truth, woulde by no perswasions be won to do therein against her conscience: and so kept at home a certayne space, till agayne the second tyme, Maister Gilford thinkyng not to geue her ouer so, sent his Officers and seruauntes to her, by force ond power to hale her out of her house to the church, and so dyd. Where by the way she for grieve of conscience swounded, and so of necessitie was brought home againe, and fallyng into an Ague, was for that tyme dispensed withall.

The third tyme yet the vnquiete spirite of M. Gilford beyng not content, after the tyme that she recouered helth againe, would needes come his owne person to compell her, wild she, nild she, to come to Church. But (as y^e Prouerbe goeth) who can let that God would haue done? For when M. Gilford had purposed as pleased hym, the Lord so disposed for his seruaunt,* that as the sayde M. Gilford was commyng vp the staires toward her chamber, sodainly hys olde disease the Goute so tooke hym and terribly tormented hym, that he could goe no further: And so he that purposed to cary her to the church against •er wil, was fayne hymselfe to be caried home to his house to hys payne, protestyng and swearyng that hee woulde neuer from henceforth trouble that Gentlewoman more, and no more he dyd.

¶Maistresse Anne Lacie.

IN this number of good Gentlewomen beyng in trouble and danger for Gods word,* is not to be omitted the memory of one maistresse Anne Lacie widowe in Notinghā|shire, who was in great danger in Queene Maries time in so much that the processe was forth against her, and she ready to haue bene apprehended, beyng so neerely pursued, that she was driuen to hide her Bible and other bookes in a dunghill. M. Lacy her brother was then Iustice of peace: but to whom (as I haue heard) she was but smally beholden. Neuertheles where kindred faileth, yet gods grace neuer fayleth such as sticke to hym: for in this mean tyme, as the processe came out against her, Queene Mary dyed, and so she escaped.

¶Crosmans wyfe.

ONe Crosmans wyfe of Tibnam longrowe in Norfolke,* in Queen Maries tyme for not going to church was sought for at her house by one Barbour of the sayde towne, then Constable of the hundreth: who whē he came to her house, shee beyng at home with a childe sucking in her armes, stept into a corner on the one side of the chimney, and they seeking the chambers, the child neuer cryed, (although before they came it did) as long as they were there, & so by this meanes the Lord preserued her.

The congregation at Stoke in Suffolke.

There were some likewise which auoyded the violent rage of the aduersaries by meanes onely of their number,* and mutuall concord in godlinesse, wherein they dyd so holde together that without muche adoe none well could be troubled: whereof we haue example in a certain towne of Suffolke called Stoke. After the three sharpe yeares of Queene Maries persecution beyng past, yet notwithstanding the inhabitantes of the towne aforesaid specially the women, came not to their Church to receyue after the Popish maner, the Sacrament. Who, if they had bene but fewe, they could by no meanes haue escaped imprisonment. But because there were so many, the Papists thought it not best to lay handes vpon them. Onely they Page 2074 appoynted them 16. dayes respite after Easter, wherein as many as would, should receiue the Sacrament: those that would not, should stand to the peril that would folow. Of this company which were many, geuing theyr handes together, the chieft doers were these.

- Eaue, an old woman of three score yeares.
- Alice Coker her daughter.
- *Elizabeth Foxe.
- Agnes Cutting.
- Alice Spenser.
- Henry Cauker.
- Ioane Fouke.
- Agnes Spaulding.
- Iohn Steyre, and hys brother.
- Iohn Foxe.

These, after the order was taken for theyr not comming to the Church, tooke aduise ment among themselues what was best to be done, and at length concluded by promise one to another, that they woulde not receiue at all. Yet some of them afterwarde being perswaded with fayre promises that the Communion should be ministred vnto them according to Kyng Edwardes booke, gat them vnto the parish Priest (whose name was Cotes) and asked him after whiche sort he woulde minister the Sacrament.* He aunswered to such as he fauoured, that he woulde geue it a•ter the right sort: the rest should haue it after the papisticall maner.

To be short, none did communicate so, but onely Iohn Steyre and Iohn Foxe:* of whiche the one gaue his Wyfe leaue to do as she thought best. The other wēt about with threatens to compell his wife, saying that otherwise hee would diuorce himselfe from her. As for the rest, they dyd withdraw themselues from church, resorting to their wōted company. Onely Foxes wife taried still at home, all in her dumps and heauines, whose husband practised wyth the Curate in the meane time, that the nexte daye after he shoulde geue her the sacrament, whiche was the xvij. daye after Easter. But the very same day, vnknowing vnto her husband, she gat her selfe secretly to her companye, & with teares declared how violently her husband had delt wyth her.* The other women had her notwithstanding to be of a good cheare, and sayde that they woulde make theyr earnest prayers vnto the Lord, both for her and her husband, and in deed when they had so done, the matter tooke verie good successe. For the next day after, goodman Foxe came of his owne accorde vnto them, a farre other man then hee was before, and bewayled his owne headines and rashnesse, praying thē that they would forgeue him, promising euer after to be more strong in fayth, to the great reioysing both of them and his wife.

About halfe a yeare after this, the Bishop of Norwich sendeth forth certaine of his Officers or Apparatours thither, which gaue them warning euery one to come to the Church the next Sunday following. If they would not come,* they shoulde appeare before the Commissary out of hand, to render account of theyr absence. But the women hauing secret knowledge of this before, kept themselves out of the way for the nonce, to auoyd the sūmons or warning. Therefore when they were not at the Church at the day appoynted, the Commissary did first suspend them according to the Bishop of Romes lawe, and within three weekes after did excommunicate them.* Therefore when they perceiued that an Officer of the Towne was sette to take some of them, they conueying themselves priuily out of the towne, escaped all daunger.

¶The Congregation in London.

*NO lesse maruellous was the preseruacion of the congregation in London, which from the first beginning of Queene Mary, to the latter end thereof, continued notwithstanding whatsoever the malice, deuise, searching and inquisition of men, or streitnes of lawes could work to the contrary. Such was the mercifull hand of the Lord, according to his accustomed goodnes, euer working with hys people. Of this great bountifull goodnes of the Lord, many and great examples appered in the congregation whiche now I speake of. How oft, and in what great daūgers did he deliuer them?

*First at the Blacke Friers, when they should haue resorted to Syr Thomas Cardens house, priuy watch was layd for them, but yet through the Lordes vigilant prouidence the mischief was preuented, and they deliuered.

Agayne howe narrowly did they escape about Algate, where spies were layd for them,* & had not Thomas Simson the Deacō espied them, and bid them disperse thēselues away, they had bene taken. For within two houres the Constable comming to the house after they were gone, demaunded of the wife what company had bene there. To whom she to excuse the matter, made aunswere agayne: saying that halfe a dosen good fellowes had bene there at breakefast, as they went a maying.

An other time also about the great conduit, they passing there through a very strait Alley, into a Cloth workers loft, were espied, and the Sheriffes sent for but before they came, they hauing priuy knowledge thereof immediatly shifted away out of the Alley,* Iohn Auales standing alone in the Mercers Chappell staring at them.

An other like escape they made in a ship at Billingsgate belonging to a certayne good man of Ley, where in the open sight of the people they were congregated together, & yet through Gods mighty power escaped.

Betwixt Ratcliffe and Redriffe, in a ship, called Iesus Ship, twise or thrise they assembled hauing there closely,* after theyr accustomed maner, both Sermon, prayer & cōmunion, and yet through the protection of the Lorde they returned, although not vnspied, yet vntaken.

Moreouer in a Coopers house in Pudding Lane, so neare they were to perill and daungers, that Iohn Auales comming into the house where they were,* talked with the good man of the house, and after he had asked a question or two, departed, God so working that either he had no knowledge of them, or no power to apprehend them.

But they neuer escaped more hardly, thē once in Thames street in the night time,* where the house being besette with enemies, yet as the Lord would, they were deliuered by the meanes of a Mariner, who being at that present in the same cōpany, and seing no other way to auoyd, pluckt of his slops, and swam to the next boate, and so rowed the company ouer, vsing his shooes in steed of owres, & so the ieopardy was dispatched.

I haue heard of one who being sent to thē to take their names, and to espy theyr doinges, yet in being amongst them was conuerted and cryed them all mercy.

What should I speak of the extreame and present daūger whiche that Godly companye was in at the taking of maister Rough theyr minister,* and Cutbert Simson their Deacon, had not the Lords prouidence geuen knowledge before to maister Rough in his sleepe that Cutbert should leaue behinde him at home the booke of all theyr names, which he was wont to cary about him? whereof mention is made before. pag. 2034.

In this Church or congregation were sometyme xl. sometymes an hundred, sometimes two hundred, sometymes mo, and sometymes lesse. About the latter tyme of Queene Mary, it greatly increased. From the first beginnyng, which was about the first entry of Queen Maries reigne, they had diuers ministers, first M. Scamler, then Thom. Fowle, after him M. Rough,* then M. Augustine Bernher, and last M. Bentham. Concerning the deliuerance of which M. Bentham (beyng now B. of Couentry and Lichfield) Gods mighty prouidence most notably is to be considered. For how is it possible by mans estimation, for the sayd M. Bentham to haue escaped, had not the present power of the Lord, passing all mens expectation, bene prest and redy to helpe his seruaunt in such a straite. The story and case is this.

At what tyme the vij. last burned in Smithfield,* mentioned in this booke before, pag. 2039. were condemned & brought to the stake to suffer, came downe in the name of the king and Queene a proclamation, beyng twise pronounced openly to the people, first at Newgate,* then at the stake where they should suffer, straightly charging and commanding, that no man should either pray for them, or speake to them, or once say God helpe them.

It was appointed before of the godly there standyng together, which was a great multitude, that so soone as the prisoners should be brought, they should goe to them to embrace and to comfort them, and so they did. For as the sayd Martyrs were comming toward the place in the peoples sighte, beyng brought with bils & glaues (as the custome is) the godly multitude and Congregation with a generall sway made toward the prisoners, in such maner, that the byllmē and the other officers beyng all thrust backe, could nothyng do, nor any thing come nigh.* So the godly people meetyng and embracing, and kissing them, brought them in their armes (which might as easily haue conueied them cleane away) vnto the place where they should suffer.

This done, and the people geuyng place to the Officers, the proclamation with a loud voyce was read to the people, containyng (as is before sayd) in the K. & Queens name, that no man should pray for them, or once speake a word vnto them. &c. Maister Bentham, the minister then of the congregation, not sparyng for that,* but as zeale and Christian charitie moued hym, and seeyng the fire set to them, turnyng his eyes to the people, cried and sayd: We Page 2075 know they are the people of God, and therefore we cannot choose but wish well to them, and say: God strengthen thē: And so boldly he sayde: Almighty God for Christes sake strengthen them.* With that, all the people with a whole consent and one voice folowed and sayd: Amen, Amē. The noyse whereof was so great, and the criers thereof so many, that the Officers could not tell what to say: nor whom to accuse. And thus much concerning the congregation of the faythfull, assembling together at London in the time of Queene Mary.

The said M. Bentham an other time, as he passed thorow S. Katherines,* intending to walke and take the ayre abroad, was enforced by two or three men, approching vpon him, needes to go with them to a place whether they would lead him. M. Bētham astonied at the sodeinnes of the matter, and maruelling what the thing shoulde be, required what theyr purpose was, or whether they woulde haue him. They aunswered, that by the occasion of a man there found drowned, the Crowners quest was called and charged to sit vpon him, of the whiche quest he must of necessity be one. &c. He agayne, loth to medle in the matter, excused himselfe, alledging that in such kind of matters he had no skill, and lesse experience: if it would please them to let him goe, they should meete with other more meete for theyr purpose. But when with this they would not be satisfied, he alledged further, that he was a scholer of Oxford, and thereby was priuiledged from being of any inquest. The Crowner demaunded the sight of his priuiledge.* He sayd, if he woulde geue him leaue, he would fetch it. Then sayd the Crowner: the queene must be serued without all delay, & so cōstrayned him notwithstanding to be with thē in hearing the matter.

Beyng brought to the house where the Crowner and the rest of the quest were sitting, as the maner is, a booke was offered him to sweare vpon.* M. Bentham opening the booke, and seing it was a papisticall Primer, refused to sweare thereupon▪ and declared moreouer what superstition in that booke was contained. What, sayde the Crowner? I thinke we shall haue here an hereticke among vs. And vpon that, after much reasoning amongst them, he was committed to the custody of an officer till further examination: by occasion wherof, to all mens reason, hard it had bene and ineuitable for M. Bentham to haue escaped, had not the Lord helped where man was not able. What folowed? Incontinent as they were thus contending and debating about matters of heresye,* sodeynly commeth the Crowner of the Admiralty, disanulling and repealing the order & calling of that inquest, for that it was (as he sayde) perteyning to his office, and therefore the other Crowner and his company in that place had nothing to do: And so the first Crowner was discharged and displaced: by reasō whereof M. Bentham escaped theyr handes, hauing no more sayd vnto him.

English men preserued at the taking of Calice.

The worthy workes of the Lordes mercy toward hys people be manifolde and can not be comprehended,* so that who is he liuing in the earth almost who hath not experienced the helping hand of the Lord, at some time or other vpon him? Amōgst many other, what a piece of gods tender prouidence was shewed of late vpon our English brethren and country men, what time Calice was takē by the Tyrant Guise, a cruell enemy both to Gods truth and to our English nation? And yet by the gracious prouision of the Lorde, few or none at all, of so many that fauoured Christ and his Gospell, in that terryble spoyle miscaried. In the number of whome there was a godly couple, one Iohn Thorpe and his wife,* which feared the Lord, and loued his trueth, who being sicke the same time, and cast out into the wild fieldes, harbourles, desolate, and despayring of all hope of life, hauing theyr young infant moreouer taken from them in the sayd fieldes, and caried awaye of the souldiors: yet the Lord so wrought, that the poore woman being almost past recouery of life, was fet and caried, the space welnigh of a mile, by straungers whome they neuer knewe, into a village, where both shee was recouered for that night, & also the next day comming toward England, they chaunced into the same Inne at the next town, where they found theyr young child sitting by the fire side.

¶Edward Benet.

ONe Edw. Benet about the second yeare of the reigne of Q. Mary, then dwelling at Quenehieth with one Grynocke a Baker, was desired of one Tyngle prisoner then in Newgate, to bring him a new testament, He procuring one of M. Couerdals translatiō, wrapt it in a handkerchiefe, saying to George the keeper whiche asked hym what he had, that it was a piece of pondred biefe. Let mee see it, sayd he. Perceiuing what it was, he brought him to Syr Roger Cholmley, who examined him why he did so, saying that booke was not lawfull, & so committed him to the Counter in woodstreet, wher he continued 25. weekes.

Doctor Story comming to the prison to examine other Prisoners, this Benet looking out at the grate, spake to him, desiring him to be good vnto him, and to helpe hym out, for he had lien long in prison. To whom D. Story thē aunswering: What, sayd he, wast not thou before me in Christes Church? Yes forsooth, sayd Benet. Ah, sayd Story, thou doest not beleue in the Sacrament of the Aultar. Mary I will helpe thee out: come, sayd he to the keeper, turne him out, I will helpe him: and so tooke Benet wyth him and brought him to Cluney in Pater noster Row, and bade him bring him to the Colehouse, and there he was in the stockes a weeke.

Then the Bishoppe sent for him to talke with him, and first asked him if he were shriuen? No, sayd Benet. He asked him if he would be shriuen? No, sayd he. Then he asked him if the Priest could take away his sinnes? No, sayd Benet, I do not so beleue. Then he and Harpsfielde laughed at him and mocked him, asking him if he did not beleue that what so euer the Prieste here bounde in earth, should be bound in heauen: and what so euer he loosed in earth, shoulde be loosed in heauen? No, quoth Benet: But I beleue that the Minister of God preaching Gods word truely, and ministring the Sacramentes accordyng to the same, whatsoeuer he bindeth in earth, shalbe bound in heauen, and what so euer he looseth. &c. Then the Bishop putting him aside, sayd, he should go to Fulham and be whipped.

Then came to him M. Buswell a Pries•, lying in the Colehouse in the stockes, and brought Cranmers recantation, saying that he had recanted. My fayth, sayth the other, lyeth in no mans booke but in him which hath redeemed me. The next saterday, Benet with fiue other was cal^dled for to come to masse, into the Chappell. The Masse being done and they comming out,* fiue of thē went to prison and were after burned. Benet being behind and comming toward the gate, the porter opening to a company goyng out, asked if there were no prisoners there. No, sayd they. Benet standing in open sight before him, with other seruing men whiche were there by reason that Boner made many priestes that day (hauing one of his sleues and halfe the fore part of his coat burned of in prisō, being more like a prisoner then any of the other) when the gate was opened, went out amongst them, and so escaped.*

Agayne, in the last yeare of Queene Mary, the same Benet being taken againe with the 24. beyond Islington, and brought to Syr Roger Cholmleys, the people comming very thicke did cut of some of them, to the number of 8. which were behinde, among whom was Benet.* Then he knocking at the gate to come in, the Porter sayd, that he was none of the company. He sayde yes, and knocked agayne. Thē there stood one by of the congregation, named Iohnson, dwelling now at Hamersmith, which sayd: Edward, thou hast done well, do not tempt God, go thy way. And so taking the warning as sent of God, with a quyet conscience eschued burning.

¶Jeffrey Hurst brother in law to George Marsh the Martyr.

IN the Towne of Shakerley in Lancashyre dwelled one Ieffrey Hurst the sonne of an honest yeoman,* who had besides him 11. children, the sayd Ieffrey being the xij. and eldest of the rest: and for that theyr father being willyng to bring them vp, so that they should be able another day to helpe themselues, he did binde this Ieffrey prentise vnto the craft of nayling, to make all kinde of nayles: which occupation he learned and serued out the time of 7. yeaes. The which yeres being expired, he gaue himselfe at times to learne of his other Brethren which went to schole: and as he was very willing to the same, so GOD sent hym knowledge wherein he did perseuer and go forwardes, in such sort that he could write and read indifferently, and in longer continuaunce came by more knowledge, and so hauing the Bible and diuers other bookes in his house, dyd come by pre•ye knowledge in the Scripture.* After this he tooke vnto him a wife being the Sister of Maister George Marsh, of whose Martyrdome mention is made before pag. 1484. and being much familiar with him, did mend his knowledge not a little. Now whē queene Mary was entred, the first yeare of her reigne he kept himselfe awaye from their doings & came not at the church: Wherupon he Page 2082 was layd in wayt for, and called hereticke, and Lollard, & so for feare of further daunger, he was compelled to leaue his wife and his child, and all, and fled into Yorkeshyre, & there beyng not knowne did lead his life,* returning sometimes by night to his house to comfort his wife, and bringing with him some preacher or other, who vsed to preach vnto them so long as the time would serue, and so departed by night agayne. The names of the Preachers were: M. Reneses, M. Best, M. Brodbanke, M. Russell, & euery time they came thither they were about 20. or 24. sometimes, but 16. at least, who had there also somtimes a Cōmuniō. And thus in much feare did he with other lead his life, till the last yeare of the reigne of Queene Mary. Thē it chaunced that the sayde Ieffrey Hurst, after the death of his father, came home, and kept himself close for vij. or viij. weekes.

There dwelt not farre of at Morlesse, a certayne Iustice of peace and of quorum, named M. Thomas Lelond, who hearing of him, appoynted a time to come to hys Fathers house where he then dwelt, to rifle the house for bookes, and to search for him also, and so did. Ieffrey and hys company hauing knowledge of his comming, tooke the books which were in the house, as the Bible, the Communion booke, the new testament of Tindals translation, and diuers others, and threw them all vnderneath a tubbe or •at, conueying also the sayd Ieffrey vnder the same, with a greate deale of strawe vnderneath him: for as it chaunced they had the more time, because that whē the Iustice came almoste to the doore, he stayed and woulde not enter the house till he had sent for Hurstes mothers Landlady: M. Shakerley, and then with her consent to go forwards. In the meane time, Ieffrey by such as were with him, was willed to lay in his window the testamēt of Tindals trāslation, and a litle booke conteneing the third part of the bible, with y^e booke of Ecclesiasticus, to try what they would say vnto them.

This done, Mistres Shakerley came. Unto whō eftsoones the Iustice declareth the cause of his comming and how he was sory to attempt any such thing agaynst any of her tenauntes for her sake, but notwithstanding he muste needes execute his office. And agayne you must (sayde he) note this, that a skabbed sheepe is able to infect a great nūber: and especially hauing, as he hath, so many brethren, & sisters, he is able to marre them all, if he be not looked vnto in time. And thus concluding, M. Lelond entred into the house,* & being come in, set himselfe in a chayre in the middle of the house, and sending Syr Rafe Parkinson his Priest, and one of his men, and one of Mistres Shakerleys men about the house, to searche and rifle the chestes for bookes (whiche so did) in the meane time he talked with Hurstes mother, being of the age almost of lx. yeares: And chiding with her that she would suffer her sonne so to order and be haue himselfe like an heretick, said: thou olde foole I know my selfe that this new learning shall come agayne: but for how long? euen for three moneths or foure monethes and no longer. But I will lay thee olde foole in Lancaster dūgeon for this geare, and well worthy.

Now as concerning the searchers, they fōūd nothyng but latin books, as Grammer, and such like. These be not they that we looke for (sayde they) we must see further, and so looked into Hurstes chamber where they found the foresayd books. Then syr Rafe taking vp the testament, looked on it, and smiled. His Mayster seing that, sayd: nowe Syr Rafe, what haue we there? Forsooth, sayth he, a testament of Tindals translation, plaine heresy, and none worse then it. Then is all theyr goodes, sayth he, lost to the Queene & theyr bodyes to prison, and was wonderfully hasty: notwithstanding through Mistres Shakerley, for a space hee was content to see farther.

Then the Priest looked on the other booke: What saye ye to that Syr Rafe, is that as euill as the other? No sayde he, but it is not good that they should haue such Englishe Bookes to looke on: for this and suche others, maye doe much harme. Then he asked the Mother where her eldest sonne was, and her daughter Alyce? She aunswered she could not tell: they were not with her of long time before. And he swore by Gods bodye, hee woulde make her tell where they were, or he would lay her in Lancaster Dungeon, and yet he would haue them, notwithstanding too, To be shorte,* for feare he hadde hys Brother Iohn Hurst and hys Mother bounde in an hundreth pounce to bring the parties before him within xiiij. dayes, and so departed he, and the Priest put both the bookes in his bosome, and caryed them away with him. Then Iohn Hurst went after them, desiring that he mighte haue the booke which the Priest found no fault with: but he (sayd they) should aunswere to them both, and which so euer was the better, was not good.

As this past on, when the time was come that Ieffrey Hurst and his sister shoulde be examined, the Iustice sent for them betimes in the morning,* & had prepared a masse to beginne withall, asking Ieffrey Hurst if he would first go and see his maker, and thē he would talke further with him. To whom then Ieffrey answered and sayd:* Syr my Maker is in heauen, and I am assured in goyng to your Masse I shall finde no edification thereby, and therefore I pray you hold me excused.

Well, well, sayd he, I perceiue I shall finde you an hereticke, by God: but I will go to Masse, & I will not lose it for all your pratling. Then into his Chappell he went,* and when masse was done, he sent for them, and caused his Priest to read a scrole vnto them as concerning the 7. Sacraments, & euer as he spake of the body & bloud of Christ, he put of his cappe, and sayd: loe ye may see:* you will deny these thinges and care not for your Prince: but you shall feele it ere I haue done with you, & all the faculty of you, with other talke more betwene them, I know not what: but in the end they were licensed to depart vnder suretyes to appeare agayne before him within 3. weekes,* and then to go to Lancaster. Howbeit in the meane while it so pleased God, that within foure dayes of the day appoynted, it was noysed that the Queene was deade, and within xiiij. dayes after, the sayd Ieffrey Hurst fet home his 2. bookes, and nothing was sayd vnto him.*

It folowed after this that Gods word begon to take place, and the Queenes visitors came down into that coūtry, who did choose foure men in the parish: to wit, Simōd Smith, Ieffrey Hurst, Henry Browne, George Eccersly,* which foure were Protestantes, to see the Queenes procedinges to take place: which according to theyr power dyd the same, notwithstanding it did little preuayle: & therfore the sayd Ieffrey being sore greued with the office, fell sick, in which sickenes it pleased God to call him, making a very godly end, God haue the prayse for it.

Nowe to returne to the foresayde Thomas Lelond agayne, he continuing in his office still,* did very few tymes come to the Church, but sayd he was aged and might not labor, and there kept with him Syr Rafe Parkinson hys Priest, which could (as it was said) minister the Communion vnto the people, and sing Masse to his mayster: Yea and (as the fame reported) did a pretyer feate then all that: for he begat two children by a seruant in a house, his mayster knowing it, and saying nothing, for that he would not lose his good masse Priest.

Furthermore, this was noted in the same Iustice Lelondes behauiour at seruice tyme, that he had a little dog which he would play with, all seruice time, and the same Dogge had a coller full of Bels,* so that the noyse of them did molest and trouble others as well as himselfe, from hearing the seruice. Also in the same Iustice it was noted & obserued, that as he sate in his Chappell at seruice time, his maner was on a willow barke to knitte knottes, for that he could not be suffered to haue his beades, and to put the same vpō a string also. Witnes hereof Edward Hurst, with others.

Furthermore, as concerning Henry Browne one of the 4. chosen men aboue mencioned,* this is also to be added, that the sayd Henry Browne dwelling in the towne of Pinington in the same Parish an. 1564. had a litle boy, who as he was playing in the Towe, one Glaues wyfe gaue vnto the boye a payre of Beades made of woode, to play him withall. The little boy being glad therof to haue suche a trim thing, went home & shewed his father of thē. His Father seing the Beades, tooke them and burned thē, and when he had so done, went forth and asked who had geuen vnto his litle boy that payre of Beades.

That did I, sayd Glaues wife.*

Well sayd he, I haue burned them.

Hast thou so, sayd she? and thrust him from her. They shalbe the dearest Beades that euer thou sawest, & incōtinent went & cōplayned vnto the said Iustice, how Brown had burned her beades.

This matter the Iustice tooke sore to snuffe,* and was very angry, and did direct his letter vnto the constables of the same Towne, by his owne hand subscribed: the title of which superscription on the backside was this: To the Cōstables of Pinington geue this.

This done the Constables according to this their charge did bring him afore the Iustice at tyme appointed,* and when the Iustice came to talke with him, he was in suche a chafe, that he called him theefe, and sayde that he had robbed his neighbour in burning of her beades, and that there was ringes and other Iuels on them, and that he might as well haue picked her purse: wherefore I will lay thee (sayd he) in Lancaster for this geare.

Whilest they were thus talking, there came all hys Page 2077 seruauntes about them from theyr worke, saying: is thys M. Doctor Browne that will burne Beades? I pray you Syr, let vs haue him here and preach. I will geue a quarters wages,* sayth one: and I will geue mony sayth an other, and he shall be mayster Doctour: with much derision and scoffing at this poore man.

He hearing this, spake agayn boldly, and sayd: did you send for me to make a laughing stocke of me? You be in office, and ought rather to come to the Church, and see suche Papistry abolished your selfe, then thus to trouble me for doyng my duety: but I tell you playnely, you do not come to Church as you ought to doe, and wherefore with more thinges that I haue to charge you withall, I say you doe not well. When all this misdemeanour of the Iustice layd to his charge, woulde not preuayle, and also witnes came in of the Papistes, which did know the Beades, & testified that they were playne & cost but a halfepeny, he then went into his Parlor in a chafe, and one M. Erberston a papist with him.* Which Erberston turned backe and sayd: is it you Henry Browne, that keepeth this styrr? you are one of them that pulled downe Crosses in the church, and pulled downe the Roode seller, and all the Sayntes: you were best now to goe paynt a blacke Deuill, and set him vp and worship him, for that will serue well for your religiō. And thus vnder suretiship he did depart til Iuly folowing and then he sayd he should go to Lancaster prison,* and so came he away.

The time drew on that he should appeare, but GOD stayed the matter, and in Iuly, as the foresayde Thomas Lelond sate in his chaire talking with his friendes, he fell downe sodeinly dead,* not much mouing any ioynt: And thus was his end: from such God vs defend.

¶William Wood of Kent.

The examination of William Woode Baker, dwelling in the Parish of Strowd, in the County of Kent, before Doctor Kenall Chauncellour of the Dioces of Rochester,* Doctor Chadsey, the Maior of Rocher, and M. Robinson the Scribe, the 19. day of October, and in the secōd yeare of Queene Mary, in S. Nicholas Church in Rochester.

M. Robinson.

William Wood, you are presented because you will not come to the Church,* nor receiue the blessed sacrament of the Aultar. Howe say you? haue you receiued, or haue you not?

Wood.

I haue not receiued it, nor I dare not receiue it, as you do now minister it.

Kenall.

Thou Hereticke, what is the cause that thou hast not receyued the blessed Sacrament of the Aultar? and at this word all they put off theyr cappes, and made low beisaunce.

Wood.

There be three causes that make my conscience afeard that I dare not receiue it.* The first Christ did deliuer it to his xij. Apostles, and sayd: Take, eat: And drinke ye all of this. &c. and ye eate and drinke vppe all alone. The seconde cause is: you hold it to be worshipped, contrary to Gods comaūdements: Thou shalt not bow downe nor worship. The third cause is: you minister it in a straunge tounge, contrary to S. Paules doctrine: I lad rather haue fiue wordes wyth vnderstanding, then ten thousand with tounes: by reasō wher of the people be ignoraunt of the death of Christ.

Kenall.

Thou hereticke, wilt thou haue any playner wordes then these: Hoc est corpus meum? Take, eat, this is my body? wilt thou deny the Scripture?

Wood.

I will not deny the holy Scripturs: GOD forbid, but with my hart I do faythfully beleue them. Saynt Paule sayth: God calleth those thinges that are not, as though they were. And Christ sayth: I am a Vyne: I am a doore. Saynt Paule sayth: The Rocke is Christ: All which are figuratiue speaches, wherein one thing is spoken, and an other thing is vnderstanded.

Robins.

You make a very long tale of this matter. Learne Wood, learne.

Kenall.

Nay, these heretickes will not learne. Looke howe this heretike glorieth in himselfe. Thou foole, art thou wiser then the Queene and her Counsell, and all the learned men of this Realme?

Wood.

And it please you, Mayster Chauncellour, I thinke you would be loth to haue such glory, to haue your life and goodes taken away, and to be thus rayled vppon, as you rayle vppon me. But the seruaunt is not greater then his Mayster. And where you do mocke me, and saye I am wiser then the Queene and her Counsell, S. Paule sayth: The wisdom of the wise of this world is foolishnesse before God, and he that will be wise in this world, shall be accounted but a foole.

Kenall.

Doest not thou beleue that after these wordes spoken by a priest: Hoc est corpus meum: This is my body: there remayneth no more bread and Wine, but the very fleshe & bloud of Christ, as he was borne of the virgin Mary, really and substantially, in quantity and quality, as he did hāg vpon the Crosse?

Wood.

I pray you M. Chaūcellour, geue me leaue for my learning, to aske you one question, and I will aunswere you after.

Kenall.

It is some wise question, I warrant you.

Wood.

God spake to the Prophet Ezechiell, saying: *Thou sonne of man, take a rasour and shaue of the heare of thy head & of thy beard, and take one part and cast into the ayre: take the second part and put it into thy coat lap, and take the third part & cast it into the fire: & this is Ierusalem. I pray you, M. Chaūcellour, was this heare that the Prophet did cast into the fire, or was it Ierusalem?

Kenall.

No, it did signify Ierusalem.

Wood.

Euen so this word of Christ: This is my body: is not so to be vnderstanded that Christes carnall, naturall, * & reall body is in the same, in quantity and quality, as it was borne of the virgin Mary:

and as he was crucified vpon the crosse, is present or inclosed in the sacramēt: but it doth signify Christes body, as S. Paule sayth: So oft as ye doe eat of this bread and drinke of this cup, you shall shew forth the Lordes death til he come. What should the Apostle meane by this word, till he come, if he were here carnally, naturally, corporally, and really in the same quantity and quality as he was borne of the virgine Mary, and as he did hang on the crosse, as you say? but Saynt Paule saith: You shall shew the Lordes death till he come. This doth argue that he is not here as you would haue vs to beleue.

Doctour Chadsey.

I will proue that Christ is here present vnder the forme of bread, but not in quantity and quality.

Kenall sayde: yes he is here present in quantitye and quality.

Chadsey.

He is here present vnder a forme, and not in quātity and quality.

Yes, sayd Kenall.

No, sayd Chadsey.*

I will proue him here in quantity and qualitie, sayde Kenall.

I will proue the contrary, sayd Chadsey.

And these two doctors were so earnest in this matter, the one to affirme, the other to deny, contending & raging so sore one at the other, that they fomed at y^e mouth, & one was ready to spit in an others face, so that in a great fury and rage the two Doctors rose vp from the iudgemēt seat, and Doctor Kenall departed out of the Churche in greate rage and fury immediatly.

Wood.

Behold good people, they would haue vs to beleue that Christ is naturally, really, in quantity & quality present in the Sacramēt, and yet they can not tell themselues, nor agree within themselues how he is there.

At these wordes the people made a great shout and the Maior stood vp and commaunded the people to be quiet, & to keep silence. And that God yⁱ did deliuer S. Paul out of the handes of the high Priests,* by the contention that was betwene the Phariseis and the Saduces, did euen so deliuer me at that time out of the mouthes of the bloudy Papistes, by the meanes of the contention of these two Doctors. Blessed be the name of the Lord which hath promised to laye no more vpon his, then he will make them able to beare, and in the midst of temptation he can make a way for his (whome and when it pleaseth him) to escape out of all daungers.

Many other like examples of Gods helpyng hande haue bene declared vpon his elect Sayntes and Children in deliuering them out of daunger by wonderfull and miraculous wayes, some by one meanes some by an other. What a notable worke of Gods mightye hand was seene in Simon Grinaeus, mentioned in the Commentary of Melancthon vpon Daniell. Who hauing a sodeine warnynge by a certaine olde man, who was not seene after, nor knowen then of any what he was, auoided the peril of taking and burning, as by the relation of Melancthon writing and witnessing of the same, may appeare in the wordes of hys owne story here folowing.

The History of Simon Grinaeus collected out of Melancthons Commentaris vpon the x. Chapter of Daniell.

WHen I was (sayth he) at the assembly holden at Spyre in the yeare of our Lord 1529. by chaunce Simon Grynaeus came thither vnto me from the Uniuersity of Hedelberge, where he hearde Faber the Byshoppe of Vienna in a Sermon, defend and maynteyne certayne detestable errors. When the Sermon was done, he folowed Faber goyng Page 2078 out of the Church and saluted him reuerently, declaring vnto him that he was moued of a good zeale & intent, somewhat to say vnto him.*Faber was contented to talke with him.

Then Grinaeus sayde vnto him that he was very sorry that a man of such learning and authority shoulde openly mayntein such errors as were both contumelious against God, & also might be refuted by the manifest testimonies of the Scripture. Irenaeus writeth (sayd he) that Polycarpus was wont to stop his cares whensoever he heard any erroneous & wicked doctrine.* With what mind then (thinke you) woulde Polycarpus haue heard you argue and reason what it is that the mouse eateth, when shee gnaweth the consecrated host? Who would not bewaile such ignorance and blindnes of the Church? With this Faber brake of hys talke, as he was about to saye more, and asked his name. This man dissembling nothing, gently tolde him that his name was Grinaeus.

This Faber (as many well knew) was alwayes tymerous and fearefull in the company of learned men. Wherefore he fearing the learning, eloquence, and feruent zeale of Grinaeus, specially in such a matter as this was, fayned as though he had bene sent for by the king, and that he had no leysure now to reason vpon this matter. He pretended that he was very desirous of acquayntaunce and longer talke with Grinaeus, intreating him, that bothe for hys owne priuate cause, and also for the common wealth, he would come agayne the next day vnto him, and so shewed him his lodgyng, and appoynted him an houre when hee should come. Grinaeus thinking that he had spoken vnfaynedly, promised so to do.

When he was departed frō Faber, he came straight way vnto vs, and was scarsly set at the table (for it was supper time) reciting a part of his talk with Faber vnto me and others there present, when as I sitting with my company, was sodeinly called out of the Parler by a certayne auncient fatherly man,* who shewing a singular grauitye in hys countenance, wordes, and behauior, spake vnto me & said, that the Sergeantes would by and by come vnto our lodging, being sent by the kinges commaundement, to carye Grinaeus to Prison, whom Faber had accused to the Kynge, commaunding that Grinaeus should straight wayes depart out of the towne, & exhorted me that we shoulde in no case delay the time: and so bidding me farewell, departed. But what olde man this was, neither did I know then nor afterward could vnderstand. I returning agayne vnto my company, bad them rise, and told them what the olde man had sayd vnto me.

By and by, we taking Grinaeus in the midst of vs, caryed him through the street to the Riuer of Rhene, whereas after he had stayd vpon the hether bank a while, vntil Grinaeus with his companiō were caried ouer in a small boat,* returning agayne to our lodging, we vnderstoode that the Sergeants had bene there, when we were but a little way gone out of the house. Now in what great daunger Grinaeus should haue bene,* if he had bene caried to prison, by this cruelty of Faber euery man easily may coniecture. Wherefore we iudged that that most cruell entent and purpose of him, was disapoynted by Gods merciful prouidence. And as I can not say, what olde man it was that gaue me that warning, euen so likewise the Sergeants made such quick speede, that except Grinaeus had bene couered and defended by Aungels through the maruellous prouidence of God, he could neuer haue escaped.

Cōcerning the truth of this matter, there be many good men yet aliue, which both knowe the same, and also were present at the doing thereof. Therfore let vs geue thanks vnto God, which hath geuen vs his Angels to be our keepers and defenders, wherby with more quiet mindes, we may fulfill and do the office of our vocation.

With such like examples of Gods mighty and merciful custody, the church of Christ in all ages doth aboūd, as by manifold experiences may appeare as well among the Germanes, as also in all other places and ages, but in no place more, nor in time more plentifull, then in this persecuting time of Queene Mary in this our Realme of Enland: as partly hath bene already historyed, and parte yet remayneth (the Lorde willing) moreouer hereunto to bee added.

☛Lady Katherine Duches of Suffolcke.*

STephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, surmising the Ladye Katherine Baronesse of Willoughby and Cresby and Duchesse Dowager of Suffolcke, to be one of his auncient enemies, because he knew he had deserued no better of her, deuised in the holy time of the first Lent in Queene Maries reigne, a holy practise <◇> •euēge, first by touching her in the person of her husbād M. Richard Berty Esquyre, for whom he sent an attachment (hauing the great seale at his deuotion) to the Sheriffe of Lincolnshyre with a speciall Letter commaunding moste straitly the same Sheriffe,* to attache the sayd Richard immediatly, and without baile to bring him vp to London to his great Lordship. M. Berty her husband being cleare in conscience, and from offence toward the queene, could not coniecture any cause of this straunge processe, vnlesse it were some quarell for Religion, which he thought coude not be so sore as the processe pretended.

The Sheriffe notwithstanding the commaundement, aduentured onely to take the bonde of M. Bertye with 2. sureties, in a thousand poūd for his appearance to be made before the Byshop on good Friday folowing,* at which day M. Berty appeared, the Bishop then lying at his house by S. Mary Oueries. Of whose presence when the Byshop vnderstood by a gentleman of his chamber, in a great rage he came out of his gallery into his dining chamber, where he found a prease of suters, saying he woulde not that daye heare any, but came forth only to know of M. Berty, how he being a subiect durste so arrogantly set at light two former processes of the Queenes.

M. Berty aunswere^d,^{*} that albeit my Lordes woordes might seme to the rest somewhat sharpe towards him, yet he conceiued greate comfort of thē. For whereas he before thought it extremity to be attached, hauing vsed no obstinacy or contumacy, now he gathered of those wordes, that my Lord meant not otherwise but to haue vsed some ordinary processe: albeit in deed none came to his handes.

Yea Mary, quoth the Byshoppe, I haue sent you two subpenas, to appeare immediatly, and I am sure you receiued them, for I committed the truste of them to no worsse man but to Mayster Solicitour, and I shall make you an example to all Lyncolnshyre for your obstinacy.

M. Berty denying the receipt of any, humbly prayed his Lordship to suspend his displeasure & the punishment till he had good trial therof, & then, if it pleased him, to double the payne for the fault, if any were.

Well, quoth the Byshoppe,^{*} I haue appoynted my selfe this day (according to the holines of the same) for deuotion, and I will not further trouble me with you: but I enioyn you in a thousand poūd not to depart without leaue, and to be here againe to morow at 7. of the clocke. M. Berty well obserued the houre, and no ote ayled: At whiche time the B. had with him M. Seriant Stampford, to whō he moued certayn questions of the sayd M. Berty, because M. Serieaunt was towards the Lorde Wriothesley late Earle of Southhampton, and Chauncellour of England, with whom the said M. Berty was brought vp. M. Seriant made very frendly report of M. Berty of hys owne knowledge for the time of theyr conuersation together. Wherupon the Bishop caused M. Berty to be brought in, and first making a false trayne (as God would, without fire) before he woulde descend to the quarrell of Religion, he assaulted him in this maner.

Winch.

The Queenes pleasure is (quoth the Byshoppe) that you shall make present payment of 4000. pound due to her father by Duke Charles,^{*} late husband to the Duchesse your wife, whose executor she was.

Bert.

Pleaseth it your Lordshippe (quoth M. Berty) that debt is estalled, and is according to that estallement, truly aunswere^d.

Winch.

Tush (quoth the Byshop) the Queene will not be bounde to estallementes,^{*} in the time of Kettes gouernement, for so I esteme the late gouernement.

Bert.

The estallement (quoth M. Berty) was appoynted by king Henry the 8. besides the same, was by speciall cōmissioners confirmed in king Edwardes tyme, and the Lord treasurer being an executor also to the Duke Charles soly and wholly, tooke vpon him before the sayd Commissioners, to discharge the same.

Winch.

If it be true that you saye (quoth the Byshoppe) I will shew you fauor. But of an other thing M. Berty, I will admonish you, as meaning you well. I heare euill of your Religion: yet I hardly can thinke euil of you, whose mother I know to be as Godlye and Catholicke, as any within this Lande, your selfe brought vp with a mayster, whose education if I should disallow, I might be charged as author of his errour. Besides, partly I know you my selfe, and vnderstande of my frendes, enough to make me your frend: wherefore I will not doubt of you, but I pray you if I may aske the question of my Ladye your wife, * is she now as ready to set vp the Masse, as she was lately to pull it downe, when she caused in her progresse, a dog in a Rochet to be caried, & called by name? or doth she think her Page 2079 lambes now safe enough, which sayd to me whē I vailed my bonnet to her out of my chamber window in the tower, that it was mery with the lambes, now the Wolfe was shut vp? * Another time my Lord her husband hauing inuited me and diuers Ladies to dinner, desired euery Lady to choose him whom she loued best, and so place themselues: My Ladye your wife taking me by the hande, for that my Lord would not haue her to take himselfe, sayd that for so much as she could not sit downe with my Lord whom she loued best, she had chosen me whom she loued worst.

Of the deuise of the Dogge, quoth M. Berty, she was neither the author nor the allower. The wordes, though in that season they sounded bitter to your Lordship, yet if it should please you without offence to know the cause, I am sure the one will purge the other. As touching setting vp of Masse, which she learned not onely by strong perswasions of diuers excellent learned men, * but by vniuersall consent and order whole vj. yeares past, inwardly to abhorre (if she should outwardly allowe, she should both to Christ shew her selfe a false Christian, and to her prince a masquing subiect. You know my Lord, one by iudgemēt reformed, is more worth then a thousand transformed tēporizers. To force a confession of Religion by mouth, cōtrary to that in the hart, worketh damnation where saluation is pretended.

Yea mary (quoth the Bishop) that deliberation would do well i• she neuer required to come from an old Religion to a new. But now she is to returne from a newe to an auncient Religion: Wherin when she made me her gossip, she was as earnest as any.

For that, my Lord (sayd M. Berty) not long sithen, she aunswered a frend of hers v•ing your Lordships speach, * that Religion went not by age but by truth: and therefore she was to be turned by persuation and not by commaundement.

I pray you (quoth the Bishop) thinke you it possible to persuade her?

Yea verely (sayd M. Berty) with the truth: for she is reasonable enough.

The bishop thereunto replying, sayd: it will be a maruellous grieve to the Prince of Spayne, and to all the nobility that shall come with him, when they shall finde but two noble personages of the spanish race within this lād, the Queene, and my Lady your wife, and one of thē gone from the fayth.

M. Berty aunswered, that he trusted they should find no fruites of infidelity in her.

So the Bishop perswading M. Berty to trauell earnestly for the reformation of her opinion,* and offring large frendship, released him of his bande from further appearaunce.

The Duchesse and her husband, dayly more and more, by their frendes vnderstanding that the Bishop meant to call her to an accoūt of her fayth, whereby extremity might followe, deuised wayes how by the Queenes licence they might passe the Seas. M. Berty had a ready meane: for there rested great summes of mony due to the old Duke of Suffolke (one of whose executers the Duches was) beyond the Seas,* the Emperour himselfe being one of those debtors. M. Berty communicated this his purposed sute for licence to passe the Seas, and the cause, to the Bishop-adding, that he tooke this time most meet to deale with the Emperour, by reason of likelyhoode of Mariage betwene the Queene and his sonne.

I like your deuise well (quoth the bishop) but I think it better, that you tary the Princes comming, and I will procure you his letters also to his father.

Nay (quoth M. Berty) vnder your Lordships correction and pardon of so liberall speache, I suppose the tyme will then be lesse conuenient: for when the Mariage is cōsūmate, the Emperour hath his desire: but till then he will refuse nothing to win credit with vs.

By S. Mary (quoth the Bishoppe, smiling) you gesse shrewdly. Well, proceed in your sute to the Queene, and it shall not lacke my helping hand.

M. Berty found so good successe, that he in fewe dayes obtained the Queenes licence, not onely to passe the seas, but to passe and repasse then so oftē as to him semed good, till he had finished all his busines and causes beyonde the seas. So he passed the seas at Douer about the beginning of Iune in the first yeare of her reign, leauing the Duchesse behinde, who by agreement and consent beewixt her & her husband, folowed, taking Barge at Lyon Key, very early in the morning, on the first day of Ianuary next ensuyng, not without some perill.

There was none of those that wēt with her, made priuy to her going till the instant, but an old Gentleman called M. Robert Cranwell,* whom M. Berty had specially prouided for that purpose. She tooke with her her daughter an infant of one yeare, & the meanest of her seruants, for she doubted the best would not aduenture that fortune with her. They were in nūber 4. men, one a Greek borne, which was a rider of horses, an other a Ioyner, the thyrde a Brewer, the fourth a foole one of the kitchin, one g•ntlewoman, and a Laundreue.

As she departed her house called the Barbican,* betwixt 4. and 5. of the clocke in the morning, with her company & baggage, one Atkinson a Herauld, keper of her house: hearing noyse about the house, rose and came out with a torch in his hand as she was yet issuing out of the gate: wherewith being amased, shee was forced to leaue a male wyth necessaryes for her young daughter,* and a milke pot wyth milke in the same gatehouse, commaūding all her seruantes to speed them away before to Lyon Key, and takyng with her onely the two womē and her child, so soone as she was forth of her owne house, perceiuing the Herauld to folow, she stept in at Garter house hard by. The Herauld comming out of the Duchesse house, and seeing no bodye stirring, not assured (though by the male suspecting) that she was departed, returned in: and while he stayed ransacking parcelles left in the male, the Duchesse issued into the street, and proceeded in her iourney, he knowing the place only by name where she should take her boate, but not the way thither, nor none with her. Likewise her seruauntes hauing diuided themselues, none but one knewe the way to the sayd key.

So she apparelled like a meane Marchantes wife and the rest like meane seruantes, walking in the streetes vnknowne, she tooke the way that led to Finesbury field and the others walked the city streetes as they lay open before them, till by chaunce more then discretion, they met all sodeinly together a litle within Mooregate, frō whence they passed directly to Lyon keye, & there tooke barge in a morning so misty, that the stearesman was loth to launch out,* but that they vrged him. So soone as the day permitted, the Councell was informed of her departure, and some of thē came forthwith to her house to enquire of the maner thereof, and tooke an inuentry of her goodes, besides further order deuised for search and watch to apprehend and staye her.*

The fame of her departure reached to Leigh, a towne at the lands end, before her approaching thither. By Leigh dwelt one Gosling a marchant of Londō, an old acquaintance of Cranwels, whither the sayd Cranwell brought the Duchesse, naming her Mistres White,* the daughter of Mayster Gosling, for such a daughter he had which neuer was in that coutry. There she reposed her, and made new garmentes for her daughter, hauing lost her owne in the male at Barbican.

When the time came that she shoulde take ship, being constrayned that night to lye at an Inne in Leigh (where she was agayne almost be wrayed) yet notwithstanding, by Gods good working she escaping that hassard, at lēgth, as the tyde and wind did serue, they went aboard,* & being caryed twise into the seas, almost into the coast of Zeland, by contrary wind were driuē to the place from whēce they came, and at the last recuile, certayne parsons came to the shore, suspecting shee was within that shippe: yet hauing examined one of her company that was a land for fresh Achates, and finding by the simplicitie of his tale, onely the appearaunce of a meane Marchauntes wife to be a shipboord, he ceased any further search.

To bee shorte, so soone as the Duchesse had landed in Brabant,* she and her womē were apparelled like the women of Netherlande with hukes, and so she and her husband tooke theyr iourney towardēs Cleueland, and being ariued at a towne therin called Santon, took a house there vntill they might further deuise of some sure place where to settle themselues.

About fiue miles from Santon, is a free towne called Wesell, vnder the sayd Duke of Cleues dominion, and one of the Haūs townes, priuiledged with the company of the Steelyard in London, whether diues Wallons were fled for religion, and had for theyr Minister one Frances Perusell, then called Frances de Riuers, who had receiued some curtesy in England at the Duchesse handes. Maister Berty being yet at Santon,* practised with him to obtaine a protection from the Magistrates for his abode & his wiues at Wesell: whiche was the sooner procured because the state of the Duchesse was not discouered but onely to the chiefe Magistrate, earnestly bent to shewe them pleasure, whiles this protection was in seeking.

In the meane while, at the Towne of Santon was a muttering that the Duchesse & her husbande were greater personages then they gaue themselues forth, and the Magistrates not very well inclined to religion, the Bishop of Page 2080 Arras also being Deane of the great Minster, order was taken, that the Dutches and her husband should be exami'ned o• their condition and Religion vppon the sodayne.* Which practise discouered by a gentleman of that country to Mayster Bertie, he without delay taking no more then the Duches her daughter, and two other with them, as though he meant no more but to take the ayre, about three of y^e clock in the afternoone in February, on foot, without hiering of horse or wagon for feare of disclosing hys purpose, meant priuily that night to get to Wesel, leauing his other family still at Santon.

After the Duches and he were one englishe mile from the town, there fell a mighty rayne of continuance, wherby a long frost and ise before congealed, was thawed, whiche doubled more the wearines of those new lacquies. But being now on the way, and ouertakē with the night, they sent their two seruantes (which onely went with them) to villages, as they past, to hyre some carre for theyr ease, but none could be hyred. In the meane time M. Bertye was forced to cary the childe, and the Duches his cloke and rapier.* At last betwixt vi. & vii. of the clocke in y^e dark night, they came to Weesell, and repayring to theyr Innes for lodging and some repose after such a paynfull iourney, found hard intertaynment, for goyng from Inne to Inne offring large mony for small lodging, they were refused of all the Inholders, suspecting Mayster Bertye to bee a Launceknicht, and the Duches to be hys woman. The Childe for cold and sustenance cryed pittifully, the mother wept as fast, the heauens rayned as fast as y^e cloudes could poure.

Mayster Bertie destitute of all other succour of hospitalitie, resolved to bring the Duchesse to the porche of the great churche in the towne, and so to buy coales, victualls and straw for theyr miserable repose there that night, or at least till by Gods helpe he might prouide her better lodging. Mayster Bertie at that time vnderstoode not muche dutche, and by reason of euill weather and late season of y^e night, he could not happen vppon any that coulde speake english,* Frenche, Italian, or Latine, till at last goyng towards the Church porch, he heard 2. striplinges talkyng Latin, to whom he approched and offered thē two stiuers to bring him to some Wallons house.

By these boyes, and Gods good conduicte, hee chaunced at the first vppon the house where Mayster Perusell supped that night, who had procured them the protection of the Magistrates of that towne. At the first knocke, the goodman of the house himselfe came to the dore, and opening it, asked Mayster Bertie what he was. Maister Bertie sayd, an englishman, that sought for one M. Peruselles house. The Wallon willed M. Bertie to stay a while, who went backe and told Mayster Perusell that the same english gentleman of whome they had talked the same supper had sent,* by likelihoode, his seruaut to speake with hym. Whereupon M. Perusell came to the dore, and beholding Mayster Bertie, the Duchesse, and theyr childe, their faces, apparelles, and bodyes so farre from their old forme, deformed with durt, wether, & heauines, could not speake to them, nor they to him for teares. At length recouering them selues, they saluted one an other, and so together entred the house, God knoweth ful ioyfully. Mayster Bertie chaunging of his apparrell with the goodman, the Duchesse with the good wife, and theyr childe with the childe of the house.

Within fewe dayes after, by M. Peruselles meanes, they hyred a very fayre house in the towne, and did not let to shew themselues what they were, in such good sort as their present condition permitted. It was by this tyme through the whole towne what discourtesie the Inholders had shewed vnto them at their entrie,* in so muche as on y^e Sonday following, a preacher in the Pulpit openly in sharpe termes rebuked that great inciuiltie towardes straungers, by allegation of sundry places out of holye scriptures, discoursing how not onely Princes sometyme are receiued in the Image of priuate persons, but Angels in the shape of men, and that God of his Iustice would make the straungers one daye in an other lande, to haue more sense of the afflicted hart of a stranger.*

The time was passing foorth, as they thought themselues thus happily settled, sodainly a watchworde came from sir Iohn Mason, then Queene Maries Ambassador in Netherland, that my Lorde Paget had fayned an errant to the Bathes that waies: and whereas the Duke of Brunswick was shortly with x. ensignes to passe by Wesell for the seruice of the house of Austricke agaynst y^e frēch king, the sayd Duchesse, and her husband shoulde be wyth the same charge and company intercepted.

Wherefore to preuent the cruelty of these enemies, M. Berty with his wife and childe departed to a place called Winheim in high Dutchland vnder the Palsgranes Dominion, where vnder his protection they continued tyll their necessities began to fayle them,* and they almost feyn'ting vnder so heauy a burden, began to fayle of hope.

At what tyme, in the midst of theyr dispayre, there came sodeinly letters to them from the Pallatine of Uilua and the kyng of Poole, being instructed of theyr hard estate by a Baron named Ioannes Alasco, that was sometyme in England offering them large curtesie.* This puruison vnlooked for, greatly reuiued theyr heauye spirites. Yet considering they shoulde remoue from manye theyr countrymen and acquaintance, to a place so farre distant a Country not haunted with the English, and perhappes vpon their arriual not finding as they looked for, the end of their iourney should be worse then the beginning: they deuised thereupon with one M. Barloe, late Byshoppe of Chichester, that if he would vouchsafe to take some payns therein, they would make him a fellowe of that iourney.* So finding him prone, they sent with him letters of great thanks to the king and Pallatine, and also with a fewe principall Iewelless (which onely they had lefte of many, to sollicite for them, that the king would vouchsafe vnder his seale, to assure them of the thing whiche hee so honourably by letters offered.

That sute by the forewardnes of the Pallatine, was as soone graunted as vttered. Upon whiche assurance the sayd Duchesse and her husband, with their familye, entred the iorney in Aprill. 1557. from the Castle of Wineheim, where they before lay, towardes Franckford. In y^e which their iorney, it were long here to describe what daungers fell by the way vpon them, and theyr whole company,* by reason of theyr Lantgraues Captain, who vnder a quarrell pretended for a spaniell of M. Berties, set vpon them in the high way, with his horsemen, thrusting their borespeares through the wagon where the Children and Women were, M. Bertie hauing but 4. horsemen with hym. In the which brable it happened the Captaynes horse to be slayne vnder him.

Whereupon a rumour was sparsed immediately thorough townes and villages about, that the Lantgraue captayne should be slayne by certayne Wallons, which incensed the ire of the countrymen ther more fiercely against M. Bertie, as afterward it proued. For as he was motioned by his wife to saue himselfe by y^e swiftnes of his horse and to recouer some towne there by for his rescue, hee so doing was in worse case then before, for the townsmen and the Captaines brother supposing no lesse but that the Captayne had bene slaine, pressed so egerly vpon him, that he had bene there taken and murthered among them, had not he (as God would) spying a ladder leaning to a wyndow, by the same got vp into the house, and so gone vp in to a garret in the top of y^e house, where hee with his dagge and rapyre defended himselfe for a space: but at lengthe the Burghmayster comming thither with an other Magystrate, which could speake latin, he was counselled to submit himselfe to the order of the law. Mayster Bertye knowing himselfe cleare, and the Captayne to be aliue, was y^e more bolder to submit himselfe to the iudgement of y^e law, vpon condition that the Magistrate woulde receiue hym vnder safe conduct, and defend him from the rage of the multitude. Whiche being promised, M. Bertie putteth him selfe and his weapon in the Magistrates hande, & so was committed to safe custodie, while the trueth of hys cause should be tryed.

Then Mayster Berty writing his letters to y^e Lantgraue and to the Erle of Erbagh, the next day early in the mornyng the Erle of Erbagh dwellyng within 8. miles, came to the towne whether the Duchesse was broughte with her wagon, M. Bertie also beyng in the same towne vnder custody.

The Earle, who had some intelligence of the Duches before, after hee was come and had shewed suche curtesie as hee thought to her estate was seemely, the Townesmen perceyuyng the Earle to behaue hymselfe so humbly vnto her, beganne to consider more of the matter, and further vnderstandyng the Capitayne to bee alyue, both they, and especially the authors of the sturre shrunke away, and made all the friendes they could to maister Bertie and his wife, not to report their doyngs after the worst sorte.

And thus Mayster Bertie and his wife escaping that daunger, proceeded in their iourney toward Polelande, where in conclusion they were quietly entertayned of the king,* and placed honourably in the Earldome of the sayd king of Poles in Sanogelia, called Crozā, wher M. Berty with the Duchesse hauing the kings absolute power of gouernement ouer the saide Earldome, continued both in Page 2081 great quietnesse and honoure, till the deathe of Queene Mary.

¶Thomas Horton Minister.

*AS yee haue heard of the daungerous troubles of the Duchesse of Suffolke in time of her exile for religion sake, whom notwithstanding the Lordes present protection still deliuered in all distresses, as well from her enemies in England, as in Dutchland frō y^e Launceknights there: so haue we no lesse to behold and magnifie the lords mercifull goodnes in preseruing of Thomas Horton frō the like perilles of the same Countrey.

Whiche Thomas Horton, what a profitable instrument hee was to the Church of Christ in Queene Maries time, all our Englishmen almost beyond the seas then, did both know and feelee.

This good Thomas Horton, as he vsed oftentymes to trauayle betweene Germany and England, for the behoofe and sustenance of the poore English exiles there: so he iournyng vpon a time betweene Masticke and Collē chaunced to bee taken there by certayne Rouers, and so being led by them away, was in no little daunger: and yet this daunger of his was not so great, but the present helpe of the Lord was greater to ayd and deliuer him out of the same.

¶Thomas Sprat of Kent, Tanner

VNto these afore rehearsed examples of Gods blessed prouidence towards his seruauntes,* may also be added the happy deliueraunce of Thomas Sprat and William Porrege his companion, now Minister. Whose story briefly to course ouer, is this.

This Thomas Sprat had bene seruaunt sometimes to one M. Brent a Iustice,* and a heauy persecutour, and therefore forsaking his Mayster for religious sake, he wēt to Calice, from whence he vsed often with the sayd William Porrege for theyr necessary affayres, to haue a recourse into England.

It so happened about the fourthe yeare of Queene Maryes raygne, that they landing vppon a tyme of Douer, and taking theyr iourney together toward Sandwich sodenly vppon the way within three myles of Douer, met with the foresayd M. Brent, the two Blachendens, and o'ther Gentlemen moe, with theyr seruaunts, to the number of x. or xii. horses.* Of the which two Blachendens, being both haters and enemies of Gods worde and people, the one had perfect knowledge of William Porrege, the other had not seene him, but onely hadde heard of his name before.

Thus they being in the way where this Iustice wyth his mates shuld meete them directly in the face, Thomas Sprat first espying M. Brent, was sore dismayde, saying to hys companion: yonder is M. Brent. William Porrege God haue haue mercy vpon vs. Well quoth the other, seing now there is no remedy, let vs go in our waye. And so thinking to passe by them,* they kept themselues aloufe, as it were a score off from them, Thomas Sprat also shadowing his face with his cloke.

Notwithstanding, one of M. Brentes seruauntes aduising him better then his mayster did: yonder, sayd he to his Mayster, is Thomas Sprat. At whiche wordes they all rayned theyr horses, and called for Thomas Sprat to come to them. They cal you, sayd William Porrege. Now here is no remedy but we are takē: and so perswaded him to go to them being called, for that there was no escaping from so many horsemen in those playnes and downes, where was no wood neare them by a myle, nor hedge ney'ther, but onely one, which was a byrdbolt shot off.

All this notwithstanding, Sprat stayed and woulde not go. Then they called agayne, sitting still on horseback. Ah sirra, quoth the Iustice? why come ye not hether? And still his companion moued him to go, seying there was no other shift to flee away. Nay, sayd Sprat, I will not goe to them, and therwithall tooke hys legges, running to the hedge that was next him. They seeying that, sette spurres to their horse, thinking by and by to haue hym, and that it was vnpossible for him to escape their hands, as it was in deede, they beyng on horse backe and he on foote, had not y^e Lorde myraculously deliuered his seely seruant frō the gaping mouth of the Lyon ready to deuour him.

For as God would, so it fell out that hee had got ouer the hedge, skrawling through the bushes, when as they were euen at his heeles, striking at him with theyr swords out of the Blachendens crying cruelly: cut off one of hys legges.

Thus Sprat had scarcely recouered the hedge from hys enemies, when one of M. Brentes seruaunts,* which had bene fellow sometymes in house with him, followed him in hys bootes: and certayne rode vp at one side of the hedge, and certayne at the other, to meete him at the vpper end.

Now while they were following the chase after Tho'mas Sprat, onely one remayned with William Porrege (who was one of the Blachendens, not he whiche knewe him, but the other) who began to question with hym: not asking what was hys name (as God would (for then hee had bene knowne and taken: but from whence hee came and how he came into Sprats company, and whether he went: Unto whome he aunswered and sayd: from Calyce and that Sprat came ouer with him in the passage boate, and they two were goyng to Sandwich, and so wythout any more questions he let him depart.

Anone as he kept along the hedge, one of the horsemen which rode after Sprat, returning backe,* and meeting w^t the sayd W. Porrege, demaunded the very same questions as the other had done, to whome he made also the like answere as afore, and so departed, taking an other contrary way from the meeting of the other horsman. And thus W. Porrege escaped.

Now concerning Thomas Sprat, he being pursued on the one side by horsemen,* on the other side by his own fellow, who followed after hym in his bootes, crying: you were as good to tarry, for we will haue you, we will haue you: yet notwithstanding he still kept on his course till at length he came to a steepe downe hil at y^e hedge end, downe the which hil he ran from them, for they could not ride downe the hill, but must fetch a great compasse about and so this Thomas Sprat ran almost a mile, and as god would got a Wood.*

By that tyme he came to the Wood, they were euen at hys heeles: but the night drew on, and it began to rayne and so the malice of these persecutors was at an ende, the Lord working for his seruauntes, whose name be praised for euer and euer, Amen.

Not long after this, one of the two Blanchendens aforesayd, which so cruelly sought the destruction of other, was cruelly murdered by hys owne seruauntes.

¶Iohn Cornet.

HEre might also be recited the hard aduētures and sufferinges of Iohn Cornet,* and at lengthe his deliuerance by Gods good working, out of the same.

Who being a prentise with a minstrell at Colchester, was sent by hys mayster about the 2. yeare of Queene Maryes raygne, to a wedding in a towne thereby called Roughhedge, where hee being requested by a companye there of good men, the Constables also of the parish being present thereat, so sing some songes of the scripture, chanced to sing a song called Newes out of London, whiche tended agaynst the Masse, and agaynst the Queenes misproceedinges.

Whereupon the next day he was accused by the Parson of Roughhedge called Yackesley, and so committed,* first to the Constable, where both his mayster gaue hym ouer and hys mother forsooke and cursed him. From thence hee was sent to the next Iustice, named M. Cānall: and then to the Earle of Oxford, where he was first put in yrons & chaynes, and after that so manacled that the bloude spurt out of hys fingers endes, because he woulde not confesse y^e names of them which allured hym to sing.

And marueile it was that the cruell Papistes were so contended, that they sent him not also to Bishop Boner,* to suffer the extremitie of the fire. But Gods gracious pro|uidence disposed otherwise for hys seruauant. For after hee was manacled, the Earle cōmaunded hym to be brought agayne to the towne of Roughhedge, & there to be whipped till the blood followed, and to be banished the towne for euer: and so hee was, during all the time of Queene Mary.

¶Thomas Bryce.

IF our story should proceede so wide and so large, as dyd the exceeding mercy of Gods prouidence in helpyng hys seruauantes out of wretchednes and thraldome of those bloody dayes, our treatise, I thinke,* would extende to an endlesse processe.

For what good man or woman was there almost in all this tyme of Queene Mary, who eyther in caryng a good conscience out of the land, or taryng within y^e realm could well escape the Papistes handes, but by some notable Page 2082 experience of the Lordes mightye power and helpyng hand working for him? What shoulde I here speake of the myraculous deliuerance of Thomas Bryce, who beyng in the house of Iohn Seale,* in the parish of Horting, and the Bayliffe with other neighbours comming in, sent by Sir Iohn Baker to search and apprehend hym, & knowing perfectly both hys stature and colour of his garments yet had no power to see or know him standing before their faces. So mightely the Lorde did blinde their eyes, that they asking for him, and looking vpon him, yet notwithstanding he quietly tooke vpp his bagge of books, and so departed out of the house, wythout anye hand layd vpon him.

Also an other time, about the 2. yeare of Queene Mary,* the sayde Thomas Bryce, with Iohn Bryce his elder brother, comming then from Wesell, meeting together at their fathers house, as they iornyed towards London to geue warning there to one Springfield, whiche els was like to bee taken vnawares by his enemies wayting for him vpon Gaddes hill, fell in company with a promoter, which dogged them and followed them again to Graues•ad, into the towne, and layed the house for them where they were, and all the waies as they should go to the water side: so that it had not bene possible for them to haue auoyded the present daunger of those persecutors, had not the Lordes prouident care otherwise disposed for hys seruauantes through the Hostler of the Inne,* couertly to conuey them by a secret passage: whereby they tooke Barge a mile out of the towne, and so in the ende both the liues of them, and also of Springfield was preserued, through the Lordes gracious protection.

¶Gertrude Crockhey.

*Gertrude Crokehey dwelling at S. Katherines by the Towne of London, and being then in her husbandes house, it happened, in the yeare 1556. that the Popes childish S. Nicholas went about the parish. Whiche shee vnderstanding, shut her dore agaynst him, not suffering him to enter into her house.

Then Doct. Mallet hearing thereof, and being then Mayster of the sayd S. Katherines, the next daye came to her wyth twenty at hys tayle,* thinking belike to fray her, and asked why shee woulde not the night before let in S. Nicolas and receaue hys blessing. &c. To whom she aunswered thus. Syr I knowe no S. Nicholas (sayd she) that came hether. Yes quoth Mallet, here was one that represented S. Nicolas.

In deede sir (sayd she) here was one y^t was my neighbours childe, but not S. Nicolas: for S. Nicolas is in heauen. I was afayrde of them that came with him to haue had my purse cut by them: for I haue hearde of men robbed by S. Nicolas clerkes. &c. So Mallet perceiuyng that nothing could be gotten at her handes, went his way as he came, and she for that time so escaped.

Then in the yeare 1557. a little before Whitsontide, it happened that the sayde Gertrude aunswered for a childe that was baptised of one Thomas Saunders,* whyche childe was christened secretly in a house after the order of y^e seruice booke in king Edwardes time, and that beyng shortly knowne to her enemies, she was sought for. Whiche vnderstanding nothing therof, went beyond the Sea into Gilderland, to see certayne landes that should come to her children in the right of her first husband, who was a straunger borne, & being there about a quarter of a yeare at the lengthe comming homeward by Andwarpe, shee chaunced to meete with one Iohn Iohnson a Ducth manne alias Iohn de Uilla of Andwerpe shipper who seeing her there, went of malice to the Margraue, and accused her to be an Anabaptist: whereby shee was taken and caryed to prison. The cause why this naughty manne did thus, was for that he claymed of M. Crockhay her husband a peece of mony whiche was not his due, for a ship y^t Mayster Crockhay bought of him, and for that hee coulde not get it, he wrought this displeasure. Well, she being in prison, lay there a fortnight. In the whiche time she sawe some that were prisoners there,* who priuily were drowned in Renish wine fattes, and after secretly put in sakes and cast into the Riuer. Now she, good woman, thinking to be so serued, tooke thereby such feare that it brought the begynning of her sicknesse, of the whiche at length she dyed.

Then at the last was she called before the Margraue and charged with Anabaptistry: whiche shee there vtterly denied, and detested the error, declaring before hym in Dutch her fayth boldly, wythout any feare. So the Margraue hearyng the same, in the end beyng well pleased w^t her profession, at y^e sute of some of her frends,* deliuered her out of prison, but tooke away her booke, and so shee came ouer into England agayne.

¶William Mauldon.

I Lightly passe ouer here the tedious afflictions of William Mauldon,* how in the daungerous time of the 6. articles, before the burning of Anne Askew, hee was scourged being young, of his father, for professing and confessing of true Religion:* and afterward being examined in auricular confession by the Priest, hys bookes were searched for, and so at length hee was presented vp by y^e same Priest in a letter written to the Byshop. Which letter, had it not bene burned by an other Priest to whose handes it came (as the Lord would haue it) it had vndoubtedly cost hym his life.

This one thinge in the sayde William Mauldon is to bee noted, that being younge, in those dayes of kinge Henry, when the masse moste florished, the aultars wyth the sacrament therof being in their moste high veneration y^t to mans reason it might seeme vnpossible that the glory and opinion of that Sacramente and Sacramentalles, so highly worshipped, and so deeply rooted in the hartes of so many, could by any meanes possible so soone decay and vanish to naught: yet notwithstanding hee being then so young, vnder the age of xvii. yeares, by the spirite (no doubt) of prophesie, declared then vnto his parentes, that they should see it shortly euen come to passe,* that both the Sacrament of the altar and the altars themselues, with al such plantations which the heauenly father did not plant, should be plucked vp by the rootes: and euen so within the space of very fewe yeares the euent thereof followed accordingly: the Lorde therefore bee prayed for his moste gracious reformation.

¶Robert Horneby.

I Let passe lykewise the daungerous escape of Robert Horneby,* seruaunt sometyme and groome of the Chamber to Ladye Elizabeth, shee being then in trouble in Queene Maryes dayes: who being willed to come to Masse, refused so to doe, and therefore comming afterward from Woodstocke to Hampton Courte, was called before the Counsayle, & by them committed to the Marshalsey, and not vnlyke to haue susteyned further daunger, had not the Lordes goodnes better prouided for him, who at length by Doctour Martyn was deliuered.

¶Mistres Sandes.

The lyke also may be testified and recorded of Mistres Sandes, nowe wyfe to Syr Morice Bartlet,* then Gentlewoman wayter to the sayde Ladye Elizabeth being in the Tower. Which Mistres Sandes denyed in lyke maner to come to Masse, and therefore beside the heauye displeasure of her father was not onely displaced from her rouse, and put out of the house, but also was in greate ieopardye of further tryall. But the Lorde who disposeth for euery one as he seeth beste, wroughte her way out of her enemyes handes by flying ouer the Seas, where shee continued amongst other banished exiles in the Cittye of Geneua & of Basil, till the death of Queene Marye.

*The storye of Thomas Rose yet liuing, a Preacher, of the age of lxxvi. yeares, in the towne of Luton, and Countye of Bedford.

THis Thomas Rose a Deuonshyre man, was borne in Exmouth, and being made Priest in that couñtre, was brought out of it by one M. Fabiā,* to Polsted in Suffolke where y^e sayd M. Fabian was Parson, & in short tyme after, by his meanes was placed in y^e town of Hadley, wher he first cōming to some knowledg of the gospel, began first there to intreat vpon the Crede, & therupon to take occasiō to inueigh against Purgatory, praying to Saints & Images, about the tyme y^t M. Latimer began first to preach at Cambridge, in the tyme of Bilney & Arthur .47. yeares ago, or thereabout, in so much that many imbracing y^e truth of Christes Gospell, against the sayd Purgatory and other poynts: and the number of them daily increasing, y^e aduersaries beganne to stirre agaynst him, in so muche that M. Bale (who afterwarde became a godly zelous man) was Page 2083 then brought to preach agaynst the sayd Thomas Rose, & so did. This notwithstanding he continued still very vehēment agaynst Images, & the Lorde so blessed his labours that many began to deuise how to deface and destroy them and especially foure men, whose names were Ro. King, Ro. Debnam, Nic. Marsh, and Ro. Gard. which vsually resorted to his sermons & vpō his preaching were so inflamed with zeale, that shortly after they aduentured to de|stroy the Roode of Douercourt, which coste three of them theyr liues, as appeareth before pag. 1031. The three persons which suffered, and were hanged in chaynes, wer offered theyr liues,* to haue accused the sayd Thomas Rose, as of counsell with them, which refused so to do, and therfore suffered. The sayd Tho. Rose had the coat of the sayd Roode brought vnto him afterward, who burned it. The Roode was sayde to haue done many great myracles and great wonders wrought by him, and yet being in the fire could not help him selfe, but burned like a block, as in very deede he was.

At this time there were two sore enemies in Hadley, Walter Clerke, and Iohn Clerke, two brethren, these cōplayned to the Counsayle, that an hundred men were not able to fetch the sayde Thomas Rose out of Hadley, who then was vpon examination of his doctrine, committed to the Commissaries keeping. And in deede such was y^e zeale of a number towards the truth thē in that towne, y^t they were much offended, that their Minister was so taken frō them, and had therefore by force fet him from the Commissary, if certain wise men hadde not otherwise perswaded, which at length also with more quiet did set him in his office agayne,* which thing so angred y^e two brethren, Walter Clerke & Ioh. Clerk, that they complayned to y^e counsaile, as aforesayd, wherupon a serieant at armes named Cartwright, was sent from the counsaile, who arested the sayd Thomas Rose, & brought him before the counsaile. Then his aduersaries being called, they layd to his charge, y^t hee was priuy of the burning of the Rood of Douercourt, and vpon this he was committed to the prison in the Bish. of Lincolns house in Holborne, Bishop Langly the kinges Confessor, and there remayned he in prison, frō Shroftide till tyll Mydsomer very sore stocked tyll after Easter.

The stocks were very hye, & great, so that day & night he did lye with his backe on the ground,* vpon a litle straw with his heeles so hye, y^t by meanes the bloud was fallen from his feete, his feet wer almost without sense for a long time, & he herewith waxed very sicke, in so much that hys keeper pittying his estate, and hearing him cry sometye thorow the extremetie of payne, went to the bishop, & told him that he would not keep him to dye vnder his hand, & vpon this he had some more ease & libertie. Now at thys time his mother was come frō Hadley to see him, but she might not be suffered to speake w^t the saide Tho. Rose her son (such was their cruelty) but the B. flattered her, & gaue her a payre of pardon beades, & bade her go home & pray, for she might not see him, which thing pierced y^e harts both of y^e mother & sonne not a litle. At this time also certain mē of Hadley, very desirous to see him, trauallyd to speake w^t him, but might not be suffered, til at length they gaue the keeper 4. s. & yet then might not speake to him, or see hym otherwise then through a grate. And thus continued he til midsomer in prison there. Then was he remoued to Lambeth,* in the first yere of D. Cran. consecration, who vsed him much more courteously then euer the B. of Lincolne did, & at length worked his deliuerance, & set him at liberty: but yet so, that he was bounden not to come within xx. myles of Hadley. After this he came to London, and there preached the gospell halfe a yere, till Hadley men hearing therof, labored to haue him to Hadley agayn, & in deed by meanes of sir Iohn Rainsford knight, obtained at y^e Arch|bishops hād to haue him thither: howbeit, by meanes one was placed in y^e cure at Hadley, he could not enioy his office again there, but went to Stratford three miles off, and ther cōtinued in preaching y^e word 3. yeres til at lengthe the aduersaries procured an inhibition from the Bysh. of Norwiche, to put him to silence. But a great number trauayled to haue him continue in preaching, & subscribed a supplication to y^e archb. with seuē score hands, who vnder their seales also testified of his honest demeanor, so that the aduersaries this way preuayling not, they indicted him at Bury in Suffolk, so that he was constrayned to flee to lōdon, & to vse y^e aid of the L. Audly, then Lord Chauncellor who remoued the matter from thē, & called it before hym & after certain examination of the matter, did set him free & did send him by a token to the Lord Crōwell then L. pryuie Seale, for a licence frō the king, to preach, which being obteyned by the L. Cromwell his meanes (who hereupon also had admitted the sayd Thomas Rose his chaplayne) forthwith he was sent into Lincolnshyre and to Yorke. In the meane time such complaynt was made to the Duke of Northfolke,* for that he had preached against auricular cōfession, transubstantiation, & such other poyntes contened in the 6. articles (whiche then to haue done, by lawe was death) that the Duke in his owne person not onely sought him at Norwich, but also beset al the hauens for him, from Yarmouth to Londō, & being Lieuutenant, cōmaunded, y^t who soeuer could take y^e said T^r Rose, should hang him on y^e next tree. Howbeit the sayd Tho. Rose at hys commyng home, hauing warning hereof by certayne godly persons was conueyed away, & passed ouer to Flanders, and so to Germany vnto Zuricke, where a tyme he remayned with M. Bullinger, & afterward went to Basill, & there hosted w^t M. Grineus, till letters came that M. Doct. Barnes shuld be B. of Norwiche, & things shuld be reformed, & he restored. But whē he came ouer into Eng. againe it was nothing so, & therfore forthwith f^{led} agayne beyond y^e seas being so beset, as if the mighty prouidence of God had not sent him in readines to receaue him, y^e self same man,* bote and boy, y^t before caryed him ouer, it had not bene possible for him to haue escaped. But such was the goodnes of god towards him, that he safely was conueyed, & liued at Barow the space of 3. yeares, til at length purposing to come ouer into Englād, about busines that he had, he, his wife, & their chyld being but a yeare & three quarters old, vpō y^e sea, the ship being in great danger, wherin they sayled (for the mast being hewn downe in that perill, they wer caried whither soeuer the waues tossed them) they with dyuers others made a full accompt of death. Howbeit, at lengthe they wer taken prisoners, & caryed into Deepe in France hauing al their stuffe takē frō them, & xl.li. in mony. There they remayned prisoners frō Michaelmas til Hallowtide in great heauines, not knowing what woulde become of thē, but depending onely vpon Gods prouidēce, it pleased God at the same time, that one M. Young of the towne of Rye (who had heard hym preach before) came thither for y^e redeeming of certayne English men there takē prisoners. This M. Young moued to see them in this case, muche pitied them, & comforted them, and told them hee would pay their ransome, & so he did, had them away, & brought them to Rye, & from thence by stealth came they to London. At length the honourable Earle of Sussex hearing of the said Tho. Rose, sent for him, his wife, & his childe, & had them to his house at Attelborough, where they continued,* til at length it was blased abroad, that the Earle was a maintainer of such a man to reade in his house, as had preached against the Catholicke fayth (as they terme it.) The Earle being at the parlament, & hearing thereof, wrote a letter to warne him to make shift for himselfe, & to auoyd. So that frō thence he passed to London, making strait shiftes for a yeare there & somewhat more, til the death of king Henry. After the kinges death, he & others which in the kings general pardon were excepted (& therefore dead men, if they had bene taken whilest king Henry liued) by certaine of y^e Coūsayle were let at liberty, & at length, after K. Edward was crowned, were licensed to preach agayne by the king, who gaue vnto y^e said Tho. Rose, the benefice of Westham by London. But at the death of that vertuous and noble prince, he was deprived of al, & so should also haue bene of his life, had not God appointed him friends, who receiued him in London secretly, as their teacher in the congregation, amongst whom for the pore prisoners at their assēblies .x.li. a night oftentimes was gathered. And thus he continued amongst them, & with the Lady Uane almost a yere, in the raigne of Q. Mary. But although he oftentimes escaped secretly whilst he read to y^e godly in sundry places of London, yet at length through a Iudas that betrayed them, he with .xxxv. that were with him,* were takē in Bowchurchyard at a Shiermans house on Newyeres day at night being Tuesday. The residue being cōmitted to prisons, the sayd Tho. Rose was had to the B. of Winchester Ste. Gardiner, but the Bishop would not speeke with him that night, but committed him to the Clinkē tyl Tuesday after.

The first examination of Thomas Rose before Winchester at saint Mary Oueries.

ON Thursday being brought before the B. of Winchester at S. Mary Oueries, the said Tho. Rose spake as followeth.*

Rose.

It maketh me to maruayle (my Lord, quoth he) that I should be thus troubled for that which by the worde of God hath bene established, & by the lawes of this Realme allowed, & by your own writing so notably in your booke De vera obedientia, confirmed.

Bysh.

Ah sirha, hast thou gotten that?

Page 2084

Rose.

Yea, my Lord, I thanke God, and do confesse my self much thereby confirmed. For as touching the doctrine of the supremacie agaynst the B. of Romes vsurped authoritie, no man hath sayde further. And as I remember you confesse in it, that when this truth was reuealed vnto you you thought the scales to fall from your eyes.

Bishop.

Thou lvest like a varlet, there is no such thinge in my booke, but I shall handle thee and suche as thou art well enough. I haue lōg looked for thee, & at length haue caught thee. I will knowe who be thy maynteiners, or els I will make thee a foote longer.

Rose.

My Lord, you shall doe as much as pleaseth God, & no more, yet the lawe is in our hand: but I haue God for my maynteiner▪ & none other. At these wordes one of his seruāts stepped forth and said: my lord, I heard this man preach by Norwich in sir Iohn Robsters house, & in hys praier he desired God to turne Q. Maries hart, or elles to take her out of the world: and this was in K. Edw. time.

Rose.

My Lord, I made no such prayer, but next after the king I prayed for her after this sort, saying: Ye shall pray for my Lady Maries grace, that God wil vouchsafe to indue her with his spirite, that she graciously may perceiue y^e misteries contained within his holy lawes, and so render vnto him her hart purified w^t true fayth, & true & loyall obedience to her soueraigne lord and king, to the good ensample of the inferiour subiects. And this, my Lord, is already aunswered in mine own hand writing to y^e counsel. Unto this he sayd little, but turning his face to certayne y^t were by him: This is he (quoth the Bishop) that my Lord of Norwich told me had begotten his mayd with chylde.

Rose.

This is no heresie, my Lord, although it be a lye. In deed certayn wicked persons rayseed this report of me, for y^e hatred they bare to the doctrine whiche I preached: but for purgatiō of my self herein. I had no lesse then 6. of the counsaills hands, y^t there might be due & dilligent examinaⁿtion for this matter in the country by men of worship appointed for that purpose, who can al testifie (I thank god) that I am most cleare frō such wickednes, & in deede they haue cleared me frō it, & therfore I doubt not but all good mē will espye y^e mischieuous deuise of mine aduersaries, whych (when other wayes fayled) by such sinister means went about to draw me into discredite & hatred: but God which is the helper of y^e innocēt, & searcher of mens harts hath & doth defend me, & hath layd open thinges that wer hid, to their shame. One of y^e chief reporters of this, that I should so abuse my self, was one M. Clarke seruauant & in some estimation w^t the old Lord Treasurer of England re^puted & taken for a coniurer, who afterwards for his good demerites hanged himself in the Tower. Then the bishop commanded y^t I shoulde be caryed to the tower,* & be kept safely, where I did lye til it was the weeke before Whitsōtide. Before which time I was twice called, when as the bish. came to the tower about other prisoners. Notwythstanding the B. had no great talk with me, but spake frēdly. Howbeit, one sir Rich. Southwell knight still accused me for my prayer, & sayde, I did put a difference betwixte Lady Mary & Lady Elizabeth, for that I prayed in king Edwardes fayth, & prayed that he would confirme Lady Elizabeth in that which was well begō in her. Unto this the bish. sayde little: but in the weeke before Pentecost I was conueyed from the tower to Norwich, there to be examined by the bish. and his clergy, as concerning my faith the maner wherof here followeth.

¶The second examination of Tho. Rose before the bishop of Norwiche, Hopkins by name, in his owne Palace in the presence of sir William Woodhouse knight, M. Stewarde the Chauncellor, Doct. Barret, with diuers others, the Wednesday in Whitson weeke. an. Domini. 1553.

*After I was presented by my keeper, the bishop immediately asked me what I was. I told him I had bene a Minister.

Bishop.

What is this to the purpose, were yee a Fryer or a Priest▪

Rose.

Fryer was I neuer, but a Prieste haue I bene, and beneficed by the kinges Maiesty.

Byshop.

Where were ye made Priest?

Rose.

In Exceter, in the county where I was borne. Thē the bishop required of me my letters of orders. I told hym I knew not where they were become, for they wer things of me not greatly regarded.

Byshop.

Well, you are sent to me to be examined: what say you, will you submit your selfe to the order of the Church of England?

Rose.

My Lord, I trust I am not out of the order of chrystes Church in England, neither do I knowe my selfe an offender there agaynst.

Bysh.

What, ye•, ye haue here preached moste damnable & deuilish doctrine.

Rose.

Not so, my lord. The doctrine by me here preached, was both true, sincere, & holy. But in deede the doctrine y^t is now set forth, is most wicked and damnable, yea & that both agaynst Gods lawes & mans. But as for the doctrin by me preached, it is grounded vpon the word of God, set out also by the authoritie of two most mighty kings, with the consent of all the Nobilitie and clergy of the same, so y^t I preached nothing but their lawfull proceedinges, hauing their lawfull authoritie vnder their broad Seales for confirmation of y^e same, for which my doying ye cannot iustly charge me. For why, sithens the lawe ceased, I haue kept silence, so that the Counsaile which sent me vnto you haue not charged me therwith. Wherefore ye doe me open wrong to burden me with that wherein I am free.

Chanc.

What sir? ye are very captious, answerest thou my Lord after such a sort?

Rose.

Syr (sayd I) I aunswere for my selfe, and accordyng to the truth, wherwith ye ought not to be offended, if ye be of God.

Chaunc.

Thou art an euill man. Wast thou not abiured be^fore now?

Rose.

No, ye vntruely report me, and are in no wise able to proue that whiche ye haue spoken: so that your wordes appeare to proceede altogether of malice, whiche I haue not deserued at your handes. But in this I well perceiue ye are made an instrument to vtter other mennes malice conceiued of olde.

Chaunc.

What sayest thou to the reall presence in the sacrament?

Rose.

I wist right well yee were made an instrument to seeke innocent bloud: well ye may haue it, if God permitte it is present and at hande, for I am not come hither to lye, but to dye (if God see it good) in defence of that whiche I haue sayd. Wherefore ye may begin when ye shall thinke good, for I haue sayd nothing but the trueth, and y^e which in those dayes was of al men allowed for truth, & agaynst the which ye at that time durst not once whisper, although ye now brag neuer so much.

Bish.

Wel father Rose, sayd he, what soeuer hath ben done in times past, shal not now be called in question, so that ye now submit your self. For not only you, but all the whole realm hath bene out of y^e right way, both high & low, spiri^tual & tēporal but al notw^tstāding haue submitted thēselues & acknowledged their faith. Wherefore if ye wil be accoūted for an Englishman, ye must likewyse submit your selfe.

Rose.

My L. I am an Englishman borne, & do most humbly require of y^e christian congregation of England,* to bee counted as a perticular member of the same, & with al due reuerence submit my self as in forme & maner followyng: That whatsoever law or laws shal be set forth in the same for the establishment of Christs true religion, & that according to y^e faith & doctrine of y^e holy patriarchs & prophets, Iesus Christ, & his holy apostles, w^t the faithful fathers of Christs primatiue church: I do not only hold it & beleeeue it, but also most reuerently obey it. At which my assertion, the B. seemed to be greatly reioiced, & said: well, then we shall soone be at a point. But said he, you shal take this for no day of examination, but rather of communication, so that ye shall now depart & pawse your selfe, vntill we call for you againe, and so ended our first meetyng.

¶The third examination of Thomas Rose.*

ON the Friday following, I was called agayne into Christes church within their Ladies chapell (as they termed it) where was gathered a great part of the whole citie of Norwich, & after I was by my keper presented, y^e B. began with a great protestation, & after many wordes demanded of me whether according to my former promise I would submit my selfe or no? I answered as before I had done, y^t according to my former protestation, I would most gladly obey. Then said the Chauncellor, to vtter hys gentlenes, I thinke ye do but fayne.

Rose.

The fault then (said I) shal be in your selfe, and not in me. For if ye burthen me with nothing but scriptures, & the fathers of Christes primatiue church, then, as I sayde before, so I say agayne, I shall most gladly obey.

Chanc.

Well then, seeyng you chalenge to be a member of the church of England, your mother here for triall of obedience, prouoketh you, as mothers are woont, to allure you to receiue this little gift at her hand.

Rose.

Forsooth sayd I, if she offer it me, as receyued of God my father, I shal gladly receiue it, as from the hand of my very true and ghostly mother.

Chanc.

What say you to care confession? * is it not a law ecclesiasticall, and necessary for the church of England?

Rose.

Some wayes it might be permitted, & some wayes Page 2085 not, & that because it had not his originall of God & hys blessed word: and yet I deny not, but y^t a man beyng troubled in his conscience, and resorting to a discreete, sober & christian learned man, for the quieting of hys mind, might well be permitted: but to binde a man vnder payne of dānation, once euey yeare to number his sinnes into y^e eare of a filthy lecherous priest, is not of God, neither cā be approued by his word.

Bish.

Ah sirrha, yee will admitte nothing but scripture, I see well.

Rose.

No truely, my Lord, I admit nothing but scripture for the regiment of the soule: * for why, faythe commeth by hearing, & hearing by the word of god, and where y^e word of God is not, there ought no beliefe to bee geuen. For what soeuer is not of fayth, is sinne, and here they leaue of speaking any more of that matter.

But then M. Chancelor began to whet his teeth at me saying: Yea, but you haue here preached that the reall, naturall, and substantiall presence of Christ is not in the Sacrament of the altar: what say ye to that?

Rose.

Uerily I say, that you are a bloody man, & seeke to quench your thirst w^t the bloud of an innocent, & therefore to satisfie you in that behalfe, I say verily vnto you, that euen so I haue here preached, and althoughe contrary to law, you charge me with y^e same, yet will I in no wise deny it, though iustly I might do it, but stand thereunto, euē to seale it with my bloud, desiring all that be here present, to testifie the same, and beleue it as the onely truth.

Bish.

I charge you all beleue it not.

Rose.

Yea, But my Lord, sayde I, if ye will needes haue credence geuen you, you must bring Gods word to main^tayne your sayinges.

Bish.

Why, doth not Christ say: This is my body? and can there be any playner wordes spoken?

Rose.

It is true, my Lord, y^e words be as playne as can be and euē so be these, where as it is said, I am a dore, a vine and Christ called a stone, a Lyon, and yet is hee naturally none of these. For they be all figuratiue speeches, as both the scriptures and fathers do sufficiently proue.

At which my saying, the Bishop woulde haue had me stay, saying, I should haue an other day, wherin I might take better aduisement.

Rose.

Not so, my Lord, sayde I, for I am at a full point w^t my selfe in that matter, * and am right well able to proue both your transubstantiation, with the reall presence, to be agaynst the scriptures & the ancient fathers of the primatiue church. For Iustinus which is one of the ancientest writers that euer wrote vpon the sacramentes, wryteth in his 2. Apologie, that the bread, water, and wine in the sacrament, are not to be taken as other meates & drinkes, but bee meates purposely ordayned to geue thanks vnto God, and therefore be called Eucharistia, and also haue the names of the body and bloud of Christe, and that it is not lawfull for anye man to eate and drinke of them, but suche as professed the religion of Christ, and liue also accordyng to theyr profession: and yet sayth he, the same bread & drink is chaunged into our flesh and bloud, and nourisheth our bodyes. By which saying it is euident, that Iustine ment that the bread and wine remayne still, or els they coule not haue bene turned into our fleshe and bloud, and nourish our bodyes. At which my saying they were not a litle troubled, but enforced themselues to haue denyed the Doctor, and would suffer me to speake no more, but strait way was I caryed away vnto my lodging: and so ended the second day of mine appearaunce, whiche was the Friday in Whitson weeke, and then was I appoynted to appeare agayne on the monday following. Howbeit, vpon what occasiō, I know not, it was deferred vnto the Wednesday, which was Corpus Christi Euen.

His talke with the Earle of Sussex, sir William Woodhouse, and the Bishops chaplaines.

IN the meane time the Byshop sent two of his chaplens to me, with whome I had communication about the reall presence: and after long reasoning to & fro, concerning this poynt, at length I droue them to this issue, whether they did confesse that Christ in the selfe same bodye whiche was conceiued of the virgin Mary, and wherein he suffered and rose agayne, do in the selfe same body naturally, substancially, and really sit at the right hande of God the father, without returne from thence vntill the daye of the generall iudgement or not? Whereunto they aunswered, Yes truly, sayd they, we confesse it, hold it, and beleue it. Then I agayne demaunded of them, whether they did affirme, after the wordes pronounced by the minister ther to remayne flesh, bloud, bones, heare, nayles, as is wonte most grossely to bee preached, or not? And they with great deliberation aunswered, that they did not onely abhorre y^e teaching of such grosse doctrine,* but also would detest thē selues, if they should so thinke.

At which two principall poyntes, wherein they fully confirmed my doctrine which I euer taught, I was not a little comforted and reioyced, but marueilously encouraged. Wherupon I demaunded againe of them, what maner of body they then affirmed to be in the Sacrament? Forsooth, sayd they, not a visible, palpable, or circumscribable bodye, for that is alwaies at the fathers right hande, but in the sacrament it is inuisible, and can neither be felt, seene, nor occupy any place, but is there by the omnipotēcie of Gods woorde they knowe not howe.

And for this they brought in S. Augustine, although of them not truly vnderstanded, yet would they admit none other sense then their owne, but would take vpon them to confirme it with Martine Luther, Melanchthon, Bucer, and Caluine, so that I perceiuing their obstinacie in that behalfe, gaue them ouer for that time, & afterwarde talked with Doctour Barret, whome I also found of the same iudgement in that behalfe. For (sayd he) if ye shoulde dissent from the Fathers of the Primatiue church in thys behalfe, of which S. Augustine is one, ye shall be counted to die out of the fauour of God. Well, all this their obstinacie and blasphemous errors imprinted and deeply weighed in my minde, I gaue them al ouer, and the more quietly to bring them to confesse that openly, whiche they vnto me had graunted priuately, I graunted them, according to the scriptures, and my former protestation, a presence, although not as they supposed.

After all this, came there vnto me the honorable Earle of Sussex, and that gentle knight sir William Woodhouse, wyth great perswasions: vnto whome I sayd, after long talke, that I would doe all that I might, sauing my conscience, whiche I would in no wise pollute, and no more I haue, as knoweth God, by whome all menne must be iudged.

His last appearance before the Bishop.

NOw to come to my last appearaunce,* after I was before the Bishop presented, he forthwith demaunded of me, whether I were resolu'd, as hee had hearde say. To whom I aunswared, that euen as alwayes I had sayde before, y^t euen so I was now. Unto whom by low bowing my knee. I gaue my due reuerence, and the rather for that y^e honorable Earle of Sussex was there. Wherewith some which would be counted great Gospellers, were, contrary to all Christianitie, sore offended. Then I sayde, that what soeuer lawes were set forth for y^e establishment of Christes true religion, & that according to the doctrine of Christes holy Apostles, & the faithful fathers of y^e primitiue church, I did not only obey them, but most earnestly imbrace and beleue them. Yea, and yet to the further blynding of theyr eyes, I sayd, y^t yf any thing could iustly be proued by gods holy worde, by me heretofore preached or taught vntruly, either for lacke of learning, slide of tongue, or of ignorāce, yet by better knowledge whē it shall iustly be tryed & examined by the same: I shall not refuse (the thing perfectly approued) to reuoke y^e same. Prouided alwayes, the word of God herein to be iudge.

Al this spake I (as God knoweth) to keepe them from suspecting that which I went about, and that they should haue none occasion to iudge me of obstinacy. Then sayd I moreouer. Al you must of force confesse, that y^e doctrine by me heretofore preached, had besides the authority of Gods eternall veritye, the authority of two most noble & mighty princes, with the aduice and counsel of al the Nobility and Clergy of the same, and that with great deliberation from time to time, with open disputations in both y^e Uniuersities: enacted also by parlament with the consent of the whole body and Commons of the same, and that without any resistance or gainsaying established, as a religion most pure & perfect, most earnestly and sincerely preached by y^e principall Bishops and Doctors, and y^t before the kinges maiesties person, & I as one being called to that office, did the like, with all the rest, and in the zeale of God, & wyth a pure conscience did set forth the same as the onely & absolute truth of God, and the iust and most true proceedings of my soueraigne Lord and king, and I had then my head at that present euen where it now standeth, betwixt myne eares, altogether applying the same, to apprehende wyth all dilligence, that which then was established and taught as the onely and absolute truth, and a thing vnto me most desirous and well liking, without my desire to heare the contrary, till now through this my captiuitie I am compelled to heare the contrary part speak, who are euen here present, and which my Lord sent vnto me.

Page 2086Of whom after long disputations priuately to and fro before this time had betwixt vs, at length I haue heard by them a cōtrary doctrine, which I neuer before had heard, and therefore must confesse myne owne ignoraunce in the same. For (quoth I) after I had inforced these men here present (meaning the Bishops two Chapleynes) to confesse Iesus Christes naturall body with his full complete members in the due order and proportiō of a perfect mans body to be present at the right hand of God the father, and that w^tout returne from thence vntill the last iudgement, and also that after the woordes pronounced by the Priest, there remaineth no suche grosse presence of flesh, bloude, bones, heare, and nailes, as was wont to be preached, but that after I had demaunded of them what maner of body they affirmed to be present, they saide: A body inuisible by the omnipotencie of Gods word, which neither can be felt nor seene, nor that hathe anye distinction of members, but such a body as occupieth no place, but is there, they know not how, necessity compelled me to confesse mine ignorāce in that behalfe: although in very deede they perceiued not my meaning therein, neither was it in my thoughte they should so doe. For by this their confession, and my silence, afterward I perceiued their horrible blasphemies.

And me thought, in this I had well discharged at that time my conscience, in causing them in open audience to confesse the same, and so I graunted a presence, but not as they supposed.

For onely I sayd, that Christ after the worde pronounced, is present in the lawfull vse and right distribution of his holye Supper, which thing I neuer denied, nor anye godly man that euer I heard of. For (sayde I) Eusebius Emissenus, a man of singulare fame and learning, aboute 300. yeares after Christes Ascension, saieth: That the conuersion of the visible creatures of bread and wine into the body and bloude of Christ, is like vnto our conuersion in Baptisme, where nothing is outwardly chaunged, but al the chaunge is inwardly by the mightye woorking of the holy Ghost,* which fashioneth and frameth Christe in the heart and mind of man, as by the example of Peter preaching to the people. Actes 2. By which he so p•erced theyr consciences, that they openly with most earnest repentāce confessed their sinnes, saying: Men & brethren, what shall we doe? Repent, and be baptized euery of you (said Peter) in the name of Iesus Christ: so that at this Sermon there were which turned vnto Christ, three thousand persones, in whome Christ was so fashioned and framed, as that he did dwell in euery one of them, and they in him: and after the like maner (sayd I) is Christ present in the lawfull vse and right distribution of his holy Supper, and not otherwise. For although I sayd, according to the truth, y^e Christ dwelt in euery one of these persones rehearsed, yet meant I nothing lesse, then that he in them should haue a grosse, carnall, or fleshly dwelling.

*And no more meant I (as knoweth God) hym carnally or naturally to be in the Sacrament, but according to the Scriptures, and my former protestation, that is, to the spirituall nourishment of all such as woorthelye come vnto that holy Supper, receiuing it according to his holy Institution.

And thus I ended, whych the Papistes moste maliciously and sclaunderously named a recantation, whyche I neuer meant nor thought (as God knoweth).

Now after I had thus concluded my speache, the Bishop taking me by the hand, sayd: Father Rose, you may be a woorthy instrument in Gods church, and we will see to you at our comming home (for hee was aboute to take hys iourney in visitation of his Diocesse) and they feared much at this very time, least Queene Marie should haue miscaried in childe trauaile, which was looked for, beyng then accounted very greate with childe, so that they were not so fierce as they had bene, and doubted very muche of some sturre, if I shoulde haue suffered, and therefore were glad to be rid of me, so that by any colourable meanes for theyr owne discharge it might be: so that the night folowing I was onely committed to mine olde lodging.

On the morowe when the Bishop was ready to ride forth in visitation, he called me before him, and perceiuing that sir William Woodhouse did beare me great fauoure, sayde, he was sorie for me and my expenses, and therefore wished that I were somewhere, where I might spend no more money, till his retourne. Why my Lord (quoth Syr William Woodhouse) he shall haue meate and drinke, and lodging with me, til your returne againe, seeing you now breake vp house, and hereuppon I went home wyth Syr William that good Knight,* who most gently entertained me, and I had great libertie. Uppon thys the Papisticall priestes of the Colledge of Christes Church in Norwich, for that they sawe me at libertye in Sir Williams absence (who also was then from home a fortnight) blased it abroad, that sir William was bounden for me in body & lands. At his comming home therfore I asked sir William if he were so bounden for me: and he denied it. Then sayd I: syr, but for the reuerence I beare to you, I might haue ben an hundred miles from you ere this. But I trust now sir, seeing you be not bounden for me, I may go visite my frends. Go where you wil, said sir William, for (quoth he) I tolde the bishop I would not be his gailer, but promised onely meate, drinke, and lodging for you. Shortly after, vppon the deuise of some friendes, I was closely conueyed to a friendes house, where almost a moneth I was secretly kept, til rumours were ouer. For at the Bishops returne, searching was for mee, in so muche as all houses where it was knowen I had bene acquainted, were searched, and the shippes at Yarmouth.

At the length the Bishop sent to a Coniurer, to know of him which way I was gone, and he answered, that I was gone ouer a water, and in the keeping of a woman. And in very deede I was passed ouer a small water, and was hid by a blessed woman and godly widowe (whiche liued in a poore cottage) the space of iij. weekes, till all the great heate was ouer.

Then was I conueyed to London, and from thence passed ouer the seas, where I liued till the death of Quene Marie, and that it pleased GOD for the comforte of his Church, and restoring of all poore exiles and prisonners for his names sake, to blesse thys Realme, wyth the gouernement of our noble Queene, whome God to the glory of his owne name, and the defence of his Church, according to his good will and pleasure long preserue and continue ouer vs. Amen.

A briefe discourse concernyng the troubles and happy deliuerance of the Reuerend Father in God, Doct. Sandes, first Bish. of Worcester, next of London, and now Archb. of Yorke.

King Edward died, the world being vnworthie of hym, the Duke of Northumberland came downe to Cambridge with an armie of men, hauyng Commission to proclaime Lady Iane Queene, and by power to suppress Lady Mary, who tooke vpon her that dignitie, and was proclaimed Queene in Northfolke. The Duke sent for D. Sandes being Uicechancellor, for D. Parker, for D. Bill, and M. Leauer, to suppe with hym. Amongst other speeches he sayd: Maisters, pray for vs that we speede well, if not, you shall be made Bishops, and we Deacons. And euen so it came to passe, D. Parker, and D. Sandes were made Bishops, and he and Sir Iohn Gates, who was then at the Table, were made Deacons ere it was long after, on the Tower hill. D. Sandes beyng Uicechancellor, was required to preach on the morrow. The warning was short for such an Auditorie, and to speake of such a matter: yet hee refused not the thing, but went into his chamber, & so to bed. He rose at 3. of the clocke in the mornyng, tooke his Bible in his hand, and after that hee had prayed a good space, he shut his eyes, and holding his Bible before hym, earnestly prayed to God that it might fall open where a most fit text should be for hym to intreat of. The Bible as God would haue it, fell open vpon the first chapter of Iosua, where he found so conuenient a piece of Scripture for that tyme, that the lyke he coulde not haue chosen in all the Bible. His texte was thus: Responderunt{que} ad Iosue atque dixerunt, Omnia quae precepisti nobis faciemus, & quocunque miseris ibimus: sicut obediuius in cūctis Mosi ita obediemus & tibi, tantum sit Dominus Deus tuus tecum sicut fuit cum Mose, qui contradixerit ori tuo, & non obedierit cunctis sermonibus quos preceperis ei, moriatur: tu tantum comfortare & viriliter age. Who shall consider what was concluded by such as named themselues by the state, and withall, the Auditorie, the tyme, and other circumstāces, he shall easily see that this text most fitly serued for the purpose. And as God gaue the text, so gaue he hym suche order and vtterance, as pulled many teares out of the eye of the biggest of them.

In the tyme of his Sermon one of the Gard lift vp to hym into the Pulpit a Masse booke and a Graile, whiche sir George Haward with certaine of the Gard had taken that night in M. Hurlestons house where lady Mary had bene a little before, and there had Masse. The Duke with the rest of the nobilitie, required Doct. Sandes to put hys sermon in writyng, and appointed M. Leauer to goe to London with it, and to put it in print. D. Sandes required Page 2087 one day and a halfe for writyng of it. At the tyme appoynted he had made it ready, and M. Leauer was ready booted to receiue it at his handes, and cary it to London. As he was deliuering of it, one of the Bedles named M. Adams, came weping to hym, and prayed hym to shift for hymselfe, for the Duke was retired, and Queene Mary proclaimed.

Doctor Sandes was not troubled herewithall, but gaue the sermon written to M. Layfield. M. Leauer departed home, and he went to dinner to one M. Mores a Bedle, his great friend. At the dinner, maistresse Moores seyng him mery and pleasant (for he had euer a mans courage, and could not be terrified) dranke vnto hym, saying: M. Uicechancellor, I drinke vnto you, for this is the last tyme that euer I shall see you. And so it was, for she was dead before D. Sandes returned out of Germany. The Duke that night retyred to Cambridge, and sent for Doct. Sandes to go with hym to the Market place to proclaim Queene Mary. The Duke cast vp his cap with others, and so laughed that the teares ranne downe hys cheekes for grieffe. He told D. Sandes that Queene Mary was a mercifull woman, and that he doubted not thereof: declaryng, that he had sent vnto her to know her pleasure, and looked for a generall pardon. Doctor Sandes answered, my life is not deare vnto me, neither haue I done or sayd any thyng that vrgeth my conscience. For that which I spake of the state, I haue instructions warranted by the subscription of xvj. Counsailors. Neither can speach bee treason, neither yet haue I spoken further then the worde of God, and lawes of this Realm doth warrant me, come of me what God will. But be you assured, you shall neuer escape death: for if she would saue you, those that now shall rule, will kill you.

That night the Gard apprehended the Duke, and certaine Groomes of the Stable were as busie with Doctor Sandes as if th•y would take a prisoner. But Sir Iohn Gates who lay then in Doctor Sandes his house, sharply rebuked them, and draue them away. Doct. Sandes by the aduise of Sir Iohn Gates, walked into the fields. In the meane tyme, the Uniuersitie contrary to all order, had met together in consultation, and ordered, that D. Mouse and D. Hatcher, should repaire to D. Sandes lodgyng, and fee away the statute booke of the Uniuersitie, the keys, and such other things that were in his keepyng, & so they did, for D. Mouse beyng an earnest Protestant the day before, and one whom Doct. Sandes had done much for, now was he become a Papist, and his great enemy. Certaine of the Uniuersitie had appointed a congregation at after noone. As the Bell rang to it, D. Sandes commeth out of the fieldes, and sending for the Bedles, asketh what the matter meaneth, and requireth them to waite vppon hym to the Schooles, accordyng to their duetie. So they did, And so soone as D. Sandes, the Bedles goyng before hym, came into the Regent house & tooke his chaire. One M. Mitch with a rabble of vnlearned Papists, went into a by schoole, and conspired together to pull hym out of his chaire, and to vse violence vnto hym. D. Sandes began his Oration, expostulatyng with the Uniuersitie, charyng them with great ingratitude, declaring that hee had sayd nothing in his sermon, but that he was ready to iusti••e, and that their case was all one with his: For they had not onely concealed, but consented to that whiche hee had spoken.

And thus while hee remembred vnto them howe beneficiall he had ben to the Uniuersitie, and their vnthankfulnes to him agayne, in commeth M. Mitche with hys conspirators about xx. in number. One layeth hand vpon the chaire to pull it from hym, another told hym that that was not hys place, and another called hym traitor. Wherat he perceuyng how they vsed violence, & beyng of great courage, groped to his dagger, and had dispatched some of them as gods enemies, if D. Bill and D. Blith had not fallen vpon hym, and prayed hym for Gods sake to holde his handes and be quiet, and patiently to beare that great offred wrong. He was perswaded by them, and after that tumult was ceased, he ended his Oration, & hauing some money of the Uniuersities in his handes, he there deliuered the same euery farthyng. He gaue vp the bookes, reckonings and keyes, pertainyng to the Uniuersitie, and withall, yelded vp his Office, praying God to geue to the Uniuersitie a better Officer, and to geue them better and more thankefull hartes, and so repaired home to his own Colledge.

On the morrowe after, there came vnto hym one M. Gerningham, and one M. Thomas Mildmay. Gerningham tolde hym, that it was the Queenes pleasure that two of the Gard should attend vpon hym, & that hee must be caried prisoner to the Tower of London with y^e Duke. M. Mildmay sayd, he meruailed that a learned mā would speake so vnaduisedly agaynst so good a Prince, and wilfully run into such danger. D. Sandes aunswered. I shal not be ashamed of bonds, But if I could do as M. Mildmay can, I needed not feare bondes: For he came downe in payment agaynst Queene Mary, and armed in y^e field, and now he returneth in payment for Queene Mary, before a traitor, and now a great friend. I cannot with one mouth blow whote and cold after this sort.

Upon this, his stable was robbed of foure notable good geldinges, the best of them Maister Hudlestone tooke for hys owne Saddle, and roade on hym to London in hys sight. An Inuentory was taken of all his goodes by M. Moore Bedle for the Uniuersitie. He was set vpon a lame horse that halted to the ground, which thyng a friend of his perceiuyng, prayed that he myght lend hym a nagge. The yeomen of the Gard were content. As he departed forth at the Townes ende, some Papists resorted thither to giere at hym, some of his friends to mourne for hym. He came into the ranke to London, the people beyng full of outcryes. And as he came in at Bishops gate, 〈◇〉 like a milk wife hurled a stone at hym, and hit 〈...〉 brest wyth such a blow, that he was lyke to fall of 〈...〉. To whō he mildly sayd: Woman, God forgeue it thee. Truth is, that iourney and euill intreatyng so mortified him, that he was more ready to die, then to lyue.

As hee came through Tower hill streete, one woman standing in her doore, cried: Fie on thee thou knaue, thou Knaue, thou Traitor, thou Hereticke. Whereat hee smiled. Looke, the desperate Hereticke (sayeth shee) laugheth at this geare. A woman on the other side of the streat, answered, saying: Fie on thee neighbor, thou art not woorthy to be called a woman, railing vpon thys Gentleman whome thou knowest not, neither yet the cause why he is thus intreated. Then shee sayd, good Gentleman, God be thy comfort, and geue thee strēgth to stand in Gods cause euen to the ende. And thus he passed thorow fire and water into the Tower. The first prisoner that entred in that day, which was S. Iames day. The yeomen of the garde tooke from him his borrowed Nagge, and what els so euer he had. His man one Quinting Suainton broght after him a Bible, and some shirtes and suche like thinges. The Bible was sent in to him, but the shirtes and suche like, serued the yeomen of the Garde.

After he had bene in the Tower three weekes in a bad prison, he was lifte vp into Nonnes bower, a better prison, where was put to him maister Iohn Bradforde.

At the day of Queene Maries Coronation, their pryson doore was sette open, euer shutte before. One maister Mitchel his olde acquaintance, and had bene prisoner before in the same place, came in to him and sayde: Maister Sandes, there is suche a stirre in the Tower, that neyther gates, doores, nor prisoners, are looked to this day. Take my Cloake, my Hatte, and my Rapier, and get you gon, you may goe oute of the gates without questioning, saue your selfe, and let me doe as I may. A rare friendship: but he refused the offer, saying: I knowe no iust cause whye I should be in prison. And thus to do were to make my selfe guiltie, I will expect Gods good will, yet must I thinke my selfe most bound vnto you, and so maister Michell departed.

While D. Sands and M. Bradford were thus in close prison together 29. weekes, one Iohn Bowler was their Keeper, a very peruerse Papist, yet by often perswading of him, for he would geue care, and by gentle vsing of him at the length he began to mislike Poperie and to fauor the Gospell, and so perswaded in true religion, that on a sonday when they had Masse in the Chappell, he bringeth vp a Seruice booke, a manchet and a glasse of wine, and there D. Sandes ministred the Communion to Bradforde and to Bowler. Thus Bowler was their sonne begotten in bondes when Wiate was in armes, and the olde Duke of Northfolke sent foorth with a power of men to apprehend him, that rouse might be made in the Tower for him and other his complices, Doctor Cranmer, D. Ridly, and M. Bradford were cast into one prison, and Doctour Sands with 9. other preachers were sent into the Marshalsea.

The Keeper of the Marshalsea appoynted to euerye preacher, a man to leade him in the streete, he caused them goe farre before, and he and Doc. Sandes came behinde, whom he woulde not lead, but walked familiarlye wyth him. Yet D. Sandes was knowne, and the people euery where prayed to GOD to comfort him and to strength him in the truthe. By that time the peoples mindes were altered, Poperie began to be vnsauerie. After they passed the Bridge, the keeper Thomas Way sayd to D. Sands: I perceiue the vaine people would set you forward to the fire, yee are as vaine as they, if you being a yong man wil Page 2088 stande in youre owne conceite, and preferre youre owne knowledge before the iudgement of so many worthy Prelates, auncient, learned, and graue menne as be in thys Realme. If you so doe, you shall finde me as strait a keeper as one that vtterly misliketh your Religion. Doctour Sandes answered: I knowe my yeares young and my learning small, it is enoughe to knowe Christe crucified, and he hath learned nothing that seeth not the greate blasphemie that is in Poperie, I will yeelde vnto God and not vnto man, I haue reade in the Scriptures of manye godly and courteous Keepers, God may make you one. If not, I trust hee will geue me strengthe and patience to beare your hard dealing with me. Sayth Thomas Way, doe yee then minde to stande to your Religion: Yea sayth Doctor Sandes, by Gods grace. Truly sayeth the Keeper, I loue you the better, I did but tempt you.

What fauour I can shew you, you shalbe sure of, and I shal think my selfe happie if I maye die at the stake with you. The sayde Keeper shewed Doctour Sandes euer after, all frendship: he trusted him to goe into the fieldes alone, and there mette with M. Bradforde, who than was remooued into the Benche, and there founde like fauour of his Keeper. He laid him in the best chamber in the house: he wold not suffer y^e Knight Marshals man to lay fetters on him, as others had. And at his request he put M. Sandes into him, to be his bedfellowe, and sondrye times suffered hys wife, who was M. Sandes daughter of Essex, a Gentlewoman, beutifull both in body and soule to resort to hym. There was great resort to Doctor Sands, and M. Sanders, they had much money offered them, but they would receiue none. They hadde the Communion there 3. or 4. times, and a great sort of Communicants. Doctor Sands gaue such exhortation to the people, for at that time being young, he was thoughte verye eloquent, that hee mooued many teares and made the people abhorre the Masse, and defie all Poperie.

When Wyat with his armie came into Southwarke, he sent two Gentlemen into y^e Marshalsea to D. Sandes: Saying, that maister Wyat would be glad of his companie and aduice, and that the gates should be sette open for all the prisonners. He aunswared: Tell maister Wyat, if this his rising be of God it will take place: If not, it will fall. For my part I was committed hether by order, I wil be discharged by like order, or I will neuer depart hence. So answeared maister Sanders, and the rest of the preachers being there prisoners.

After that doctor Sands had bene 9. weekes prisoner in the Marshalsea, by the mediation of syr Thomas Holcroft then Knight Marshall he was sette at libertye. Syr Thomas sued earnestly to the Bishop of Winchester, doctor Gardiner for his deliuerance after many repulses, except doctor Sandes woulde be one of their secte, and then he coulde want nothing. He wroong out of him that if the Queene coulde like of his deliuerance, he woulde not be against it: for that was Syr Thomas last request. In the meane time he hadde procured two Ladies of the Priuie chamber to mooue the Queene in it: Who was contented if the bishop of Winchester coulde like of it. The next time that the Bishop went into the priuie Chamber to speake wyth the Queene, master Holcroft followed and had his warrant for doctor Sandes remission readye, and prayed the two Ladies, when as the Bishoppe shoulde take hys leaue to put the Queene in minde of doctor Sandes. So they did. And the Queene sayde, Winchester: what thinke you by D. Sandes, is he not sufficiently punished. As it please your Maiestie sayeth Winchester. That hee spake, remembring his former promisse to M. Holcroft, that hee woulde not be against D. Sandes, if the Queene shoulde like to discharge him. Sayeth the Queene: Then truely, we would that he were set at libertie. Immediately M. Holcroft offered the Queene the Warrant. Who subscribed the same, and called Winchester to put too hys hande, and so he did. The Warrant was geuen to the Knyghte Marshall againe, Sir Thomas Holcroft. As the Bishop went foorth of the priuie Chamber dore, he called M. Holcroft to him: Commaunding him not to set D. Sandes at libertie, vntill he had taken suerties of two Gentlemen of his countrey with him, euery one bounde in 500. pounds that D. Sands should not depart out of the realme without licence. Master Holcroft immediatly after mette with two Gentlemen of the North, friendes and cousins to D. Sandes, who offered to be bounde in bodye, goodes and landes for him. At after dinner the same day, M. Holcroft sent for D. Sandes, to his lodging at Westminster, requiring the Keeper to company with him. Hee came accordingly, finiding M. Holcroft alone, walking in his garden. Maister Holcroft imparted his long sute, wyth the whole proceeding, and what effect it had taken to Doctor Sandes: muche reioycing that it was his good happe i• to doe him good, and to procure hys libertie, and that nothing remained, but that he would enter into bonds with his two suerties, for not departinge oute of the Realme. Doctour Sandes answered: I geue God thanks, who hath mooued your heart to minde me so wel, and I thinke my selfe most bounde vnto you, God shall requite, and I shall neuer be founde vnthankful. But as you haue dealt friendly with me, I will also deale plainly wyth you. I came a free man into prison, I will not goe foorth a bondman. As I cannot benefite my frendes, so will I not hurt thē: And if I be set at libertie, I will not tarie 6. dayes in this Realme if I may get out. If therefore I may not goe free foorth, sende mee to the Marshalsea againe, and there you shall be sure of me.

This answeare much misliked M. Holecroft: He told Doctor Sands that the time woulde not long continue, a chaunge would shortly come: the state was but a cloud, & would soone shake away. And that his cousin sir Edward Bray woulde gladly receiue him and his wife into house, where he should neuer nede to come at Church, and how the Ladie Braye was a zealous Gentlewoman, who hated Poperie. Adding that he would not so deale with him to loose all his labour. When D. Sandes coulde not be remooued from his former saying, maister Holcrofte sayde: Seeing you can not be altered, I will chaunge my purpose, and yeelde vnto you. Come of it what will, I wil see you at libertie: And seeing you minde ouer Sea, get you gone so quickly as you can. One thing I require of you, that while you are there, you wryte nothing to come hether, for so ye may vndo me. He frendly kissed D. Sands, bad him farewell, and commaunded the Keeper to take no fees of him: Saying, let me answer Winchester as I may. Doctour Sandes retourned with the keeper to the Marshalsee taried all night. There on the morow gaue a dinner to all the prisoners, bad his bedfellow, and sworne stake fellowe, if it had so pleased God, maister Saunders farewell, with manye teares and kissings, the one falling on the others necke, and so departed, clearly deliuered without examination or bonde. From thence hee went to the Benche, and there talked with M. Bradforde, and M. Farrar Bishop of Dauids, then prisoners. Then he comforted them, and they praised God for his happie deliuerance. Hee went by Winchesters house, and there tooke boate, and came to a frends house in London, called William Banks, and taried there one night. On the morrow at night he shifted to another frendes house, and there hee learned that searche was made for him.

Doctor Watson and M. Christopherson commyng to the Bishop of Winchester, told hym that hee had set at liberty the greatest heretike in England, and one that had of all other most corrupted the Uniuersitie of Cambridge D. Sandes. Whereupon the Bish. of Winchester beyng Chancellor of England, sent for all the Constables of Lōdon, commanding them to watch for D. Sands, who was then within the Citie, and to apprehend hym, and who so euer of them should take hym and brin• him to hym, hee should haue v. pounds for his labour. D. Sandes suspectyng the matter, conueighed hymselfe by night to one M. Barties house a straunger, who was in the Marshalsee with him prisoner a while, he was a good Protestant and dwelt in Marke lane. There he was sixe dayes, and had one or two of his friends that repaired vnto hym. Then he repaired to an acquaintance of his, one Hurlestone a Skinner, dwellyng in Cornehill, hee caused hys man Quinting to prouide two geldings for hym, mindyng on the morrow to ride into Essex to M. Sandes hys father in lawe, where his wyfe was.

At his goyng to bedde in Hurlestons house, he had a paire of hose newly made that were too long for hym. For while he was in the Tower, a Tailor was admitted him to make hym a paire of hose. One came vnto hym whose name was Benjamin, a good protestant dwellyng in Birching lane: he might not speak to hym, or come vnto him to take measure of hym, but onely looke vpon his leg, hee made the hose, and they were two inches too long. These hose he prayed the good wyfe of the house to sende to some Taylor to cut his hose two ynches shorter. The wyfe required the boy of the house to cary them to the next Taylor to cut. The boy chaunced (or rather God so prouided) to go to the next Taylor which was Beniamin that made them, which also was a Constable, and acquainted wyth the Lord Chauncellors commandement. The boy required hym to cut the hose. He sayde I am not thy Maisters Taylor. Sayth the boy, because ye are our next neighbour and my maisters Tailor dwelleth farre of I came to you, for it is farre nightes, and he must occupy them tymely in the mornynge. Beniamin tooke the hose and looked vppon Page 2089 them, he knew his handy worke, and sayd: These are not thy maisters hose, but Doct. Sandes, them I made in the Tower. The boy yelded and sayd, it was so. Sayth he, go to thy maistresse, pray her to sit vp till xij. of the clock, then I will bring the hose and speake with D. Sandes to his good.

At middennight, the goodwyfe of the house, and Beniamin the Taylor, commeth in to Doct. Sandes chamber. The wyfe praieth him not to be afraid of their commynge. He aunswereth, nothyng can be amisse, what God will, that shal be done. Then Beniamin telleth him y^t he made his hose, and by what good chaunce they now came to hys handes, God vsed the meane that he might admonish him of his perill, and aduise hym how to escape it, tellyng him that all the Constables of London, whereof he was one, watched for hym, and some were so greedily set, that they prayed hym if he tooke hym, to let them haue the cariage of hym to the Bishop of Winchester, and he should haue the v. pound. Saith Beniamin, it is knowen that your man hath prouided two geldings, and that you mynde to ride out at Algate to morrow, and there then ye are sure to bee taken. Follow myne aduise, and by Gods grace ye shall escape their handes. Let your man walke all the day to morrow in the streete where your horses stand, booted and ready to ryde. The goodmans seruaunt of the house shall take the horses and carye them to Bednoll greene. The goodman shall bee booted, and follow after as if he would ride. I will be here with you to morrow about viij. of the clocke, it is both Terme and Parliament tyme, here wee will breake our Fast, and when the streete is full, we will go forth. Looke wildely, and if you meete your brother in the streete, shunne hym not, but outface hym and knowe hym not. Accordingly D. Sandes did, clothed lyke a gentleman in all respectes, and looked wildly as one that had bene long kept in prison out of the light. Beniamin caried hym through Birching lane, and from one lane to another, till he come at Moore gate. There they went foorth vntil they came to Bednoll greene where the horses were redy, and M. Hurleston, to ride with hym as his man. D. Sandes pulled on his bootes, and takyng leaue of hys friend Beniamin, with teares they kissed eche other, hee put hys hand in his purse, and would haue geuen Beniamin a great part of that litle he had, but Beniamin would take none. Yet since, D. Sandes hath remembered hym thankfully. He rode that night to hys father in lawe, M. Sandes where his wyfe was, he had not bene there two howers, but it was told M. Sandes that there was two of the Garde which would that night apprehend Doctor Sandes, and so they were appoynted.

That night Doct. Sandes was guided to an honest Farmer neere the Sea, where hee taried two dayes and two nights in a chamber without all company. After that hee shifted to one Iames Mower a Shipmaister, who dwelt at Milton shore, where hee expected wynde for the English Fleete redy into Flaunders. While he was there Iames Mower brought to hym fortie or fiftie

Mariners, to whom he gaue 〈◇〉 exhortation, they liked him so well, that they promised to die for it, or that he should be apprehended.

The 6. of May beyng Sondag, the wynd serued. Hee tooke his leaue of his Hoste and Hostesse, & went towards the ship, in taking his leaue of his Hostesse who was barren, and had bene married viij. yeares. Hee gaue her a fine handkerchiefe and an old royall of gold in it, thanking her much, and sayd: Be of good comfort, or that an whole yere be past, God shall geue you a child, a boy. And it came to passe, for that day tweluumoneth lacking one day, God gaue her a faire sonne.

At the shore D. Sandes met with M. Isaac of Kent who had his eldest sonne there, who vpon the likyng hee had to D. Sandes, sent his sonne with hym, who afterward died in his fathers house in Franckford. D. Sands and D. Coxe, were both in one ship, beyng one Cockrels ship. They were within the kennyng, when two of the Gard came thether to apprehend D. Sands. They ariued at Andwerpe, beyng bid to dinner to M. Locke. And at dinner tyme one George Gilpin beyng Secretary to the English house, and kinsman to D. Sandes, came to hym and rounded hym in his eare, and sayde: King Phillip hath sent to make search for you, and to apprehende you. Hereuppon they rose from their dinner in a meruailous great shower, and went out at the gate toward the lande of Cleue. There they founde a Wagon and hasted away, and came safe to Ausburg in Cleueland where D. Sands taried 14. dayes, and then iorneyed towards Strausborough, where after he had lyued one yeaere, his wyfe came vnto hym. He fell sore sicke of a flixe, which kept hym nine monthes, and brought him to deathes dore. He had a child which fell sicke of the plague and died. His wyfe at length fell sicke of a consumption and dyed in his armes, no man had a more godly woman to his wyfe.

After this, M. Sampson went away to Emanuel, a man skilfull in the Hebrue. M. Grindall went into the countrey to learne the Dutch tongue. D. Sandes still remayned in Strausborough, whose sustentation then was chiefly from one M. Isaac, who loued him most dearely, and was euer more redy to geue, then he to take. He gaue hym in y^e space aboue one hundreth marks, which summe the sayd D. Sandes payd him agayne, and by hys other gifts and friendlines, shewed hymselfe to bee a thankfull man. When his wyfe was dead hee went to Zurike, and there was in Peter Martyrs house for the space of fiue weekes. Beyng there, as they sate at dinner, word sodenly came that Queene Mary was dead, and Doct. Sands was sent for by his friendes at Strausborough. That newes made M. Martyr, and M. Iaret then there, verye ioyfull, but D. Sands could not reioyce, it smote into his hart that he should be called to misery.

M. Bullinger and the Ministers feasted him, and hee tooke his leaue and returned to Strausborough where he preached, and so M. Grindall and he came towards England, and came to London the same day that Queene Elizabeth was crowned.

The myraculous preseruacion of Lady Elizabeth, nowe Queene of England, from extreme calamitie and danger of life, in the time of Q. Marie her sister.

*BUt when all hath beene sayde and tolde, what soeuer canne be recited touching the admyrable woorking of Gods present hande in defending and deliuering any one person oute of thraldome, neuer was there since the memorie of oure fathers, any example to be shewed, wherein the Lordes mightye power hathe more admirably & blessedly shewed it selfe, to the glory of his owne name, to the comforte of all good heartes, and to the publicke felicitie of thys whole

Realme, then in the myraculous custodie and outscape of this our soueraigne Lady, now Queene, then Ladye Elizabeth, in the straighte time of Queene Marye her sister.

In which Storie, first we haue to consider in what extreme miserie,* sicknes, feare, and pearil her highnes was: into what care, what trouble of minde, and what danger of death shee was brought. Firste with great routes and bands of armed men (and happie was he that might haue the carying of her) being fetched vp as the greatest traytour in the world, clapped in the Tower, and againe tossed from thence, from house to house, from prison to prison, from post to pillar, at length also prisoner in her own house, and garded with a sort of cutte throtes, whych euer gaped for the spoyle, whereby they might be fingering of somewhat.

Secondly, to consider againe we haue, all thys notw^tstanding, howe straungely, or rather myraculously from daunger shee was deliuered: what fauour and grace shee founde with the almighty, who when all helpe of man, and hope of recouerie was past, stretched out his mighty protection, and preserued her highnesse, and placed her in this Princely seate of rest and quietnesse, wherein nowe shee sitteth, and long may shee sit, the Lorde of his glorious mercy graunt, we beseeche him.

In which storie, if I should sette foorth at large and at full, all the particulars and circumstances thereunto belonging, and as iust occasion of the historie requireth, besides the importunate length of the storie discoursed, peraduenture it might mooue offence to some being yet alieue, and truth might gette me hatred. Yet notwithstanding I intend (by the grace of Christ) therein to vse suche breuitie and moderation, as both may be to the glorye of God, the discharge of the storie, the profite of the Reader, and hurte to none, suppressing the names of some, whome heere although I could recite, yet I thought not to be more cruell in hurting their name, then the Queene hath bene mercifull in pardoning their liues.

Therefore now to enter into the discourse of thys tragical matter,* first here is to be noted, that Queene Marye when shee was first Queene, before shee was crowned, would goe no whither, but would haue her by the hande, and send for her to dinner and supper: but after shee was crowned, shee neuer dined nor supped wyth her, but kept her aloofe from her. &c. After this it happened, immediatly vpon the rising of sir Thomas Wiat (as before was mentioned, pag. 1418.1419.) that the Ladye Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney were charged with false suspition of Syr Thomas Wyates rising. Whereuppon Queene Marye, whether for that surmise, or for what other cause I know not, being offended with the sayde Elizabeth her sister, at that time lying in her house at Ashridge, the next day after the rising of Wyat, sent to her three of her Counsaillours, to wit,* Sir Richard Sowthwel, syr Edward Hastings, then maister of the horse, and Syr Thomas Cornwalles, with their retinue and troupe of horsemen, to the number of 200. and 50. Who at their sodaine and vnprouided comming, founde her at the same time sore sicke in her bedde, and very feeble & weake of body. Whither whē they came, ascending vp to her graces priuie Chamber, they willed one of her Ladies, whome they mette, to declare vnto her grace, that there were certaine come from the court, which had a message from the Queene.

Her grace hauing knowledge therof, was right glad of their comming: howbeit being then very sicke, and the night farre spent (which was at 10. of the clock) she requested them by the messenger, that they would resort thither in the morning. To this they answered, and by the sayde messenger sent woorde againe, that they must needes see her, and would so do, in what case soeuer she were. Wherat the Lady being against, went to shewe her grace theyr woordes: but they hastely folowing her, came rushing as soone as shee into her graces chamber vnbidden.

At whose so sodaine comming into her bed chamber, her grace being not a litle amased, sayd vnto them▪* 〈◇〉 the hast suche, that it myghte not haue pleased you to 〈...〉 morrow in the morning?

They made answer, that they were righte sorye 〈◇〉 her in that case. And I (quoth shee) am not glad to see 〈◇〉 here at this time of the night. Whereunto they answered, that they came from the Queene to doe their message and duetie: which was to this effecte, that the Queenes pleasure was, that she shoulde be at London the 7. day of that present moneth. Whereunto shee sayde: Certesse, no creature more glad then I to come to her maiestie, being right sorie that I am not in case at this time to waite on her, as you your selues doe see and can well testifie.

In deede we see it true (quoth they) that you doe say: for which we are very sorie.* Albeit we •ette you to vnderstande, that our Commission is such, and so straineth vs, that we must needes bring you with vs, eyther quicke or dead. Wherat she being amased, sorowfully said, that their Commission was very sore: but yet notwithstanding she hoped it to be otherwise, and not so strait. Yes verely, said they. Whereupon they called for two Phisitions, Doctor Owen and Doctor Wendy, demaunded of them, whether she might be remoued from thence with lyfe, or no. Whose aunswere and iudgement was, that there was no impediment to theyr iudgement, to the contrary, but that shee might trauallye without daunger of lyfe.

In conclusion, they willed her to prepare agaynst the morning at nine of the clocke to goe with them,* declaring that they had brought with them the Queenes Litter for her. After much talk, the messengers declaring how there was no prolonging of times & daies, so departed to theyr chamber, being entertained and cheared as appertained to their worships.

On the next morow at the time prescribed, they hadde her forth as shee was, very faynt and feeble, and in suche case, that shee was ready to swound three or foure tymes betweene them. What shoulde I speake here that cannot well bee expressed,* what an heauy house there was to behold the vnreuerend and doulefull dealyng of these men, but especially the carefull feare and captiuitie of their innocent Lady and Mistresse.

Now to proceed in her iourney from Ashrydge, al sick in the Litter, she came to Redborne, where she was garded all night: From thence to S. Albones, to Syr Rafe Rowlets house, where she taryed that night, both feble in body, and comfortles in minde. From that place they passed to Maister Doddes house at Mymmes, where also they remayned that night: and so from thence she came to Highgate: where she being very sicke, taryed that night and the next day. During whiche time of her abode there, came many Purseuantes and messengers from the court: but for what purpose I cannot tell.

From y^e place she was conueied to the Court: whereby the way came to meete her, many Gentlemen, to accōpany her highnesse, which were very sory to see her in that case.* But especially a great multitude of people ther were standing by the way, who then flocking about her Luter, lamēted and bewailed greatly her estate. Now, when she came to the Court, her grace was there straight wais s••t vp, and kept as close prisonner a fortnight, which was till Palme sonday, seeing neither King nor Queene, nor lead, nor frend, all that time, but only then the Lord Chamberlaine, Syr Iohn Gage, and the Uicechamberlaine, which were attendant vnto the dores.* About whiche time Syr William Sentlowe was called before the Counsaile. To whose charge was laid, that he knew of Wyats rebellion. Which he stoutly denied, protesting y^t hee was a true man, both to God & his Prince, defying al traytors and rebels: but being straitly examined, he was in cōclusion committed to the Tower.

Page 2092The Friday before Palme sonday, the B. of Winchester, with xix. other of the Counsaile (who shall bee here namelesse) came vnto her grace from the Queenes Maiestie, and burdened her with Wiates conspiracie: which she vtterly denied,* affirmyng that she was altogether gilt lesse therin. They beyng not contented with this, charged her grace with busines made by sir Peter Carew, and the r•st of the Gentlemen of the West country: which also she vtterly denying, cleared her innocencie therein.

In conclusion, after long debating of matters, they declared vnto her, that it was the Queenes will & pleasure that she should go vnto the tower, while the matter were further •ried and examined.

Whereat shee beyng agaste, said, that shee trusted the Queenes Maiestie would bee more gracious Lady vnto her, and that her highnesse would not otherwise conceyue of her, but that she was a true woman: declaring furthermore to the Lordes, that she was innocent in all those maters wherein they had burdened her, & desired them therfore to be a further meane to the Queen her sister, that she beyng a true woman in thought,* word, and deed towards her Maiesty, might not be committed to so notorious and dolefull a place, protesting that she would request no mercy at her hand, if she should bee prooued to haue consented vnto any suche kynde of matter as they layed vnto her charge: and therefore in fine desired their Lordshippes to thinke of her what she was, and that she might not so extremely be delt withall for her truth.

Wherunto the Lords answered againe, that there was no remedy, for that the Queenes Maiestie was fully determined that she should go vnto the Tower. Wherewith the Lords departed, with their caps hangyng ouer theyr eyes. But not long after, within the space of an houre or little more, came foure of the foresaid Lordes of the counsaile, which were the Lord Treasurer, the B. of Winchester, the lord Steward, the Erle of Sussex, with the gard, who wardyng the nexte chamber to her,* seclused all her Gentlemen and Yeomen, Ladies and Gentlewomen, sauyng that for one Gentleman Usher, three Gentlewomē, and two Groomes of her Chamber, were appoynted in their roomes three other men of the Queenes, & three waiting women to geue attendance vpon her, y^t none shoulde haue accesse to her grace.

At which tyme there were an hundreth of Northren souldiours in white cotes, watching and warding about the gardens all that night, a great fire beyng made in the midst of the hall, and two certaine Lordes watching there also with their band and company.

Upon Saterdag followyng, two Lordes of the counsaile (the one was the Erle of Sussex, the other shall bee namelesse) came and certified her grace, that forthwith she must go vnto the tower, the barge beyng prepared for her, and the tide now redy, which tarieth for no body. In heauy moode her grace requested the Lords that she might tary another tide, trusting that the next would be better and more comfortable. But one of the Lords replied, that neither tide nor tyme was to be delayed.

And when her grace requested him that she myght bee suffred to write to the Queenes Maiestie,* he aunswered, that he durst not permitte that, addyng that in his iudgemente it woulde rather hurte, then profite her grace in so doyng.

But the other Lorde, more curteous and fauourable, (who was the Erle of Sussex) kneelyng downe, told her grace that she should haue libertie to write, and as he was a true man, he would deliuer it to the Queenes highnesse, and bring an answer of the same, what soeuer came therof. Wherupon she wrote, albeit she could in no case be suffered to speake with the Queene to her great discomfort, beyng no offender against the Queenes Maiestie.

And thus the tyde and tyme passed away for that season, they priuily appointing all things redy that she shuld go the next tyde which fell about midnight: but for feare she should be taken by the way, they durst not. So they stayed till the next day, beyng Palme Sondag, when about ix. of the clocke these two returned agayne, declaring that it was tyme for her grace to depart. She answering, if there be no remedy, I must be contented, willyng the Lordes to go on before. Beyng come forth into the gardē, she did cast vp her eyes toward the window, thinkyng to haue seene the Queene, which she could not. Whereat she sayd, she meruailed much what the nobilitie of the realme ment, which in that sort would suffer her to bee ledde into captiuitie, the Lord knew whether, for she did not. In the meane tyme commandement was geuen in all London, that euery one should keepe the Church and carye their Palmes, while in the meane season she might be conueied without all recourse of people into the Tower.

After all this, she tooke her Barge with the two foresayd Lordes, three of the Queenes Gentlewomen,* and three of her owne, her Gentleman Usher, and two of her Groomes, lying and houeryng vpon the water a certai•e space, for that they could not shoote the bridge, the Barge men beyng very vnwilling to shoote the •ame so soone as they bid, because of the danger thereof: for the sterne of the boate, stroke vpon the ground, the fall was so big, and the water was so shallowe, that the boate beyng vnder the bridge, there stayed agayne a while. At landing, she first stayed, and denied to land at those staires where all traitors and offenders customably vsed to land, neyther well could she, vnlesse she should go ouer her shoe. The Lords were gone out of the boat before, and asked why she came not. One of the Lordes went back againe to her, & broght word she would not come.

Then sayd one of the Lordes which shall be nameles, that she should not chuse: and because it did then raine, he offred to her his cl•ke, which she (puttyng it backe wyth her hand with a good dash) refused. So she comming out, hauing one foote vpon the staire, saide:* Here lande•• as true a subiect beyng prisoner, as euer lāded at these stair•: And before thee O God I speake it, hauyng none other friends but thee alone.

To whom the same Lord aunswered againe, that if it were so, it was the better for her. At her lāding there was a great multitude of their seruantes & Warders standyng in their order, What needed all this said she, It is the vse (sayd some) so to be when any prisoner came thether. And if it be (quoth she) for my cause, I beseeche you that they may be dismissed, Whereat the poore men kneeled downe, and with one voyce desired GOD to preserue her grace, who the next day were released of their cold coates.

After this passing a little further, she sate downe vpon a cold stone & there rested her selfe. To whome the Lieuutenant then beyng, said: Madame, you were best to come out of the raine, for you sit vnwholsomly. She then replieng, answered againe: better sitting here then in a worse place: for God knoweth, I know not whether you wyll bring me. With that her Gentleman Usher wept: she demaunding of hym what he ment so vncomfortably to vse her, seyng she toke him to be her comforter, and not to dismay her, especially for that she knew her truth to be such, that no man should haue cause to weepe for her. But forth she went into the prison.

The dores were locked and bolted vpon her: whiche did not a little discomfort and dismay her grace. At what time she called to her Gentlewomā for her booke, desiring God not to suffer her to build her foundation vppon the sandes but vpon the rocke,* wherby all blasts of blustering weather shuld haue no power agaynst her. The dores being thus locked, & she close shut vp, the Lordes had great cōference howe to keep warde and watch, euery man declaring his opinion in that behalfe, agreeing straightly and circumspectly, to keepe her.

Then one of them, whiche was the Lorde of Sussex swearing, sayd: my Lordes, let vs take heede,* and doe no more then our commission will beare vs, what soeuer shal happē hereafter. And further, let vs consider that she was the king, our Maistres daughter, and therefore let vs vse such dealing, that we may aunswere vnto it hereafter, if it shall so happen, for iust dealing (quoth he) is alwayes answerable: Whereunto the other Lords agreed that it was well sayde of him, and thereupon departed. Being in the Tower, within two daies commaundement was that she should haue Masse within her house. One M. Yong was then her Chapleyne: and because there was none of her men so well learned to helpe the priest to say masse, y^e masse stayed for that day.

The next day two of her Yeomen, who had gone long to schoole before and were learned, had two Abcies prouided and deliuered them, so that vppon the Abcies they should helpe the Priest. One of the sayd Yeomen, holdyng the Abcie in his hand, pretending ignoraunce at Kirie •leyson, set the priest, making as though he could aunswere that no farther.

It would make a pittiful and a strange story, here by the way to touche and recite what examinations and rackinges of poore men there were to finde out that knife that should cut her throat: what gaping among my Lords of the clergy, to see the day wherein they might wash their goodly white rochetes in her innocent bloud, but especially the Bysh. of Winchester Steuen Gardiner, then L. Chauncellour, ruler of the rost, who then within fiue days after came vnto her, with diuers other of the counsell, and examined her of the talke that was at Ashridge,* betwixt her and sir Iames Acroft, concerning her remouing from thence to Dunnington Castle, requiring her to declare Page 2093 what she ment thereby.

At the first, she being so sodainly asked, did not wel remember any such house: but within a while, well aduising her selfe, she sayde: In deede (quoth she) I doe now remember that I haue such a place,* but I neuer laye in it in all my lyfe. And as for any that hath mooued me thereunto, I do not remember.

Then to enforce the matter, they broght forth sir Iames Acroft. The B. of Winchester demaunded of her what she said to that man. She answered, that shee had little to say to hym, or to the rest that were then prisoners in y^e tower. But my Lordes (quoth she) you do examine euery mean prisoner of me, wherein me thinkes you doe me great iniury. If they haue done euill and offended the Queenes Maiesty, let them answer to it accordingly. I beseech you my Lords, ioyne not me in this sort with any of these offenders. And as concerning my goyng vnto Dunnington Castle, I do remember that M. Hobby and mine officers and you sir Iames Acroft, had such talk: but what is that to the purpose, my Lordes, but that I may goe to myne owne houses at all tymes?

*The L. of Arundell kneeling downe, said: your grace sayth true, and certainly we are very sory that we haue so troubled you about so vayne matters. She then sayd: my Lordes, you do sift me very narrowly. But well I am assured, you shall not do more to me then God hath appointed, and so God forgeue you all.

At their departure, sir Iames Acroft kneeled downe, declaring that he was sory to see the day in which he shuld be brought as a witnesse against her grace. But I assure your grace (sayd he) I haue bene maruelously tossed and examined,* touching your highnesse, which the Lord know'eth is very strange to me. For I take God to record before all your honours, I do not know any thing of that crime that you haue layd to my charge, and will thereupon take my death, if I should be driuen to so strait a triall.

That day, or thereabouts, diuers of her owne officers who had made prouision for her diet, brought the same to the vtter gate of the Tower, the common rascall souldiors receiuing it:* which was no small grieve vnto the Gentlem[•]n, the bringers therof. Wherefore they required to speak with the Lord Chamberlaine, being then Constable of the Tower. Who, commyng before his presence, declared vnto his Lordship, that they were much afayrd to bryng her graces diete, and to deliuer it vnto such common and desperate persons as they were which did receiue it, beseeching his honor to consider her grace, and to geue such order, that her viands might at all tymes bee brought in by them which were appointed thereunto. Yea Sirs said he? who appointed you this office?* They answered, her graces counsaile. Counsaile quoth he? There is none of them which hath to do, either in that case, or any thing els within this place: and I assure you, for that she is a prisoner, she shall be serued with the Lieuetenaunts men, as other the prisoners are. Whereat the Gentlemen sayd, that they trusted for more fauour at his hands, considering her personage, saying, that they mistrusted not, but that y^e Queene and her Counsaile would be better to her grace then so,* & therewith shewed themselues to be offended at y^e vngratefull words of the L. Chamberlaine towards their Ladye and maistresse.

At this he sware by God, strikyng hymselfe vpon the brest, that if they did either fronne or shrug at him, he wold set them where they should see neither sunne nor Moone. Thus takyng their leaue, they desired God to bryng hym into a better mynde toward her grace, and departed from hym.

Upon the occasion wherof, her graces Officers made great sute vnto the Queenes Counsaile, that some might be appointed to bring her dyet vnto her, and that it might no more be deliuered into the common Souldiours of the Tower. Which beyng reasonably considered, was by thē granted. And thereupon were appointed one of her Gentlemen, her clarke of her kitchin, & her two Purueiers to bring in her prouision once a day. All which was done, the Warders euer waiting vpon the bringers thereof.

The Lord Chamberlaine himselfe being always with them, circumspectly and narrowly watched, and searched what they brought, and gaue heede that they should haue no talke with any of her graces waiting seruauntes, and so warded them both in and out. At the said sute of her officers were sent by the commandement of the Counsaile, to waite vppon her grace, two Yeomen of her chamber, one of her Robes,* two of her Pantry & Ewry, one of her Buttry, another of her Seller, two of her Kitchin, & one of her Larder, all which continued with her the tyme of her trouble.

Here the Constable, beyng at the first not very well pleased with the commyng in of such a company agaynst his will, would haue had his men still to haue serued with her Graces men. Which her seruaunts at no hand would suffer, desiring his Lordship to be contented, for that order was taken,* that no stranger should come within their Offices. At which answer beyng sore displeased, he brake out into these threatnyng wordes: well (sayd he) I will handle you well enough. Then went hee into the kitchin, and there would needs haue his meat roasted with her Graces meate, and sayd, that his Cooke should come thether and dresse it. To that her Graces Cooke answered: my Lord, I will neuer suffer any stranger to come about her diete, but her owne sworne men, so long as I lyue. He said they should. But the Cooke sayd, his Lordship should pardon hym for that matter. Thus did hee trouble her poore seruants very stoutly: though afterward he were otherwise aduised, and they more curteously vsed at his handes. And good cause why. For he had good •here, & fared of the best, & her grace payed well for it. Wherefore he vsed himselfe afterward more reuerently toward her grace.

After this sort, hauyng lyen a whole moneth there in close prison, and beyng very euill at ease therewithall, she sent for the L. Chamberlaine, and the Lord Shandoyes to come and speake with her. Who commyng, she requested them that she might haue liberty to walk in some place, for that she felt her selfe not well. To the which they aunswered,* that they were right sorye that they coulde not satisfie her graces request, for that they had commaundement to the contrary, which they durst not in any wise break. Furthermore, she desired of them, if that could not be granted, that she might walke but into the Queenes lodgyng. No nor yet that (they answered) could by any meanes bee obtained without a further sute to the Queene & her Counsaile. Well sayd she, my Lordes, if the matter be so harde y^t they must be sued vnto for so small a thyng, & that friendship be so strait, God comfort me, and so they departed, she remaining in her old dungeon still, without any kynde of comfort but onely God.

The next day after, the L. Shandoyes came again vnto her grace, declaryng vnto her that he had sued vnto the counsaile for further liberty. Some of them consented therunto, diuers other dissented, for that there were so manye prisoners in y^e tower. But in conclusion, they did al agree, that her grace might walke into those lodgings, so that he and the L. Chamberlaine, and three of the Queens Gentlewomen did accompany her, the windowes beyng shut, and she not suffred to looke out at any of them: wherwith she contented her selfe, and gaue him thanks for hys good will in that behalfe.

Afterwards there was libertie graunted to her grace to walke in a little garden, the doores and gates being shut vp,* which notwithstanding was as much discomfort vnto her, as the walke in the garden was pleasaunt & acceptable. At which times of her walking there, the prisoners on that side straightly were commaunded not to speake or looke out at the windowes into the garden, till her grace were gone out agayne, hauing in consideration thereof, their keepers waiting vpon them for that time. Thus her grace with this small libertie, contented her selfe in God, to whom be prayse therefore.

During this tyme, there vsed a little boy, a mans child in the Tower, to resort to their chābers, and many times to bring her grace floures, which likewise he did to the other prisoners that were there. Wherupon naughty & suspicious heades thinking to make and wring out some matter therof, called on a time the childe vnto thē,* promising him figges and apples, and asked of him whē he had bene with the Earle of Deuonshyre, not ignoraunt of the childes wounted frequenting vnto him. The boy answered, that he would go by and by thether.* Further they demanded of him, when he was with the Lady Elizabethes grace. He answered: euery day: Furthermore they examyned him, what the Lord of Deuonshyre sent by him to her grace. The childe sayd, I will go know what he will geue to cary to her. Such was the discretion of the childe, being yet but foure yeares of age. This same is a craftye boye, quoth the Lord Chamberlayne. Howe say you my Lorde Shandoyes? I pray you my L. (quoth the boy) geue me the figges you promised me. No Mary (quoth he) y^u shalt be whipped if thou come any more to the Lady Elizabeth, or the Lorde Courtny. The boy aunswere: I will bryng my Lady my mistres, more floures. Wherupon the childs father was commaunded to permit the boye no more to come vp into theyr chambers.

The next day, as her grace was walking in the gardē, the childe peeping in at a hole in the dore, cryed vnto her, saying: mistres, I can bring you no more floures. Wherat she smiled, but sayd nothing, vnderstanding thereby what Page 2094 they had done. Wherefore afterwards the Chamberlaine rebuked highly his father, commaunding him to put him out of the house. Alasse poore infant, quoth the father. It is a craftie knaue,* quoth the Lorde Chamberlaine: let me see him heere no more.

The 5. day of May, the Constable was discharged of hys office of the Tower, and one Syr Henry Benifielde placed in his rowme, a man vnknownen to her grace, and therefore the more feared: which so sodaine mutation was vnto her no little amaze. Hee brought with him an 100. souldiers in blew coates, wherwith she was marueilously discomforted, & demaunded of such as were about her, whether the Lady Ianes scaffold were taken away or no, fearing by reason of their comming, least she should haue played her part. To whom aunswere was made, that the scaffold was taken awaye, and that her grace needed not to doubt of any suche tyrannie: for God would not suffer any such treason against her Person. Wherewith beyng contented, but not altogether satisfied, shee asked what syr Henry Benefield was, and whether hee was of that conscience or no, that if her murdering were secretly committed to his charge, he would see the execution thereof.

*She was answeared, that they were ignoraunt what maner of man he was. Howbeit they perswaded her that God would not suffer such wickednesse to proceede. Wel, quoth shee: God graunt it be so. For thou, O God, canste mollifie all suche tyrannous heartes, and disappoynte all such cruell purposes: and I beseeche thee to heare me thy creature, which am thy seruauant and at thy commaundement, trusting by thy grace euer so to remaine.

About which time it was spread abroad, that her grace should be carried from thence by this newly iolly Captaine and his souldiours: but whether, it could not be learned. Which was vnto her a great grief, especially for that such a company was appoynted to her gard, requesting rather to continue there still, then to be ledde thence with suche a sort of rascals. At last, plaine answer was made by the L. Shandoyes, that there was no remedye, but from thence she must needs depart to the Manour of Woodstocke, as he thought. Being demaunded of her, for what cause: for that (quoth he) the Tower is like further to be furnished. Shee being desirous to knowe what hee meant thereby, demaunded, wherewith. He answered, with such matter as the Queene and Counsaile were determined in that behalfe, whereof he had no knowledge: and so departed.

In conclusion, on Trinitie Sunday being the 19. day of Maye, shee was remooued from the Tower, the Lorde Treasurer being then there for the lading of her Car•es, and discharging the place of the same. Where Syr Henry Benifielde (being appoynted her Gailer) did receiue her wyth a companie of rakehelles to Garde her, besides the Lorde of Darbies band•, wayting in the Countrey about for the mooneshine in the water. Unto whome at lengthe came my Lorde of Tame, ioyned in Commission with the sayd Syr Henry, for the safe guiding of her to prisone: and they together conueied her grace to Woodstocke, as hereafter followeth.

The first day they conducted her to Richmond, where she continued all night,* being restrained of her owne men, whych were lodged in oute Chambers, and Syr Henry Benifields souldiours appointed in their rouses to geue attendance on her person. Wherat she being maruelously dismaid, thinking verely some secret mischief to be a working towards her, called her Gentleman Usher, and desired him, with the rest of his company, to pray for her. For this night (quoth she) I thinke to die. Wherwith he being stricken to the heart, sayde: God forbid that any such wickednes should be pretended against your grace. So comforting her as well as he could, at last hee burst out into teares, and went from her downe into the Courte, where were walking the Lorde of Tame and Syr Henry Benifielde.

Then he comming to the Lorde of Tame (who hadde profered to him muche friendship) desired to speake wyth him a woord or two. Unto whome he familiarly sayde, he should with all his heart. Which when Syr Henry, standing by, heard, he asked what the matter was. To whom the Gentleman Usher answered: no great matter Syr (sayd he) but to speake with my Lord a woord or two.

Then, when the Lorde of Tame came to him, he spake on this wise:* My Lord (quoth he) you haue ben alwayes my good Lord, and so I beseech you to remain. The cause why I come to you at this time, is to desire your honor, vnfainedly to declare vnto mee whether any daunger is meant towards my Mistresse this nighte, or no, that I and my poore fellowes may take suche part as shall please God to appoynt: for certainly we wil rather die, then she should secretly and innocently miscarie. Mary (sayde the Lord of Tame) God forbid that any such wicked purpose should be wrought: and rather then it shuld be so, I with my men are ready to die at her foote also:* and (so praised be God) they passed that dolefull nighte, wyth no ••tle heauinesse of heart.

Afterwards passing ouer the water at Richmond, going towards Wyndsore, her grace espied certaine of her poore seruantes standing on the other side, whiche were very desirous to see her.

Whom when she beheld, turning to one of her men standing by, she sayde: yonder I see certaine of my men: goe to them and say these woordes from me: Tanquam ouis.

So she passing forward to Windsore,* was lodged there that night in the Deane of Windsores house, a place more meete in deede for a Priest then a Princesse.

And from thence her Grace was garded and brought the next night to M. Dormers house,* where much people standing by the waye, some presented to her one gifte▪ and some an other, so that sir Henry was greatly moued therewith, and troubled the poore people very sore, for shewing their louing hearts in suche a maner, calling them rebels and traitors, with such like vile woordes.

Besides, as she passed through y^e villages, the townes men rang the bells, as being ioyful of her comming, thinking verely it had bene otherwise then it was in deede, as the sequele prooued after to the sayd poore men. For immediately the saide syr Henry hearing the same, sent his souldiours thether, who apprehēded some of the ringers, setting them in the stockes, & otherwise vncourteously misusing other some for their good willes.

On the morrow her grace passing from maister Dormers (where was for y^e time of her abode there,* a straight watch kept) came to the Lord of Tames house, where she lay all the night, being very princely entertained, bothe of Knightes and Ladies, Gentlemen and Gentlewomen. Whereat Syr Henry Benifield grunted, and was highly offended, saying vnto them, that they coulde not tell what they did,* and were not able to answere to their doings in that behalfe, letting them to vnderstand that shee was the Queenes Maiesties prisoner, and no otherwise: aduising them therefore to take heede and beware of after clappes. Wherunto the Lord of Tame answered in this wise: that he was wel aduised of his doings, being ioyned in Commission as well as he, adding with warrāt, that her grace might and should in his house be merry.

The next day, as she should take her iourney frō Richmond toward Woodstocke, the Lord of Tame, with an other Gentleman being at Tables, playing,* and droppying vie crownes, the Ladie Elizabeth passing by, stayed and sayde, she would see the game plaied out, which sir Henry Benifield would scarce permit. The game running longe about, and they playing drop vie crownes, come on,* sayth he, I will tarie, sayth she, and will see this game out.

After this, sir Henry went vp into a chamber, where was appointed for her grace a chaire, two cushions, and a foote carpet very faire & princelike, wherein presumptuously he sate, and called one Barwike his mā to pu• of his bootes. Which as soone as it was known among y^e ladies and Gentles, euery one mused therat, and laughed him to scorne, obseruing his vndiscrete maners in that behalf, as they might very well.

When supper was done, he called my L. and willed him that all the Gentlemen and Ladies should withdraw themselues euery one to his lodging, meruailing much y^t he would permit there such a cōpany, considering so great a charge committed to him.

Sir Henry (quoth my Lord) content your self, all shal be voyded, your men and all. Nay my souldiours (quoth sir Henry) shall watch all night. The Lord of Tame aunswered, it shall not need. Well sayd he, neede or neede no•, they shall so do, mistrusting belike the company, whiche God knoweth was without cause.

The next day her grace tooke her iourney from thence to Woodstocke, where she was inclosed, as before in the Tower of London, the souldiors garding and wardyng both within and without the walles, euery day to y^e number of three score, and in the night without the wals xl. during the tyme of her imprisonment there.

At length shee had gardens appointed for her walke, which was very comfortable to her grace. But alwayes when she did recreate her selfe therein, the dores were •ast locked vp, in as straite maner as they were in the Tower, beyng at the least v. or vj, lockes betwene her lodging and her walkes: Sir Henry himselfe keping the keyes, and trusting no man therewith. Wherupon she called him her Gaoler: and he kneeling downe, desired her grace not to cal him so, for he was appointed there to be one of her officers. From such officers (quoth she) good Lord deliuer me.

Page 2095 And now by the way as digressing, or rather refreshing the reader, if it be lawfull in so serious a story to recite a matter incident, & yet not impertinent to the same: occasion here moueth, or rather inforceth me to touch briefelye what hapned in the same place and time by a certayne mery conceited man,* being then about her grace: who noting the strait and straunge keeping of his Lady and Mistres by the sayd Syr Henry Benifield, with so many lockes & dores, with such watch & ward about her, as was straūge & wonderful, spyed a Goate in the ward where her grace was: and whether to refresh her oppressed mind, or to notify her strait handling by Syr Henry, either els both, he tooke it vp on his necke, and folowed her grace therewyth as she was going into her lodging.

Which when she saw, she asked him what he would do with it, willing to let it alone. Unto whom the sayd party aunswered: no by Saynt Mary (if it like your grace) will I not: for I cannot tell whether he be one of the Queenes frendes or no. I will cary him to Syr Henry Benifielde (God willing) to know what he is. So leauing her grace, he went with the Goate on his necke, and caryed it to syr Henry Benifield. Who when he saw him comming wyth it, asked him halfe angrily what he had there.

Unto whom the party aunswered, saying: Syr (quoth he) I can not tell what he is. I pray you examine him, for I founde him in the place where my Ladyes Grace was walking,* and what talke they haue had I can not tell. For I vnderstād him not, but he should seme to me to be some straunger, and I thinke verely a Welchman, for he hath a white frie•e coate on his back. And forsomuch as I being the Queenes Subiect, and perceiuing the strait charge committed to you of her keeping, that no straunger should haue accesse to her without sufficient licence, I haue here foūd a straunger (what he is I cannot tell) in place where her Grace was walking: & therefore for the necessary discharge of my duety, I thought it good to bring the sayde straunger to you, to examine, as you see cause: and so he set him down. At which his words Syr Henry semed much displeased, and sayd: Well, well, you will neuer leaue this geare I see: and so they departed.

Now, to returne to the matter from whence we haue digressed, after her Grace had bene there a time, she made suite to the Counsell that she might be suffered to write to the Queene.* Which at last was permitted: So that Syr Henry Benifield brought her penne, inke, and paper: and standing by her while she wrote (which he straitly obserued) always she being wery, he would cary away her letters, and bring them agayne when she called for them. In the finishing thereof, he would haue bene messenger to the Queene of the same. Whose request her grace denied, saying: one of her owne men should cary them, and that she would neither trust him, nor none of his therein.

Then he answering agayne, said: none of them durst be so bold (he trowed) to cary her letters, beyng in that case. Yes (quoth she) I am assured I haue none so dishonest that would deny my request in that behalf, but wil be as willyng to serue me now as before. Well (sayd he) my commission is to the contrary,* and I may not so suffer it. Her grace replying againe, said: you charge me very oftē with your commission. I pray God you may iustly aunswer the cruel dealing you vse towards me.

Then he kneeling downe, desired her grace to thinke and consider how he was a seruant, & put in trust there by the Queene to serue her Maiestie, protesting that if y^e case were hers, he would as willingly serue her grace, as now he did the Queenes highnesse. For the which his aunswer her grace thanked hym, desiring God that she might neuer haue neede of such seruauntes as he was: declaryng further to hym, that his doynge towards her were not good nor answerable, but more then all the friends he had would stand by.

To whome Sir Henry replied and sayde, that there was no remedy but his doynge must be aunswered, and so they should,* trusting to make good accompt therof. The cause which mooued her grace so to say, was for that hee would not permit her letters to be caried iij. or v. dayes after the writyng thereof. But in fine hee was content to send for her Gentleman from the Towne of Woodstocke, demaunding of him whether he durst enterprise the cariage of her Graces letters to the Queene, or no: & he aunswered, yea Sir, that I dare, and will withall my heart. Whereupon sir Henry halfe, agaynst his stomacke, tooke them vnto hym.

Then about the viij. of Iune came downe Doctour Owen and Doctour Wendye,* sent by the Queene to her grace, for that she was sickly: who ministring to her, and lettyng her bloud, taried there and attended on her grace v. or vj. dayes. Then she being wel amēded, they returned againe to the Courte, making theyr good reporte to the Queene and the Counsaile of her graces behaioure and humblenesse towards the Queenes highnesse. Which her Maiestie hearing, tooke very thankfully: but the bishops thereat repined, looked blacke in the mouth,* and tolde the Queene, they marueiled that she submitted not her selfe to her maiesties mercye, considering that shee had offended her highnesse.

About this time, her Grace was requested by a secrete frende, to submit her selfe to the Queenes maiestie, whych woulde be very well taken,* and to her great quiet & commoditie. Unto whom she answered, that she would neuer submitte her selfe to them whome she neuer offended. For (quoth she) if I haue offended and am giltye, I then craue no mercy, but the law, which I am certaine (quoth she) I should haue had ere this, if it coulde be prooued by me. For I know my selfe (I thanke God) to be out of the daunger thereof, wishing that I were as cleare out of the pearil of my ennemies, and then I am assured I shoulde not so be locked and bolted vp within walles and doores as I am. God geue them a better minde when it pleaseth him.

About this time was there a great consulting among the Bishops and Gentlemen touching a Mariage for her grace,* which some of the Spanyardes wished to be wyth some straunger, that she might go out of the Realme with her portion: some saying one thing, and some an other.

A Lorde (who shalbe heere namelesse) being there, at last sayd, that the King should neuer haue any quiet common wealth in Englande, vnlesse her head were stricken from the shoulders. Whereunto the Spanyards answered, saying: God forbid that their king and master should haue that minde to consent to such a mischiefe.

This was the curteous aunswer of the Spanyardes to the Englishmen, speaking after that sorte against theyr owne country. From that day the Spaniardes neuer left of their good perswasions to the king, that the like honour he shoulde neuer obtaine, as he shoulde in deliuryng the Lady Elizabeths grace out of prison: wherby at lēgth she was happely released from the same. Here is a plaine and euident example of the good clemencie and nature of the King and his Counsellors towards her grace (praised be God therefore) who mooued their heartes therein. Then heereuppon shee was sente for shortlye after to come to Hampton Court.

But before her remoouing away from Woodstocke,* we will a litle stay to declare in what dangers her life was in during this time shee there remained: first thorough fire, which began to kindle betweene the boardes and seeling vnder the chamber where shee lay, whether by a sparke of fire, gotten into a cranye, or whether of purpose by some that meant her no good, the Lord doth knowe. Neuerthesse a woorshipfull Knight of Oxfordshire, whyche was there ioyned the same time with Syr Henry Benifield in keeping that Ladye (who then tooke vp the boardes and quēched the fire) verely supposed it to be done of purpose.

Furthermore it is thought,* and also affirmed (if it be true) of one Paule Peny a Keeper of Woodstocke, a notorious ruffin and a butcherly wretch, that he was appoynted to kill y^e sayd Lady Elizabeth: who both sawe the man being often in her sight, and also knewe thereof.

An other time, one of the priuie chamber,* a great man about the Queene, and chiefe darling of Steuen Gardiner, named master Iames Basset, came to Blandenbridge a mile from Woodstocke, with 20. or 30. priuie coates, and sent for Syr Henrye Benifielde to come and speake with him. But, as God would, which disposed all things after the purpose of his owne will, so it happened, that a lyttle before the sayd Syr Henry Benifield was sent for by post to the Counsell, leauing straight woord behinde him with his brother, that no man, what so euer hee were, thoughte comming with a Bill of the Queenes hand, or any other warrant, should haue accesse to her before his retourne againe. By reason wherof it so fell out, that M. Benifields brother comming to him at the Bridge, would suffer hym in no case to approche in,* who otherwise (as is supposed) was appoynted violently to murder the innocent Lady.

In the life of Steuen Gardiner wee declared before, page 1787. howe that the Ladie Elizabeth beyng in the Tower, a Wrytte came downe, subscribed wyth certaine handes of the Counsell for her execution. Which if it were certaine, as it is reported, Winchester (no doubt) was deuiser of that mischieuous drift: and doubtlesse the same Achitophel had brought hys impious purpose that daye to passe, had not the fatherly prouidence of almighty God, (who is alwayes stronger then the deuill) stirred vp M. Bridges, Lieutenaunte the same time of the Tower, to come in hast to the Queene, to geue certificate therof, and to knowe further her consent touching her sisters deathe. Page 2096 Whereuppon it followed, that all that deuise was disappoynted, and Winchester deuelish plat forme, which hee sayd he had cast through the Lordes great goodnesse, came to no effecte.

Where moreouer is to be noted, that during the prysonment of this Ladye and Princesse, one M. Edmund Tremaigne was on the Racke, and maister Smithwike, & diuers other in the Tower were examined, and diuers offers made to them to accuse the gittlesse Ladie, being in her captiuitie. Howbeit al that notwithstanding, no matter could be prooued by all examinations, as shee the same time lying at Woodstocke, had certaine intelligence by the meanes of one Iohn Ga•er: who vnder a colourable pretence of a letter to mistres Cleue from her father, was let in, and so gaue them secretly to vnderstande of all thys matter. Whereuppon the Lady Elizabeth at her departing out from Woodstocke, wrote these Uerses with her Diamond in a glasse windowe.

Much suspected by me: Nothing prooued can be.*Quoth Elizabeth prisoner.

And thus much touching the troubles of Lady Elizabeth at Woodstocke. Whereunto this is more to be added, that during the same time, the Lorde of Tame had laboured to the Queene, and became surety for her, to haue her from Woodstocke to his house, and had obtained graunte thereof. Whereupon preparation was made accordingly, and all things ready in expectation of her comming. But through the procurement either of M. Benifield,* or by the doing of Winchester her mortall enemye, letters came ouer night to the contrary: wherby her iourney was stopped.

Thus this woorthy Ladie oppressed wyth continuall sorrowe, coulde not be permitted to haue recourse to any frendes she had, but still in the hands of her enemies was left desolate, and vtterly destitute of all that might refresh a doulefull heart, fraughte full of terroure and thraldome. Whereupon no maruell, if she hearing vpon a time out of her garden at Woodstocke, a certaine milkemaide singing pleasantly,* wished her selfe to be a milkemaide as she was, saying that her case was better, and life more merier then was hers, in that state as shee was.

Now after these things thus declared, to procede further there where we left before, Syr Henry Benifield and hys souldiours, wyth the Lorde of Tame, and Syr Rafe Chamberlaine, garding and waiting vpon her, the firste night from Woodstock she came to Ricot.* In which iourney such a mighty wind did blow, that her seruants were same to holde downe her cloathes about her: In so much that her hooide was twise or thrise blowen from her head. Whereupon shee desirous to retourne to a certaine Gentlemans house there neare, coulde not be suffered by Syr Henry Benifield so to doe, but was constrained vnder an hedge to trimme her head aswell as she could.

After thys, the next nighte they iourneyed to M. Dormers, and so to Colbroke, where shee lay all that nyghte at the George: and by the way cōming to Colbroke, certaine of her graces Gentlemen and Yeomen mette her, to the number of three score, muche to all theyr comfortes, which had not seene her grace of long season before, notwythstandinge they were commaunded in the Queenes name immediately to depart the towne, to both their, and her graces no little heauinesse, who coulde not be suffered once to speake with them. So that night al her men were taken from her, sauing her Gentleman vsheer, three Gentlewomen, two Gromes, and one of her Wardrope, the souldiours watching and warding aboute the house, and shee close shut vp within her prison.

The nexte day following, her grace entred Hamptoncourt on the backside, into the princes lodging, y^e doores being shut to her, and she garded with souldiours, as before,* say there a fortnight at the least, or euer any hadde recourse vnto her. At length came the L. William Haward, who maruellous honorably vsed her grace. Whereat shee tooke much comfort, and requested him to be a meane that shee might speake with some of the Counsell. To whome (not long after) came the Bishop of Winchester, the Lord of Arundel, the Lord of Shrewsbury, and Secretary Peter, who with great humilitie humbled them selues to her grace. Shee againe likewise saluting them, sayde: My Lordes (quoth shee) I am glad to see you: for me thinke, I haue ben kept a great while from you desolately alone. Wherefore I would desire you to be a meane to the Kyng and Queenes Maiesties, that I maye be deliuered from prison, wherein I haue bene kept a long space, as to you my Lordes, it is not vnknownen.

When she had spoken, Steuen Gardiner the bishop of Winchester kneeled downe,* and requested that she would submit her selfe to the Queenes grace, and in so doing hee had no doubt but that her Maiestie would be good vnto her: shee making answeare that rather then she would so doe, shee wold lie in prison all the dayes of her life, adding that she craued no mercy at her maiesties hand, but rather desired the Lawe, if euer shee did offende her Maiestie in thought, woorde, or deede: And besides this, in yealdinge (quoth shee) I should speake against my selfe, and confesse my selfe to be an offender, which neuer was towards her Maiestie: by occasion whereof the King and the Queene might euer heereafter conceiue of mee an ill opinion: And therefore I say my Lordes, it were better for me to lye in prison for the truth, then to be abroad and suspected of my Prince. And so they departed, promising to declare her message to the Queene.

On the next day, the bish. of Winchester came againe vnto her grace, and kneelinge downe,* declared that the Queene marueiled that she would so stoutly vse her selfe, not confessing to haue offended: so that it should seme the Queenes Maiestie, wrongfully to haue imprisoned her grace.

Nay quoth the Lady Elizabeth, it please her to punish me as shee thinketh good.

Well quoth Gardiner, her Maiestie willeth me to tell you, that you must tell an other tale ere that you be sette at libertie.

Her grace answered, that she had as lief be in prison with honesty & truth, as to be abroad, suspected of her maiestie: and this that I haue said, I wil (said she) stand vnto, for I wil neuer bely my selfe.

Winchester againe kneled down, and said: Then your grace hath the vantage of me & other the Lordes for your long and wrong imprisonment.

What vantage I haue (quoth she) you knowe, takyng God to record I seeke no vantage at your hands for your so dealing with me, but God forgeue you & me also. With that the rest kneeled desiring her grace that all myght bee forgotten, and so departed, shee beyng fast locked vppe agayne.

A seuen night after the Queene sent for her grace at x. of the clocke in the nyght to speake with her: * for shee had not seene her in two yeares before. Yet for all that shee was amased at the sodayne sendyng for, thinkyng it had bene worse then afterwarde it prooued, and desired her Gentlemen and Gentlewomen to pray for her, for that shee could not tell whether euer shee should see them agayne or no.

At which tyme Sir Henry Benifield with Maistresse Clarencius comming in, her grace was brought into the garden vnto a staires foote that went into the Queenes lodgyng, her graces Gentlewomen waiting vppon her, her Gentleman Usher & her Groomes going before with torches, * where her Gentlemen and Gentlewomen being commanded to stay all sauing one woman, maistres Clarencius conducted her to the Queens bed chamber where her maiestie was.

At the sight of whome, her grace kneeled downe and desired God to preserue her Maiestie, not mistrusting but that she should try her selfe as true a subiect towards her Maiestie, as euer did any, and desired her Maiestie euen so to Iudge of her: and sayde that shee should not finde her to the contrary, what so euer reporte otherwyse had gone of her.

To whom the Queene aunswered: you will not confesse your offence, but stand stoutly to your truth: * I pray God it may so fall out.

If it doth not, quoth the Ladye Elizabeth, I request neyther fauour nor pardon at your Maiesties hands. Wel sayd the Queene, you stifly still perseuere in your truth. Belike you wil not confesse but that you haue ben wrongfully punished.

I must not say so (if it please your Maiesty) to you.

Why, then (sayd the Queene) belyke you wyll to other.

No, if it please your Maiesty (quoth she) I haue borne the burden, and must beare it. I humbly beseeche your Maiestie to haue a good opinion of me,  and to thynke me to be your true subiect, not onely from the beginnyng hitherto, but for euer, as long as lyfe lasteth: and so they departed with very few comfortable words of the Queene, in English: but what she sayd in Spanish, God knoweth.  It is thought that king Phillip was there behynde a cloth, and not seene, and that he shewed himselfe a verye friend in that matter, &c.

Thus her grace departyng, went to her lodgyng agayne, Page 2097 and the seuen night after was released of Sir Henry Benifield her Gaoler (as she termed hym) and his soldiours, and so her grace beyng set at libertie from imprisonment, went into the countrey, and had appoynted to go with her Sir Thomas Pope, * one of Queene Maries Counsailors, and one of her Gentlemen Ushers, Maister Bage, and thus straitly was she looked to all Queene Maries tyme. And this is the discourse of her highnesse imprisonment.

Then there came to Lamheyre, M. Ierningham, and M. Norris Gentleman Usher, * Queene Maries men, who tooke away from her grace Maistresse Ashley to the Fleete, and three other of her Gentlewomen to the Tower: which thing was no little trouble to her grace, saying: that she thought they would fetch all away at the ende. But god be prayd, shortly after was fetched away Gardiner through the mercifull prouidence of the Lords goodnes, by occasion of whose opportune decease (as is partly touched in this story before, pag. 1705.) the lyfe of this excellent Princesse, the wealth of all England, was preserued. For this is credible to be supposed, that the said wicked Gardiner of Winchester had long laboured his wits, and to this onely most principall marke, bent all hys deuises, to bring this our happy and deare soueraigne out of the way, as both by his words and doyngs before notified, may sufficiently appeare.

But such was the gracious and fauourable prouidēce of the Lord, to the preservation not onely of her royal maiestie, but also the miserable and woful state of this whole Iland, and poore subiectes of the same, whereby the proud platformes and peeuish practises of this wretched Achitophel preuayled not: but contrarywise, both he, and all the snares and trappes of his pernicious counsaile layed agaynst another, were turned to a net to catche hymselfe, accordyng to the Prouerbe: Malum consilium, consultori pessimum.

*After the death of this Gardiner, followed the death also and droppynge away of other her enemies, whereby by little and litle her ieopardy decreased, feare diminished, hope of comfort began to appeare as out of a darke cloud: and albeit as yet her grace had no full assurance of perfect safetie, yet more gentle intertainment daily did grow vnto her, till at length to the moneth of Nouember, and xvij. day of the same, three yeares after the death of Ste. Gardiner, followed the death of Queene Mary, as hereafter God graunting shall be more declared.

*Although this history followyng bee not directly appertaining to the former matter, yet the same may here not vnaptly be inserted, for that it doth discouer and shew forth the malicious heartes of the Papistes toward this vertuous Queene our soueraigne Lady in the tyme of Queene Mary her sister, which is reported, as a truth credibly tolde by sundry honest persones, of whome some are yet alvye, and doe testifie the same. The matter wherof is this.

Soone after the s•urre of Wiate and the troubles that happened to this Queene for that cause: it fortun'd one Robert Farrer a Haberdasher of London, dwelling nere vnto Newgate market, in a certaine mornynge to be at the Rose tauerne (from whence he was seldome absent) and falling to his common drinke, as he was euer accustomed and hauing in his company three other companions lyke to hymselfe, it chaunced the same tyme one Laurence Shiriffe Grocer, dwelling also not farre from thence, to come into the said Tauerne, and finding there the sayde Farrer (to whom of long time he had borne good will) sate down in the seat to drinke with him, and Farrer hauyng in hys full cups, and not hauing consideration who were present began to talke at large, & namely against the Lady Elizabeth, and said: that Gill hath bene one of the chiefe doers of this rebellion of Wiat,* and before all be done, she and al the heretikes her pertakers, shall well vnderstand of it. Some of them hope that she shal haue the crowne, but she and they (I trust) that so hope, shall hop hedlesse, or be fried with Fagots before she come to it.

The aforesaid Laurence Shiriffe Grocer, beyng then seruaunt vnto the sayd Lady Elizabeth, and sworne vnto her grace, could no longer forbear his olde acquaintance and neighbour Farrer in speaking so vnreuerently of his Mistres, but sayd vnto him: Farrer, I haue loued thee as a neighbour, and haue had a good opiniō of thee, but hearing of thee that I now heare, I defie thee: and I tel thee I am her graces sworne seruaunt, and she is a Princesse, and the daughter of a noble kyng, and it euill becommeth the• to call her a Gill, & for thy so saying, I say thou art a knaue, and I will complain vpon thee. Do thy worst said Farrer, for that I said, I will say againe, and so Shiriffe came from his company.

Shortly after the said Shirife taking an honest neighbour with him, went before the Commissioners to complaine: the which Commissioners •ate then at Boner the Bishop of Londons house beside Paules, and there were present Boner then beyng the chiefe Commissioner, the L. Mordant, sir Iohn Baker, D. Darbishiery Chauncellour to the Bishop, Doctour Story, Doctour Harpsfield, and other.

The aforesayd Shiriffe commyng before them, declared the maner of the sayd Rob. Farrers talke agaynst the Lady Elizabeth. Boner answered, peraduenture you tooke him worse then he ment.

Yea my L. sayd D. Story, if you knew the man as I do, you would say there is not a better Catholike, nor an honest man in the Citie of London.

Well, sayd Sheriffe, my Lord, she is my gracious Lady and mistres, and it is not to be suffered that such a varlet as he is, should call so honorable a princes by the name of a Gil: And I saw yesterday in the Court that my Lord Cardinall Poole meeting her in the Chamber of presence, kneeled downe on his knees and kissed her hand, & I saw also that King Philippe meeting her, made her such obeisance that his knee touched the ground: and then me thinketh it were too much to suffer suche a varlet as this is, to call her Gill, and to wish them to hop headlesse that shall wish her grace to enioy the possession of the crowne when God shall sende it vnto her as in the righte of her inheritaunce. Yea? stay there quoth Boner.* When God sendeth it vnto her, let her enioy it. But truely (sayde he) the man that spake the woordes that you haue reported, meant nothing against the Ladie Elizabeth your Mistresse, and no more doe we: but he like an honest and zealous man feared the alteration of Religion, whiche euerye good manne ought to feare: and therefore (sayde Boner) good man goe your wayes home and reporte well of vs toward your Mistresse, and we will send for Farrer and rebuke him for his rash and vndiscrete woordes, and we trust he will not doe the like againe. And thus Sheriffe came awaye, and Farrer had a flappe with a foxe taile.

Nowe that yee may be fully informed of the aforesaid Farrer, whom D. Story praised for so good a man, ye shal vnderstande that the same Farrer hauing two daughters being handsome maidens,* the Elder of them for a summe of money he him selfe deliuered to Syr Roger Cholmley to be at his commandement, the other he sold to a Knight called Syr William Good dolphin to be at his commandement: whom he made his lackie and so caried her w^t hym, being apparelled in mans apparel to Bolein, and the sayd Farrer followed the Campe. He also was a greate, and a horrible blasphemer of God, and a common accuser of honest and quiet men, also a common dronkarde. And nowe I referre the life of these Catholickes to your iudgement, to thinke of them as you please.

But of this matter enough and too much. Now let vs retourne where we left before, which was at the deathe of Quene Marie. After whose decease succeeded her foresayd sister Ladie Elizabeth into the right of the crown of England: who after so long restraintment,* so great daungers escaped, suche blusterous stormes ouerblowne, so many iniuries digested and wronges sustained by the mightye protection of our mercifull God, to our no small comforte and commoditie, hath ben exalted and erected out of thrall to Libertie, out of daunger to Peace and quietnesse, from dread to Dignitie, from miserie to Maiestie, from mourning to Ruling. Briefly, of a prisonner made a Princesse, and placed in her throne Royal proclaimed now Quene, with as many glad hearts of her subiects,* as euer was any King or Queene in this Realme before her, or euer shall be (I dare say) heereafter.

Touching whose flourishing state, her Princely reigne and peaceable gouernment, with other things diuers and sondrye incident to the same, and especiall ye touching the great stirres & alterations which haue happened in other foreine nations, and also partly among our selues here at home, for so much as the tractation heereof requireth an other Uolume by it selfe, I shall therefore deferre the reader to the next Booke or Section insuing: wherein (if the Lorde so please to sustaine me with leaue and life) I may haue to discourse of all and singulare suche matters done and atchieued in these our latter daies and memorie, more at large.

Now then after these so great afflictions falling vpon this Realm, from the first beginning of Queene Maries reigne, wherein so many men, women, and children were burned, many imprisoned and in prisonnes starued, diuers exiled, some spoyled of goodes & possessions, a great number Page 2098 driuen from house to home, so many weeping eyes, so many sobbing hartes, so many children made fatherles, so many fathers bereft of theyr wiues and children, so many vexed in conscience, and diuers against conscience cōstrained to recant, and in conclusion, neuer a good man almost in all the Realme but suffered something during all the time of this bloody persecution: after all this (I say) now we are come at length (the Lord be prayesd) to the 17. day of Nouember, which day as it brought to the persecuted members of Christ, rest from theyr carefull mourning, so it easeth me somewhat likewise of my laborious writing, by the death I meane of Queene Mary. Who being long sicke before vpon the sayd xvij. day of Nouember, in the yeare aboue sayde,* about 3. or 4. a clocke in the morning, yelded her life to nature, and her kingdome to Queene Elizabeth her sister.

As touching the maner of whose death, some say that she dyed of a Tympany, some by her much sighing before her death, supposed she dyed of thought & sorow. Wherevpon her Counsell seing her sighing, & desirous to know the cause, to the ende they might minister the more readye consolation vnto her, feared, as they sayd, that she took y^e thought for the kinges Maiesty her husband, which was gone from her. To whom she answering againe: In deed (sayd she) that may be one cause, but that is not the greatest wound that pearseth my oppressed minde: but what that was she would not expresse to them.

Albeit, afterward she opened the matter more plainly to M. Rise and Mistres Clarentius (if it be true that they tolde me, whiche hearde it of M. Rise himselfe) who then being most familiar with her, & most bold about her, tolde her that they feared she took thought for king Philips departing from her.* Not that onely (sayde she) but when I am dead & opened, you shall find Calice lying in my hart. &c. And here an end of Queene Mary, and of her persecution.

*Of which Queene this truely may be affirmed & left in story for a perpetual memorial or Epitaph for al kings and Queenes that shal succeed her to be noted, that before her neuer was readde in story of any King or Queene of England since the time of king Lucius, vnder whome in time of peace, by hanging, heading, burning, and prisoning: so much Christian blood, so many Englishmens liues were spilled within this Realme, as vnder the sayd Queene Mary for the space of foure yeres was to be sene, and I beseech the Lord neuer may be sene hereafter.

☛ A briefe declaration, shewing the vnprosperous successe of Queene Mary in persecuting Gods people, and how mightily God wrought agaynst her in all her affayres.

NOw, for so much as Queene Mary, during all the time of her reigne, was suche a vehement Aduersary and Persecutour agaynst the sincere Professours of Christ Iesus and his Gospell: * for the which there be many which do highly magnify & approue her doinges therein, reputing her Religion to be founde and Catholicke, and her proceedings to be most acceptable and blessed of almighty God: to the intēt therfore: that all men may vnderstande, howe the blessing of the Lorde God did not onely not proceed with her proceedings, but cōtrary, rather how his manifest displeasure euer wrought agaynst her, in plaguing both her and her Realme, and in subuerting all her counselles and attemptes, whatsoeuer she tooke in hand: we will bestow a litle time therein, to perpend and suruey the whole course of her doinges and •heuaunces: and cōsider what successe she had in the same. Which being well considered, we shall finde neuer no reigne of any Prince in this Land, or any other, whiche had euer to shew in it (for the proportion of time) so many arguments of Gods great wrath & displeasure, as was to be sene in the reigne of this Queene Mary, whether we behold the shortnes of her time, * or the vnfortunate euent of all her purposes? who seemed neuer to purpose any thing that came luckely to passe, neither did any thing frame to her purpose what so euer she tooke in hande touching her owne priuate affayres.

Of good kinges we read in the Scripture, in shewing mercy and pity, * in seeking Gods will in his word, & subuerting the monumentes of Idolatry, howe God blessed theyr wayes encreased theyr honours, and mightely prospered all their proceedings: as we see in king Dauid, Salomon, Iosias, Iosaphath, Ezechias, with such other. Manasses made the streetes of Hierusalem to swimme with the bloud of his subiects▪ but what came of it the text doth testify.

Of Queene Elizabeth, whiche nowe raigneth among vs, this we must needes say, which we see, that she in sparing the bloud, not onely of Gods seruantes, * but also of Gods enemies, hath doubled now the raygne of Queene Mary her sister, with such aboundance of peace and prosperitie, that it is hard to say, whether the realme of England felt more of Gods wrath in Queene Maryes tyme, or of Gods fauour and mercy in these so blessed & peaceable dayes of Queene Elizabeth.

Gamaliell speaking his minde in the Counsaile of the Phariseis concerning Christes religion, gaue this reason, * that if it were of God, it should continue, who soeuer sayd nay: If it were not, it could not stand. So may it be sayde of Q. Mary and her romishe Religion, that if it were so perfect and Catholicke as they pretend, and the contrarye fayth of the Gospellers were so detestable and hereticall as they make it, how commeth it then, that this so Catholicke a Queene, suche a necessarye pillar of his spouse hys Church, continued no longer, till shee had vtterly rooted out of the land this hereticall generation? Yea how chanced it rather, y^e almightye God, to spare these poore heretickes, rooted out Q. Mary so soone from her throne, after she had reigned but onely v. yeares and v. monthes?

Now furthermore, howe God blessed her wayes and endeouours in the meane tyme,* while shee thus persecuted the true seruantes of God, remayneth to bee discussed. Where first this is to be noted, that when shee first began to stand for the title of the Crowne, and yet had wrought no resistance agaynst Christ and his Gospell, but had promised her fayth to the Suffolke men,* to mayntayn the religion left by king Edward her brother, so long GOD went with her, aduanced her, and by the meanes of the Gospellers brought her to the possession of the Realme. But after that she breaking her promise with God & man began to take part with Steuen Gardiner, and had geuē ouer her supremacie vnto the pope, by and by Gods blessing left her, neyther did any thing wel thriue with her afterward during the whole time of her Regiment.

For first incontinently the fayrest and greatest ship she had, called great Harry, was burned:* suche a vessell as in all these partes of Europe was not to be matched.

Then would she needes bring in king Philip, and by her straunge maryage with him,* make the whole realme of England subiect vnto a straunger. And all y^t notw^tstanding, either that she did or was able to doe, she coulde not bring to passe to set y^e crowne of England vpon hys head. With king Phillip also came in the Pope and his popishe Masse: w^t whom also her purpose was to restore agayn y^e Monkes and Nunnes vnto theyr places, neyther lacked there all kind of attemptes to the vttermost of her ability: & yet therin also God stopt her of her wil, that it came not forward. After this, what a dearth happened in her tyme here in her land? the like whereof hath not lightly in England bene seene, in so much that in sundry places her poore subiects were fayne to feed of accornes for want of Corne.

Furthermore, where other kinges are wont to bee renowned by some worthy victory and prowes by them achieved,* let vs now see what valiaunt victory was go••en in this Queene Maryes dayes. King Edward the vi. her blessed brother, how many rebellions did hee suppress in Deuonshyre, in Northfolke, in Oxfordshyre, & els where? * what a famous victorie in hys time was gotten in Scotlād, by y^e singular working (no doubt) of Gods blessed had rather then by any expectation of man? K. Edw. the thyrd (which was the xi. K. frō y^e conquest) by princely puissance purchased Calice vnto Englād,* which hath bene kept english euer since, til at length came Quene Mary, y^e xi. likewise from the sayd K. Edward, which lost Calice frō England agayne: so that the winninges of this Queene wer very small: what the losses were, let other men iudge.

Hetherto the affayres of Queene Mary haue had no great good successe, as you haue heard.* But neuer worse successe had any woman, thē had she in her childbyrth. For seing one of these two must needes be granted, that either she was with child or not with child, if she were w^t child & did trauaile, why was it not seene? if shee were not, howe was al the realm deluded? And in the meane while where were all the praiers, y^e solemne processions, y^e deuout masses of the Catholicke Clergy? why did they not preuayle with God, if theyr Religion were so godly as they pretēd? If theyr Masses Ex opere operato be able to fetch Christe from heauen, and to reach down to Purgatory, how chāced then they could not reach to the Queenes chamber, to helpe her in her trauayle, if she had ben with child in deed? if not, howe then came it to passe, that all the Catholicke Church of England did so erre, & was so deeply deceiued? Queene Mary, after these manifold plagues and correctiōs, which might sufficiētly admonish her of Gods disfauour Page 2099 prouoked agaynst her, would not yet cease her persecution, but stil continued more and more to reuenge her Catholicke zeale vpon the Lordes faithfull people, setting f••e to theyr poore bodyes by dosens and halfedosens together. Wherevpon Gods wrathfull indignation increasing more and more agaynst her, ceased not to touche her more neare with priuate misfortunes and calamities. For after that he had taken from her the fruit of children (whiche chiefly and aboue all thinges she desired) then he bereft her of that,* which of all earthly thinges should haue bene her chiefe stay of honor, and staffe of comfort, that is, withdrew from her the affectiō and company euen of her owne husband, by whose mariage she had promised before to her selfe whole heapes of such ioy & felicity: but now the omnipotent gouernour of all thinges so turned the wheele of her owne spinning agaynst her, that her high buildinges of such ioyes & felicities, came all to a Castle come downe, her hopes being confounded, her purposes disappointed, and she now brought to desolation: who semed neither to haue the sauour of God, nor the harts of her subiectes, nor yet the loue of her husband:* who neither had fruite by him while she had him, neither could now enioy him whō she had maryed, neither yet was in liberty to mary any other whom she might enioy. Marke here (Christian Reader) the wofull aduersity of this Queene, and learne withall, what the Lord can do when mans wilfulnes will needes resist him, and will not be ruled.

At last, when all these fayre admonitions would take no place with the Queene, nor moue her to reuoke her bloody lawes,* nor to stay the tyranny of her Priestes, nor yet to spare her owne Subiectes, but that the poore seruauntes of God were drawne dayly by heapes most pitifully as sheepe to the slaughter, it so pleased the heauenly Maiesty of almighty God, when no other remedy would serue, by death to cut her of, which in her life so litle regarded the life of others: geuing her throne, which she abused to the destruction of Christes Church and people, to an other who more tēperatly and quietly could guid the same, after she had reigned here the space of fiue yeares and fiue monethes.* The shortnes of which yeares and reigne, vnneth we finde in any other story of King or Queene since the Conquest or before (being come to theyr own gouernment) saue onely in king Richard the thyrd.

And thus much here, as in the closing vp of this story, I thought to insinuate, touching the vnlucky and ruefull r•ign of queene Mary: not for any detraction to her place and state royall,* wherunto she was called of the Lord, but to this onely intēt and effect, that forsomuch as she would needes set her selfe so confidently to woork and striue agaynst the Lord and his proceedings, all readers & rulers not only may see how y^e Lord did work agaynst her therfore, but also by her may be aduertised & learn what a perillous thing it is for men and women in authority, vpon blind zeale & opinion, to styrre vp persecution in Christes Church, to the effusion of Christian bloud, least it proue in the end with them (as it did here) that while they think to persecu•e hereticks, they stumble at the same stone as dyd the Iewes in persecuting Christ and his true members to death, to theyr owne confusion and destruction.

The seuer punishment of God vpon the persecutours of his people and enemyes to his word, with such also as haue bene blasphemers, contemners, and mockers of his Religion.

LEauing now Queene Mary, being dead and gone, I come to them whiche vnder her were the chiefe Ministers and doers in this persecution,* the Byshops (I meane) and Priestes of the Clergy, to whō Queene Mary gaue all the execution of her power, as did Queene Alexandra to the Phariseis after the tyme of the Machabees. Of whom Iosephus thus writeth: Ipsa solum nomen regium ferebat, caeterum omnem regni potestatem Pharisei possidebant. That is: She onely reteyned to her selfe the name and title of the kingdome, but all her power, she gaue to the phariseis to possesse. &c. Touching which Prelates and Priestes, here is to be noted in lyke sorte the wonderfull and miraculous prouidence of almighty GOD, which as he abridged the reigne of theyr Queene, so he suffered them not to escape vnuisited: first beginning with Stephen Gardiner the Archpersecutour of Christes Church, whom he tooke away about the middest of the Queenes reigne. Of whose poysoned lyfe and stincking end,* forsomuche as sufficient hath bene touched before. pag. 1786. I shall not need here to make any newe rehearsall therof.

After him dropped other away also, some before the death of Queene Mary, and some after,* as Morgan Byshop of S. Dauids, who sitting vppon the condemnation of the blessed Martyr bysh. Farrar, and vniustly vsurping his rowm, not long after was stricken by Gods haue after such a strange sort, that his meate would not go down but rise & pycke vp agayne, somtyme at his mouth, sometyme blowne out of his nose most horrible to beholde, & so he continued till his death. Where note moreouer y^t when Mayster Leyson being then Sheriffe at Byshop Farrars burning, had fet away the cattell of the sayde Byshoppe,* from his seruauntes house called Mattheue Harbottell, into his owne custody, the cattell comming into the Sheriffes ground, diuers of them would neuer eate meate but lay bellowing and roaring, and so dyed.

This foresayd Byshoppe Morgan aboue mentioned, bringeth me also in remembraunce of Iustice Morgan,* who sate vpon the death of the Lady Iane, & not long after the same, fell mad and was bereft of his wittes, & so died, hauing euer in his mouth, Lady Iane, Lady Iane. &c.

Before the death of Queene Mary, dyed Doct. Dunning the bloody and wretched Chauncellour of Norwich who, after he had most rigorously condēned and murdered so many simple and faythfull Sayntes of the Lord, cōtinued not longe himselfe, but in the middest of his rage in Queene Maryes dayes dyed in Lincolnshyre being sodaynly taken (as some say) sitting in his chayre.

The like sodayne death fel also vpon Berry Commissary in Northfolke,* who (as is before shewed in the story of Thomas Hudson) foure dayes after Queene Maryes death, when he had made a great feast, and had one of hys concubines there, comming home from the Church after Euensong, where he hadde ministred Baptisme the same tyme, betweene the Churchyard and his house, sodeinly fell downe to the ground with a heauy grone, and neuer styrred after, neither shewed any one token of repentance.

What a stroke of Gods hand was brought vppon the cruell persecutour of the holy and harmeles sayntes of the Lord, Byshop Thornton, Suffragan of Douer,* who after he had exercised hys cruell tyranny vpon so many Godly men at Canterbury, at length comming vppon a Saterdag from the Chapter house at Caunterbury to Borne, & there vpon sonday following, looking vpon his mē praying at the bowles, •ell sodēly in a Palsey, and so had to bed was willed to remember God, Yea, so I doe (sayd he) and my Lord Cardinall to. &c.

After hym succeeded an othher Byshop or Suffragan ordayned by the foresayd Cardinall. It is reported that he had bene Suffragan before to Boner,* who not <◇> after was made Bysh. or Suffragan of Douer, brake his necke fallyng downe a payre of stayres in the Cardinals chāber at Grenewich, as he had receiued the Cardinals blessing.

Among other plentifull and sondrye examples of the Lordes iudgement and seueritie practised vpon the cruell persecutors of hys people, that is not the least that followeth, concerning the story of one William Fenning, y^e effect and circumstance of which matter is this.

Iohn Cooper, of the age of 44. yeaes, dwelling at Watsam in the County of Suffolke, beyng by science a Carpenter, a man of a very honest report & a good housekeeper, a harbourer of straungers, that trauayled for conscience, and one that fauoured Religion, and those that were religious, he was of honest conuersation and good lyfe hating all popish and papisticall trash.

This man being at home in his house, there came vnto hym one William Fenning, a seruing man dwellyng in the sayd Town of Watsam, and vnderstanding that the sayd Cooper had a couple of fayre Bullockes, did desire to buy them of hym, whiche Cooper told hym that hee was loth to sell them, for that hee had brought them vp for hys owne vse, and if he shoulde sell them, he then must be compelled to buy other and that he would not do.

When Fenning saw he could not get them (for he had often assayed the matter) he sayd he woulde sit as much in his light, and so departed, and wēt and accused him of high treason. The words he was charged with wer these: how he should pray that if God would not take away Queene Mary, that then he should wishe the Deuill to take her away. Of these wordes did this Fenning charge him before sir Henry Do•ell knight (vnto whome he was caryed by M. Timperley of Hinchlesā in Suffolke, & one Grimwood of Lowshaw Cōstable) which words Cooper sta•ly denied: & sayd he neuer spake them, but that coulde not helpe.

Notwithstanding he was arrayned therfore at Berry before sir Clement Higham, at a Lent assise, and there this Fenning brought two noughty menne that witnessed the speaking of the foresayd wordes, whose names were Richard White of Watsam, and Grimwood of Higham, Page 2100 in the sayd Countie of Suffolke. Whose testimonies were receiued as truth, although this good man Iohn Cooper had said what he could to declare himselfe innocent therein, but to no purpose God knoweth. For his life was determined, as in the ende appeared by sir Clement Hyghams woordes, who said he should not escape, for an example to all heretickes, as in deede hee thoroughly performed. For immediatly he was iudged to be hanged, drawn, and quartered, which was executed vpon him shortly after, to the great grieffe of manye a good heart. Heere good Cooper is bereft of his life, and leaues behinde him aliue his wife and 9. children with goodes and cattell, to the value of 3. hundred markes, the which substance was al taken away by the sayd sir Henry Doyel Sheriffe, but his wife & pore children left to the wide world in their cloathes, and suffered not to enioy one pennie of that they had sore laboured for, vnlesse they made frendes to buy it with money, of the sayd Sheriffe so cruel and greedy was he and his officers vpon such things as were there left.

Wel, now this innocēt man is dead▪ his goods spoiled, his wife and children left desolate and comfortlesse, and all things is hushte, and nothing feared of any parte, yet the Lord who surely doth reuenge the guiltles bloud, would not stil so suffer it,* but began at the length to punish it him selfe. For in the haruest after, the sayde Grimwood of Hitcham one of the witnesses before specified, as hee was in his labour staking vp a goffe of corne, hauing hys health, and fearing no pearill: sodenly his bowels fell out of hys body, and immediately most miserably he died: suche was the terrible Iudgement of God, to sh•we his displeasure against this bloody act, and to warne the rest by these hys iudgements to repentance. The Lorde graunt vs to honour the same for his mercies sake. Amen.

This foresaid Fenning, who was the procurer of this tyrannie against him, is yet aliue, and is nowe a minister, which if he be, I pray God he may so repent that fact, that he may declare himselfe hereafter, such a one as may well aunswere to his vocation accordingly.

But since we haue heard that he is no chaungeling but continueth still in his wickednes, & therefore presented before the woorshipfull Mayster Humerston Esquire and Iustice of Peace & Coram for that he had talke with some of his friendes (as he thoughte) how many honest women (to their great infamy) were in the Parish of Wensthaston wherein he is now Ui•are resident, wherefore he was commaunded the next sonday ensuing, to aske all the Parish forgiuenes vpō his knees openly in seruice tyme, which he did in Wensthaston Church before sayd, & moreouer the abouesayd Fenning is reported, to be more lyke a shifter then a Minister.

To these examples also may be added y^e terrible iudgment of God vpon the Parson of Crondall in Kent, who vpon Shrouesonday hauing receiued the Popes Pardon from Cardinal Poole, came to his Parish, and exhorted y^e people to receiue the same, as he had done himselfe: saying y^t he stooode now so cleare in cōscience as whē he was first borne,* & cared not now if he should dye the same houre in y^e clearenes of conscience: whereupon being sodenly stricken by the hand of God, & leaning a little on the one syde, immediately shronke down in the Pulpit, & so was found dead, speaking not one word more. Read before pag. 1560.

Not long before y^e death of Queene Mary dyed Doctour Capon Bishop of Salisbury. About the which tyme also followed the vnprepared death of Doctour Geffrey Chancellour of Salisbury, who in the midst of his buildings, sodainly being taken by the mighty hand of God, yelded his lyfe, which hadde so little pittye of other mens lyues before. Concerning whose crueltye partly mention is made before pag. 2055.*

As touching moreouer this foresayde Chauncellour, here is to be noted, that he departing vpon a Saterdag, y^e next day before the same, he hadde appoynted to call before him .90. persons and not so fewe, to examine them by Inquisition, had not the goodnes of the Lord, and his tender prouidence, thus preuented him with death, prouiding for his poore seruauntes in tyme.

And now (to come from Priests to Lay men) we haue to finde in them also no lesse terrible demonstrations of Gods heauy iudgement vpon such as haue beene vexers and persecutours of his people.

Before in the story of M. Bradford .1624. mention was made of Maister Woodroffe, who being thē Sheriffe, vsed much to reioyce at the death of the poore Saints of Christ,* and so hard he was in his office, that when Mayster Rogers was in y^e cart going toward Smithfield, and in the way his childrē wer brought vnto him, y^e people making a laue for them to come: Maister Woodroffe bad the carmans head should be brokē for staying his cart. But what happened? He was not come out of his office the space of a weeke, but he was stricken by the sodaine hand of God,* the one halfe of his body in suche sorte y^t he lay be nummed and bedred, not able to moue himself but as he was li•ted of other, and so contynued in that infirmity the space of 7. or 8. yeares tyll his dying day, pag. 1624.

Lykewise touching Rafe Lardyn the betrayer of George Eagles, it is thought of some, that y^e sayd Rase afterward was attached himselfe, arraegned, and hanged.

Who being at the barre, had these woordes before the Iudges there, and a greate multitude of people. This is most iustly fallen vpon me (saythe he) for that he hadde betrayed the innocent bloud of a good & iust man George Eagles, who was here condemned in the time of Queene Maryes raygne thorough his procurment who sold hys bloud for a little money. Not much vnlyke stroke of these seuerally, was shewed vpon W. Swallow of Chemlford, & his wife, also vpon Rich. Potto, & Iustice Browne cruel persecutors of y^e sayd George Egles, concerning whose story Reade before, pag. 2009.

Amonge other persecutours also came to our handes y^e cruelty of one Maister Swingfield an Aldermans Deputye about Thamys streete, who hearing 〈◇〉 Angelles wyfe, a midwyfe that kepte her selfe from their Popishe Church, to be at the labour of one Mistres Walter al crooked Lane ende▪ tooke three other with him, and besette the house about, and tooke her and caryed her to Boners officers, bigge with childe, 28. weekes gone, who layd her in Lollardes Tower, where as the same daye shee came in, thorough feare and a fall at her taking, she was deliuered of a man childe, & could haue no woman with her in that needefull tyme. Lying there 5. weekes, she was deliuered vnder suertes by friendship, and Doctor Story hearing thereof charged her with felony, and so sent her to Newgate. The cause was for that she had a womā at her house in her labour that dyed, and the child also, and so he charged her with their death.

But when Syr Roger Cholmley hearde her tell her tale, he deliuered her:* and not much more then 10. weekes after, if it were so long, dyed the sayd Maister Swingfield, and the other three that came to take her.

Because some there be, and not a few, which haue such a great deuotion in setting vp y^e Popish Masse, I shal desire thē to marke well this story following. There was a certain Bailiffe of Cowlād in Lincolnshire named Burton,* who pretending an earnest frendship to the Gospel in king Edwards dayes, in outward shew at least (although inwardly he was a Papist or Atheist, and wel knownen to be a man of a wicked & adulterous life) set forth the kinges proceedinges lustely, till the time that king Edward was dead and Queene Mary placed quietly in her estate.

Then perceiuing by the first proclamation concerning Religion, how the world was lyke to turne, the Bailiffe turned his Religion likewise: and so he moued the Parish to shew themselues the Queenes friendes, & to set vp the Masse speedely. Neuertheles the most substauntiall of the Parish, marueling much at the Bailiffes inconstant lightnes, considering also his abominable lyfe, and hauing no great deuotion vnto his request: knowing moreouer that their duty & frendship to the Queene stode not in setting vp y^e Masse, spared to prouide for it, as lōg as they might: but the Bailiffe called on them still in the Queenes name.

At last, when he saw his wordes were not regarded, & purposing to wynne his spurres by playing the man in y^e Masses behalfe and the Queenes, he got him to the church vpon a sunday morning, & when the Curate was beginning the Englishe seruice, according to the Statute secte forth by King Edward the vj. the Bailiffe commeth in a great rage to the Curate & sayth: Syrrha will you not say Masse? buckle your selfe to Masse you knaue, or by Gods bloud I shall sheathe my dagger in your shoulder. The poore Curate for feare fetled himselfe to Masse.

Not long after this, the Bailiffe rode from home vpō certaine busines, accompanied with one of his neighbors and as they came ryding togeather vpon the Fennebanke homeward agayne,* a Crow sitting in a willow tree tooke her flighte ouer hys head, singing after her woonted note, knaue, knaue, & withall let fall vpon his face, so that her excrements ran from y^e top of his nose down to his beard.

The poysoned sent & sauour whereof so noyed his stomacke, that he neuer ceased vomiting vntil he came home, wherwith his hart was so sore & his body so distempered: that for extreme sicknes he got him to bed, and so lying, he was not able for the stincke in his stomacke and paynefull vomiting, to receaue any reliefe of meate or drinke, but cryed out still, sorowfully complayning of that stincke, & Page 2101 with no smal othes, cursing the Crow that had poysoned him. To make short, he continued but a few daies, but w^t extreme paine of vomiting and crying, he desperately died without any token of repentance of his former life.

*Reported and testified for a certaintie, by diuers of his neighbours, both honest and credible persons.

Of Iames Abbes Martyr, ye heard before. In the time of whose Martyrdom, what befell vpon a wicked railer against him,* now ye shall further vnderstand. Wherby all such railing persecutors may learne to feare Gods hand, and to take heede, howe or what they speake againste his seruaunts. As this Iames Abbes was led by the sheriffe toward his execution, diuers poore people stood in y^t way, and asked their almes.* He then hauing no money to geue them, and desirous yet to distribute some thing amongst them, did pull off all his apparell sauing hys shirt, & gaue the same vnto them, to some one thing, to some an other: in the geuing wherof he exhorted them to be strong in the Lord, and as faithful followers of Christ, to stand stedfast vnto the truthe of the Gospell, which hee (through Gods helpe) would then in their sight seale and confirme w^t hys bloud. Whiles he was thus charitably occupied, and zealously instructing the people, a seruaunt of the Sheriffes going by & hearing him, cried out aloud vnto them, and blasphemously sayd,* beleue him not good people. He is an hereticke and a mad man, out of his wit: beleue him not, for it is heresy that he saith. And as the other continued in his godly admonitions, so did thys wicked wretche still blowe foorth his blasphemous exclamations vntill they came vnto the stake where he should suffer. Unto y^e which this constant Martyr was tied, & in the ende cruelly burned, as in his storie more fully is already declared.

*But immediatly after the fire was put vnto him (such was the fearfull stroke of Gods iustice vpon this blasphemous railer) that he was there presently in the sight of all the people, stricken with a frenesy, wherewith he had before mooste railingly charged that good Martyr of God, who in this furious rage and madnesse, casting off hys shoes, with all the rest of his cloathes, cried out vnto the people, and sayde: Thus did Iames Abbes the true seruaunt of God, who is saued, but I am damned. And thus ranne hee rounde about the Towne of Burie, still crying out that Iames Abbes was a good man and saued, but he was damned.

The Sheriffe then being amazed, and caused him to be taken & tied in a darke house, and by force compelled hym againe to put on his cloathes, thinking thereby wythin a while to bring him to some quietnes. But he (all that notwithstanding) as soone as they were gone, continued his former raging: and casting of his cloathes, cried as he did before: Iames Abbes is the seruant of God and is saued, but I am damned.

At length he was tied in a carte, & brought home vnto his Maisters house, and wythin halfe a yeare or thereabouts,* he being at the poynt of death, the priest of the parish was sent for: who comming vnto him, brought wyth him the Crucifixe, and theyr houseling host of the aultare. Which geare when the poore wretch sawe, he cried oute of the Priest, and defied all that baggage, saying y^t the Priest wyth suche other as he was, was the cause of his damnation, and that Iames Abbes was a good man, and saued. And so shortly after he died.

*Clarke an open enemie to the Gospell and all Godly preachers, in king Edwards daies hanged him self in the Tower of London.

*The great and notable papist called Troling Smith, of late fell downe sodenly in the streete and died.

Dale the Promoter was eaten into his body w^t Lice, and so died, as it is well knowen of manye, and confessed also by his fellow Iohn Auales, before credible witnesse.

Coxe an earnest protestant in king Edwardes dayes, and in Quene Maries time a papist and a Promoter, going wel and in health to bed (as it seemed) was deade before the morning. Testified by diuers of the neighbours.

Alexander the Keeper of Newgate, a cruell enemie to those that lay there for Religion,* died very miserably, being so swollen y^t he was more like a monster then a man, and so rotten within, that no man could abide the smell of him. This cruell wretch, to hasten the poore lambes to the slaughter, would go to Boner, Story, Cholmley, & other, crying out: rid my prison, rid my prison: I am too much pestered with these heretickes.

The sonne of y^e saide Alexander called Iames, hauing left vnto him by his father great substaunce, within three yeres wasted al to nought:* And whē some marueled how he spent those goodes so fast: O sayde he, euill gotten, euill spent: and shortly after as hee went in Newgate market, fell downe sodenly, and there wretchedly died.

Iohn Peter, sonne in lawe to this Alexander,* an horrible blasphemmer of God, & no lesse cruell to the said prisoners, rotted away, and so most miserably died. Who commonly when he woulde affirme any thing, were it true or false, vsed to say: If it be not true, I pray God I rotte ere I die. Witnesse the Printer heereof, with diuers other.

With these I mighte inferre the sodeine death of Iustice Lelond persecutor of Ieffray Hurst,* mentioned before, pag. 2076.

Also the death of Robert Baulding stricken w^t Lightning at the taking of William Seamen, whereuppon hee pined away and died: the storie of the which W. Seaman, see pag. 2035.

Likewise the wretched end of Beard the promoter.*

Moreouer, the consuming away of Rob. Blomfielde, persecutor of William Browne, specified pag. 2065.

Further, to returne a little backwarde to king Henries time, here might be induced also the example of Ihon Rockewoode, who in his horrible ende, cried all to late, w^t the same woordes which he had vsed before in persecuting Gods poore people of Calice, pag. 1055.

Also the iudgement of God vpon Lady Honor a persecutor, and of George Bradway a false accuser, both bereft of theyr wittes, page. 1227.

And what a notable spectacle of Gods reuengyng iudgement, haue wee to consider in Syr Rafe Ellerker, who as hee was desirous to see the heart taken out of Adam Damlyp, whom they most wrongfully put to death: so shortly after the sayd Syr Rafe Ellerker being slaine of the Frenchmen, they all too mangling him, after they had cutte off hys priue members, woulde not so leaue hym, before they myght see hys heart cutte oute of hys bodye, pag. 1229.

Doctor Foxlorde, Chauncellor to bishop Stokesley, a cruell persecutor, died sodeinly, read pag. 1055.

Pauier or Pauie, Towne Clearke of London, and a bitter enemie to the Gospell, hanged him selfe, pag. 1055.

Steuens Gardiner hearing of the pitiful end of Iudge Hales after he had drowned himself, taking occasiō thereby, called the following and professiō of the Gospel a doctrine of desperation. But as Iudge Hales neuer fell into that inconuenience before hee had consented to Papistrie: so who so well considereth the ende of Doctour Pendleton (which at hys death ful sore repented that euer he had yeelded to the doctrine of the Papists, as he did) and likewise the miserable ende of the moste parte of the Papistes besides, and especially of Steuens Gardiner him selfe, who after so longe professinge the doctrine of Papistrie, when there came a Bishop to him in his deathbed,* and put him in remembraunce of Peter denying his Maister, he aunswearing againe, sayd: that he had denied with Peter, but neuer repented with Peter, and so both stinckingly & vnrepentantly died: will say, as Steuens Gardiner also hym selfe gaue an euident exāple of the same, to all men to vnderstand that Poperie rather is a doctrine of desperation, procuring the vengeance of almighty God to them that wilfully do cleaue vnto it.

Iohn Fisher Bishop of Rochester, and Syr Thomas More, in Kyng Henryes time, after they hadde brought Iohn Frith, Baifield, and Baynham, and diuers other to theyr death, what great reward wanne they therby with almighty God? Did not the sworde of Gods vengeance light vpon their owne neckes shortly after, and they them selues made a publicke spectacle at the tower hil, of bloody deathe, which before had no compassion of the liues of others? Thus ye see the saying of the Lord to be true: *Hee that smiteth with the sword, shall pearish with the sword.

So was Heliodorus in the old time of the Iewes plagued by Gods hand in the Temple of Hierusalem. *

So did Antiochus, Herode, Iulian, Ualerianus the Emperour, Decius, Maxentius, with infinite others, after they had exercised theyr crueltye vpon Gods people, feele the like striking hand of God them selues also, in reuenging the bloud of his seruants.

And thus much concerning those persecutors, as well of the Clergy sort, as of the laity, which were stricken, and died before the death of Quene Mary. With whom also is to be numbered in the same race of persecuting Byshops, which died before Quene Mary, these bishops folowing.

Bishops.

- Coates Bishop of Westchester.
- Parfew Bishop of Harford. *
- Glinne Bishop of Bangor.
- Brookes Bishop of Glocester.
- King Bishop of Tame.
- Peto Elect of Salisburie.
- Day Bishop of Chichester.
- Holyman Bishop of Bristow.

Page 2102 Now after the Queene immediately followed, or rather waighted vpon her, the death of cardinal Poole, who the next day departed: Of what disease, although it be vncertaine to many, yet to some it is suspected that hee tooke some Italian Physicke, which did him no good. Then folowed in order.

Bishops.

- Iohn Christopherson B. of Chichester.
- Hopton B. of Norwich.
- *Morgan B. of S. Dauids.
- Iohn White B. of Winchester.
- Rafe Baine B. of Lichfield and Couentrie.
- Owen Oglethorpe B. of Carlile.
- * Cuthert Tonstall B. of Durham.
- Thomas Rainolds elect of Herford, after hys depriuation died in prison.

Besides these Bishops aboue named, first died at the same time.

- D. Weston Deane of Westminster, afterwarde Deane of Windsore, chiefe disputer against Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer.

- M. Slerhurst, maister of Trinitie colledge in Oxforde, who died in the Tower.
- Seth Holland deane of Worcester, and Warden of Alsoule Colledge in Oxforde.
- William Copinger, Monke of Westminster, who bare the great Seale before Steuen Gardener, after the death of the sayde Gardener, made him selfe Monke in the house of Westminster, and shortly after, so fell madde, and died in the Tower.
- Doctor Steward Deane of Winchester.

¶To beholde the woorking of Gods iudgements, it is wonderous. In the first yeare of Quene Marie, when the Clergy was assembled in the Conuocation house, and also afterwarde, when the Disputation was in Oxford against Doctor Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, he that had seene then Doctor Weston the Prolocutoure in his ruffe, howe highly he tooke vpon him in the Schooles, and how stoutly he stode in the Popes quarell against simple and naked truth, full litle would haue thought, and lesse did he thinke him self (I dare say) that his glory and lofty lookes shoulde haue bene brought downe so soone, especiall by them of hys owne Religion, whose part he so doughtely defended. But such is the rewarde and ende commonly of them, who presumptuously oppose them selues to striue against the Lord, as by the example of this Doctorly prolocutor right wel may appeare.* For not long after the disputation aboue mentioned, against Bishop Cranmer and hys fellowes, God so wrought against the sayd Doctour Weston, that hee fell in great displeasure wyth Cardinall Poole and other Bishops, because hee was vnwilling to geue vp his Deanery and house of Westminster, vnto the Monkes and religious men, whom in deede he fauoured not, although in other things he maintained the Church of Rome. Who notwithstanding, at last through importunate sute, gaue vp Westminster, & was deane of Windsore: Where not long after, he was apprehended in adulterie,* and for the same, was by the Cardinall put from all hys spirituall liuings.

Wherefore he appealed to Rome, and purposed to haue fledde out of the Realme, but was taken by the way, and committed to the Tower of London, and there remained vntill Queene Elizabeth was proclaimed Queene, at whych time he being deliuered, fell sicke and dyed. The common talke was,* that if he had not so sodely ended his life, hee woulde haue opened and reuealed the purpose of the chiefe of the Cleargy, meaning the Cardinall, whyche was to haue taken vp K. Henries body at Windsore, and to haue burned it. And thus much of doctor Weston.

The residue that remained of the persecuting Clergy, and escaped the stroke of deathe, were depriued, and committed to prison: the Catalogue of whose names heere followeth.

In the Tower.

- Nicholas Death, Archbishop of Yorke, and Lord Chauncellour.
- Thomas Thurlby B. of Ely.
- *Thomas Watson B. of Lincolne.
- Gilbert Burne B. of Bath and Welles.
- Richard Pates B. of Worcester.
- Troublefield B. of Exeter.
- Iohn Fecknam Abbot of Westminster.
- Iohn Boxal Deane of Windsore and Peterborough.

Of Dauid Poole B. of Peterborough, I doubte whether he was in the Tower, or in some other prisone.*

Ran away.

- Goldwell B. of S. Asse.
- Maurice Elect of Bangor.
- Edmund Boner B. of London, in the Marshalsea.
- Thomas Wood B. Elect, in the Marshalsea.
- Cutbert Scotchish. of Chester, was in the Fleete, from whence he escaped to Louane, and there died.

In the Fleet.

- Henry Cole Deane of Paules.
- Iohn Harpesfield Archdeacon of London, and Deane of Norwich.
- Nicholas Harpesfield Archd. of Cant.
- Anthony Draycot Archdeacon of Hūtington.
- W. Chadsey Archdeacon of Midlesex.

¶Concerning which Doctour Chadsey here is to be noted,* that in the beginning of king Edwards raigne he recanted and subscribed to 34. Articles, wherein hee then fully consented and agreed with his owne hand wryting to the whole forme of doctrine approoued & allowed then in the church, as well concerning iustification by faith only, as also the doctrine of the two sacramentes then receaued, denying as well the Popes supremacie, transubstantiation, Purgatory, Inuocation of Saints, eleuation and adoration of the Sacrament, the sacrifice, & veneration of the Masse, as also all other like excrements of Popish superstition, according to the kings booke then set forth.

Wherefore the more maruel it is, that he being counted such a famous and learned Clearke, would shew himselfe so fickle and vnstable in hys assertions, so double in hys doinges, to alter hys Religion according to time, and to maintein for truth, not what he thought best, but what he myght most safely defend. So long as the state of the lord Protectour and of hys brother stode vpprighte, what was then the conformitie of this D. Chadsey, hys owne Articles in Latine,* wrytten and subscribed wyth hys owne hand, doe declare, which I haue to shewe, if he will denye them. But after the decay of the kings vncles, the fortune of them turned not so fast, but his Religion turned withall, and eftsoones he tooke vppon hym to dispute agaynste Peter Martyr, in vpholding Transubstantiation at Oxforde, which a little before with his owne hād wryting he had ouerthrowen.

After this ensued the time of Queene Mary, wherein doctor Chadsey to shew hys double diligence,* was so eger in his commission to sit in iudgement, & to bring poore mē to their death, that in the last yeare of Quene Mary when the Lord Chauncellor, Syr Thomas Cornwalles, Lorde Clinton, & diuers other of the Counsell had sent for hym by a special letter to repaire vnto London out of Essex, he wryting againe to the bishop of London, sought meanes not to come at the Counsels bidding, but to continue still in his persecuting progresse. The Copie of whose letter I haue also in my handes (if neede were) to bring forth.

Mention was made not long before, of one William Mauldon, who in king Henries time suffered stripes and scourgings for confessing the veritie of Gods true religion. It happened in the first yeare of Queene Elizabeth,* that the sayd W. Mauldon was bound seruaunt with one named Maister Hugh Aparry then a wheat taker for the Quene, dwelling at Grenewich. Who being newly come vnto him, and hauing neuer a booke there to looke vpon, being desirous to occupie himself vertuously, looked about the house, and founde a Primer in English, whereon hee read in a winters euening. Whiles he was reading, there sat one Iohn Apowel that had ben a Seruing man, about 30. yeres of age, borne toward Wales, whom the said M. Hugh gaue meat and drink vnto, til such time as he could get a seruice. And as the foresayd William Mauldon read on the Booke, the sayde Iohn Apowell mocked hym after euery worde, with contrary gaudes and flouting wordes vnreuerently, in so muche that he coulde no longer abide him for grief of hart, but turned vnto him, and sayd: Iohn take heede what thou doest: Thou doest not mocke mee, but thou mockest God. For in mocking of his word, thou mockest hym: and thys is the word of God, though I be simple that read it: and therfore beware what thou doest.

Then Mauldon fell to reading agayne, and still hee proceeded on in hys mocking, and when Mauldon had redde certayne Englyshe Prayers, in the ende he redde, Lorde haue mercye vpon vs, Christe haue mercye vpon vs. &c.

And as Mauldon was reciting these wordes, the other with a start sodenly sayd: Lord haue mercy vpon me.

With that Mauldon tourned and sayde, what ailest Page 2103 thou Iohn?

He sayee, I was afraide.

Whereon wast thou afraide, said Mauldon?

Nothing now, sayd the other? and so he would not tel hym. After thys, when Mauldon and he went to bedde, Mauldon asked him whereof he was afraide?

He sayde, when you red Lord haue mercye vpon vs, Christ haue mercy vpon vs, me thought the haire of my head stode vpright, w^t a great feare which came vpon me.

Then sayd Mauldon: Iohn thou mayest see, the euill spirite could not abide that Christ should haue mercy vpon vs. Wel Iohn (said Mauldon) repent and amend thy life, for God will not be mocked. If we mocke and iest at his woord, he will punish vs.

Also you vse rebauldry woordes and swearing verye much: therfore for Gods sake Iohn amend thy life. So I will (sayd he) by the grace of God: I pray God I may. Amen said the other, with other words, and so went to bed.

On the next day, about 8. of the clocke in the morning, the foresaid Iohn came running downe out of his chamber in his shirt into the Hall, and wrastled with hys mistresse as he would haue throwen her downe.* Wherat she shrieked out, and her seruauntes holpe her, and tooke hym by strength, and caried him vp vnto his bed, & bound him downe to his bed (for they perceiued plainly that he was out of his right minde.)

After that, as he lay, almoste day and night his tounge neuer ceased, but he cried out of the deuill of hell, and hys woordes were euer stil: O the deuill of hell: now the deuill of hell: I would see the deuill of hell: thou shalt see the deuill of hel: there he was, there he goeth, with other words, but most of the Deuill of hell.

Thus he lay without amendment about 6. daies, that his maister and all his houshold was weary of that trouble and noyse. Then his maister agreed with the keepers of Bedlem, and gaue a peece of money, and sent hym thether. It seemeth that he was possessed with an euill spirit, from the which God defend vs all.

This is a terrible example to you that be mockers of the word of God: therfore repent & amend, lest the vengeance of God fall vpon you in like maner. Witnes heereof William Mauldon of Newington.

*The same William Mauldon chaunced afterwarde to dwel at a Towne 6. miles from London called Waltamstow, where his wife taught yong children to read, which was about the yeare of our Lorde 1563. and the 4. yeare of Queene Elizabeths raigne. Unto this schoole, amongst other children, came one Benfieldes daughter, named Dennis, about the age of twelue yeares.

As these children sate talking together, they happened among other talke (as the nature of children is, to be busy with many things) to fall in communication of God, and to reason among them selues, after their childish discretion, what he should be.

Whereunto some answered one thing, some an other. Among whom when one of the children had sayd, that he was a good olde father: the foresayd Denis Benfielde casting out impious woordes of horrible blasphemie: what he (sayd shee) is an olde doting foole.

What wretched and blasphemous woordes were these yee heare. Nowe marke what followed.

When William Mauldon heard of these abhominable woordes of the girle, hee willed his wife to correcte her for the same. Which was appoynted the nexte day to be done. But whē the next morow came, her mother would nedes send her to the market to London, the wenche greatly intreating her mother that she might not go, being marueilously vnwilling thereunto. Howebeit thorough her mothers compulsion, shee was forced to goe, and went. And what happened? Her businesse being done at London, as she was returning againe homewarde, and being a little past Hackney,* sodenly the yong girle was so stricken, that all the one side of her was black, and she speachles. Wherupon immediately she was caried backe to Hackney, and there the same night was buried. Witnes of the same storie William Mauldon and his wife, also Benfielde her father, and her mother, which yet be all aliue.

A terrible example (no doubt) both to old and young, what it is for children to blaspheme the Lord theyr God,* and what it is for parentes to suffer their young ones to grow vp in such blasphemous blindnes, & not to nurture them betime in the rudimēts of the christian Catechisme, to know first their creation, and then their redemption in Christ our Sauour: to feare the name of God, and to reuerence his Maiestie. For els what do they deserue but to be taken away by ••eathe, whiche contemptuously despise him, of whome they take the benefite of life?

And therefore let all young maides, boyes, and yong men, take example by this wretched seely wench, not only not to blaspheme the sacrede Maiestie of the omnipotent God their creator, but also not once to take his name in vaine, according as they are taught in hys commaundementes.

Secondly, let all Fathers, Godfathers,* and Godmothers take this for a warning, to see to the instruction and Catechising of their children, for whom they haue bounde them selues in promise both to God and to hys Church. Which if the Father, and godfather, the Mother and godmothers had done to this younge girle, verely it maye be thought this destruction had not fallen vpon her.

Thirdly, al blinde Atheists, Epicures, Mammonists, belly Gods of this worlde, and sonnes of Beliall,* hypocrites, infidelles, and mockers of Religion, which saye in their hearts (there is no God) learne• also hereby, not only what God is, and what he is able to doe, but also in thys miserable creature here punished in this world, to behold what shall likewise fall on them in the world to come, vnlesse they will be warned betime, by such examples as the Lord God doth geue them.

Fourthly and lastly, heere may also be a spectacle for all them which be blasphemous and abhominable swearers,* or rather tearers of God, abusing his glorious name in suche contemptuous and despitefull sort as they vse to do. Whome if neither the woorde and commaundemente of God, nor the calling of the preachers, nor remorse of conscience, nor rule of reason, nor theyr wytheringe age, nor hory haire will admonish: yet let these terrible examples of Gods districte Iudgement, somewhat mooue them to take heede to them selues. For if thys young maiden, who was not fully 12. yeares old, for her vnreuerent speaking of God (and that but at one time) did not escape the stroke of Gods terrible hande, what then haue they to looke for, which being men growen in yeares, and stricken in age, being so often warned & preached vnto, yet cease not continually with theyr blasphemous othes, not only to abuse his name, but also most cōtumeliously and despitefully to teare him (as it were) and all his partes in peeces?

About the yeare of our Lorde 1565. at Bryhtwell in the County of Backshyre,* vppon certaine communication as touching the right reuerende Martyrs in Christ, Byshop Cranmer, Bishop Ridley, and maister Hughe Latimer, there came into an house in Abyngdon, one whose name is Leuar, being a Plowman, dwelling in Bryhtwel afore sayd, and sayd, that he saw that euill fauoured knaue Latimer when he was burned: And also in despite sayd, that he had teeth like a horse. At which time and hour, as neare as could be gathered, the sonne of the sayde Leauer moste wickedly hanged him selfe, at Shepton in the Countie aforesayd within a mile of Abingdon.

These wordes were spoken in the hearing of me Thomas Ienens of Abyngdon.

Did not Thomas Arundell,* Archbishop of Canterburie geue sentence against the Lord Cobham, and died him self before him, being so stricken in his tounge, that neither he could swallow nor speake for a certain space before his death? pag. 588.

Frier Campbell,* the accuser of Patricke Hamelton in Scotlande, what a terrible ende hee hadde, reade before, pag. 957.

Haruey a Commissarie, that condemned a poore man in Calice, was shortly after hanged, drawen, and quartered, pag. 1229.

William Swallow the cruell tormentor of George Egles, was shortly after so plagued of God, that al the hair of his heade, and nailes of his fingers and toes went off, his eyes welneare closed vppe, that hee coulde scante see. Hys wife also was stricken wyth the falling Sicknesse, wyth the whych Maladie shee was neuer infected before. pag. 2010.

Likewise Richard Potto, an other troubler of the sayd George Egles,* vppon a certaine anger or chafe with hys seruantes, was so sodenlye taken with sicknesse, that falling vpon his bed lyke a beast, there he died & neuer spake woorde, pag. 2010.

The wife of Iohn Fettye beinge the cause of the taking of her husband, how she was immediatly vppon the same by Gods hand stricken wyth madnesse, and was distracte out of her wittes, read before, pag. 2055.

Thomas Mowse and George Reuet, two persecutors were stricken miserably wyth the hand of God, and so died, pag. 1917.

Also Robert Edgore, for that hee hadde executed the office of a Parish Clearke against his conscience, thorough Page 2104 anguish and grief of conscience for the same, was so bereft of his wits, that he was kept in chaines and bondes many yeares after, pag. 1917.

As touching Iohn Plankney fellow of new Colledge in Oxford,* Ciuilian, and one Hanington, both fellowes of the same house aforesaid, and both stubburne Papistes, the matter is not much worthy the memory: yet the example is not vnworthy to be noted, to see what little cōfort & grace commonly followeth the comfortlesse doctrine and profession of papistry,* as in these two yong men, amongst many other may well appeare. Of whome the one, which was Plankney, scholer somtyme to Marshal (who wrote the booke of the crosse) is commonly reported and known to them of that Uniuersitie, to haue drowned himselfe in the riuer about Ruly, at Oxford. anno. 1566. the other in a Well about Rome, or as some do say, at Padua, and so beyng both drowned, were both taken vp with Crucifixes as it is sayde of some, hangyng about their neckes: The more pitie that such young studentes did so much addicte their wittes, rather to take the way of papistrie, then to walke in the comfortable light of the Gospell, nowe so brightly spreading his beames in all the worlde, which if they had done, I thinke not contrary, but it had prooued much better with them.

Albeit (I trust) the Gospell of Christ beyng now receiued in the Queenes Court amongst the Courtiers and seruants of her Gard, hath framed their lyues and maners so to lyue in the due feare of God, and temperance of lyfe, with all sobrietie and mercifull compassion toward their euenchristen, that they neede not greatly any other instructions to be geuē them in this story: yet for so much as examples many tymes doe worke more effectually in the myndes and memories of men: & also partly considering w^t my selfe, how these, aboue all other sorts of men in the whole Realme, in tyme past haue euer had most neede of such wholesom lessons and admonitions, to leaue their vnordinate riote of quaffing and drinking, and their Heathenish prophanatie of lyfe: I thought here to set before their eyes a terrible example, not of a strange and forreine person, but of one of their owne coate, a Yeoman of the Gard, not fayned by me, but brought to me by Gods prouidence for a warnyng to all Courtiers, and done of very truth no longer ago then in the yeare of our Lord, 1568. And as the story is true, so is the name of the partie not vnknownen, beyng called Christopher Landesdale, dwellyng in Hackney in Middlesex. The order of whose lyfe, and maner of his death beyng worthy to be noted, is this as in story here vnder followeth.

This foresayd Landesdale beyng married to an auncient woman yet liuing,* hauing by her both goods & lands, notwithstanding liued long in filthy whoredome with a yonger woman, by whom he had two children, a sonne & a daughter, and kept them in his house vnto the day of his death. Also when he should haue bene in seruing of God on the Saboth day, hee vsed to walke or ride about hys fieldes, and seldome hee or any of his house came to the Church after the English seruice was againe receyued. Besides this, he was a great swearer, and a great drunkard, and had great delight also in makyng other menne drunken, and would haue them whom he had made drūkards, to call him father, and he would cal thē his sonnes: and of these sonnes by report, he had aboue fortie. And if he had seene one that would drinke freely, hee would marke hym, and spende his money with him liberally in ale, or wyne, but most in wyne, to make him the sooner drunken. These blessed sonnes of his should haue great chere oftentimes, both at his owne house and at Tauernes: and not long before his death he was so beastly drunken in a Tauerne ouer against his dore, that he fell downe in the Tauerne yard, and could not arise alone, but lay grouelyng, till he was holpen vp and so caried home.

This father of drunkards, as he was a great feaster of the rich and welthy of Hackney and others,* so hys poore neighbours and poore tenantes fared little the better for hym: except it were with some broken meate, which after his feastes, his wyfe would cary and send vnto them, or some almes geuen at his doore.

Besides all this, he did much iniury to his poore neighbours in oppressing the commons nere about hym, which was a speciall reliefe vnto them, so that his cattaille eat vp all without pitie or mercy.

There chaunced after this about two yeres before hee died, a poore man, beyng sicke of the bloody flixe, for very weakenes to lie downe in a ditch of the sayd Landsdales,* not a stone cast from his house, where he had a litle straw brought him. Notwithstanding, the said Landesdale had backe houses and Barnes enough to haue layed hym in, but would not shew hym so much pitie. And thus poore Lazarus there lay night and day, about sixe weekes ere he died.

Certaine good neighbours hearyng of this, procured things necessary for his reliefe, but he was so farre spent, that he could not bee recovered: who lay broyling in the hote sunne, with a horrible smell, most pitifull to behold.

This poore man a little before he died, desired to be remooued to another ditch into the shadowe. Whereuppon,* one of the neighbours commyng to Landesdales wyfe for a bundle of strawe for him to lye vppon, shee required to haue hym remooued to Newyngton side, because (she said) if he should dye, it would be very farre to cary him to the Church.

Besides this, there was a mariage in this Landsdales house, and the gestes that came to the mariage, gaue the poore man mony as they came & went by him, but Landesdale disdained to contribute any relief vnto him, notwithstanding that he had promised to M. Searles, one of the Queenes Gard (who had more pitie of him) to minister to him things necessary.

To be short, the next day poore Lazarus departed this lyfe, & was buried in Hackney churchyard:.* Upon whom Landsdale did not so much as bestow a •inding sheet, or any thyng els towards his buriall. And thus much cōcerning the end of poore Lazarus. Nowe let vs heare what became of the rich glutton.

About two yeres after this, the said Landesdale beyng full of drinke (as his custome was) came ridyng in great hast from London on s. Andrews day in the euening, an. 1568. and as it is reported by those that sawe him reelyng too and fro lyke a drunkard with his hat in hys hand, and commyng by a ditch, there tumbled in headlong into the ditch. Some say that the horse fell vppon him, but that is not lyke. This is true, the horse more sober then the maister, came home leauyng his maister behynde him.* Whether he brake his necke with the fall, or was drowned (for the water was scarsly a foote deepe) it is vncertayne: but certaine it is, that he was there found dead. Thus he beyng found dead in the ditch, the Crouner (as the manner is) sate vpon him: and how the matter was handled for sauynge his goods, the Lord knoweth: but in the end so it fell out, that the goods were saued, and the poore horse indited for his maisters death.

The neighbours hearing of the death of this man, and considering the maner thereof, said, it was iustly fallen vpon him, that as he suffered the poore man to lie and dye in the ditch nere vnto hym, so his end was to die in a ditch likewise.* And thus hast thou in this story (Christian brother and Reader) the true image of a rich glutton & poore Lazarus set out before thine eyes, whereby we haue all to learne, what happeneth in the ende to suche voluptuous Epicures and Atheistes, which beyng voyde of all senses of Religion and feare of God, yelde themselues ouer to all prophanitie of lyfe, neither regardyng any honestie at home, nor shewyng any mercy to their needye neighbour abroad.

Christ our Sauour saith: Blessed be the mercifull, for they shall obtaine mercy:.*but iudgement without mercy shal be executed on them which haue shewed no mercy, &c. And S. Iohn sayth: He that seeth his brother haue neede,*and shutteth vp his compassion from him, how dwelleth the loue of God in hym? &c. Agayne, Esay against such prophane drunkards and quaffers, thus crieth out: Wo be vnto them that rise vp early to follow drunkenness, and to them that so continue vntill night, till they bee set on fire with wyne. In those companies are Harpes and Lutes, Tabrets and Pipes, and wine: but they regard not the workes of the Lord, and consider not the operation of his hands, &c. Woe be vnto them that are strong to spue out wyne, and expert to set vp dronkenness.

The punishments of them that be dead, be wholsome documents to men that be aliue. And therefore as the story aboue exemplified may serue to warne all Courtiers and Yeomen of the Gard: so by this that followeth,* I would wish all gentlemen to take good heed and admonition betime, to leaue their outrageous swering and blaspheming of the Lord their God.

In the tyme and raigne of K. Edward, there was in Cornewall a certaine lusty yong Gentleman, which dyd ride in company with other mo Gentlemē,* together with their seruants, beyng about the number of xx. horsemen. Amongst whom this lusty yonker entring into talke, began to sweare, most horribly blasphemynge the name of God, with other ribauldry words besides. Unto whome one of the company (who is yet aliue, and witnes hereof) not able to abide the hearing of such blasphemous abhominatiō, in gentle wordes speaking to him, said, he should Page 2105 geue answere and account for euery idle word.

The Gentleman taking snuffe therat: Why (sayd he) takest thou thought for me? take thought for thy winding sheete. Well (quoth the other) amend, for death geueth no warning:* for as soone commeth a lambes skin to the market, as an olde sheepes. Gods woūdes (sayth he) care not thou for me, raging still after this maner worse & worse in words, till at length passing on theyr iourney, they came riding ouer a great bridge, stāding ouer a piece of an arme of the sea.* Upon the which bridge this Gentleman swearer spurred his horse in such sort, as he sprang cleane ouer with the man on his backe. Who as he was going, cryed, saying: horse & man, and all to the deuil. This terrible story happening in a Towe in Cornewall, I would haue bene afrayde amongst these storyes here to recite, were it not that he which was then both reprehender of his swea'ring & witnes of his death, is yet aliue, and now a Minister, named Heynes. Besides this, also bishop Ridley thē bishop of London, preached and vttered euen the same fact and example at Paules Crosse. The name of the Gentleman I could by no meanes obteyne of the party & witnes aforesayd, for dread of those (as he sayd) which yet remaine of his affinity 〈◇〉 kinred in the sayd country.

Hauing now sufficiently admonished, first the Courtyers, then the gentlemen: now thirdly for a briefe admonition to the Lawyers, we will here insert the strange end and death of one Henry Smith student of the law.

This Henry Smyth hauing a Godly Gentleman to his father. & an auncient protestant, dwelling in Camden, in Glocester shyre, was by him vertuously brought vp in the knowledge of Gods word, & sincere religion: wherin he shewed himselfe in the beginning, suche an earnest professor, that he was called of the Papistes, pratling Smith. After these good beginnings it folowed, that he cōming to be a student of the law in the middle Temple at London, there through sinister cōpany of some, & especially as it is thought, of one Gifford, began to be peruerted to popery, & afterward going to Louane, was more deeply rooted & groūded in the same: and so continuing a certayne space amōg the papistes, of a yong protestant, at lēgth was made a perfect papist. In so much, that returning from thēce, he brought with him pardōs, a Crucifixe, with an Agnus dei, which he vsed cōmonly to weare about his necke,* & had in his chamber images before which he was woont to pray. Besides diuers other Popish trashe, whiche he brought with hym from Louane. Now what ende followed after this, I were loth to vtter in story, but that the fact so lately done this present yeare, ann. 1569. remayneth yet so fresh in memorie, that almost all the Citie of London not onely can wnesse, but also doth wonder thereat. The end was this.

Not long after, the said Henry Smith with Gifforde his companion, was returned from Louane, beyng now a foule gierer, and a scornfull scoffer of that religion which before he professed, in his chamber where he lay in a house in S. Clements parish without Temple barre,* in the Euening as he was goyng to bedde, and his clothes put off (for he was found naked) he had tied his shirt, (which he had torne to the same purpose) about his priuy places, and so with his owne girdle, or ribond garter (as it seemed) fastned to the bedpost, there strangled himselfe. They that were of his Quest and other, which saw the maner of hys hanging, and the print where he sate vpon his bed side, do record that he t•rust himselfe downe from his beddes side where he sate, the place where he had fastned the girdle beyng so low, that his hips well nere touched the floore, his legs lying a crosse, and his armes spread abroad. And this was the maner of his hangyng, hauyng his Agnus Dei, in a siluer tablet with his other idolatrous trash in the window by him. And thus being dead and not thought worthy to be interred in the Churchyard, he was buried in a Lane, called Foskew Lane.

This heauy and dreadfull ende of Henry Smith, although it might seeme enough to gender a terrour to all yong popish students of the law: yet it did not so worke with all, but that some remayned as obstinate still as they were before. Amongst whom was one named Williams, a student of the Inner Temple,* who beyng sometyme a fauourer of the Gospell, fell in like maner from that, to be an obstinate Papist, a despitefull railer agaynst true religion, and in conclusion was so hote in his catholike zeale, that in the midst of his railing, he fell starke madde, and so yet to this present day remaineth. The Lord of his mercy turne him to a better mynd, and conuert him, if it bee hys pleasure, Amen.

The miserable ende of Twyford is here no lesse to bee remembred, a busie doer sometymes in K. Henries dayes by Boners appointment,* in setting vp of stakes for the burnyng of poore Martyrs. Who when he sawe the stakes consume away so fast: yea sayd hee, will not these stakes hold? I will haue a stake (I trow, that shall hold, and so prouided a big tree, and cutting of the top, set it in Smith field. But thanks be to God, or euer the tree was all consumed, God turned the state of Religion, and hee fell into an horrible disease, rottyng alyue aboue the ground before he died. Read more of hym, pag. 1258. But because the story both of hym and of a number such other lyke, is to bee founde in sundry places of this history sufficiently before expressed, it shall be but a double labour agayne to recapitulate the same.

☛ Ye haue heard before, pag. 1911. of the condemnation and Martyrdome of a certain boy called Tho. Drowry, condemned by Williams Chauncellour of Gloucester, contrary to all right and counsaile of the Register then present, called Barker. Now what punishment fell after vpon the said Chancellor, followeth to be declared.

¶The strange and fearefull death of the same Doctor Williams.

WHen God of his inestimable mercy hauing pitie of vs, and pardoning our sinnes for hys sonnes sake Christ Iesu, had now taken from vs that bloody Princesse, and sent vs this iewel of Ioy, the Queenes maiestie that now raigneth (and long might she raigne) ouer vs: and that the commissioners for restitution of religion wer comming toward Glocester. The same day D. Williams the Chauncellour, dined with W. Ienings the Deane of Gloucester, who with all his men were booted redy at one of the clocke to set forward to Chipping Norton, aboute xv. miles from Gloucester, to meete the Commissioners which were at Chipping Norton, and sayd to him, Chancellor, are not thy bootes on?

Chanc.

Why should I put them on?

To go with me (quoth the Deane) to meet these commissioners.

Chanc.

I will neither meet them, nor see them.

Deane.

Thou must needs see them, for now it is past xij. of the clocke, and they will be here afore iij. of the clocke, and therefore if thou be wise, on with thy bootes and let vs goe together, and all shall be well.

Chanc.

Go your wayes M. Deane, I will neuer see them.

As I sayd, W. Ienings the Deane set forward wyth his company toward the Commissioners, and by and by commeth one vpon horsebacke to the Deane, saying: M. Chancellor lyeth at the mercy of God, and is speachlesse. At that worde the Deane with his company pricked forward to the Commissioners, and tolde them the whole matter and communication betwene them two, as aboue. And they sent one of their men with the best wordes they could deuise, to comfort him with many promises. But to be short: albeit the Commissioners were now nerer Gloucester, then the Deane and his company thought, making very great hast, especially after they hadde receyued these newes. Yet Doct. Williams, though false of religion, yet true of his promise, kept his vngracious couenaunt with the Deane: for he was dead or they came to the citie, and so neuer saw them in deed.

Wherefore, to passe ouer our owne domesticall examples of English persecuters playd by Gods hand (wherof this our present story doth abound) I will stretche my penne a little further to adioyne withall a few like examples in forraine countries.*

🔗Foraine Examples.

HOOfmeister the great Archpapist,* and chiefe maisterpillar of the Popes fallyng Church, as hee was in hys iourney goyng toward the Councell of Ratisbone, to dispute agaynst the defenders of Christes gospel, sodainly in his iourney, not farre from Ulmes, was preuented by the stroke of Gods hand, and there miserably died, with horrible roing and crying out. Ex Illyrico de vocabulo fidei.

What a pernicious and pestilent doctrine is this of the papists,* which leadeth men to seeke their saluation by merites and workes of the lawe, and not by faith onely in Christ the sonne of God, and to stay themselues by grace? And what inconuenience this doctrine of doubting & desperation bringeth men to at length, if the playne word of Page 2106 God will not sufficiently admonish vs, yet let vs be warned by examples of such as haue bene either teachers or followers of this doctrine, and consider well what ende commonly it hath and doth bring men vnto. To recite all that may be sayd in this behalfe, it were infinite. To note a few examples for admonitions sake, it shalbe requisite.

In the Uniuersitie of Louane was one named Guarlacus a learned man,* brought vp in that Schoole, who at length was reader of Diuinitie to the Monkes of s. Gertrudes order. Where after he had stoutly mainteyned the corrupt errors of such popish doctrine, at last falling sicke, when he perceiued no way with him but death, he fell into a miserable agonie and perturbation of spirite, crying out of his sinnes, how wickedly he had liued, and that he was not able to abide the iudgement of God, and so casting out wordes of miserable desperation, saide: his sinnes were greater then that he could be pardoned, and in that desperation wretchedly he ended his lyfe. Ex Epistola Claudij Senarclaei ad Bucerum ante histor. de morte Diazij.

Another like example we haue of Arnoldus Bomelius,* a young man of the sayd Uniuersitie of Louane, well commended for his fresh flourishing wit and ripenesse of learnyng, who so long as he fauoured the cause of the gospell, and tooke part with the same agaynst the enemies of the truth, he prospered and went well forward, but after that he drew to the company of Tyleman, maister of the Popes Colledge in Louane, and framed hymselfe after the rule of his vnsauourie doctrine, that is, to stande in feare and doubt of hys iustification, and to worke his saluation by merites and deedes of the lawe, he began more and more to growe in doubtfull despaire and discomfort of mynd: as y^e nature of that doctrine is, vtterly to pluck away a mans mynd from all certaintie and true liberty of spirit,* to a seruile doubtfulnes, full of discomfort and bondage of soule.

Thus the yong man seduced and peruerted thorough this blynd doctrine of ignoraunce and dubitation, fell into a great agonie of mynde, wandryng and wrestlyng in him selfe a long space, till at length beyng ouercome with despaire, and not hauyng in the popish doctrine wherewith to rayse vp his soule, he went out of the citie on a tyme to walke, accompanied with three other Studentes of the same Uniuersitie, his speciall familiars. Who after their walke, as they returned home agayne, Arnoldus for wearinesse (as it seemed) sate down by a spring side to rest him a while. The other supposing none other, but that hee for wearines there rested to refresh hymselfe,* went forward a little past hym. In the meane tyme what doth Arnoldus, but sodainly taketh out his dagger, and stroke himself into the body.

His fellowes seeyng him shrinking downe, and the fountaine to be all coloured with the bloude which issued out of the wound, came runnyng to him to take hym vp, and so searching his body where the wound should be, at length found what he had done, and how hee had stricken hymselfe with hys dagger into the brest. Whereupon they tooke hym and brought hym into an house next at hande, and there exhorted hym as well as they could, to repente hys fact: who then by outwarde gesture seemed to geue some shew of repentance. Notwithstanding, the sayd Arnoldus espyng one of hys friendes there busie aboute hym, to haue a knyfe hangyng at hys girdle violentlye plucked out the knife, and with mayne force stabbed hymselfe to the hart.

*By these Louanian examples, as we haue all to learn, no man to be sure of his life, but that he alwayes needeth to craue and cal vnto the Lord to blesse him with his truth and grace: so especially would I wish our English Louanians, which nowe make fortes in that Uniuersitie against the open truth of Christs gospel, to be wise in time, and not to spurne so against the pricke. Ne forte. &c.

*Or if they thinke yet these examples not enough for sufficient admonition, let them ioyned hereto the remembraunce also of Iacobus Latomus, a chiefe and principall captayne of the same Uniuersitie of Louane. Who after he had bene at Bruxels, and there thinkyng to do a great acte agaynst Luther and his fellowes, made an Oration before the Emperour, *so foolishly and ridiculously, that hee was laughed to scorne almost of the whole Courte. Then returnyng from thence to Louan agayne, in his publike Lecture he fell in an open fury and madnesse, vttrng such words of desperation and blasphemous impietie, that the other Diuines which were there, and namely, Ruardus Anchusianus, were fayne to cary him away as he was rauyng, and so shut him into a close chamber. From y^t tyme vnto his last breath, Latomus had neuer any thyng els in hys mouth, but that he was damned and reiected of God, *and that there was no hope of saluation for hym, because that wittingly and against his knowledge, he withstoode the manifest truth of his word. Ex Epist. Senarclaei ante hist. de morte Diazij. Item, ex Oratione Pauli Eberi in comitijs Wittembergae habita.

Thus almighty God not onely by his worde, but by examples also, diuers and sundry wise doth warne vs, *first to seeke to knowe the perfect will and decree of the Lord our God appoynted in his worde. The perfect will and full testament of the Lord in his word, is this, that he hath sent and geuen his onely sonne vnto vs, beyng fully contented to accept our fayth onely vpon him for our perfect iustification and full satisfaction for all our transgressions: and this is called in Scripture, Iusticia Dei. *To this will and righteousnesse of God, they that humbly submit themselves, finde place and rest in their soules, that no mā is able to expresse, and haue strength enough agaynst all the inuasions and temptations of Sathan.

Contrarywise, *they that will not yeld their obedience vnto the wyll and ordinaunce of GOD •xpressed in hys worde, but will seeke their owne righteousnesse, which is of man, labouryng by their merites and satisfactions to serue and please God: these not onely do finde with God no righteousnesse at all, but in stead of hys fauour, procure to themselves his horrible indignation, in steade of comfort, heape to themselves desperation, and in the end what inconuenience they come to by these aboue recited examples of Guarlacus, Bomelius, and Latomus, it is euident to see. *And out of this fountayne springeth not onely the punishmentes of these men, but also all other inconueniences whiche happen amongst men, where so euer this pernicious and erroneous doctrine of the Papistes taketh place.

A Dominike Frier of Mounster,* as he was inueighyng in the Pulpitte agaynst the Doctrine of the Gospell then springyng vp, was striken with a sodayne flashe of lighnyng, and so ended his lyfe. Ex Pantal. in 2. parte. Rerum memor.

Manlius in his booke, De dictis Philippi Melanct. maketh mention of a certayne Tailors seruaunte in Lypsia, who receiuing first the Sacrament in both kyndes wyth the Gospellers,* and afterward beyng perswaded by the papists, receiued with them vnder one kynd. Whereupon beyng admonished of his maister to come to the Communion againe in the Church of the Gospellers, hee stode a great while and made no answer. At last crying out vpon a sodaine, he ran to the window thereby, and so cast hymselfe out, and brake his necke.

In the same Manlius mention is also made of a certayne Gentleman of name and authoritie, but he nameth hym not, who hearyng these wordes in a song: Ein feste burg ist vnser Gott: that is: * Our onely holde or fortresse is our God. Psalme. 46. aunswered, and sayd: Ich will helffe die burg zerschiesse, oder ich wil nit leben: that is, I will help to shoote agaynst thy stayer or forte, or els I will not liue. And so within three dayes after hee dyed without repentaunce, or confessing his fayth. Ex Manlio, De dictis Philip. Melanct.

Of Sadoletus the learned Cardinall likewise it is reported of some,* that he dyed not without great tormentes of conscience and desperation.

The Commendator of S. Anthony, who sate as spirituall Iudge ouer that godly learned man Wolfgangus burned in Lotharing, in Germany,* and gaue sentence of his condemnation, fell sodenly dead shortly after. Read before pag. 884.

Also his fellow the Abbot of Clarilocus,* and Suffragan to the bishop of Metz, at the cracke of gunnes sodenly fell downe and dyed. pag. 824.

Dauid Beaton Archbishop of s. Andrewes in Scotland, shortly after the beginning of M. George Wisard,* how hee by the iust stroke of God was slaine, and wretchedly ended his lyfe within his owne Castle, in the discourse of his story is euident to see, who so listeth further to read of that matter, pag. 1272.

Ioannes Sleidanus in his 23. booke,* maketh relati• of Cardinall Crescentius, the chiefe President and moderator Page 2107 of the Councell of Trident, ann. 1552. The story of whom is certain, the thing that hapned to him was strāge and notable, the exāple of him may be profitable to others such as haue grace to be warned by other mēs euils. The narration is this.

The 25. day of March, in the yere aforesaid, Crescentius the Popes Legate,* and Uicegerent in the Councell of Trident, was sitting all the day long vntill darke night, in writing letters to th• Pope. After his labour when night was come, thinking to refresh himselfe, he began to rise: and at his rising, beholde there appeared to hym a mighty blacke dogge, of a huge bignes, his eyes flamying with fire, and his eares hanging low downe welneere to the ground, to enter in, and straite to come toward hym, & so to couch vnder the boord. The Cardinall not a little amased at the sight thereof, somewhat recouering himselfe, ralled to his seruauntes, which were in the outward chāber next by, to bring in a candle, and to seeke for the dog. But when the dog could not be found, neither there, nor in no other chamber about, the Cardinall thereupon stricken with a sodaine conceit of mynd, immediately fell into such a sicknes, wherof his Phisitions which he had about hym, with all their industry and cunningg coulde not cure hym.* And so in the towne of Uerona died this popish cardinall, the Popes holy Legate, and President of this coucel: wherein his purpose was (as Sleidane saith) to recouer and heale againe the whole authoritie and doctrine of the Romish see, and to set it vp for euer.

There were in this Councell beside the Popes Legates and Cardinall of Trident, lxij. Bishops, Doctours of Diuinitie xliij. And thus was the ende of that Popishe Councell, by the prouident hand of the almighty, dispatched and brought to naught. Ex Sleidano, Li. 23.

This Councell of Trident being then dissolved by the death of this Cardinal, was afterward notwithstanding recollected againe about the yeare of our lord, 1562. against the erroneous proceedings of which Councel,* other writers there be that say enough. So much as pertaineth only to story, I thought hereunto to adde concernyng two filthy adulterous bishops, to the sayd Councel belonging of whome the one haunting to an honest mans wife, was slaine by the iust stroke of God with a Borespeare. The other Bishop, whose haunte was to creepe through a window, in the same window was subtilly taken and hanged in a grinne layed for hym of purpose, and so conueied, that in the mornyng hee was seene openly in the streete hangyng out of the windowe, to the wonderment of all that passed by. Ex protestatione Concionatorum Germa. aduersus conuentum Trident. &c.

Amongst all the religious order of Papists, who was a stouter defender of the Popes side, or a more vehement impugner of Martin Luther, then Iohn Eckius, who, if his cause wherein he so trauailed,* had bene godly, had deserued (no doubt) great fauour and condigne retribution at the hands of the Lord. Now for so much as we cannot better iudge of him then by his ende, let vs consider the maner of his departing hence, and compare the same with the end of M. Luther.

In the which M. Luther beyng such an aduersarye as he was to the Pope, and hauyng no lesse then al the world vpon him at once,* first this is to bee noted, that after all these trauailes, the Lord gaue him to depart both in great age, and in his owne natiue countrey where he was born. Secondly, he blessed him with such a quiet death, without any violent hande of any aduersary, that it was counted rather a sleepe then a death. Thirdly, as the death of hys body was myld, so his spirit & mynde continued no lesse godly vnto the end, continually inuocating and calling vpon the name of the Lord, and so commending his spirite to hym with feruent prayer, he made a blessed and an heauenly ending. Fourthly, ouer and besides these blessings, almighty God did also adde vnto him such an honourable buriall, as to many great Princes vnneth happeneth the like. And this briefly concernyng the ende of M. Luther, as ye may read before more at large, pag. 863.

Now let vs consider and conferre with this the death of Iohn Eckius and the maner thereof, which we find in the English translation of the history of Iohn Carion, fol. 250. in these words expressed. This yere (saith he) died at Ingold state, Doctor Eckius a faithful seruant and champion of the Pope,* and a defender of the abhominable Papacie. But as his lyfe was full of all vngodlines, vncleannes, and blasphemy, so was his end miserable, hard, and pitifull, in so much that his last wordes (as it is noted of many credible personnes) were these: In case the foure thousand guildens were ready, the matter were dispatched, &c.* (Dreamyng belike of some Cardinalship that he should haue bought.) Some say, that the Pope had granted him a certaine Deanry, which he should haue redeemed from the Courte of Rome with the foresayd summe. Now what a heauenly ende this was of M. Eckius, I leaue it to the Readers iudgement.

In the Citie of Andwerpe was (as they terme hym there) a Shoulted, that is to say,* the next Officer to the Markgraue, one named Iohn Uander Warfe, a Bastard sonne of a stocke or kinred called Warfe, of good estimation amongst the chieftest in Antwarpe. Who, as he was of nature cruell, so was he of iudgement peruerse and corrupt, and a sore persecutor of Christes flocke, with greedines seekyng and sheddyng innocent blood, and had drowned diuers good men and women in the water: for the which he was much commended of the bloody generation. Of some he was called a bloudhound or bloody dog. Of other he was called Shildpad: that is to say,* Sheltode: for that hee beyng a short grundy and of little stature, did ride commonly with a great broad hat, as a churl of the countrey.

This man after he was weary of his office (wherein he had continued aboue xx. yeres) he gaue it ouer: and because he was now growen rich and welthy, he entended to passe the residue of his lyfe in pleasure and quietnes.

During which tyme, about the second yeare after hee had left his office, he came to Antwarpe to the feast called our Ladies Oumegang, to make mery: which feast is vsually kept on the Sonday followyng the assumption of our Lady. The same day in the after noone about foure of the clock▪ he being wel loden with wine, rode homewards in his wagon, with his wife and a gentlewoman waiting on her and his foole. As soone as the Wagon was come without the gate of the citie called Croneborgh gate, vpon the wooden bridge beyng at that tyme made for a shifte, with railles or barres on both sides, for more safetie of the passengers (halfe a mans heighth & more) the horses stood still and would by no meanes go forward, whatsoever the guider of the wagon could do.

Then he in a drunken rage cried out to him that guided the wagō, saying: Ride on in a thousand deuils name, ride on. Wherat the poore man answered, that he could not make the horses to goe forward. By and by, whyle they were yet thus talking, sodenly rose, as it were, a mighty hurlewynd, with a terrible noyse (the wether beyng very faire & no wynd stirring before) & tost the wagon ouer the barre into the towne ditch, the ropes whereat the horses had bene tied, beyng broken a sunder in such sort, as if they had bene cut with a sharp knife, the wagon also being cast vpsidedowne, with the fore end thereof turned toward the towne agayne, and he drowned in the mire: and when he was taken vp, it was found, that his necke also was broken. His wife was taken vp aliue, but died also within three dayes after. But the Gentlewoman and the foole by Gods mighty prouidence, were preserued & had no harm.* The foole hearing the people say, that his Maister was dead, sayd: & was not I dead, was not I dead too? This was done, an. 1553. Witnesse hereof not onely the Printer of the same story in Dutch dwelling then in Andwerpe, whose name was Fraunces Fraet a good man, and afterward for hatred put to death of Papistes, but also diuers Dutchmen here now in England, and a great number of English merchants, which then were at Antwerpe, & are yet alyue.

Of the sodaine death of Bartholomeus Chassaneus, or Cassanus, persecutor, read before, pag. 943.

Of Minerius the bloody persecutor, or rather tormētōr of Christes saints, how he dyed with bleeding in hys lower partes, ye heard before, pag. 953.

And what should I speake of the iudge which accompanied the sayd Minerius in his persecution,* who a little after as he returned homeward, was drowned, and three mo of the same company, killed one another vpon a strife that fell amongst them, pag. 953.

Ioannes de Roma cruell Monke, whom rather wee may call a hell hound, then persecutor, what hellishe tormentes hee hadde deuised for the poore Christians of Angrongne, the cōtents of the story before doth expresse, pag. 216. Agayne, with what like tormentes afterward, & that doublefold, the Lord payd him home agayne, who in hys rottyng and stinking death, neither could find any enemy to kill hym, nor any friend to bury him, who neither could abide his owne stinking carion, nor any man els to come Page 2108 neare hym. Hereof read also in the same page and plate aboue specified.

Such a like persecutor also the same tyme was the lord of Reuest,* who likewise escaped not the reuenging hand of Gods iustice being stricken after his furious persecution, with a like horrible sicknes, and such a furie and madnesse, that none durst come neare him, and so most wretchedly died. Whereof read before, pag. 943.

*Touching the like grieuous punishment of God vpō one Iohn Martin a persecutor, read pag. 955.

Erasmus in an Epistle or Apologie written in defence of his Colloquies, inferreth mention of a certayne noble person of great riches and possessions, who hauyng wyfe and children, with a great familie at home (to whom by S. Pauls rule he was bound in conscience principally aboue all other worldly thyngs to attend) had purposed before his death to go see Ierusalem. And thus all thyngs beyng set in order, this Noble man about to set foreward on his iourney, committed the care of his wife (whom he left great with childe) and of his Lordshippes and Castles to an Archbishop, as to a most sure and trusty father. To make short, it happened in the iourney, this Noble man to dye. Whereof, so soone as the Archbishop had intelligence, in stead of a father, he became a thiefe and robber, seising into his owne handes all his Lordshippes and possessions. And moreouer, not yet contented with all this, he layed siege agaynst a strong fort of his (vnto the which his wife for safegard of her selfe did flee) where in conclusion, shee with the child that she went withall, pitifully was slaine, and so miserably perished. Which story was done (as testifieth Erasmus) not so long before his tyme, but y^t there remayned the nephews of the said Noble man then aliue, to whom the same inheritance should haue fallen, but they could not obtaine it.

What commeth of blynd superstition, when a mā not conteyning himselfe within the compasse of Gods worde,* wandereth in other bywayes of his owne, and not contented with the religion set vp of the Lord, wyll binde his conscience to other ordinaunces, prescriptions, and religious deuised by men, leauyng Gods commaundements vndone for the constitutions and preceptes of men,* what ende and reward (I say) commeth thereof at length, by this one example, beside infinite other of the like sort, men may learne by experience: and therefore they that yet will defend Idolatrous pilgrimage and rash vowes, let them well consider hereof. It is rightly sayd of saint Hierome, to haue bene at Hierusalem,* is no great matter, but to lyue a godly and vertuous lyfe, that is a great matter in very deede.

*In the yere of our Lord, 1565. there was in the town of Gaunt in Flanders, one William de Weuer, accused & imprisoned by the Prouost of S. Peters in Gaunt (who had in his Cloister a prison and a place of execution) and the day when the sayd William was called to the place of iudgement, the Prouost sent for M. Gyles Brackleman, principall aduocate of the Counsaile of Flaunders, & Borough maister and Iudge of S. Peters in Gaunt, wyth other of the rulers of the towne of Gaunt, to sit in iudgement vpon hym, and as they sate in iudgement, the Borough maister named M. Gyles Brackleman reasoned with the sayd William de Weuer, vpon diuers articles of his fayth.

*The one whereof was, why the sayd William de Weuer denied that it was not lawfull to pray to Saintes: and he aunswered (as the report goeth) for three causes. The one was, that they were but creatures, and not the creator.

The second was, that if he should call vpon them, the Lord did both see it, and heare it, & therefore he durst geue the glory to none other, but to God.

The third and chieftest cause was, that the creator had commaunded in his holy word, to call vpon him in troubles: vnto which commaundement he durst neither adde nor take from it.

The Borough maister M. Gyles Brackelman also demaunded whethere he did not beleue that there was a Purgatory which he should go into after this lyfe, where euery one should be purified and cleansed.

He aunswered, that he had red ouer the whole Bible, and could finde no such place, but that the death of Christ was his Purgatory,* with many other questions proceeding after their order, vntill hee came to pronounce hys condemnation. But or euer the sayd condemnation was red forth, the iudgement of God was laid vpon the sayd Borough maister, who sodainly at that present instant was stricken with a Palsey, that his mouth was drawen vp almost to his eare, and so hee fell downe,* the rest of the Lordes by and by standing vp and shadowyng him, that the people coulde not well see hym: and also the people were willed to depart, who beyng still called vpon to depart, aunswered, the place was so small to go out, that they could goe no faster. Then the Borough maister beyng taken vp, was caried to his house, and it is not yet vnderstood nor commonly knowen, that euer he spake word after he was first stricken,* but was openly knowen to bee dead the next day followyng. And yet notwithstanding that this was done about tenne of the clocke, they burned the sayd William de Weuer within three houres after on the same day.

The 4. day of March, 1566. the lyke example of the Lordes terrible iudgement was shewed vpon sir Garret Triest knight, who had long before promised to the Regent to bring downe the preachyng. For the which act (as the report goeth) the Regent agayne promised to make hym a Graue, which is an Erle. Of the which sir Garret it is also said, that he commyng from Bruxels towards Gaunt, brought with him the death of the Preachers, and beyng come to Gaunt, the sayde sir Garret with other of the Lordes hauyng receiued from the Regent a Commission to sweare the Lordes and Commons vnto the Romish Religion, the sayd sir Garret the 4. day of March aboue noted, at night beyng at supper, willed the Lady his wyfe to call hym in the mornynge one houre sooner then he was accustomed to ryse, for that hee should the nexte day haue much businesse to doe in the towne house, to sweare the Lordes and people to the Romish Religion. But see what happened. The sayd sir Garret goyng to bedde, in good health (as it seemed) when the Lady his wife called him in the mornynge, accordyng to his appoyntment, was found dead in her bedde by her, and so vnable to prosecute his wicked purpose.

The fift day of March, 1566. which was the day that Sir Garret Triest appoynted to be there, and the Lords of Gaunt were come into the Towne house (as they had afore appoynted) to proceed and to geue the othe,* accordyng as they had their Commission, and Maister Martin de Pester the Secretary, beyng appoynted and about to geue the othe as the first man should haue sworne, the sayd Martine de Pester was stricken of God with present death likewyse, and fell downe, and was caried away in a chaire or settell, and neuer spake after. About the borders of Sueuia in Germany, not farre from the Citie of Uberlyng, there was a certayne Monastery of Cistercian Monkes, called Salmesnisie, founded in the dayes of Pope Innocent. 2. by a noble Baron named Guntherame, about the yeare of our Lord, 1130.* This Celle thus beyng erected, in processe of tyme was enlarged with more ample possessions, findyng manye and great benefactoures and endowers, liberally contributyng vnto the same: as Emperours, Dukes, and rich Barons.

Amongest whome most especiall were the Earles of Montforte, who had bestowed vpon that monastery many new liberties and great priuiledges, vpon this condition, that they shoulde receiue with free hospitalitie any stranger both horseman or footeman, for one nightes lodging, who so euer came.* But this hospitalitie did not long so continue, through a subtile and diuelish deuise of one of the Monkes, who tooke vpon hym to counterfeite to play the part of the Deuill, ratling and raging in his chaynes, where the straungers should lie, after a terrible maner in the night tyme to fray away the gestes: by reason wherof no stranger nor traueiler durst there abide, and so continued this a long space.

At length (as God would) it so happened, that one of the Earles of the sayde house of Mountforte, benefactours to that Abbey, commyng to the Monastery, was there lodged, whether of set purpose, or by chance, it is not knowen.

When the night came, and the Earle was at hys rest, the Monke after his woonted maner beginneth his pageant, to play the tame, yea rather the wylde Deuill. There was stampyng, rappyng, spittynge of fire, roring, thunderyng, Page 2109 bousing of boordes, and ratling of chaines, enough to make some man starke mad. The Erle hearing the sodaine noyse, and beyng somewhat peradventure afraid at the first, although he had not then the feate of coniuring, yet taking a good hart vnto him,* & running to his sword, he layd about him well fauoredly, and followyng still the noyse of the deuill, so coniured him at last, that the monke which counterfeited the deuill in iest, was slayne in hys owne likenes in earnest. Ex Gaspare Bruschio, in Chronologia Monasteriorum Germaniae.

☛ After the imprisonment of the congregation, which were taken hearyng Gods word in S. James streete in Paris, an. 1558. (as is aboue storied) was a letter written to the king, which was diuulgate abroad, proouing & declaring by diuers histories, what afflictions and calamities from tyme to tyme, by Gods righteous iudgement haue fallen vpon such as haue bene enemies to his people, and haue resisted the free passage of his holy word. In which letter, forsomuch as beside the sayd examples, much other good fruitfull matter is conteined, worthy of all mē to be read, and especially of Princes to bee considered, I thought here good to copy out the whole, as the Frenche booke doth geue it. The translation of the which letter into English, is after this tenor, as followeth.

¶ A Letter translated out of French into English, written to K. Henry the 2. French kyng.

* Consider I pray you sir, and you shall finde, that all your afflictions haue come vpon you, since you haue set your selfe agaynst those which are called Lutherans.

When you made the Edict of Chasteaubriant, God sent you warres▪ but when ye ceased the execution of your sayde Edict, and as long as ye were enemye vnto the Pope, and goyng into Almanie for the defence of the libertie of the Germanes afflicted for Religion, your affaires prospered as ye would wishe or desire.

* On the contrary, what hath become vpō you since you were ioyned with the Pope agayne, hauing receiued a sword from him for his own safegard? And who was it that caused you to breake the truce? God hath turned in a moment your prosperities into such afflictions, that they touch not onely the state of your own person, but of your kingdome also.

To what end became the enterprise of the Duke of Guise in Italy,* goyng about the seruice of the enemy of God, and purposing after his returne to destroy the Vallies of Piemont, to offer or sacrifice them to God for his victories? The euent hath well declared, that God can turne vpsidedowne our counsailes and enterprises: as he ouerturned of late the enterprise of the Constable of Fraunce at S. Quintins, hauyng vowed to God, that at his returne,* he would go and destroy Geneua when he had gotten the victory.

Haue you not heard of L. Ponchet Archbish. of Toures, who made sute for the erection of a Court called Chamber Ardente, wherein to condemne the Protestantes to the fire? who afterwarde was stricken with a disease called the fire of God: whiche began at his feete, and so ascended vpwrd, that he caused one member after another to be cut off, and so died miserably without any remedy?

Also one Castellanus, who hauyng enriched himselfe by the Gospell, and forsaking the pure doctrine thereof, to returne vnto his vomite again, went about to persecute the Christians at Orleans, & by the hand of God was stricken in his body with a sickenes vnknown to the Phisitions, the one halfe of his body burnyng as whote as fire, and the other as colde as Ise: and so most miserably crying and lamentyng, ended his lyfe.

There be other infinite examples of Gods iudgements worthy to be remembred: * as the death of the Chauncellour and Legate du Prat, which was the first that opened to the Parliament, the knowledge of heresies, and gaue out the first Commissions to put the faythfull to death, who afterwarde died in his house at Natoillet, swearyng and horribly blasphemying GOD, and hys stomacke was founde pierced and gnawen a sunder wyth wormes.

*Also Iohn Ruse, Counsailor in the Parliament, comming frō the Court after he had made report of the processe agaynst the poore innocentes, was taken with a burnyng in the lower parte of his belly, and before he could be brought home to his house, the fire inuaded all his secret partes, and so hee died miserably, burnyng all his belly ouer, without any signe or token of the acknowledging of God.

Also one named Claude de Asses, a Counsailour in the sayd Courte, * the sayde day that he gaue his opinion and consent to burne a faythfull Christian (albeit it was not done in deede as he would haue it) after he had dyned, committed whoredome with a seruante in the house, and euen in doying the acte, was stricken with a disease called Apoplexia, whereof he dyed out of hande.

Peter Liset, chiefe President of the sayd Courte, and one of the authors of the foresayd burnyng chamber, * was deposed frō his office, for beyng known to be out of his right wit and bereaued of his vnderstandyng.

Also Iohn Morin, Lieuetenaunt Criminall of the Prouost of Paris, after he had bene the cause of the death of many christians, was finally stricken with a disease in his legs, called the Wolues: whereby he lost the vse of them, & died also out of his wits, many dayes before, denieng and blaspheming God.

Likewise Iohn Andrew, Bookebinder of the Pallace, a spie for the President Liset, and of Bruseard the kings sollicitor, died in a fury and madnes.

The Inquisitor Iohn de Roma in Prouence, his flesh fell from hym by peece meale, so stinkyng that no man might come nere hym.

Also Iohn Mineries of Prouence, which was the cause of the death of a great number of men, women, and children, at Cabriers & at Merindol, died with bleeding in the lower partes, the fire hauing take his belly▪ blaspheming and despising of God, besides many other wherof we might make recital which were punished with the like kynd of death.

It may please your maiesty to remember your self that ye had no sooner determined to set vpon vs, but new troubles were by and by moued by your enemies, with whom ye could come to no agreement, which God would not suffer, for as much as your peace was grounded vpon the persecution which ye pretended against Gods seruantes: As also your Cardinals can not let through their crueltie the course of the Gospell, which hath taken such roote in your realme, that if God should geue you leaue to destroy the professors thereof, you should bee almost a kyng without subiects.

Tertullian hath well sayde,* that the bloud of Martyrs is the seed of the Gospell. Wherefore to take away all these euyls commyng of the riches of the papistes, which cause so much whoredome, Sodomitie, and incest, wherein they wallowe lyke hogs, feeding their idle bellies: the best way were to put them from their lands and possessions, as the old sacrificing Leuits were, according to the expresse commaundement which was geuen to Iosua. For as long as the ordinance of God tooke place, and that they were voyde of ambition, the puritie of religion remayned whole and perfect: but when they began to aspire to principalitie, riches, and worldly honours, then began the abomination of desolation that Christ found out.

It was euen so in the Primatiue church: for it flourished & continued in all purenesse,* as long as the Ministers were of smal wealth, and sought not their particuler profite, but the glorie of God onely. For since the Popes began to be princelike, and to vsurpe the dominion of the Empire vnder the colour of a fals donation of Constantine, they haue turned the Scriptures from their true sense, and haue attributed the seruice to themselues, which we owe to God. Wherefore your Maiestie may seise with good right vpon all the temporalities of the benefices, and that with a safe conscience for to employ them to their true & right vse.

First,* for the findyng and maintainyng of the faithfull Ministers of the word of God, for such liuyngs as shall be requisite for them, accordyng as the case shall require. Secondly, for the entertainment of your Iustices that geue iudgement. Thirdly, for the relieuyng of the poore, and maintenance of Colledges to instruct the poore youth in that which they shall be most apte vnto. And the rest, which is infinite, may remayne for the entertainment of your owne estate and affaires, to the great easement of your poore people, which alone beare the burthen, and possesse in maner nothyng.

In this doynge, an infinite number of men, and euen of your Nobilitie, which lyue of the Crucifix, should employ themselues to your seruice and the common wealths so much the more diligently, as they see that ye recompence none but those that haue deserued: where as now there is an infinite number of men in your kingdome, which occupy the chieftest & greatest benefices, which neuer deserued any part of them, &c. And thus much touching the superfluous possessions of the Popes Lordly Clergie. Now procedyng further in this exhortation to the king, thus the letter importeth.

But when the Papists see that they haue not to alleadge for themselues any reason,* they assay to make odious to your maiesty the Lutherans (as they call vs) and say: if their sayinges take place, ye shall be faine to remaine a priuate person: & that there is neuer change of religion, but there is also chaunge of pryncedome. A thyng as false as when they accuse vs to be Sacramentaries, and that we deny the authoritie of Magistrates, vnder the shadow of certaine furious Anabaptists, which Satan hath rayseed in our tyme to darken the light of the Gospell. For the histories of the Emperours which haue begun to receiue the Christian religion, and that which is come to passe in our tyme, shew the contrary.

Was there euer Prince more feared and obeyed, then Constantine in receiuing the Christian Religion? was hee therefore Page 2109 <1 page duplicate> Page 2110 put from the Empire? No▪ he was thereby the more confirmed & established in the same, and also his posterity which ruled themselues by his prouidence. But such as haue fallen away and folowed mens traditions,* God hath destroyed, and theyr race is no more knowne in earth: So much doth God detest them that forsake him

And in our time the late kinges of England and Germanye, were they cōstrayned in reprobuing superstitions, which the wickednes of the time had brought in, to forsake their kingdomes & principedomes? Al men see the contrary: and what honor, fidelity, and obedience the people in our time that haue receiued the reformation of the Gospell, do vnder theyr princes and superiors. Yea, I may say, that the princes knew not before what it was to be obeyed, at that time when the rude and ignoraunt people receiued so readily the dispēsations of the Pope, to d•iue out their owne kinges and naturall Lordes.

The true and onely remedy, sir is, that ye cause to be holden a holy and free Counsell, where ye shou•d be chiefe, and not the Pope & his, who ought but onely to defende their causes by the holy scriptures: that in the meane while ye may seeke out mē not corrupted, suspected, nor partial▪ whō ye may charge to geue report faythfully vnto you of the true sence of the holy scriptures. And this done, after the example of the good kinges Iosaphath, Ezechias, & Iosias, ye shall take out of the Church all Idolatry, superstition, & abuse which is found directly contrary to the holy scriptures of the old and new testament, & by that meanes ye shall guid you• people in the true & pure serui•e of God, not regarding in the meane time the cauilling pretenses of the papists which say, that such questiōs haue bene already answered at generall Counsels: for it is knowne well enoug•, tha• no Counsell hath bene lawfull since the Popes haue <◇> the principality & tyranny vpon mens soules, but they haue made them serue to their couetousnes, ambition and cruel•y <◇> the contrariety which is amōg those coūsels, maketh enough for their disproofe, beside a hundred thousand other absurdities ag•in•• the word of God, which be in them. The true prooffe for such matters is in the true & holy Scriptures, to the which no time, nor age hath any prescription to be alledged agaynst thē: fo• by them we receiue the Counsels founded vpon the worde of God, and also by the same we reiect that doctrine which is repugnant.

And if ye do thus Syr, God will blesse your enterprise, he will encrease & confirme your raigne and Empyre, and your posterity. If otherwise, destruction is at your gate, and vnhappy are the people which shall dwell vnder your obediēce.* There is no doubt but God will hardē your hart as he did Pha•aos and take of the crowne from your head▪ as he did to Ieroboam. N•dab, Baza▪ Achab, and to many other kinges, which haue folowed m•ns traditions, agaynst the commaundemēt of God and geue it to your enemies to triumph ouer you and your children▪

And if the Emperour Antonine the meek, although he were a Pagan & Idolater, seing himselfe bewrapt with so many wars, ceased the persecutiōs which were in his time agaynst the christians, and determined in the ende to heare their causes and reasons, how much more ought you that beare the name of moste Christian king, to be carefull and diligent to cease ⟨◇⟩ persecutions agaynst the poore Christians, seing they h•ue not t•oubled, nor doe trouble in any wise the state of your kingdome, & your affayres: considering also that the Iewes be suffe•ed through all Christendome, although they be mortall enemies o• our Lorde Iesus Christ, which we holde by common accorde and consent for our God, Redeemer, and Sauour: and that vntill you haue heard lawfully debated, and vnderstand our reasons takē of the holy Scriptures, and that your Maiestye haue iudged, if we bee worthy of such punishmentes: For if we be not ouercome by the worde of God, the fires, the sworde, nor the c•••lest tormentes shall make vs afrayd. These be the exercises that God hath promised to his, of the which he foretolde shoulde come in the laste times, that they should not be troubled when such persecutions shall come vpon them.

Translated out of the French booke intituled, Commentaries of the state of the Church and publicke weale. &c. pag. 7.

¶The story and end of the french king.

WHosoeuer was the authour or authours of this letter aboue prefixed, herein thou seest (good Reader) good counsell geuen to the king, if he had the grace to receiue it, and had folowed the same, no doubt but Gods blessing working with him, he had not onely set that Realme in a blessed staye, from much disturbaunce, but also had continued himselfe in all flourishing felicity of princely honour and dignity. For so doth the lord commonly blesse and aduaunce such kinges & Princes, as seeke hys honor, and submit their wils to his obedience. But cōmonly the fault of kinges and Potentates of this world is, that being set about with Parasites, either they seldom heare the truth told thē, or if they do, yet will they not lightly be put from their owne willes, disdayning to be admonished by their inferiors, be theyr counsell neuer so holsom & godly. Which thing many times turneth them to great plages & calamitie, as by plentiful exāples of kings destroyed, woū|ded, imprisoned, deposed, drowned, poysoned. &c. may wel to thē y^t read histories appeare, but especially in this presēt example of Henry French king, the seconde of that name, is in this our age notoriously to be considered. Who b•ing well warned before (as may seeme) would not yet surcease his cruell persecution agaynst the Lordes people, but rather was the more hardened in hart, and inflamed against them: in so muche that he sayd to Anne du Bourg, one of the high Court of Parliament in Paris, threatning hym, that he would see him burne with his own eyes.

Further,* how his purpose was to extende his power and force likewise agaynst other places moe, in persecutyng the Gospell of Christe, and professours thereof, to the vttermost of his abilitie, I leaue it to the reporte of them, which in this matter know more then I here will vtter.

But notwithstanding al these cracks and threatnings of the king (to see what the Lord can doe in making hygh kinges to stoupe) euen the same day when the king was in his most rage agaynst these good men,* almighty God taking the cause in hand to fight for his Church, so turned y^e matter, that he made the great enemy of hys, both with his mouth and with his hand, to worke his own destruction: with his mouth in commaunding, with his han• in geuing him the Lance into hys hand, which the same day gaue him his deathes wound: as by the sequele hereof in reading ye may vnderstand.

¶The stroke of Gods hand vpon Henry .2. French king.

KIng Henry being in the Parliamēt house, which was kept at the Fryer Augustines at Paris, because y^e Pallace was in preparing agaynst the mariage of hys daughter and his sister, and hauing heard the opinion in religiō of Anne du Bourg Counsaylour in the lawe, a man eloquent and learned, he caused the sayd Anne du Bourg and Loys du Faur Counsaylours, to be taken prisoners by y^e Constable of Fraunce, who apprehended them, and delyuered them into the handes of the Countye of Mongommery, the which caryed them to prison. Agaynst whom the king being wrathfull and angry, among other talke, sayd to the sayd Anne du Bourg: These eyes of mine shall see thee burnt: And so on the 19. of Iune, Commission was geuen to the Iudges to make his Proces.

During this meane while, great feastes and banquets were preparing in the Courte, for ioy and gladnes of the mariage that should be of the kinges daughter and sister, agaynst the last day of Iune saue one.* So when the day & tyme aboue prefixed was come, the king employed all the morning in examining as wel the Presidentes, as Counsaylours of the sayde Parliament agaynst these prisoners and other theyr companions that were charged with the same doctrine, which being done, they went to dinner.

The king after he had dyned, for that he was one of y^e defendantes at the Tourney, which was solemnly made in S. Anthonies Strete, neare to the prison where the foresayde Prisoners were committed, hee entred into the Lystes, and there in iusting: as the manner is, had broken many Staues right valiauntly as could be, runnyng as well agaynst the Countye of Montgommery, as other moe.

Whereupon he was highly commended of the lookers on. And because he had done so valiauntly,* and was thought nowe to haue done enough, hee was desired to cease with praise. But he being the more inflamed with hearing of hys prayse, woulde needes runne an other course wyth Montgommery: who then refusing to runne agaynst the king, and kneling vpon his knees for pardon not to run: the king being egerly set, commanded him vpon his allegiance to runne, and (as some affirme) did also him selfe put the staffe in his hand, vnto whose handes he had committed the foresayd prisoners a little before.* Montgommery thus being enforced whether he would or no, to run agaynst the king, addressed hymselfe after the best wyse to obey the kinges commaundement.

Whereupon he and the king met together so stoutly y^t in breaking theyr Speares, the king was stricken with the counter blowe, so right in one of hys eyes, by reasonne that the visour of his Helmet so sodenly fell downe at the same instaunt, y^t the shiuers entred into hys head: so that y^e braynes was peryshed, & thereupon so festred, that no remedy could bee founde, although Phisitions and Surgeons were sent for from all places in the Realme, as also Page 2112 frō Brabant by king Philip, but nothing auayled, so that the xj. day after, that is, the x. of Iuly. 1559. he ended his life in great dolour, hauing raigned xij. yeares, three monethes and ten dayes.

*Some report, that among other wordes he said, that he feared he was strickē for casting y^e poore christians wrongfully in prisō: but the Cardinal of Loraine standing by (as he was alwayes at hād) sayd vnto him, that it was the enemy that tempted him, & that he should be stedfast in the fayth.

By this meanes the Hall which was prepared for a place of ioy and gladnes,* did now serue for a Chappel to keep the corps, being dressed with blacke mourning cloth, & night and day t•ere was nothing heard but mournyng and lamenting for the space of xl, dayes.

About two yeares after this, which was the yeare of our Lord .1561. there were certayne Gentlemen put to death at Amboise,* for taking armes agaynst the house of Guise. Touching which Gentlemen, this is to be noted, that as one of thē should be brought to the place of executiō, where the other lay dead before him, he thrust his handes into the bloud of two of his companions which were there beheaded, and then lifting them vp to heauen, cryed with a loud voyce: Lord behold the bloud of thy childrē: thou wilt in time and place reuenge it.

Not long after the same, the Chancellor Oliuier, who was condemner of thē,* at the instigatiō and pursuit of the Cardinall of Loraine, through great remorse of cōscience fell sicke, and in a frensy casting out sighes vncessauntly, & afflicting himselfe after a fearefull and straūge fashion for his vnrighteous sentence, and more then barbarous cruelty, shrieked vpon a sodeyne with an horrible cry, & sayd: O Cardinall thou wilt make vs all to be damned. And within a very few dayes after he dyed.

Fraunces the second of that name, king of Fraunce, at the perswasion of the Cardinall of Loraine & of certeyne others, caused an assēbly of the Estates of the realm in the towne of Orleans, among other things to mainteine the Papall See, to the ouerthrow of those which would lyue after the sincerity of the gospel: but being fallen sick, shortly after in the foresayd place, of a feuer, through an Impostume in his left eare, he dyed, the fourth of Decemb. 1561. hauing reigned but one yeare and about fiue monethes.

It was sayd of this king Fraunces (as the authour aboue mentioned reporteth) that when he was drawyng toward his end, the Cardinal of Loraine made him to say and pronounce these words which folow:*Lord forgeue me my trespasses, and impute not vnto me the faultes which my ministers haue done vnder my name and authority.

Neither is it vnworthy of obseruation, that after the father happened in much like sort by gods mighty iudgement vpon Carol. 9. his second sonne, & brother to Frances aboue mentioned, in these our latter dayes, who after the horrible and bloody murder of the Admyrall,* & other true professors of Christes Gospell, both men, womē, and children, to the nūber of many thousandes, of diuers Cityes, in so much that the prisōs & streetes are said to be coloured w^t bloud, smoking after such a cruell sort, as in our time or country the like hath not hitherto bene sene: by the terrible stroke of gods iust reuenge, the same king, by credible report of stor•, is sayd to dye of bleeding, not onely at his eares and nose, but in all other places of his bodye, where bloud might haue any issue.

Unto these afore recited historyes of king Henry and hys two Sonnes,* might also be added the death of the Emperour Charles the fift. Who in like maner beyng an enemy, and a great terrour to the Gospell, was cut of like wise for doing any more hurt to the Church, muche about the same time, an. 1558. which was but three monethes before the death of Queene Mary, and ten monethes before the death of the sayd Henry the 2. Touching the death of which Charles and Henry, & Fraunces, this Epitaph folowing was written in Latine verses, and printed in the French story booke, aboue alledged.

Consilij Christum oppugnans & fraudibus, ingens

Regum ille terror Carolus,

*Ipsis ridiculus pueris, furiosus & excors,

Totus repentè corruit.

Tu{que} Henrice, malis dum consultoribus vtens,

Sitis piorum sanguinem,

Ipse tuo vecors inopina caede peremptus,

Terram imbuisti sanguine.

Henrici deinceps sectans vestigia patris

Franciscus infoelix puer,

Clamantem Christum surda dum negligit aure,

Aure putrefacta corruit.

Versuti, fatui, surdi, haec spectacula Reges,

Vos sapere vel mori iubent.

Not long after Anne du Bourges death, the President Minard, who was a sore persecutour,* and the condemner of the sayd Anne du Bourg, as he returned from the Pallace or Counsell chamber, to his owne house, beyng vpon his Mule, euen hard by his house was slayne with a Dag but who was the doer thereof, or for what cause hee was slayne, for all the inquisition and dilligent searche y^t coulde be made, it was neuer knowne.

Amongst many other examples worthy to be noted,* let vs also consider the end of the K. of Nauarre, brother to the worthy Prince of Condy, who after he had sustained a certayne time, the cause of the Gospell, at length being allured by the flattering words of y^e Duke of Guise and the Cardinall of Loraine his brother, and vpon hope to haue his landes restored againe, which the king of Spayne reteyned from him, was contented to alter his religion and to ioyne side with the Papists, and so being in camp with the Duke of Guise at the siege of Roane, was there shot in with a pellet. After which wound receiued, being brought to a towne three miles from the campe, called Preaux, hee did vehemently repent and lament his backsliding from y^e Gospell, promising to God most earnestly, y^t if hee might escape that hurt, he woulde bring to passe that the Gospell should be preached freely through all Fraunce: Notwithstanding within fiue or sixe dayes after he dyed.*

Neyther did the Duke of Guise himselfe, the greate Archenemy of God and his Gospell, continue in life long after that, but both he with y^e whole triumvirat of France that is, three the greatest captayns of popery, were cut off for doyng any more hurt, to wit, the Duke of Guise before Orleance, the Constable before Paris, the Marshal of S. Andrew before Dreux.

¶Of the Emperour Sigismundus.

Amongest others, here is not to bee past ouer nor forgotten the notable examples of Gods iust scourge vpon Sigismundus y^e Emperour, of whō mentiō is made before, in the condemnation of Iohn Husse, & Hierome of Prage, pag. 596. After the deathe and wrongfull condemnation of which blessed martyrs: nothing afterward went prosperously with the sayd Emperour, but all contrary: so that both he dyed without issue, & in his warres euer wēt to the worst. And not long after, Ladislaus his daughters sonne king of Hungary, fighting agaynst the Turk, was slayne in the fielde. So that in the tyme of one generation, al the posteritie & ofspring of this Emperor perished. Besides this, Barbara his wife came to suche ruine, by her wicked leudnes, y^t she became a shame and slaunder to the name & state of all Queenes. Whereby all Christian princes and Emperours may sufficiently bee admonished, if they haue grace, what it is to defile themselues with the bloud of Christes blessed sayntes and Martyrs.

¶A note of Christopher Parker.

CHristopher Parker, called Parker the wilde, mentioned before in this booke of Monumentes, pag. 1986. who being a persecuter of Richard Woodman, did manacle his handes with a corde, did cast himselfe into a pond, and so drowned himselfe at Herstnonceux in Sussex, the 8. of September. 1575.

*The story of one Drayner of Kent, commonly called Iustice Nyne hooles.

I May not in this place omit the tragedy of one Drayner of Smarden in the Coun•y of Kent, Esquire,* who bearing grudge against one Gregory Doddes, Parson of the sayde towne, for reprobuing his vicious lyfe, sent for hym by two men, which tooke hym & brought him before him, where he was had into a Parlour, as it were to breakfast. In which behinde y^e doore he had placed one Roger Mathew secretly, to beare witnes what he shuld say, no more being in sight but y^e sayd Drayner & one of hys men, who willed and perswaded him to speake freely his minde, for that there was not sufficient record of his wordes to hurt him. But the Lord kept his talke without perill,* wherby the sayd Drayner sent hym to the next Iustice called M. George Dorell, who perceiuing it to be done more of malice thē otherwise, deliuered him vpon sureties, to appeare at the next Sessions at Cant. and at length was banished the Countrey.

This sayd Drayner afterward, being chosen Iustice, to shew himselfe diligent in seeking y^e trouble of his neigh•bors, made in y^e Rodeloft nyne hooles, that he might looke about the church in Masse tyme. In which place alway at the sacring therof, he would stand to see who looked not, or Page 2113 held not vp his hands therto: which persōs so not doing, he would trouble & punish very sore. Wherby he purchased a name ther, & is called to this day Iustice nine holes: who now (God be thanked) is Iohn out of office, & glad of his neighbors good will.

It so fell out, that since this was published, the sayde Drayner came to the Printers house, with other associate, demaunding: Is Foxe here? To whome aunswere was geuen, that maister Foxe was not within. Is the Printer within (quoth Drayner? It was aunswere, yea: Wherevpon being required to come vp into his house, was asked what his will was. Mary, sayth he, you haue printed me false in your booke: Why sayth the Printer is not your name M. Drayner, otherwise called Iustice nine holes? It is false sayth he: I made but v. with a great Augure, and the Parson made the rest. It was answered: I haue not read that a Iustice shoulde make him a place in the Roode loft to see if the people held vppe theyr handes. He sayd where as you alleadge, that I did it to see who adored y^e sacrament, or who not, it is vntrue: for I set as litle by it, as the best of you all. In deede sayth the Printer, so we vnderstand now, for you being at a supper in Cheapside among certaine honest company, and there burdened with the matter, sayd then, that you did it rather to looke vpon fayre wenches, then otherwise. He being in a great rage▪ sware to the purpose, saying: Can a man speake nothing, but you must haue vnderstāding therof? But sayth he, did I any man any hurt? It was aunswere, that hee meant litle good to M. Doddes aforesayd, especially procuring a secret wisse behinde his doore, to catche some wordes that might tend to Doddes destruction. Whiche thing, Drayner sware, as before, was not true. To whō the printer replied, that it was most true, for that the party there secretly hidden, hath since vpon his knees, asking forgeuenesse for his intent, confessed the same to Doddes himselfe.* I will hang that knaue sayth he: And so he departed in a rage: and since is deceased, whose death & order therof, I referre to the secret Iudge.

¶A Lamentable History of Iohn Whiteman, Shoomaker, who suffered most cruell tormentes at Ostend in Flaunders, for the testimony of Iesus Christ, and the truth of his Gospell. an. 1572.

*IOhn Whiteman Shoomaker, being about the age of 49. yeares, borne in Tinen a towne in Brabant. After hys comming ouer into England, dwelt in Rye in the County of Sussex, maryed xxiiij. yeares: alwayes a professour of the Gospell, as well in the time of the freedome therof, as in time of persecution. About Candlemas in the yeare 1572. vnknowne to his frendes in Rye, vnderstanding of shipping in Rye, which was ready bound for Ostend in Flaunders, went aboorde the Saterday morning and arriued at Ostend that night, where he lodged wyth one of his kinsmē there dwelling. The next day being Sonday, in the morning, he accompanied with his sayd kinsman, tooke his iourney as it were to haue passed hither into the countrey.

When they were about three mile on theyr way out of the Towne, sodeynely Whitman stayd, and would go no further: but immediatly returned back againe to Ostend, whither so soone •s he was come, it being seruice tyme in theyr Church, he forthwith addressed himselfe thither, and at the time of the heaue offering stept to the sacrificer,* and tooke from ouer his head his Idoll, saying these words in the Dutch tongue: Is this your God? and so breaking it, cast it downe vnder his feet and trode theron. Forthwith the people in an vpror came to lay holde on him, and hardly in the Church escaped he death by the souldiers there present, but being rescued by some, to the intent to be further examined and made a publicke spectackle, he was carryed immediatly to prison. Upon the next day, being monday, the Iudges & other Counsellors being assembled, he was brought forth into the common hall, and examined of hys fact, the intent, the counsell, and abettors thereof, and also of his fayth: where he very cōstantly in defence of his christian fayth, & great detestation of Idolatry, demeaned him selfe in such sort, that he wrong teares from the eyes of diuers, both of the chiefe, & others present. So was he committed agayne to prison. The next day being Tuesday, he was brought out agayne before the Iudges into the same place. And being examined as before, he no whit abated, but increased in his cōstancy.* Whereupō sentēce was geuē vpō him, to haue his hand cut of, and his body scorched to death, & after to be hāged vp. So the day folowing, being wednesday, he was brought out of prisō to the towne hal, standing in the market place, all thinges belōging to execution being made ready there. Which when they were al ready, the hangman went into the hall, & with a cord tyed y^e hands of Whitman, & came out leadyng him thereby: so soone as Whitman was out of the house, he made such hast & as it wer ran to the place of execution, y^t he drew y^e hangman after him. There was a post set vp with sparres frō the top therof, aslope downe to the ground, in maner of a Tent, to the end that he shoulde be onely scorched to death & not burned. When he was come to the place, y^e hangmā commaunded him to lay downe hys right hand vppon a block, which he immediately w^t a hatchet smote of, the good man stil cōtinuing constāt, y^e hangman stept behind him, & bid him put out his tonge, which he forthw^t did, as far as he could out of his mouth, through y^e which he thrust a lōg instrument like a Packe needle, and so let it sticke. Then the Iudges standing by in the common Hall, read agayn his fact and sentence.* Wherunto hee coulde make no aunswere, his tongue hāging out of his head: so was he stripped out of his Cassocke, his hose being put of in prison: & put wⁱⁿ his Tent, & made fast with two chaynes, and fire and put round about, which broyled and scorched his body most miserably, al blacke, he not being seene, but heard to make a noyse within the Tent. When he was dead, hee was caryed out to be hāged vpon a gybbot beside y^e town.

¶Admonition to the Reader concerning the examples aboue mentioned.

IT hath bene a long perswasion gendred in the heades of many men these many yeares, that to ground a mans fayth vpō Gods word alone, and not vpon the See and Church of Rome, following all the ordinaunces and constitutions of the same; was damnable heresie, and to persecute such men to death, was hygh seruice done to God. Whereupon hath risen so great persecutions, slaughters, and murders, with such effusion of Christē blood through all partes of Christendome, by the space of these 70. yeares, as hath not before bene seene. And of these men Chryst himselfe doth full well warne vs long before, true prophesiying of such times to come, when they that flea his Ministers and seruantes, shuld thinke themselues to do good seruice vnto God. Ioh. 16. Now, what wicked seruice, and howe detestable before God this is, which they falsly perswade themselues to be godly,* what more euident demonstrations can we require, then these so many, so manifest, & so terrible examples of Gods wrath pouring down from heauen vpon these persecuters, whereof part we haue already set forth:* for to comprehend all (which in number are infinite) it is vnpossible. Wherefore, although there be manye whiche will neyther heare, see, nor vnderstand, what is for theyr profite, yet let al moderate & wel disposed natures take warning in time. And if the playne word of God will not suffice thē, nor the blood of so many martirs wil moue thē to embrace the truth and forsake errour, yet let the desperate deathes & horrible punishments of their own papistes perswade thē, how perillous is the end of this dānable doctrine of papistry. For if these papistes which make so much of their painted antiquitie, do thinke theyr proceedings to be so Catholick, & seruice so acceptable to God, let thē ioyn this withal, & tel vs, how commeth then theyr procedings to be so accursed of God, & their end so miserably plagued, as by these examples aboue specified, is here notoriously to be seene? Agayne, if the doctrine of them be such heresie, whom they haue hetherto persecuted for heretickes vnto death, howe then is almighty God become a mayntayner of heretickes, who hath reuenged theyr bloud so greuously vppon theyr enemyes and persecuters?

The putting out of the French kinges eyes, which promised before with his eyes to see one of Gods true seruantes burned who seeth not with his eyes to be the stroke of Gods hand vpon him? Then his sonne Frances after him,* not regarding his fathers stripe, would needes yet proceed in burning the same man: and did not the same God whiche put out his fathers eyes, geue hym suche a blow on the eare, that it cost him his life if the platform of Steuen Gardiner had bene a thing so necessary for the church and so gratefull vnto God, why then did it not prosper with him nor he with it: but both he and his platforme lay in the dust, and none left behinde him to build vpon it? After the tyme of Steuen Gardiner, and at the Councell of Trent,* what conspiracies and pollicies were deuised? what practises and traynes were layde through the secret confederacy of princes and prelates, for the vtter subuersion of the Gospell and all Gospellers, which if God had seen to haue bene for his glory, why then came they to none effect? yea, how or by whome were they disclosed and foreprised but by the Lord himself, which would not haue them come forward?

The vehement zeale of Queene Mary, whiche was like to haue set vp the Pope here agayne in England for euer,* if it had so much plesed the Lord God as it pleased her self: or if it had bene so godly as it was bloody, no doubt but Gods blessing would Page 2114 haue gone withall. But when was the Realme of England more barren of all Gods blessings? what Prince euer raigned here more shorter time, or lesse to his owne hartes ease then didde Queene Mary?

*The Constable of Fraunce when he conuented with GOD, that if he had victory at S Quintines, he would set vpon Geneua, thought (no doubt) that he had made a great good bargaine with God: Much like to Iulian the Emperour, who going against the Persians, made his vow that if he spedde well, he would offer the bloud of Christians. But what did God? came not both theyr vowes to like effect?

The examples of such as reuolted from the Gospell to Papistry, be not many: but as fewe as they were, scarce can any be found which began to turne to the Pope, but the Lord began to turne from them,* and to leaue them to theyr ghostly enemy: As we haue heard of the king of Nauarre in Fraunce, of Hēry Smith and Doctor Shaxton in England, with other in other Countries moe, of whom some dyed in great sorow of conscience, some in miserable doubt of their saluation, some stricken by Gods hand, some driuen to hang or drowne themselues.

The stincking death of Steuen Gardiner, of Iohn de Roma, of Twyford, of the Bayliffe of Crowland: The suddeyne death of the Suffragane of Douer, of Doctour Dunning, of Doctour Geffray, of Berry the Promoter: The miserable and wretched end of Poncher Archbishop of Towers, of Cardinall Crescentius, Castellanus: The desparate disease of Rockewood, of Latomus, of Guarlacus: The earthly ending of Henry Beauforde Cardinall of Winchester, of Eckius, of Thornton called Dicke of Douer: The wilfull and selfe murder of Pauyer, of Richard Long, of Bomelius, besides infinite other: The dreadfull taking awaye and murren of so many persecutyng Byshoppes, so many bloudye Promoters, and malicious Aduersaries, in suche a shorte tyme together with Queene Marye, and that wythout anye mans hand, but onely by the secret working of Gods iust iudgement.

To adde to these also the stincking death of Edmund Boner, commonly named the bloudy Bishop of London: who not many yeares agoe, in the time and reigne of Queene Elizabeth, after he had long feasted and banquetted in Durance at the Marshalsea, as he wretchedly dyed in his blinde Popery, so as stinckingly, and as blindely at midnight was he brought out & buried in the outside of all the Citty, amonges theeues and murderers, a place right conuenient for such a murderer: with confusion and derision both of men and children, who trampling vpon his graue, well declared how he was hated both of God & man. What els be all these (I say) but playne visible argumentes, testimonies, and demonstrations euen from heauē agaynst the pope, his murdering Religion, and his bloudy doctrine? For who can deny their doings not to be good, whose end is so euill. If Christ bid vs to know mē by their fruits, & especially seing by the end all thinges are to be tryed, howe can the profession of that doctrine please God, which endeth so vngodly? Esaias chap. 50. prophesying of the ende of Gods enemyes, whiche woulde needes walke in the lighte of theyr owne setting vppe, and not in the light of the Lordes kindling,* threatneth to them this finall malediction: In doloribus (sayth he) dormietis i. In sorow shall you sleepe. Let vs now take a suruey of all those persecuters, whiche of late haue so troubled the earth (and almost haue burned vppe the world with fagots and fire, for mainetenaunce of the Popes Religion) and see what the end hath bene of them that are nowe gone, and whither their Religion hath brought them, but either to destruction, or desparation, or confusion & shame of life. So many great Doctors and Bishops haue cried out of late so mightely agaynst priestes marriage, and haue they not, by Gods iust iudgement working theyr confusion, bene detected themselues and taken the most part of them in sinnefull adultery,* & shamefull fornication? Cardinall Ioannes Cremensis the Popes Legate here in England, after he had set a law that Priestes shoulde haue no wiues, was he not the nexte daye after, being taken with hys whores, driuen out of Londō with confusion and shame enough, so that afterward he durst not shew his face here any more? Besides the two Bishops in the late counsell of Trent, most shamefully taken in adultery, mentioned before. Also besides innumerable other like forreigne storyes,* which I let passe, to come now to our owne domesticall examples. I could wel name halfe a score at least of famous Doctors, and some Byshops, with theyr great maysters of Popery, who in standing earnestly agaynst the mariage of Priestes, haue afterward bene taken in such dishonest factes themselues, that not onely they haue caried the publicke shame of adulterous lecherers, but some of them the markes also of burning fornication with them in theyr bodyes to theyr graues. Whose names although I suffer here to be suppressed, yet the examples of them may suffice to admonishe all men that bee wise,* and which will auoyde the wrath of Gods terrible vengeance, to beware of Popery.

And thus hauing hitherto recited so manye shamefull lyues and desperate endes of so many popish Persecutours stricken by Gods hand: nowe let vs consider agayne on the contrarye syde the blessed endes geuen of almighty God vnto them, which haue stooode so manfully in the defence of Christes Gospel, and the reformation of his religion, and let the Papists themselues here be iudges. First what a peaceable and heauenly ende made the worthy seruauant and singular Organe of God M. Luther?

To speake likewise of the famous Iohn Duke of Saxonie and prince Elector, of the good Palsgraue, of Phillip Melancthon, of Pomeranus, Vrbanus Rhegius, Berengarius, of Vlricus Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Pellicanus, Capito, Munsterius, Ioannes Caluinus, Petrus Martyr, Martin Bucer, Paulus Phagius, Ioan. Musculus, Bibliander, Gesnerus, Hofman, Augustinus,* Marloratus, Lewes of Bourbon Prince of Condy, and his godly wife before him, with many mo, which were knowne to be learned mē, and chiefe standers of the Gospel side against the Pope, and yet no man able to bring forth any one example eyther of these, or of any other true Gospeller, that eyther killed himselfe, or shewed forth any signification or appearaunce of despayre, but full of hope and constant in faythe, and replenished with the fruite of righteousness in Christ Iesu, so yealded they theyr lyues in quiet peace vnto the Lord.

From these Forrayners, let vs come now to the Martyrs of England, and marke likewise the ende both of them, and semblably of all other of the same profession. And first to beginne with the blessed and heauenly departure of King Edward the vi. that first put downe the Masse in England,* and also of the lyke godly end of his good Vncle the Duke of Sommerset, which dyed before him, with an infinite number of other priuate persons besides of the like religion, in whose finall departing, no suche blemishe is to bee noted like to the desperate examples of them aboue recited: Let vs now enter the consideration of the blessed Martyrs, who although they suffered in their bodyes, yet reioyced they in theyr spirites, and albeit they were persecuted of men, yet were they comforted of the Lorde wyth suche inwarde ioy and peace of conscience, that some writing to theyr friendes, professed they were neuer so merrye before in all theyr lyues, some leapt for ioye, some for tryumphe woulde put on theyr Scarfes, some theyr wedding garment goyng to the fire,* other kissed the stake, some embraced the Fagottes, some clapte theyr handes, some song Psalmes, vniuersally they all forgave, and prayed for ther enemies, no murmuring, no repining was euer heard amongst them, so that moste truely might bee verified in them, whiche their persecuters were wonte to sing in theyre Hymnes.

Caeduntur gladijs more bidentium,

Non murmur resonat, nec querimonia:

Sed corde tacito mens bene conscia,

Conseruat patientiam. &c.

Briefly, so great was theyr patience, or rather so great was Gods spirite in them, that some of them in the flaming fire, moued no more, then the Stake whereunto they were tyed. In fine, in them most aptly agreed the speciall tokens whiche most certaynly follow the true children of God: that is, outward persecution, and inward comfort in the holy Ghost.* In the world (sayth Christ our Sauour) ye shall haue affliction, but in me yee shall haue peace. &c.

And likewise the wordes of S. Paule be playne. Whosoeuer (sayth he) studyeth to liue godly in Christe, shall suffer persecution &c.

But then what followeth with this persecution? the sayde Apostle agayne thus declareth, saying: As the passions of Christ abound in vs: so aboundeth also our consolation by Christe. &c. According as by the examples of these godly martyrs right perfectly we may perceauce. For as theyr bodyes outwardly lacked no persecutions by the handes of the wicked: so amongst so many hundreds of them that stood and dyed in this religion, what one man can be brought forth, which eyther hath bene founde to haue killed himselfe, or to haue dyed otherwise then the true seruaunt of GOD, in quiet peace and much comforte of conscience?

Whiche being so, what greater prooffe can we haue to iustifie theyr cause and doctrine agaynst the persecuting Church of Rome, then to behold the endes of them both: First,* of the Protestantes, how quietly they tooke theyr deathe, and chearefully rested in the Lord: and contrariwise to marke these persecuters what a wretched end commonly they doe all come vnto.

Experience whereof we haue sufficient, in the examples aaboue declared: and also of late in Boner, who albeit he dyed in his bed vnrepentaunt, yet was it so prouided by God, that as he had bene a persecuter of the light, and a childe of darkenes, so his carkase was tumbled into the earthe in obscure darcknes at midnight, contrary to the order of all other Christians: and as he had bene a murderer, so was hee layd amongst theeues & murtherers, a place by Gods iudgement rightly appoynted for him.

And albeit some peradventure that haue bene notable persecutors in tyme past, doe yet remayne alieue, who being in the same cause as the other were, haue not yet felte the weyght of Page 2115 Gods mighty hand, yet let not them thinke that because the iudgement of God hath lighted sooner vpon other, therefore it will neuer light vpon them: or because God of his mercy hath graunted them space to repent, let not them therefore of Gods lenitye build to themselues an opinion of indemnity. The bloud of Abel cryed long, yet it wrought at length. The soules of the Saynctes slayne vnder the aultar, were not reuenged at the first. Apoc. 6. but read forth the chapter, & see what folowed in the end. Bloud especially of Christes seruauntes, is a perillous matter, and cryeth sore in the eares of God, and will not be stilled with the lawes of men.

Wherefore let such bloud guilty homicides beware, if not by my coūsell, at lest by the examples of theyr felowes. And though Princes and Magistrates,* vnder whose permission they are suffered, do spare theyr liues, let them not thinke therefore (as some of them shame not to say) that man hath no power to hurt them, and so thinke to escape vnpunished, because they be not punished by man, but rather let them feare so much the more. For oftentimes suche as haue bene persecutours and tormentours to Gods children, God thinketh them not worthy to suffer by mā, but either reserueth them to his owne iudgement, or els maketh them to be theyr owne persecutors, and theyr owne hands most commonly hangmen to theyr owne bodyes.

*So Saul after he had persecuted Daud, it was vnneedfull for Daud to pursue him agayne, for he was reuenged of him, more then he desired.

It was needlesse to cause Achitophell to be hanged, for hee himselfe was the stifeler or strangler of his owne life.*

Neither for the Apostles to pursue Iudas that betrayed their Mayster, for he himselfe was his owne hangman, & no man els, that his body brust, and his guts brast out.

Senacharib, had he not for his Persecutors his own sonnes, and cost Ezechias nothing to be reuenged of him for his tyranny.

Antiochus and Herode, although the Children of GOD whom they so cruelly persecuted, layd no hand vpon them, yet they escaped not vnpunished of Gods hand, who sent Lyce and Wormes to be theyr Tormentours, whiche consumed and eate them vp.

Pilate, after he had crucified Christ our Sauour, within few yeares after was he not driuen to hang himselfe?

Nero, after his cruell murders and persecutions stirred vp agaynst the Christians, when he shoulde haue bene taken by the Romaynes, God thought him not so worthy to be punished by the handes of them, but so disposed the matter, that Nero hym selfe when he could finde no frend nor enemy to kill him, made his owne handes to be his owne cutthroat.

Dioclesianus, with Maximinian his fellowe Emperour, whi• were the Authours of the tenth and laste Persecution agaynst <◇> Christians,* being in the midst of theyr furious tyranny ag•nst the name of Christ, needed no mans helpe to bridle them an•lucke them backe: for God of his secret iudgement put such <◇> in the mouthes of these Tyrauntes, that they themselues <◇> •heyr owne accorde deposed and dispossessed themselues of theyr •periall function, and liued as priuate persons all theyr liues afte• And notwithstanding that Maximinian after that, sought to <◇> his Imperiall state agayne, yet by Maxentius hys Sonne hee was resisted and shortly after slayne.

*What should I here speake of the cruell Emperour Maximinus, who when he had set forth his Proclamation engrauen in Brasse, for the vtter abolishing of Christ and his Religion, was not punished by man, but had Lice & Vermin gushing out of his entrals, to be his tormentors, with such a rotting stinch layd vpon his body, that no phisitions could abide to come neare, and were caused to be slayne for the same. pag. 82.

*Maxentius the sonne of Maximinian, and Pharao the king of Egypt, as they were both like enemies agaynst God and his people, so dranke they both of one cup, not perishing by any mans hand but both in like maner after were drowned with their harnes in the water.

Furthermore, and briefly in this matter to conclude, if the Kynges among the Iewes, which were bloody and wicked, were not spared, as Achaz, Achab, Iesabell, Manasses, Ioachim, Sedechias, with many other but hadde at length, although it were long, the hyre of theyr iniquity: let not these bloody Catholickes then thinke, which haue bene Persecutors of Christes Sayntes, that they being in the same cause as the other were aboue recited, shall escape the same iudgement, which the longer it is deferred, the sorer many times it striketh vnles by due repentaunce it be preuented in time: which I pray God it may.

Innumerable examples moe to the same effecte and purpose might be inferred, whereof plentiful store we haue in all places, and in al ages of men to be collected. But these hitherto for this present maye suffice, whiche I thought here to notify vnto these our bloody children of the murdering mother church of Rome, of whom it may well be sayd: Manus vestrae plen• sunt sanguine. &c. Your handes be full of blood. &c. Esay. Chapter. 1. to the intent that they by the examples of their other fellowes before mentioned, may be admonished to followe the Prophetes counsell, which followeth and biddeth: Lauamini. mundi estote. &c. Be you washed, and make your selues cleane &c. Esay. 1. and not to presume to farre vppon their owne securitie, nor thinke themselues the further of from Gods hand, because mans hand forbeareth them.

I know and graunt, that man hath no further power vppon any, then God from aboue doth geue.* And what the lawes of this Realme could make agaynst them, as agaynst open murderers, I will not here discusse, nor open that I could say (because they shall not say that we desire their bloud to be spilled but rather to be spared:) but yet this I say, and wishe them well to vnderstand, that the sparing of their liues which haue bene murderers of so many, is not for want of power in magistrates, nor lack of anye iust lawe agaynst them, whereby they might iustly haue bene condemned, if it had so pleased the Magistrates to proceed (as they might) agaynst them: but because almighty God peradventure of so secret purpose hauing some thinge to doe wyth these persecuters, hath spared them hitherto,* not that they shuld escape vnpunished, but that peradventure he will take his owne cause in his owne hand, eyther by death to take them away (as he did by Boner, and by al Promoters in a manner of Queene Maryes time) or els to make them to persecute themselues with their own handes, or will stirre vp their conscience to be theyr owne confusion, in such sort as the Church shall haue no neede to lay handes vpon them.

Wherefore with this short admonition to close vp the matter as I haue exhibited in these histories the terrible endes of so many persecuters plagued by Gods hand: so would I wish all suche whome Gods lenitie suffereth yet to liue, this wisely to ponder with themselues, that as their cruell persecution hurteth not the sayntes of God, whome they haue put to death: so the patience of Christs church suffering thē to liue, doth not profite thē, but rather heapeth the great iudgment of God vpō thē in the day of wrath, vnlesse they repent in tyme, which I pray God they may.

And nowe to reenter agayne to the time and story of Queene Elizabeth where we left before.

In whose aduauncement and this her princely gouernance, it cannot sufficiently be expressed, what felicitie and blessed happines this Realme hath receaued in receauing her at the Lordes almighty and gracious hād, for as there haue bene diuers kinges and rulers ouer this Realme, & I haue read of some, yet I coulde neuer finde in Englishe Chronicle the like that may be written of this our noble & worthy Queene, whose comming in not onely was so calme, so ioyfull, and so peaceable, without shedding of any bloud, but also her reigne hetherto (rayninge nowe 24. yeares and more, hath bene so quiet, that yet (the Lord haue all the glory) to this present day, her sword is a Uirgine, spotted and polluted w^t no drop of bloude. In speaking whereof I take not vpon me the part here of y^e morall or of the diuine Philosopher, to iudge of thinges done but onely keep me within the compasse of an historiographer, declaring what hath bene before, and comparyng thinges done, with thinges now present, the like wherof as I sayde, is not to be found lightly in Chronicles before. And this as I speake truely, so I would to be taken without flattery, to be left to our posteritie, ad sempiternam clementiae illius memoriam. In commendation of whiche her clemēcy I might also here adde how mildly her grace after she was aduaunced to her kingdome, dyd forgeue y^e foresayd sir Henry Benifield, without molestation,*suffering him to enioy goodes, lyfe, landes and libertie. But I let this passe.

Thus hast thou, gentle Reader, simply, but truely described vnto thee the tyme, first of the sorrowfull aduersitie of this our most soueraigne Queene that now is: also the miraculous protection of God, so graciously preseruing her in so many strayghtes and distresses, which I though• here briefly to notifie, the rather for that the wondrous workes of the Lord ought not to be suppressed, and y^t also her maiesty, and we likewise her poore subiectes, hauyng thereby a present matter alwayes before our eyes, bee admonished bothe how muche we are bounde to his diuine Maiestie, and also to render thankes to him condignely for the same.

Now remayneth likewise in prosecuting the order of this, as of other histories before, to notify and discourse of thinges memorable especially in the Church, such as happened in the time of this her Maiesties quiete and ioyfull gouernment.*And first here I let passe by the way the death of Cardinall Poole,*which was the next day after y^e death of Queene Mary, y^e death also of Christopherson B. of Chichester. Hoptō B. of Norwich, omitting also to speak of Doct. Weston, who being chiefe disputer against Cranmer, Ridley, & Latimer, as is before declared, first fell in displeasure with the Cardinall & other Byshops, because Page 2116 he was vnwilling to parte from his Deanerie and house of Westminster vnto the Monkes, whom in deede he fauoured not, although in other things a mayntainer of the Church of Rome. Then being remoued from thence, was made Deane of Windsor, where he being apprehended in aduoutry, was by the same Cardinall put from all his spirituall liuings. Wherefore he appealed to Rome, & flying out of the Realme, was taken by the waye, & clapt in the Tower of London, where he remayned vntill this time that Queene Elizabeth was proclaimed. At whiche time being deliuered, he fell sicke and dyed.

Also I let passe the Coronation of this our moste noble and Christian Princesse, & the order of the same, which was the xv. day of Ianuary. Anno. 1559. To passe ouer also the tryumphant passage and honourable enterテインement of the sayd our most dread Souereigne, through the city of London, with such celebrity, prayers, wishes, welcomminges, cryes, tender wordes, Pageantes, Enterludes, declamations and verses set vp, as the like hath not commonly beene seene, arguing and declaring a wonderfull earnest affection of louinge hartes towardes theyr Soueraigne. Item, to pretermitt in silence the letters gratulatory, sent to her Maiestie from diuers and sondry forreigne places, as from Zuricke, Geneua, Basill, Berne, Wittemberge, Argentine, Frankeforde. &c. These I saye with many other thinges to let passe, we will nowe (God willing) beginne with the disceptation or conference betwene the Popishe Bishops, and the learned men exiled in Germany, had at Westminster. After that first we haue inserted a certayne Oration of a worthy Gentleman called M. Iohn Hales, sent and deliuered to the sayd queene Elizabeth in the beginning of her reigne, the copy wherof is this.

¶An Oration of Iohn Hales, to the Queenes Maiestie, and deliuered to her Maiestye by a certayne Noble man, at her first entrance to her reigne.

¶To the Noble Queene Elizabeth,

ALbeit there be innumerable giftes and benefites of almighty God, whereof euery one would wonderfully comfort any person, on whome it should please his goodnes to bestowe it: yet is none of them either separate by it self,* or ioyned with any other, or yet al mingled together, to be compared to this one: that it hath pleased God of his mercy to deliuer this Realme our Countrey from the tyranny of malicious Mary, & to commit it to the gouernemēt of vertuous Elizabeth. For if a man had all the treasure of Salomon, and might not be suffred to haue the vse therof: in what better case were he then miserable Tantalus, ouer whose head the apples continually hung, yet being hunger sterued, could he neuer touch them? If a man had as strong a body as had Sampson, and besides were as whole as a fish, as the prouerbe is, yet if he were kept in bandes, what should it auayle him? Yea rather if it bee well considered, it is a hurte to him, if continuance of tormentes and paynes may be a hurt.

If a man had as manye children as had Gedeon the Iudge, and might not be so suffered to bring them vpp in the feare of God, & good knowledge & maners, had he not bene more happy to be without them, then to haue them? If a man had as much knowledge of God as had Saynt Paule, and durst not professe it openly with mouth, as he is commaunded, but for feare of death shoulde declare the contrary in deede, sclaunder the word of God, and deny Christ, which is forbidden, shoulde it not rather be a furtherance to his damnation, then otherwise?

And to be short, if any one man had all these giftes together, or generally all the giftes of Fortune, the body, the minde, and of grace, yet if hee mought not haue the vse of them, what should they profite him? Ueryly nothyng at all.* For felicitye is not in hauing, but in vsing, not in possessing, but in occupying: not in knowledge, but in doing.

But alas, our naturall Mother Englande, whiche hath bene counted to be the surest, the richest, and of late also the most godly Nation of the earth, hath bene these whole fiue yeares most violently by Tyrauntes forced to lacke the vse of all the giftes and benefites that GOD and nature had endued her. Her naturall and louynge children could not be suffered to enioy theyr right inheritance, whereby they might relieue and succour her or thē|selues: but whatsoeuer they had, was eyther by opē force or by crafty dealing pulled from thē. And surely this had bene tollerable, if none other mischiefe had bene therwith intended.

He is a gentle theefe (if theeues may bee counted gentle) that onely robbeth a man of his goodes, & refrayneth violent hands from his parson. For suche losse with labor and dilligence may be recovered. He may be called a mercifull murtherer, that onely killeth the aged Parentes, & vseth no force on the children.

For nature hath made al men mortall, and that in like space, and to kill the parentes, is as it were but a preuention of a shorte tyme, if it were to the vttermost enioyed. But these Tyrantes were more vngentle then common thieues, more empty of mercy, then common murtherers. For they were not onely not contented to haue the goods of the people, but they would haue it deliuered to them by the owners own handes, that it might be sayd to y^e world they gaue it with the hart:* and were not therwith pleased but they would haue theyr liues, that they should not bewray them, and yet herewith they were not satisfied, but they meant to root out the whole progenie and nation of English men, that none should be lefte to reuenge or crye out on theyr extremities, and to bring our Countrie into the Spanyardes dominion.

It is an horrible crueltie for one brother to kill an other, muche more horrible for the children to lay violent & murthering handes on theyr parentes, but most horrible of all to murther the children in the sight of the parentes, or the parentes in the sight of their children, as these moste cruell tormenters haue done.

But what do I stand in these things which haue some defence, because the Turkes perchaunce vse so to doe, and Ethnykes kill one an other, to make sacrifice of menne to theyr phantasticall Gods?

It was not enough for these vnnaturall English tormentours, Tyrantes, and false Christians, to be Lordes of the goodes, possessions, and bodyes of theyr brethren & Country men: but being verye Antichristes and enemies of Christes crosse, they would be Gods, and raygne in the consciences and soules of men. Euery man, woman, and childe, must deny Christ in word openly, abhorre Chryste in theyr deedes, sclauder his Gospell with word & deed, worship and honour false gods as they would haue them and themselues did, and so geue body and soule to the deuill theyr maister, or secretly flee, or after inward torments to be burned openly. O crueltie, cruelty,* farre exceeding al cruelties committed by those ancient and famous tyrants and cruell murderers, Pharao, Herode, Caligula, Nero, Domitian, Maximine, Diocletian, Decius, whose names for theyr cruell persecution of the people of God, and their open tyranny practised on the people haue bene, be, & euer shalbe in perpetuall hatred, and theyr soules in continuall torment in hell. If any man would take vppon hym to set foorth particularly all the actes that haue bene done these full fiue yeares by this vnnaturall womā: No, no womā, but a monster, and the deuill of hel couered with the shape of a woman, as it is most necessary for the glorye of God, and the prophet of his churche, and this realme it shoulde be done, hee shall finde it a matter sufficient for a perfect great History, and not to be cōtayned in an Oration, to be vttered at one tyme by the voyce of man. But to comprehend the summe of all theyr wickednes in few wordes: behold, whatsoeuer malice in mischief, couetousnes in spoyl, crueltie in punishing, tyranny in destruction could do, that all this poore English nation these full fiue yeares eyther suffered already, or should haue suffered, had not the great mercy of God preuented it.

And albeit there haue ben many that haue hazarded & lost theyr liues to shake of this moste rough brake (wherewith this Uiragin rather then Uirgin as she woulde bee called and taken) boasted her selfe to be sent of God, to ride and tame the people of Englande albeit there haue bene many that haue gone about to lose theyr brethren out of y^e yoke of this moste miserable captiuitie: & albeit some haue proued to breake the bandes of this most cruell tyranny, yet coulde they neuer bring to passe, that they so earnestly labored, and so manfully attempted.

And it is nothing to be wondered, let y^e papistes boast therof what it pleaseth them. For almighty God being a most indifferent gouernour, punishing euill, & rewarding good, could not of his iustice suffer his scourge so soone to be taken from this land, if he meaneth the salutation of the people, as most manifestly it appeareth he did. For hauing once geuen to this realme the greatest Iewell that myght be, that is, the free vse of his liuely worde, whiche if they had imbraced and folowed, would haue reformed al disorders & sinnes. Wherefore his wrath is kindled and prouoked, the people nothing regarded it, but eyther vtterly cōtemned it, or abused it, and many made it a cloke & colour to couer theyr mischief. So that if he should sodaynly haue withdrawne this plague, as tyrants & euill gouernors be Page 2117 the plague of God, they would neyther haue passed on his iustice, nor yet should they haue felt the sweetenesse of hys mercy. For commonly the people regard but thyngs present,* and neither remember thynges past, nor yet passe on thyngs to come, vnlesse they be warned by exceedyng extremities.

Besides this, it is most euident, that hee had determined to make this noble conquest alone with his own hand and mighty power, and would not that it should be done by man, least man should impute any part of the glory of this victory to his owne strength,* or to his owne pollicie, or that Fortune should seeme to beare any stroke in so glorious conquest, and so be partaker in mens opinions, of the triumph so worthy.

Neither did his almighty power worke this when man would haue it dispatched, that is, as soone as the enemy began to gather their force, for it is not so great a victory to discomfit a few dispersed people, as it is to destroy a perfectly vnited army, but he suffred them to make their force as great as was possible to worke whatsoeuer mischiefs by spoyle, banishment, prisonment, hangyng, headyng, burning, or otherwise could be imagined.

Neither would his most prouident wisdom doe it out of season: but as the good husbandman doth not crop his tree, till it haue rendered his fruit: so would hee not root out these pestilent tyrannies, til the most profit might be taken thereof.

When he had geuen sufficient laisure to all kynd of mē to declare themselues who were Crocodiles, sometyne lying in water, sometyne on land, that is, both Gospellers and papists.* Who were Sponges, suspected whether they had lyfe or no lyfe: whether they were Christians or Epicures: who were Cameleons, that could turn themselues into all colours, with Protestantes, Protestantes: with Papists, Papists: with Spaniards, Spaniards: w^t Englishmen, Englishmen: who were Gnatoes y^t could apply themselues to euery mans appetite that was in authoritie: who were Marygolds, that followed Maries mad affections: who were Weathercockes that did turne with euery wynd: who were Mastiues that could byte & barke not: who were Currese euer barking: who were Foxes that would promise much, and performe nothyng: who could bynd themselues with many othes, & do cleane contrary: who were Caines that sought the innocent Abels death: who were the Wolfes that wearied y^e lambs: and finally, when he had suffered the spirituall shauelings to spue out their venom, and euery man plainly to declare outwardly, what he was inwardly: then doth hee worke this most victorious conquest. And with his workes seemeth plainely to say thus vnto vs:* Ye see (my people) what I haue done for you, not for your sakes, which nothing regarded the benefits that I most plenteously poured on you, and haue deserued most greuous punishment for your vnthankfulnes: but of myne infinite mercy, and for my glories sake, which I will haue opened to all the world in these latter dayes, to the feare of euill doers, & to the cōfort of the well doers. Prouoke no more my wrath, ye see what will follow it, be hereafter more prudent and wyse then ye were before. Ye may, if ye will, be more circumspect in tyme to come, then ye haue bene in tyme past: ye may if ye list put me to lesse trouble, and keepe your selues in more safetie. I haue not onely discouered myne, yours, and my land of Englands enemies, & all the crafts subtleties, and pollicies that haue bene, or may be vsed by them, or any like hereafter, but I haue also taken away their head and captaine, and destroyed a great number of them, that ye should not be troubled with them, and some of them haue I left, that ye may make them spectacles and examples to the terrour and feare of their posterity. Loue me, and I will loue you, seeke my honour and glory, and I will worke your commoditie and safetie: walke in my wayes and commaundements, and I wil be with you for euer. Surely, if we consider the wonderfull mercy that it hath pleased God to vse towards vs in the deliueying of this Kealme and vs his people,* out of the handes of these most cruell tyrants, as we cannot but do, vnlesse we wyll declare our selues to be the most vnthankfull people that euer liued, we must needs iudge it not onely worthy to be compared, but also farre to exceed the deliuerance of the children of Israell out of Egypt from the tyranny of Pharaο, and from the powers of Holofernes and Senacherib. For it is not read, that either Pharaο or the other two sought any other thing, then to be Lords of the goods and bodies of the Israelites, they forced them not to committe Idolatry, and to serue false Gods, as these English tyrāts did.

But besides, if we will note the wonderfull works of God in handling this matter, we shall well perceiue, that farre much more is wrought to his glory, and to the profite of his church and people, then perchance all men at the first do see. For he hath not onely dispatched the Realme of the chiefe personages and hed of these tyrants: but also as it were, declareth, that he mynded not that eyther they or their doynge, shoulde continue. For albeit that all actes done by tyrantes tyrannouslye, bee by all Lawes, reason and equitie, of no force, yet because no Disputation shoulde follow on this, what is tyrannously done, and what is not tyrannouslye done, hee hath prouided that this question needeth not come in question.* For hee vtterly blinded their eyes, and suffred them to builde on false grounds which can no longer stande, then they bee propped vp with rope, sword and fagot. For her first parliament whereon they grounded and wrought a great part of their tyrannie, and wherein they ment to ouerthrowe whatsoeuer king Edward had for the aduancement of Gods glory brought to passe, was of no force or authoritie. For she perceiuing that her enemies stomacke coulde not be emptied, nor her malice spued on the people by any good order, she committeth a great disorder. She by force and violence, taketh from the Commons their libertie, that according to the auncient lawes and customes of the Realme, they could not haue their free election of knights and Burgesses for the Parliament. For shee well knew, that if eyther Christian men, or true English men, should be elected, it was not possible to succeed that she intended. And therfore in many places diuers were chosen by force of her threats, meet to serue her malicious affectiōs. Wherfore y^e parliamēt was no parliamēt, but may be iustly called a conspiracy of tyrantes and traytors. For the greater part by whose authority and voyces thinges proceeded in that Court, by their actes most manifestly declared themselues so, the rest being both Christians and true English men, although they had good wills, yet not able to resist or preuayle agaynst the multitude of voyces and suffrages of so many euill false to God,* and enemyes to their countrey. Also diuers Burgesses being orderly chosen, and lawfully retorned, as in some places the people did what they could to resist her purposes, were disorderly and vnlawfully put out, and others without any order or lawe in their places placed. Doctour Taylour Bishop of Lincolne a Christian Byshop and a true English man, being lawfully and orderly called to the Parliament, and placed in the Lords house in his degree, was in his robes by vyolence thrust out of the house. Alexander Nowell with two other, al three being Burgesses for diuers shyres and Christian men and true Englishe men, and lawfully chosen, retorned, and admitted, were by force putte out of the house of the Commons, for the which cause the same Parliament is also voyde, as by a President of the Parliament holden at Couentry in the 38. yeare of K. Henry the sixt, it most manifestly appeareth. And the third Parliamente called in the name of her husband, and of her euill grace, wherein they would haue vndone, that her noble Father and the Realme had brought to passe for the restitution of the libertie of the Realme, and for extinguishment of the vsurped authoritie of the Bish. of Rome, is also voyd, and of none authoritie.* For that the title and stile of supreme head of the church of England, which by a Statute made in the 35. yeare of the raigne of the sayd K. Henry, was ordeined, that it should be vnited and annexed for euer to the imperiall crowne of this Realme, was omitted in y^e writs of summonyng. Wherefore as a woman can bryng foorth no chyld without a man, so cannot those writs bring forth good and sure fruit, because this part of the title which was ordeined by the Parliament for the forme to bee alwayes vsed in the kings stile, was left out. For greater errorr is in lacke of forme, then in lacke of matter. And where the foundation is naught, there can nothing builded thereon be good. There is no law spirituall nor temporal (as they terme them) nor no good reason, but allow these rules for infallible principles. And if any man will say, that it was in the free choise, libertie, and pleasure of the king of this Realme and the Queene, whether they would expresse the said title in their stile, or not, as that subtile serpent Gardiner beyng Chancellor of the realme, and traiterously sēdyng out the writs of Parliament without the same stile, perceiuing he had ouershot himselfe in calling the Parliament, and hauing committed many horrible murthers, & most mischieuous acts, would haue excused it, as appeareth by a piece of the Statute made in the same Parliament, in the 8. chap. and 22. leafe, it may be iustly and truly answered, that they could not so do. For albeit euery person may by law renounce his own priuate right, yet may he not renounce his right in that which toucheth the common wealth or a third person.

And this title and stile more touched the common Page 2118 wealth and realme of England, then the king. For as I said before, it was ordeined for the conseruation of the libertie of the whole realme, and to exclude the vsurped authoritie of the B. of Rome. And therefore no K. or Queene alone could renounce such title: but it ought (if they wold haue it taken away) be taken away orderly and formally by acte of Parliament sufficiently called and summoned. For the naturall and right way to loose & vndoe things, is to dissolue them by that meanes they were ordeined. And so it most manifestly appeareth, that all their doings from the beginning to the end, were and be of none effect, force, nor authoritie: but all that they haue done, hath ben meere tyrannie. O most maruelous prouidence of almighty god, that alwayes and in all thinges, doth that is best for the welth of his people. O most mighty power, that so sodenly ouerthroweth the counsailes of the wicked, and bringeth their deuises to naught. O infinite mercy, that so gently dealeth with his people, that hee saueth them whome hee might most iustly destroy. O most ioyfull, most mery, and neuer to be forgotten Hopwednesday,* in which it hath pleased thee O God, to deliuer thy church this realm, and thy people from so horrible tyrannie. No tongue can expresse, no penne can endite, no eloquence can worthely set out, much lesse exornate these thy meruailous doings. No hart is able to render vnto thy goodnes, sufficiēt thanks for the benefites we haue receyued. Who could euer haue hoped this most ioyfull tyme? Yea, who dyd not looke rather for thy most sharpe visitation and vtter destruction of this Realme, as of Sodome, Gomorra, and Hierusalem.

But we see and feele good Lord, that thy mercy is greter then all mens sinnes, and farre aboue all thy workes. And albeit there is no Christian and natural Englishmā, woman or child, eyther present, or that shall succeede vs, which is not or shall bee pertaker of this most exceedyng mercy and wonderfull benefite of almighty God, & therefore is bound continually to prayse and thanke hym: yet there is not one creature that is more bound so to do, then you noble Queene Elizabeth. For in this horrible tiranny and most cruell persecution, your grace hath bene more hunted for, then any other. Diuers tymes they haue taken you, sometime haue had you in strong hold, secluded from all liberty: sometime at libertie, but not without most cruell Gaolers custody, and many tymes they determined, that without iustice ye should be murdered priuily. They thought if your grace had bene suppressed, they shoulde haue fully preuailed. If ye had bene destroyed, their doyngs for euer should be stablished. If ye had bene taken out of the way, there were none left that would or could vndoe that they ordeined. But he that sitteth on high, and laugheth at their madnesse, would not suffer that the malicious purposes,* most cruell deuised iniustice should haue successe. He tooke vpon hym the protection of you. He only hath bene your Ieoseba, that preserued you from this wicked Athalia. He onely was the Ioiada, that destroyed this cruell Athalia. Hee onely hath made you Queene of this Realme, in steade of this mischieuous Marana. No earthly creature can claime any piece of thanke therefore, no mans force, no mans counsail, no mans ayd hath bene the cause thereof. Wherefore the greater his benefites hath bene toward you, the more are you bounde to seeke hys glory, and to set forth his honour. Ye see his power what he is able to do, he can alone saue, and hee can destroy, hee can pull downe, and he can set vp. If ye feare hym & seeke to do his will, then will he fauour you, and preserue you to the end from all enemies, as he did king Dauid. If ye now fall from him or iuggle with hym, looke for no more fauour then Saule had shewed to hym. But I haue a good hope, that both his iustice and benefites bee so printed in your hart, that ye will neuer forget them, but seeke by all meanes to haue the one, and to feare to fall into the other. I trust also your wisdomes will not onely consider the causes of this late most sharpe visitation, but also to your vttermost power endeouour to out roote them.

And forasmuch as besides this infinit mercy poured on your grace, it hath pleased his deuine prouidence to constitute your highnesse to be our Debora, to be the gouernesse and heade of the bodye of this Realme, to haue the charge and cure thereof, it is requisite aboue all things, as well for his glory and honour, as for your discharge, quietnesse and safety, to labour that the same body now at the first be cleansed, made whole, and then kept in good order. For as if the body of man be corrupted and diseased, he is not able to manage his thinges at home, much lesse to doe any thing abroad: so if the body of a Realme be corrupt & out of order, it shal neither be able to do any thing abroad: if necessitie should require,* nor yet prosper in it selfe. But this may not be done with piecing & patching, coblyng & botching, as was vsed in tyme past whilst your most noble father and brother raigned. For as if a man cut of one hed of the serpent Hidra, and destroy not the whole body, many will growe in stead of that one, and as in a corrupt body that hath many diseases, if the Phisition should labour to heale one part, and not the whole, it will in short tyme breake out a fresh: so vnlesse the body of a Realme or common wealth be cleane purged from corruption, all the perticular lawes and statutes that can be deuised shall not profite it.

We need no forraine examples to prooue it, looke vpon this Realme it selfe, it will plainly declare it. And as it is not enough to cleanse the bodye from his corruption, but there must be also preseruatiues ministred to keep it from putrefaction: for naturally of it selfe it is disposed to putrifie: so after the body of a realme is purged, vnles there be godly ordinances for the preservation thereof ordeined and duely ministred, it will returne to the olde state. For this body which is the people, is vniuersally naturally disposed to euill, and without compulsion will hardly do that is his duety.

This must your grace do if ye mynd the aduancement of Gods glory, your owne quietnesse and safetie, and the wealth of this your politike body. And they be not hard to bring to passe, where goodwill will vouchsafe to take to her a little payne. The Realm will soone be purged, if vice and selfloue be vtterly condemned. It will be in good state preserued if these three things, Gods word truely taught and preached, Youth well brought vp in godly and honest exercises, and Iustice rightly ministred may bee perfectly constituted. And without this foundation,* let men imagine what it pleaseth them, the spiritual house of God shal neuer be well framed or builded, nor the publike state of your Realme well ordered. For in what body gods word lacketh, the vnitie and charitie, that ought to bee among the members thereof, and which knitteth them together, is soone extincted. Where the youth is neglected, there can no good successe bee hoped, no more then the husbandman can look for a good crop where he sowed no good seed. And where iustice is not truely and rightly ministred, there the more laws and statutes together be heaped, the more they be contemned. And surely, if this thing could not without exceeding charges be compassed, as God forbid, that charges should be weyed be they neuer so great, where Gods glory and the wealth of the realme may be furthered: yet ought it not to be neglected.* What charges did K. Dauid the father, & king Salomon his sonne, employ to build the stony house of God? Howe much more charges should a christian prince employ to build & set vp the liuely house of God? But verily, I am fully perswaded that it shall not be chargeable to do this. No, a great deale of superfluous charges, which otherwise your grace shall be forced to sustaine, shal thus be cleane cut away, and so your reuenues by a meane most profitable, & to no good person hurtfull, encreased.

Wherefore for Gods sake noble Queene, let not the oportunitie now by God offered be by your Grace omitted. A Phisition can in nothing so much declare his good will and cunning, nor purchase hymselfe so great estimation, as when he findeth his pacient thoroughly sicke and weakened, and doth restore hym to his perfect health and perfection. Likewyse if a Prince should desire of God a thyng whereby he might declare the zeale that he beareth to GOD, or whereby hee myght winne fame and glory, he could desire nothyng so much, as to come into a state corrupted, as this Realme of England at this present is, not to destroy it as did Caesar, but to make it as did Romulus.

If your grace can bring this to passe, as I am out of all doubt ye may quickly: Ye shall doe more, then any of your progenitours did before you. All men shall confesse that you are not onely for proximitie of bloude preferred, but rather of God specially sent and ordeined. And as the Queene of Saba came from farre of to see the glory of K. Salomon, a woman to a man: Euen so shall the Princes of our tyme, come men to a woman, and Kinges maruell at the vertue of Queene Elizabeth. Thus shall wee your subiects be most bound to prayse God, and to thinke our selues most happy, that beyng so sodainly from the worse, be forthwith preferred to the best: rid from extremest calamitie, and brought to the greatest felicitie: and it shall be besides an example for all euil Princes to leaue their persecution of Christ and his members, to cease from their tyranny, wherewith they continually oppresse theyr poore subiectes. And so all people, not onelye wee of this your Realme, but of all other nations, shall haue iust cause to Page 2119 pray for your graces health and ancrease of honour.

This Oration of M. Hales beyng premised, now let vs prosecute, the Lord willing, that which we promised, concernyng the Disputation or Conference had at Westminster. The copy whereof here followeth.

☞ The Conference or Disceptation had and begun at Westminster, the last of March, vpon certaine Questions or Articles of Religion proposed, and also of the breaking vp of the same, by the Papistes default, at the first beginning of Queene ELIZABETH.

SO it pleased the Queenes most excellent maiestie, hauyng heard of diuersitie of opinions in certaine matters of religion amongst sundry of her louyng subiects, and beyng very desirous to haue the same reduced to some godly and Christian concord, by the aduise of the Lordes and others of the priuy Counsaile, as well for the satisfaction of persons doubtfull, as also for the knowledge of the very truth in certaine matters of difference, to haue a conuenient chosen number of the best learned of eyther part, and to conferre together their opinions and reasons, and thereby to come to some good and charitable agreement. And hereuppon by her Maiesties commaundement, certaine of her priuy Counsaile declared this purpose to the Archbishophe of Yorke (beyng also one of the same priuy Counsaile) and required hym that he would imparte the same to some of the Bishops, and to make choise of viij.ix. or x. of them, and that there should be the like number named of the other part. And further also declared to hym (as then was supposed) what the matter should be. And as for the tyme, it was thought meet to be as soone as possible might be agreed vpon. And then after certaine dayes past, it was signified by the sayd Archbishophe, that there was appointed by such of the Bishops, to whome hee had imparted this matter eight persons, that is to say, 4. Bishops and 4. Doctours. The names of whom here follow vnder written, &c.

Who were content at the Queenes Maiesties commaundement, to shewe their opinions, and as the sayde Archbishop termed it, render accompte of their fayth in those matters which were mentioned and that especially in writyng, although he sayd, they thought the same so determined, as there was no cause to dispute vppon them. The matter which they should talke vpon, was comprehended in these three propositions, here vnder specified.

1. It is agaynst the worde of God, and the custome of the auncient Church, to vse a tongue vnknownen to the people, in common prayer, and the administration of the Sacraments.

2. Euery Church hath authoritie to appointe, take away, and change ceremonies and Ecclesiasticall rites, so the same be to edification.

3. It cannot be prooued by the worde of God, that there is in the Masse offered vp a sacrifice propitiatorie for the quicke and the dead.

It was hereupon fully resolved by the Queenes maiestie, with the aduise aforesayd, that according to their desire, it should be in writing on both partes, for auoyding of much alteration in wordes, and that the sayd Bishops should, because they were in authoritie of degree superiours, first declare their myndes and opinions to the matter, with their reasons in writyng. And the other number beyng also viij. men of good degree in schooles, and some hauyng bene in dignitie in the church of England, if they had any thing to say to y^e contrary, should the same day declare their opinions in lyke manner, and so eche of them should deliuer their writings to the other, to bee considered what were to bee improoued therein, and the same to declare agayne in writyng at some other conuenient day, and the like order to bee kept in all the rest of the matters. All this was fully agreed vpon with the Archb. of Yorke, and so also signified to both parties.

And immediately hereupon, diuers of the Nobilitie and states of the realme vnderstanding that such a meting and conference shoulde bee, and that in certaine matters whereupon the Courte of Parliament consequently followyng, some lawes might be grounded. They made earnest meanes to her Maiestie, that the parties of this conference, might put and read their assertions in the English tongue, and that in the presence of them of the Nobilitie and others of her Parliament house, for the better satisfaction and enabling of their owne iudgements, to treat and conclude of such lawes as might depend hereupon.

This also beyng thought very reasonable, was signified to both parties and so fully agreed vpon, and the daye appoynted for the first meetyng, to bee the Friday in the forenoone, beyng the last of March, at Westminster church. At which foresayd day and place, both for good order & for honour of the conference by the Queenes maiesties commandement, the Lordes and others of the priuy counsaile were present, and a great parte of the nobilitie also: And notwithstanding this former order appoynted, and consented vnto by both partes, yet the Bishop of Winchester & his Colleagues alledging they had mistaken y^t their assertions and reasons should be written, and so onely recited out of the booke, sayd their booke was not ready the•• written, but they were ready to argue and dispute, and therefore they would for that tyme repeate in speache that which they had to say to the first probation.

This variation from the former order, and specially from that which themselves had by the sayde Archbishop in writyng before required, adding thereto the reason of the Apostle, that to contend with wordes, is profitable to nothyng, but to subuersion of the hearer, seemed to the Queenes maiesties counsaile somewhat strange, and yet was it permitted without any great reprehension, because they excused themselves with mistakyng the order, and agreed that they would not faile but put it in writing and accordyng to the former order, deliuer it to the other part, and so the sayd Bishop of Winchester and hys Colleagues, appoynted Doctour Cole Deane of Paules, to be the vtterer of their myndes, woo partly by speech onely, and partly by readyng of authorities written, and at certayne tymes beyng enformed of his Colleagues, what to say made a declaration of their meanynge and their reasons to their first proposition, which being ended, they were asked by the priuy Counsaile if any of them had any more to be sayd, and they sayd no. So as the other parte was licenced to shewe their myndes, which they dyd accordyng to the first order, exhibitynge all that whiche they ment to be propounded, in a booke written, which after a prayer and inuocation made most humbly to almighty God for the enduyng of them with his holy spirite, and a protestation also to stand to the doctrine of the Catholike Church builded vpon the Scriptures, and the doctrine of the Prophets and the Apostles, was distinctly red by one Robert Horne Bachelor in Diuinitie, late Deane of Duresme, and after Bishoppe of Winchester. The Cope of which their Protestation here followeth, accordyng as it was by him penned and exhibited, with their preface also before the same, as is here expressed.

Forasmuch as it is thought good vnto the Queenes most excellent Maiesty (vnto whom in the Lord all obedience is due) that we should declare our iudgement in writyng vpon certayne propositions: we, as becommeth vs to doe herein, most gladly obey.

Seeing that Christ is our onely maister, whome the father hath commaunded vs to heare: and seying also hys worde is the truth, from the which it is not lawfull for vs to depart not one haire bredth, and against the which (as the Apostle saith) we can do nothing, we doe in all thinges submitte our selues vnto this truth, and doe protest that we will affirme nothyng agaynst the same.

And forasmuch as we haue for our mother the true and catholike Church of Christ, which is grounded vpon the doctrine of the Apostles and Prophetes, and is of Christ the head in all things gouerned, we do reuerence her iudgement, we obey her authoritie as becommeth children: and we do deuoutly professe and in all points follow the faith which is contained in the three Creedes, that is to say, of the Apostles, of the Councell of Nice, Page 2120 and of Athanasius.

And seying that we neuer departed, neither frō the doctrine of God which is contained in the holy Canonick Scriptures, nor yet from the fayth of the true and catholike church of Christ, but haue preached truely the worde of God, and haue sincerely ministred the sacraments accordyng to the institution of Christ, vnto the which our doctrine and fayth, the most part also of our aduersaries did subscribe not many yeares past, (although now as vnnaturall they are reuolted from the same) wee desire that they render accompt of their backsliding, and shewe some cause wherefore they do not only resist that doctrine which they haue before professed, but also persecute the same by all meanes they can. We do not doubt but through the equitie of the Queenes most excellent maiesty, we shall in these disputations be entreated more gently then in yeres late past, when we were handled most vniustly, & scanty after the common maner of men. As for the iudgement of the whole controuersie, we referre vnto the most holy scriptures, and the catholike church of Christ (whose iudgement vnto vs ought to be most sacred): notwithstanding by the catholike church we vnsterstand not the Romish church, whereunto our aduersaries attribute suche reuerence, but that which S. Augustine & other fathers affirme, ought to be sought in the holy scriptures, and which is gouerned and led by the spirite of Christ.

*It is against the worde of God and the custome of the Primitiue Church to vse a tong vnknown to the people in common praiers & administration of the sacraments.

By these words (the word of God) we meane only the written word of God, or canonicall scriptures.

And by the custome of the primitiue church, we meane the order most generally vsed in the church for the space of 500. yeres after Christ, in which times liued the most notable fathers, as Iustine, Ireneus, Tertullian, Cyprian, Basill, Chrysostome, Hierome, Ambrose, Austine, &c.

*This assertion aboue written hath two partes. Fyrst, that the vse of the tongue not vnderstanded of the people in common prayers of the Church, or in the administration of the Sacramentes, is agaynst Gods worde.

The second, that the same is agaynst the vse of the primatiue Church.

The first parte is most manifestly prooued by the 14. chapter of the Epistle to the Corinthians,* almost thorow out the whole chapter. In the whiche chapter Saynt Paule intreateth of this matter, ex professo purposely. And although some do cauel that Saint Paule speaketh not in that chapter of praying, but of Preaching, yet is it most euident to any indifferent reader of vnderstanding, and appeareth also by the exposition of the beste writers, that hee plainly there speaketh not onely of Preaching and Prophesying, but also of prayer and thanksgeuing, and generally of all other publicke actions, whiche require any speache in the Church or congregation. For of praying he sayth: I will pray with my spyrite, and I will pray with my minde, I will singe with my spyrite, and I will singe with my minde. And of thanksgeuing (which is a kinde of prayer:) Thou geuest thanks well, but the other is not edyfied. And how shall he which occupyeth the rounge of the vnlearned say, Amen to thy geuing of thanks when he vnderstandeth not what thou sayest? And in the ende, descending from particulers to a generall proposition, cōcludeth that all thinges oughte to be done to edyfication. Thus much is cleare by the very words of Saint Paule: and the auntyent Doctors, Ambrose, Augustine, Hierom, and other do so vnderstand this chapter, as it shal appeare by their testimonies which shall follow afterwarde.

¶Upon this Chapter of Saint Paule we gather these reasons following.

1. All things done in the Church or congregation, ought so to be done as they may edifye the same.*

But the vse of an vnknowē tongue, in publicke prayer or administration of Sacramentes doth not edifye the congregation.

Therefore the vse of an vnknown tongue in publicke prayer or administration of Sacramentes is not to be had in the Church.

*The first part of this reason is grounded vpon Saynt Paules wordes, commaunding all thinges to be done to edyfication.

*The seconde parte is also prooued by Saynte Paules playne wordes. Fyrst by this similitude. If the trumpet geue an vncertayne sounde who shall be prepared to battaile? Euen so likewise when ye speake with tongues, except ye speake wordes that haue signification, how shall it be vnderstanded what is spoken? for ye shal but speake in the ayre, that is to say, in vayne, and consequently without edifieng.

And afterward in the same chapter he sayth: how can he that occupieth the place of the vnlearned say, Amen, at thy geuing of thanks, seeyng he vnderstandeth not what thou sayest? for thou verily geuest thanks well, but the other is not edified.

These be Pauls words, plainly proouing, that a tong not vnderstanded, doth not edifie. And therefore both the parts of the reason thus prooued by S. Paul, the conclusion followeth necessarily.

Secondly, nothing is to be spoken in the congregation in an vnknown tongue,* except it be interpreted to the people, that it may be vnderstand. For saith Paul, if there be no interpreter to him y^t speaketh in an vnknown tong, taceat in ecclesia, let him hold his peace in the church. And therfore the commō praiers & administratiō of sacramēts, neither done in a known tong, neither interpreted, are against this commandement of Paul, and not to be vsed.

The minister in praier or administration of sacramēts vsing language not vnderstanded of the hearers,* is to thē barbarous, an alien, which of Saint Paul is accompted a great absurditie.

It is not to bee counted a Christian common prayer,* where the people present declare not their assent vnto it by saying Amen, wherein is employed all other words of assent.

But S. Paul affirmeth that the people cannot declare their assent in saying Amen,* except they vnderstand what is said, as afore.

Therefore it is no Christian common prayer where the people vnderstandeth not what is sayd.

Paule would not suffer in this tyme a strange tongue to be heard in the common prayer in the church, notwithstanding that such a kind of speach was then a miracle, & a singular gift of the holy ghost, whereby infidels might bee perswaded and brought to the faith: much lesse is it to bee suffred now amongst christian and faithful men, especially being no miracle, nor especiall gift of the holy ghost.

Some will peraduenture answer, that to vse any kind of tong in common prayer or administration of sacramēts is a thing indifferent.*

But S. Paul is to the contrary. For he commaundeth all things to be done to edification, he cōmandeth to keepe silence if there be no interpreter,* and in the end of the chapter he concludeth thus. If any man be spirituall or a prophet, let him know that the things which I write, are the commaundementes of the Lorde. And so shortly to conclude, the vse of a strange tongue in prayer and ministration is agaynst the word and commandement of God.

To these reasons, grounded vpon S. Pauls wordes, which are the most firme foundation of this assertion, diuers other reasones may bee ioyned, gathered out of the scriptures and otherwise.

In the old testament all things pertainyng to y^e publike prayer, benedictions, thankesgeuings, or sacrifices,* were alwayes in their vulgar and naturall tong. In the 2. booke of Paralipom. chap. 29. it is written that Ezechias commanded the Leuites to praise God with y^e Psalms of Dauid, and Asaph the Prophet, which doubtlesse were written in Hebrew their vulgar tongue. If they did so in the shadowes of the law, much more ought we to doe the like, who (as Christ saith) must pray in spiritu & veritate.

The finall end of our prayer (as Dauid sayth) is,* vt populi conueniant in vnum, & annuncient nomen Domini in Sion, & laudes eius in Hierusalem.

But the name and praises of God cannot be set foorth to the people, vnlesse it be done in such a tong as they may vnderstand, therfore common prayer must bee had in the vulgar tongue.

The definition of publike prayer out of the wordes of S. Paule. Orabo spiritu, orabo & mente. Publicè orare,* est vota communia mente ad Deum effundere, & ea spiritu, hoc est, lingua testari. Common prayer is to lifte vp our common desires to God with our myndes, and to testify the same outwardly with our tongues, which definition is approoued by S. Augustine, de magistro. cap. 1. Nihil opus est (inquit) loquutione, nisi forte vt sacerdotes faciunt, significandae mentis causa, vt populus intelligat.

The ministration of the Lordes supper and baptisme are as it were Sermons of the death and resurrection of Christ.*

But Sermons to the people must be had in such language as the people may perceiue, otherwise they shoulde be had in vayne.

It is not lawfull for a christian man to abuse the gifts of God,* but he that praieth in the church in a strange tong abuseth the gifts of God. For the tong serueth onely to expresse the mynd of the speaker to the hearer. And August. sayth: De doctrina Christiana, li. 4. ca. 10. loquēdi omnino nulla Page 2121 est causa, si quod loquimur non intelligunt, propter quos vt intelligant loquimur. There is no cause why wee shoulde speake if they for whose cause we speake, vnderstande not our speaking.

*The heathen and barbarous nations of all countries and sortes of men, were they neuer so wylde, euermore made their prayes and sacrifices to their Gods in their owne mother tongue. Which is a manifest declaratiō that it is the very light and voyce of nature.

¶ Thus much vpon the ground of S. Paule and other reasons out of the Scriptures, ioyning therewith the common vsage of all nations, as a testimony of the lawe of nature.

*Now for the second part of the assertion, which is, that the vse of a strange tongue in publike prayer and administration of sacraments, is against the custome of the Primitiue church, which is a matter so cleare, that the deniall of it must needes proceed either of great ignorance, or els of wilfull malice.

For first of all Iustinus Martyr describing the order of the communion in his tyme,* sayth thus: Die solis vrbanorum ac rusticorum coetus, fiunt vbi Apostolorum prophetarum{que} literae, quoad fieri potest praeleguntur: Deinde cessante lectore, praepositus verba facit adhortatoria, ad imitationē tam honestarum rerum inuitans. Posthaec consurgimus omnes, & preces offerimus, quibus sinitis profertur (vt diximus) panis, vinum & aqua: tum praepositus quantum potest, preces offert, & gratiarum actiones, plebs vero Amen accinit.

That is to saye: Uppon the Sondag assemblies are made both of the citizens and countrey men, whereas the writings of the Apostles and of the Prophets are red, as much as may be. Afterwards when the Reader doth cease the head minister maketh an exhortation, exhortyng them to fol•ow so honest thyngs. After this, we rise altogether and offer praiers, which beyng ended (as we haue sayde) bread, wine & water are brought forth. Then the hed Minister offreth prayers and thansgeuing, as much as he can and the people answereth, Amen.

☞ These wordes of Iustine, who liued about 160. yeares after Christ, considered with their circumstance, declare playnely that not onely the Scriptures were red, but also that the prayers and administration of the Lords supper were done in a tongue vnderstanded,

Both the Liturgies of Basil and Chrysostom declare, that in the celebration of the Communion,* the people wer appointed to answer to the prayer of the Minister, sometymes Amen, sometymes, Lord haue mercy vppon vs, sometymes, and with thy spirite, and we haue our hartes lifted vp vnto the Lord, &c. Which aunswers, they coulde not haue made in due tyme, if the prayers had not bene made in a tong vnderstanded.

And for further prooffe, let vs heare what Basill writeth in this matter to the Clarkes of Neocaesarea.*Caeterum ad obiectum in Psalmodijs crimen quo maxime simplices terrent calumniatores, &c. As touching that is layed to our charge in Psalmodies and songs, wherwith our slaundersers doe fraie the simple, I haue thus to say, that our customes and vsages in all Churches, be vniforme, and agreeable.

For in the night the people with vs riseth, goeth to th• house of prayer, and in trauaile, tribulation, and continual teares, they confesse themselues to God, and at the last rising agayne, go to their songs or Psalmody, where being deuided into two partes, sing by course together, both deeply weying and confirmyng the matter of the heauenly sayinges, and also stirring vp their attention and deuotion of heart, which by other meanes bee alienated and plucked away. Then appoynting one to beginne the song, the rest followe, and so with diuers songes and prayers passing ouer the nyght, at the dawning of the day, altogether euen as it were, with one mouthe and one heart, they sing vnto the Lord a song of Confession, euery man framyng to hymselfe meete wordes of repentaunce.

If you will flie vs from hencefoorth for these thynges, ye must flie also the Egyptians, and both the Libianes, ye must eschew the Thebanes, Palestines, Arabians, the Phenices, the Syrians, and those that dwell besides Euphrates. And to be short, all those with whome watchinges, prayers, and common singyng of Psalmes are had in honour.

☞ Testimonies of S. Ambrose, written vpon the 14. to the Corinth. the first epistle. Super illud qui enim loquitur linguis.

Hoc est quod dicit, quia qui loquitur incognita lingua, &c. This is it that he sayth: * because he which speaketh in an vnknownen tongue, speaketh to God. For he knoweth all thyngs but men know not, & therefore there is no profit of this thyng.

¶ The same author afterwarde, Super illud, si benedixeris spiritu. *

Hoc est, si laudem dei lingua loquaris ignota, &c. Uppon these wordes, if thou blesse or geue thanks with the spirit, how shall he that occupieth the rounge of the vnlearned, say, Amen at the geuyng of thanks, seeyng he vnderstandeth not what thou sayest?

That is (sayth Ambrose) if thou speake the prayse of God in a tongue vnknownen to the hearers. For the vnlearned hearing that which he vnderstandeth not, knoweth not the end of the prayer, and he answereth not Amē. That is as much to say as (true) that the blessing or thāksgeuyng may bee confirmed. For the confirmation of the prayer is fulfilled by them which do answer, Amen. That all things spoken might be confirmed in the mindes of the hearers, through the testimony of the truth.

¶ Afterward in the same place vpon these wordes, if any Infidell or vnlearned come in. *

Quum enim intelligit & intelligitur, &c. For when hee vnderstandeth, and is vnderstanded, hearing God to bee prayed, and Christ to bee worshipped, he seeth perfectly, that the religion is true, and to be reuerenced, wherein he seeth nothyng to be done colourably, nothyng in darkenesse, as among the Heathen, whose eyes are couered, that they seyng not the thyngs which they call holy, might perceyue themselues to be deluded with diuers vanities. For all falsehood seketh darkenes, and sheweth false things for true. Therefore, with vs nothing is done priuily, nothing couertly, but one God is simply prayed, of whom are all things, and one Lord Iesus, by whom are all things. For if there be none which can vnderstand, or of whome hee may be tried, he may say, there is some deceit and vanitie, which is therfore song in tongues (not vnderstanded hee meaneth) because it is a shame to open it.

Vpon this place: Omnia ad aedificationem fiant. *

Conclusio haec est vt nihil incassum in ecclesia geratur: hocque elaborandum magis, vt & imperiti proficiant, ne quid sit corporis per imperitiam tenebrosum. Let all thyngs be done to edifie,

This is the conclusion, that nothyng should be done in the Church in vayne, and that this thyng ought chiefly to bee laboured for, that the vnlearned also myght profite, least any part of the body should bee darke thorough ignoraunce.

Agayne: Si non fuerit interpretes,* taceat in Ecclesia.

Hoc est, intra se tacitè oret aut loquatur deo, qui audit muta omnia. In Ecclesia enim ille debet loqui qui omnibus prosit.

If there be no interpreter, let hym keepe silence in the Church.

That is, let him pray secretly, or speake to God within hymselfe, which heareth all dumme thyngs: for in the church he ought to speake which may profit all men.

☞ Testimonies out of S. Hierome, vpon that place of Paule: Quomodo qui supplet locum idiotae, &c.

PER illum, saith S. Hierome, qui supplet locum idiotae,* laicum intelligit, qui nullo gradu ecclesiastico fungitur. It is the lay men saith he, whom Paule here vnderstandeth to be in the place of the ignoraunt man which hath no Ecclesiasticall office. How shall he answer Amen to the prayer that he vnderstandeth not?

¶ And a little after vpon these wordes: Nam si orare lingua, &c.

Hoc dicit, quoniam si quis incognitis alijs linguis loquatur, mens eius non ipsi efficitur sine fructu, sed audienti. Quicquid Page 2122 enim dicitur ignorat. This is Pauls meanyng, saith Hierome. If any man speaketh in strange & vnknown tongs his mynd is not to hymselfe without fruit and profite, but he is not profited that heareth hym.

And in the end of his commentary vpon the Epistle to the Galathians, he saith thus:

Quod autem (Amen) consensum significet audientis, &c. That (Amen) signifieth the consent of the hearer, and is the sealing vp of the truth, Paul in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, teacheth, saying. But if thou shalt blesse in spirit, who supplieth the place of the ignorant? How shall he at thy prayer aunswere (Amen) seeyng he knoweth not what thou sayst? Wherby he declareth, that the vnlearned man cannot aunswer, that that which is spoken, is true, vnlesse he vnderstand what is sayd.

The same Hierome sayth in the Preface of S. Pauls Epistle to the Galathians, that the noyse of (Amen) soundeth in the Romane church like an heauenly thunder.

*As Hierome compareth this sound of common praier to thunder, so compareth Basill it to the sound of y^e sea, in these words: If the sea be faire, how is not the assembly of the congregation much fairer, in the which a ioyned sound of men, women and childrē, as it were of the waues beatyng on the shore, is sent forth in our praiers vnto our God.

*Cum populus semel audiuit, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , statim omnes respondent Amen.

When the people once heare these words (world without end) they all forthwith answer, * Amen.

And the same writer vpon the same chapter, vppon these words: How shall hee that occupieth the rounge of the vnlearned: say Amen. En rursus amussi (quod dicitur) saxum applicat, ecclesiae aedificationem vbi{que} requi•ens. &c. Behold againe, he applieth the stone vnto the squire (as the Prouerbe is) requiring the edifieng of the Congregation in all places. The vnlearned he calleth the common people, and sheweth that it is no small discommoditie, if they cannot say, Amen.

And agayne the same Chrysostome: Quin & in precibus viderit quis populum multum simul offerre, *tum pro energumenis, tum pro poenitentibus. Communes enim preces & a sacerdote & ab illis fiūt, & omnes dicunt vna orationē, orationē misericordia plenam. Iterum, vbi excluderimus a sacerdotalibus ambitibus eos qui non possunt esse participes sanctae mensae, alia sacienda est oratio, & omnes similiter surgimus, &c. That is, yea in the prayers you may see the people offer largely, both for the possessed and the penitents. For the Priestes and the people pray altogether commonly, and all one prayer, a prayer full of mercy and pity. And excl•ding out of the Priests limites all such as cannot bee pertakers of the holy table, another prayer must be made, and all after one sort lye downe vppon the earth, and all agayne after one sort ryse vp together. Now when the peace is geuen, we all in lyke maner salute one another, and the Priest in the reuerent mysteries wisheth well to the people, and the people vnto hym, for Et cum spiritu tuo is nothing els but this. All things that belong to the sacrament of thanksgeuing, is common to all. But he geueth not thanks alone, but all the people with hym.

Hereby it may appeare, that not the priest alone communicated nor prayed alone, nor had any peculiar prayer, but such as was common to them all, such as they all vnderstood, & all were able to say with the priest, which could not haue bene, if he had vsed a straunge tong in the ministration of the sacraments.

*Dionysius describing the maner of the ministration of the Lordes supper, sayth: That hymnes were said of the whole multitude of the people.

Cyprian sayth: The priest doth prepare the myndes of the brethren, * with a preface before the prayer, saying: Lift vp your hartes, that whiles the people doth aunswer, we haue our hartes lifted vp to the Lord, they may be admonished that they ought to thinke of none other thing then of the Lord.

S. Augustine, Quid hoc sit, intelligere debemus, &c. What this should be we ought to vnderstand, * that we may sing with reason of man, not with chatting of birdes. For Ousels and Popiniayes, and Rauens, and Pies, & other such like birds are taught by mē to prate they know not what. But to sing with vnderstanding, is geuen by Gods holy will to the nature of man.

The same Augustine. There needeth no speach when we pray, * sauing perhaps as the priestes doe, for to declare their meanyng, not that God, but that men may heare them, and so being put in remembraunce by consentyng with the priest, may hang vpon God.

To these testimonies of the auncient writers, we will ioine one constitution of Iustinian the Emperour, who liued 527. yeares after Christ: Iubemus vt omnes Episcopi pariter & Praesbyteri. &c. We commaund that all bishops & priests do celebrate the holy oblation, and the praiers vsed in holy Baptisme, not speaking low, but with a cleare or loud voyce, which may be heard of the people, that thereby the mynd of the hearers may bee stirred vp with greater deuotion, in vttering the prayes of the Lord God. For so the holy Apostle teacheth in his first Epistle to the Corinthians, saying: Truly if thou onely blesse or geue thanks in spirit, how doth he which occupieth the place of the vnlearned, say the Amen, at the geuing of thanks vnto god? for he vnderstandeth not what thou sayest. Thou verily geuest thanks wel, but another is not edified. And again, in the Epistle to the Romans he sayth: Corde creditur ad iustitiam, ore autem fit confessio ad salutem, with the heart a man beleueth vnto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made vnto saluation.

Therefore for these causes it is conuenient, that amōgst other prayers, those thinges also which are spoken in the holy oblation, be vttered and spoken of the most religious bishops and priests vnto our Lord Iesus Christ our God with the father and the holy Ghost, with a lowde voyce. And let the most religious priests know this, that if they neglect any of these things in y^e dreadful iudgement of the great God and our sauour Iesus Christ, neither will we when we know it, rest, and leaue it vnreuenged.

¶ Out of this constitution of Iustinian the Emperour, three things are worthy to be noted.

First, that the common prayer and ministration done with a lowd voyce, so as may be heard and vnderstanded of the people, is a meane to stirre vp deuotion in the people, contrary to the common assertion of Eckius & other aduersaries, who affirme that ignorance maketh a great admiration and deuotion.

Secondly, that Iustinian maketh this matter of not ordering common ministration and prayers, so as it may be vnderstanded of the people, not a matter of indifferencie, but such a thyng as must be answered for at the day of iudgement.

Thirdly, that this Emperour beyng a christian Emperor, doth not onely make constitution of Ecclesiasticall matters, but also threateneth reuenge and sharpe punishment to the violaters of the same.

These are sufficient to prooue, that it is agaynst Gods word, and the vse of the primitiue church, to vse a lāguage not vnderstanded of the people, in common prayer & ministration of the sacraments. Wherefore it is to be meruailed at, not onely how such an vntruth and abuse crept at the first into the Church, but also how it is maintayned so stifly at this day, and vpon what ground these that will be thought guides and pastors of Christes church, are so loth to returne to the first originall of S. Pauls doctrine, & the practise of the primitiue catholike Church of Christ.

☛ The God of pacience and consolation, geue vs grace to bee lyke mynded one towardes another in Christ Iesu, that we all agreeyng together, may with one mouth prayse God the father of our Lorde Iesus Christ, Amen.

And the same beyng ended with some likelyhood as it seemed, that the same was much allowable to the audiēce: certaine of the Bishops began to say contrary to their former aunswer, that they had now much more to say to this matter, wherein although they might haue bene well reprehended for such maner of cauillation: yet for auoidyng of any more mistakyng of orders in this colloquy or conference, and for that they should vtter all that which they had to say, it was both ordered & thus openly agreed vpō of both partes in the full audience, that vpon the monday folowing, the bishops should bring their minds & reasons in writyng to the second assertion, and the last also if they could, and first read the same: and that done, the other part should bring likewise theirs to the same. And beyng red, ech of them should deliuer to other the same writings. And in the meane tyme, the Bishops should put in writyng, not onely all that which D. Cole had that day vttered, but al such other matters as they any otherwise could thinke of for the same, and as soone as they might possible, Page 2123 to send the same booke touching that firste assertion to the other part, and they should receiue of them that writyng which Mayster Horne had there read that day, and vpon Monday it should be agreed what day they should exhibite theyr aunsweres touching the first propositiō. Thus both partes assented thereto, and the assembly was quietly dismissed.

The order of the second dayes talke. ¶The Lord keeper of the great Seale, the Archbyshop of Yorke, the Duke of Northfolke, and all the Counsell being set, the Byshops on the one side, and the Protestantes, that is, the late banished Preachers on the other side, thus beganne the Lord Keeper.

MY Lords and maisters, I am sure ye remember well, what order of talke and writing was appoynted to be had this day in this assembly,* at our last meeting, whiche I will not refuse now to repeat agayne for the shortnes of it, which was that ye appoynted here on both sides should bring in english writing, what ye had to say in the second question, and in this place appoynted to reade the same. Therefore begin my Lordes.

Winchester.

I am determined for my part that there shall be now red, that which we haue to say for the first questiō.

L. Keper.

Will ye not then proceede in the order appoynted you?

Winch.

I am, as I sayd prouided for the first question or proposition: and we should suffer preiudice if ye permit vs not to intreat of that first, and so we would come to the second questiō, and this is the order we would vse. I iudge all my brethren are so minded.

Bishops.

We are so determined.

L. Keper.

I know not what you would do for your determined order: but ye ought to looke, what order is appointed you to keepe, which ye by this meanes doe breake and litle regard.

Winch.

Sith our aduersaries part, if it please your Grace and honours, haue so confirmed theyr affection and purpose, we suffer a preiudice or damage, if ye permit vs not the like. Hereat Doctour Watson bishop of Lincolne being at this talke very desirous to haue spoken, sayd now to the Bishop of Winchester. I pray you let me speake, which was permitted him, we are not vsed indifferently, sithen that you allowe vs not to open in present writyng what we haue to say for the declaration of the first question, in so much, as that whiche ye take for the infirmation of the same, was meant nothing to that purpose, for that which Mayster Cole spake in this last assembly, was not prepared to strengthen our case, but he made his Oration of himselfe, and ex tempore, that is, with no forestudied talke.

At such the Bishops wordes, the Nobility and other of the audience muche frowned and grudged at, sith that they well knew that Maister Cole spake out of a writing which he held in his hand, and often read out of the same, & in that the same places which the Bishop informed him and appoynted him vnto with theyr fingers, all whyche thinges doe well declare the matter to bee premeditate, and not done ex tempore, for that Mayster Cole was appoynted by them to be theyr speaker. Whereupon this, the bishop of Lincolne was the worse takē, notwithstanding he went onward complayning & sayd: we are also euil ordered as touching the time, our aduersaries part hauing warning long before, & we were warned only two dayes before the last assembly in this place. What with this busines & other trouble, we haue bene driuen to haue bene occupied the whole last night. For we may in no wise betray the case of God, nor will not doe, but susteine it to the vttermost of our powers, as we ought so to endeouour by all maner of meanes. But hereunto we want presētly indifferent vsing.

L. Keper.

Take ye heede that yee deceiue not your selues when it shall come to iust triall of the matter, and that thē it be not proued agaynst you, that ye complayne without cause when the order and your maner towardes it shalbe duely wayed. I am willing and ready to heare you after the order taken and appoynted for you to reason therein, and farther or contrary to that I cannot deal with you.

Lich. Cou.

Let vs suffer no misorder or iniury herein, but be hea•d with indifference, that is to say: conuenient and meet we should haue here.

L. Keper.

I praye you Syrs heare me, and marke it you well. It was concluded on by my Lordes of the counsell, who you wel know of, that theyr writing, whiche ye are now so willing to haue heard, should haue bene read the first day, and then did we vnderstande that Mayster Cole had sayd what you would haue him, and as much as you willed him to say, and vpon that indifferency emonges, I iudge ye were asked in the ende of Mayster Coles rehearsall, whether that whiche he spake, was it ye woulde haue him say, and ye graunted it. Then whether ye would that he shuld say any more in y^e matter. Ye answered no, wherupon the other part was hard, which you hearing then in deede without all good indifferencie or playne dealing, ye pretended that ye had more to saye. So marke you wyth how small equitie you vsed your selfe.

The B.

We had in deede more to say, if we might haue bene indifferently heard.

L. Keeper.

Geue me leaue I saye, and looke what gaynes you should haue if your present request should be granted you: that call so muche of indifferent vsing, howe you shoulde vse those other men. For many who are here presently, were then away, so would you haue your writyng now red to them, whiche heard not this. Marke ye whether it had not bene more fit that ye had prouided it against the first day, when they orderly read theyrs, sith to my knowledge, and as farre as I haue hadde to doe in the matter, you were of both sides (I am sure) warned at one tyme. Howbeit to satisfy your importunacie and earnestnes of this crying out to haue your first writing heard, I might well allow, if it so pleased the rest of the Queenes most honorable Counsell, that you dispatching the worke on the second question, appoynted for this daye, and geue vs vp your writing for the first, so that when the daye commeth that each of you shall aunswer the other in confirmation of the first question, that then the same daye ye shall haue time to read this your first writing, whiche ye now would so fayne read. To this order all the Counsel willingly condescended.

Lich Co.

Nay my Lordes, they reading one, and we two bookes in one day, wee shoulde not haue time enough to read them both. It would occupy to much time.

L. Keeper.

For my part I might well stay at the hearing of them both, and I iudge the rest of the Counsell, and lykewise the whole audience. At whiche saying there was a shoute crying on all sides: yea, yea, wee woulde heare it gladly.

Lincolne.

We cannot read them both at one time: for theyr writing (I am sure) would require an houre and a halfe, if so be it be so long as theyr laste was, and then our aunswere woulde require no lesse time after the fyrste question.

L. Keeper.

I haue shewed you we could be well contented to tary out the time when it commeth thereunto. Therefore ye neede not to be therein so curious, and wee graunting you thus muche, and yet ye will obey no orders, I cannot tell what I shall say vnto you.

Lincoln.

We haue bene wonderfully troubled in the order of this disputation. For first it was appoynted vs by my Lord the Archbishop that we shoulde dispute, and that in Latine, and then had wee an other commaundement that we should prouide a Latine writing, and nowe at last we willed to bring forth our writinges in english.

At these wordes the Lord keeper of the great seale, the Archbishop, with all the Counsell muche mused, and many murmured at such his wrong report of the order well taken. Whereupon with an admiration the Lorde keeper aunswered: I maruaile much of the vsing of your selfe in this poynt, sith I am assured the order was neuer otherwise taken then that you shoulde bring forth in Englishe writing what you had to say for your purpose.

Hereupon the Byshops of Lichfield and Chichester, to excuse my Lord of Lincolne, sayd: we so vnderstood the order, my Lordes.

L. Keeper

Howe likely is that, sith that it was so playnely told you? But to end these delayes, I pray you follow the order appoynted, and beginne to entreate of the seconde question.

Lich. Co.

We were appoynted this day by youre honours to bring in what we had to say in the first question.

At the which saying the audience much grudged, who heard the former talke, contrary to such his reporte.

L. Keeper.

The order was taken, for that your writinges were not ready the last time that ye shoulde yeld the same to these men, meaning the Protestantes, as soone as ye might, and vpon the receipt of your writinges, you shuld haue theyrs, and this day ye should entreate of the second question, and of the thyrd, if that ye had leysure enoughe. This was the order my Lordes, except my memory much fayle me. The same all the Counsell affirmed.

Lincoln.

We were willed then to bring in this daye oure writing for the first question also.

Lorde Keeper.

Ah syrs, if ye bee so harde to bee satisfied, and to encline to the trueth, let my Lordes Page 2124 here say what was then determined.

B. Yorke.

Ye are to blame to stand in this issue, for there was a playne decreed order taken for you to intreat of the second Question. Wherefore leaue you your contention herein, and shew what ye haue to say in the second Question.

L. Keper.

Go to now, begin my Lordes.

Linc. Couen.

It is cōtrary to the order in disputatiōs that we should begin.

Chester.

We haue the negatiue: the affirmatiue therefore they must begin.

Lich. Couen.

They must first speake, what they can bring in agaynst vs, sith that we are the defending part.

Chester.

So is the schole maner, and likewise the maner in Westminster hall is, that y^e plaintifes part should speak first, and then the accused party to answere.

Lich. Couen.

I pray you let the proposition be read, & then let vs see who hath the negatiue part, and so let the other begin.

L. Keper.

The order was taken that ye should begin.

Lich. Couen.

But then we should do agaynst the Schoole order.

L. Keper.

My maisters, ye inforce much the schole orders. I wonder muche at it, sith diuers of those orders are ofte times taken for the exercise of youth, and ought to mainteine a fashion and many prescriptions, whiche we neede not here to recite, much lesse obserue. We are come hither to keepe the order of God, and to set forth his truth & herevnto we haue taken as good order as we might, which lieth not in me to chaunge.

Carlile.

We are of the catholicke church, and abide therein, and stand in the possessions of the truth, and therefore must they say what they haue to answere against vs, and so we to mainteine and defend our cause.

Lich. Couen.

Yea, euen so must the matter be ordered.

Chester.

When they bring any thing agaynst vs, it is sufficient for vs to deny it. Therfore must they begin.

Lich.

And when they affirme any thing, and we say naye, the prooffe belongeth to them, and so it behoueth them to shew first what they affirme, and for what cause and purpose.

L. Keper.

Here resteth our purpose, & whole matter, whether you will begin, if they do not, sith it was determined ye should begin.

Lich. Couen.

We heard of no such order.

L. Keper.

No did? Yes, and in the first question ye began willingly. How cometh it to passe that ye will not now do so?

Chester.

Then had we the affirmation, which sith that our aduersaries haue now, they should presently begin.

This the Protestantes denyed, saying that they in the first day had the negatiue, wherein they did not yet refuse to begin.

L. Keper.

If you haue any thing to say, my Lordes, to the purpose, say on.

Lich.

A particular sorte of men can neuer breake an Uniuersall Church, which wee nowe mainteine: and as for these men, our Aduersary part, I neuer thought that they would haue done so much as haue named themselues to be of the catholicke Church, challenging the name as wel as we.

Protestantes.

We doe so, and we are of the true Catholicke church, and maynteyne the verity therof.

Lincolne.

Yet woulde ye ouerthrowe all Catholicke order.

Horne.

I wonder that ye so much stand in who shoulde begin.

Lincolne.

You count it requisite that we shoulde followe your orders, as we haue takē the question at your hands, in that sort as you haue assigned them.

Lich. Couen.

Yea, euen so are we driuen to do now.

L. Keper.

Nay, I iudge if ye marke the matter well, the questions are neither of their propounding them to you, nor of your devise to them, but offred indifferently to you both.

Horne.

In deed my Lordes of the Queenes most honourable Counsell, these questions or propositions were proposed vnto vs by your honors, and they then hauing the preheminence, chose to themselues the negatiue, & yet frely began first: now agayne why do they not the like.

Liechfield being angred that he shoulde so straightlye speake agaynst them, went quite from the matter, saying: My Lord keeper of the great seale, and you the rest of the Queenes most honorable Counsel, I hope that you all, & the Queenes Maiesty her selfe, are inclined to fauour the verity in all thinges, & the truth of the catholicke church, which we must, will, or can do no otherwise, but earnestly maynteyne to the vttermost of our power, and to thys purpose let vs now well way who are of the true Catholicke church, they or we.

L, Keeper.

Tary, now you goe from the matter, and make questions of your owne.

Lichfield.

Yet not straying from his digression, sayd thus: we must needes goe to worke, and trye that first, of what Church they be of. For there are many Churches in Germany. Mayster Horne, maister Horne, I pray you which of these Churches are you of?

Horne.

I am of Christes catholicke Church.

L. Keeper.

Ye ought not thus to runne into voluntary talk of your owne inuenting, nor to devise newe questions of your owne appoyntment, and thereby enter into y^t talke: ye ought not so to doe. But say on, if you haue anye thing to say in this matter.

Lich.

Nay, we must first thus go to worke with them as I haue sayd, if that we will search a truth: howbeit of the truth we haue no doubt, for that we assuredly stande in it. These men come in, and they pretend to bee doubtfull. Therefore they shoulde first bring what they haue to impugne or withstand vs withall.

Winch.

Let them begin: so will we goe onward with our matter.

Chester.

Otherwise, my Lordes, if they should not begin, but end the talke, then shoulde the verity on our sides bee not so well marked, for they should depart speaking last, cum applausu populi, with the reioising triumph of the people.

Winch.

Therefore I am resolued that they shall begin or that we say any thing.

Chester.

I am sory my Lordes, that wee shoulde so longe stand in the matter, with your honours and make so many wordes, and so much adoe with you, whom we ought to obey: howbeit there is no indifferency if they begin not: and surely we thinke it meete, that they shoulde for theyr partes geue vs place.

Lich.

Yea, that they shoulde and ought to doe where anye indifferencie is vsed.

Aelmer.

We giue you the place (do we not?) and depriue you not of the preeminence, because you are Byshoppes: therefore I pray you begin.

The Byshop.

A goodly geuing of place I assure you: yea marie ye gaue place, suche wordes they vsed, wyth more scoffes.

L. Keeper.

If ye make this assembly gathered in vayne, and will not go to the matter, let vs rise and depart.

Winch.

Contented, let vs be gone: for we will not in this poynt geue ouer.

I pray you my Lords, require not at our hands that we should be anye cause of hinderaunce or lett to our religion, or geue any such euil example to our posteritie, whiche we shoulde doe if we gaue ouer to them, whiche in no wise we may, or will do.

L. Keeper.

Let vs then breake vp, if you bee thus minded. With these wordes the Bishoppes were strayght wayes rising. But then sayd the Lord keeper: let vs see whether euery one of you be thus minded. How say you my Lorde of Winchester, will you not begin to read your writing?

Winch.

No surely. I am full determined, and fully at a poynt therein, how soeuer my brethren do.

Then the Lord Keeper asked how the Bishoppe was called who sate next to Winchester in order. It was the Bishoppe of Exceter, who being enquired his mind herein, answered that he was none of thē. Thē the Lord Keeper asked the other in order, and first Lincolne, who sayde he was of the same minde that Winchester was of: & likewise answered Lichfield Couen. Cole and Chedsy. Then Chester being asked his sentence, sayd: My Lordes, I say not that I will not read it, if yee commaund vs: but wee ought not to do it: yet I desire your honors not so to take it, as though I would not haue read it. I meane not so.

L. Keeper.

How say you to it: my Lord of Carlile?

Carlile.

If they should not read theyrs this daye, so that our writing may be last read, so am I contented that ours shall be first read.

L. Keeper.

So would ye make orders your selues, and appoynt that we should spend one day in hearing you.

Abbot.

Then y^e Abbot of Westminst. was asked his mind who sayd: and if it please your honours, I iudge that my Lordes here stay most on this poynt, that they feare when they shall begin first, and the other aunswere thereupon, there shall be no time geuen to them to speake, whiche my Lord misliketh.

L. Keeper.

Howe can it otherwise be in a talke appoynted in such assembly and audience: thinke you that there can be continuall aunswering one another? when shoulde•• after that sort haue an end?

Lich. Couen.

It must bee so in a disputation to seeke out Page 2125 the trueth.

L. Keper.

But how say you, my Lord Abbot, are you of the mynde it shalbe read?

Abbot.

Yea forsooth, my lord, I am very wel pleased with all. Harpesfield being inquired his mind, thought as the other did.

L. Keper.

My Lordes, sith that ye are not willing but refuse to read your writing after the order taken, wee wyll breake vp and departe: and for that ye wyll not that wee should heare you, you may perhaps shortly heare of vs.

THus haue we declared the order and maner of this cōmunication or conference, at Westminster, betweene these two parties, wherin if any law or order were brokē, iudge (good reader) wher the fault was, and consider with al what these Papistes be, from whō if ye take away their sword and authority from them, you see all their cunning how soone it lyeth in the dust, or els why would they not abide the triall of writing? why would they or durst they not stande to the order agreed vpon? Whether shoulde we say ignoraunce or stubbernes to be in them more, or both together? Who first being gently (as is sayd) and fauorably required to keep the order appointed, they would not. Then being secondly (as appeared by the Lord Keepers words) pressed more earnestly, they neither regarding the authority. &c. of that place, nor their owne reputation, nor the credite of the cause, vtterly refused that to doe. And finally being agayne particularly euery of them aparte distinctly by name required to vnderstande theyr opinions therin, they al, sauing one (which was the Abbot of Westminster, hauing some more consideratiō of order and hys duety of obedience then the other) vtterly and playnly denyed to haue theyr booke read, some of them as more earnestly then other, some so also, some other more vndiscretly, and vnreuerently then others. Wherupon geuing such example of disorder, stubbernes, and selfe will, as hath not bene seene and suffered in such an honorable assembly, being of the two estates of this Realme, the nobility and the commons, beside the presence of the Queenes Maiestyes most honorable priuy counsell, the same assembly was dis. missed, and the Godly and most Christian purpose of the Queenes Maiesty made frustrate. And afterward for the contempt so notoriously made, the Byshop of Winchester & Lincolne,* hauing most obstinately both disobeyed commō authority, and varied manifestly from theyr owne order, and specially Lincoln, who shewed more folly then the other: were condignely committed to the Tower of London, and the rest (sauing the Abbot of Westminster) stode bound to make dayly theyr personall appearaunce before the counsell, and not to depart the Cittye of London and Westminster, vntill further order were taken with thē for their disobedience and contempt.

Besides the former protestation or libell written and exhibited by the Protestantes, concerning the first question, there was also an other like writing of the fayde Protestantes made of the second question, but not published, which if it come to our hand, we wil likewise impart vnto thee.

As these Byshops aboue named were committed to the Tower, so Boner Bishop of London, about the same time,* was commaunded to the Marshalsea, whereas hee both in his blinde bloody heresy, and also in his deserued captiuity long remayned, abiding the Queenes pleasure, gods pleasure, I beseech him, so be wrought on that person, that the Church of Christes flocke, if they can take or looke for no goodnesse of that man to come, yet they maye take of him and of other no more harme hereafter, thē they haue done alredy. We al beseech thee this O Lord eternal per Christum Dominum nostrum. Amen.

Aboute this time, at the beginning of the flourishing reigne of Queene Elizabeth, was a Parliament summoned, and holden at Westminster, wherein was much debating about matters touching religion, and great study on both parties employed, the one to reteine still, the other to impugne the doctrine and faction which before in queene Maries time had bene established. But especially here is to be noted that though ther lacked no industry on the papistes side, to holde fast that, which they most cruelly from time to time had studied, & by al meanes practised to come by: Yet notwithstanding, such was the prouidence of God at that time, that for lacke of the other bishops, whome the Lorde had taken away by death a little before, the residue that there were left, could doe the lesse: and in very deede, God be praysed therefore, did nothing at all in effect. Although yet notwithstanding there lacked in them neyther will nor labour to do what they could, if their cruell abilitie there might haue serued. But namely amongst all other,* not onely the industrious courage of Doctor Story but also his wordes in this Parliament are worthy to be knowne of posteritie, who like a stout and furious champion of the popes side, to declare himselfe howe lustie hee was, & what he had and would do in his maisters quarrell, shamed not openly in the saide Parliament house to brast out into such impudent sort of words, as was wonder to all good eares to heare, and no lesse worthy of history.

The summe of which his shameles talke was vttered to this effect: First beginning with himselfe, hee declared,* that where as he was noted commonly abroad, and much complayned of, to haue bene a great doer, and a •e•ter forth of such religion, orders, and proceedinges, as of hys late soueraigne that dead is, Queene Mary, were set forth in this Realme, hee denied nothing the same, protestyng moreouer that he therein had done nothing, but that both his conscience did lead him thereunto, and also his commission did as wel then commaund him, as now also doth discharge hym for the same, being no lesse ready now also to doe the like, and more, in case hee by this Queene were authorised likewise, and commaunded thereunto. Wherefore as I see (sayth he) nothing to be ashamed of, so lesse I see to be sory for, but rather sayd that he was sory for thys, because he had done no more thē he did, and that in executing those lawes, they had not bene more vehement and seuer. Wherein he sayd, there was no default in him, but in them, whom he both ofte and earnestly had exhorted to the same, being therefore not a little greeued with them, for that they laboured onely about the young and little sprigges and twigges, whyle they should haue stroken at the roote, and cleane haue rooted it out. &c. And concerning his persecuting and burning them, hee denyed not, but that he was once at the burning of an herewygge (fo• so he termed it) at Uxbridge, where he tost a faggot at his face as hee was singing Psalmes,* and set a wynbushe of thornes vnder his feete, a little to pricke him, wyth many other words of like effect. In the whiche words he named moreouer syr Phillip Hobby, & an other knight of Kent, with such other of the richer and higher degree, whom his Counsell was to plucke at: & to bring them vnder coram, wherein sayd he if they had followed my aduise, then had they done well and wisely. This or much like was the effect of the shameles and tyrannicall excuse of hym selfe, more meete to speake with the voyce of a beast, then of a man.

Although in this Parliament some diuersitie there was of iudgement & opinion betweene parties, yet notwithstanding through the mercifull goodnes of the Lord, the true cause of the Gospell had the vpper hand, the Papistes hope was frustrate, and theyr rage abated, the order and proceedinges of king Edwardes time concerning religion was reuiued agayne, the supremacie of the Pope abolished, the articles and bloudy statutes of Queene Mary repealed, briefly the furious firebrandes of cruell persecution, which had consumed so many poore mens bodyes, were now extinct and quenched.

Finally, the olde Byshops deposed, for that they refused the othe in renouncing the pope and not subscribing to the Queenes iust and lawfull title. In whose rowmes and places, first for Cardinall Poole, succeeded D. Mathew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury. In the place of Heth, succeeded D. Young. In steede of Boner, Edmund Grindall was Bishop of London. For Hopton, Thurlby Tonstall, Pates, Christoferson, Peto, Coates, Morgan, Feasy, White, Oglethorpe. &c. were placed Doctor Iohn Parkust in Norwich, D. Coxe in Ely, Iuell in Salisbury Pilkenton in Duresme, Doctor Sandes in Worcester Mayster Downam in Westchester, Bentam in Couentry and Lichfield, David in S. Dauies, Ally in Exceter, Horn in Winchester, Scory in Hereford, Best in Carlile, Bullingham in Lincoln Scamler in Peterbury, Bart let in Bath, Gest in Rochester, Barlo in Chi. &c.

¶And here to make an end of this Story. Now it remayneth to proceed further to the Appendix in supplying such thinges as haue either bene omitted, or newly inserted, as foloweth.

☛ The Appendix of such Notes and Matters, as either haue bene in this History omitted or newly inserted.

IN this Story of Sir Roger Acton aboue mentioned pag. 587.* I finde that with him were taken many other persōs, that all the prisons in & about London were replenished with people. The chiefe of thē, which were 29. were condemned of heresy, & atteynted of high treason, as mouers of war agaynst theyr king, by the temporall law in the Guild hall the 12. day of December, and adiudged to be drawne and hanged for treasō, and for heresy to be consumed with fire, Gallowes and all, which iudgement was executed in Ianuary following on the sayde Syr Roger Acton and 28. other.

Some say that the occasion of theyr death was the cōueyance of the Lord Cobham out of Prison. Other write that it was both for treason (as the aduersaries termed it) and heresy.

Certayne affirme that it was for feyned causes surmised by the spiritualty, more of displeasure thē truth, as seemeth more neare to the truth.

Concerning Iohn Frith, of his life and story this foloweth more to be added, and to be referred to the page. 103•.

Firſt this Iohn Frith was borne in the Towne of Weſtme in Kent,* who after by diligent eſpecialles was takē in Eſſex flying beyond the ſeas & brought before the Counſaile, Syr Thomas More thē being Chauncellor, and ſo from them committed vnto the Tower, where he remayned priſoner the ſpace of a quarter of a yeare or there about. It chaunced that Doctour Curreyne ordinary Chapleyne vnto King Henry the eighte, preached a Sermon in Lent before his Maieſty. And there verie ſore enueying agaynſte the Sacramentaryes (as they thē termed and named) which fauored not the groſſe opinion that Chriſtes body was carnally reall in the Sacrament, he ſo farre diſcourſed in that matter that at the length he brake out thus far and ſayd. It is no maruayle though this abhominable heresy doe muche preuayle among vs, for there is one nowe in the Tower of London ſo bolde as to write in the defence of that heresy, and yet no man goeth about his reformation, meaning Iohn Fryth, who then had aunſwared Syr Thomas More in writing agaynſte a confutation of that erroneous opinion which of late before the ſayd Maister More had writen agaynſt Iohn Frythes aſſertion in that behalfe. This Sermon of purpoſe was deuised and appoynted by the Byſhop of Wincheſter and other to ſeek the deſtruction of Fryth by putting the king in remembraunce that the ſayd Fryth was in the Tower there ſtayd rather for hys ſauęgarde then for his puniſhment by ſuche as fauored hym as the Lorde Cromwell who being Uicegerent in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall came then into ſuſpition therefore. For in ſuche ſorte was the matter handeled before the Kyng that all men mighte well vnderſtande what they meant. The Kyng then being in no poynte reſolued of the true and ſincere vnderſtanding of the doctrine of that Article, but rather a peruerſe ſtout Aduerſary to the contrary, called to hym my Lorde of Caunterburye and my Lord Cromwell, and willed them forthwith to call Fryth vnto examination, ſo that he might eyther be compelled to recant or elles by the Lawe to ſuffer condigne puniſhment.

Frythes long protract in the Tower withouten examination was ſo heynouſly taken of the King, that nowe my Lorde of Caunterburye with other Byſhoppes, as Stokesly thē biſhop of London & other learned mē were vndelayedly appoynted to examine Fryth. And for that there ſhuld be no concourſe of Citizens at the ſayd examination: my L. of Canterbury remoued to Croydon vnto whome reſorted the reſt of the Commiſſioners. Nowe before the day of execution appointed, my Lord of Cant. ſent one of his gentlemen and one of his porters: whoſe name was Perlebene a Welchman borne, to fetch Iohn Frith from the Tower vnto Croydon. This gentleman hadde both my Lords letters and the kings ring vnto my Lord Fitzwilliams Conſtable of the Tower then lying in Canon row at Weſtmiſter in extreme anguiſh and payne of the ſtrangulion for the deliuey of the priſoner: Maister Fytzwilliams more paſſionate then patient, vnderſtanding for what purpoſe my Lordes gentleman was come, banned and cursed Frith and all other heretickes, ſaying take this my King vnto the Lieuテナunt of the Tower and receiue your man your hereticke with you, and I am glad that I am ridde of him. When Frith was deliuered vnto my Lord of Caunterburyes Gentleman, they twaine with Parlebeane ſitting in a Wherry and rowing towardes Lambeth. The ſayd Gentleman much lamenting in his mind, the infelicite of the ſayd Frith, began in this wiſe to exhort him to conſider in what eſtate hee was, a man altogether caſt away in this worlde, if hee did not looke wiſely to himſelfe. And yet though his cauſe were neuer ſo daungerous, he might ſomewhat in relenting to auctoritie, and ſo to geue place for a time: helpe both hym ſelfe out of trouble, and when oportunitie and occaſion ſhould ſerue, preferre his cauſe which he then went about to defend, declaring farther that he had many welwillers and friendes, whiche would stande on his side so farre forth as possible then were able and durst do: adding hereunto that it were great pittie that he being of such singuler knowledge both in the Latine, Greeke, both ready and rype in all kind of learning, and that namely aswell in the Scriptures as in the auncient Doctours, should now sodeinly suffer all those singuler giftes to perishe with him without little commoditie or profite to the world, and lesse comfort to his wife and children, and other his kinsfolkes friendes. And as for the veritie of your opinion in the sacrament of the body and bloud of our sauour Christ: It is so vntimely opened here among vs in England, that you shall rather do harme then good, wherefore be wyse and be ruled by good counsell vntill a better oportunitie may serue.

This I am sure of (quoth the gentleman) that my Lord Cromwell and my Lorde of Caunterbury much fauouring you and knowyng you to bee an eloquent learned young man, and nowe towards the felicitie of your lyfe, young in yeares, olde in knowledge, and of great forwardnes and likelihoode, to be a most profitable member for this Realme, will neuer permitte you to susteyne any open shame, if you will somewhat bee aduised by theyr Counsayle: on the other side, if you stand stiffe to your opinion, it is not possible to saue your lyfe. For like as you haue good friendes, so haue you mortall foes and enemies.

I most hartily thanke you, quoth Mayster Frith vnto the generall, both for your good will and for your counsayle: by the which I well perceauie that you minde well vnto me, howbeit my cause and conscience is suche, that in no wise I may not nor cannot for no worldly respect without daunger of damnation starte aside and flye from the true knowledge and doctrine whiche I haue conceyued of the supper of the Lorde or the Communion, otherwise called y^e sacrament of the aultar: for if it be my chance to be demaunded what I thinke in that behalfe, I must needes saue my knowledge and my conscience, as partly I haue written therein already, though I should presently lose xx. lyues if I had so many. And this you shall well vnderstand that I am not so furnished, eyther of Scriptures or auncient Doctors, Scholemen, or other for my defence, so that if I may be indifferently heard, I am sure that mine aduersaries cannot iustly cōdemne me or mine assertion, but that they shall condemne with me both S. Augustine and the most parte of the olde writers, yea the very Byshoppes of Rome of the oldest sorte shall also say for me & defend my cause. Yea mary quoth the gentleman Page 2127 you say well: if you might be indifferently heard. But I muche doubt thereof, for that our Mayster Christ was not indifferently hearde, nor shoulde bee as I thinke if he were nowe present agayne in the worlde specially in this your opinion, the same beeing so odious vnto the worlde, and wee so farre off from the true knowledge thereof.

Well, well (quoth Fryth, then vnto the Gentleman) I know very wel, that this doctrine of the Sacrament of the Aultar which I holde and haue opened contrarie to the opinion of this Realme, is very hard meate to be digested both of the Cleargye and Layety thereof. But this I will say to you, taking the gentleman by the hand, that if you liue but twenty yeares more, whatsoeuer become of me, you shall see this whole Realme of mine opinion concerning this Sacrament of the Aultar, namely, the whole estate of the same though some sort of men perticularly shall not be fully perswaded therein. And if it come not so to passe then account me the vaynest man that euer you heard speake with tongue: Besides this, you saye that my death would bee sorrowfull and vncomfortable vnto my frendes.

I graunt (quoth he) that for a small tyme it would so be. But if I should so mollify, qualifye, and temper my cause in such sort as to deserue onely to be kept in prison, that would not onely be a much long griefe vnto me, but also to my friendes woulde breede no small disquietnesse both of body and of minde. And therefore all thinges well and rightly pondered, my deathe in this cause shall bee better vnto me and all mine then life in continuall bondage and penuries. And almightye GOD knoweth what he hath to doe with his poore seruaunt, whose cause I now defend and not mine owne: from the which I assuredly doe entend (GOD willing) neuer to start or otherwise to geue place, so long as God will geue me life.

This communication or like in effecte, my Lorde of Caunterburyes Gentleman and Fryth had comming in a Whery vpon the Thames frō the Tower to Lambeth.

Now, when they were landed, after some repast by them taken at Lambeth, the Gentleman, the Porter, and Fryth, went forward towards Croydon on foote. This Gentleman still lamenting with himselfe the harde and cruell destiny towards the sayde Fryth, namely, if hee once came amongst the bishops: & nowe also perceiuing the exciding constancye of Fryth, deuised with himselfe some waye or meanes to conuey him cleane out of theyr handes, and thereupon considering that there was no mo persons there to conuey the Prisoner, but the Porter and himselfe, he tooke in hand to winne the Porter to his purpose. Quoth the Gentleman vnto Perlebeane the Porter (they twayne priuately walking by themseues wythout the hearing of Fryth) you haue heard this man I am sure, and noted hys talke since he came from the Tower. Yea that I haue righte well marked him (quoth the Porter) and I neuer hard so constant a man nor so eloquent a person. You haue heard nothing quoth the gentleman in respecte of his both knowledge and eloquence, if he might liberally either in Uniuersity or pulpit declare his learning you woulde then much more maruell at his knowledge. I take him to be suche a one of his age in all kind of learning and knowledge of tonges, as this Realme neuer yet in mine opinion brought forth, & yet those singuler giftes in him are no more considered of our Byshops then if he were a very Dolte or an Idiot, yea they abhorre him as a deuill therfore, & couet vtterly to extinguish him as a member of the Deuill, without any consideration of gods speciall gifts. Mary quoth the Porter if there were nothing els in him but the consideratiō of his personage both comly and amiable, & of naturall disposition, gentle, meek and humble: it were pity that he should be cast away. Cast away (quoth the Gentleman) He shall be sure cast away if we once bring him to Croydō, & surely (quoth the Gentleman) before God I speake it, if thou Perlebeane were of my mind we would neuer bring him thither. Say you so quoth the Porter, I knowe that you be of a great deale more credit then I am, in this matter, and therefore if you can devise honestly or finde some reasonable excuse, wherby we may let him goe & prouide for himselfe, I will with all my hart condescend to your deuise. As for that quoth the gentleman it is already inuēted how & which waies he shall conuey himselfe without any great daunger or displeasure taken towards vs, as the matter shalbe handled. You see quoth the gentlemā yonder hill before vs, named bristow cawsy, 2. miles frō Lōdon, there are great woodes on both sides, when we come there we will permit Frith to go into y^e woodes on the left hand of y^e way wherby he may cōuey himselfe into kent amōg his frends for he is a kentish man borne, & whē he is gone we will linger an houre or twayn about y^e high way vntill that it somewhat draw towards the night: Then in great hast we will approach vnto Streatham which is a myle and a halfe of, and an outcry in the Towne that our prisoner is broken from vs into the woodes on the right hand towards Waynisworth, so that we will drawe as manye as wee may of the Towne to search the country that way for our prisoner, declaring that wee followed aboue a myle and more, and at length loste him in the woodes because wee hadde no more companye, and so wee wyll rather then fayle lye out one night in searching for him and sende worde from Stretham to my Lorde of Canterbury at Croyden in the euening of the prisoners escape and to what Coast hee is fledde. So that by the morning if hee haue any good lucke at all, hee will so prouide for himselfe, that the Byshoppes shall fayle of their purpose. I assure you quoth Perlebeane I like very well the deuise herein, and therefore goe ye to Frith, and declare what wee haue deuised for hys deliuary: for nowe we are almost at the place.

When my Lorde of Caunterburyes gentleman came nyghe to the hill, he ioyned himselfe in companye wyth the sayd Frith, and calling him by hys name, sayd: Now Mayster Frithe, let vs twayne commune together an other whiles: you must consider that the iourney whiche I haue nowe taken in hande thus in bringing you to Croyden, as a sheepe to the slaughter, so it greueth me, and as it were ouerwhelmeth me in cares and sorrowes, that I little passe what daunger I fall in, so that I could finde the meanes to deliuer you oute of the Lyons mouthe. And yet yonder good fellowe and I haue so deuised a meanes, whereby you maye bothe easily escape from this great and Imminent daunger at hande and wee also bee rydde from any vehement suspicion. And thereupon declared vnto Fryth the full processe discoursed before, how euery thing in order should be handled.

When Frith had dilligently heard all the matter concerning hys deliuary, he sayd to the gentleman: Oh good Lorde wyth a smiling countenance, is this the effecte of youre secret consultation, thus longe betweene you twayne? Surely surely you haue loste a great deale more labour in tymes past, and so are you lyke to doe this, for if you should both leaue me here and goe to Croyden declaring to the Byshoppes that you had lost Fryth, I would surely follow as fast after as I might, and bring them newes that I hadde founde and brought Fryth agayne. Do you thinke, quoth he, that I am afrayde to declare my opinion vnto the Byshoppes of Englande in a manifest trueth.

You are a fonde manne quoth the Gentleman, thus to talke: As thoughe youre reasoning with them might do some good. But I doe much maruell, that you were so willing to flye the Realme before you were taken, and nowe so vnwilling to saue youre selfe. Mary there was and is a great diuersitie of escaping betweene thone and thother, quoth Frith.

Before I was in deede desirous to escape because I was not attached but at libertie, which liberty I woulde fayne haue enioyed for the maynteynance of my study beyond the See where I was a reader in the Greeke tong according to S. Paules Counsaile. Howbeit now being taken by the higher power, and as it were by almighty gods permission and prouidence deliuered into the hands of the Bishops only for religion & doctrines sake, namely such, as in conscience and vnder paine of damnation I am bound to maynteyne and defend, if I should now start aside and runne away: I should runne from my God and from the testimony of his holy worde, worthy then of an 1000. hels. And therefore I most hartily thanke you both, for your good willes towards me beseching you, to bring me where I was appointed to bee brought for els I will go thether all alone. And so with a chearfull & mery countenance he went with them, spending the time with pleasant & godly communication vntil they came to Croyden, where for that night he was wel entertained in y^e Porters lodge. On the morow he was called before certayn Bish. and other learned men sitting in commission w^t my Lorde of Cant, to be examined, where he shewed himself passing ready & ripe in answering to all obiections as some then reported incredible and contrary to al mens expectatiōs, And his allegations both of S. Augustine & other ancient fathers of the Church was such, that some of them much doubted of S. Augustines authoritie in that behalf. Insomuch that it was reported of suche as were nigh and about the Archbishop of Caunterbury (who then was not fully resolved of the sincere truth of that article) that when they had finished their examination with Frith, the Archbyshoppe conferring wyth Doctour Heathe priuately Page 2128 betwene themselues sayd. This man hath wonderfullie trauayled in this matter, and yet in mine opinion hee taketh the Doctours amisse. Well my Lord should D. Heth say, there was no man that coulde auoyd his authorities of S. Augustine. Wherein sayd my Lord. Then Doctour Heth began to repeate the sayd authorities of Saynt Augustine againe, inferring and applying them so strayghtly agaynst my Lord of Caunterbury, that my Lord was driuen to this shotte anker, and sayd. I see by it quoth he to Heth, that you with a little more studye will bee easely brought to Frythes opinion: or such like wordes in effect, And some Chapleines there were of my Lorde of Caunterburys which openly reported that Doctor Heth was as able to defend Frythes assertion in the Sacrament as Fryth was himselfe.

This learned young man being thus thoroughly sifted at Croydon to vnderstand what he could say or do in his cause, there was no man willing to preferre hym to aunswere in open disputation as poore Lambart was. But nowe without regarde of learning, or good knowledge hee was sent and deteyned vnto the Botchers stall: I meane Byshop Stokeleyes Consistory, there to heare not the opinion of Saynt Augustine and other auncient Fathers of Christes primatiue Church of the sayde Sacramēt, but either to be instruct and to heare the maymed and halfe cutaway Sacrament of Antichrist the Bishop of Rome with the grosse and fleshly imagination thereof or els to perish in the fire as he most constantly did, after hee had before the Byshop of London, Winchester and Chichester in the Consistory in Paules Church most plainly and sincerely confessed his doctrine and fayth in thys weighty matter. &c. pag. 1032.

¶A note of William Plane.

IN the latter dayes of king Henry the eight, aboute that time Anne Askew was in trouble, one Doctour Crome was trauayled withall to recant, for that he had preached somewhat agaynst thinges mayntained of the papistes in the Church. And one M. Tracy hearing therof, brought a letter secretly to one Plane dwelling in Bouge row, and desired him to cary it to Doctor Crome, which letter tended to the end to perswade him not to recant, but to stand to the trueth. When this good man, William Plane had it (as he was euer willing to further the truth) so he gladly deliuered the same to Doctor Crome. Which when he had receiued and read it, he layd it downe vpon the table, and after the sayd William Plane was gone, an Arche Papist came thither to perswade him to recant, and in trauelling with him he found the sayd letter on the boord, which whē he had read it, he examined him from whence it came: so what thorow flattery, and threatning, he declared who was the messenger that brought it. Then was William Plan• sent for, cast in the Tower, where he lay miserably xiiij. weekes, none admitted to come to him, in which time he was extremely racked, within halfe a finger breadth as farre as Anne Askew: but they could neuer get of hym of whome he had the letter, nor neuer for all theyr extremity would accuse any man, so in the end he was deliuered out of the Tower and liued aboute three yeares after, and so godly ended his life. But vnto this day would that Tracy neuer enquire in what condition his wife and children were left, although he was his Messenger in caryng the letter, but good Lord, the straunge disease that grew vpon him by that extreme racking as it is odious to rehearse, so I will wish thē to repentance that were the instruments of his tormentes if they be alieue, & warne other papists to the same, in whom any cruelty hath bene in the like cause.

A note of Lady Iane.

The Lady Iane, she whom the Lorde Gilford maryed, being on a time when she was very yong at Newhall in Essex at y^e Lady Maries,* was by one lady Anne Wharton desired to walke, and they passing by the chappell, the Lady Wharton made lowe curtesie to the popish Sacrament hangyng on the aulter, which when the Lady Iane saw, meruailed why she did so, and asked her whether the Lady Mary were there or not. Unto whome the Lady Wharton answered no, but she said that she made her curtesie to hym that made vs all. Why, quoth the lady Iane, how can hee be there that made vs all, and the Baker made him? This her aunswere commyng to the Lady Maries eare, she did neuer loue her after, as is credibly reported, but esteemed her as the rest of that christian profession.

¶The copy of Queene Maries letters to the Duke of Northfolke.

Right trustie & right entirely beloued Cosin, we greete you well,* and hauing by the assistance of God and our louing subiects discomfited Wiate and the other rebels of our Countie of Kent, who hauyng passed the Riuer of Kingston, came backe agayne towards London, & were encountred aboute Charing crosse, and there were ouerthrowen, and the most part of them were there slaine, Wiate, and three of the Cobhams, Bret, Kneuet, Rudstone, Iseley, and other the chiefe Captaines taken prisoners: Wee haue thought good as well to geue you knowledge hereof, to the ende ye may with vs and the rest of our louyng subiects reioyce and geue God thanks for this our victory, as also further to signifie vnto you, that where the sayd rebell did alway pretend the matter of our mariage to be the cause of this vnlawfull stirre, now playnely appeareth by good and substantiall examinations of diuers of the sayd traitours, that whatsoever they pretended, the finall meanyng was to haue depriued vs frō our estate and dignitie royall, and consequently to haue destroyed our person, which thing as we do ascertain you of our honour to bee matter of truth, so wee praye you to cause y^e same to be published in all places of that our countries of Norfolke and Suffolke, to the intent our good and louing subiects thereof be no more abused with such false pretenses or other vntrue rumours or tales, by whom so euer the same shall be set forth. And now things beyng in this sort quieted, we cannot but geue you thanks for the readinesse that you haue bene in with the force of our said countrey, to haue serued vs if neede had bene, praying you to do the like on our behalfe to all the Gentlemen and others with you, with whom neuerthesse we require you to take such orders as the force of our sayd countrey may be still in like readines, to be employed vnder good & substantiall Captaines, to be chosen of the Gentlemen inheritours within the sayd shiere for our further seruice, vpō one houres warning, when so euer we shall require the same. And in the meane tyme our pleasure is, that ye haue good regard to the quietnes and good order of the country, specially to the apprehension of spreaders of false and vntrue tales & rumors, wherby ye shall both deserue well of your whole country, and also do acceptable seruice, which we will not faile to remember accordingly. Yeauen vnder our signe at our pallace of Westminster, the 8. of Febr. the first yeare of our raigne. In hast.

¶A Treatise of M. Nich. Ridley, in the name, as it seemeth, of the whole Clergie, to King Edward the vj. concernyng Images not to be set vp, nor worshipped in Churches.

☞ Certaine reasons which moouē vs that we cannot with safe consciences, geue our assentes that the Images of Christ, &c. should be placed and erected in Churches.

First the words of the Commandement, Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any graven image,* &c. And the same is repeated more playnely, Deut. 27. Maledictus homo qui facit sculptile & conflatile, &c. ponit illud in abscondito, &c.* That is, Curied is the man which maketh a graven or molten image, &c. and setteth it in a secret place, and all the people shall say, Amen.

In the first place these wordes are to be noted, Thou shalt not make to thy selfe, that is, to any vse of religion.

In the latter place these words: And setteth it in a secret place: for no man durst then commit idolatry openly. So that conferring the places, it doth evidently appeare, that images both for vse of religion, and in place of perill for idolatry, are forbidden.

God knowyng the inclination of man to Idolatry, sheweth the reason why he made this generall prohibition, Ne forte errore deceptus adores ea & colas: That is to say, Least peradventure thou beyng deceiued, should bow downe to them and worship them.

This generall lawe is generally to be obserued, notwithstanding, that peradventure a great number cannot be hurt by them, which may appeare by the example followyng.

God forbade the people to ioine their children in mariage with strangers, addyng the reason: Quia seducit filium tuum •e sequatur me: That is, For she will seduce thy Page 2129 sonne, that he shall not follow me. Deut. 7.

Moses was not deceyued or seduced by Iethroes daughter, nor Booz by Ruth, beyng a woman of Moab. And yet for all that, the generall law was to be obserued, Thou shalt ioine no mariage with them. And so likewise, Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any graven image, &c.

Deut. 4. God geueth a speciall charge to auoyde images. Beware (saith he) that thou forget not the couenaunt of the Lord thy God which he made with thee, & so make to thy selfe any graven image of any thing which the lord hath forbidden thee, for the Lord thy God is a consumyng fire, and a iealous God.

If thou haue children and nephews, and doe dwell in the land, and beyng deceiued, do make to your selues any graven image, doyng euill before the Lord your God and prouoke him to anger, I do this day call heauen and earth to witnesse, that you shall quickly perish out of the lande which ye shall possesse, ye shall not dwell in it any longer tyme, but the Lord will destroy you & scatter you amongst all nations, &c.

Note what solemne obtestation God vseth, and what grieuous punishments he threateneth to the breakers of the second commaundement.

In the tabernacle and temple of God, no image was by God appointed openly to be set, nor by practise afterwards vsed or permitted, so long as religion was purely obserued: so that the vse and execution of the lawe, is a good interpreter of the true meaning of the same.

If by vertue of the second commaundement Images were not lawfull in the temple of the Iewes, then by the same commaundement they are not lawfull in the Churches of the Christians. For beyng a morall commaundement and not ceremoniall (for by consent of writers, only a part of the precept of obseruyng the Saboth, is ceremoniall) it is a perpetuall commandement, and byndeth vs as well as the Iewes.

The Iewes by no meanes would consent to Herode, Pilate, or Petronius, that Images should bee placed in the temple at Hierusalem, but rather offred themselues to the death, then to assent vnto it. Who besides that they are commended by Iosephus for obseruyng the meanyng of the law, would not haue endangered themselues so farre, if they had thought images had bene indifferent in the tēple of God: For as S. Paule sayth: 2. Cor. 6. Quid templo Dei cum simulachris, &c. Ioseph. Antiq. libr. 17. cap. 8, lib. 18. cap. 5. & 15.

Gods Scripture doth in no place commend the vse of Images, but in a great number of places doth disallowe and condemne them.

They are called in the booke of Wisedome, the trap & snare of the feete of the ignorant.

It is sayd the inuention of them was the beginnyng of spirituall fornication. And that they were not from the beginnyng, neither shall they continue to the end.

In the xv. chap. of the same booke it is sayd, Vmbra pictura labor sine fructu, &c. And againe, they are worthy of death both that put their trust in them, & that make them, and that loue them, and that worship them.

The Psalmes and prophets are full of like sentences, and how can we then prayse the thing which Gods spirit doth alwayes dispraise.

Furthermore, an Image made by a father (as appeareth in the same booke) for the memoriall of his sonne departed was the first inuention of images, and occasion of Idolatry. Sap. 14.

How much more then shall an image made in the memory of Christ, and set vp in the place of religion occasion the same offence. Euseb. Eccles. histor. lib. 7. cap. 18. Images haue their beginning frō the heathen, & of no good ground therfore they cannot be profitable to Christians. Whereunto Athanasius agreeth, writing of Images agaynst the Gentils. Athanas. con. gentes, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉. That is to say: The inuention of Images came of no good but of euill and what so euer hath an euill beginning can neuer in any thing be iudged good seing it is wholly nought.

S. Iohn sayth, my little children beware of Images, but so set them in Churches which are places dedicated to the seruice and inuocation of God, and that ouer the Lordes table, being the highest & most honorable place where most daunger of abuse both is and euer hath bene, is not to beware of them nor to flee from them, but rather to embrace and receiue them. Tertullian expounding the same wordes, writeth thus. Lib. de corona militis. Filioli custodite vos ab idolis, non iam ab idolatria quasi ab. officio, sed ab idolis. i. ab ipsa effigie eorum. That is to say. Little Children keepe your selues from the shape it selfe, or forme of them.

Images in the Churche either serue to edify or to destroy, if they edifye, then is there one kinde of ••ification which the scriptures neither teach nor commaūd, but alwayes dissalow: if they destroy, they are not to be vs•d for in the church of God all thinges ought to be done to edify. 1. Cor. 14.

The commaundement of God is, thou shalt not laye a stumbling blocke or stone before the blinde: and cursed 〈◇〉 he that maketh the blinde wander in his way.

The simple & vnlearned people who haue bene so long vnder blinde guides, are blind in matters of religion and inclined to error and idolatry. Therefore to set images before them to stumble at▪ (Nam laquaei pedibus insipientium sunt) that is, They bee snares and •rappes for the 〈◇〉 of the ignoraunt, or to lead them out of the true waye is not onely agaynst the commandement of God but deserueth also the malediction and curse of God. Sap. 14.

The vse of images is to the learned & confirmed in know|lege neither necessary nor profitable. To the superstitious a confirmation in error. To the simple & weak an occasiō of fall and very offensiue and wounding of theyr consciences: And therefore very daungerous. For S. Paul sayth 1. Cor. 9. offending the brethren and woūding their weake consciences, they sinne agaynst Christe. And Math. 18. Woe be to him by whom offense or occasion of falling cōmeth, it were better that a milstone were tyed about hys necke and he cast into the sea then to offend one of the 〈◇〉 ones that beleue in Christ. And where obiection may bee made that such offence may be taken away by sincere doctrine and preaching, it is to be aunswered that that is not sufficient as hereafter more at large shall appeare.

And though it should be admitted as true, yet shoulde it followe that sincere doctrine and preaching shoulde alwayes and in all places continue as well as Images: & so that whersoener an Image to offend were erected there should also of reason a godly and sincere preacher be continually mayntayned: for it is reason that the remedye 〈◇〉 as large as the offence, the medicine as generall as the poison, but that is not possible in the realme of England that Images should be generally allowed, as reason and experience may teach.

As good magistrates which intēd to banish al whoredome, doe driue away all naughty persons, specially out of such places as be suspected: euen so Images being Meretrices. id est. Whores for that the worshipping of them is called in the prophetes fornication, and adultery ought to be banished and especially out of churches which is y^e most suspected place, and where the spirituall fornication hath bene most omitted.

It is not expedient to allowe and admitte the thinge which is hurtfull to the greatest number, but in all Churches and common wealths the ignoraunt and weake are the greatest number to whome Images are hurtfull and not profitable.

And where it is commonly alledged that Images in Churches do stirre vp the minde to deuotion, it may be aunswered that contrariwise they doe rather distracte the minde from prayer, hearing of Gods word & other godly meditations, as we read that in the Counsell Chamber of the Lacedemonians no picture or Image was suffered, least in consultation of wayghty matters of the common weale, their mindes by the sight of the outward Image might be occasioned to be withdrawne or to wander from the matter.

The experience of this present time doth declare that those partes of the realme whiche thinke and are perswaded that God is not offended by doing outward reuerēce to an image, do most desire the restitution of Images, and haue bene most dilligent to set them vp agayne▪ Restitution therfore of them by common authoritie shall confirme them more in theyr error to the daunger of theyr soules, then euer they were before, for as one man writeth.

Nihil magis est certum, quam quod ex dubio factum est certum, that is to say nothing is more certayne or sure, then that which of doubtfull is made certayne.

The profit of Images is vncertayne, the perill by experience of all ages and states of the Church (as afore) is most certayne.

The benefite to be taken of them (if ther be any) is very smale: the daunger in seeyng of them which is the danger of Idolatry is the greatest of all other. Nowe to allowe a moste certayne perill for an vncertayne profite, and the greatest daunger for the smallest benefite, in matters of fayth and Religion is a tempting of God and a grieuous offence.

¶Probations out of the Fathers, Councils, and histories.

First it is manifest, that in the primitiue church images were not commonly vsed in Churches, Oratories, and places of assembly for religion: but they were generally detested and abhorred, in so much, that the want of imagerie was objected to the christians for a crime.

Origen reporteth that Celsus objected the lacke of Images, lib. 4. contra Celsum.

Arnobius saith also, that the Ethnikes accused y^e christians that they had neither altars nor images.

Zephirus in his Commentarie vpon the Apologie of Tertullian, gathereth thus of Tertullians wordes: Qui locus persuadendi frigeret penitus, nisi perpetuò illud teneamus: Christianos tunc temporis odisse maximè statuas cum suis ornamentis, &c. That is to say, Which place of persuasion were very cold, and to no purpose at all, except we hold this alwayes, that Christians in those dayes did hate most of all Images with their trimme decking and ornaments.

Irenaeus, lib. 1. cap. 24. reprooueth the heretikes called Gnostici, for that they caried about y^e image of Christ made in Pilates tyme after his owne proportion (whiche were much more to be esteemed then any that can be made now) vsing also for declaration of their affection towardes it, to set garlands vpon the head of it.

Lactantius affirmeth plainly: Non est dubium, quin religio nulla sit, vbicun{que} symulachrum est: lib. Diuin. instit. 2. cap. 19. That is to say: It is not to be doubted y^t there is no religion wheresoeuer is any Image. If Christians thē had vsed images, he would not haue made his proposition so large.

S. Augustine De ciuitate Dei, lib. 4. cap. 31. commendeth Uarro the Romaine in these wordes. Quum Varro existimauerit castius sine symulachris obseruari religionem, quis non videt, quantum appropinquauerit veritati▪ That is to say, when as Uarro thought religion might bee kepte more purely without Images, who doth not see how neare he came to the truth? So that not onelye by M. Uarroes iudgement, but also by S. Augustines approbation, the most pure and chast obseruation of religion, and nerest the truth, is to be without Images.

The same S. Augustine in Psal. 113. hath these words: Plus valent symulachra ad curuandam infoelicem animam, quā ad docendam. That is to say, Images haue more force to bowe downe and crooke the sillie soule, then to teach it.

And vpon the same Psalme he mooueth this question: Quiuis puer imò quis bestia scit non esse Deum quod vident, cur ergo spiritus sanctus toties mouet cauendum quod omnes sciunt? That is to say, Euery child, yea euery beast knoweth that it is not God which they see, why then doth the holy ghost so oft geue warnyng to beware of that thyng which all do know? S. Augustines answer.

Quoniam quum ponuntur in templis, & semel incipiunt adorari a multitudine, statim nascitur sordidissimus affectus erroris. That is to say: For when they are set in Churches, & begin once to be worshipped of the multitude or common people, straightway springeth vp a most filthy affection of errour.

This place of S. Augustine doth wel open how weak a reason it is to say, Images are a thyng indifferent in chambers and in churches. For the alteration of the place, maner, and other circumstances, doth alter oftentimes the nature of the thyng. It is lawfull to buy and sell in the market, but not so in churches. It is lawfull to eate and drinke but not so in Churches. And therefore sayth Saint Paule, Annon habetis domos ad edendum ac bibendum? An ecclesiam Dei contemnitis? That is to say, Haue you not houses to eat and drinke in? Do you contemne the church of God?

Many other actions there bee which are lawfull and honest in priuate place, which are neither comely nor honest, not onely in churches, but also in other assemblies of honest people.

Tertullian sayeth he vsed sometymes to burne frankincense in his chamber, which was then vsed of Idolaters, and is yet in the Romish Churches, but hee ioyneth withall: Sed non eodem ritu, nec eodem habitu, nec eodem apparatu, quo agitur apud Idola. That is to say, But not after such a rite or ceremonie, nor after such a fashion, nor wyth such preparation or sumptuousnesse, as it is done before the Idols.

So that Images placed in Churches, and set in honorabili sublimitate, that is to say, in an honourable place of estimation, as S. Augustine sayth, and especially ouer the Lordes table, which is done (vsing the words of Tertullian) eodem ritu, & eodem habitu, that is, after the same maner and fashion which the Papists did vse, especially after so long continuance of abuse of Images, and so many beyng blinded with superstitious opinion towards them, cannot be counted a thing indifferent, but a most certaine ruine of many soules.

Epiphanius in his Epistle to Iohn bishop of Hierusalem (which epistle was translated out of the Greeke by S. Hierome, beyng a likelyhoode that S. Hierome misliked not the doctrine of the same, doth write a facte of hys owne, which doth most clearely declare the iudgement of that notable learned Bishop concernyng the vse of Images, his words are these: Quum venissem ad villam quae dicitur Anablatha, vidissem{que} ibi praeteriens lucernam ardentem, & interrogassem quis locus esset, didicissem{que} esse Ecclesiam, & intrassem vt orarem: inueni ibi velum pendens in foribus eiusdem ecclesiae tinctum at{que} depictum, & habens imaginem quasi Christi vel sancti cuiusdam, non enim satis memini cuius fuit, cum ergo hoc vidissem in Ecclesia Christi contra auctoritatem scripturarum, hominis pendere imaginem, scidi illud, &c. Et paulò post. Et praecepi in ecclesia Christi istiusmodi vela quae contra religionem nostram veniunt non appendi, &c. That is to saye: When I came to a village called Anablatha, & sawe there as I passed by, a candle burnyng, & enquiring what place it was, and lerning that it was a church, & had entred into the same to pray, I found there a vaile or cloth hanging at the dore of the same church, died and painted, hauing on it the image of Christ as it were, or of some Saint (for I remember not well whose it was) Then when I sawe this, that in the Church of Christ against the authoritie of the scriptures the image of a mā did hang, I cut it in pieces, &c. And a little after. And commaunded that such maner of vailles or clothes which are contrary to our religion, be not hanged in the church of Christ.

Out of this place of Epiphanius diuers notes are to be obserued.

First, that by the iudgement of this ancient Father, to permit Images in Churches, is against the authoritie of the scriptures, meanyng agaynst the second commaundement, Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any grauen Image, &c.

Secondly, that Epiphanius doth reiect not only grauen and molten, but also painted Images: for so much as he cut in pieces the Image painted in a vaile hangyng at the church dore, what would he haue done, if he had found it ouer the Lordes table?

Thirdly, that he spareth not the Image of Christ, for no doubt that Image is most perillous in the Churche of all other.

Fourthly, that he bid not onely remooue it, but with a vehemencie of zeale cut it in pieces, followyng the example of the good king Ezechias, who brake the brasen serpent, and burnt it to ashes.

Last of all that Epiphanius thinketh it the duetie of vigilant bishops to be carefull that no such kind of paynted Images be permitted in the church.

Serenus bishop of Massilia, broke downe Images, & destroyed them when he did see them begin to be worshipped, Greg. in Regist. epist. 109.

Experience of the tymes since hath declared whether of these two sentences were better. For since Gregories time the Images standyng in the Westchurch, hath bene ouerflowed with Idolatry, notwithstanding his or other mens doctrine. Whereas if Serenus iudgement had vniuersally taken place, no such thyng had happened. For if no Images had bene suffred, none could haue bene worshipped, and consequently no idolatry committed by thē.

¶To recite the processe of histories and counsels about the matter of Images, it would require a long discourse, but it shall be sufficient here briefly to touch a few.

IT is manifest to them that read histories, that not onely Emperors, but also diuers and sundry Counsels in the East church haue condemned and abolished images both by decrees and examples.

Petrus Crinitus de honesta disciplina, lib. 9. cap. 9. ex lib^{is} Augustatibus, haec verba transcripsit. Valens, & Theodosius Augusti Imperatores praefecto praetorio ad hunc modum scripserit. Quum sit nobis cura diligens in rebus omnibus superni numinis religionem tueri. Signum saluatoris Christi nemini quidem concedimus coloribus lapide aliáue materia fingere, insculpere aut pingere, sed quocū{que} reperitur locotolli iubemus, grauissima poena eos mulctando qui contrarium decretis nostris, & imperio quicquam tentauerint. That is to say, Petrus Crinitus in his booke of honest discipline, the 9. booke, the 9. chapiter, wrote out of the Emperours bookes, these wordes. Ualens and Theodosius the Emperours, wrote to the high Marshall or Lieuetenant, in this sort. Where as wee are very carefull that the religion of almighty God should be Page 2131 in all thinges kept. We permit no man to cast, graue, or paint the Image of our Sauour Christ, either in colors, stone, or other matter: but wheresoeuer it be found, wee commaund it to be taken away, punishing them most greuously that shall attempt any thing contrary to our decrees and Empire.

Leo the 3. a man commended in histories for his excellent vertues and godlinesse, who (as is iudged of some men) was the author of the booke De re militari, that is, Of the feate of Warre, beyng translated out of Greeke by sir Iohn Cheeke, and dedicated to king Henry the viij. your highnes father, by publike authoritie commaunded, abolishing of Images, and in Constantinople caused all the images to be gathered together on a heape, & burned them vnto ashes.

Constantine the first his sonne, assembled a Council of the bishops of the East church, in which Councell it was decreed as followeth. It is not lawfull for them that beleeeue in God through Iesus Christ, to haue any Images neither of the Creator, nor of any creatures set vp in temples to be worshipped, but rather that all Images by the law of God, and for the auoiding of offence ought to be taken out of churches. Which decree was executed in all places where any Images were, either in Greece or in Asia. But in all these tymes, the bishops of Rome rather mainteining the authoritie of Gregory, weighing like christian bishops the perill of the Church, alwayes in their assemblies allowed Images.

Not long after the Bishop of Rome practising wyth Tharasins Patriarch of Constantinople obteyned of Irene the Empresse, her sonne Constantine being thē yong, that a Councell was called at Nice, in the which y^e Popes Legates were Presidents, which appeared well by their fruits: for in that Councell it was decreed, that Images should not onely be permitted in churches, but also worshipped, which councell was confuted by a booke written by Carolus Magnus the Emperour, callyng it a foolish and an arrogant councell.

Soone after this Councell, arose a sharpe contention betwene Irene the Empresse, and her sonne Constantine the 6. the Emperour, who destroyed Images. And in the end as she had before wickedly burned the bones of her father in lawe Constantine the v. so afterward vnnaturally she put out the eyes of her owne sonne Constantine the sixt.

About which tyme as Eutropius writeth, the Sunne was darkened most terribly for the space of 17. days, God shewyng by that dreadfull signe, how much hee misliked those kynds of proceedyngs.

To bee short, there was neuer thing that made more diuision, or brought more mischief into the church, then the controuersie of Images: by reason whereof, not onely the East church was deuided from the West, and neuer since perfectly reconciled, but also the Emperour was cut asunder and deuided, and the gate opened to the Saracens and Turkes to enter and ouercome a great piece of Christendome. The fault whereof most iustly is to bee ascribed to the patrons of Images, who could not be contented w^t the ensample of the Primitiue Church beyng most simple and sincere, and most agreeable to the Scripture. For as Tertullian sayth: Quod primum verum, quod posterius adulterinū. That is to say, What as is first, that is true, & that that is latter is counterfeit. But w^t all extremitie, mainteined the vse of images in churches, whereof no profite nor commoditie did euer grow to the church of God. For it is euident, that infinite millions of soules haue bene cast into eternall damnation by the occasion of Images vsed in place of religion, and no history can recorde that euer any one soule was wonne vnto Christ by hauing of Images. But least it might appeare that the West church had alwayes generally retained and commended Images. It is to be noted that in a Councell holden in Spaine called Concilium Eliberinum, the vse of Images in churches was clerely prohibited in these forme of wordes. Placuit in ecclesijs picturas esse non debere, ne quod colitur aut adoratur in parietibus depingatur. That is to say, Wee decree that pictures ought not to be in churches, least that be painted vpon the walles which is worshipped or adored.

But this notwithstanding experience hath declared, that neither assembling in Councils, neither writings, preachings, decrees, makyng of lawes, prescribing of punishments, hath holpen against Images, to the which Idolatry hath bene committed, nor against Idolatry whilst Images stooode. For these blynde bookes and dumme schoolemaisters (which they call lay mens bookes) haue more preuailed by their carued and painted preachyng of Idolatry, then all other written bookes and preachynges in teaching the truth, and that horror of that vice.

Hauing thus declared vnto your highnes a few causes of many which do mooue our consciences in this matter, we beseech your highnes most humbly not to strayne vs any further, but to consider that Gods worde doth threaten a terrible iudgement vnto vs, if we being pastors and ministers in his Church, should assent vnto the thing which in our learnyng and conscience wee are perswaded doth tend to the confirmation of error, superstition and Idolatry, and finally, to the ruine of the soules committed to our charge, for the which we must geue an account to the prince of pastors at the last day, Heb. 13. 1. Pet. 5. Wee pray your maiestie also not to bee offended with this our plainnesse and libertie, which all good and christian princes haue euer taken in good parte at the handes of godly Bishops.

S. Ambrose writing to Theodosius the Emperour vseth these wordes: Sed neque imperiale est libertatem dicendi negare, neque sacerdotale quod sentiat non dicere. Item in causa verò Dei quem audies, si sacerdotem non audies cuius maiore peccatur periculo, quis tibi verum audebit dicere, si sacerdos non audeat? Epist. lib. 5. Epist. 29. That is to say, But neither is it the part of an Emperour to deny free libertie of speaking, nor yet the duety of a priest not to speake what hee thinketh. And agayne, In gods cause whome wilt thou heare, if thou wilt not heare the priest to whose great peril the fault should be committed? Who dare say the truth vnto thee, if the priest dare not? These and such like speeches of S. Ambrose, Theodosius and Ualentinianus the Emperours did alwayes take in good part, and we doubt not but your grace will do the lyke, of whose not onely clemēcie but also beneficence, we haue largely tasted.

We beseech your Maiestie also, in these and such lyke controuersies of religion, to referre the discussement and deciding of them to a Synode of your bishops and other godly learned men, accordyng to the example of Constantinus Maximus, and other christian Emperours, that the reasons of both parts beyng examined by them, the iudgement may be geuen vp rightly in all doubtfull matters.

And to returne to this present matter, we most humbly beseech your maiestie to consider, that besides waightie causes in pollicie which wee leaue to the wisdom of your honourable counsailors the stablishment of Images by your authoritie, shall not onely vtterly disceredite our ministers as builders vp of the thinges which wee haue destroyed, but also blemishe the fame of your most godly father, and such notable fathers as haue geuen their lyfe for the testimony of Gods truth, who by publike lawe remooued all Images.

The almighty and euerliuyng God plentifully endue your maiestie with his spirite and heauenly wisdom, and long preserue your most gracious raigne and prosperous gouernment ouer vs to the aduancement of his glory, to the ouerthrow of superstition, and to the benefit & comfort all your highnes louyng subiects.

¶A note of M. Ridley.

MAister D. Ridley sometyme B. of London, of whom mention is made,* pag. 1717. was a man so reuerenced for his learning and knowledge in the scriptures, that euen his very enemies hath reported him to haue bene an excellent clarke, whose lyfe if it might haue bene redeemed with the summe of 10000. markes, yea, 10000. pounds, the Lorde Dacres of the North beyng his kinsman, woulde haue geuen to Queene Mary, rather then he should haue burned. And yet was she so vnmercifull, for all hys gentlenes in king Edwards dayes, that it would not be grāted for no suite that could be made. Oh, that she had remēbred his labour for her to king Edward the 6. with Cranmer before mentioned,* 1205. in such sort that euen shee had yelded but the reward of a Publicane, Math. 5. then had the earth not so bene berefted of him as it was: but the Lord forgeue vs our sinnes which was the cause thereof, and graunt that we neuer so prouoke his anger agayne, if it be his blessed will. Amen.

¶ Another note of M. Ridley.

MAister Ridley late B. of London beyng prisoner in the tower, had there geuen the libertie of the same,* to prooue belike whether he would go to Masse or no, which once he dyd. And M. Bradford beyng there prisoner also the same tyme, and hearing thereof, taketh his penne and inke, and writeth to hym an effectuall letter to perswade hym from the same, and sheweth the occasion that thereby should ensue, which (God bee honoured) did M. Ridley no little good, for he repented his fact therein, as he hymselfe maketh mention, writyng agayne in the latter end of Page 2132 the booke of Marcus Antonius, which he sent to M. Brad|ford, and neuer after that polluted himselfe with that filthy dregs of Antichristian seruice.

☞ A Commission sent from the Pope, with the sentence diffinitive to proceed against the reuerend Archb. of Cant. Thomas Cranmer.

PAulus Episcopus seruus seruorum Dei charissimo in Christo filio Philippo Regi, & charissimae in Christo filiae Mariae Reginae, Angliae, Franciae, illustribus ac venerabilibus fratribus Londonensi & Eliensi episcopis salutem, & apostolicam benedictionem. Dudum per literas vestras charissime fili Philippe Rex, & christiana filia Maria Regina nobis significatur, quod iniquitatis filius Thomas Cranmerus, olim Archiepiscopus Cantuariensis, in haereses aliáque tam grandia & enormia crimina erat prolapsus, quod non solum regimini ecclesiae Cantuariensis se reddi derat indignum, verum etiam maiori poena se fecerat obnoxium. Nos de praemissis certam notitiam non habentes, & tanta crimina si vera essent, impunita, ecclesiámque ipsam sine pastore idoneo de•elinquere nolentes, dilecto filio nostro Iacobo, tituli Sanctae Mariae in via, tunc sancti Simeonis, praesbytero Cardinali puteo nuncupato, vel de praemissis etiam summarie, simpliciter, & de plano sine strepitu & figura iudicij, ac sine vlla terminorum substántialium vel telae iudiciariae obseruatione, citato dicto Thoma se informaret, & quicquid inuenisset nobis referret, per specialem commissionem manu nostra signatam, dedimus in mandatis, sibi attribuentes potestatem in curia, & extra, citandi, & inhibendi, ac literas compulsoriales, generales & speciales ac remissoriales, in forma consueta ad partes decernendi, & personas quascunque, si opus esse arbitraret, ad exhibendum iura, siue ad perhibendum testimonium etiam per censuras ecclesiasticas cogendi, & compellendi, seu, si pro celeriori expeditione sibi videretur, ad recipiendum informationem huiusmodi, aliquem probum virum in dignitate ecclesiastica constitutum in partibus istis commorantem cum simili citandi, inhibendi & cogendi facultate, deputandi, ac subdelegandi: ac sicut exhibiti nobis nuper pro parte vestra, fili Rex, & filia Regina petitio continebat, dictus Iacobus Cardinalis, commissionis huiusmodi vigore, citatione ad partes contra eundem Thomam ad vestram, fili Rex & filia Regina instantiam decreta, venerabilem fratrum nostrum Episcopum Gloucestrensem, vna cum certis alijs eius in ea parte collegis, & eorum quemlibet in solidum ad informationem super praemissis recipiendum subdelegauit, eisque vices suas in praemissis commisit. Et postquam dictus episcopus Gloucestrensis in causa huiusmodi ad certos actus processerat, & ipsum Thomam super prae|missis examinauerat, citatione praedicta, vna cum eius legitima executione in partibus facta coram eodem Iacobo Cardinali iudicialiter producta, & processu per audientiam literarumstrarum contradictarum contra eundem Thomā citatum & nō comparentem decreto, cum processu coram dicto Episcopo

Gloucestrensi contra ipsum Thomam in patribus habito coram praefato Iacobo Cardinali productus fuisset, & idem Thomas, ad id citatus contra eum nihil diceret, imo comparere non curaret, praefato Thoma ad videndum per ipsum Iacobum Cardinalem referri causam & referri iuramentum in supplementum plenae probationis quantum opus esset, & ad concludendum & audiendum sententiam diffinitiuam, ad certam tunc expressam diem, & horam per audientiam literarum contradictarum huiusmodi citato, omnibus actis & actitatis causis huiusmodi diligenter visis & consideratis, causam ipsam ac omnia in praemissis actitata nobis in consistorio nostro secreto fideliter retulit: Qua relatione nobis vt praefertur facta, & causa ipsa cum venerabilibus fratribus nostris sanctae Romanae ecclesiae Cardinalibus tunc in eodē consistorio existentibus, plenē discussa, & maturē examinata, cum dilecti filij Petrus Rouilius, clericus Ippotegiensis, ac Antonius Massa de Gallesio in dicta curia causarum, & vestrum fili Rex & filia Regina procuratores, de quorum procurationis mandato in actis causae huiusmodi legitimis constare dignoscitur documentis, & Alexander Paleotarius, fisci nostri procurator pro eius iure & interesse, in ipsius Thomae citati & non comparentis contumaciam in causa huiusmodi concludi & diffinituē pronounciari petijssent, nos pro tribunali, in Throno iustitiae, more Romanorum pontificum, praedecessorum nostrorum sedentes, in causa huiusmodi conclusimus, & nostram desuper in scriptis, quā per secretarium nostrum legi & publicari mandauimus, & quam ipse de verbo ad verbum legit, & publicauit, diffinitiuam tulimus, & promulgauimus sententiam, sub huiusmodi tenore.

¶A Note concerning Doctor Cranmer in his disputation.

THat day wherein Doctour Cranmer late Bishoppe of Caunterbury aunswered in the diuinity schoole at Oxford there was alledged vnto him by Doctor Weston that he the sayd Cranmer in his booke of the Sacrament falsely falsified the saying of the Doctours,* and specially the saying of S. Hilary in these wordes Vero for Vere, shewing a print or two thereof to haue defaced his doinges therein, but Doctor Cranmer with a graue and fatherlye sobriety aunswered that the print of S. Hylaryes works whereout he tooke his notes was verbatim according to his booke, and that coulde his bookes testify if they were there to be sene. Saying further that he supposed Doctor Smith in that order rehearsed it in his booke of the Sacramēt, to the which Doctor Smith there present (though he were demaunded the aunswere thereof) stood in silence As Canis mutus non valens latrare. But by and by Doctour Weston without shame, to shadow Doctor Smithes silence, spitefully sayde to Cranmer: belike you tooke your learning out of M. Doctor Smithes booke.

All this already is testified. pag. 1437.

IT chaunced •t that present to be in the schole one William Holcot gentleman thē a sojourner in the Uniuersity Colledge, he hearing the same vntruth, & remembring that he had amongst his bookes in his study the said book of Doctor Smith. At his returne to his sayde study desirous to see the truth therein, found it agreable to the writing and affirmation of Doctor Cranmer. And the sayde Holcot then and there better remembring himselfe found emongest his bookes the booke of Stephan Gardiner intituled the Deuilles Sophistry. In which booke the sayde saying of S. Hylary alledged by the said Stephen verbat. both in Latine and English according to Doctor Cranmers confirmation. Then the sayd William Holcot supposing (for the manifest opening and tryall of the trueth therein) to haue deliuered the sayde Gardiners booke to Doctour Cranmer, brought it to Bocardo the Prison of Oxford, where Doctor Cranmer then remayned, but ther in the deliury thereof he was apprehended by the Bayliefes, and by them brought before Doctor Weston & his Colleagues then at diner at Corpus Christi Coledge, who strait wayes layd treason to the charge of the sayd William Holcotte, for the mayntenaunce of Cranmer (in his naughtines as they called it) and so vpon strait examination, to know who were priuy to his doinges in deliury of the sayd Gardiners booke, committed him to the sayde prison of Bocardo where he sojourned & slept in the straw that night.

And in the morrow in the morning, Doctor Cole yet aliue, then Deane of Paules, and Doctor Ieffrey, two of thē then Uisitours, further examined the sayd Holcotte of that his doinges: Threatning him to lay treason to hys charge, and so to send him for the triall thereof to the then Lord Chauncellor Stephen Gardiner, willing him presently to subscribe to the Articles then in question, but he refused desiring respite vntill the lawes of the realme had determined the same. And so was he againe committed to the sayd Prison. And after three dayes Doctor Weston & the residue of the Uisitours solemnely in Saynt Maryes Church pronouncing sentence agaynst the late Bishops, Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer. Amongst other called ther before them the sayd Holcot willing him to subscribe to theyr three Articles, he demaunding them then these demaundes, first whether they thought in theyr consciences that the articles whereunto they willed him to subscribe▪ were according to the scriptures, and that the religiō that they went about to plant were the true religion of Christ: they aunswered all with one voyce, yea, yea. Then asked he them whether they thought themselues able to aunswere and would aunswere before God for him if he subscribed thereunto as they willed him: And they likewyse aunswered yea, yea. And so he the sayd Holcot through feare and frayltie of the fleshe (As Neophitus) vpon theyr threatens subscribed. Then they with many fayre flattering wordes deliuered him, but would not let him haue again his book brought to Bocardo, least (as it semed) he should shew it to theyr shame. And they priuily willing the maister and the felowes of the sayd Uniuersity colledge to see the sayd William Holcot forth comming: And if they with in a fortnight after did not heare frō the then L. Chauncellour what should be done with him, that then they at the fortnightes end to expell him out of the said Colledge▪ which they would haue done, if the then Uicechauncellor had not willed thē to the contrary. Which Holcot though then an Apostata, is yet now a penitent preacher.

¶An Epistle of Bishop Hooper in Latine sent to the conuocation house touching matters of Religion.

Episcopis, Decanis, Archidiaconis, & ceteris Cleri ordinibus in Synodo Londinensi congregatis: Gratiam & Pacem á Domino.

NON vos latet (Viri doctissimi) in rebus arduis, ambiguis,* & causis difficili oribus, iudicium apud veteres (iuxta mandatum dei) delatum fuisse semper ad sacerdotes Leuitas, & ad praesidem, qui pro tempore, iudicis munere fungebatur: vt omnes hi causas & lites difficiliores explicarent, ex praescripto legis dei. Ita qualescun{que} controuersiae fuerunt: ex sententia sacerdotū- & praesidis, ad normam & praescriptum legis Dei lata, componebantur. Et ab eo quod iudices, partibus litigantibus statuissent: nullo modo erat declinandum. Quod si quis contumacius sacerdoti aut praesidi non paruisset, iuxta legem Dei sententiam pronuncianti: poenas contumaciae morte tuebat, quo populus hac vltione & contumaciae vindicta admonitus, metueret: & deinceps inolescere desisteret. Quam difficiles, imò quàm periculosae, inter nos & vos de re Eucharistica, lites agantur: vestrae conciones, scripta, & libelli testantur: nos verò qui meliorem, veriolem, & antiqui ssimam fidē sustinemus, confiscatione omnium bonorum nostrorum, dura & inhumana carceris seruitute sentimus. Quare mei ipsius nomine, ac omnium fratrum qui mecum eandem Catholicae ac sanctae religionis veritatem profitentur: vos omnes in Christo Iesu obtestor, vt causam hanc, vel aliquam quamcum{que} ob religionem ortam, inter nos & vos, deferre dignemini ad supremam, curiam parlamenti: vt ibi vtra{que} pars coram sacro & excelso senatu sese religiose, & animo submisso, iudicio, & auctoritati verbi Dei subijciat. Et si vestram religionem quam sanctam, orthodoxam, ac Catholicam esse contēditis, ex verbo dei asserere potestis, illam & nos libenter amplexabimur: Nostram quam modo pro sacrosancta defendimus, repudiantes. Gratias item Deo & vobis agentes quam maximas, {quod} per vos ab erroribus liberati, ad veritatis cognitionem reuocemur. Non solum aut hoc a vobis obtestamur, vt vos vestram{que} causam iudicio verbi dei coram summo parlamento deferatis: verum etiam vt nobis commodum detur tempus, quò veterum scripta & sacras literas euoluam{us}, á sancto senatu impetrare dignemini. Et si ibi iustas ac legitimas rationes fidei nostrae, non reddiderimus: iudicio magistratus nos ipsos submittimus, vt debitam vltionem nostri sceleris & impietatis nobis infligat. Si haec facere non recusaueritis, religio quam castam, illibatam, & saluam, ac ab omnibus amplectendam esse contenditis: gloriosius de vestra fide & religione, ac de nobis ipsis (qui illam impiam esse & falsam contestamus) victoriam reportabit. Nam si vestra religio & cultus in causa Eucharistiae, fontem & originem ducunt ex verbo dei: procul dubio sanctam, & sempiternam esse oportet. Et scitis quod res sancta & vera quo magis examinatur, & per verbum Dei exploratur: eo fit illustrior & purior. Et quāto purior & illustrior fit: tanto magis ab omnibus desideratur, & obuijs vlnis excipitur. Quis enim non desideraret & amplecteretur religionem & cultum, á Deo mandatum, & ab illius verbo sancitum ac confirmatum? Quare si vestra religio & cultus dei res sit adeo vera, sancta, & á Deo mundo exhibita: non est quod ei metuatis. Nam quod varijs modis temptatur ac probatur, modó pium ac sanctum fuerit: iacturam ab hostibus nullam sentit, sed potius hostes conculcat ac interficit. Solis radij sterquilini sordibus, non coinquinantur: verita{que} diuini verbi, errorum tenebris & caligine, non offunditur. Nec est quod vobis ipsis metuatis: modó re ipsa id praestetis, quod vbi{que} iactatis. Nam quotquot vestras partes non sequuntur, aliquo grauissimo ignominiae genere, nimis superbē afficitis: nos Page 2136 omnes omnino indoctos esse praedicatis, aut plane dementatos affirmatis. Vobis autem plusquam diuinam vendicatis prudentiam: nobis verò plusquám beluinam stoliditatem tribuitis. Iam quám facilé erit doctis indoctos, hominibus sanae mentis insania percitos, ingenio & prudentia, flagrantibus stolidos & ignaros vincere: sacer parlamenti conuentus, nullo negotio intelliget. Ideo si omnino ob Christū & illius causae gloriam quam nos defendimus, aut ob salutem nostram, vt vestra prudentia nos stultitiae arguamur, vestra{que} doctrina & eruditione nos ignorantiae accusemur, hoc facere non vultis: tamen vt publicé impietatis conuincamur, coram summo senatu, hoc praestate. Et si istis rationibus nihil moueamini: tamen vestra ipsorum causa certé postulat, vt palam eae lites inter nos componantur, id{que} coram competenti iudice: né apud omnes pios malé audiat: & fortassis hac suspitione laboret, quasi lucem & publicum examen fugiat, né impietatis, & idololatriae per verbum Dei deprae hendatur. Et vos qui malam causam, imó pessimam, ferro & igne defenditis, non tam docti nec pij, vt omnino videri & haberi vultis, inueniamini: sed potius ignorantiae & stultitiae, quas nobis impingitis, redarguamini. Non vos fugit quomodo publicé, palam, & in facie ac in praesentia omnium statuum huius regni, in summa curia parlamenti, veritas verbi Dei per fidos, doctos, & pios ministros, de vestra impia missa, gloriosé victoriam reportauit: quamuis per trecentos annos non solum locum & templum Dei occupauerit, verum etiam corda hominum (tan quám Deus) inhabitauerit. Sed quocun{que} titulo, nomine, honore, reuerentia, sanctitate, tempore, patronis, vniuersalitate splenduit, vbi per sanctiss. Regé Edouardū sextū sanctiss. memoriae, ad viuum lapidē lydeum verbi Dei examinari per proceres, heroes, ac doctos huius regni erat mandatum: statim euanuit, & nihil aliud apparuit, quám spurcissimum & immundissimum idolū sub pallio, & nomine Dei impie contextum: Aequa & iusta petimus, vt palam & publicé: lites inter nos componantur. Si igitur vestrae causae & vobis ipsis non diffidatis, vná nobiscum apud sanctum senatum agere dignemini: vt coram illo, autoritate verbi dei, quis nostram verio rem partem defenderit, dignoscatur. Nullis enim legibus sanctis & iustis vnquám fuit permissum, vt vna pars litigans, de altera parte iudex constitueretur. Nam in omnibus controuersiis & causis defici lioribus (maxime in religione) medius aliquis, & neutra litigantium pars, in iudicem eligenda est. Nec Christus ipse (quamuis ipsa veritas) aeterni patris filius, hanc potestatem & imperium iudicandi sibi vindecavit: quandocun{que} lites de eius doctrina inter illum & phariseos, vel quoscun{que} alios contigerunt. Sed semper ad legem appellauit, aduersarios{que} suos vt legis praescripto & sententia starent, rogauit: scrutamini (inquiens) scripturas. Nos etiam a vobis nihil aliud in nomine domini nostri Iesu Christi, supplices petimus & rogamus, nisi vt causa de qua inter nos litigatur, sententia & autoritate verbi dei decidatur ac finiatur. Et si per verbum dei fidem nostram parum candidam & iam, ostendere valet: porregemus vobis herbam, dabim us{que} dexteras. Nec in impios Arrianos pij & sancti, patres, hanc iudicandi potestatem sibi assumpserunt: sed adfuit disputationi pius princeps Constantinus imperator, qui rationes partium litigantium, diligenter perpendit: & sententiam at{que} iudicium causae, soli auctoritati verbi dei detulit. Quid hoc est igitur? quo iure contenditis? vultis & nostri & causae nostrae, testes, accusatores, & iudices esse? nos tantum legem & euangelium Dei in causa religionis, iudicē competentem agnoscimus: illius iudicio stet vel cadat nostra causa. Tantum (iterumat{que} iterum) petimus, vt coram competēti iudice detur nobis qui vincula & carceres sustinemus, amicū Christianum{que} auditorium: vim haud dubitamus, quin nostras rationes, & argumenta autoritate verbi diuini sum{us} stabilituri, ac vestra plané subuerturi. Hactenus praeiudicio iniusté grauamur: nec mirum, cum vna pars litigantium iudex alterius partis constituatur. Quapropter ad verbum dei, tanquam vnicum & solum competentem in causa religionis, iudicem appellamus. Si praeter & contra hanc legem dei, falsa & impia (vt coepistis) vi & dolo promouere non desistetis, sed fratres vestros truculenter persequendo pergetis: nos in tantis periculis constituti, ad misericordiam dei confugiemus, qui solus & possit & velit nos á vestris erroribus, incolumes & saluos conseruare. Praeterea, vt olim aliqui ex nobis, pro salute & incolumitate aliquot vestrum, apud magistratum ciuilem intercessimus: sic & nunc pro omnium vestrum salute in Christo Iesu, apud patrem coelestem intercedere non desistemus, vt tandem ad meliorem & sinceriolem mentem reuersi, vnicum Christum Iesum quem praecinuerunt prophetae, praedicauerunt Apostoli, quem{que} omnes pij agnoscūt (iam quo ad humanitatem, sedentem ad dextram patris in coelis amp•ectamini, & exosculimini: repudiato conficto, & ementito illo Christo ex pane confecto: quem nō solum iuuenes, virgines, & se•es, verum etiam oues & boues, pecora{que} campi, volucres coeli & pisces maris panem agnoscunt ac sentiunt, & non deum. Desistite rogamus igitur enixé vltorius oculos piorum perstringere. Verus enim Christus quatenus homo, iam amplius sursum ac deorsum per manus sacerdotū, agitari & immolari nō potest. In•ernum vicit, peccata vestra in cruce perlitauit, mortem destruxit, & iam astra te•e: quem olim videbitis venientem in nubibus coeli cum potestate magna & gloria, sempiternis{que} poenis vos plangetis, nisi hic poenitētiam falsae & impiae vestrae doctrinae egeritis. Si deus autem pro sua inexhausta bonitate & clemētia, per verbum suum lites istas inter nos componi dignetur: non dubito quin oculos vestros ita sit aperturus, vt quām horribiliter, & impié dei ac hominum testimonio & scriptis abuti videatis. Sed si furioso, & ex candescenti spiritu, vestras partes citra auctoritatem verbi dei, defēdere velitis: actum est omnino de vestra aeterna salute: {quod} dominus propter filiū suum vnicū auertat. Cogitate etiā apud vos ipsos an hoc sit piorū ministrorū ecclesiae officiū, vi, metu, & pauore corda hominū in vestras partes cōpellere? Profectō Christ{us} nō ignē, non gladiū, nō carceres, nō vincula, nō violentiā, nō confiscationē bonorū, nō regineae maiestatis terrorē, media organa constituit, quibus veritas sui verbi mundo promulgaretur: sed miti ac diligenti praedicatione euāgelij sui, mundū ab errore & idololatria conuerti praecepit. Vos nō Christi sed Antichristi armis vtimini, quibus populū inuitum ad vestra sacra cōpellitis: & non vol•tē, & instructū verbo dei trahitis. Sed quām malus custos 〈...〉 sit timor, non ignoratis. Certē qui timet nisi dei spiritu •per reuocetur, odit. Tra dite igitur saluberrima praecepta legis & euangelij populo dei vt pro Christi ministris per verbum Christi, ab omnibus agnoscantini. Ideo enim ministri ecclesiae Christi estis constituti, vt tantum Christi doctrinam populum dei doceretis▪ & non vt nouā, & á Christo alienam obtruderetis. Quae iam vos in ecclesia agitis, si coram aequo iudice, amicam ac Christianam disputationē, non recusaueritis: ex verbo dei ostendemus, vel á lege Mosaica mutuata: vel per Antichristum, & pseudoministros in ecclesiā fuisse introducta vt hoc breui tractatu exelsae parliamenti curiae facilé constabit. Scio inter vos esse tam turgido, & iniquo spiritu praeditos, qui putant nos tantū inanis gloriae, superbiae, arrogantiae, & famae nostrae fumo duci, & ideo velle potius semper malé currere: quām admoniti de errore bené recurrere. Sed hoc Deus nouit, quod tantum illius gloriam, nostram{que} salutem in Christo quaerim{us} dicant aduersarij quid velint. Meminerint autē nostri aduersarij & cogitēt: quāquām apud illos nec pro doctis, nec pijs hominib{us} habeamur (& haud dubiē nos ipsos omnis impietatis & peccati apud deum quotidie accusam{us}) tamē homines sumus ratione pediti. Et quis (nisi insanus) iactura & amissione omniū bonorū suorum, vxoris, liberorum, libertatis & vitae: redimeret, famae aut inanis gloriae titulum? Profecto tanti poenitere (vt dicitur) non emerimus. Igitur illius verbi veritatem nostris bonis omnibus ac vitae ipsi praeterimus: Et si centies (Deo nos adiuuante) moriendum nobis fuerit: ad idololatriam & impium cultū Dei, quae Dei misericordia hactenus reliquimus, non reuertemur. Domini sumus siué viuimus siue morimur: eius igitur voluntas in vobis & in nobis, cum misericordia fiat, Amen.

Vestrae salutis in Christo studiosissimus. Ioh. Hoperus.

A note of Bish. Farrer.

DOctour Leison, doctor of lawe, a Ciuilian, a Iustice of peace, the same who is mentioned,* pag. 1555. woulde not suffer bishop Farrer (when he was at the stake to bee burnt) to speake his mynd, and about halfe a yeare after, the said Doc. Leison died, and when he would haue spoke himselfe, he could not.

The trouble and examination of Thomas Hitton Martyr, with his examinations, answers, condemnation and Martyrdome, An. Dom. 1529. the 20. of February.

THomas Hitton of Martham in the Diocesse of Norwich, an honest poore man and religious,* euer fearyng God from his youth and louyng his worde. When persecution for the same word in the dayes of king Henry the 8. grew to bee somewhat hote, tooke his iourney toward Rochester in Kent, intyndyng to haue gone to Douer, & so to haue crossed the seas into Fraunce and other countries▪ for a tyme, where reposing himself a while, he might be free from the heat of persecution.* As he was goyng on his intēded iourny, one Thomas Swainesland, Bailly to William Warrham Archbish. of Canterbury, meting him by the way, and suspecting him to be (as they called them) an heretike, caused him to be staied, and brought before the said William Archb. of Cant. his maister, who demanded of him from whence he came, and whether he intended to haue gone, if he had not bene intercepted. The sayd Tho. answered that he came out of the Dioces of Norwich,* and purposed to haue gone beyond the seas, if God had so permitted. Then the Bishop asked him if he had euer bene beyond the seas before, and what bookes he had brought ouer. He answered that he had bene once beyond the seas before, and had brought certaine bookes with hym from thence, namely, two new Testaments, and one Primer in English. The Bishop asked him to whome hee gaue the Page 2137 sayde bookes. He aunswered, he would not declare. For (saieth he) such is your bloudy crueltye, that you woulde neuer sleepe quietly, till you had sucked their bloude as you meane to do myne. The Bishop seyng he could extort no more out of him, and perceiuyng his constant spirite and feruent zeale to the truth, commanded hym to prison till further oportunitie might serue for the shedding of his bloud.

The second appearance of Thomas Hitton before the said Archb. of Cant.

WWithin a while after, the bishop commanded the sayd Thomas to be brought before him agayne, who demanded of him how he iudged and beleued of the religion then in force, and of the authoritie of the bishop of Rome. The said Thomas answered, that the religion then vsed, was most abhominable idolatry, and contrary to the holy word of God. And as for the Pope (quoth he) he is Antichrist, the first borne of Sathan, and hath no more power or authoritie, then any other bishop hath in his owne diocesse, nor so much neither. The Bishop hearing this, was in such a peltynge chafe, that at that tyme he would talk no more with hym, but returned hym from whence he came, namelye, to Bocardo, with commaundement to appere before him agayne, vpon the 13. day of the same month folowyng, at his Manor of Knoll, to aunswer to such Articles and Interrogatories as should be obiected ex officio, against hym.

The third appearance of Tho. Hitton before the said Archb. of Cant.

The sayd Thomas Hitton at the day prefixed, made his personall appearance before the bishop at the place appointed, to whom the Bishop ministred certaine articles and interrogatories for him to aunswer vnto, commaundyng him to sweare to answer truly and vnfainedly vnto them, and euery part of them. The sayd Tho. Hitton refused to sweare, saying: It is against Gods lawes and good conscience for any man to sweare to shed hys owne blood,* for so he should be a murtherer of hymselfe, and become guiltie of his owne death. But yet notwithstādyng that he refused to sweare to aunswer, yet he answered truly and directly to euery perticular Article and Interrogatorie propounded vnto hym, but so as was finally to their contentation, yet no doubt to the great glory of God, and comfort of the godly. This done, the Bishop brake of hys session for that tyme, and commaunded him to prison agayne, and to appeare before hym in the place aforesayde, vpon the Friday next followyng, to aunswer further as should be demaunded of hym, granting him liberty withall, to adde too, or subtract from his former aunswers, eyther els vtterly to deny and reuoke the same.

The fourth appearance of Tho. Hitton before the said Archb. of Cant.

The day and tyme approching, the sayd Thom. Hitton appeared agayne accordingly, and hauing heard hys former aunswers and confessions distinctly by the Notarie red vnto hym, hee reformed them in certaine pointes, to some he added, from other some he subtracted, but none he denied. Then the Bishop perceiuyng his vnmoueable constancie in the truth, setting learnyng and reason apart, beyng not able to conuince him by arguments and truth, nor yet to improoue the spirite which spake in hym, fell to exhortyng of him to haue respect to his soules health, and not so wilfully (as he termed it) to cast away himselfe for euer, but to repent, and to abiure his errors, and in so doyng, he would be good vnto him, he sayd. When the bishop with all his perswasions could doe no good with hym to withdraw him from the truth of gods word, then the doctors and other the assistants attempted the lyke, all which notwithstanding,* the said Thomas Hitton would not desist nor shrinke one iote from the truth, but both affirmed and confirmed his former articles and confessions to the ende. Inferring withall, that they sinned against the holy Ghost, in as much as they knew that Gods worde was the truth, and that the Masse and all popish religion, is nothing els but Idolatry, lies, and open blasphemy against the maiestie of God and his word, and contrary to Gods word in euery respect, and yet they would allowe and maintaine the same, contrary to their owne consciences, whereat all the Bench was greatly offended, & commaunded him to prison agayne, assignyng him a day to come before them agayne.

The fift appearance of Tho. Hitton before the said Archb. of Cant.

AT the day appointed, the said Tho. Hitton appeared, to whom the bishop sayd, Thomas,* doest thou beleeeue that any man either spirituall or temporall, is of sufficient authoritie to set forth any lawe or sanction of himselfe, the breach whereof is Mortall or Ueniall sinne. To whome Tho. Hitton answered: that no man either spirituall or temporall might make any lawe or sanction, the breache whereof, is mortall or veniall sinne, except the same lawe or sanction bee drawen out of the worde of God, or els grounded vpon the same with a good conscience. And therefore, neither the church cannot set forth any lawe, the breach whereof is Mortall or Ueniall sinne, vnlesse it bee grounded vpon the word of God also. But if any man, or the church of God it selfe, do set forth any lawe grounded vpon the word of God & good conscience, the breach thereof to the violater, is mortal and deadly sinne. After all maner of wayes and meanes attempted to drawe this poore man from Christ and his truth, the bishop see yng that hee could not preuayle, determined to send hym to the bishop of Rochester, and so did, who assayed by all meanes possible to remooue him from his former professed truth. But seyng all his endeours frustrate, and that he profited nothyng, he signified the same to the Archbishop, and withal both went himselfe vnto hym, and caried the poore prisoner with him thether also.

In the afternoone of the same day, the said Archbish. of Cant. the bish. of Rochester, and diuers others assistantes called the sayd poore man before them agayne, and caused all the former Articles, Interrogatories and demaundes, to be red vnto hym in English, to the end he should either haue reuoked the same, or els recanted them altogether, vsing both threatens and faire promises to the performaunce thereof, but all in vayne: for his fayth was built vpon the rocke Christ Iesus, and therefore vnable to be remooued with any stormes of persecution, whatsoeuer.

In fine, the Archbishop (with mature iudgement you must beleeeue) consulting with the B. of Rochester and other, proceeded to his condemnation,* reading the bloody sentence of death agaynst him, and so was he beyng condemned, deliuered to the secular power, who caried hym to the prison, and soone after hee was burned for the testimonie of Iesus Christ, as you may see more at large, pag. 997.998. for whose constancie in the truth, the euerlasting God be prayed. Amen.

¶A note of a certayne good man troubled in Bulloyne the first yeare of king Edward the sixt for the Gospell.

The examination of me William Hastlen Gunner in the Castle of high Bulloyne, in the yeare of our Lorde 1547. and the first yeare of the reigne of king Edward the sixt. As I was in the church at Bulloyne called the stals, vpon the 10. of Aprill being Easter Tuesday, reading of a godly booke called the lamentation of a Christian, against the citizens of London betweene the houres of three and foure at after noone, there came certaine men to me as I stode at an alter in the Church reading to my selfe, and asked me what good booke I had, and I sayd they should heare if they pleased, thē they desired me to read out y^t they might heare, and so did I very gladly, but I had not read long but the Priestes and Clearkes were at theyr Latine Euensong, and I reading mine English book there came a tipstaffe for me, taking my two bookes from me and commaunded me to go with him, for he sayde I must goe before the counsaile of the towne, then went I forthwith with him, and a little without the Church doore, sir Iohn a Briges met vs, and bad the tipstaffe cary me to sir Leanard Beckwith Knight to be examined, and comming before his presence, hee asked me what bookes they were that I had at the church and was reading of one of them, openly in the Church to the people, and I sayd so farre as I hadde read them they were good godlye bookes, and he said they were heresie, and with that he asked me how I did beleeeue of the Sacrament of the aultar, whether I did not beleue y^t to be the very body of Christ, flesh, bloud, and bones, and I asked him whether hee ment that, that was in the pixe or no, and he sayde yea? euen that in the pixe, and I said that since I had sure knowledge of scriptures I did not beleeeue it to bee the body of Christ, but a bare peece of bread, nor by Gods helpe I will neuer beleue it otherwise to be, then he sayd I was an hereticke, & asked me what I made of the sacrament, and I sayd, if it were duely ministred according to Christes institution▪ Page 2138

that then I did beleue that the faythfull Communicantes, in receiuing that blessed Sacrament, did receaue into their inward man, or soule, the very body and bloud of our sauour Iesus Christ. Then sayd he, doest thou not beleue •t to remaine the very body of Christ after the wordes of consecration pronounced by the priest, and I sayd no. Thē said he, what doest thou make of the Church, I said as it is now vsed, it is a den of theeues, and the sinagoge of Sathan, thou hereticke sayd he, there remaineth the very body of Christ. But I saide that Christ being God and man, dwelleth not in temples made with mens handes: much other communication had we at that time but thys was the effecte that daye. Then hee asked me whether I would be forth comming till to morrow, and I saide Sir if you think that I will not, you may lay me where as I shall so be, then he let me goe for that night, and sayde we shall talke farther with thee to morrow, so I departed home. And about the space of two houres after, Mayster Hountington the preacher (which did muche good wyth his preaching in Bulloyn at that time) came to me, and sayde that hee heard me spoken of at my Lorde Grayes, which was then Lord Debitie of the towne and Country of Bulloyn, and I perceaue sayd he that you are in great daunger of trouble, if you scape with your lyfe, for there are some of the counsaile, merueilously bent agaynst you, I sayd the Lordes will be done: well said he, without you feele in your selfe, a full purpose by Gods helpe to stand earnestly to the thing that yee haue spoken, you shall doe more hurt then good, wherefore said he if you will goe to Callis, I will send you where you shall be well vsed, and be out of this daunger. Then I thanked M. Hountington, saying I purpose by Gods assistance to abide the vttermost that they can do vnto me, well then sayd he, I can tell you, you wil be sent for to morrow betimes before the whole Counsaile: that is sayd I the thing that I look for. Then rose I betimes in the morning and went into the market place, that I might spye whiche way the Officer should come for me, I had not taryed there longe, but I spyed a tipstaffe, and went toward him and asked hym whome he sought, and he sayde a Gunner of the great ordinaunce in the Castle of Bulloyn, and I sayd that I am he, thē said he you must go with me to my Lords, & I said therefore I looked. When I came there, I saw my Lorde and the whole Counsaile were assembled together in a close parlour, doing my duetie to them, my Lord saide to me, it is informed me that thou hast seditiously congregate a companie together in the Church, and there in the time of seruice thou didest read vnto them an heretical booke, and hast not reuerently vsed silence in the time of y^e diuine seruice, what sayest thou to this? I sayd, & it please your honour, I was in the church a good while before any seruice began, and no body with me, reading to my self alone, vpon a booke that is agreable to Gods worde, and no heresie in it that I red, and when it drewe toward seruice time, there came men to the church, and some of then comming to me whō I knewe not, asking me what good booke I had, I sayd it was a new booke that I haue not yet read it ouer, then they prayed me that I would read so that they might heare some part with me, and so I did, not calling, pointing, nor assembling any company to me. And for the seruice being in latine, that for the strangenes of the tongue, besides muche superstition ioyned with it was not vnderstood of the most part of them, that saide or sounge it, much lesse of them that stood by and did heare it, where as by the word of God all thinge in the Church or congregation shuld be done to the edifying of the people, and seeing I could haue no such thing by theyr seruice, I did endeouour to edifie my selfe, and other that were desirous of reading of godly bookes. And because the Church is so abused contrary to the worde of God, being beset round about, with a sorte of abhominable Idols, before whome no man ought to kneele, nor doe no maner of reuerence, because the scriptures doth curse, both the Idoll and the Idoll maker, and all that doth any worship or reuerence, vnto them, or before them, for that cause I vsed no reuerence there. Well sayd my Lorde, I woulde thou couldest aunswere to the rest as well as thou hast done to this, but I feare me thou canst not, for it is tolde me that thou hast spoken agaynst the blessed sacrament, and I said and it please your Lordship, that did I neuer in al my life, nor neuer wil doe by the grace of God. With that my chief accuser sir Leonard Becksmith knight, sayd to me, diddest thou not say to me yesterday, that thou diddest not beleue the sacrament of the aluter after the wordes of consecration by the priest, to be the very body of Christ, flesh bloud & bones, as it was borne of the virgine Mary. It is true in deede that I sayd so, for neyther do I beleue it to remayne Christes body, nor neuer will by the grace of God beleue it so to be, for I beleue that christ with that body that was conceaued and borne of the virgine Mary did ascend vp into heauen, and there (according to our beliefe) he sitteth on the right hand of God the father, and from thence that body shal come at the day of iudgement to iudge the quick and the dead, and yet in the meane while I beleue (that y^e sacrament duely ministred according to Christes institution) that the faithfull receauers of this sacrament lifting vp the eyes of theyr minde into heauen where Christes body is, that they do receaue in that sacrament into theyr soule or inward man, the very body of our sauour Iesus Christ, yea and I beleue further, that Christ concerning his diuine power or the power of his godhead is whersoouer two, or three be gathered together in his name, that he is in the midst euen amongst them, and that hee is so with his faythfull flocke euen to the worldes end, then they layed theyr heades together and had priuie talke, after that two of them said to me that it was rancke heresie that I did beleue it to remayne bare bread after the Priest had consecrated it, and not to beleue it to be the very body of Christ, I was worthy to be burned, then sayde I earnestly vnto thē, thinke you not though I be a vile abiecte in your sight, and he that is most busie among you to seek my bloud, but that my bloud shall be required at hys, or theyr handes. Then had they priuy talke together againe, after the which my Lord sayd vnto me, thou hearest that they here lay heresie to thy charge, and I am a manne of warre, & haue no skill in such high misteries, wherefore thine accusers say that thou must suffer here as an hereticke, that all the rest of the garrisene may beware by thee y^t they fal not into the like heresie, and so cast away themselues. Then sayd I, I appeale from this Counsayle, to the Counsayle of England, then sayd my Lord I am very glad that thou hast appealed to the Counsayle of England, for there are learned menne, and Diuines, that can skil of such matters, thether shalt thou be sent or it be long. Then was I caryed to sir Iohn Abridges house, and hauing pen and incke, I was bidden to write mine articles, which were in effecte those poyntes of Religion that you haue heard before in my examination, then on the morow being Thursday, and the fiftene of Aprill I was brought to the prison in the towne called the Marshalsea, where I was very gently vsed, for a good gentleman one Maister Waghan was the keeper there, at that time, but surely when I was apprehended, I had not so much as one peny to helpe my selfe with, for we had bene longe vnpayd, furthermore I thought in that towne of warre, that there was very few or none that fauoured the word of God, for I looked for no helpe there, but to be hated and despised of all menne there, for I knewe not past two or three there, that hadde any loue to the Gospell, till I was in prison, and then there came very many souldiours vnto me that I neuer knew before, and gaue me mony, so that I hadde as good as a three pound geuen me in a smale tyme that I was in prison. The fourthtene day of May toward night, I was sent into Englande, one Mayster Messenger, and one other man brought me to London, euen the same day being sonday at night, and 15. daye of May, there was a great talke ouer all the Cittye of one Doctor Smith that recanted that daye, they brought me to the Marshalsea, and there left me, I hearing no more of them that brought me thether: but Mayster Huntington as a faythfull minister of Iesus Christe, that gaue me warning before of all this trouble, came from Bullyn to London, causing my Articles to be seene, so that by his paynefull dilligence to the Counsayle for me, after that I had bene there little more then one •oneth, I was dyscharged forth of prison, and bed get me home to Bullin to my liuing agayne.

But surely if I hadde not appealed to the Counsayle of Englande I hadde bene burned in Bullyn, for it was tolde me of them that knew mucche in that matter that it was already determined, shortly to haue bene accomplyshed if I had not appealed: for the whiche deliuerance I geue prayse to the euerliuing God.

Shall stablish her in place.

This Loue and Feare her colours are,

Whereby if she be known:

She may compare both nie and farre,

Unable to be ouerthrown.

The loue of God it will her cause,

Unfained if it bee:

To haue respect vnto his lawes,

And hate idolatrie.

If that she haue the feare of God,
And be thereto right bent:
She will do that he her bode,
And not her owne intent.
O noble Queene take heed, take heed,
Beware of your owne intent:
Looke or you leape, then shall you speed,
Haste maketh many shent.
Remember Saule that noble king,
What shame did him befall:
Because that vnto the Lords •idding,
He had no lust at all.
The Lord hath bid, you shall loue him,
And other Gods defye:
Alas take heéde, do not beginne
To place Idolatry.
What greater disobedience
Agaynst God may be wrought
Then this: to moue mens conscience,
To worship thinges of nought.
What greater folly can you inuent
Then such men to obey:
How can you serue your owne intent,
Not foreseeing your owne decay.
And where as first ye should mainteine,

Your Realme in perfect vnity:

To rent the peoples hartes in twayne,

Thorow false Idolatry.

Is this the way to get you fame,

Is this to get you loue:

Is this to purchase you a name,

To fight with God aboue.

Is this your care to set vp Masse,

Your Subiectes soules to stroy:

Is this your study, no more to passe,

Gods people to anoy.

Is this to reigne, to serue your will,

Good men in bondes to keépe:

And to exalt, such as be euill,

And for your grace vnmeét.

Such as made that fond diuorce,

Your mother to deface:

Are nighest you in power and force.

And most bounden vnto your Grace.

Well, yet take heéd, of had I wist,

Let Gods word beare the bell:

If you will reigne, learne to know Christ,

As Daudid doth you tell.

What great presumption doth appeare,

Thus in a weéke or twayne:

To worke more shame then in vij. yeare.
Can be redrest agayne.
All is done without a law,
For will doth worke in place:
And this all men may see and know,
The weakenes of your case.
That miserable masking Masse,
Which all good men doth hate:
Is now by you brought vp agayne,
The roote of all debate.
Your Ministers that loue Gods worde,
They feele this bitter rodde:
Who are robbed from house and goodes,
As though there were no God.
And yet you would seeme mercifull.
In the midds of Tyranny
And holy, whereas you mayntayne
Most vile Idolatry.
For feare that you should heare the truthe,
True preachers may not speake:
But on good Prophetes you make ruthe,
And vnkindely them intreate.
Him haue you made Lord Chauncellor,
Who did your bloud most stayne:
That he may sucke the righteous bloud,

As he was wont agayne.
Those whome our late king did loue,
You doe them most disdayne?
These thinges doth manifestly proue,
Your colours to be but vayne.
Gods word you cannot abide,
But as your Prophetes tell:
In this you may be well compared,
To wicked Iesabell.
Who had 400. Prophettes false,
And fiftie on a rough:
Through whose false preaching,
Poore Ely was chased in and out.
Gods Prophetes you do euill entreate,
Balles Priestes defend your grace:
Thus did the Iewes put Christ to death,
And let go Barrabas.
Hath God thus high exalted you,
And set you on a trone:
That you should prison and deface,
His flocke that maketh mone.
The Lord which doth his flock defend,
As the Aple of an eye:
Of this full quickly, will make an end,
And banish crueltie.

Therefore my Counsell I you take,
And thinke thereof no scorne:
You shall finde it the best counsell,
Ye had since you were borne.
Put away blinde affection,
Let Gods word be vnper,
To try out true religion,
From this euill fauoured geere.

The instruction of king Edward the sixt, geuen to Sir Anthony Seyntleger Knight of his priuie chamber being of a corrupt iudgement of the Eucharist. Vpon this saying of an ancient D. of the Catholicke Church.

Dicimus Eucharistiam Panem vocari in scripturis, Panis in quo gratiae actae sunt &c.
IN Euchariste then there is bread,

Wherto I do consent:
Then with bread is our bodyes fed,
But farther what is ment.
I say that Christ in flesh and bloud,
Is there continually:
Unto our soule a speciall food,
Taking it spiritually.
And this transubstantiation, I,
Beleue as I haue read:
That Christ sacramentally,
Is there in forme of bread.

S. Austen sayth the word doth come,

Unto the element:

And there is made he sayth in somme,

A perfect sacrament.

The Element then doth remayne,

Or els must needes ensue:

S. Austens wordes be nothing playne,

Nor cannot be found true.

Page 2140For if the words as he doth say,

Come to the element:

Then is not the element away,

But bides there verament.

Yet who so eateth that liuely foode,

And hath a perfect fayth:

Receiueth Christes flesh and bloud,

For Christ himselfe so sayth.

Not with our teeth hys flesh to teare,

Nor take bloud for our drinke:

To great an absurditie it were,

So grossely for to thinke.

For we must eate hym spiritually,

If we be spirituall:

And who so eates hym carnally,

Thereby shall haue a fall.

For he is now a spirituall meate,

And spiritually we must:

That spirituall meate, spiritually eate,
And leaue our carnall lust.
Thus by the spirite, I spiritually
Beleeue, say what men list:
None other Transubstantiation, I
Beleeue of the Eucharist.
But that there is both bread and wyne,
Which we see with our eye:
Yet Christ is there by power diuine,
To those that spiritually.
Do eate that bread, and drinke that cup,
Esteemyng it but lyght:
As Iudas did, which eate that soppe,
Not iudgyng it aryght.
For I was taught not long agone,
I should leane to the sprite:
And let the carnall flesh alone,
For dyd it not profite.
God saue hym that teachyng me, taught,
For I thereby did winne:
To put me from that carnall thought,
That I before was in.
For I beleeue Christ corporally,
In heauen doth keepe his place:
And yet Christ sacramentally,

Is here with vs by grace.

So that in this high mysterie,

We must eate spirituall meate,

To keepe hys death in memory,

Least we should it forget.

This do I say, this haue I sayd,

This saying, say wyll I:

This saying though I once denaid,

I will no more to dye.

Christi electis Salutem.

Esdr. 4.

¶ Hoc Seculum fecit altissimus propter multos, futurum autem propter paucos.

¶ The almighty Lorde hath made this worlde for many: but the world or life or come but for a few.

MOst certayne it is dearely beloued that Christes elect be but few in comparisō of that great number which go in the broad way to euerlasting perdition,* whiche lyfe after the flesh, louing this present euill world, deny God in word and deed,* whose eies are blinded and their harts hardened.

Most certaine it is also that our Sauior Iesus Christ hath and knoweth his owne, whose names are written in the booke of life redemed with the most precious bloud of our sauour Iesus Christ.* So that the eternall Father knoweth them which be his.

The almighty and eternall God graunt that we may haue the testimony of our conscience, and the spirit of god to beare record with our spirites that we be his elect children walking in the spirite not fulfilling the lustes of the flesh but as Christes members hauing Christ Iesu fixed before our eyes, he being to vs the true way, the infallible verity & the eternall life. Christ hath geuē vs example, let vs folow him as deare children, for Gods delight is to beholde his Saintes which be in the earth.* Let vs put on the whole armour of God, and walke in the light in these euill dayes in the whiche Sathan in his Aungels seeketh whom he may deuour. The almighty Lorde deliuer vs from the mouthes of those vnshamefast dogs. They truely seeke ours and not vs vnto the Lord. Esdras sayth and writeth truely, the world is made for them: and they for the world. Dearly bought let vs remember Christ which sayth I haue chosen you out of the world, you shalbe hated of al worldly men. Did euer the couetous, Idolaters,* Oppressors or Whoremongers loue vs? Nay they loue Masse Mongers which say peace, peace, when there is no peace. Nay either then flatter the eares, or els they say no thing, as dum dogges not able to barke, of whom be you ware of, for though they come in sheepes clothing: they be rauening Wolues, whose damnation sleepeth not from whose captiuitie the holy will of God saue and preserue you. Amen.*

Dearely beloued we hauing the record of our conscience that we be very members in Christes body separate from that malignant Antichristes Church. Let vs reioyce in conscience and in the Lord, hauing heauenly hope in al his promises, which be eternall and most sure to vs, in Christ our Sauour, who looseth none of all them, whom the eternall Father hath geuen him, but at his appearing to be our mercifull Iudge,* shall rayse vs vppe at that last day, for the trumpe of God shall blow, and be heard of all Adams posterity, sounding Venite ad iudicium. Come vnto iudgement, come and be iudged. Let vs therfore be prepared hauing the wedding garment,* yea the whole armour of God, the mariage garment, cleare Lampes, that is pure hartes, and burning heauenly light in the same. Let vs prepare our selues richly to restore to our Lord and Mayster our talentes with the increase of heauenly liuing and occupying, then without all doubt, we shall heare that most blessed wish of our alone Sauour Iesus Christ who shall then say reioyce good seruauntes, I will make you Stewardes, ouer many thinges. Enter into the euerlasting rest, and kingdome, whiche hath bene prepared for you from the beginning. This is the Kingdome of Iesus Christ, whiche at this present is in Babilon and banished to the desert, the troublesome waters of Sathan in the Antichrist and his shauelings spiewed out of Christs mouth. The Lord be our ayde, auenger and deliuerer when his holy will is. Amen.

Dearely bought with the most precious bloud of our Sauour Iesus Christ, that we be not deceiued by the Antichrist, let vs ponder, wey, marke and study, the heauenly doctrine of our Sauour Christ in his last Supper, the text is, Bene dixit, dixit bene, gratias egit, he spake heauenly and well, he gaue thanks, he tooke bread, brake it & gaue it to his Disciples, saying, take, eate, this Sacramentall bread, and me the breade of life, whiche came downe from heauen, which geueth life to the worlde, take true fayth, heauenly hope kindled with christen charitie, thanks geuing for my death: let these heauēly vertues enter in your soules, then enter I. This is my body. This is the true eating of my body, which is geuen to the death of y^e crosse, for the ransome and sinnes of Gods elect: Likewise after supper he tooke the cup, hee spake well, gaue thanks and gaue it them: saying, drinke ye all of this: drinke I say by this infallible veritie, and euerlasting word ioyned and anexed with this cup, my bloud which is shed from before the beginning of the world, for many in remission of sins, he or shee that thus dwelleth in me, and I in him, eateth my flesh, and drinketh my bloud. Saint Augustine sayth, why prearest thou thy tooth and belly?

beleue and thou hast eaten. Sainct Barnarde saith, when fayth, hope, christian loue,* and thanks geuing for Christes death enter in a Christian, Christ entereth, and agayn S. Augustine sayth vpon these wordes of Christ you shal alwayes haue the poore with you, but me shall ye not haue Page 2141 alwayes with you. The Church had him but a few dayes touching his humanitie,* nowe they haue him by fayth, with these eyes they do not see him. O Iesus Christ thou sonne of the liuing God, whiche art in the bosome of thy father God with God, the very Image of God the father eternall, geue vs victory ouer this Antichrist in thy most precious bloud. Be faythfull to the ende and oure sauour shall crown vs in glory: let vs sanctify the name of God in thought, word, and deede.

I say vnto the Papist and will not flatter.

our God is in heauen whome they will not see:

And is no such little prety mattere,

as their God the Pope faineth him to be.

Pray for all the preachers of the veritie, that God may geue vs grace and constancie.

They sing and say they haue him in a string, tye not the dog so, for feare of hanging.

To all the faythfull whose names in generall,

in the booke of lyfe, by Christ are written all.

The godly thought and patient minde, doth liberty in prison finde.

Who so to patience can attayne, shall finde in prison is no payne.

Thrall, trouble, bownd, or free,

as pleaseth God, so shall all be.

Wherefore I neuer will forsake,

what pleaseth God lay on my backe.

Iohn Meluine preacher and priprisoner in Newgate.

¶A note concerning the trouble of Iulius Palmer, lately come to my handes.

To his assured friend and brother in Chryst Mayster Perry preacher at Beuerstone geue these.

*MAyster Perry after my hartly commendations in the Lord Iesus Christ vnto you and your wife &c. wheras you haue written vnto me for my help in stoppyng the malicious and enuious mouth of Thomas Thackam, I would be as glad as any man to testifie the truth, both for that I know of the shameles malice of the sayd party, agaynst the members of Christ, as also the godly and vertuous behaiour of Palmer both before he was in prison, and after in prison, with the credite of that good and godly worke of that history: but surely many thinges are out of my hed, which I cannot as yet remember. And for these things I know, I wryte vnto you. And first as touching the frendship shewed vnto the Lady Uane, and hys zeale therein vttered, trueth it is that hee receaued her into hys house for mony for a small space, in the whiche time they two did not well agree, for that she coule not suffer hys wickednes of wordes and gestures vnreproved, but that his wife many times being of more honesty made y^e matter well agayne, but to be short, suche was his frendshyp in the ende towards that good Lady, being out of hys house, that she feared no man more for her lyfe, then him. And I being her man she gaue me great charge alwayes to beware of him. As touching his frendship towards Iohn Bolton in prison, I am sure he neuer found any, as they that vsed to visite him, can somewhat say: Except you accompt this friendship, that he beyng bereft of hys senses, Thac. wrought him to yeld vnto the papistes, and as a right member of them became his suretie to be obedient vnto them. And hee beyng burdened in conscience therewith, fled away vnto Geneua, for the which flieng Thac. had nothing sayd vnto hym, which sheweth that he was their instrument. And this friendship to Iohn Bolton, for Downer I haue heard no euill of him: for Gateley and Radley now Uicar of S. Laurence, and Bowyer a Tanner, they three left no meanes vnpractised to catche and persecute the members of Christ as I my selfe can well prooue. As touching Palmer, for that I many tymes frequented his company in his lodging, he woulde vtter sometymes vnto me the grieue of his mynd. Among other things once he told me, that for that he heard he was somewhat suspected with the womā of the house, he was much grieued withall, the which he vttered with many teares. I then counsailling him to depart thence to auoyd the occasion of offence, he sayd no, but the Lord should try him or it were long: for sayd he, Thac. hath let me his schole, and now would haue it againe, and because I will not let him haue it, this he hath brought vpon me, but God forgeue him. Afterward beyng in prison, I talking with hym at the grate, he shewed me his iudgement of the scriptures, and deliuered it vnto me, what became of it I knowe not now. He prayes God highly for his estate, and then hee sayd he trusted it would appeare whether Thac. had sayd of him well or not. And further he sayd, that now Thack. hath his will to haue his schoole agayne: for if I woulde haue yelded vp the schoole, he would haue sent me away, I neuer trusted him so well sayd he, to communicate my mynd vnto hym before witnesse, but sometyme alone, and therefore he hath deuised a letter in my name, and brought it to light to cause me to bee examined of my conscience. This is as much as I can say at this tyme. Thus fare you well in the Lord, Amen. From Corsly this 18. of May.

Yours to commaund in Christ, Iohn Moyer Minister.

Haue me commended I pray you to all my friends at Readyng.

A note of Iulius Palmer.

ALso being at Magdalene colledge about a moneth before he was burned, and reasoning against one Barwike Maister of Arte sometime his familiar friende and olde acquaintance in the sayd Colledge, after much talke▪ Barwike said vnto him, Well Palmer, Now thou talkest boldly and stoutly at thy pleasure, if thou were brought to a stake, thou wouldst tell me another tale. Take heed, it is an hard matter to burne. Hereunto Palmer answered. In deed it is an hard matter for him to burne y^t hath his soule linked to his body as a thieffes foote is tied in a paire of fetters. But if a man be once able through Gods helpe to separte and deuide the soule from the body▪ for him it is no harder a thing to burne, thē for me to eat this crumme of bread.

¶A true Copy of the Confession of Patricke Patingham sent out of Newgate to certayn of his friends.

I Patricke Patingham, being condemned for the veritie of Gods trueth that is to say in confessing of one God,* which was the creatour of all things visible and inuisible and also that he made those by his sonne, whome he hath made heyre of all thinges. And also I confesse, that he is the onely begotten sonne of God, in whome we haue redemption, euen the forgeuenes of sinnes. And also in confessing Gods most holy Church, being builded vpon the foundation of the Apostles, and Prophetes Iesus Christ being the head corner stone. In whome sayth S. Paule euerie building coupled together groweth to an holy temple in the Lord, in whome I beleeeue I am builded together as a member and made an habitation for God in the spirite. And also I confesse that Christ is the head of the holy Church, as S. Paule sayth, and that God is Christs head.

And also I had x. articles that is to say agaynst theyr wicked traditions and commaundementes whiche they vse, whiche are agaynst the commaundementes of God, whereof they did condemne me not suffering me to speake in the consistory house, but condemning me not my cause heard. But yet I did protest vnto them, that their Church or synagoge is of Sathan, that is to say, Sathan beyng the head thereof. Furthermore, my friend or friendes vnknown, I haue receiued your letter and red it ouer, wherin you say that I am in a blasphemous errour. In deede friends I confesse, that it is an error. If you will make my beliefe, that is to say, that Christ is the sonne of the liuyng God, to be an errour, and to beleeeue that there is one god as S. Paule saith, and one mediatour betwixt God and man, euen the man Christ Iesus. And although there bee that are called Gods, whether in heauen or in earth, as there be Gods many and Lordes many, yet vnto vs is there but one God which is the father, of whome are all things, and we in hym, and one Lord Iesus Christ, by whom are all thyngs, and we by him. I beleeeue that there is but one Lord, one fayth, one Baptisme, and one God in all, and aboue all, and thorough all, which onely God as S. Paule sayeth, worketh in all creatures that beleeeue in him, and speaketh in them as S. Paule sayeth: God in tymes past diuersly and many wayes spake vnto the fathers by prophets, but in these last daies he spake vnto vs by his sonne whom he hath made heire of all thyngs. My friend or friends, be it known vnto you, that this is no errour as ye suppose, but it is the truth of Gods will, that we should beleeeue as S. Iohn sayth: That Christ Iesus Page 2142 is the sonne of the liuyng God, and in so beleeuynge wee should haue euerlasting lyfe. Thus with loue I write vnto you, praying God night and day to deliuer you frō euill which is in you, and to keepe you from it. Wherefore my friend or friendes, you are not crucified with Christ, you are not dead with him as concerning sinne, you are not graffed with him in Baptisme, nor you know not god nor his sonne whome he hath sent, nor his commaundements which he hath commaunded, and yet will ye teach other, with most hearty prayer praying to God for you continually.

Patrike Patingham.

A note of a certaine letter of Wil. Tymmes.

GRace, mercy, and peace, from God the father, through the mercies of his deare sonne Iesus Christ,* our Lord and onely Sauour, with the comfort of his holy spirite, that as you haue full godly begun, euen so to continue to the end, to the glory of God and your euerlasting comfort, which thing to do I pray God to geue you grace, who is the geuer of all good and perfect gifts, to the glory of hys holy name, Amen.

My dere sisters, after most hartly commendations vnto you, and also most hartly thanks geuing vnto you for all the great kyndnesse that you haue always shewed vnto me most vnworthy of the same. I certifie you that I am very glad to heare of your good health, which I pray God long to continue to his glory. And especially I doe much reioyce in your most godly constancie in the Gospell of Christ, which is the power of God vnto saluation, vnto so many as beleuee it. Therefore my deare hartes goe forward as you haue godly begunne, for the tyme will come that these cruell tyrants which now so cruelly persecuteth the true members of Christ, shall say for very anguish of mynde, These are they whom we sometyme had in derision and iested vppon.* We fooles thought their lyfe to haue bene very madnesse, and their ende to haue bene without honour. But lo how they are counted among the children of God, and their portion is among the Saints, therefore we haue erred from the way of truth. The light of righteousnes hath not shined vnto vs, and the sonne of vnderstandyng rose not vpon vs. We haue wried our selues in the way of wickednesse and destruction. Tedious wayes haue we gone, but as for the way of the Lord we haue not knowen it. What good hath our pride done vnto vs, or what profit hath the pompe of riches brought vs. All these things hath passed away as a shadow, or as a Messenger running before. As a sheepe that passeth ouer the waues of the water, which when it is gone, by the trace thereof cannot be found, neither the path in the flouds. &c. For as soone as we were borne, we began inordinately to drawe to our ende, and haue shewed no token of vertue, but are consumed in our owne wickednesse. Such wordes shall they that thus haue sinned, speake in the hell, &c. But the righteous shall lyue for euermore, their reward is also w^t the Lord, and their remembraunce with the highest: therfore shall they receiue a glorious kingdome, and a beautifull crowne at the Lordes hand, for with his right hande shall he couer them, and with his holy arme shall he defend them, &c. The soules of the righteous are in the hāds of God,* and the paynes of death shall not touch them, but in the sight of the vnwyse they appeare to die, and their end is taken for very destruction, but they are in rest. And though they suffer payne before men,* yet is their hope full of immortalitie. They are punished but in few thynges, neuerthelesse in many things shall they be wel rewarded: for God prooueth them and findeth them meete for hymselfe, yea as the golde in the fornace doth he try them, and receiueth them as a burnt offering: and when the tyme commeth, they shall be looked vppon, the righteous shall shine as the sparkes that runneth through the red bushe, they shall iudge the nations and haue dominion ouer the people, and their Lord shal raigne for euer. They that put their trust in hym shall vnderstand the truth, and such as be faithfull will agree vnto hym in loue, and he shall be a pillar in the temple of God, and shall no more go out, and there shall be written vppon him the name of God. And they shall lye vnder the aultar (which is Christ) crying w^t a lowd voyce, saying: How long tariest thou Lord, holy and true, to iudge and auenge our bloud on them y^t dwell on the earth, and they shall haue long white garmentes geuen vnto them, and it shall be sayd vnto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, til the number of their fellowes and brethren of them that should bee killed as they were, were fulfilled. For as S. Iohn sayth, they are worthy that thus ouercommeth, to bee clothed in white aray, and their names shall not bee put out of the booke of lyfe, but shall be seperated from the Gotes and set on Christes right hand, hearing his sweet and comfortable voice, whē he shall say, Come ye blessed of my Father, and possesse the kingdome prepared for you from the beginnyng of the world: And the very redy way to obtaine the same, is as our maister Christ saith, to forsake our selues, takyng vp our crosse followyng our maister Christ, which for the ioy that was set before him, abode the crosse, and despised the shame, and is set downe on the throne of the right hand of God: therefore let vs follow his example in sufferyng for his worde, seeyng that hee of his mercifull goodnesse suffered so muche for vs when wee were his enemies, for it was our sinne that killed Christ, and by his death hath made vs on lyue. Therefore with ioy seeing all these his merciful benefites purchased for vs onely by his death and bloudshedding: Let vs with boldnesse confesse his holy word before this wicked generation, euen to death, and we be called thereto, and so be well assured that our lyues be not in the hands of men, but in Gods handes. Therefore my deare sisters, as you haue godly begun, so go forward euen through many tribulations, euen into the euerlasting kingdom of heauen. To the which God the father of all mercy for his deare sonne Christes sake, bring both you and all yours, Amen.

Yours to commaund, to my poore power. Wil. Tymmes.

Continue in prayer,

And obtaine your desire,

Praying for you as I know that you do for me.

¶Another Sermon of M. Latimer concerning his playing at Cardes.

NOW you haue heard what is ment by this first carde, and how you ought to play with it,* I purpose againe to deale vnto you another carde, almost of the same sute: for they be of so nigh affinitie, that one cannot be wel plaied without the other. The first Carde declared that you should not kill, which might bee done diuers wayes, as beyng angry with your neighbour, in mynde, in countenance, in word, or deed. It declared also how you should subdue the passions of Ire, and so cleare euermore your selues from them: and where this first Card doth kill in you these stubburne Turkes of Ire: This second Carde will not all onely they should be mortified in you, but that you your selues shall cause them to bee likewyse mortified in your neighbour, if that your sayd neighbour hath bene thorough your occasion mooued vnto Ire, either in countenance, word or deed. Now let vs heare therfore the tenour of this Carde.

When thou makest thy oblation at myne aultar, & there doest remember that thy neighbor hath any thing against thee, lay downe there thy oblation, and go first and reconcile thy neighbour, and then come and offer thy oblation. This Card was spoken by Christ as testifieth S. Marke in his v. chapter, against all such that do presume to come vnto the church to make oblation vnto GOD either by prayer, or any other deede of charitie, not hauyng their neighbors reconciled. Reconciling is as much to say, as to restore thy neighbor vnto charitie, which by thy words or deeds is mooued against thee: then if so be it that thou hast spoken to, or by thy neighbour, wherby he is mooued to Ire or wrath, thou must lay downe thy oblation. Oblations be prayers, almes deeds, or any worke of charitie: these bee called oblations to God. Laye downe therefore thine oblation, begin to do none of these foresaid workes before thou goest vnto thy neighbor, and confesse thy fault vnto him, declaryng thy mynde, that if thou hast offended him, thou art glad and willing to make him amendes, as far forth as thy words and substaunce will extend, requiring him not to take it at the worst. Thou art sory in thy mynd that thou shouldest be the occasion of his offending. What maner of Carde is this will some say, why? What haue I to do with my neighbours or brothers malice? As Caine said: Haue I the keeping of my brother, or shall I aunswer for him and for his faultes? This were no reason: As for my selfe, I thanke God I owe no man malice nor displeasure, if other owe me any, at their owne perill. Let euery man answer for himselfe: Nay sir not so, as you may vnderstand by this Card: for it sayth. If thy neighbor hath any thing, any malice against thee, through thine occasion, lay euen downe saith Christ thine oblation: pray not to me, do no good deeds for me, but go first vnto thy neighbour, and bring him againe vnto my flocke whiche hath forsaken y^e same through thy naughty words, mocks, Page 2143 scornes, or disdainous countenance, and so forth: & then come and offer thine oblation, then do thy deuotion, then do thy almes deeds, then pray, if thou wilt haue me heare thee. O good Lord this is an hard reckoning, that I must go and seeke him out that is offended with me, before I pray or do any good deed. I cannot go vnto him. Peraduenture he is a 100. miles from me beyond the seas, or els I cannot tell where: and if he were here nigh, I woulde with al my hart go vnto him. This is a lawfull excuse before God on this fashion, That thou wouldest in thy hart be glad to reconcile thy neighbour, if he were present, and that thou thinkest in thy heart when so euer thou shalte meete with him, to go vnto him and require him charitably to forgeue thee, and so neuer entend to come from him vntill the tyme that you both depart one from the other true brethren in Christ. Yet peraduenture there be some in the world that be so diuelish and so hard harted, that they will not apply in no condition vnto charitie. For all that, do that lyeth in thee by all charitable meanes to bring him to vnitie: If he will in no wayes apply therevnto, thou mayest be sorrowfull in thy hart that by thine occasiō that man or woman continueth in such a damnable state, this notwithstanding, If thou do the best that lyeth in thee to reconcile hym, accordyng to some Doctours mynde, thou art discharged towards God. Neuerthelesse, S. Augustine doubteth in this case whether thy oblations, praiers or good deedes, shal auaille thee before God or no, vntil thy neighbour come againe to good state, whome thou haste brought out of the way, doth this noble doctor doubt therein? what ayleth vs to be so bold, and count it but a small fault or none, to bring another man out of patience for euery trifle that standeth not with our minde? You may see what a grievous thing this is to bring another man out of patience, that peraduenture you cannot bring in againe with all the goods that you haue: for surely after the opinion of great wise men, friendship once broken will be neuer well made whole agayne. Wherefore you shall heare what Christ sayth vnto such persones: Sayeth Christ, I came downe into this worlde, and so tooke on mee bitter passion for mans sake, by the merites whereof I intended to make vnitie and peace in mankynd, to make man brother vnto me, and so to expel the dominion of Sathan the deuill, which worketh nothyng els but dissention: & yet now there bee a great number of you that haue professed my name, and say you be christian men which doe rebel against my purpose and mynde. I goe about to make my fold, you go about to breake the same and kill my flocke. How darest thou (sayeth Christ) presume to come vnto my aultar, vnto my church, or vnto my presence, to make oblation vnto me, that takest on thee to spoile my lambs? I goe about like a good shepeheard to gather them together: and thou doest the contrary, euermore ready to deuide and loose them. Who made thee so bolde to meddle w^t my silly beasts which I bought so dearely with my precious bloud? I warne thee out of my sight, come not in my presence. I refuse thee and all thy workes, except thou goe and bring home againe my lambes which thou hast loste: wherefore, if thou thy selfe intend to be one of myne, lay euen down by and by thine oblation, and come no further toward mine aultar, but goe and seeke them without any questions, as it becommeth a true and faithfull seruaunt? A true and faithfull seruaunt when so euer his maister cōmaundeth him to do any thing, he maketh no stoppes ne questions, but goeth foorth with a good mynde: and it is not vnlike, he continuing in such a good mynde and will, shall well ouercome all dangers and stoppes, whatsoever betides him in his iourney, and bring to passe effectually his maisters will and pleasure. In the contrary, a slouthfull seruaunt when his maister commaundeth him to any thing, by and by he wil aske questions, where, whē, which way? and so foorth, and so he putteth euery thing in doubt, that although both his errand and way be neuer so plain, ye• by his vntoward and slouthfull behauiour, his maisters commaundement is either vndone quite, or els so done, that it shall stand to no good purpose. Go now forth with the good seruaunt, and aske no such questions, & put no doubts, be not ashamed to do thy maisters and Lordes will, and commaundement. Go as I said vnto thy neighbour that is offended by thee, and reconcile him as is aforesaid, whom thou hast lost by thy vnkynde wordes, by thy scornes, mockes, and other disdainous words and behauiours, and be not nise to aske of him the cause why hee is displeased with thee: require of him charitably to remit and cease not till you both depart one from the other true brethren in Christ. Do not lyke the slouthfull seruant, thy maisters message with cautels and doubts: come not to thy neighbour whom thou hast offended, and geue hym a peny woorth of ale, or a banket, and so make hym a fayre countenance, thinking that by thy drinke or dinner, he wil shew the like countenance. I graunt you may both laugh and make good cheere, and yet there may remaine a bag of rustie malice, twentie yere old, in thy neighbours bosom, when he departeth from thee with a good countenance, thou thinkest all is well then. But nowe I tell th•e it is worse then it was, for by such cloked charitie, where thou doest offend before Christ but once, thou hast offēded twice herein, for now thou goest about to geue Christ a moche, if he would take it of thee: Thou thinkest to blynde thy maister Christes commaundement. Beware, doe not so, for at length he will ouermatch thee and take thee tardie whatsoever thou be, and so as I sayd, it should bee better for thee not to do his message on this fashion, for it wyll stand thee in no purpose. What? some will say, I am sure he loueth me well inough. He speaketh faire to my face, yet for all that thou mayest be deceiued. It prooueth not true loue in a man to speak faire. If he loue thee with his mind and hart, he loueth thee with his eies, with his tong, with his feete, with his hands and his body: for all these parts of a mans body be obedient to the will and mynd. He loueth thee with his eyes that looketh chearefully on thee, when thou meetest with him, and is glad to see thee prosper and do well: he loueth thee with his tong that speaketh well by thee behynde thy backe, or geueth thee good counsaile: he loueth thee with his feete that is willyng to go to helpe thee out of trouble and businesse. Hee loueth thee with his hands that will helpe thee in tyme of necessitie, by geuing some almes deedes, or with any other occupation of the hand. He loueth thee with his body, that will labour with his body, or put his body in daunger to do good for thee, or to deliuer thee from aduersitie, and so forth with the other mēbers of thy body. And if thy neighbour will do according to these sayings, then thou mayest thinke that he loueth thee wel, and thou in likewise ought to declare and open thy loue vnto thy neighbour in lyke fashion, or els you be bound one to reconcile the other, till this perfect loue be ingendered amongst you. It may fortune thou wilte say, I am content to doe the best for my neighbour that I can, sauing my selfe harmelesse, I promise thee Christ will not heare this excuse: for he himselfe suffred harme for our sakes, and for our saluatiō was put to extreme death. I wisse if it had pleased him, hee myght haue saued vs and neuer felt payne, but in suffring paines and death, he did geue vs example, and teach vs how wee should do one for another, as he did for vs all: For as hee sayth himselfe, he that will be myne, let him deny himselfe and folow me in bearing my crosse and suffring my pains. Wherefore we must needes suffer paine with Christ to doe our neighbours good, as well with the body and all hys members, as with hart and mynd.

Now I trust you wot what your Card meaneth, let vs see how that we can play with the same. Whensoever it shall happen you to goe and make your oblation vnto God, aske of your selues this question, who art thou? the answer, as you know is, I am a christian man: then you must agayne aske vnto your selfe what Christ requireth of a christen man? by and by cast down your trompe, your Hart, and looke first of one Card, thē of an other. The first Carde telleth thee thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not bee angry, thou shalt not be out of patience. This done, thou shalt looke if there be any mo Cardes to take vppe, and if thou looke well, thou shalt see an other Carde of the same sute, wherein thou shalt know that thou art bounde to reconcile thy neighbour. Then cast thy trompe vnto them both, and gather them all three together, and do according to the vertue of thy Cards, and surely thou shalt not lose. Thou shalt first kill the great Turkes, and discomfite and thrust them downe. Thou shalt againe fetch home Christes sheepe that thou hast lost, whereby thou mayest goe both patiently, and with a quiet mynd vnto the Church, and make thy oblation vnto God, and then without dout he will heare thee. But yet Christ will not accept our oblation, although we be in patience, & haue reconciled oure neighbour. If that our oblation be made of another mans substāce, but it must be our own. See therefore y^t thou hast gotten thy goods according to the laws of God and of thy prince. For if thou getst thy goods by polling & extortiō, or by any other vnlawfull wayes, then if thou offer 1000. pound of it, it will stand thee in no good effect, for it is not thine. In this poynt a great number of executours do offend, for when they be made riche by other mens goodes, then they will take vpon them to build Churches, to geue ornamentes vnto God, and his aulter, to gild sayntes, & to do many good works therwith: but it shalbe all in their owne name, and for their owne glory. Wherefore (sayeth Christ) they haue in this world their reward, and so their oblations be not their owne, nor be not acceptable before Page 2144 God. An other wayes God will refuse thy voluntary oblation, as thus: If so be it that thou hast gotten neuer so truly thy goods, according both to the lawes of God and man, and hast with the same goodes not relieued thy poore neighbour, when thou hast seene him hungry, thirstie, and naked, he will not take thy oblation when thou shalt offer the same, because he will say vnto thee: When I was hūgry, thou gauest me no meat: When I was thirstie, thou gauest me no drinke: and when I was naked, thou didst not clothe me. Wherefore I will not take thy oblation, because it is none of thine. I left it thee to relieue thy poore neighbors, and thou hast not therein done according vnto this my commaundement, misericordiam volo & non sacrificium, I had rather haue mercy done, then sacrifice or oblation. Wherefore vntil thou doest the one more then the other, I will not accept thine oblation. Euermore bestow the greatest partes of thy good in workes of mercy, & the lesse part in voluntary workes. Voluntary workes bee called all maner of offering in the Church, except your foure offering dayes: and your tythes, setting vp candles, gilding and paynting, building of Churches, geuing of ornamēts, going on pilgrimages, making of high wayes and such other be called voluntary workes, which workes be of themselves marvellous good, and conuenient to bee done. Necessary workes, and workes of mercy are called the commaundementes, the foure offering dayes, your tithe and such other that longeth to the commaundementes: and workes of mercy consisteth in relieuing and vysiting thy poore neighbors. Now then, if men be so foolish of themselves, that they will bestow the most part of theyr good in voluntary workes, which they be not bounde to keepe, but willingly, and by theyr deuotion, and leaue the necessary workes vndone, which they are bounde to doe, they and all theyr voluntary workes are like to goe vnto euerlasting damnation. And I promise you, if you builde a hundred Churches, geue as much as you can make, to gilding of Sayntes, and honouring of the Church, and if thou goe as many pilgrimages as thy body can well suffer, and offer as great candles as okes, if thou leaue the workes of mercye and the commaundementes vndone, these workes shall nothing auaille thee. No doubt the voluntary workes be good, & ought to be done: but yet they must be so done, that by theyr occasion the necessary workes, and the workes of mercy be not decayed, and forgotten: if thou wilt builde a glorious Church vnto God, see first your selues to be in charity with your neighbours, & suffer not them to be offended by your works. Thē when you come into your parish Church, you bring with you the holy temple of God: as Saynt Paule sayth, you your selues be the very holy temples of God, and Christ sayth by his Prophet: in you I wil rest, and intend to make my mansion and abiding place: agayne, if you list to gild and paynt Christ in your Churches, and honour him in vestimentes, see that before your eyes the poore people dye not for lacke of meat, drinke, and clothing. Then do you decke the very true temple of God, and honour him in rich vestures, that will neuer be worne, and so forth vse your selues according vnto the commaundementes: and then finally set vp your candles, & they will report what a glorious light remayneth in your hartes: for it is not sitting to see a dead man light candles. Then I say go your pilgrimages, builde your materiall Churches, doe all your voluntary workes, & they will then represent vnto God, and testify with you, that you haue prouided him a gloryous place in your hartes. But beware I say agayne, that you doe not runne so farre into your voluntarie workes that ye do quite forget your necessary workes of mercye, which you are bound to keepe: you must haue euer a good respect vnto the best and worthiest workes toward God, to be done first and with more efficacy, and the other to be done secondariely. Thus if you doe with the other that I haue spoken of before, you may come according to the tenor of your cardes, and offer your oblations and prayers to our Lord Iesu Christ, who will both heare and accept them to your euerlasting ioy and glory, to the whiche he bring vs, and all those whom he suffered deathe for. Amen.

¶A note of William Gie.

ONe William Gie seruant with Mayster Reuet marchant, bought a Bible and seruice booke of Richard Waterson, who then dwelt with maister Duixle in Pauls Churchyarde, and one Spilman bound the booke: and when the sayd Gye had enquired for the sayde Richard to haue his booke at Duxele, aunswere was made that hee was not within, and so the sayde Gie went his way to Spilmans for the booke: and because it was not done left it there, and immediately searche was made in Spilmans house, and the sayd bible and seruice booke was founde & caryed to Boner then Bishop of London, hee hauing the bookes commaunded Spilman for the binding thereof to Lollardes Tower, and as Cluny went for the key therof Spilman conueyed himselfe awaye. After that Waterson and Gie being apprehended by Robin Caly, Iohn Hil, & Iohn Auales, and being two dayes in the Counter, were brought before Boner and other Commissioners. Beyng examined D. Story demanded Gye: Wherefore he bought the Bible. He answered to serue God withal. Then said Boner: our Lady matines would serue a christen man to serue God. The Bible sayd Story, would breed heresies: a bibble babel were more fit thee. So they concluded that eyther of them shoulde haue xl. stripes lacking one, and Boner sayd it was the law. And they sayd to Waterson, if he would pay xl. poūd, he should be released of his stripes at length they came to x.li. & when they saw he would not they made a warrāt to mayster Grafton, and sent Waterson and Gie to Bride well to be beaten vpon the Crosse. And because the matter shoulde not be slightly handled, Story was sent with thē to see it done. Gie being whipped vpon the Crosse, intercession was made that he might be forgeuen part of his penaunce.

¶A note of Michaels wyfe.

Michaels wife afore mentioned pag. 1893. being prisoner in Ipswicke for religion,* resorted dayly from the prison to her husbandes house, and returned agayn, keeping fayth and promise. And her husband thereat beyng fearefull, she would comfort him, saying: she came not to trouble him, neither shoulde hee susteyne trouble by her. Wherefore she would will him to be of good cheare, for her comming was of good will to see him and her children, & not to bring him into trouble, but to shew her duety therin while she might haue libertie.

¶A note of Iohn Spicer.

IN Queene Maryes time, there was one Iohn Spicer, of whome mention is made pag. 1894. he being at the stake ready to geue his lyfe for the truth,* a bagge of gonpowder was brought him by his sonne. And an other stāding by (one named maister Beckinham) tooke the gonpowder of his sonne, and put it vnder the girdle of y^e sayd Spicer, and exhorted him to be strong in the Lord: also diuers of the sheriffes seruauents comforted him in like maner, and desired him not to faynt. Unto whome Spicer answered. Doubt ye not of me (sayth he) my soule is quiet: but be you strong and stand fast in the Lord Iesus, and commit your selfe to him in y^e confession of his holy name and profession of his truth.

¶A note of Mandrell.

MAndrell standing at the stake as is mentioned before, pag. 1894.* Doctor Ieffray the Chauncellour spake to him, wishing him to yelde to the Doctoures, who many hundreth yeares had taught otherwise then hee doth beleue. &c. Unto whome Mandrell answered. M. Chauncellour sayd he, trouble me with none of youre Doctours whatsoever they say: but bring me the booke of God the olde Testament and the new, and I will aunswere you. What sayest thou Mandrel (quod he) by the sayntes in the Church, the image of our Lady, of the crucifixe, and other holy Sayntes? be they not necessary. &c. yes M. Chauncellour, sayd hee, very necessary to rost a shoulder of mutton. Then Doctor Billing, a frier once, standing by, sayd. Mayster Chauncellour, quod hee, heare howe these heretickes speake agaynst the crucifixe and the holy crosse, and yet the holy Crosse is mentioned in all the tongues, both Hebrew, Greek, and Latine. For in Latine it is called t. in Greeke tau &c. Whereupon one Thomas Gilford, a marchaunt of Poole standing by, sayd: ah mercifull Lord, sayd he, is not this a maruellous matter for a poore man thus to be charged and put to the paynes of fire for t. tau?

When Maundrell and Spicer were examined before the Chauncellour, the Chauncellour called them, saying. Come on, come on, sayth he, thou Spicer art to blame, for thou haste taught Maundrell these heresies. Thou arte by thy occupation a Brickeleyer: Yea that I am. And can sing in the Quyre: Yea, that I can sayth he. And can play on the Orgaynes. True sayth hee. Well then sayde the Chauncellour, and thou hast marred this poore man and hast taught him all these heresies. No Mayster Chauncellour (quoth he) I haue not taught him, but I haue read to him. He is able thanks be to God, to teache both you and me.

¶A note of Elizabeth Pepper.

*Elizabeth Pepper before mentioned, pag. 1916. when she was burned at Stratford, was xj. weekes gone w^t child, as she then testified to one Bosomes wife, who then vnloosed her neckerchiefe, saying moreouer whē she was asked, why she did not tell them, aunswered, why (quoth she) they know it well enough. Oh suche is the bloody hartes of this cruell generation, that no occasion can stay them from their mischieuous murdering of the saintes of the Lord, that truly professe Christ crucified onely, and alone, for the satisfaction of their sinnes.

¶A note of one confessing Gods truth at the Gallowes.

A Notorious fellone, one Dick Adams, beyng vpon the gallowes making his confession, and ready to be caste downe from the ladder, was desired at that instant by one maistres Harries the Grammer schoolemaisters wyfe, to remember the blessed sacrament before he died, to whome the said Adams sayde: marrie maistresse neuer in better tyme, who went vp to the toppe of the ladder, and sayde it was the most abhominable idoll that euer was, and willed all men to take it so: for we haue bene greatly deceyued thereby. Whereupon the Shiriffe caused him to holde his peace, and to take his death patiently. He went down to his place and was cast from the ladder, speaking to his last worde, that it was an abhominable Idoll, his bodye therefore was buried out of the Church yarde by the high way, who although he was a chiefe in his life, yet he earnestly repented thereof, that I doubt not but he dyed the childe of God, and not vnworthy to be put in the register of the Lordes accepted Confessors.

¶A note of Gertrude Crokehay.

IN the late dayes of queene Mary, among other straūge dealinge of the Papistes with the faythfull,* this is not with the rest to be forgotten that a godly Matrone named Gertrude Crokhay, the wife of Mayster Robert Crokehay dwellinge then at S. Katherins by the Tower of London, absteyned her selfe from the Popish church. And she being in her husbands house it happened in an. 1556. that the foolish popishe Saynt Nicholas went aboute the Parish, which she vnderstanding shut her doores agaynst him, and would not suffer him to come within her house. Then Doctor Mallet hearing therof (and being thē maister of the sayd Saint Katherins) the next day came to her with xx. at his tayle, thinking belike to fray her, and asked why she would not the night before let in Saynt Nicholas, and receiue his blessing. &c. To whom she aunswered thus. Syr, I know no Saynt Nicholas, sayd she, that came hither, Yes quoth Mallet, here was one that represēted S. Nicolas. In deed sir, sayd she, here was one that is my neighbours childe, but not S. Nicholas. For S. Nicholas is in heauen, I was afraide of them that came with him to haue had my purse cutte by them. For I haue heard of men robbed by Saint Nicholas Clerkes. &c. So Mallet perceiuing nothing to be gotten at her handes, went his way as he came, and she for that time so escaped.

Then in an. 1557. a litle before Whitsontide, it happened that the sayd Gertrude aunswered for a childe that was baptised of one Thomas Saunders, whiche childe was christened secretly in a house after the order of the seruice booke in king Edwardes time, and that being shortly knowne to her enemies, she was sought for, which vnderstanding nothing therof, wēt beyond the sea into Gelderland for to see certayne lands that should haue come to her childrē in the right of her first husband, who was a straūger borne. And being there about a quarter of a yeare, at the length comming homeward by Antwarpe, chaunced to meet with one Iohn Iohnson, a dutch man, alias Iohn Dewille of Antwarpe, shipper, who seing her there, went of malice to the Margraue, and accused her to be an Anabaptist, whereby she was taken and caried to prison. The cause why this noughtye man did thus, was for that hee claymed of Mayster Crokhay her husband a piece of money which was not his due, for a shippe, that the sayd master Crokhay bought of him: and for that he could not get it, wrought this displeasure. Well, she being in prison, lay there a fortnight: in whiche time she sawe some, that were Prisoners there, who priuily were drowned in Renishe wine fattes, and after secretly put in sakes and cast into the Riuer. Now she, good woman, thinking to be so serued, tooke thereby such feare that it brought the beginning of her sickenes, of the which at length she dyed.

Then at the last she was called before the Margraue and charged with Anabaptistrie, which shee there vtterly denied, & detested the error, declaring before him in dutch her fayth boldly, without any feare. So the Margraue hearing the same, in the ende being well pleased with her profession, at the sute of some of her frendes deliuered her out of prison, but tooke away her booke, and so she came ouer into England agayne. And being at home in her husbandes house, he thinking to finde meanes to gette her to go abroad, made one Uicars a yeoman of the Tower hys frend, who was great with Boner, to worke that liberty for her. Now this Uicars making meanes to Boner for the same, Boner put the matter ouer to Darbishyre hys Chauncellour, who enioyned her to geue certeyne money to poore folkes, and to goe on the Wednesday and sonday after to Church to Euensong, which she so did, and afterward had such trouble in her conscience thereby, that shee thought verely God had cast her off, and that she shoulde be damned and neuer saued, so not long after this it happened mayster Rough of whom mention is made Page 2034. came to her house,* vnto whō she made mone of her vnquietnes for going to Church, and desired his counsell what she might doe, that should best please God and ease her troubled soule &c. Unto whō M. Rough replied many comfortable sentences of scripture to comfort her, and in the end gaue her counsell to goe to the christian congregation, which secretly the persecuted had, and confesse her fault vnto them, and so to be receiued into theyr felowship agayne: which hearing that, was glad and entended so to do, and so would haue done if sore sicknes had not immediatly preuented the same. But when doctor Mallet heard by one Robert Hemminges, Woodmonger, that she laye very sicke in deed, which Hemminges was her great enemy, he came to her twice to perswade her to recant and to receiue (as the Papistes terme it) the rites of the Church. Unto whom she aunswered she could not, nor would, for that she was subiect to vomit and therefore he would not, (she was sure she sayd) haue her, to cast vp theyr God agayne, as she should do if she did receiue it. And so immediatly vomited in deed, wherfore he seing that, went frō her into the hall to her daughter named Clare sacke, and tolde her, if her mother would not receiue, she should not be buried in christian burial, as he termed it. Then Clare went and tolde her sicke mother what he sayde vnto her. Which hearing the same, spake these wordes following. Oh (sayd she) how happy am I, that I shall not rise wyth them, but agaynst them. Well (quoth she) the earth is the Lordes and all that therein is, and therefore I commit the matter to him. &c.

Shortly hereupon, that is the 27. day of March 1558. the sayd Doctor Mallet came agayne to her with one D. West Queene Maryes Chapleyne. And comming in, hee saluted her, and tolde her that he had brought her a good learned man to perswade her, who was one of y^e queenes Chapleines. &c. and therefore he desired her to heare and beleue him, in that he should say. &c. Then D. West exhorted her to receiue theyr Sacrament, and to be aneled, for he sayd, she was strong enough for it. &c. Unto whom she aunswered, that shee was able and strong enough to receiue it in deede, but she woulde not, for that it was abhominable. &c. Then sayd West, ye be in an ill minde: doe ye thinke to dye a christian woman? yea sayd she that I do. I pray you sayd West, how came you first into that opinion. Mary (sayd she) there he is that first taught it me (meaning D. Mallet) at the mariage of my brother & his sister, where I heard him earnestly preach this doctrine, whiche I now do holde. And if God shall lay our sinnes to our charge, if we repent not, muche more damnable is his offence, being once a publicke Preacher of the same, & now to turne from it. Then Mallet tolde her he was then deceiued, by little newfangled two peny bookes, as you bee now (sayd he) but now I am otherwise perswaded, as I would haue you, and to receiue the Sacrament, whiche if you would, you should, I warrant you be saued, my soule for yours. At those wordes she earnestly desired them to be content, for sayth she, ye be come to rob and to draw me from my Christ, which I tell you truth you shall not doe, for I will neuer consent to you while I liue. When West heard her saye so, he drewe his stoole nigher to heare her speake, and being dronken, he fell downe, whereby Mallet was fayne to helpe him vp agayne, and so immediatly after they departed thence. And the xiiij. day of Aprill next after that, she dyed constantly in the Lord, and yelded her soule and life into his holy handes, with these wordes. Oh Lord into thy handes receiue my soule, and so immediatly gaue vp her life vnto the Lord, to whome be prayse for euer. Amen.

While she was beyond sea, as is sayd before, Mayster Crockhay her husband, by the procurement of D. Mallet, Page 2146 was cited to come before Mayster Hussey the Commissary, who had it not bene for that he made meanes vnto the sayd Hussey before) woulde haue sent him to prison, and bound him in recognisaunce to seeke her out. But he more easily escaped theyr handes by frendship, as before I haue sayd.

Now when D. Mallet heard of her death, M. Crockhay, and one Robert Hemminges, Bailiefe of S. Katherins, being before him for y^e burying of her, he sayd plainely, she should be buried nigh to some high way, & a marke set vp, in token that an hereticke was buried there. Then the sayd Hemminges tolde him, the hogges would scrape her vp, which were not decent nor best, and M. Crockhay intreated she might be buried in his Garden, whiche at length he graunted, and willed the sayde Hemminges to set it done, and that he should be sure he buried her there in deede.

After, when the corpes was brought to the sayd Garden, the sayd Robert Hemminges the Bailife would needes see it opened, which when the couer was taken of, the wife of the sayd Hemmings put her hand wⁱn the sheete, & felt the hayre of the sayde dead corpes, saying: now will I iustify that she is here, and so she did, telling Mallet that those her handes did feelee her: this is the effecte of thys Story.

Now since the comming in of Queene Elizabeth the sayd D. Mallet came to the sayd M. Crockhay and asked him forgeuenes, alleading this verse of the Poet.

¶Amantium irae amoris redintegratio est.

The Lord geue him repentaunce, and grace to seeke perfect frendwip with him, if it be his blessed will. Amen.

¶A note of William Woode.

ACcording as I haue sent vnto you the true recorde of my examination before the Doctors aboue mētioned, so I thought it not inconuenient to send you likewise certayne uotes of my other two deliuerances in Queene Maryes time, and this I doe not as God knoweth to get any prayse to my selfe or to reproche any other, but that God may be glorified in his workes, and that our brethrē may knowe that though there be, many times, but little help in earth,* yet that there is more in heauen: About a month after my examination, there was one Apleby and hys wife, that were persecuted from Maydstone in Kent came to my house in Strowde & desired me that he might haue a place in my house for him and his wife for a tyme, because persecution was so hote, that hee coulde no longer stay there, and I at his instaunce let him haue a place with me, but within a fortnight after the Papists espyed him and complayned of him to the Bishop of Rochester, and the bishop sent his chiefe man called Raphe Crowch, and he caryed him to Rochester before the Byshop & the sayd Apleby stood in the defence of the trueth boldly, and the Bishoppe sent both hym and his wife to the Iayle of Maidstone, and there they were burned for the Testimony of the Gospell of God. And the Friday fortnight after I was in the market at Rochester talking with an other man, and the sayde Raphe Crowch was sent for me and he comming within a stones cast of me where I was talking with my neighbour George Smally, and one William Stanley a papist dwelling also in Strowde, met with the sayd Crowch, and they two talked together a whyle, and I doubted that they talked of me because many times in theyr talke they looked on me, and then the said Raphe Crowch went ouer the streete to an other officer or constable whiche knewe not me, and sent the sayde Constable for me, and comming for me, knowing my neyghbour, George Smally tooke him in the steade of me, and caryed him to the Byshop, and when he came before hym the Byshop sayd to the officers this is not he knaue, thys is not he knaue, and the bishop checked the Mayor & hys officers and sayd that they mocked him, because he caryed the other man for me, suche was the mighty prouidence of God to defend me, and the Mayor the same night sent 40. Billes and menne with other weapons to beset my house to take me, but the Lord kept me from them and deliuered me out of theyr handes, to hym be glory therefore, Amen.

The third time that the Lorde deliuered me was on Easter day next after, I had bene at London all the Lent and on Easter euen at night I came home to Strowde to to my wife, and a childe of three yeares olde tolde one of the neighbours that her father was come home. And on Easter day after theyr popishe euensong was done, came Maister Read Thomas Crowch brother to the abouesaid Raphe Crowch, William Stanley, Thomas Bettes, Lionell Newman and Roger Braunche, with a 60. people or there aboutes and searched my house very straightly for me, but as Gods prouidence was, there was mault a drying vppon the Kell, and they searched so narrowly for me that I was glad to heaue vp a corner of y^e hayre wheron the mault lay, and went into the Kell hole, and there stood till they were gone, and so I escaped from them, but within an houre after there came a woman to my wyfe to borrow a brush, and spyed me thorough the key hole of a dore, and she carying tidinges abroad. Immediately came a great company of men and beset my house rounde about, and I said to my wife, you see that these foure men seeke for my life, that is, Maister Read, Thomas Crowch William Stanley, and Thomas Bettes, for I doe thinke that none of the rest will lay handes on me, and therefore I pray thee wife follow these 4. men, and talke lowde to them y^t I may heare & so escape, & if they search on y^e backe side I may auoyd on y^e street side, & be of good comfort for our liues are in Gods hand, and though there be little helpe here on earth, yet there is help enough from heauen; and when these men were searching on the backside, I went into the streete, among as I gesse an 100. people, and none of them layd handes on me, neyther sayde they anye thing to me, so I went out of the towne, & lay there at an honest mans house at the parish of Cobham that night.

And at that same time also two of my neighbours, honest men and of good wealth, the one called Iohn Pemmet a fisherman, the other named Iohn Bayly a glouer, because they came not to theyr popish Church to buy none of their Idolatrous wares, were complayned of to the Iustices, who did binde them to aunswere for theyr fayth before the Iudges at the ascises whiche were holden at midsommer after as I remember at Rochester in y^e pallace yard, and there was at that tyme a sayle cloth of a ship tyed to the top of the Byshops Pallace wall to keep away the sonne from the Iudges because it was hote, and the winde blew and shooke the sayle, so that when these two men were called to be examined, and when they shoulde haue aunswered, there fell from the top of the wall, 3. or 4. great stones vpon the Iudges neckes, so that some of thē whiche sate on the Benche were sore hurt and maymed so that they arose sodenly all amased and departed, and the two men were deliuered.

The history of Iohn Alcocke.

THis Iohn Alcocke or Aucock, of whome mention is made before pag. 1561. was a very faythfull and honest man, by his occupation a woad setter, singularly wel learned in y^e holy scriptures, and in all his conuersation a iust and righteous man, that feared God, and studyed to do in deed that thing that he had learned in the scriptures. Nowe after that sir Richard Yeaman was driuen away, and the people on sondayes and other dayes came to the Church, and had no man to teach them any thinge (for as yet person Newall was not come to Hadley to dwel, nor had gotten any Curate. Besides that, the lawes made by king Eward were in force, and the latin mumblings not yet receaued euery where.) Iohn Alcocke therefore tooke the english booke vsed by king Edward, exhorting the people to pray with him, and so red certain prayers in english before them: and moreouer hee gaue them godly lessons and exhortations out of the chapters that he red vnto them. For this, the Bishoppe of Winchester Steuen Gardiner sent for him, cast him into Newgate at London where after many examinations and troubles, for that he woulde not submitte himselfe to aske forgeuenesse of the Pope, and to be reconciled to the romish religion, he was cast into the lower doungeon, where with euill keeping, and sicknesse of the house he dyed in prison. Thus dyed he a martyr of Christes veritie, whiche hee hartely loued and constantly confessed, and receaued the garland of a well foughten battell at the hand of the Lorde. His body was cast out and buried in a dounghill, for the Papists would in all thinges be like themselues: therfore would they not so much as suffer the dead bodyes to haue honest and conuenient sepulture.

He wrote two Epistles to Hadley, whiche followe here.

The first Epistle of Iohn Alcocke.

GRace be with you, and peace from the father and our Lord Iesus Christ, which gaue himself for our sinnes, that he might deliuer vs from this present euill world,* according Page 2147 to the will of God our father, to whome be praise for euer and euer, Amen.

Oh my brethren of Hadley, why are ye so soone turned from them which called you in the grace of Christ vnto an other doctrine, whiche is nothing els but that there be some which trouble you, and entēd to peruert the gospell of the Lord and sauour Iesus Christ. Neuerthelesse though these shoulde come vnto you that haue bene your true preachers, and preache an other way of saluatiō, then by Iesus Christes death and passion, hold them accursed. Yea if it were an Aungell came from heauen, and woulde tell you that the sacrifice of Christes body vpon the crosse,* oute for all euer, for all the sinnes of all those which shalbe saued, were not sufficient: accursed be he. If he were an aungell, or what soeuer he were, that would say that our seruice in English were not right Gods seruice, but will better allow that moste wicked mumming that you now haue.* Those what soeuer they be, except they doe repent & allow the Gospell of Iesus Christ, they shall neuer come into that kingdome, that Christ hath prepared for those y^t be his. Wherefore my dearly beloued brethren of Hadley, remember you well what you haue bene taught heretofore of the Lorde Gods true and simple Prophetes,* that onely did wish your health and consolation.

Do not my good brethren, I pray you, forget the comfortable worde of our Lorde and sauour Iesus Christe. Come vnto me all you that are troubled and loden,* with the daungers that yeare in these stormy dayes, and heare my wordes and beleue them, and you shal see the vnspeakable comfort that you shal receue. The Lord is my shepheard,* sayth the Prophet Dauid, so y^t I cā want nothyng. He feedeth his sheepe in greene pastures, and leadeth thē vnto cleare and holsome waters of comfort. I am that good Shepheard sayth our Sauour Iesus Christe: for I geue my lyfe for my sheepe,* and I knowe my sheepe, and my sheepe know me: but my sheepe will not know an hyerling: for hee careth not but onely for his God the belly, and so seeketh the destruction of theyr soules. Therefore beware of hirelinges, you that count your selues the sheep of Iesus Christ.* Be sure that ye know his voyce and obey it, and be not deceiued through straunge voyces, but goe from them, and earnestly abide by your professiō that you haue made in your baptisme, and shrinke not from it. For if you do, you shall declare your selues to be a vayne people, and without vnderstanding. And for this cause doth God plague his people, and suffereth them to be deceiued with false Prophets & wicked men,* I pray you note what that Prophet Esay sayth to the people of those dayes, because they were slipping from the Lord theyr God, which had done so maruellous workes for them, as you well do know in the historyes of the Bible. Heare O heauen (sayeth he) and harken thou earth, for the Lord hath spoken, I haue nourished and brought vppe children, but they haue done wickedly agaynst me. The Oxe hath knowne hys owner, and the Asse his maysters Cribbe: but Israel hath receiued no knowledge. My people hath no vnderstanding. Alas for this sinnefull nation, a people of great iniquity, a froward generation, vnnaturall children. They haue forsaken the Lorde, they haue prouoked his wrath & are gone backward.* Harken also what the Prophet Hieremy sayth. Be astonyed ye heauens, be afrayde and ashamed at suche a thing, sayeth the Lorde, for my people hath done two euilles. They haue forsaken me, the well of the waters of life, and digged them brokē pittes that can hold no water. Is Israel a bond seruaunt or one of the householde of the Lord? Why then is he so spoiled? Why then do they roare and cry vpō him as a Lyon? Understand those thinges now in these dayes that the Prophet spake of thē, O my brethren of Hadley. Why commeth this plague vpon vs, that we haue now in these dayes and other times? Harken what the Prophets say: commeth not this vpon thee because thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God?* Thyne owne wickednesse shall reprove thee, and thy turning away shall condemne thee, that thou mayst know and vnderstand, how euill and hurtful a thing it is, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, and not feared him, sayth the Lord God of hostes, the holy one of Israell, that is to say: he that maketh Israell holy.* And vnderstande by Israell, the children of God, and those things that were spoken to the carnall Israel, are spoken vnto vs, that are or should be the spirituall Israell. Grace be with you all. Amen.

Yours, Iohn Alcock Prisoner for Gods word, in Newgate at London.

The second Epistle of Iohn Alcock.

MY Brethren of Hadley, note well what S. Paul said in the x. chap. to the Corinth. Brethren I would you should not be ignoraunt of this,* that our fathers were all vnder the cloud, and all passed through the Sea,* and were baptised vnder Moyses, in the cloud and in the sea, & dyd all eate one spirituall meate, and dronke of one spirituall drinke, They dronke of that spiritual rocke that foloweth them, which rocke was Christ: neuerthelesse in manye of them had God no delight, for they were ouer smittē in the wilderness. These are examples vnto vs, tha• we should not lust after euill thinges as they lusted, that is to say: we should stand forth to defend the verity of God, which we do right well, alas, were it not for losse of goodes, we do so much lust after them, that we will rather say, there is no God,* then we will professe his word to be truth to the losing of our goodes. And our Sauour Christ sayth, he that is not content to forsake Father and Mother, Wife, and children, house and lande, corne and cattell, yea, and hys owne life for my truthe sake, is not meete for me.* And if we bee not for our Lorde God, then we muste needes be meete for the Deuill, and we must needes be seruauntes to one of them. If we bee not ashamed of the Gospell of our Lord and Sauour Iesus Christ, but earnestly confesse it, to the vttermost of our power, thē are we sure to be confessed of our Lord and Sauour Iesus Christ, and that before y^e Angels in heauen to be his seruants.* But if we will so lust to keepe our goodes, and rather deny hym then to loose our goodes, then doth it folow whose seruantes we are. Therefore my deare brethren of Hadley, beware that you doe not consent to any thing agaynst your conscience. For if you do, beware of Gods great wrath. I exhort you therefore (my beloued brethren in the Lord, and Sauour Iesus Christ) to stand fast in your profession, and become not manifest runne awayes from the truth of our Lord God, but stick earnestly to it, and doubt not but our Lord God wil be vnto you a strong defence and refuge in the needfull time. Bow downe thine eare O Lorde (sayth Dauid) and heare me, for I am poore and in misery. Bee mercifull vnto me O Lord, for I will call daily vpō thee:* comfort the soule of thy seruaunt, for vnto thee O Lord do I lift vp my soule.

For thou Lord art good and gracious, and of great mercy, vnto all thē that call vpon thee. Geue eare Lorde vnto my prayer, and ponder the voyce of my humble petition. All nations whom thou hast made, shall come and worship thee, O Lord, & shall glorify thy name. For thou art great, and doest wonderfull things: thou art God alone, Teach me thy wayes Oh Lord, and I will walke in thy truth: O knit my hart vnto thee, that I may feare thy name. I will thanke thee O my God with all my hart, and will prayse thy name for euer. O you Christen people of Hadley, comfort your selues one another, in these notable psalmes of dauid, & the whole bible.* Embrace y^e notable iewell of our Lord God the bible, & endeuer your selues to walke the way that it doth teach you.

My good brethren: we as helpers, sayth S. Paule doe exhort you that ye receiue not the grace of God in vayne. For behold, now is the accepted time, now is the daye of saluation. Let vs beware that we take sure hold while we haue time, for time will away. While wee haue the lighte walke in it, least when ye would desire it,* ye can not haue it. Understand the light to be the knowledge of Christe, & to obey, that is to haue the light. For that cause came our Sauour Iesus Christe, to make himselfe knowne vnto those that did receiue him.* He gaue power to be y^e sonnes of God, and so to bee made inheritours of his kingdome, which shal neuer haue end: who would not be glad to become the kinges sonne,* that he therby might be partaker of the kingdome that neuer shall haue end? O vayne man what art thou that will refuse euerlasting life for a day or two, or an hower? thou canst not tell howe short.* Open thine eies, & see thine owne cōfort & refuge to christ. O flie & refuse this worldly wisdom: for worldly wisdom doth shut out the wisdom of God. For the word of the crosse is foolishnesse vnto them that perish: but vnto vs whiche are saued, it is the power of God. For it is written:* I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will cast away the vnderstanding of the prudent. Where are the wise? where are the Scribes? where are the disputers of this worlde? hath not god made the wisdom of this world foolishnes? For in so much, as the worlde by the wisdom thereof, knew not God in his wisdom: it pleased God through foolishnesse of preaching to saue them that beleue. For the Iewes require tokens, and the Greekes aske after wysedome: but we preach Christ crucified, sayth S. Paule, to the Iewes an occasion of falling: and vnto the Greekes (a people that are wise in theyr owne conceites) to them is the preaching of Christ crucified foolishnesse. But vnto them that are called both Iewes and Greekes, we preach Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God. For the foolishnes of God is wiser then men, and the weaknes of God is stronger then men. Brethren looke vpon your Page 2148 calling, how that not many wise men after the fleshe, not many mighty, not many of high degree, are called. But that which is foolish before the world, hath God chosen, that he might confound the wise: and that which is despised before the worlde hath he chosen, and that whiche is nothing, that he might destroy that which is ought, that no flesh should reioyce. Of the same are ye also in Christe Iesu, whiche is made of God vnto vs wisdom & righteousness, and sanctifying and redemption, according as it is written: he that reioyseth should reioyce in the Lorde, that your fayth should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. We speake of this wisdom among them that are perfecte, not the wisdom of thys world, nor the rulers of this world, which go to nought, but we speake of the wisdom of God, which the carnall man doth not vnderstand. The naturall man perceiueth nothing of the spirite of God. It is foolishnes with hym. But God hath opened it to vs, by his spirite. For the spirite searcheth out all thinges. Wherefore my deare Brethren, trye your selues well, whether ye haue the spirite of Christ or no.* If you haue the spirite of Christ, then are ye dead concerning sinne: but ye are aliue vnto god, through Iesus Christ. If this spirite dwell in you, then will ye increase and go forward in your profession, & not feare what flesh may do vnto the carkasse. Therefore, stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free,* and bee not wrapped vp agayne in the yoke of bondage, that is to say: to go from God by wicked life, or serue God an other way then he hath commaunded in his holy word. I truste you go forward my deare Brethren and Sisterne in your promise that you made to your Lorde God in your baptism: I pray God open vnto you the knowledge of hym selfe, and lighten the eyes of your vnderstanding, that ye may know what is the hope of your calling, and what the riches of his glorious inheritaunce is vpon the Sayntes. For ye are the chosen generation,* the kingly Priesthoode, that holy nation, that peculiar people, that should shewe the vertues of him which hath called you out of darcknes into his maruellous light, that is to say, to feare God and to worke righteousnesse, and so to receiue the end of your fayth, the saluation of your soules. This is a true saying: if we be dead with Christ, we shall liue with him also. If we be patient,* we shall also reigne with him. If we denye him, he also shall denye vs. If we beleue not, yet he abydeyth faythfull, he can not deny himselfe. The very God of peace sanctify you throughout, and I pray God that your whole spirit,* soule, and bodyes be kept blameles vnto the cōming of our Lord Iesus. Faythfull is he that hath called you, which will also do it. Brethren, pray for vs, and great all the brethren among you.

By me your brother in the Lord and Sauour Christ, Iohn Alcocke Prisoner in the Lorde, at Newgate.

☛ Geue glory to God.

GOD be mercifull to thee O England, & send thee great number of such faythfull Fathers and godly Pastors, as Doctor Taylour was, to guide thee, feede thee, and cōfort thee, after thy great miseries and troubles, that thou hast suffered vnder the tyrannous captiuitie and rage of the Romaine Antichrist, and such rauening Wolues, as haue without all mercy murdered thy godly and learned preachers, and geue all men grace to consider, that suche horrible plagues and mutations, haue iustly fallen vpon this Realme for sinne, and with vnfayned hartes to turne to GOD, who as he hath scourged vs with lesse plagues then we deserued: so calleth vs agayne by his vnderdeserued and vnspeakeable mercy vnto repentaunce and amendement of our liuing. It is doubtles now high time to turn vnfaynedly to God, and to correct our sinnefull liuinges, and to remember what S. Iohn Baptist sayd.* The Axe is now set to the root of the tree, and euery tree that bringeth not forth good fruit shall be hewne downe and caste into the fire. For this may all men assure themselues of, both rich and poore, high and low, olde and yong, that the almighty, zelous, and righteous God, will not suffer the sinnefull and wicked life of the vngodly, vnrepētant, that contemne his mercy nowe profered vnto them, to be vnpunished, but as he hath from the beginning of the world shewed himselfe a righteous Iudge, and punisher of wickednes, euen so will he do stil now. God expulsed our first parentes, Adam and Heua from Paradise, and layd vpon them and vpon vs all these miseries,* sicknesses, calamities and death, that we dayly feelee, and miserably are oppressed withal. God in Noahs dayes drowned the whole world,* onely eight persons were preserued. God burnt vp Sodom and Gomor, with fyre and brimstone frō heauen, and destroyed those Cityes and all the Countrey about.* God gaue ouer Hierusalem called the holy Citty of God, and deliuered his owne people the Iewes into perpetuall captiuitie. If we seeke the cause of these punishmentes, was it not sinnefull liuing & vnrepentant harts? What should I recite the calamities of other lands, seying Gods iudgementes hath not bene vnexecuted vpon this Realme of England for sinnefull liuing? * The olde Brytaynes were with Cadwallader theyr king, constrayned to flye, and leaue this land, because of pestilence & famyne, what miseries & destructions brought the Danes in with them? and what troubles susteyned the inhabitauntes of this Realme afore the same were agayne driuē out? What bloudshed was here in king William Conquerors daies? were not the noble men slayne, and gentlemen brought into bondage? were not their matrons defiled, and theyr daughters geuen to be kitchen drudges vnder the Normandes proud Ladyes? were not theyr landes, houses & possessions diuided by lote vnto straungers? Their golde and siluer wherein they trusted, was the bayte that theyr enemyes hunted after, what a plague was the ciuill war betwene the kinges and Barons? what horrible bloudshed was in this Realme, till at the last Gods mercifull prouidence ended those miseries by the happy ioyning of the 2. regall houses together in the mariage of king Henry 7. What miseries haue chaunced in our time, we haue not onely sene and heard, but we haue felt them, and God be praised, had our partes of them. Doubtles this all hath chaunced for the sinnes of the people,* as the Prophet Ieremy playnely teacheth, saying: who is a wise man that vnderstandeth this? And to whome shall the word of the Lords mouth come, that he may preach it forth? why hath the land perished, and is burnt like a wilderness, so that no man may passe through it? And the Lord sayth: because they haue forsaken my law, which I haue geuen them, & they haue not hearde my voyce, and haue not walked in them, and haue gone after the vanity of theyr owne harts. And after Baalim the Images of Baall, which they haue learned of theyr fathers, we see here playnely the contēpt of Gods word, and of the preachers of the same, walking after theyr couetous mindes and leudnesse of theyr hartes, and folowing of their idolatrous inuentions, brought the wrath of God vpon the people,* as witnessed also Iesus Syrach, saying: because of vnrighteous dealing, wrong, blasphemies, and diuers deceites, a Realme shalbe translated frō one people to an other. And a litle after he sayth: the Lorde hath brought the congregations of the wicked to dishonour, and destroyd them vnto the ende. God hath destroyd the seates of proud Princes, and set vp the meek in their stead. God hath withered the root of the proud nations, and planted the lowly amōg them. God hath ouerthrowne the Landes of the Heathen, and destroyed them vnto the ground. He hath caused them to wither awaye: He hath brought them to nought, and made the memoriall of them to cease from the earth. But what auailleth it to read such threatens of God, if we beleue them not? Or, if we beleue them to be Gods threatens, and despise thē? Doubtlesse the Lorde is righteous, a ielous God, a Punisher of sinne, as he sayth himselfe. I punish the sinnes of the fathers vpon theyr childrē, vnto the third and fourth generatiō, of them that hate me.* God geue vs grace to remember this, and with speedye and vnfayned repentaunce to turne vnto God. I say (vnfayned repentaunce) and not (alas) as we haue done in times past like hypocrites to dissemble with God and man, making Gods holy worde nothing els but a cloke to couer our malice, couetousnesse, whoredome, pride, excesse, glotony, wrath, enuy, hatred, murder, with all other wicked liuing most detestable in the sight of God. If men will well consider themselues, they haue long enough dissembled and heaped the wrath of God heauy enough vpon theyr heades. It is now high time to become a new people, to amend in deed,* and to folow the counsell of the holy Ghost, saying vnto vs by the Prophet Hieremy. Why do mortal men murmur agaynst God? let them murmur agaynst theyr own sinnes. Let vs search our owne wayes, and let vs seek and returne vnto the Lorde. Let vs lift vp our hartes and handes vnto the Lord in heauen, for we haue done wickedly and prouoked the Lord to wrath, and therefore wilt thou not be entreated. Doubtles the Lord will not be entreated, except men very earnestly turne vnto him, we haue felt in our selues, and seene before our eyes, that when GOD striketh, no man can be able to abide the heauy stroke of his fist. Hee hath hitherto corrected vs with mercy, as a father: let vs thanke him, returne vnfaynedly, so will he not extend his wrath as a Iudge. His will is, that we should returne & liue, & not perish with the wicked.* I liue (sayth the Lord) Page 2149 and will not the death of a sinner, but that he be conuerted and liue. Here the godly othe certifieth vs of forgeuenes, & requireth an vnfayned conuersion vnto God, that ts, that men acknowledge in hart theyr wicked liuing & be sory, that euer they haue with wicked lyuyng offended agaynst that so good and louing a father, and truste to haue forgeuenes through Christes blood, and fully and firmly set theyr hartes to serue GOD, and to walke the wayes of his commaundementes all the dayes of theyr life. Then shall we be the true Christians, built vpon the corner stone Christ, not wauering or chaunging at euery puffe of winde, not seeking an Epicurish life in all voluptuous and vaine vanitie, not rauening extortioning, or with vsury oppressing the poore and nedy, but stedfast, vnmoueable, liuing in the feare of Gods iudgementes, and trust vpon his mercy, mortifying our brutish and carnall lustes, being mercifull and helpful to the poore and nedy, wayting for the blessed time when Christ shall call vs, to be ready & accepted before him. Our merciful Lord & good Father graunt vs grace so to doe, for the loue of his deare sonne Iesus Christ, our certayne and most deare Sauior, to whom with the father & the holy ghost, be all honor for euer and euer. Amen.

¶Certayne Cautions of the Authour to the Reader, of thinges to be considered in reading this story.

AMongst other escapes and ouersightes in the Edition of this story committed, part of them we leaue to thine owne gentle castigation gentle reader: certaine other specialities there be, whereof wee thought it good and expedient to geue thee warning as hereafter followeth.

First, when mention is made pag. 34. of Peters being at Rome and suffering at Rome, following certayne Authors:* yet forsomuch as other writers there be, & reasons to proue that he was not at Rome. I desire thee ther'fore that this my affirmation may not preiudice other mens iudgementes, if anye see or can say further in that matter.

Touching the story of the Turkes, where as I in following our Christian Authours writing of the Turkes, haue noted in the pag. 747. Solymannus to be the 12. Turke, after Ortomannus as they do all record: I haue found since by the computation of the Turkes set forth in the Table of theyr owne discent, the sayde Solymannus to be but y^e 6. emperor of the Turks: & this Solimannus his sonne which now reyneth, to be but y^e twelue. Which I thought here to signifie vnto thee, because of theyr own turkish prophecie noted in the pag. 771. lest in construing of that Prophecie being in the same place expounded, thou be deceiued.

Item 1245. where mayster George Blag is named to be one of the priuie chamber: here is to be noted also that although he were not admitted as one of the priuy chamber yet his ordinary resort thither and to the kinges presence there, was such, as although hee were not one of them, yet was he so commonly taken.

Item, pag. 1367. in the story of the Duke of Somerset, where it is sayde that at the returne of the Earle of Warwicke out of Norfolke there was a consultation amongst the Lordes assembling themselues together in the house of M. Yorke. &c. agaynst the Duke of Somerset: here is to be noted that the comming of the Lordes to the said house of M. Yorke was not immediately vpon the Duke of Northumberlandes returne, but first hee went to Warwicke, and from thence after a space came to the house aforesayd.

Item, here is also to be noted touching the sayd Duke of Somerset, that albeit at his death relation is made of a sodeine falling of the people, as was at the taking of christ this is not to be expounded as though I compared in any part the Duke of Somerset with Christ.

And though I do something more attribute to the cōmendation of the sayd Duke of Somerset, which dyed so constantly in his religion, yet I desire thee gentle reader, so to take it, not that I did euer meane to derogate or empeyre the martiall prayse or •actes of other men, which also are to be commended in suche thinges where they well deserued.

Item, touching the same Duke of Somerset, where the story sayth, pag. 1367. he was attaynted, read indited.

Item, pag. 1418. where mention is made of one Nicolas Underwood to be the betrayer of the Duke of Suffolke: * ioyne with the sayd Underwood also Nicolas Laurence, alias Nicolas Ethell keeper of Asteley Parke, who taking vpon him and promising to keepe the Duke, for 2. or three dayes vntill hee might finde some meanes to escape, conueyed him into an hollowe tree, and after moste trayterously bewrayed him.

Item, fol. 1419. in the Storye of Syr Thomas Wyat there is also to be corrected, that where the story sayth that he was taken by Syr Clement Parson, which was not so, nor he no such knight, amend it thus, that he first came to Clarentius being sent vnto him, and afterward yealded him to Syr Mortis Bartly.

Briefly and in generall, besides these castigations aboue noted, if thou finde any other committed in the printing hereof, gently I desire thee gentle reader, to bestowe a little paynes with thine owne hand to amend them.

Notes omitted of them that were burnt at Bristowe.

The viij. daye of August 1553. was brought Wil. Sarton weauer of Bristow,* before one Dalbie Chauncellour of Bristow aforesaid, and by him committed to prison and also condemned, for holding that the sacrament was a signe of an holy thing: also he denied, that the flesh and bloud of Christ is there after their words of consecration: he was burned the xvij. of september. 1556. and as he wēt to the fire, he sang y^e Psalmes. The Sheriffe Ioh. Griffith had prepared greene wood to burne him, but one mayster Iohn Pikes pitieng the man, caused diuers to goe wyth him to Ridland, halfe a myle of, who brought good store of helme sheaues, which in deede made good dispatch with little payne, in comparison to that he should haue suffered with the greene woode. In the meane space, whilst they went for the sheues, the sayde Sarton made many good exhortations to the people, and after dyed constantly and patiently with great ioyfulnes.

A note of Prestes wyfe of Exceter.

IN Cornewall not farre from Launceston,* within the Dioces of Exceter, in Queene Maryes dayes, dwelled a poore man, whose name was Prest, his wife beyng an honest woman, very simple, but of good zeale and vpright life, being taught by God, in hearing of his worde (albeit it was in those dayes very seldome preached anye where) and feeling a sweete taste thereof, framed her lyfe a new after the rule of the same. And banished quite from her,* all the popishe dregges of superstition and hipocrisie, & gaue her selfe wholly to prayer, and inuocating the name of God, both for the afflicted Church of Christ in those dayes very dangerously rost and tormoyled: as also for her own inward contentation, and spirituall consolation, whiche she no little felt to her vnspeakeable ioy, and incomparable comfort. And when some, who before had known her sawe that marueilous chaunge in her, and (as the cruell serpent) enueying her felicitie, went vpō the same immediately and accused her to certayn Iustices of the shire, being extreme enemies to the truth and very persecutors of the same, who taking the matter in hande, as very glad of such occasion, sent for her to the place where she was, and began at the second, if not at the first dash, to demaund her beliefe in theyr popish sacrament of the aulter.

The good poore woman, who had learned, not to bee ashamed to confesse her mayster Christ, before menne, and to render accōptes of her fayth, when it was asked, tould freely and franckly her opinion therein, and hid backe nothing, that eyther shee thought might profite them, if they had anye grace to receiue it, or els might sounde to Gods glory and prayse, though it were neuer so muche by them threatned and rebuked. Whereupon shee was forthwyth committed to the Gayle of Launceston, where she remayned a quarter of a yeare, or thereaboutes, and afterwards was dispatched of that vile and filthy prison, and deliuered ouer to the handes of two champions of the Popes, y^e one called Doctor Raynoldes, Deane of Exceter, and the other named mayster Blaxton,* treasurer of y^e same church men surely feruent hote in the furtheraunce of the romysh affayres, and in withstanding the truth of the pure euangelicall gospell. So the time that this good poore woman was vnder theyr handes, shee had many sore conflictcs by them. And the sayd Blaxton hauing a Concubine, whiche sondry tymes resorted to him, with other of his gossippes alwayes when they came, this sayde good woman was called forth to his house, and there to make his minion with the rest of his company some mirth, hee woulde examine her, with such mocking maner, in deriding the truth that it would haue vexed any christian soule to haue seene Page 2150 it. Then when he had long vsed his foolishnes in this sort and had sported himselfe enough in deriding this chrysten martyr: in the end sent her to prison agayn, and there kept her very miserably, sauing sometimes he woulde send for her, when hys foresayd gest came to him, to vse with her his accustomed folly aforesayd. But in fine, the vile wretches (after many combattes, and scoffing, perswasions) when they had played the parte of a cat with a mouse at length they condemned her & deliuered her ouer to the secular power, who within shorte space after most cruelly brought her forth to the place where she should suffer, and there in great contempt of the truth (which she most constantly confessed) they consumed her carcas immediately with fire into ashes: which she very patiētly suffered, and most ioyfully receiued, yelding her soule and lyfe to the Lord, and her body to the tormentors, for the whiche the Lordes name therefore be prayesd, Amen.

¶The martirdome of one Snel, burned about Richmond in Queene Maryes tyme, omitted in this history.

AT Bedaile a market towne in Yorkshyre, were two men in the latter dayes of Queene Mary,* the one named Iohn Snel, and the other Richard Snel. Who being suspected for Religion, were sent vnto Richmond, where Doctor Dakins had commission from the Bishop of Chester to haue the examination of them.

This Doctor Dakins many times conferred wyth them, sometimes threatning fire and fagot if they woulde not recant, and sometimes flattering them with fayre fables if they would returne into the holy catholick church. But they stood constantly to the sure rocke Iesus Christ, in whome they put theyr whole trust and confidence, whiles at last being so sore imprisoned that theyr toes rotted of, and the one of them could not go without crouches they brought thē to the church by compulsion, where the one of them heard their abhominable Masse, hauing a certaine summe of mony geuen him by the beneuolence of the people, and so departed thence: but the first newes that was heard of hym within three or foure dayes was that he had drowned him self in a riuer running by Richmond called Swaile.

Immediately after D. Dakins geuing sentence that y^e other should be burnt,* came home to hys house and neuer ioyed after, but dyed. The Commissary of Richmond named Hillinges, preached at his burning, exhorting him to returne to the Church, but hys labour was in vayne, the constant martyr standing strongly to the fayth which hee professed.

Then being brought to the stake, whereunto hee was tyed by a girdle of iron, there was geuen vnto him gunpouder and a little straw was layd vnder his feete, and set round about with smale woode and tarre barrells, the fire was put in the straw, which by and by flamying about his head, he cryed thrise together: Christ helpe me: Insomuch that one Robert Atkinson being present, sayde: hold fast there & we wil all pray for thee. Thus this blessed martyr ended his life.

¶A story of one Laremouth, omitted in the body of the story.

ALbeit I am loth to insert any thing in this book which may seeme incredible or strange to ordinary working for quarelling aduersaryes, whiche doe nothing but spye what they may cauill: yet forsomuch as besides other reporters the person is yet aliue, called Thorne a godly minister, which heard it of the mouth of the party himselfe, I thought therefore first for the incredible strangenes therof neither to place this storye in the bodye of these Actes and Monumentes, and yet in some outcorner of the booke not vtterly to passe it vntouched, for the reader to consider it, and to credite it as he seeth cause. The story is this.

There was one Laremouth, otherwise called Williamson, Chaplayne to Lady Anne of Cleue, a Scottishman, to whome being in prison in Queene Maryes daies, it was sayd, as he thought, thus sounding in hys eares: arise and go thy wayes.* Whereunto when he gaue no great heed at the first, the second time it was sayd to him agayne in the same wordes. Upon this as he fell to his prayers, it was sayd the thyrd time likewise to him, arise and go thy way, which was about halfe an houre after. So he arising vpon the same, immediately a peece of the prison wall fell downe, and as the officers came in at the outwarde gate of the Castle or prison, he leaping ouer the ditche escaped, and in the way meeting a certayne beggar, chaunged hys cote with him, and comming to the Sea shore, where hee found a vessell ready to go ouer, was taken in, and escaped the search, which was straytly layd for hym in all the coūtry ouer.

¶A little short letter of William Hunter sent out of prison to his mother a little before hys martirdome, to be referred and placed in his story, pag. 1538.

MOST reuerent & louing mother, after my most humble wyfe I haue me harty commēded vnto you▪ desiring you to pray vnto God most hartely for me,* that I may haue his blessing and yours, the which I esteeme more worth vnto me, thē any worldly treasure. In this present letter you shall vnderstand the cause of my writing vnto you at this tyme, that I am in good health and prosperitie, as euer I was in this present life. Wherefore I render thanks vnto almighty God for it, who alone is moste woorthye of all prayse, trusting in God you bee in health also. Furthermore I certifie you wherefore my father continueth here, to the intent to heare some godly and ioyfull tidynge, both for soule and body, whiche I trust it shalbe to your singular comfort and consolation, and to the great reioysing of all other of my frendes. Therefore I desire you, gentle mother to admonish my brother vnto a godly life, with dilligent attendance and to pray for me, considering his bound duety, that God may by your faythfull prayer, ayd and strengthen me in this my prosperous iourney and course, whiche I run trusting to obtayne a crowne of euerlasting life, whiche doth euer endure.

No more vnto you at this time, but God preserue you vnto euerlasting life. So be it.

IT is geuen to the Queenes Maiestye to vnderstand that certayne of her Subiectes by theyr euill dispositions do sow and spread abroad diuers sedicions to the derogation and dishonor, first of almighty God, in the state of Religion stablished by the lawes of this Realme and also to the dishonor of her highnesse in disprouing her lawfull right of supremacy amongst her subiectes. And this that they doe, is not done as in secrecy or by stealth, but openly auouched, & in all companies disputed on. And thus by theyr bold attemptes seme not to obey or regard the authority of lawes nor the quiet of her subiectes. As for example, by bringing in and spreading abroad diuers leud libels and sedicious bookes from beyonde the seas, and in suche boldnes that they do commend those writers in their sedicious bookes conteining manifest matter agaynste the estate established. Which boldnesse of men so Vniuersally and euery where seene and heard, cannot be thought to be done but by the comfort and ayd or at the least way winckt at by thē whō the Queenes highnes hath placed in authority to repres these insolencyes. And the Queenes highnes can not more iustlye charge any for this disorder, then such who be in commissiōs Page 2151 chosen to repress these disorders. If it be aunswered me that they cannot see such opē boldnes & factious, disorders: I must say that they haue no eyes to see, & if they heare not of suche contemptuous talke and speeche, I may say that they haue no eares. I would haue those men iudge what will come of these vnbridled speeches in the end, if reformatiōs be not had therof. What cōmeth of factions & seditions we haue bene taught of late yeares what the fruites be, which I beseech God long to defend vs from. If such disorders be hot redressed by law, then must force & violence reforme. Which when they take place may fortune fall assoone on thē that seeme to haue least consideration in this matter. If force and violence preuayle, then ye know that law is put to silence, and cannot be executed, which should onely maynteine good order. If it be replied agaynst me, that to the suppressing of these open talkes there is no law, which by speciall letter can charge any man offender, I must say, that whatsoever the letter of the law be, the meaning of the law was and is cleane contrary to the liberty of these doinges. If it be sayd, that no man can be charged by the law except it can be proued agaynst him, that his speeche and deedes be done maliciously: what ye call malice I can not tel. But if the bringing in of these sedicious bookes make mē's mindes to be at variance one with one another, destruction of mindes maketh sedicions, seditions bring in tumults, tumults worke insurrections and rebellion, Insurrections make depopulations and desolations, and bringeth in vtter ruine & destruction of mens bodies, goodes & landes: And if any sow the roote wherof these men come, & yet can be sayd that he hath no mallice, or that he doth not maliciously labour to destroye both publicke & priuate wealth, I can not tell what act may be thought to be done maliciously. And further if it be sayd to me that the man which should be charged with offēce must be proued to haue done his acte aduisedly: To that I answer: If any bring in those hookes, distribute them to others, commend & defend them, & yet can not be charged to haue done aduisedly, I haue no skill of their aduisednesse. If it be sayde that the law intreateth of such actes as be directly derogatory and of none other, what is direct ouerthwarting the Law, when the contrary thereof is playnely treated, holden and defended, and the truth by argumentes condemned. It maye be sayd agayne that the worlde doth not now like extremitie in lawes penal and calleth them bloody lawes. As for extreme and bloody lawes I haue neuer liked of them. But where the execution of such lawes touching halfe a dosen offenders, and the not execution may bring in daunger halfe a hundred. I thinke this law nor the execution therof may iustly be called extreme and bloody. In such like comparison I may vtter my meaning as to make a difference betwene whipping & hanging. In deed though whipping may be thought extreme, yet if by whipping a man may escape hanging, in this respect, not whipping bringeth in this bloudinesse and extremity and not the execution of the law: And better it were, a man to bee twice whipped then once hanged: The paynes do differre, but wise men will soone consider the diuersity. The truth is to suffer disobedient subiectes to take boldnes agaynst the lawes of God & their prince, to wincke at the obstinate minds of such as be vnbridled in theyr affections: to mainteine a forraigne power of the Byshop of Rome, directly agaynst the Princes prerogatiue stablished by lawes, is not this to hatch dissentiō, to chearish sedition? To extoll the writings of such, who by all their wittes devise to supplant the princes lawfull authority: If these doinges be not meanes to the disturbance & vtter ruine of the Realme, I know not what is good gouernance. If these be not the sparkes of Rebellion: What be they. Thus much hauing spoken to your wisdomes, I doubt not of your assenting with me, the rather also because I vtter them vnto you as from the Queenes Maiesty by commaundement, who doth require of vs all a more dilligēce in execution of lawes, then is spyed commonly abroad: Whereby we shall do our duties to almighty God the better, declare our allegiance to our Souereigne, regard the maiesty of the lawes, loue the quiet of our country, and procure the safety of our selues.

God saue the Queene.

And here I trust, we are now come to an end of al our English Martyrs which hetherto haue bene burnt, for the veritie of the gospels, if we adde besides to the same, a godly countryman more of ours, one named Richard Atkins an Hartfordshyre man, who of late about two yeares past in the reigne of this our gracious Queene, an. 1581. most miserably was tormented at Babilon, that is in y^e citie of Rome. The cause and maner of whose suffering and martirdome here ensueth, taken out of a certayne late printed story, and testified by such as were present witnes and beholders of the same most tragicall execution. The purport of whiche story in wordes, as is put downe by the said reporter, here vnder followeth.

A true report of the horrible, and merciles martyrdome of one Richard Atkins, an Englishe man, with extreeme tormentes, and most cruell rage of furious tyrantes persecutors, put to death at Rome.

ABout the month of Iuly, an. 1581. one Richard Atkins borne in Hartfordshire an english man came to Rome and hauing found the englishe Colledge, knocked at the dore. To whome diuers of the studentes there came out, to welcome him, vnderstanding that he was an Englishe man. Among other talk had with him, they willed him to goe to the hospitall, and there to receiue his meat and lodging, according as the order was appoynted, whereunto he aunswered, I come not (my countrimen) to any suche intent, as you iudge, but I come louingly to rebuke the great misorder of your liues, whiche I greeue to heare, and pity to beholde, I come likewise to let youre proude Antichrist vnderstand, that hee doth offend the heauenly maiestie, robbe God of his honour, and poysoneth the whole world with his abhominable blasphemies: making them homage stockes, and stones, and that filthy sacramēt which is nothing els but a foolish Idol. When they heard these wordes one Hugh Griffin, a Welche man, and a student in the Colledge caused him to be put in the Inquisition, where how they examined him, and howe he aunswered them, I know not, but after certayn dayes he was set at libertie agayne. And one day going in the streete, he met a priest carying the sacrament, whiche offending hys conscience, to see the people so crouche and bow downe to it: he caught at it to haue throwne it downe, but missing of his purpose, and being iudged by the people, that hee dyd catch at the holinesse, that (they say) commeth from the sacrament, vppon mere deuotion, hee was let passe, and nothing sayd to him: few dayes after, hee came to S. Peters Church, where diuers gentlemen, and other were hearing Masse, and the Priest at the eleuation: he vsing no reuerence, stepped among the people to the aultar, & threw downe the Chalice with the wine, striuing likewise to haue pulled the cake out of the priestes handes, for whiche diuers rose vp, and beate hym with theyr fistes, and one drewe his rapier, and woulde haue slayne him: so that in briefe he was caryed to prison where hee was examined, wherfore he had committed such a hainous offence: wherunto he aunswered, that he came purposely for that intent to rebuke the popes wickednes, and theyr Idolatry. Upon this he was condemned to be burned: which sentence, he sayd, hee was right willing to suffer, and the rather because the summe of his offence, pertayned to the glorie of God. During the time he remayned in prison sundry English men, came vnto him, willing him to be sory, for that he hadde done, and to recant from his damnable opinion, but all the meanes they vsed were in vayne, hee confuted theyr dealinges by diuers places of scripture, and willed them to be sory for theyr wickednesse, while God did permit thē tyme, els they were in danger of euerlasting damnation: these wordes made the English men departe, for they could not abide to heare them. Within a while after, he was set vpō an Asse, without any saddle, he being from the middle vpward naked, hauing some englishe priestes with him to talke with him, but he regarded them not, but spake to the people in so good a language as he could, and told them they were in a wrong way, and therefore willed them for Christes sake, to haue regard to y^e sauing of theyr soules. All the way as he went, there were foure did nothing els but thrust at his body with burning Torches, whereat he neuer moued, nor shronke one iote, but with a cherefull countenance, laboured to perswade the people often bending his body to meet the torches, as they were thrust at him, and woulde take them in hys owne hand, and hold them burning still vppon his body, whereat the people not a little wondered. Thus he continued almost y^e space of halfe a mile, till he came before S. Peters, where the place of execution was. When he was come to y^e place of execution, there they had made a deuise, not to make the Page 2152 fire about him, but to burne his legges first, whiche they did: he not dismayng any whit, but suffered all meruaylous cherefully, whiche moued the people to such a quandary as was not in Rome many a day. Then they offered him a crosse and willed him to embrace it in token that hee dyed a christian, but he put it away with hys hand, telling them, that they were euill men to trouble him with suche paltry, when he was preparing himselfe to God, whome he beheld in maiestie, and mercy, ready to receaue him into the eternall rest. They seeing him in this minde, departed saying, let vs goe, and leaue him to the deuill, whome hee serues. Thus ended this faythfull souldiour, and Martyr of Christe, who is no doubt, in glory with hys mayster, whereunto God graunt vs all to come, Amen.

This is faythfully auouched by Iohn Young, who was at that tyme and a good while after in Rome, in seruice with mayster Doctor Morton, who seing the Martirdome of this man, when he came home to hys house in presence of M. Smith his sonne, M. Creede, and the sayd Ioh. Young spake as followeth. Surely this fellow was meruaylous obstinate, hee nothing regarded the good counsaile which was vsed to hym, nor shronke all the way, when the torches wer thrust at hys naked body. Beside in the place of execution hee did not faynt nor cry one iote in the fire, albeit they tormēted him very cruelly, and burned him by degrees as his legges first, to put him to the greater payne, yet all this he did but smile a•. Doubtlesse, but that the worde of God cannot be but true, els we might iudge this fellow to be of God: for who could haue suffered so much payne as he did? but truely I beleeeue the Deuill was in him.

The cursed lyfe, and bloody end of Doctor Story a cruell persecuter of Christ in hys members.

I had thought christian reader here to haue made an end, and to haue concluded the volume of this booke, had not the remembraunce of Doctour Story an Archenemy to Christes gospell, and a bloody persecuter of Gods people come into my minde. The discourse of whose lyfe, and doinges, I thought good here briefly to lay open to the view of the world as followeth. This Doctor Story beeing an Englishe man by byrth,* and from his infancie not onely missed in papistry, but also euen as it were by nature earnestly affected to the same, and growing somewhat to riper yeares, in the dayes of Queene Mary became a most bloody tyrant, and cruel persecuter of Christ in his members (as all the stories in this booke almost doe declare) Thus hee raging all the raygne of the foresayde Queene Mary agaynst the infallible truth of Christes Gospel,* and the true professors thereof, neuer ceased till hee had consumed to ashes: two or three hundred blessed martyrs who willingly gaue their liues for the testimony of his truthe, and thinking theyr punishment in the fire not cruell enough,* went about to inuent new tormentes for the holy martyrs of Christe, suche was his hatred to the trueth of Christes Gospell: but in the ende the Lorde God looking vpon the affliction, and cruell bloudshedding of his seruauntes, tooke away Queene Mary the great pillar of papistry: After whome succeeded Ladye Elizabeth nowe Queene of Englande, who staying the bloody sworde of persecution from ragyng any further, caused the same Doctor Story to be apprehended, and committed to ward with many other his complices,* sworne enemies to Christes glorious gospell. The sayd story hauing bene a while deteined in prison, at the last by what meanes I knowe not,* brake forth of hold, and conueyed himselfe ouer y^e seas where he continued a most bloody persecutor, still raging against Gods saynctes with fire and sworde. In somuche as hee growing to be familiar and right deare to Duke Dalua in Antwerpe, receiued a speciall commission from him to search the Shippes for goodes forfayted and for english bookes, and such like.

And in this fauour and authoritie hee continued there for a spare, by the which meanes he did muche hurte, and brought many a good man and woman to trouble, and extreme perill of life thorough his bloud thyrstye cruelty: but at the last the Lord (when the measure of his iniquitie was full) proceeded in iudgement agaynst him, and cut him off from the face of the earth, according to the prayers of many a good man, whiche came to passe in order as followeth.* It being certainly knowne (for the bruite thereof was gone forth into al landes) that he not onely intended the subuersion, and ouerthrowe of his natieue countrey of England by bringing in forreigne hostilitie, if by anye meanes he might compasse it, but also dayly and hourelly murdered gods people, there was this platform layd (by Gods prouidence no doubt) that one M. Parker a marchaunt should sayle vnto Antwerpe,* and by some meanes to conuey Story into England.

This Parker arriuing at Antwerpe, suborned certain to repayre to Doctor Story and to signifie vnto him, that there was an english ship come, fraught w^t marchandize, & that if he would make search thereof himselfe, he should find store of english books, & other things for his purpose. Story hearing this and suspecting nothing, made haste towardes the ship thinking to make the same his praye, and comming a boord searched for english heretical books (as hee called them) and going downe vnder the hatches because he would be sure to haue theyr bloud if hee coulde,* they clapped downe the hatches, hoysed vp their sayles, hauing (as God would) a good gale, & sayled away into England where they arriuing, presented this bloody butcher, and trayterous rebell Story, to the no litle reioysing of many and Englishe hart. He being now committed to prison, cōtinued there a good space: during all which time, he was labored and solicited daily by wise, and learned fathers, to recant his deuillishe and erroneous opinions to conforme himselfe to the trueth, and to acknowledge the Queenes Maiesties supremacy. All which he vtterly denyed to the death, saying that he was sworne subiecte to the King of Spayne, and was no subiecte to the Queene of England, nor she his souereigne Queene, and therfore (as he well deserued) he was condemned (as a traytor to God, the Queenes Maiesty, & the Realme) to be drawne,* hanged, and quartered, which was performed accordingly, he being layde vpon an hurdle, and drawne from the tower along the streetes to Tiborn, where he being hanged till he was halfe dead, was cut downe and stripped, & (which is not to be forgot) when the executioner had cut off his priuy mēbers, he rushing vp vpon a sodeine gaue him a blow vpon the eare, to the great wonder of all that stood by, and thus ended this bloody Nemrode his wretched life, whose iudgemēt I leaue to the Lord.

A not• of Raphe Lurdane persecuter of George Eagles.

IN the history of George Eagles, alias Trudgeouer the world, pag. 2009. mention is made of his apprehension jn a corne field, where by the benefite of the heighth of the corne, and breadth of the field he had escaped, had not one of his persecuters with more malicious crafte climed a high tree to view ouer the place, & so descried him. This persecutor named Raph Lurdane (as we haue since learned) a lewd fellow of life for theft and whoredome, was within few yeares after he had apprehended the foresayd George Eagles for gayne of money, attached of felony for stealing horse, condemned, and hanged in the same place, & Towne of Chelmesford, where George Eagles before suffered Martyrdome.

¶A briefe Note concerning the horrible Massaker in Fraunce. an. 1572.

HEre before the closing vppe of this booke, in no case woulde bee vnremembred the tragicall and furious Massaker in Fraunce,* wherein were murdered so many hundrethes, and thousands of Gods good Martyrs. But because the true narration of this lamentable story is set forth in english at large, in a booke by it selfe, and extant in print already, it shall the lesse neede nowe to discourse that matter with any new repetition: only a briefe touch of summary notes for remembraunce maye suffice. And first for breuity sake, to ouerpasse the bloody bouchery of the Romish Catholickes in Orynge, agaynst the Protestantes,* most fiercely and vnawares breaking into theyr houses, and there without mercy killing man, woman & child: of whom some being spoyled and naked they threw out of theyr loftes into the streetes, some they smothered in theyr houses with smoake, with sword & weapon, sparing none, the karkases of some they threwe to dogges which was an. 1570. in the reign of Charles 9.* Likewyse to passeouer the cruell slaughter at Rhoane, whereas the Protestants being at a Sermon without the City Wals vpon the kings edict, the Catholiques in fury ranne vpon them comming home,* and slew of them aboue 40. at least, many moe they wounded. This example of Roane styrred vp the Papists in Dyepe to practise the like rage also agaynst the Christians there returning from the sermon, whose slaughter had bene the greater, had they not more wisely before bene prouided of weapon, for theyr own defence at need. All which happened about the same yeare aforesayd. an. 1570. but these with such like I briefly ouerslippe, to enter now into the matter aboue promised, Page 2153 that is briefly to entreat of the horrible and most barbarous massaker wroughte in Paris, suche as I suppose, was neuer heard of before in no ciuill dissention amōgest the very heathen. In few wordes to touch the substaunce of the matter.

After long troubles in Fraunce, the Catholique side foreseeing no good to be done agaynst the Protestantes by open force, began to deuise how by crafty meanes to entrap them.* And that by two maner of wayes: The one by pretending a power to be sent into the lower countrey, wherof the Amirall to be the Captayne, not that the king so meant in deed, but onely to vnderstand thereby, what power and force the Amirall hadde vnder him, who they were, and what were theyr names. The second was by a certeine mariage suborned, betwene the Prince of Nauare, and the kinges sister. To this pretended mariage, it was deuised that all the chieftest Protestantes of Fraunce shoulde be inuited,* and meete in Paris. Emong whome first they began with the Queene of Nauare, Mother to the Prince, that should mary the kings sister, attempting by all meanes possible to obtaine her consent thereunto. She being then at Rochell, and allured by many fayre wordes to repayre vnto the king, consented at length to come, and was receiued at Paris, where she after much a do, at length being wonne to the kinges minde, and prouiding for the mariage, shortly vpon the same fell sicke, & within fiue daies departed: not without suspitiō, as some sayd, of poyson. But her body being opened, no signe of poyson could there be founde, saue onely that a certayne Poticary made his brag that he had killed the Queene, by certayne venomous odours and smelles by hym confected.

After this notwithstanding the mariage still goyng forward, the Amirall, Prince of Nauare, Condee, wyth diuers other chiefe states of the Protestantes, induced by the kinges letters and many fayre promises, at last were brought to Paris. Where with great solēnity they were receiued, but especially the Amirall. To make the matter short. The day of the mariage came, which was the 18. of August. an. 1572. which mariage being celebrate and solēnised by the Cardinall of Borbone, vpon an high stage set vp of purpose without the Churche walles,* the Prince of Nauare, & Condee, came downe, wayting for the kinges sister being then at Masse. This done, they resorted altogether to the Bishops Palace, to dinner. At euening they were had to a Palace in the middle of Paris to Supper. Not long after this,* being the 22. of August, the Amirall comming from the Counsell table, by the way was stroken with a Pistolet charged with iij. pellets, in both hys armes. He being thus wounded and yet still remayning in Paris,* although the Uidam gaue him counsell to flye away, it so fell out that certayne souldiors were appoynted in diuers places of the Citty to be ready at a watchword at the commaudemēt of the Prince. Upon which watchword geuē, they burst out to the slaughter of y^e protestantes, first beginning with the Amirall himselfe, who being wounded with many sore woundes was cast oute of the window into the street, where his head being first stroken of, and imbalmed with spices to bee sent to the Pope,* the sauadge people raging agaynst him, cut of hys armes and priuy members, and so drawing him 3. dayes through the streetes of Paris, they dragged him to y^e place of execution, out of the City, and there hanged him vp by his heeles to the greater shew and scorne of him.

After the Martyrdome of this good man, the armed souldiours with rage and violence ranne vpon all other of the same profession, slaying and killing all the Protestantes they knew or coulde finde within the Citty gates inclosed. This bloudye slaughter continued the space of many dayes, but especially the greatest slaughter was in the three first dayes,* in which were numbred to be slayne, as the story writeth, aboue x. thousand, men and women, old and young, of all sorts and conditions. The bodies of the dead were caryed in Cartes to be throwne in the Riuer, so that not onely the Riuer was all steined therwith, but also whole streames in certayn places of the City did runne with goare bloud of the slayne bodyes. So greate was the outrage of that Heathenish persecution, that not onely the Protestantes, but also certayne whome they thought indifferent Papists they put to the sword in sted of Protestantes. In the number of them that were slayne of the more learned sort, was Petrus Ramus, also Lambinus an other notorious learned man, Plateanus, Lomenius, Chapesius,* with others.

And not onely within the walles of Paris this vpror was contained but extended farther into other cities and quarters of the Realme, especially Lyons, Orliens, Tholous, and Roane. In which cities it is almost incredible, nor scarce euer heard of in any natiō,* what crueltie was shewed, what numbers of good men were destroyed in so much that with in the space of one moneth xxx. thousand at least of religious Protestantes are numbred to be slayne, as is credib•ely reported and storied in the cōmētaryes of them which testify purposely of the matter.

Furthermore here is to be noted, that when the Pope first heard of this bloody styrr, he with his Cardinales made such ioy at Rome, with theyr procession, with their gunshot and singing Te Deum, that in honor of that festiuall acte, a iubile• was commaunded by the Pope wyth great indulgence, and much solemnity,* wherby thou hast here to discern, and iudge, with what spirite and charity these Catholiques are moued to mainteine their religion withall, which otherwise would fall to the ground with out all hope of recouery. Likewise in Fraunce no lesse reioysing there was vpon the xxviij. day of the sayd Moneth,* the king commaunding publique processions thorow the whole City to be made, with bonefires, ringing and singing, where the king himselfe, with the Queene his mother, and his whole Court resorting together to the Church, gaue thanks and land to GOD, for that so worthy victory atchieued vpon S. Bartholomews day agaynst the Protestantes,* whome they thought to be vtterly ouerthrowne and vanquished in all that Realme for euer.

And in very deede to mans thinking might appeare no lesse after such a great destruction of the Protestantes hauing lost so many worthy and noble captaynes as thē were cutte of,* whereupon many for feare reuoking their religion, returned to the pope, diuers fled out of y^e realme such as would not turn, keeping themselues secret, durst not be knowne nor seene, so that it was past all hope of man, that the Gospell shoulde euer haue any more place in Fraunce: but suche is the admirable working of the Lord, where mans helpe and hope most▪ fayleth there hee most sheweth his strength and helpeth, as here is to bee seene and noted.* For where as the litle small remnant of the Gospell side, being now brought to vtter desperation were now ready to geue ouer vnto the king, and many were gone already agaynst cōscience, yelding to time, yet the Lord of his goodnes so wrought, that many were stayed and reclaymed agayne through the occasion first of them in Rochell:* Who hearing of the cruell massaker in Paris, and slaughter at Tholous, most constantly with valiaunt hartes (the Lord so working) thought to stand to theyr defence agaynst the kinges power, by whose example certayne other Cities,* hearing therof tooke no litle courage to do the like, as namely Montalbane, the Citty called Nemansium, Sansere in Occitania, Milialdum, Mirebellum, Fuduzia, with other townes and Citties moe: who being confederate together, exhorted one an other to be circumspect and take good heede of the false dissembling practises not to be trusted of the mercilesse papistes, entending nothing but bloud and destruction.

These things thus passing at Rochell, the king hearing thereof,* geueth in commaundement to Capteyne Strozzius, & Guardius to see to Rochell. After thys he sendeth a noble man one Biromus, requiring of the Rochell men to receiue him for theyr Gouvernour vnder the king. Of this great consultation being had, at length the Rochell men began to condescend vpon certayne conditions, which being not easily graunted vnto, and especially they hearing in the mean time what was done to others of theyr felowes, which had submitted themselues, thought it so better to stand to the defence of theyr liues & consciences and to aduenture the worst.* Whereupon began great siege and battery to be layde agaynste Rochell both by land and sea, which was an, 1572. about the 4. day of December, it woulde require an other volume, to describe all thinges, during the time of this siege, y^t passed on either side, betwene the kinges part, and the towne of Rochell, briefly to runne ouer some parts of the matter. In the beginning of the next yeare folowing, which was an. 1573. in the moneth of Ianuary cōmaundement was geuen out by the king to all and sondry nobles and piers of Fraunce, vpon great punishment,* to addresse themselues in moste forceable wise to the assaulting of Rochell. Wherupon a great concourse of all the nobility, with the whole power of Fraunce, was there assembled, amongst whom was also the Prince of Aniw, the kinges Brother (who there not long after was proclaymed kyng of Polonie) accompanied with his other Brother Duke Alanson, Nauare, Condie, & other a great nūber of states besides. Thus the whole power of Fraūce being gathered agaynst one poore Towne, had not the mighty hande of the Lord stood on theyr side, it had bene vnpossible for thē to escape. Duryng the time of this siege, which lasted Page 2154 about 7. monethes,* what skirmishes and conflicts were on both sides, it would requyre a lōg tractatiō. To make short, 7. principal assaults were geuen to the poore town of Rochell, with all the power that Fraunce could make. In all which assaultes euer the Popes catholick side had the worst. Concerning the first assault thus I finde written, that within the space of xxvj. dayes, were charged agaynst the walles and houses of Rochell, to the number of xxx. thousand shot of yron bullets and globes, wherby a great breach was made for the aduersary to inuade the City: but such was the courage of them within, not men onely, but also of women, matrons, and maydens with spits, fire, & such other weapon as came to hande, that the aduersary was driuen backe, with no small slaughter of theyr souldiours: onely of the townesmen were slayne & wounded to the number of lx. persons. Likewise in the secōd assault 2000. great field peaces were layde against the towne, whereupon the aduersary attempted the next day to inuade the towne: but through the industry of the souldiors and citizens, and also of women and maydes, the inuaders were forced at length to flye away faster thē they came. No better successe had all the assaults that folowed: Wherby consider (gentle reader) with thy selfe in what great distresse these good men were in, not of Rochell onely, but of other Cityes also, during these 7. Monethes aboue mentioned, had not the mighty hand of the Lord almighty susteined them. Concerning whose wondrous operation for his seruants in these hard distresses, three memorable thinges I finde in History to be noted.

The one concerning the siege of Sanser, which City being terribly battered and rayised with gunshot of great Cannons,* & field pieces, hauing at one siege no lesse then iij. thousand bullets and gunstones flying vppon them, wherwith the cristes of their helmets were pierced, their sleeues, their hose, their ha*tes pierced, theyr weapons in their handes broken, their walles shaken, theyr houses rent downe, yet not one person slayne nor wounded with all this, saue onely at the first a certeine mayden with the blast of the shot flying by her was stroken downe & died.

The 2. thing to be noted is this, that in the same City during all the time of the siege, which lasted 7. Monethes and halfe,* for all the ordinaunce, and battering pieces discharged agaynst them, which are numbred to 6. thousand not so much as xxv. persons in all were slayne.

The third example no lesse memorable was at Rochell: Whereas the poorer sort began to lacke corne & victuall,* there was sent to them euerie day in the Riuer (by the hand of the Lord no doubt) a great multitude of fishe (called surdones) which the poorer people did vse in stead of bread. Which fish the same day as the siege brake vppe, departed, and came no more. Testified by them, whiche were present there in Rochell all the time.

What number was lost on both sides, during all this 7. monethes warre, it is not certeinly knowne. Of the kinges Campe what number was slayne,* by this it may be coniectured, that 132. of theyr Captaynes were killed & slayne, of whom the chieftest was Duke damoule.

To close vp this tragicall story, concerning the breaking vp of this 7. Monethes siege, thus it fell out, that shortly after the seuenth assaulte geuen agaynst Rochell,* which was an. 1573. about the moneth of Iune, worde came to the Campe, that Duke Andius the kinges brother, was proclaymed king of Polonie. Wherat great ioy was in the Campe. By occasion whereof, the new king more willing to haue peace, entred talke with thē of Rochell, who as he shewed himselfe to them not vngentle, so found he thē again, to him not vnconformable. Whervpon a certeine agreemēt pacificatory was concluded betwene them, vpon conditions. Which agrement the new Polone king eftsoones preferred to the Frenche King hys Brother not without some sute and intercession to haue it ratified. The king also himselfe partly being weary of these chargeable warres, was the more willing to assent therunto. And thus at length, through the Lordes great worke, the kinges royal consent vnder forme of an Edict, was sette downe in writing, and confirmed by the king, conteining 25. Articles. In which also wer included certeine other Cittyes of the Protestantes, graunting to them benefit of peace and liberty of religion. This edicte or mandate sent downe from the king by his Heralde at armes, Bironius in the kinges name caused to be solemnely proclaymed at Rochell. an. 1573. the x. day of Iune.*

The yeare next folowing. 1574. for two thinges seemeth fatall and famous, for the death first of Charles the 9. the french king, also most of all for the death of Charles Cardinall of Lorayne, brother to Guise. Of the maner of the Cardinals death I finde litle mentiō in stories.* Touching the kinges death although Ric. Dinothus sayth nothing, for feare belike, because he being a french man, hys name is expressed and known: but an other story (whom the sayd Dinothus doth followe) bearing no name, sayeth thus, that he dyed the xxv. day of May, vpon Whitson euen, being of the age of 25. yeares: and addeth more, profluuiū sanguinis illum laborasse certū est. Certayne it is that his sickenes came of bleeding. And sayth further: Cōstans fert fama, illum dum evarijs corporis partibus sanguis emanaret, in lecto saepe volutatum,inter horribilium blasphemiarū diras, tantā sanguinis vim proiecisce, vt paucas post horas mortuus •uerit. That is. The constant report so goeth, that his bloud gushing out by diuers partes of his body, he tossing in his bedde, and casting out many horrible blasphemies, layed vpon pillowes with his heeles vpward, and head downward, voyded so much bloud at his mouth, that in few houres he dyed. Which story if it be true, as is recorded and testified, may be a spectacle and example to all persecuting kinges and Princes polluted with the bloud of Christian Martyrs. And thus muche briefly touching the late terrible persecution in Fraunce.

¶The Conclusion of the worke.

AND thus to conclude (good Christian Reader) this present tractation not for lacke of matter, but to shorten rather the matter for largenes of the volume, I here stay for this present time with further addition of more discourse either to ouerweary thee with longer tediousnes, or ouercharge the booke with longer prolixity, hauing hitherto set forth the Actes and Proceedinges of the whole Church of Christ, namely of the Church of England, although not in such particular perfectiō, that nothing hath ouerpassed vs. Yet in such generall sufficiency, that I trust not very much hath escaped vs, necessary to be knowne, touching the principall affayres, doinges and proceedinges of the Church and Churchmen. Wherein may be seene the whole state, order, discent, course and continuaunce of the same, the encrease and decrease of true religion, the creeping in of superstition, the horrible troubles of persecution, the wonderfull assistaunce of the almighty in mainteining his truth, the glorious constancy of Christes Martyrs, the rage of the enemyes, the alteration of times, the trauelles and troubles of the Church, from the first primatiue age of Christes Gospel, to the end of Queen Mary, and the beginning of this our gracious Queene Elizabeth. During the time of her happy reigne, which hath hetherto continued (through the gracious protection of the Lord) the space now of 24. yeres, as my wish is, so I would be glad, the good wil of the Lord were so, that no more matter of such lamētable stories may euer bee offered hereafter to write vpon. But so it is I cannot tel how, the elder the world waxeth, the longer it continueth, the nerer it hasteneth to his end, the more Sathan •ageth: geuing still new matter of writing bookes and volumes: In so much that if all were recorded and committed to history, that within the sayd compasse of this Queenes reigne hitherto, hath happened in Scotland, Flanders, France, Spayne, Germany, besides this our owne Countrey of England and Ireland, with other Countreyes moe, I verely suppose one Eusebius or Polyhistor, whiche Plinnye writeth of, woulde not suffice thereunto. But of these incidentes and occurrentes hereafter more, as it shall please the Lord to geue grace and space. In the meane time the grace of the Lord Iesus worke with thee (gentle Reader) in all thy studious readings. And while thou hast space so employ thy selfe to read, that by reading thou mayst learne dayly to knowe that may profite thy soule, may teach thee experience, may arme thee with pacience, and instruct thee in all spirituall knowledge more and more, to thy perpetuall comfort and saluation in Christ Iesu our Lord, to whome be glory in Secula Seculorum. Amen.
